15. By all means, if there is any instance of such an evil, let us attribute this famine to the effect of the seasons. An unhealthy wind has caused this blight, and so life is supported by means of shrubs and leaves, and the peasants in their want have had resource once more to the oaks of Dodona[75]. When did the provinces suffer such a calamity, so long as the ministers of religion were supported by the public bounty? When were oaks shaken for the food of man, when were roots dug up, when were opposite regions of the earth cursed with sterility, so long as provisions were furnished in common to the people and to the sacred virgins? The produce of the earth was blessed by its support of the priests, and thus the gift was rather in the nature of a safeguard than of a largess. Can it be doubted that the gift was for the common benefit, now that a general scarcity has attended its discontinuance?

16. But it may be said that public aid is rightly refused to the cost of an alien religion. Far be it from good rulers to suppose that what has been bestowed from the common stock on certain individuals is within the disposal of the Imperial treasury. For as the commonwealth consists of individuals, so that which comes from it becomes again the property of individuals. You govern all, but you preserve for each his own, and justice has more power with you than arbitrary will. Consult your own generous feelings, whether that ought still to be deemed public property which has been conferred on others. Gifts once devoted to the honour of the city are placed out of the power of the donors, and that which originally was a free-gift becomes by usage and length of time a debt. Vain therefore is the fear which they would impress upon your minds who assert that unless you incur the odium of withdrawing the gift you share the responsibility of the donors of it.

17. May the unseen patrons of all sects be propitious to your Majesties, and may those in particular who of old assisted your ancestors, aid you and be worshipped by us. We ask for that religious condition which preserved the empire to your Majesties' father[76], and blessed him with lawful heirs. That venerable sire beholds from his starry seat the tears of the priests, and feels himself censured by the infraction of that custom which he readily observed.

18. I beg you also to amend for your departed brother what he did by the advice of others, to cover the act by which he unknowingly offended the Senate. For it is certain that the reason why the embassage was refused admittance was, to prevent the decision of the state from reaching him. It is due to the credit of past times to abolish without hesitation that which has been found not to have been the doing of the Emperor.

LETTER XVIII. A.D. 384.

THIS IS S. Ambrose's answer to the Memorial of Symmachus which precedes it. In it he replies in detail to the arguments which Symmachus had advanced, and meets him on his own ground. It is to be remembered in forming an estimate of it, that it is simply a state paper, adopting both the style and method natural to such a document. That it is over rhetorical for our taste may at once be allowed, for that is the character of the literature of the time generally; that it is not so perfect a specimen of the style, regarded merely as a piece of argument, as the document to which it replies, may be granted without disparagement to S. Ambrose, for Symmachus "stood foremost among his contemporaries as a scholar, a statesman, and an orator." (Dict. of Biog. sub voc.) But he fairly meets and refutes Symmachus' arguments, and his retort of his adversary's personification of Rome is happy and telling. The earlier portion is more vigorous than the latter, which is overwrought, especially in the argument against maintaining things as they were. The abundance of allusions to, and quotations of, Virgil are characteristic of the age, and evidences of S. Ambrose's early training in the education of a Roman of high birth and rank.

BISHOP AMBROSE TO THE MOST BLESSED PRINCE AND GRACIOUS EMPEROR, HIS MAJESTY VALENTINIAN.

1. THE honourable[77] Symmachus, Prefect of the city, having memorialised your Majesty that the altar, which had been removed from the Senate-house at Rome, ought to be restored to its place, and your Majesty, whose years of nonage and inexperience are yet unfulfilled, though a veteran in the power of faith, not having sanctioned the prayer of the heathen, I also as soon as I heard of it presented a petition, in which, though it embraced all that seemed necessary to be said, I requested that a copy of the Memorial might be furnished to me.

2. Now therefore, not as doubting your faith, but as providing for the future, and assured of a righteous judgement, I will reply to the allegations of the Memorial, making this one request, that you will not look for elegance of phrases but force of facts. For as Holy Scripture teaches us, the tongue of learned and wise men is golden, and endowed with highly-decked words, and glittering with splendid elegance as with the brightness of some rich colour, and so captivates and dazzles the eyes of the mind with a shew of beauty. But this gold, if closely handled, may pass current outwardly, but within is base metal. Consider well, I beseech you, and sift the sect of the Heathens; their professions are grand and lofty, but what they espouse is degenerate and effete, they talk of God but worship idols.

3. The propositions of the honourable Prefect of the city, to which he attaches weight, are these, that Rome (as he asserts) seeks the restoration of her ancient rites, and that stipends are to be assigned to her priests and Vestal virgins, and that it was owing to these being withheld that a general famine has ensued.

4. According to his first proposition, Rome utters a mournful complaint, wanting back (as he asserts) her ancient ceremonies. These sacred rites, he says, repelled Hannibal from the walls, the Gauls from the Capitol. But even here, in blazoning the efficacy of these rites, he betrays their weakness. According to this, Hannibal long insulted the Roman religion, and pushed his conquest to the very walls of the city, though the gods fought against him. Why did they for whom their gods fought, allow themselves to be besieged?

5. For why speak of the Gauls, whom the remnant of the Romans could not have prevented from entering the sanctuary of the Capitol, if the timid cackling of a goose had not betrayed them. These are the guardians of the Roman temples! Where was Jupiter then? Did he speak in a goose?

6. But why should I deny that their sacred rites fought for the Romans? Yet Hannibal also worshipped the same gods. Let them choose therefore which they will. If these rites conquered in the Romans, they were vanquished in the Carthaginians, but if they were thus overcome in the case of the Carthaginians, neither did they profit the Romans.

7. Away then with this invidious complaint of the Roman people; Rome never dictated it. It is with other words that she addresses them: ‘Why do you daily deluge me with the useless gore of the innocent flocks? The trophies of victory depend not on the limbs of cattle, but on the strength of warriors. It was by other powers that I subdued the world. Camillus was my soldier, who recovered the standards which had been taken from the Capitol, and slew those who had captured the Tarpeian rock; valour overthrew those against whom religion had not prevailed. Why should I name Regulus, who gave me even the services of his death? Africanus gained his triumph not among the altars of the Capitol, but among Hannibal’s ranks. Why do you produce to me the rites of our ancestors? I abhor the rites of the Neros. What shall I say of the two-month Emperors[78], and the ends of princes knit on to their accession? Or is it a thing unheard of, that the barbarians should cross their frontiers? Were those men Christians, in whose miserable and unprecedented fate, in the one case a captive Emperor, in the other a captive world[79] proved the falsehood of the rites which promised victory? Was there then no altar of Victory? I am ashamed of my downfall, the pale cheeks of age gather redness from that disgraceful bloodshed. I do not blush to be converted in my old age along with the whole world. It is surely true that no age is too late to learn. Let that old age blush which cannot improve itself. Wisd. iv. 9. It is not the hoary head of years but of virtue which is venerable. It is no disgrace to pass to better things. This alone had I in common with the barbarians that of old I knew not God. Your sacrifice is a rite of sprinkling yourselves with the blood of beasts. Why do you look for the voice of God in dead beasts? Come and learn here on earth a heavenly warfare; we live here, but our warfare is above. Let God Himself, the Creator, teach me the mystery of heaven, not man who knew not himself. Whom should I believe about God, sooner than God Himself? How can I believe you, who confess that you know not what you worship?'

8. By a single path, he says, we cannot arrive at so great a secret. What you are ignorant of, that we have learnt by the voice of God; what you seek after by faint surmises, that we are assured of by the very Wisdom and Truth of God. Our customs therefore and yours do not agree. You ask the Emperors to grant peace to your gods, we pray for peace for the Emperors themselves from Christ. You worship the works of your own hands, we think it sacrilege that any thing which can be made should be called God. God wills not to be worshipped under the form of stones. Nay, your very philosophers have ridiculed this.

9. But if you are led to deny that Christ is God, because you cannot believe that He died, (for you are ignorant how that this was the death not of His Godhead but of His flesh, whereby it comes to pass that none of the faithful shall die,) how inconsistent are you, who insult by way of worship, and disparage by way of honour. You consider your god to be a block of wood; what an insulting kind of reverence! You believe not that Christ could die; what a respectful kind of unbelief!

10. But, he says, the ancient altars and images ought to be restored, and the temples adorned as of old. This request ought to be made to one who shares the superstition; a Christian Emperor has learned to honour the altar of Christ alone. Why do they compel pious hands and faithful lips to minister to their sacrilege? Let the voice of our Emperor speak of Christ alone, let him declare Him only Whom in heart he believes, for Prov. xxi. 1. the king's heart is in the Hand of God. Did ever heathen Emperor raise an altar to God? In demanding a restoration of ancient things they remind us what reverence Christian Emperors ought to pay to the Religion which they profess, since heathen ones paid the utmost to their own superstitions.

11. Long since was our beginning, and now they follow us whom they shut out. We glory in shedding our blood, a trifling expense disturbs them. We consider such things a victory, they esteem them an injury. Never did they confer a greater favour on us than when they commanded Christians to be scourged, and proscribed and slain. Religion made into a reward what unbelief intended for a punishment. Behold their magnanimity! We have grown by wrongs, by want, by punishment; they find that without money their ceremonies cannot be maintained.

12. Let the Vestal virgins, he says, enjoy their privileges. It is for those to say this, who cannot believe in gratuitous virginity, it is for them to allure by profit who distrust virtue. But how many virgins have their promised rewards obtained them? They have barely seven Vestals. Such is the whole number whom the veiled and filleted head, the dye of the purple vest, the pompous litter surrounded by attendants, high privileges, great gains, and a prescribed period of virginity, have collected.

13. Let them turn their mental and bodily eye to us, let them behold a people of chastity, an undefiled multitude, a virgin assembly. No fillets to adorn their heads, but a veil of common use though dignified by chastity; the blandishments of beauty not curiously sought out, but cast aside; no purple trappings, no luxurious delicacies, but frequent fastings; no privileges, no gains; all things in short so ordered as to repress any affection in the very exercise of their functions. But in fact by this very exercise their affection to it is conciliated. Chastity is perfected by its own sacrifices. That is not virginity which is bought for money, not preserved for love of holiness; that is not integrity which is bid for at an auction by a pecuniary equivalent, to last but for a time. The first triumph of chastity is to overcome the desire of wealth, for this desire is a temptation to modesty. But let us suppose that virginity ought to be supported by pecuniary bounty. In this case, what an abundance of gifts will overflow upon the Christians; what treasury will contain riches so great? Or do they consider that it ought to be bestowed exclusively on the Vestal virgins? Do not they, who claimed the whole under heathen Emperors, feel some shame in denying that under Christian Princes we ought to participate in the bounty?

14. They complain also that public support is not given to their priests and ministers. What a storm of words is here! To us on the other hand the privileges of inheriting private property[80] is denied by recent laws, and no one complains; we do not feel it to be an injury, for we grieve not at the loss. If a priest would claim the privilege of being exempt from the municipal[81] burthens, he must relinquish his paternal estate and all other property. How would the heathens press this ground of complaint, if they had it, that a priest must purchase the liberty of performing his functions by the loss of his whole patrimony, and at the expense of all his private advantages must buy the right of ministering to the public, and while he claims to hold vigils for the public safety must console himself with the wages of domestic poverty; for he does not sell service but purchase a favour.

15. Compare[82] the two cases. You wish to exempt a Decurio, when the Church may not exempt a priest. Wills are made in favour of ministers of temples; not even profane persons, even of the lowest rank, nor of abandoned character, are excepted; the clergy alone are excluded from the common privilege, by whom alone the general prayer for all men is offered, and the common office performed; no legacy, even of grave widows, no donation is allowed. When no blame can attach to character, a fine is imposed on the office. The legacy which a Christian widow bequeaths to the minister of a temple is valid, that which she bequeaths to the ministers of God is invalid. This I have stated not by way of complaint, but that they may know how much I abstain from complaining of, for I would rather we were losers in money than in grace.

16. But they report that gifts or legacies to the Church have not been taken away. Let them state who has snatched gifts from the temples, a loss which Christians have[83] suffered. Had this been done to the Gentiles, it would rather have been the requital than the infliction of a wrong. Is it now only that they make a plea of justice, put in a claim for equity? Where was this sentiment, when, having despoiled all Christians of their goods, they grudged them the very breath of life, and debarred them from that last burial-rite which was never before denied to any of the dead? Those whom the heathen flung into it, the sea restored. This is a victory of faith, that they themselves impugn the acts of their ancestors, in that they condemn their proceedings. But what consistency is there in condemning the acts of those whose gifts they solicit?

17. Yet no man has forbidden gifts to the temples, or legacies to the soothsayers; their lands alone are taken away, because they did not use that religiously which they claimed on the plea of religion. If they avail themselves of our example why did they not copy our practice? The Church possesses nothing but her faith. There are her rents, her revenues. The wealth of the Church is the support of the poor. Let them count up how many prisoners the temples have ransomed, what support they have afforded to the poor, to how many exiles they have ministered the means of life. Hence it is that they have been deprived of their lands, but not of their rights.

18. This is what has been done, and a public famine, as they assert, has avenged this grave impiety, that the private emoluments of the priests have been converted to the public service. For this cause they say it was that men stripped branches of their bark, and moistened their fainting life with this wretched juice. For this cause they were obliged to substitute for corn the Chaonian acorn, and thrust back again to this wretched fare, the food of beasts, they shook the oaks and thus appeased their sore hunger in the woods. As if forsooth these were new prodigies on earth, which never occurred so long as heathen superstition prevailed over the world! But in truth how often before this were the hopes of the greedy husbandmen frustrated by empty oat-stalks, while the blade of corn sought for in the furrows disappointed the race of peasants.

19. Why did the Greeks attribute oracles to their oaks, but that they fancied their sylvan fare was the gift of their heavenly religion? Such are the gifts which they suppose to come from their gods. Who but heathen ever worshipped the trees of Dodona, bestowing honour on the sorry sustenance of the sacred grove[84]? It is not probable that their gods in their anger gave them for a punishment what they were wont when appeased to confer as a gift.

20. But what equity were it, that because they are annoyed at the refusal of sustenance to a few priests they should themselves refuse it to every one? in that case their vengeance is more severe than was the fault. But in truth the cause they assign is not adequate to produce so great infirmity of a failing world, as that, when the crops were green, the full grown hopes of the season should all at once perish.

21. Certain it is that many years ago the rights of the temples were abolished throughout the world, is it only now that it has occurred to the gods of the Gentiles to avenge their injuries? Can it be said that the Nile failed to overflow his banks as usual, to avenge the losses of the priests of the City, when he did not do so to avenge his own priests?

22. But supposing that in the past year it was the wrongs of their gods that were avenged, why are the same wrongs neglected in the present year? Now the country people do not pluck up and eat the roots of herbs, nor seek solace from the sylvan berry, nor gather their food from thorns; but rejoicing in their successful labours they wonder at their own harvest, and their hopes fulfilled compensate for their fast, the earth having yielded us her produce with interest.

23. Who then is so inexperienced on human affairs as to be amazed at the vicissitudes of the seasons? And yet even last year we know that most provinces had an abundant harvest. What shall I say of Gaul which was more fertile than usual? The Pannonias[85] sold corn which they had not sown, and the second[86] Rhaetia learnt the danger of her own fertility, for being used to security from her sterility, she drew down an enemy on herself by her abundance. Liguria and Venice are replenished by the fruits of autumn. So then the former year was not withered by sacrilege, while the present has overflowed with the fruits of faith. Nor can they deny that the vineyards produced an overflowing crop. Thus our harvest yielded its produce with interest, and we enjoyed the benefits of a more abundant vintage.

24. The last and most weighty topic remains; as to whether your Majesties should restore those aids which have been profitable to yourselves, for he says, ‘Let them defend you, and be worshipped by us.’ This, most faithful Princes, we cannot endure; that they should make it a taunt to us that they supplicate their gods in your name, and without your command commit an atrocious sacrilege, taking your connivance as consent. Let them keep their guardians to themselves, let these guardians, if they can, protect their own. But if they cannot protect those who worship them, how can they protect you who worship them not?

25. Our ancestral rites, he says, should be preserved. But what if all things have become better? The world itself, which at first was compacted by the gathering together of the elemental seeds through the vast void, an unconsolidated sphere, or was obscured by the thick darkness of the yet unordered work, was it not afterwards endowed with the forms of things which constitute its beauty, and were not the heaven sea and earth distinguished from each other? The earth rescued from dripping darkness was amazed at its new sun. In the beginning too the day shines not, but as time goes on it is bright and warm with the increase of light and heat.

26. The moon herself, which in the prophetic oracles represents the Church, when first she rises again, and repairs her monthly wanings, is hidden from us by darkness, but gradually she fills her horns, or completes them as she comes opposite to the sun, and gleams with a bright and glorious splendour.

27. In former days, the earth knew not how to be wrought into fruitfulness; but afterwards when the careful husbandman began to till the fields, and to clothe the bare soil with vineyards, it was softened by this domestic culture, and put off its rugged nature.

28. So too the first season of the year itself, which has imparted a like habit to ourselves, is bare of produce, then, as time goes on, it blossoms out in flowers soon to fade, and in the end finds its maturity in fruits[87].

29. So we, while young in age, experience an infancy of understanding, but as we grow in years lay aside the rudeness of our faculties.

30. Let them say then that all things ought to have continued as at first; that the world once covered with darkness is now displeasing because it shines with the beams of the sun. And how much better is it to have dispelled the darkness of the mind than that of the body, and that the beam of faith has shone forth than that of the sun. So then the early stages of the world as of all else have been unsettled, that the venerable age of hoary faith might follow. Let those who are affected by this find fault with the harvest too, because it ripens late; or with the vintage, because it is in the fall of the year; or with the olive, because it is the latest of fruits.

31. So then our harvest too is the faith of the soul; the grace of the Church is the vintage of good works, which from the beginning of the world flourished in the saints, but in these last days is spread over the people; to the intent that all might perceive that it is not into rude minds that the faith of Christ has insinuated itself, but these opinions which before prevailed being shaken off (for without a contest there is no crown of victory) the truth was preferred according as is just.

32. If the old rites pleased, why did Rome adopt alien ones? I pass over the covering of the ground with costly buildings, and shepherds' huts glittering with the gold of a degenerate age[88]. Why, to speak of the very subject of their complaint, have they admitted in their rivalry the images of captured cities, and of conquered gods, and the foreign rites of an alien superstition? Whence do they derive their precedent for Cybele washing her chariot in a stream to counterfeit the Almo[89]? Whence came the Phrygian seers, and the deities of faithless Carthage ever hateful to Rome, her for instance, whom the Africans worship as Cælestis[90], and the Persians as Mitra, the greater part of the world as Venus, the same deity under different names. So also they have believed Victory to be a goddess, which is in truth a gift not a power, is bestowed and does not rule, comes by the aid of legions not by the power of religion. Great forsooth is the goddess whom the number of soldiers claims, or the issue of the battle confers!

33. And her altar they now ask to have set up in the Senate-house at Rome, that is to say, where a majority[91] of Christians assemble. There are altars in all temples, an altar also in the temple of victories. Being pleased with numbers, they celebrate their sacrifices every where. But to insist on a sacrifice on this one altar, what is it but to insult over the Faith? Is it to be borne that while a Gentile sacrifices Christians must attend? Let their eyes, he says, drink in the smoke whether they will or no; their ears the music; their mouth the ashes; their nostrils the incense; and though they loathe it, let the embers of our hearths besprinkle their faces. Is it not enough for him that the baths, the colonnades, the streets are filled with images? Even in that general assembly, are we not to meet upon equal terms? The believing portion of the Senate will be bound by the voices of them that call the gods to witness, by the oaths of them that swear by them. If they refuse, they will seem to prove their falsehood, if they acquiesce, to acquiesce in a sacrilege.

34. Where, he asks, shall we swear allegiance to your Majesties' laws and commands? Your minds then, of which your laws are the outward expression, gather support and secure fidelity by heathen rites. Moreover your Majesties' faith is assailed not only when you are present, but also, which is more, when you are absent, for you constrain when you command. Constantius, of illustrious memory, though not yet initiated into the sacred Mysteries, thought himself polluted by the sight of that altar; he commanded it to be removed, he did not command it to be replaced. His order bears all the authority of an Act, his silence does not bear the authority of a precept.

35. And let no one rest satisfied because he is absent. He is more to be considered present who unites himself to the minds of others than he who gives the testimony of his visible presence. It is a greater matter to be united in mind than to be joined in body. The Senate regards you as its presidents who summon its meetings; at your bidding it assembles; to you, not to the gods of the heathen, does she resign her conscience; you she prefers to her children though not to her faith. This is the affection worth seeking, an affection more powerful than dominion, if faith, which preserves dominion, be secured.

36. But perhaps some one may be influenced by the thought that if so, a most orthodox Emperor[92] has been left without his reward; as if the reward of good actions was to be estimated by the frail tenure of things present. And what wise man is there who knows not that human affairs move in a certain cycle and order, and meet not always with the same success, but their state is subject to vicissitudes?

37. Who more fortunate than Cneius Pompeius was ever sent forth by the temples of Rome? But he, after compassing the circuit of the globe in three triumphs, vanquished in battle, and driven into exile beyond the bounds of the empire he had saved, perished by the hand of an Eunuch[93] of Canopus.

38. What nobler king than Cyrus king of the Persians has the whole Eastern world produced? He too, after he had conquered the most powerful princes in battle, and detained them as his prisoners, was worsted and slain by the arms of a woman[94]. That king who had conferred on the vanquished the honour of sitting at meat with him, had his head cut off and enclosed in a vessel full of blood, and so was bid to satiate himself, exposed to the mockery of a woman. So in the course of his life like is not matched with like, but things most unlike.

39. Again who was more assiduous in sacrificing than Hamilcar[95] general of the Carthaginians? During the whole time of the battle he took his station between the ranks of the combatants, and there offered sacrifice: then, when he found himself vanquished, he threw himself upon the fire on which he was burning his victims, that he might extinguish even with his own body those flames which he had learnt availed him nothing.

40. And what shall I say of Julian? who blindly believing the answers of the diviners, deprived himself of the means of retreat[96]. Thus even when the circumstances are common there is not a common cause of offence, for our promises have deluded no one.

41. I have replied to those who harass me as though I had not been harassed: for my object has been to refute their Memorial, not to expose their superstitions. But let this very Memorial make your Majesty more cautious. For by pointing out that of a series of former Emperors, those who reigned first followed the rites of their ancestors, and their successors did not remove them, and by observing upon this, that if the religion of older ones was not an example, the connivance of the more recent ones was, they have plainly shewn that you owe it to the faith which you profess not to follow the precedent of heathen rites, and to brotherly love not to violate your brothers' ordinances. For if they for the sake of their own cause have praised the connivance of those Emperors, who being Christians, have not abrogated heathen decrees, how much more are you bound to shew deference to brotherly affection, and, whereas you would be bound to wink at what perhaps you did not approve, for fear of detracting from your brothers' decrees, now to maintain what you judge to be in accordance both with your own faith and the tie of brotherhood.

LETTER XIX. A.D. 385.

VIGILIUS, TO WHOM this letter is addressed, is supposed by the Benedictine Editors to have been the Bishop of Trent, (Tridentum,) who is commemorated in the Roman Martyrology. He had written to S. Ambrose, on his consecration as Bishop, to ask his guidance and instruction, and S. Ambrose replies, first with brief general directions, somewhat resembling those of Letter 11, and then dwells at length on the duty of preventing intermarriage between Christians and heathens, and recounts at full length, in support of this, the history of Samson. At the time when heathenism was rapidly dying out, it is clear how important a point this would seem, and we do not wonder at the stress which S. Ambrose lays on it.

AMBROSE TO VIGILIUS.

1. BEING newly consecrated to the sacred office, you have requested me to furnish you with the outlines of your teaching. Having built up yourself as was fitting, seeing you have been thought worthy of so high an office, you have now to be informed how to build up others also.

2. And in the first place remember that it is the Church of God that is committed to you, and be therefore always on your guard against the intrusion of any scandal, lest the body thereof become as it were common by any admixture of heathen. It is on this account that Scripture says to you Gen. xxviii. 1, 2. Thou shalt not take a wife of the daughters of Canaan, but go to Mesopotamia, to the house of Bethuel (that is the house of Wisdom) and take thee a wife from thence. Mesopotamia is a country in the East, surrounded by the two greatest rivers in those parts, the Tigris and Euphrates, which take their rise in Armenia, falling, each by a different channel, into the Red sea; and so the Church is signified under the name of Mesopotamia, for she fertilizes the minds of the faithful by the mighty streams of wisdom and justice, pouring into them the grace of Baptism, the type of which was foreshewn in the Red sea, and washing away sin. Wherefore you must instruct the people that they should contract marriage not with strange-born but with Christian families.

3. Let no man defraud his hired servant of his due wages, for we too are the servants of our God, and look for the reward of our labour from Him. You then, (you must say) O merchant, whoever you be, refuse your servant his wages of money, that is, of what is vile and worthless, but to you will be denied the reward of heavenly promises: therefore Deut. xxiv. 14. thou shalt not defraud thy hired servant of his reward, as the Law saith.

4. Thou shalt not give thy money upon usury, for it is written that Ps. xv. 1. 6. he who hath not given his money upon usury shall dwell in the tabernacle of God, for he is Ps. xvii. 13. cast down, who seeks for usurious gains. Therefore let the Christian, if he have it, give money as though he were not to receive it again, or at all events only the principal which he has given. By so doing he receives no small increase of grace. Otherwise to lend would be to deceive not to succour. For what can be more cruel than to give money to one that hath not, and then to exact double? He that can not pay the simple sum how can he pay double the amount?

5. Tobit iv. 21. Let Tobit be an example to us, who never required again the money he had lent, till the end of his life; and that rather that he might not defraud his heir, than in order to levy and recover the money he had lent out. Nations have often been ruined by usury, and this has been the cause of public destruction. Wherefore it must be the principal care of us Bishops, to extirpate those vices which we find to prevail most extensively.

6. Teach them that they ought to exercise hospitality willingly rather than of necessity, so that in shewing this favour they may not betray a churlish disposition of mind, and thus in the very reception of their guest the kindness be spoilt by wrong, but rather let it be fostered by the practice of social duties, and by the offices of kindness. It is not rich gifts that are required of thee, but willing services, full of peace and accordant harmony. Prov. xv. 17. Better is a dinner of herbs with grace and friendship than that the banquet should be adorned with exquisite viands, while the sentiment of kindness is lacking. We read of a people Judges xx. 44. perishing by a grievous destruction on account of the violation of the laws of hospitality. Gen. xxxiv. 25. Through lust also fierce wars have been kindled.

7. But there is scarce any thing more pernicious than marriage with a foreigner; already the passions both of lust and disorder, and the evils of sacrilege are inflamed. For seeing that the marriage ceremony itself ought to be sanctified by the priestly veil and benediction, how can that be called a marriage when there is not agreement in faith? Since their prayers ought to be in common, how can there be the love of a common wedlock between those whose religion is different. Often have men ensnared by the love of women betrayed their faith, as did the Jews at Baal-phegor. Num. xxv. 8. For which cause Phineas took a sword, and slew the Hebrew and the Midianitish woman, and appeased the Divine vengeance, that the whole people might not be destroyed.

8. And why should I bring forward more examples? I will produce one out of many, from the mention of which will appear what an evil thing it is to marry a strange woman. Who ever was mightier or more richly endowed from his very cradle with God’s Spirit than Samson the Nazarite? Yet was he betrayed by a woman, and by her means failed to retain God’s favour. We will now narrate his birth and the course of his whole life arranged in the style of history, following the contents of the sacred Book, which in substance not in form is as follows.

9. The Philistines for many years kept the Hebrew people in subjection; for they had lost the prerogative of faith, whereby their fathers had gained victories. Yet had not their Maker wholly blotted out the mark of their election nor the lot of their inheritance; but as they were often puffed up by success, He for the most part delivered them into the hand of their enemies, that thus, after the manner of men, they might be led to seek for themselves the remedy of their evils from heaven. For it is when any adversity oppresses us, that we submit ourselves to God; good fortune is wont to puff up the mind. This is proved by experience, as in other instances, so particularly in that change of fortune whereby success returned again from the Philistines to the Hebrews.

10. After the spirit of the Hebrews had been so subdued by the pressure of a long subjection that no one dared with a manly spirit to rouse them to liberty, Samson, fore-ordained by the Divine oracle, was raised up to them. A great man he was, not one of the multitude, but first among the few, and beyond controversy far excelling all in bodily strength. And he is to be regarded by us with great admiration from the beginning, not because in his early abstinence from vice he gave signal proofs of temperance and sobriety, nor on account of his long preserving as a Nazarite his locks unshorn, but because from his very youth, which in others is an age of softness, he achieved illustrious deeds of virtue, perfect beyond the measure of human nature. By these he gained credence to the Divine prophecy, that it was not for nothing that such grace had gone before upon him, that an Angel came down by whom his birth beyond their hopes was announced to his parents, to be the leader and protector of his countrymen, now for a length of years harassed by the tyranny of the Philistines.

11. His father was of the tribe of Dan, a man fearing God, born of no mean rank, and eminent above others, his mother was barren of body, but in virtues of the mind not unfruitful; seeing that in the sanctuary of her soul she was counted worthy to receive the visit of an Angel, obeyed his command and fulfilled his prophecy. Not enduring however to know the secrets even of God apart from her husband she mentioned to him that she had seen a man of God, of beautiful form, bringing her the Divine promise of future offspring, and that she, confiding in this promise, was led to share with her husband her faith in the heavenly promises. But he, informed of this, devoutly offered his prayers to God, that the grace of this vision might be conferred on him also, saying, Judges xiii. 8. To me, Lord, let Thine Angel come.

12. I am of opinion therefore that it was not from jealousy of his wife, because she was remarkable for her beauty that he acted thus, as one writer[97] has supposed, but rather that he was filled with desire of the Divine grace, and sought to participate in the benefit of the heavenly vision. For one whose mind was depraved could not have found such favour with the Lord, as that an Angel should return to his house, who, having given those monitions which the Divine announcement made requisite, was suddenly carried away in the form of a smoking flame. This sight, which terrified the man, the woman interpreted more auspiciously, and so removed his solicitude, in that to see God is a sign of good not evil.

13. Now Samson, approved by such signal tokens from above, turned his thoughts as soon as he grew up, to marriage; whether this was that he abhorred those vague and licentious desires in which young men are wont to indulge, or that he was seeking an occasion of releasing the necks of his countrymen from the power of the hard yoke of the Philistines. Wherefore going down to Timnath, (this is the name of a city situated in those parts where the Philistines then dwelt,) he beheld a maiden of a pleasing form and beautiful countenance, and he besought his parents, by whose company he was supported in his journey, to ask her for him in marriage. But they, not knowing that his intention, either, if the Philistine refused her to him, to be more fierce against them, or, if they assented, to remove their disposition to injure their subjects; and since from such a connexion a certain equality and kindliness of intercourse would naturally grow, or, on the other hand, if any offence were given, this desire of revenge would be more vehement, deemed that this maiden ought to be avoided as a foreigner. But after they had vainly attempted to change the purpose of their son by urging upon him these lawful objections, they of their own accord acquiesced in his desire.

14. This request was granted; and Samson on his return to visit his promised bride, turned a little way out of the road, and straightway there met him a lion from the wood, fierce in its savage freedom. Samson had no companion, nor any weapon in his hand; but he felt ashamed to fly, and conscious power gave him courage. He caught the lion as it rushed upon him in his arms, and strangled it by the tightness of his embrace, leaving it near the wayside lying upon the underwood, for the spot was clothed with luxuriant herbage, and planted with vineyards. The skin of the beast he thought would be little esteemed by his beloved bride, for seasons such as these derive their grace not from savage trophies, but rather from gentle joys and festal garlands. On his returning by the same road he found an honeycomb in the belly of the lion, and carried it off as a gift to the maiden and her parents; for such gifts befit a bride. And having first tasted the honey, he gave them the comb to eat, but was silent as to whence it came.

15. But it happened on a certain day that a nuptial feast was held, and that the young men inspirited by the banquet provoked each other to sport by question and answer, and as they assailed each other with wanton jests, as is the wont on such occasions, the contest of pleasure waxed hot. And then Samson put forth this riddle to his comrades, Judg. xiv. 14. Out of the eater came forth meat, and out of the strong came forth sweetness, promising them as a reward of their sagacity if they guessed it, thirty sheets and as many changes of garments according to the number of the company, while they on their part, if they could not solve the riddle, were to pay a like penalty.

16. But they, unable to untie the knot and to expound the riddle, induced his wife, partly by intimidation, partly by importunate entreaties, to require from her husband the solution of the riddle to be a token of conjugal affection in return for her love. And she, either terrified, and won over as women are wont to be, as if complaining tenderly of her husband's aversion, began to profess grief that she, the consort and intimate of his whole life, had not learnt this, but that she was treated like the others as one to whom her own husband's secret should not be confided. Judg. xiv. 16. Thou dost but hate me, she said, and lovest me not, thou hast put forth a riddle unto the children of my people and hast not told it me.

17. Samson's mind, otherwise inflexible, was softened by these and the like blandishments of his wife, and discovered to her his riddle, and she told it to her countrymen. And they, having thus but just learned it on the seventh day, which was the term prescribed for its solution, answered after this manner, ib. 18. What is sweeter than honey, or what is stronger than a lion? To which he replied, Nor is ought more treacherous than a woman; If ye had not ploughed with my heifer, ye had not found out my riddle, and he straightway went down to Ascalon, and slew thirty men, and taking their spoils, bestowed on the men who had expounded the riddle their promised reward.

18. But the perfidy of the maiden being thus discovered, he abstained from intercourse with her, and returned to his father's house. The damsel, disturbed in mind, and justly dreading that the wrath of this mighty man would be kindled into fury by this wrong, gave her hand to another man, one whom Samson, relying on his fidelity, had brought with him as his bridesman to his marriage. But neither by this expedient of a marriage did she avoid offence. For when the affair was disclosed, and he was forbidden to return to his wife, and her father said that she was married to another man, but that he might, if he chose, marry her sister, he was exasperated by the affront, and determined to take a public revenge for his domestic injury. Wherefore he took three hundred foxes, and in the heat of summer, when the corn was now ripe in the fields, he tied them together two and two by the tails, and fastened a burning firebrand between them, binding it with a firm knot, and by way of avenging his wrong turned them loose among the sheaves which the Philistines had cut. But the foxes, terrified by the fire, scattered flames whichever way they turned, and burnt the harvest. And the Philistines, incensed by the loss of all their corn in that region, told it to the princes of their land. And they sent men to Timnath, and burnt in the fire the woman who had been faithless to her husband, and her parents and all her house; saying that she had been the cause of this injury and devastation, and ought not to have provoked a man who could avenge himself by a public calamity.

19. But Samson did not forgive the Philistines their wrong, nor rest content with this measure of vengeance, but he slew them with a great slaughter, and many of them fell by the sword. And he retired to Etam, a torrent in the wilderness, where was a rock, a stronghold of the tribe of Judah. Now the Philistines, not daring to attack him, nor scale the steep heights on which this fortress stood, began to assail with threats of war the tribe of Judah: but when they saw that the plea of the men of Judah was a good one, that it was neither just nor fair nor expedient for them to destroy their own subjects and tributaries, especially for another man’s fault, they took counsel, and required that the author of the outrage should be delivered up to them, in order that his countrymen might be exonerated from the consequences of it.

20. These terms being imposed upon them, the men of Judah gathered together three thousand of their tribe and went up to him, and premising that they were subject to the Philistines, and obliged to obey them, not willingly but by terror, they thus sought to turn away from themselves the odium of their act, throwing it upon those by whom they were constrained. Wherefore he thus replied, What kind of Justice is it, O children of Abraham, that the satisfaction I have taken for my bride first over-reached and then torn from me should be injurious to me, and that I may not safely avenge this private injury? Have ye so turned your minds to the low offices of slaves, as to become the ministers of the insolence of others, and to turn your arms against yourselves? If I must perish, because I gave free vent to my grief, I had rather perish by the hand of the Philistines. My home has been attempted, my wife tampered with, if I have not been allowed to live without harm from them, at least let my own countrymen be free from the guilt of my death. I did but requite the injury I had received, I did not inflict one. Judge ye whether it was an equal return. They complain of the loss of their home, I of the loss of my wife; compare the sheaves of corn, with a companion of the marriage bed. They have sanctioned my grief by avenging my injuries. Consider to what an office they have appointed you. They desire you to put to death that man, whom they themselves have judged worthy to be avenged on those who wronged him, and to whose vengeance they ministered. But if your necks are thus bowed down to these proud men, deliver me into the hand of the enemy, slay me not yourselves; I refuse not to die, but I shrink from implicating you in my death. If from fear ye comply with their insolence, bind my hands with chains: though unarmed they will break their bonds and find a weapon for themselves. They will assuredly consider that you have satisfied the imposed condition, if you deliver me alive into their hands.

21. When they heard this, though three thousand men had come up, they swore to him that they would make no attempt on his life, only he must submit to be bound, in order that they might formally surrender him, and so keep clear of the crime of which they were accused.

22. Their word being pledged he came out of the cave, and left his fastness on the rock, and was bound with two ropes. When he saw the mighty men of the Philistines drawing near to seize him, his spirit rose within him, and he brake all his bands, and taking up a jaw bone of an ass that lay near he slew a thousand men, and put to flight the rest by this exploit of valour, whole hosts of armed soldiers giving way to one unarmed man. Thus those who ventured to close with him hand to hand he slew without effort; the others saved themselves by flight. Wherefore to this day the place is called Agon[98], because there Samson by his great valour achieved a glorious contest.

23. And I would that his moderation in victory had been equal to his courage against the enemy. But as is frequently the case, with mind unused to prosperity, he ascribed to himself the issue of the battle, which was due to the Divine favour and protection, saying, Judges xv. 16. With the jaw bone of an ass have I slain a thousand men. Nor did he build an altar to God, nor offer a victim, but neglecting sacrifice and assuming to himself the glory, to immortalize his triumph by a memorial name he called the place, The slaying of the jaw bone.

24. And now he began to burn with thirst, and there was no water, and yet he had great need of it. Wherefore perceiving that there is nothing so easy for human strength, as not to be rendered difficult by the absence of Divine aid, he besought God not to lay to his charge that he had ascribed ought to himself, giving Him all the glory of the victory, by the words, Ib. 18. Thou hast given this great deliverance into the hand of Thy servant, and now help me, for lo, I die of thirst, and thirst gives me over into the hand of those over whom Thou hast given me so great a triumph. Wherefore God in His mercy clave a hollow place in the jaw bone which Samson had cast aside, and a stream of water flowed from it, and Samson drank, and his spirit revived, and he called the place ‘the invoking of the spring,’ because by his suppliant prayers he made amends for his boast of victory, and thus two judgements were opportunely declared, the one that arrogance soon incurs offence, the other that without any offence humility gains reconciliation.

25. Having, in the course of events closed his war with the Philistines, and shunning the sloth of his countrymen, Samson now betook himself to Gaza, which was in the region of the Philistines, and lodged there. When the men of Gaza knew this they did not dissemble or pass it over, but beset his lodging in haste, and guarded all the doors of the house that he might not escape by night. But Samson knowing their design, in the middle of the night forestalling the snare which had been laid for him, took the pillars of the house in his arms, and carried the whole structure and the weight of the roof on his back, up to a high hill above Hebron, a city inhabited by the Hebrews.

26. But now his licence transgressed the limits not only of his paternal territory, but of good morals, such as ancient discipline had prescribed, and this brought upon him destruction in the end. For although he had experienced in his first marriage the treachery of a foreign wife, and ought to have avoided it in future, he did not shun connecting himself with the harlot Delilah, and by his passionate love of her opened a way for the craft of his enemies to assail him. For the Philistines came up to her, and promised each of them to give her eleven hundred pieces of silver if she would disclose to them wherein his assurance of strength lay, that by means of this knowledge they might entrap and take him.

27. But she having once prostituted herself for money, began during the banquet and the blandishments of love, cunningly and craftily to inquire of him in what respect his strength excelled that of others, and at the same time, as if solicitous and fearful for his safety, to entreat him to confide to his beloved by what means he could be bound and subdued into the power of others. But he, still self-possessed and unshaken, opposed craft to the allurements of the harlot, and told her that if he were bound with withs yet green and not dried, his strength would be like that of other men. When the Philistines learnt this from Delilah, they bound him while asleep with green withs, and then awoke him as though on a sudden, but found that he had not fallen off from his accustomed fortitude, but bursting its bonds his freed strength was able to resist and drive back a host of assailants.

28. This having failed, Delilah, as if she had been mocked began with complaints to renew her arts and to require a pledge of his love. Samson, still firm of purpose, intimated to her that, if he were bound by seven ropes which had never been used, he would fall into the hands of the enemy, but this also was in vain. The third time he disclosed part of the secret, and now drawing nearer to his fall, told her that, if the seven locks of his head were unfastened and woven[99] to about a cubit's length, his strength would depart from him. But herein also he deluded those who were plotting against his life.

29. But last of all the wanton woman complaining that she had been so often deceived, and grieving that her lover deemed her unworthy to be entrusted with his secret, and that under her pretext of succour her treacherous purpose was suspected, won his confidence by her tears. By this means, and because also it was ordained that this man of hitherto unshaken fortitude should fall into calamity, Samson was touched and opened to her his heart. He told her that he possessed within him the power of God, that he was sanctified to the Lord, and that by His command he let his hair grow, and that if it were shorn, he would cease to be a Nazarite, and lose the use of his strength. The Philistines having discovered through her means the man’s weakness, bring her the reward of her perfidy, thus binding her to the commission of the crime.

30. And she, having wearied him by the wanton blandishments of love, threw him into slumber, and then caused the seven locks of his hair to be cut by a razor, whereupon by his transgression of the commandment his strength was immediately lost. When he woke out of sleep, he said, Judges xvi. 20. I will go out as at other times, and shake myself against mine adversaries, but he was no longer sensible of activity and strength, his vigour was gone, his grace was departed. Wherefore, considering within himself that he had incautiously trusted to women, and that, convicted of infirmity, it would be sheer folly for him to contend any longer, he gave up his eyes to blindness, and his hands to the fetters, and being bound with chains he entered the confinement from which he had been for a long season free.

31. But in process of time his hair began to grow again; and on the occasion of a great feast Samson is brought out of prison to the assembly of the Philistines, and set in sight of the people. There were nearly three thousand in number, men and women; and they insulted him with bitter reproaches, and carried him about in mockery, a trial harder to be borne than the very reality of captivity by a man conscious of innate power. For to live and die is natural, to be a laughing stock is counted a disgrace. Desirous therefore either of consoling himself by avenging so great an indignity, or of forestalling it for the future by death, he pretended that from the weakness of his limbs and the weight of his fetters he could not support himself, and desired the boy who guided his steps to bring him to the nearest pillars by which the whole house was supported. Being brought near, he grasped with both hands the props of the building, and while the Philistines were intent on the sacrificial feast which they were offering to Dagon their god, by whose help they deemed their adversary had been delivered into their power, reckoning a woman's perfidy as a gift from above, he called unto the Lord, and said, Judges xvi. 28. 'O Lord God, remember me I pray Thee this once, that I may be avenged of the heathen for my two eyes, and that they give not glory to their gods as if by their help they had gotten me into their power. Let me die with the Philistines, that they may find my weakness to have been no less fatal to them than my strength.'

32. Then he shook the columns with great force, and broke them in pieces, whereon followed the downfall of the upper roof, crushing Samson himself and casting down all those who were looking on from above. Thus were a great number of men and women slain together, and by an end not unworthy or disgraceful, but excelling all his former victories, the dying Samson obtained a triumph. For although to that point and thenceforward he was invincible, and incomparable during life among men versed in war, yet in death he conquered himself, and shewed an unconquerable soul, so as to despise and count for nothing that end of life which all men fear.

33. Thus it was through his valour that the last day of his life was also the sum of his victories, and that he met not a captive but a triumphant end. But to have been entrapped by a woman is to be ascribed to nature rather than to the man, because it was by the condition of his humanity more than through his own fault that he fell; for this is wont to be overcome, and yield to the allurements of wickedness. Wherefore, since Scripture bears witness that he slew more in his death than while in the light of life, it would seem that his captivity happened rather for the destruction of his adversaries than for his own fall and humiliation. For he whose burial was more efficacious than his living strength cannot be said to have found himself inferior. Lastly, he was overwhelmed and buried not by the weapons but by the bodies of his enemies, and thus, covered by his own triumph, he left a glorious memorial to posterity. For he judged his countrymen, whom he found enslaved, twenty years, and buried in his native soil, left them inheritors of liberty.

34. By this example then it is plain that alliances with strangers should be avoided, lest through love for our wife the snares of treachery should be successful.

Farewell and love us, as we love you.

LETTER XX. A.D. 385.

AFTER THE DEATH of Gratian the empire of the West was nominally in the hands of Valentinian the 2nd, but, as he was a mere boy, the real power was exercised by his mother Justina, who was an Arian. S. Ambrose had already resisted her successfully in the question of the election of a Bishop at Sirmium (see Footnote 27), and although he had performed a difficult and dangerous service for them two years before this, in going on an embassy to Maximus after the death of Gratian, Justina and Valentinian were bitterly hostile to him, and supported the Arian faction against him. In March, A.D. 385, S. Ambrose was summoned to the Palace, as he himself relates in the Sermon of which he gives an account in this letter (§ 15 sqq.) and called upon to give up one of the Churches, the Portian Basilica, outside the walls, for the use of the Arians. This he refused, and was so energetically supported by the people of Milan, that the demand was for the time withdrawn. Various other efforts were then made either to induce him to yield or to get him out of the way, (one of the latter is recounted in a note on the Sermon against Auxentius § 15) but they all failed. At last on the Friday before Palm Sunday a fresh demand is made, not for the Portian Basilica, as a promise had been given that no further claim should be made upon it, but for the New Basilica which was within the walls. It is at this point that the narrative which S. Ambrose gives in this letter to his sister Marcellina begins. It recounts the occurrences from the Friday to the Wednesday in Holy Week, when the persecution was again for the time abandoned.

TO MARCELLINA.

1. IN nearly all your letters you inquire anxiously about the Church; hear then what is going on. The day after I received the letter in which you told me how you had been troubled in your dreams, a heavy weight of troubles began to assail me. It was not now the Portian Basilica, that is the one without the walls, which was demanded, but the new Basilica, that is, one within the walls, which is larger in size.

2. In the first place some chief men[100], counsellors of state, appealed to me to give up the Basilica, and restrain the people from raising any commotion. I replied as a matter of course, that a Bishop could not give up God's house.

3. On the following day the people expressed their approval in the Church, and the Præfect[101] also came thither, and began to urge us to yield up at least the Portian Basilica. The people were clamorous against this, whereupon he departed, saying, that he would report matters to the Emperor.

4. On the following day, which was the Lord's day, having dismissed the catechumens after the lessons and sermon, I was explaining the Creed to some candidates for Baptism in the Baptistery of the Church. There the news was reported to me that, on learning that officials[102] had been sent from the palace to the Portian Basilica, and were putting up the Imperial hangings[103], many of the people were proceeding thither. I however continued my ministrations, and began to celebrate the Eucharist[104].

5. While I was offering, tidings were brought me that the populace had seized upon one Castulus, whom the Arians called a priest. While making the oblation I began to weep bitterly and to beseech God's aid that no blood might be shed in the Church's quarrel; or if so, that it might be my own, and that not for my people only, but even for the ungodly themselves. But, to be brief, I sent some presbyters and deacons, and rescued the man.

6. The severest penalties were immediately decreed; first upon the whole body of merchants. And thus, during the sacred period of the last Week, wherein the debtor was wont to be loosed from his bonds, chains are placed on innocent men's necks, and two hundred pounds' weight of gold is demanded within three days. They reply they will willingly give as much, or twice as much again, so that they may not violate their faith. The prisons too were filled with tradesmen.

7. All the Officials of the palace, the Recorders, the Proctors, the Apparitors of the several Courts, on the pretext of its being unlawful for them to be present at seditious assemblies, were commanded to keep at home, severe threats were held out against men of high rank in case the Basilica was not delivered up. The persecution raged, and had an opening been afforded, they seemed likely to break out into every kind of outrage.

8. I myself had an interview with the Counts and Tribunes, who urged me to give up the Basilica without delay, declaring that the Emperor was acting on his rights, inasmuch as he had supreme power over all things. I replied that if he required of me what was my own, my estate, my money, or the like, I would not refuse it, although all my property really belonged to the poor, but that sacred things were not subject to the power of the Emperor. 'If my patrimony be required,' I said, 'take it; if my person, here it is. Will you drag me away to prison, or to death? I will go with pleasure. I will not entrench myself by gathering a multitude round me, I will not lay hold of the Altar and beg for my life; rather will I offer myself to death for the Altar.'

9. In fact my mind was shaken with fear when I found that armed men had been sent to occupy the Basilica, I was seized with dread lest in protecting the Church, blood might be shed which would tend to bring destruction on the whole city. I prayed that if so great a city or even all Italy were to perish I might not survive. I shrank from the odium of shedding blood, and I offered my own throat to the knife. Some officers of the Goths[105] were present; I addressed them, saying, ‘Is it for this that you have become citizens of Rome, to shew yourselves disturbers of the public peace? Whither will you go, if everything here is destroyed?’

10. I was called upon to calm the people. I replied that it was in my power not to excite them, that it was in God’s Hand to pacify them. That if I was considered the instigator, I ought to be punished, that I ought to be banished into whatever desert places of the earth they chose. Having said this, they departed, and I spent the whole day in the old Church. Thence I returned home to sleep; that if any man wished to arrest me, he might find me prepared.

11. When, before dawn, I passed out over the threshold, I found the Basilica surrounded and occupied by soldiers. And it was said that they had intimated to the Emperor that he was at liberty to go to Church if he wished it, that they would be ready to attend him if he were going to the assembly of the Catholics; otherwise that they would go to the assembly which Ambrose had convened.

12. Not a single Arian dared come out, for there were none among the citizens, only a few of the royal household, and some of the Goths, who, as of old they made their waggon their home, so now make the Church their waggon. Wherever that woman goes, she carries with her all those of her own communion.

13. The groans of the people gave me notice that the Basilica was surrounded; but while the lessons are being read word is brought me that the New Basilica also is full of people, that the crowd seemed greater than when all were at liberty, that they were calling for a Reader. To be brief, the soldiers themselves, who were found to have occupied the Basilica, being informed of my directions that the people should abstain from communion with them, began to come to our assembly. At the sight of them the minds of the women are agitated, one of them rushes forth. But the soldiers themselves exclaimed that they had come to pray not to fight. The people raised a cry. In the most modest, most resolute, most faithful manner they entreated that I would go to that Basilica. In that Basilica also the people were reported to desire my presence.

14. Then I began the following discourse: Ye have heard, my sons, the lesson from the book of Job, which according to the usual service of the season, is now in course. By use the devil knew that this book was to be declared, already all the power of his temptations is laid open and betrayed, and therefore he exerted himself to-day with greater violence. But thanks be to our God Who hath so confirmed you in faith and patience. I went up into the pulpit to admire Job, I found I had all of you to admire as Jobs. Job lives again in each of you, in each the patience and virtue of that saint is reflected. For what more opportune could be said by Christian men than that which the Holy Spirit hath spoken in you this day? 'We petition your Majesty, we use no force, we feel no fear, but we petition.' This is what becomes Christians, to desire peace and quiet fear, and still not to let the steadfastness of faith and truth be shaken even by peril of death. For the Lord is our Guide, Ps. xvii. 7. Who will save those who hope in Him.

15. But let us come to the lessons set before us. Ye see that power of temptation is given to the devil to prove the good. The wicked one envies our progress in good, he tempts us in various ways. He tempted holy Job in his patrimony, he tempted him in his sons, he tempted him by bodily pains. The stronger is tempted in his own person, the weaker in that of others. Me too he would fain have despoiled of the riches which I possess in you, and he desired to waste this patrimony of your tranquillity. Yourselves also he desired to snatch from me, my good children for whom I daily offer sacrifice; you he endeavoured to involve in the ruins of the public confusion. Already then I have incurred two kinds of temptation. And perhaps the Lord, knowing my weakness, hath not yet given him power over my body: though I myself desire it, though I offer it, He perhaps still judges me unequal to this contest, and exercises me by diverse labours. Even Job himself did not begin with this contest, but was perfected by it.

16. But Job was tempted by the accumulated tidings of evil, he was tempted by his wife who said, Job ii. 9. Curse God, and die. Ye behold how many things are suddenly stirred up against us, the Goths, the troops, the heathen, the fine of the tradesmen, the punishment of the saints. Ye observe what is commanded, when it is said 'Deliver up the Basilica;' Curse God, and die. But here it is not only 'Speak against God,' but also 'Act against God.' The command is, 'Betray the altars of God.'

17. So then we are pressed by the Imperial mandates, but we are strengthened by the words of Scripture, which answered, ib. 10. Thou speakest as one of the foolish women speaketh. Not slight therefore is that temptation, for temptations which come through the agency of women we know to be more severe. Lastly, Adam also was betrayed by Eve, and thereby it came to pass that he betrayed the Divine commandments. Becoming aware of this error, and his guilty conscience accusing him, he desired to hide himself, but could not; wherefore God says to him, Gen. iii. 9. Adam where art thou? that is, what wert thou before? where hast thou now begun to be? where did I place thee? whither hast thou fallen? thou ownest thyself naked, because thou hast lost the garments of a good faith. The things wherewith thou desirest to clothe thyself are leaves. Thou hast cast aside the fruit, thou desirest to lie hid under the leaves of the tree, but thou art betrayed. For one woman's sake thou hast chosen to depart from thy God, therefore thou fliest from Him when thou soughtest to see. Thou hast chosen to hide thyself with one woman, to leave the mirror of the world, the abode of Paradise, the Grace of Christ.

18. Why need I add that Elijah also was cruelly persecuted by Jezebel? that Herodias caused John the Baptist to be put to death? Each man seems to suffer from this or that woman; for me, in proportion as my merits are less, my trials are heavier. My strength is weaker, but I have more danger. Women succeed each other, their hatreds are interchanged, their falsehoods are varied, the elders are gathered together, the plea of wrong to the Emperor is put forward. What explanation is there then of such grievous temptation to such a worm as I am, but that it is not me but the Church that they persecute.

19. At length came the command, 'Deliver up the Basilica;' I reply, 'It is not lawful for us to deliver it up, nor for your Majesty to receive it. By no law can you violate the house of a private man, and do you think that the house of God may be taken away? It is asserted that all things are lawful to the Emperor, that all things are his. But do not burden your conscience with the thought that you have any right as Emperor over sacred things. Exalt not yourself, but if you would reign the longer, be subject to God. It is written, S. Matt. xxii. 21. God's to God and Cæsar's to Cæsar. The palace is the Emperor's, the Churches are the Bishop's. To you is committed jurisdiction over public not over sacred buildings.' Again the Emperor is said to have issued his command, 'I also ought to have one Basilica;' I answered S. Matt. xiv. 4. 'It is not lawful for thee to have her. What hast thou to do with an adultress who is not bound with Christ in lawful wedlock?'

20. While I was engaged with this subject, it was reported to me that the Imperial hangings were taken down, the Church filled with people, and that my presence was required; straightway I turned my discourse to this, saying, How deep and profound are the oracles of the Holy Spirit! Remember, brethren, what was read at matins and how we responded with deep grief of mind, Ps. lxxix. 1. O God the heathen are come into Thine inheritance. And truly the heathen came, nay, even more than the heathen, for the Goths came and men of divers nations, they came armed with weapons, and surrounded and seized the Basilica. Ignorant of Thy Greatness we grieved for this, but our ignorance was mistaken.

21. The heathen came, but truly into Thine inheritance they came, for they who came as heathen were made Christians. They who came to invade Thine inheritance, were made coheirs of God; those whom I accounted enemies are become my defenders; I have as comrades those whom I esteemed adversaries. Thus has that been fulfilled which the prophet David spake of the Lord Jesus, that Ps. lxxvi. 2, 3. His Dwelling is in peace[106], there brake He the horns of the bow, the shield, the sword, and the battle. For whose office, whose work is this but Thine, Lord Jesus? Thou sawest armed men coming to Thy temple, on the one hand the people groaning and collecting in a crowd that they might not seem to give up the Basilica, on the other hand the soldiers commanded to use force. Death was before my eyes, lest in the midst of all this madness should break out into licence. But Thou, O Lord plantedst Thyself in the midst, and madest the twain one. Thou restrainedst the soldiers, saying, If ye run to arms, if they who are within My temple are disturbed, Ps. xxx. 9. What profit is there in My blood? All thanks therefore be to Thee, O Christ. It was not an enemy, not a messenger but Ps. xxx. 11, 12. Thou O Lord hast delivered Thy people, Thou hast put off my sackcloth and girded me with gladness.

22. Thus I spoke, wondering that the Emperor's mind could be softened by the zeal of the soldiers, by the entreaties of the Counts, by the prayers of the people. Meanwhile I am informed that a Secretary was come with the mandate. I retired a little, and he notified to me the mandate. 'What has been your design,' says he, 'in acting against the Emperor's orders?' I replied, 'What has been ordered I know not, nor am I aware what is alleged to have been wrongly done.' He says, 'Why have you sent presbyters to the Basilica? If you are a tyrant I would fain know it, that I may know how to arm myself against you.' I replied by saying that I had done nothing which assumed too much for the Church, but when I heard it was filled with soldiers, I only uttered deeper groans, and though many exhorted me to proceed thither, I replied, 'I cannot give up the Basilica, yet I must not fight.' That afterwards, when I was told that the Imperial hangings were removed, and that the people required me to go thither, I had directed the presbyters to do so, but that I was unwilling to go myself, saying, 'I trust in Christ that the Emperor himself will espouse our cause.'

23. If this seems like domineering, I grant indeed that I have arms, but only in the name of Christ; I have the power of offering up my body. Why, I asked, did he delay to strike if he considered my power unlawful? By ancient right Priests have conferred sovereignty, never assumed it, and it is a common saying that Emperors have coveted the Priesthood more often than Priests sovereignty. Christ fled that He might not be made a king. We have a power of our own. The power of a Priest is his weakness; 2 Cor. xii. 10. When I am weak, it is said, then am I strong. But let him against whom God has raised up no adversary beware lest he raise up a tyrant for himself. Maximus did not say that I domineered over Valentinian, though he complains that my embassage prevented his passing over into Italy. I added, that priests were never usurpers, but that they had often suffered from usurpers.

24. The whole of that day was past in this affliction; meanwhile the boys tore in derision the Imperial hangings. I could not return home, because the Church was surrounded by a guard of soldiers. We recited the Psalms with our brethren in the little Basilica belonging to the Church.

25. On the following day, the book of Jonah was read in due course, after which, I began this discourse; We have read a book, my brethren, wherein it is foretold that sinners shall return again to repentance. They are accepted on this footing, that their present state is considered an earnest of the future.

I added that this just man was even willing to incur blame, rather than behold or denounce destruction on the city; and, since that prophecy was mournful, that he was also grieved because the gourd had withered; that God had said to the prophet, Jonah iv. 9. Art thou greatly angry for the gourd? and Jonah had answered, I am greatly angry. Then the Lord said, if the withering of the gourd was a grief to him, how much more ought he to care for the salvation of so many souls; and therefore that He had suspended the destruction which had been prepared for the whole city.

26. Immediate tidings are brought to me that the Emperor had commanded the soldiers to retire from the Church; and that the fine which had been imposed on the merchants on their condemnation should be restored. What joy then prevailed among the whole people, what applause, what congratulations! Now it was the day whereon the Lord delivered Himself up for us, the day whereon there is a relaxation of penance in the Church. The soldiers eagerly brought the tidings, running in to the altars, and giving the kiss, the emblem of peace. Then I perceived that God had smitten Ib. 7. the worm which came when the morning rose, that the whole city might be preserved.

27. These are the past events, and would that they were terminated, but the excited words of the Emperor show that heavier trials are awaiting us. I am called a tyrant, and even more than tyrant. For when the Counts besought the Emperor to go to the Church, and said that they did so at the request of the soldiers, he replied, 'You would deliver me up to chains, if Ambrose bade you.' I leave you to judge what awaits us after these words; all shuddered at hearing them, but there are those about him who exasperate him.

28. Lastly Calligonus the Grand Chamberlain[107] ventured to address himself specially to me. 'Do you, while I live, despise Valentinian? I will have your head.' I replied, 'May God grant you to fulfil your threat: I shall suffer as becomes a Bishop, you will act as befits an eunuch.' May God indeed turn them aside from the Church; may all their weapons be directed against me, may they satiate their thirst in my blood!

LETTER XXI. A.D. 386.

S. AMBROSE ENDS his letter to his sister with forebodings of more troubles. Nor was he wrong. One of the next steps taken was a challenge to dispute publicly before the Emperor with Auxentius the Arian (so-called) Bishop, with regular umpires (judices) appointed on both sides. This letter is his reply to the Emperor, setting forth his ground for refusing, as he had before done at the time of the Council of Aquileia, to allow laymen to be judges of questions of Faith. (See above, Council of Aquil. § 51, 52, 53.)

TO THE MOST CLEMENT EMPEROR, HIS BLESSED MAJESTY VALENTINIAN, AMBROSE, BISHOP, SENDS GREETING.

1. DALMATIUS the tribune and notary cited me at your Clemency's bidding, as he alleged, requiring that I also should choose umpires as Auxentius had done. He did not mention the names of those who had been called for, but he added that the trial would take place in the Consistory, and that your pious judgment would decide between us.

2. To this I make, as I consider, a sufficient answer. No one ought to deem me contumacious for asserting what your father of illustrious memory not only declared by word of mouth[108] but sanctioned by his laws; that in a matter of the Faith or of any ecclesiastical ordinance, the judges ought to be qualified for it, both competent by office and qualified by profession: (these are the words of the Rescript), that is to say, he would have Bishops judge Bishops. Moreover if a bishop were accused elsewhere also, and a charge of a moral nature to be examined, this too he willed should be referred to the judgment of Bishops.

3. Who then is it who makes a contumacious answer to your Clemency? He who would have you like your Father, or he who would have you unlike? Unless perhaps some persons count cheaply the opinion of that great Emperor, whose faith has been approved by the constancy of his confession[109], and his wisdom proclaimed by the improved condition of the State.

4. When have you ever heard, most gracious Emperor, that laymen had judged a Bishop in a matter pertaining to the Faith? Does their flattery make us cringe so low as to forget the rights of the priesthood, and suppose that what God has committed to me I should entrust to others? If a layman may teach a Bishop, what will follow? a layman will dispute, and a Bishop listen, a Bishop learn of a layman. Assuredly, if we revert to the volume of Holy Scripture or to the time of old, who is there who will deny that in a cause of the Faith, in a cause, I say, of the Faith, Bishops are wont to judge Christian Emperors, not Emperors to judge Bishops.

5. Hereafter, you will, by God's favour, reach a more mature age, and then you will judge what kind of Bishop he must be who submits the rights of the priesthood to laymen. Your father, who by God's favour attained a riper age, used to say: 'It is not for me to judge between Bishops:' your Majesty now says, 'I ought to judge.' He, although baptized into Christ, considered himself unequal to the weight of so important a judgment; does your Majesty, who have yet to earn for yourself the Sacrament of Baptism, claim to decide concerning the Faith, although still ignorant of the Sacrament of this Faith?

6. But what sort of judges he will have selected we may leave to be guessed, seeing that he fears to disclose their names. Let them come openly, if indeed there be any, to the Church; let them attend together with the people, not to sit as judges, but for every one to prove his own feelings and choose whom he will follow. The cause is concerning the Bishop of that Church; if the people hear him and suppose he has the better of the argument, let them follow his Faith; I shall not be jealous.

7. I forbear to mention that the people themselves have already decided; I do not urge that the Bishop[110] whom they have they demanded from your Majesty's father; I urge not that your father promised tranquillity for the future if he, having been elected, took upon him the Bishopric. It was in reliance on these promises that I acted.

8. But if he prides himself on the support of any foreigners let him be Bishop in the place whence those come who hold that he should be invested with the name of a Bishop. For I neither acknowledge him as Bishop, nor know whence he comes.

9. How, your Majesty, can we be said to settle a matter in which you have already declared your judgment; nay, have yourself published laws precluding others from deciding otherwise. And when you laid down this rule for others you laid it down also for yourself; for the laws which the Emperor makes he ought to be the first to keep. Would you then have me make trial whether those who are chosen judges will meet, contrary to your decree, or whether they will allege that they have not been able to contravene so rigid and peremptory a command of the Emperor?

10. But this is the part of a contumacious not of a respectful Bishop. See, your Majesty, how you yourself partially rescind your own law; but I would that you would do so not partially but universally, for I would not wish your law to be above the law of God. The law of God has taught us what we should follow, human laws cannot teach us this. They can compel a change in the timid, but they cannot inspire faith.

11. Who therefore when he learns that in one moment it has been published through so many provinces that whoever shall resist the Emperor shall be put to death, whoever shall not give up the temple of God shall immediately be slain; who is there, I say, who either alone or with a few others can say to the Emperor; ‘I do not approve your law?’ The priesthood are not allowed to say this; are then the laity allowed? And shall he judge concerning the faith, who either hopes for favour or fears giving offence?

12. Lastly, shall I venture to nominate laymen for umpires, who if they keep true to their Faith must be proscribed or put to death, as that law passed concerning the Faith prescribes. Shall I then expose them to the hazard either of prevarication or of punishment?

13. Ambrose is not of such importance as to degrade the priesthood on his account. One man’s life is not of as much value as the dignity of the whole priesthood, by whose advice I gave my direction when they suggested that there might be some heathen or Jew, chosen by Auxentius, to whom we might give a triumph over Christ if we committed to him judgment concerning Christ. What else pleases them but to hear of wrong done to Christ? What else can please them but the denial (which God forbid) of the Divinity of Christ? Clearly they agree entirely with the Arian, who calls Christ a creature, which heathens and Jews too are willing enough to confess.

14. This was decreed at the synod of Ariminum, and with good reason do I abhor that Council; following as I do the doctrine of the Nicene Council, from which neither death nor the sword can ever separate me. This Faith your Majesty’s father, the blessed Emperor Theodosius, both followed and approved. This Faith the provinces of Gaul and of Spain hold, and this they keep with the pious confession of the Divine Spirit.

15. If I have to preach, I have learnt to preach in the Church, as my predecessors did. If a conference is to be held on a matter of Faith, it ought to be a conference of Bishops, as was the case under Constantine of august memory, who laid down no laws beforehand, but left to the Bishops the liberty of judging. The same was the case also under Constantius of illustrious memory, who inherited his father’s dignity, but what began well ended badly. For the Bishops had at first subscribed an orthodox confession, but, through the wish of certain persons to judge of the Faith in agreement with the palace, the result was that these judgments of the Bishops were fraudulently changed; they however immediately recalled this perverted decision. And there is no doubt that the majority at Ariminum approved the creed of the Nicene Council[111] and condemned the Arian decrees.

16. If Auxentius appeals to a Synod to discuss questions concerning the Faith, though it would be needless to disturb so many Bishops on one person's account, who, were he an Angel from heaven, ought not to be preferred to the Church's peace, I too will not be absent when I hear that the Synod is assembled. Let the law then be repealed, if you would have the contest entered upon.

17. I would have come to your Majesty's Consistory, to offer this plea in your presence, could I have obtained leave from the Bishops or the people; but they said that an argument concerning the Faith ought to be held in the Church in the presence of the people.

18. I could have wished that your Majesty had not declared that I might go into exile, whither I chose. I went abroad daily, no man guarded me. You should then have sent me wherever you thought fit, for I was ready to submit to any thing; now the Bishops say to me, 'There is little difference between voluntarily leaving Christ's altar and betraying it, for if you leave you will betray it.'

19. And I would I were certain that the Church would not be given up to the Arians, I would then willingly surrender myself to your Majesty's disposal. But if it is I only who am an intruder, why has the command been given to invade all other Churches also? I would it were certain, that no one would disturb the Churches, I would gladly then have any sentence which seems good passed concerning myself.

20. Let your Majesty then be pleased graciously to accept my reasons for not coming to the Church. I have not learned how to stand up in the Consistory except in your behalf[112]; and within the palace I cannot contend, for I neither seek after nor know the secrets of the palace.

21. I, Bishop Ambrose, offer this remonstrance to the most clement Emperor, his blessed Majesty Valentinian.

SERMON A.D. 386.

AGAINST AUXENTIUS ON THE GIVING UP THE BASILICAS.

THE persecution against S. Ambrose still continued. The Court party endeavoured to induce him to leave Milan, in order, they said, to prevent more serious troubles. This he refused to do, and at last he remained for several days and nights continuously within the Basilica[113], attended by a crowded congregation, all determined to protect him from the violence of the court, while a guard of soldiers was at the same time blockading the Church, and preventing any from leaving it. It was during this time that this Sermon was preached. In it S. Ambrose first calms the fears of the people lest he should be induced to leave them, assuring them that he will only yield to force; and proceeds to apply the Lessons of the day, the story of Naboth and the Entry into Jerusalem, to the circumstances of the time, giving incidentally several interesting details of the contest between himself and the Court, and alluding to the hymns which he then taught the people to sing.

1. I SEE that you are in an unusual state of excitement, and that your eyes are fixed upon me. I am at a loss to know the cause of this. Is it that you saw or heard that an Imperial message has been brought to me by the Tribunes, commanding me to depart hence whither I would, and that all who would were permitted to follow me. Were you then alarmed lest I should desert the Church, and in fear for my own life abandon you? But you heard my answer. I said that the thought of deserting the Church could not for an instant enter my mind, for I feared the Lord of the Universe more than the Ruler of the Empire; that if I were to be forcibly removed from the Church, it would be my body not my mind which would be driven by violence from thence, that if the Emperor were to act as royal power is wont, I was prepared for that which is the part of a priest to suffer.

2. Why then are you thus disturbed? I will never desert you of my own will, but I may not repel force by force. I shall still be able to mourn, to weep, and to groan; when weapons, soldiers, Goths assail me, my tears are my weapons, for these are the defence of a priest. By any other means I neither can nor ought to resist; but to fly and desert the Church is not my wont, lest any one should impute it to fear of heavier punishment. You yourselves know that I am wont to pay deference to our Rulers, but not to give way to them, and willingly to offer myself to punishment, not fearing what is prepared for me.

3. Would that I could be satisfied that the Church would not be delivered to heretics! I would willingly go to the Emperor's palace, were this accordant with the priest's office, so as to hold our contest rather in the palace than in the Church. But in the Consistory Christ is not wont to be the accused, but the Judge. Who will deny that a matter of faith should be pleaded in the Church? If any one has confidence in his cause let him come hither; let him not look for the judgment of the Emperor, which already shews its leaning, which has declared plainly by the law he has enacted that he is adverse to the Faith, nor for the expected support of certain intriguers. I will not give occasion to any one to barter for gain a wrong to Christ.

4. The guard of soldiers and the din of the arms which beset the Church, alarm not my faith, but they make me fear that in keeping me here you may incur danger to yourselves. For I have learned ere this not to fear for myself, but I begin now to fear more for you. Permit, I beg, your Bishop to enter the lists; we have an adversary who challenges us; for our 1 S. Pet. v. 8 adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about seeking whom he may devour, as the Apostle saith. Doubtless he has obtained, he has obtained (not to deceive us, but to warn us, is it recorded) this power of temptation, lest haply I should be removed from the stedfastness of my faith by the wounds of my body. You also have read that the devil thus tempted holy Job in many ways; and last of all he begged and obtained the power of afflicting his body which he covered with sores.

5. When it was proposed to me to give up at once the Church plate, I made this reply; That if my own property was required of me, farm or house, gold or silver, anything that lies in my power, I would willingly give it; but that I would withdraw nothing from God's temple, nor surrender what had been committed to me to keep, not to surrender. And further, that I was studying also for the Emperor's good, for it was expedient neither for me to surrender nor for him to receive these things; let him then listen to the words of an independent Bishop: if he regard his own interest, let him abstain from doing wrong to Christ.

6. These are words full of humility, and, I believe, of that affection which a Bishop owes to his Emperor. But since Eph. vi. 12. our contest is not only against flesh and blood, but also (which is more trouble) against spiritual wickedness in high places, that tempter, the Devil, sharpens the contest by his ministers, and deems that by the wounds of my body the trial must be made. I know, brethren, that these wounds which we receive for Christ, are no wounds: life is not lost by them, but its seed propagated. Permit, I beseech you, the contest to take place, it is for you to be spectators only. Consider that if there is in a city an athlete or one skilled in some other science, it wishes to present him for the combat. Why do ye reject in greater things what ye are wont to wish for even in smaller ones? He fears neither arms nor barbarians, who dreads not death, who is entangled in no fleshly pleasure.

7. Without doubt if the Lord hath appointed me to this combat, it is in vain that you have kept sleepless watch and ward through so many nights and days; the will of Christ will be performed. For our Lord Jesus Christ is Almighty, this is our Faith; and therefore what He bids to be done will be fulfilled, nor does it become us to run counter to the Divine Will.

8. Ye have heard what has been read to-day: the Saviour commanded an ass's colt to be brought to Him by the Apostles and commanded that if any one sought to hinder them they should say, S. Luke xix. 35. The Lord hath need of him. What if now also He hath commanded this ass's colt, that is the colt of that animal which is wont to bear a heavy burthen, such as is the condition of man, to whom it is said, S. Matt. xi. 28. etc. Come unto Me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest: take My yoke upon you, for My yoke is easy: what, I say, if He hath now commanded this colt to be brought to Him, sending forth those Apostles who now having put off the body, wear, invisibly to our eyes, the guise of Angels? Will they not say, should any one seek to hinder them, The Lord hath need of him, if either the desire of this life, or flesh and blood, or the conversation of the world, for perhaps we are acceptable to some persons, should seek to hinder them? But he who loves me here, cannot give a better testimony of his affection than by suffering me to become a sacrifice for Christ; because Phil. i. 23. to be dissolved and to be with Christ is much better; howbeit, to remain in the flesh is more needful for your sakes. Ye have therefore, my beloved brethren, no cause for fear, for I know that whatever I shall suffer, I shall suffer for Christ. And I have read that I ought not to fear those who can kill the flesh, and I have heard One say, S. Matt. x. 39. He who loses his life for My sake, shall find it.

9. Wherefore, if the Lord wills it, I am sure that no resistance will be made. But if He still delay our contest, why should we fear? It is not bodily protection but the Lord's providence which is wont to protect the servant of Christ.

10. You are disturbed at finding some folding doors unclosed which a blind man in returning home is said to have opened. Acknowledge then that human guards are no support. Lo! one who had lost the gift of sight has broken through all your barriers and baffled your guards: but the Lord hath not lost[114] the guard of His mercy. Do you not remember that two days ago there was found open an entrance on the left side of the Basilica which you thought to be closed and guarded? The Basilica was surrounded by armed men who inspected every entrance, but their eyes were blinded so that they could not discover the one which was open; and so it remained open, as you know, for many nights. Cease then all anxiety, for what Christ commands, and what is expedient, shall come to pass.

11. In the next place I will produce to you instances from the Old Testament. Elisha was sought after by the king of Syria, an army was sent to take him, he was surrounded on every side, his servant began to fear, because he was a servant, that is, his mind was not free, nor had he freedom of action. The holy prophet prayed that his eyes might be opened, and said, 2 Kings vi. 16. (the sense, not the words.) Look and see how many more are on our side than against us. And he looked up and saw thousands of Angels. You see then that the servants of Christ are protected rather by invisible than by visible beings. But when they keep guard around you, they have been called to do so by your prayers; for you have read that those very men who sought for Elisha on entering Samaria came upon the very man whom they wished to capture, yet they were not able to injure him, but were saved by the intercession of the very man against whom they came.

12. Take the Apostle Peter too as an example of both these things. When Herod sought after and took him, he was put in prison; for the servant of God had not fled but stood firm and without fear. The Church prayed for him, but the Apostle was asleep in the prison, a proof that he feared not. An Angel was sent to rouse him from his sleep, and by him Peter was brought out of prison and for the time escaped death.

13. The same Peter, afterwards, after overcoming Simon, by spreading the precepts of God among the people and preaching chastity, stirred up the minds of the heathen against him: and when they sought to put him to death the Christians besought him to retire for a little while. And although he was desirous of suffering, yet he was moved by the sight of the people praying, for they besought him to reserve himself for the instruction and confirmation of the people. To be brief: as he set out from the walls by night, he saw Christ meeting him in the gate and entering the city, whereupon he said, 'Lord, whither goest Thou?' Christ answered, 'I am coming to be crucified again.' This Divine response Peter understood to refer to his own cross, for Christ, Who had put off the flesh by undergoing the suffering of death could not again be crucified, Rom. vi. 10. For in that He died, He died unto sin once, but in that He liveth, He liveth unto God. Wherefore Peter understood that Christ was again to be crucified in His servant; and so he turned back of his own accord, and when the Christians asked him why, he told them what he had seen, and was immediately seized, and honoured the Lord Jesus by his cross.

14. Ye see then that Christ wills to suffer in His servants. What if He saith to this servant also, S. John xxi. 22. I will that he tarry, but follow thou Me? what if He wills to taste of the fruit from this tree? For if it was His meat to do His Father's Will, it is His meat also to feed upon the sufferings of His servants. To take an example from our Lord Himself, did He not suffer when He willed, and was He not found when they sought for Him?

But when the hour of His passion had not arrived, He passed through the midst of them who sought for Him, and they who saw Him could not detain Him. Which evidently shews that when the Lord wills, each man is found and taken, while he whose time is not come although he meet the eyes, is not captured.

15. And did I not go out daily to make visits, or go to the tomb of the Martyrs? Did I not in going and returning pass close by the Royal palace? And yet no man arrested me, though they wished to drive me from the city, as they shewed afterwards by saying, 'Leave this city, and go where thou wilt.' I expected, I confess, something great, to be burned or slain with the sword for the name of Christ, but they offered me delights in the place of sufferings; and yet the soldiers of Christ seeks not for delights but for sufferings. Wherefore let no man trouble you by the intelligence that they have prepared a carriage[115], or that Auxentius, who calls himself Bishop, has uttered what he thinks terrible words.

16. Many said that executioners had been sent, that the punishment of death had been decreed; I fear them not, nor will I desert my post. For whither should I go to find a place that is not full of nothing but tears and groans? For in every Church the Catholic clergy are ordered to be cast forth; if they resist, to be put to death; all the senators[116] who do not obey this mandate, to be proscribed. And it is a Bishop who writes these orders with his own hand and dictates them with his own mouth, who to prove his learning omitted not an ancient precedent; for we read in the prophet that he saw a flying sickle[117], and in imitation of this Auxentius sent a winged sword through all the cities. And thus 2 Cor. xi. 14. Satan transforms himself into an Angel of light, and imitates his power for evil purposes.

17. Thou, Lord Jesus, hast in one moment redeemed the world; shall Auxentius in one moment, so far as in him lies, slay so many people, some with the sword, others by sacrilege[118]? My Basilica he sought with a mouth and hands of blood, and to him our present Lesson may be well applied, Ps. l. 16. Unto the ungodly, saith God, why dost thou preach my laws? that is, There is no concord between peace and wrath, 2 Cor. vi. 15. between Christ and Belial. You remember also how in the Lesson of to-day that holy man Naboth, the owner of a vineyard, was requested by the king to surrender it to him, that he might root up the vines and plant it with common herbs, and that he answered, 1 Kings xxi. 3. God forbid that I should give thee the inheritance of my fathers; and that king was grieved that what belonged of right to another was refused him when he claimed it as his right, and only gained by the deceit of a woman's artifice. Naboth then defended his vineyard even with his own blood; if he would not surrender his vineyard, shall we surrender the Church of Christ?

18. How then did I reply contumaciously? When summoned, I said, 'God forbid that I should surrender Christ's heritage. If Naboth would not surrender the heritage of his fathers, shall I surrender Christ's heritage?' I added moreover, 'God forbid that I should surrender the heritage of my fathers, the heritage of Dionysius, who died in exile for the Faith, of the Confessor Eustorgius, of Myrocles, and of all the faithful Bishops of old time.' I answered as becomes a Bishop, let the Emperor act as becomes an Emperor. He shall deprive me of my life sooner than my Faith.

19. But to whom am I to surrender it? The Lesson just read from the Gospel ought to teach us what it is that is demanded, and by whom. Ye heard it read that, when Christ was sitting on the ass's colt, the children cried out, and the Jews were indignant, appealing to the Lord Jesus, and saying that He should bid them hold their peace, but He replied, S. Luke xix. 40. If these were to hold their peace, the very stones would cry out. Then He entered the Temple, and cast out the moneychangers, and their tables, and those that sold doves in the Temple of God. This Lesson was read by no direction of ours, but by chance; but it suits well with the present time. For the praises of Christ are always as it were scourges to misbelievers. And now when Christ is praised the heretics say that we are exciting sedition, the heretics say that they were thereby threatened with death; and truly the praises of Christ are death to them. For how can they bear His praises Whose weakness they are proclaiming! Wherefore to this day the praises of Christ are a scourge to the madness of the Arians.

20. The Gerasenes could not bear the presence of Christ, these men, worse than the Gerasenes, cannot even bear the praises of Christ. They see children singing the glory of Christ; for it is written, Ps. viii. 2. Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings Thou hast perfected praise. They deride their tender years so full of faith, and ask, Why do they cry out? But Christ answers them, If these should hold their peace the very stones would cry out, that is, the stranger will cry out, the young men too will cry out, the more mature will cry out, the old men also: stones built into that Stone of Whom it is written, Ps. cxviii. 22. The stone which the builders disallowed is become the head-stone of the corner.

21. Christ then, invited by these praises, enters His Temple, and takes His scourge and drives out the moneychangers. For He will not permit those who are slaves of money to be in His Temple, He will not suffer those to be there who sell seats. What are seats, but honours? What are doves, but simple minds, or souls which embrace a sincere and pure faith? Shall I then introduce into the Temple him whom Christ excludes? For he is commanded to go forth who sells dignities and honours, he is commanded to go forth who would sell the simple minds of the faithful.

22. Wherefore Auxentius is cast forth, Mercurianus is excluded. This is one portent under two names. That it might not be known who he was, he changed his name, and, as there had been here Auxentius the Arian Bishop, so he, to deceive the people whom the other had influenced, called himself Auxentius. Thus he changed his name, but his perfidy he could not change;

he put off wolf, and yet put on wolf. It avails him not to have changed his name, what he really is is known. He was known by one name in the regions of Scythia, he is called by another here, he has names differing according to his country. Now therefore he has two names, and if from hence he goes elsewhere he will have a third also. For how will he endure to keep a name which betrays the greatness of his crime? In Scythia he did less wickedly, and yet he was so ashamed as to change his name; here he has dared to do more heinous things, and will he be willing wherever he goes to be betrayed by his name? After writing with his own hand the death warrant of so many people, will he be able to retain his senses unshaken?

23. The Lord Jesus drove out a few from His temple, Auxentius left no one. Jesus casts men out of His temple with a scourge, Auxentius with a sword; Jesus with a rod, Mercurianus with an axe. Our holy Lord drives out the sacrilegious with a scourge, this wicked man persecutes the godly with the sword. Of him ye have to-day said well; 'let him carry his laws away with him.' He shall carry them though he desire it not, he shall carry with him his conscience, though he carry not the writing, he shall carry his own soul inscribed in blood, although he carry not a letter inscribed with ink. Jer. xvii. 1. Thy sin, O Judah, is written with a pen of iron and with the point of a diamond, and it is graven in thy heart, graven that is in the place from whence it came forth.

24. Does he moreover, stained as he is with blood and slaughter, dare to mention discussion to me? Those whom he fails to deceive by his arguments he sentences to be smitten with the sword, and he dictates bloody laws with his mouth, writing them with his hand, and thinking that the law can impose a Creed on men. He has never heard what was read to-day, Gal. ii. 19. A man is not justified by the works of the law, or, I by the law am dead to the law that I might live to God, that is, by the spiritual law he is dead to the carnal interpretation of the law. Let us too by the law of our Lord Jesus Christ die to this law which sanctions the decrees of perfidy. It is not the law which has gathered together the Church, but the faith of Christ. For the law is not of faith: Gal. iii. 11. But the just shall live by faith. It is faith then, not the law, which makes a man just, because righteousness is not by the law, but by the faith of Christ. But he who rejects faith, and takes law for his rule, bears witness to his own unrighteousness, for the just shall live by faith.

25. Shall any then follow this law confirming the Council of Ariminum wherein Christ is called a creature? But they say, Gal. iv. 4. God sent His Son, made of a woman, made under the Law. So then He is made they say, that is, created. Will they not consider this very text which they have produced; that Christ is said to be made, but made of a woman, that is, He according to His birth from the Virgin was made, Who was according to His Divine generation born of the Father? They read too to-day that Christ Gal. iii. 13. redeemed us from the curse of the Law, being made a curse for us. Was Christ a curse according to His Divinity? But why He should be called a curse the Apostle teaches thee, alleging the text, Ib. Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree, that is, He Who in His flesh took upon Him our flesh, in His body carried our griefs and our curses that He might crucify them, for He is cursed, not in Himself, but in thee. Lastly, you have in another place, 2 Cor. v. 21. Who knew no sin, but was made sin for us, for He took upon Him our sins, to do away with them by the Sacrament of His Passion.

26. These points, my brethren, I would have discussed more fully with you in his presence, but he, being aware that you were not ignorant of the Faith, fled from your scrutiny, and chose as his advocates, if indeed he chose any, four or five heathens, whom I would willingly have now present in our general assembly, not for them to judge of Christ, but that they might hear the majesty of Christ. They however have already pronounced concerning Auxentius, for when he daily argued before them they gave him no credit. What can be a greater condemnation of him than that he was defeated without an adversary before his own judges? Thus we now have their own sentence against Auxentius.

27. And justly is he to be condemned for choosing heathen judges, for he disregarded the Apostle's precept who says 1 Cor. vi.1, 2. Dare any of you, having a matter against another, go to law before the unjust, and not before the saints? Do you not know that the saints shall judge the world? And below he says, Ib. vi. 5. Is it so that there is not a wise man among you, no not one that shall be able to judge between his brethren? but brother goeth to law with brother, and that before the unbelievers? Ye see that what he offered is contrary to the Apostle's authority. Choose whether we should follow Auxentius or Paul as our master?

28. But why should I speak of the Apostle, when our Lord Himself cries by the Prophet, Isa. li. 7. hearken unto Me My people, ye that know righteousness, in whose heart is My law. God says, hearken unto Me My people, ye that know righteousness. Auxentius says, Ye know not righteousness. Do ye not see that he now, who rejects the declaration of the heavenly oracles, despises God in you? Hearken unto Me My people; saith the Lord. He says not, Hearken ye Gentiles; He says not, Hearken ye Jews. For now they that were the people of God are become the people of error, and they who were the people of error have become the people of God, because they have believed in Christ. Wherefore that people are judges, in whose heart is the Divine, not human, law; the law 2 Cor. iii. 3. written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God; not inscribed on paper but stampt upon the heart; the law of grace not of blood. Who is it then who wrongs you, he who refuses or he who chooses to be heard by you?

29. Hemmed in on all sides, he has recourse to the wiles of his fathers. He wishes to excite odium against me in regard to the Emperor, saying, that a youth yet a catechumen and ignorant of the sacred Scriptures, ought to judge, and to judge in the Consistory. As if last year, when I was summoned to the palace, when in the presence of the nobles the matter was argued before the Consistory, when the Emperor wished to take away the Basilica, I was then cowed by the sight of the Imperial court, and had not maintained the constancy of a priest, or had suffered our rights to be infringed there. Do they not remember that when the people knew I had gone to the palace they rushed in with an onset that nothing could withstand; and when a Military Count came forth with some light troops to disperse the multitude they all offered themselves to death for the Faith of Christ? Was I not then requested to make a long speech to soothe the people? Did I not pledge my faith that no one should invade the Church's Basilica? And although my good offices were requested as a kindness, yet the coming of the populace to the palace was made a ground of charge against me; into the same odium then they wish me again to fall.

30. I recalled the people, and yet I did not escape odium, and this odium ought, I conceive, to be controuled rather than feared. For what should we fear for the name of Christ? Unless perhaps this which they say ought to move me; 'And ought not the Emperor then to have one Basilica to go to; and does Ambrose desire to be more powerful than the Emperor, so as to exclude him from the liberty of attending Church?' When they say this, they wish to lay hold of my words, like the Jews who tempted Christ with empty words, saying, S. Matt. xxii. 17. Master, is it lawful to give tribute to Cæsar or not? Must the servants of God always be exposed to odium on Cæsar's account? And does impiety, with a view to calumny, seek to use the Imperial name as a cloak? And can they protest that they do not partake of the sacrilege of these men, whose guidance they follow?

31. Yet see how much worse the Arians are than the Jews. The latter enquired of Christ whether He thought that the right of tribute should be rendered to Cæsar; the former are willing to surrender to the Emperor the rights of the Church. But like traitors, they follow their master, and so let us answer what our Lord and Master hath taught us. For Jesus perceiving the treachery of the Jews, said unto them, Ib. 18. sqq. Why tempt ye Me, shew Me a penny. And when they gave it to Him, He said, Whose image and whose superscription is this? They answered, Cæsar's. Jesus replied, Render therefore unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's. Thus I also say to them who find fault with me, Shew Me a penny. Jesus saw the penny was Cæsar's, and said, Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's. Can they from the seizure of the Basilicas of the Church offer the penny of Cæsar?

32. But in the Church I know one image, that is, the image of the invisible God, of which God said, Gen. i. 26. Let us make man in Our image, after Our likeness, that image of which it is written, that Christ is Heb. i. 3. the brightness of His glory, the express image of His substance. In this image I behold the Father, as the Lord Jesus Himself said, S. John xiv. 9. He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father also. For this Image is not divided from the Father, for He hath taught me the unity of the Trinity, saying, Ib. x. 30. I and the Father are One, and below, Ib. xvi. 15. All things that the Father hath are Mine. And of the Holy Spirit, saying, that He is the Spirit of Christ, and hath received from Christ, as it is written, Ib. 16. He shall take of Mine, and shall declare it unto you.

33. In what respect then have we not answered with humility? If he ask for tribute we deny it not. The Church lands pay tribute; if the Emperor desire to possess these lands he has the power to claim them; none of us will interfere. The contributions of the people will more than suffice for the poor; let them excite no ill-will on account of the lands, let them take them if it please the Emperor; I give them not, but I do not refuse them. They ask for gold, but I can say, Silver and gold I seek not. But this disbursement of gold they make a cause of offence: this offence I dread not. I have stipendiaries, it is true: my stipendiaries[119] are the poor of Christ, this is a treasure which I am well used to collect. May this offence of bestowing gold on the poor ever be charged upon me! And if they accuse me of defending myself by their means, I deny not, nay I even court the charge; a defence I have, but it is in the prayers of the poor. Blind they are and lame, weak and old, yet are they stronger than the stoutest warriors. Lastly, gifts to the poor make God our debtor, for it is written, Prov. xix. 17. He that giveth to the poor, lendeth to the Lord. The guards of warriors often gain not Divine grace.

34. Moreover they assert that the people have been beguiled by the strains of my hymns[120]. I deny not this either. It is a lofty strain, than which nothing is more powerful. For what can be more powerful than the confession of the Trinity, which is daily celebrated by the mouth of the whole people? All zealously desire to make profession of their faith, they know how to confess in verse the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit. Thus all are become teachers who were scarcely able to be disciples.

35. But what can be more lowly than for us to follow the example of Christ, Who Phil. iii. 7. being found in fashion as a man humbled himself being made obedient unto death. And again, by obedience He delivered all: Rom. v. 19. For as by the disobedience of one man many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one Man shall many be made righteous. If then He was obedient let them learn from Him the lesson of obedience, to which we adhere, saying to them who raise odium against us, on the Emperor's account, We render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's. To Cæsar tribute is due, we deny it not; the Church is God's, and must not be given up to Cæsar, because the Temple of God cannot by right be Cæsar's.

36. That this is said with due honour to the Emperor no one can deny. For what can be more honourable for the Emperor than to be styled a son of the Church? In saying this we are loyal to him without sinning against God. For the Emperor is within the Church, not over the Church; a good Emperor seeks the aid of the Church, he does not reject it, we say this humbly, but we assert it firmly. Some men threaten us with fire, sword and banishment. We, the servants of Christ, have learned not to fear. To them that fear not nothing is a cause of alarm. And it is thus written, Ps. lxiv. 7. vulg. arrows of infants are their blows become.

37. It would seem now that we have made a sufficient answer to what was proposed to us. Now I ask them the same question as did the Saviour, S. Luke xx. 4. The baptism of John was it from heaven or of men? And the Jews could not answer Him. If the Jews did not annul the baptism of John, shall Auxentius annul the Baptism of Christ? For that Baptism is not from men but from Christ which the Is. ix. 6. Angel of mighty Counsel brought down to us, that we might be justified before God. Why then does Auxentius hold that the faithful, those baptized in the name of the Trinity are to be re-baptized, when the Apostle says, Eph. iv. 5. One faith, one baptism; why does he say that he is the adversary of men, not of Christ, seeing that he spurns the counsel of God, and contemns that Baptism which Christ gave us for the redemption of our sins.

LETTER XXII. A.D. 386.

S. AMBROSE HERE recounts to his sister the discovery of the relics of S. S. Gervasius and Protasius, which occurred during the time of trial referred to in the last letter, and seems, by the pitch of excitement to which it raised the people of Milan, to have alarmed the court-party, and so to have caused the persecution to be dropped. The simple narrative needs no further introduction. It is strikingly told, and the question of the miracles discussed, in the 'Church of the Fathers' ch. iii. S. Augustine gives a brief account of the event in his Confessions, (ix. 7.) fully corroborating S. Ambrose's statements, and also speaks of it in De Civ. Dei xxii. 8, 2, and in Serm. de Divers. cclxxvi. 5.

TO THE LADY HIS SISTER WHOM HE LOVES MORE THAN HIS LIFE AND EYES AMBROSE HER BROTHER SENDS GREETING.

1. AS I am wont to keep your holiness informed of all that goes on here in your absence, I would have you know that we have found the bodies of some holy martyrs. After the consecration of a Church[121], many began to interrupt me crying with one voice; Consecrate this as you did the Roman Basilica. 'I will do so,' I replied, 'if I find any relics of Martyrs:' and immediately my heart burned within me as if prophetically.

2. In short the Lord lent us aid[122], though even the very clergy were alarmed. I caused the ground to be opened before the rails of the Church of S.S. Felix and Nabor. I found the suitable tokens; and when some persons were brought for us to lay our hands upon, the power of the holy martyrs became so manifest that before I began to speak, one of them, a woman[123], was seized[124] by an evil spirit and thrown down upon the ground in the place where the martyrs lay. We found two men of stupendous size, such as belonged to ancient days. All their bones were entire, and there was much blood. The people flocked thither in crowds throughout the whole of those two days. We arranged all the bones in order, and carried them when evening set in, to the Basilica of Fausta[125]; where we kept vigils throughout the night, and some possessed persons received imposition of hands. The following day we transferred them to the Basilica which they call Ambrosian. During their transportation a blind man was healed[126]. My discourse to the people was as follows. When I considered in what overflowing and unprecedented numbers you were met together, and thought on the gifts of Divine Grace which shone forth in the holy Martyrs, I felt myself, I confess, unequal to this task, and thought it impossible that I could find language to express that which we can hardly conceive in mind or endure with our eyes. But when the reading of the regular Lessons of Holy Scripture began, the Holy Spirit, Who spoke by the Prophets, granted us grace to speak somewhat worthy of this great and expectant concourse, and of the merits of the holy Martyrs.

4. Ps. xix. 1. The heavens, the Psalmist says, declare the glory of God. On reading this Psalm the thought arises that it is not so much the material elements as the heavenly merits that seem to offer praise worthy of God. But by the coincidence of the Lesson being read to-day it is made plain what are the heavens which tell of the glory of God. Behold on my right hand and on my left the holy relics, behold men of heavenly conversation, behold the trophies of a lofty mind. These are the heavens which declare the glory of God; these are the works of His hands which are told by the firmament. For it was not worldly snares, but the favour of the Divine operation, which raised them to the firmament of the most sacred Passion, and long beforehand by the evidence of their conversation and virtues bore this testimony of them, that they remained stedfast against the slippery wiles of this world.

5. Paul was an heaven, when he says, Phil. iii. 20. Our conversation is in heaven. James and John were heavens; they are called S. Mark iii. 17. sons of thunder; and therefore being as it were, an heaven, John saw S. John i. 1. the Word with God. The Lord Jesus Christ Himself was an heaven of perpetual light, when He told forth the glory of God, that glory which no man had before beheld. And therefore He said, Ib. 18. No man hath seen God at any time, but the Only-Begotten Son, Who is in the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him. Moreover, if you look for the handiwork of God, hear what Job says, Job xxxiii. 4. The Spirit of God hath made me. And so, strengthened against the temptations of the devil, he preserved his steps stedfast and without stumbling. But let us proceed to what follows.

6. Ps. xix. 2. Day unto day, the Psalm says, uttereth speech. These are the true days, which no shades of night obscure; these are the true days, full of light and eternal radiance, who have uttered the word of God not by any mere transient utterance but from their inmost heart, continuing constant in their confession, persevering in their testimony.

7. Another Psalm we read saith, Ps. cxiii. 5, 6. Who is like unto the Lord our God, that hath His dwelling so high, and yet regardeth the lowly things that are in heaven and earth. Truly God hath regarded the lowly, Who hath discovered the relics of the martyrs of His Church as they lay hid under the unnoted sod, of those whose souls are in heaven, while their bodies are in the earth, Ps. cxiii. 7, 8. taking up the simple out of the dust and lifting the poor out of the mire, even those whom ye see, to set them with the princes of His people. For whom but the holy martyrs shall we deem to be princes of the people? In their number Protasius and Gervasius heretofore long unknown are enrolled, they who have caused the Church of Milan, once barren of martyrs, but now Ib. 9. the mother of many children, to exult both in the honors and examples of her own sufferings?

8. Nor let this be considered alien from the true Faith: Day unto day uttereth speech, soul to soul, life to life, resurrection to resurrection. And night unto night uttereth knowledge, that is, flesh to flesh, the flesh whose sufferings have declared to all the true knowledge of faith. Bright and fair nights, full of stars: 1 Cor. xv. 41. For one star differeth from another star in glory, so also is the resurrection of the dead.

9. But many not improperly call this the resurrection of the martyrs; whether they have risen for themselves is another question, for us beyond a doubt they are risen. Ye have heard, nay, yourselves have seen, many cleansed from evil spirits; many also, after touching with their hands the garments of the saints, delivered from the infirmities under which they suffered: ye have seen the miracles of old time renewed, when through the coming of the Lord Jesus, a fuller Grace descended upon the earth; ye see many healed by the shadow, as it were, of the holy bodies. How many napkins are passed to and fro? How many garments placed on these holy relics, and endowed by the mere contact with the power of healing are reclaimed by their owners. All think themselves happy in touching even the outer-most thread, and whoever touches them will be made whole.

10. Thanks be to Thee, Lord Jesus, that at this time, when Thy Church requires greater guardianship, Thou hast raised up for us the spirits of the holy martyrs. Let all be well aware what kind of champions I desire, such as are wont to be protectors not assailants. Such are they, O holy people, whom I have obtained for you, a benefit to all, and a hurt to none. These are the defenders whom I desire, these are my soldiers, not the world's soldiers, but Christ's. I fear no odium on account of these; their patronage is safe in proportion to its power. Nay, I desire their protection for the very men who grudge them to me. Let them come then and see my body-guard: I deny not that I am surrounded by such weapons as these; Ps. xx. 7. Some put their trust in chariots and some in horses, but we will magnify ourselves in the Name of the Lord our God.

11. The Lesson from Holy Scripture relates how Elisha, when surrounded by the army of the Syrians, told his trembling servant not to fear, 2 Kings vi. 16 sqq. for they, said he, that are for us are more than they which are against us; and in order to convince Gehazi of this, he prayed that his eyes might be opened, and when this was done he saw a countless host of Angels present with the prophet. And we, though we see them not, yet are conscious of their presence. Our eyes were held, as long as the bodies of the saints lay hid in their graves. Now God has opened our eyes, and we have seen the aids which had so often succoured us. Before, we saw them not, although we possessed them. And so, as though the Lord said to our trembling hearts, 'Behold what great martyrs I have given you;' even so 2 Cor. iii. 18. with opened eyes we behold the glory of the Lord, which as to the passion of the martyrs is past, as to their operation is present. We have escaped, my brethren, no light load of shame; we had patrons and we knew it not. This one thing we have found, wherein we seem to excel our ancestors; they lost the knowledge of the holy martyrs, and we have gained it.

12. These noble relics are dug out of an ignoble sepulchre; these trophies are displayed in the face of day. The tomb is moist with blood, the tokens of a triumphant death are displayed, the uninjured relics are found in their proper place and order, the head separated from the body. Old men now relate that they have formerly heard the names of these martyrs, and read their titles. The city which had seized on the martyrs of other places had lost her own. This is the gift of God, and yet the favour which the Lord Jesus has conferred in the time of my episcopate I cannot deny, and since I myself am not counted worthy to be a martyr, I have gained these martyrs for you.

13. Bring these victorious victims to the spot where Christ is the sacrifice. But He, Who suffered for all, upon the Altar, they, who have been redeemed by His passion, under the Altar. This spot I had destined for myself, for it is fitting that the priest should rest where he hath been wont to offer, but I give up the right side to the sacred victims: that spot was due to the martyrs. Wherefore let us bury the hallowed relics, placing them in a worthy home, and let us employ the whole day in faithful devotion.

14. The people loudly requested that the deposition of the martyrs should be deferred until the Lord's Day; but at length I prevailed that it should take place on the following day. On that day I delivered a second sermon to the people to the following effect.

15. Yesterday I discoursed upon the verse, Ps. xix. 2. Day unto day uttereth speech, speaking according to my capacity: to-day Holy Scripture seems to me to have prophecied, not only before, but now. For seeing that this your devout celebration has continued night and day, the oracles of prophetic song have declared that these, even yesterday and to-day, are the days of which it is most opportunely said day unto day uttereth speech, and these the nights to which the saying is appropriate that night unto night uttereth knowledge. For what else have ye done during these two days but utter the word of God with deep emotion, and prove yourselves to have the knowledge of faith?

16. This your celebration some, as is their wont, are envious of. And since their envious minds cannot endure it, they also hate its cause, and proceed to such a pitch of folly as to deny the merits of the martyrs, whose power the very devils confess. But this is not strange; for such is the faithlessness of unbelievers that the confession of the devil himself is often less intolerable. For the devil said, S. Matt. viii. 29. Jesus, Thou Son of the living God, art Thou come to torment us before the time? And yet when the Jews heard this they even then denied the Son of God. And now ye have heard the devils crying out, and owning to the martyrs that they cannot bear their tortures, and saying ‘Why are ye come to torment us so grievously?’ And the Arians say, ‘These are not martyrs, nor can they torment the devil nor dispossess any one:’ while yet their own words are evidence of the torments of the evil spirits, and the benefits of the martyrs are shewn by the recovery of the healed, and the manifest proof of those that were dispossessed.

17. They deny that the blind man received his sight, but he denies not his own cure. He says, ‘I who was blind now see.’ He says, ‘My blindness has left me;’ he evidences it by the fact. They deny the benefit, though they cannot deny the fact. The man is well known: when in health he was employed in public trade, his name is Severus, a butcher by business. When his affliction befell him he laid down his employment. He calls as his witnesses those men by whose charities he was supported; he summons as witnesses of his present visitation the very men who bore testimony to his blindness. He declares that when he touched the border of the garment with which the martyrs’ bodies were clothed, his sight was restored to him.

18. Is not this like what we read in the Gospel? For the power which we admire proceeds from one and the same Author; nor does it signify whether it is a work or a gift, seeing that He confers gifts in His works and works by His gifts. For what He has enabled some themselves to perform, this in the work of others His Name effects. Thus we read in the Gospel that the Jews, when they saw that the blind man had received his sight, required the testimony of his parents. They asked, ‘How has your son received his sight?’ That blind man said, S. John ix. 25. Whereas I was blind now I see, and so too our blind man says, ‘I was blind, and now I see.’ Enquire of others, if ye believe me not; question strangers, if you suspect his parents of being in collusion with me. The obstinacy of these men is more detestable than that of the Jews, for the latter inquired of the man’s parents to solve their doubts; they secretly inquire but openly deny, no longer refusing credit to the miracle but to its Author.

19 and 20. But I would fain ask, what it is they will not believe; is it that any one can be relieved by the martyrs? But this is not to believe in Christ, for He hath said, S. John xiv. 12. And greater things than these shall ye do. Or only by those martyrs, whose merits have long been efficacious, and whose bodies have long been discovered? Here I ask whether it is of myself or of the holy martyrs that they are jealous? If of me, have I wrought any miracles by my own means, in my own name? Why then do they envy me that which is not mine? But if of the martyrs (for if not of me it must be of them they are envious) they show that their Creed is different from that of the martyrs. For they would not envy their works unless they deemed the faith which was in them to be that which they themselves have not. This is that Faith sealed by the tradition of our ancestors, which the devils themselves cannot deny, though the Arians do.

21. We have heard to-day those on whom hands were laid, profess that no man can be saved who does not believe in the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost: that he was dead and buried who denied the Holy Ghost, who believed not the Almighty power of the Trinity. This the devil confesses, but the Arians will not own it. The devil says, Let him who denies the divinity of the Holy Spirit be tormented as he himself was tormented by the Martyrs.

22. What I accept from the devil is not his testimony, but his confession. He spoke unwillingly, compelled and tortured. That which wickedness suppressed, force extorted. The devil yields to blows, but as yet the Arians have not learned to yield. How much have they suffered, and like Pharaoh, they are hardened by their calamities! The devil said, as we find it written, S. Mark i. 24. I know Thee Who Thou art, the Son of the Living God. The Jews said, S. John ix. 29. We know not who He is. Yesterday, and the preceding night and day the devils said, ‘We know that ye are martyrs,’ while the Arians said, ‘We know not, we will not understand nor believe.’ The devils say to the martyrs, ‘Ye are come to destroy us,’ the Arians say, ‘These torments of the devil are not true torments but pretended and counterfeit.’ I have heard of many counterfeits, but no man could ever feign himself a devil. Again, what is the meaning of the agony we see in them, when the hand is laid on them? What room is here for fraud and what suspicion of imposture?

23. But I will not call the words of devils as a testimony to the martyrs: let the sacred sufferings of the martyrs be established by their own supernatural acts; judges indeed they have, namely, those that have been cleansed, witnesses, namely those that have been dispossessed. Better than that of devils is their voice who came diseased and are now healed, better is that voice which the martyrs blood sends forth, for blood has a loud voice which reaches from earth to heaven. Ye have read those words of God, Gen. iv. 10. Thy brother’s blood crieth unto Me! This blood cries by its purple stains, it cries by its signal efficacy, it cries by its triumphant suffering.

We have granted your request and have put off till to-day the burial of the relics which should have taken place yesterday.

LETTER XXIII. A.D. 386.

THIS LETTER IS addressed to the Bishops of the province of Æmilia, which, as forming part of the political diocese of Italy, was under the ecclesiastical superintendence of the Bishop of Milan, who exercised the powers, if he had not the title, of Exarch. (See Bingham Antiq. ix. 1, § 6, 8.) The Bishops apply to him for his decision as to the proper day for observing Easter in the following year, A.D. 387, in which the first day of the week fell on the fourteenth day of the moon, or, as it is called here, the 'fourteenth moon.' This was a question which for long troubled the Church, and divided the East and West, and much importance was attached to it. The whole question is fully discussed in Dict. of Christ. Antiq. under 'Easter,' in a learned article by the Rev. L. Hensley. Some interesting remarks on it, in connection with disputes in England, may be seen in Prof. Bright's Early English Ch. Hist. pp. 76–79, and 193–200.

Mr. Hensley has kindly drawn up the following table, which exhibits at a glance the points on which S. Ambrose enters in this letter.

TO THE LORDS, HIS BRETHREN MOST BELOVED, THE BISHOPS ESTABLISHED THROUGHOUT THE PROVINCE OF ÆMILIA, AMBROSE, BISHOP.

1. THAT to settle the day of the celebration of the Passover requires more than ordinary wisdom, we are taught both by the Holy Scripture and by the tradition of the Fathers, who, when assembled at the Nicene Synod, in addition to their true and admirable decrees concerning the Faith, formed also for the above-mentioned celebration a plan for nineteen years with the aid of the most skilful calculators, and constituted a sort of cycle to serve as a pattern for subsequent years. This cycle they called the nineteen years' cycle[127], their aim being that we should not waver in uncertain and ungrounded opinions on such a celebration, but ascertain the true method and so ensure such concurrence of the affections of all, that the sacrifice for the Lord's Resurrection should be offered every where on the same night.

2. My Lords and brethren most beloved, we ought not so far to deviate from truth, or to be of such varying and wandering minds, as to the obligation of this celebration having been imposed upon all Christians: since our Lord Himself selected the day to celebrate it upon, which agreed with the method of the true observance. For it is written: S. Luke xxii. 7–12. Then came the day when the Passover must be killed. And He sent Peter and John, saying, Go and prepare us the Passover that we may eat. And they said unto Him, Where wilt Thou that we prepare? And He said unto them, Behold when ye are entered into the city, there shall a man meet you, bearing a pitcher of water: follow him into the house where he entereth in. And ye shall say unto the goodman of the house, the Master saith unto thee, Where is the guest-chamber, where I shall eat the Passover with My disciples? And he shall shew you a large upper room, there make ready.

3. We observe then that we ought not to go down to places in the earth, but to seek a large upper room furnished, for us to celebrate the Lord's Passover. For we ought to wash our senses, so to speak, with the spiritual water of the everlasting fountain, and maintain the rule of the devout celebration, and not follow common notions and go in quest of days according to the moon, whereas the Apostle says, Gal. iv. 10, 11. Ye observe days, and months, and times, and years. I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labour in vain. For it is sure to be injurious[128].

4. But it is one thing to observe them after the heathen fashion, so as to decide on what day of the moon you are to attempt anything, for instance, that you should avoid the fifth[129] and begin no work upon it, and to recommend different points in the moon's course for commencing employments, or to avoid certain days, as many are in the habit of avoiding days called ‘following’[130] or the Egyptian days: it is another thing to turn the observance of a religious mind to the day of which it is written, Ps. cxviii. 24. This is the day which the Lord hath made. For although it is written that the Lord’s Passover ought to be celebrated on the fourteenth day of the first month, and we ought to look for what is truly the fourteenth moon[131] for celebrating the course of our Lord’s Passion, still we can understand from this that to fix such a solemnity there is required either the perfection of the Church, or the fulness of clear faith, as the Prophet said when he spoke of the Son of God, that Ib. lxxxix. 36, 37. his throne is as the sun before me, and as the perfect moon, it shall remain for ever.

5. Hence it is that our Lord Himself also, when He had performed His wonderful works upon the earth, as if the faith of human minds were now established, observed that it was the time of His Passion, saying, S. John xvii. 1. Father, the hour is come, glorify Thy Son, that Thy Son also may glorify Thee. For He teaches elsewhere that He sought this glory of celebrating His Passion, where He says, S. Luke xiii. 32. Go ye, and tell that fox, Behold, I cast out devils, and I do cures to-day and to-morrow, and the third day I am perfected. In them indeed is Jesus perfected, who begin to be perfect, that with their faith they may believe on the fulness of His Divinity and His Redemption.

6. Therefore we seek out both the day and the hour, as the Scripture teaches us. The prophet David also says, Ps. cxix. 126. It is time for thee, Lord, to work, when he sought understanding to know the testimonies of the Lord. The Preacher also saith, Eccl. iii. 1. To every thing there is a season; Jeremy exclaims, Jerem. viii. 7. The turtle and the swallow and the sparrows of the ground observe the time of their coming. But what can appear more evident than that it is of the Passion of our Lord that it is said, Isaiah i. 3. The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master’s crib? Let us then acknowledge this crib of our Master, wherein we are nourished, fed, and refreshed.

7. We ought therefore especially to know this time, at which over the universal world the accordant prayers of the sacred night are to be poured forth; for prayers are commended by season also, as it is written, Isa. xlix. 8. In an acceptable time have I heard thee, and in a day of salvation have I helped thee. This is the time of which the Apostle said, 2 Cor. vi. 2. Behold, now is the accepted time, behold, now is the day of salvation.

8. Accordingly, since, even after the calculations of the Egyptians, and the definitions of the church of Alexandria, and also of the Bishop of the church of Rome, several persons are still waiting my judgement by letter, it is needful that I should write what my opinion is about the day of the Passover. For though the question which has arisen is about the approaching Paschal day, yet we state what we think should be maintained for all subsequent time, in case any question of the kind should come up.

9. But there are two things to be observed in the solemnity of the passover, the fourteenth moon, and the first month, which is called Exod. xiii. 4. the month of the new fruits[132]. Therefore that we may not appear to be departing from the Old Testament, let us recite the words of the section concerning the day of celebrating the Passover. Moses warns the people, saying that they must keep the month of the new fruits, proclaiming that it is the first month, for he says, Exod. xii. 2. This month shall be unto you the beginning of months; it shall be the first month of the year to you, and Lev. xxiii. 5. thou shalt offer the Passover of the Lord thy God on the fourteenth day of the first month.

10. S. John i. 17. The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ. He therefore, Who spake the law, afterwards coming by the Virgin in the last times, accomplished the fulness of the Law, for He came S. Matt. v. 17. not to destroy the Law but to fulfil it, and He celebrated the Passover in the week in which the fourteenth moon was the fifth day of the week, and then on that very day, as what is said before teaches us, He ate the Passover with his disciples: but on the following day, on the sixth day of the week, He was crucified on the fifteenth moon. But the sixteenth moon was the Sabbath which was an high day, and so on the seventeenth moon He rose again from the dead.

11. We must then keep this law of Easter, not to keep the fourteenth day as the day of the Resurrection, but rather as the day of the Passion, or at least one of the next preceding days, because the feast of the Resurrection is kept on the Lord's day; and on the Lord's day we cannot fast; for we rightly condemn the Manichæans for their fast upon this day. For it is unbelief in Christ's Resurrection, to appoint a rule of fasting for the day of the Resurrection, since the Law says that the Passion is to be eaten with bitterness[133], that is, with grief, because the Author of Salvation was slain by so great a sacrilege on the part of men; but on the Lord's day the Prophet teaches us that we should rejoice, saying, Ps. cxviii. 24. This is the day which the Lord hath made: let us rejoice and be glad in it.

12. Therefore it is fit that not only the day of the Passion, but also that of the Resurrection be observed by us, that we may have a day both of bitterness and of joy; fast on the one, on the other be refreshed. Consequently, if the fourteenth moon of the first month fall, as will be the case next time, on the Lord's day, inasmuch as we ought neither to fast on the Lord's day, nor on the thirteenth moon which falls on the Sabbath-day to break the fast, which must especially be observed on the day of the Passion, the celebration of Easter must be postponed to the next week. For the fifteenth day of the month follows, on which Christ suffered, and it will be the second day of the week. The third day of the week will be the sixteenth moon, on which our Lord's Flesh rested in the tomb; and the fourth day of the week will be the seventeenth moon on which our Lord rose again.

13. When therefore these three sacred days run as they do next time into the further week, within which three days He both suffered and rested and rose again, of which three days He says, S. John ii. 19. Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up, what can bring us trouble or doubt? For if it raises a scruple that we do not on the fourteenth moon celebrate the particular day either of His Passion or Resurrection, we may remember that our Lord Himself did not suffer on the fourteenth moon, but on the fifteenth, and on the seventeenth He rose again. But if any are troubled at our passing over the fourteenth moon, which falls upon the Lord's day, that is the 18th of April, and recommending its celebration on the following Lord's day, there is this authority for doing so.

14. In times lately past, when the fourteenth moon of the first month fell on the Lord's day, the solemnity was celebrated on the Lord's day next ensuing. But in the eighty-ninth year of the Era of Diocletian[134], when the fourteenth moon was on the 24th of March, Easter was kept by us on the last day of March. The Alexandrians and Egyptians also, as they wrote themselves, when the fourteenth day of the moon fell on the 28th day of the month Phamenoth, kept Easter on the fifth day of the month Pharmuthi, which is the last day of March, and so agreed with us. Again in the ninety-third year of the Era of Diocletian, when the fourteenth moon fell on the fourteenth day of the month Pharmuthi, which is the 9th of April, and was the Lord's day, Easter was kept on the Lord's day, the 21st day of Pharmuthi, or according to us on the 16th of April. Wherefore since we have both reason and precedent, nothing should disturb us upon this head.

15. There is yet this further point that seems to require explanation, that several persons think that we shall be keeping Easter in the second month, whereas it is written, Deut. xvi. 1. Keep the first month, the month of new fruits. The case however cannot occur that any should keep Easter out of the month of the new fruits, except those who keep the fourteenth moon so strictly to the letter, that they will not celebrate their Easter on any day but that. Moreover the Jews are going to celebrate the approaching Passover in the twelfth and not in the first month, viz. on the 20th of March according to us, but according to the Egyptians on the twenty-fourth day of the month Phamenoth, which is not the first month but the twelfth, for the first month of the Egyptians is called Pharmuthi, and begins on the 27th of March and ends on the 25th of April. Therefore according to the Egyptians we shall keep Easter Sunday in the first month, that is, on the 25th of April, which is the thirtieth day of the month Pharmuthi.

16. Nor do I consider it unreasonable to borrow a precedent for observing the month from the country in which the first Passover was celebrated. For which reason also our predecessors in the ordinance of the Nicene Council thought fit to decide that their cycle of nineteen years should belong to the same month, if one observes it diligently; and they rightly kept the very month of the new fruits, for in Egypt it is in this the first month that the new corn is cut: and this month is the first in respect of the crops of the Egyptians and first according to the Law, but the eighth according to our custom, for the indiction begins in the month of September. The first of April therefore is in the eighth month. But the month begins not according to vulgar usage, but according to the custom of learned men, from the day of the equinox, which is the 21st of March, and ends on the 21st of April. Therefore the days of Easter have been generally kept as much as possible within these thirty-one[135] days.

17. But after keeping Easter Sunday six years ago[136] on the 21st of April, that is on the thirtieth day of the month according to our reckoning, we have no reason to be distressed if this next time also we are to keep it on the thirtieth day of the month Pharmuthi. If any one think that it is the second month, because Easter Sunday will be on the third day from the completion of the month (but this appears to be completed on the 21st of April) he should consider that the fourteenth moon, which is our object, will fall on the 18th of April and thus within the regular counting of the month. But what the law requires is that the day of the Passion should be kept within the first month, the month of new fruits.

18. The method then is satisfactory as far as the complete course of the moon is concerned, inasmuch as three more days remain to complete the month. Easter then does not pass on into another month, since it will be kept within the same month, that is, the first. But that it is not fit that we should be tied to the letter, not only does the customary method of keeping Easter of itself instruct us, but the Apostle too teaches us, when he says, 1 Cor. v. 7. Christ our Passover is sacrificed. The passage also which has been cited teaches us that we are not to follow the letter, for thus it runs: Exod. xii. 18. Lev. xxiii. 5. Num. xxviii. 16. And thou shalt sacrifice the Passover to the Lord thy God on the fourteenth day of the first month[137]. He uses the word 'day' in the place of 'moon;' and so the most skilful according to the law calculate the month by the moon's course, and since the moon's course, that is the first day, may begin with more than one of the nones, you perceive that the nones of May do still admit of being reckoned in the first month of the new fruits. Therefore even according to the judgement of the law this is the first month. To conclude, the Greeks call the moon μήνη, owing to which they call the months in Greek μῆνες, and the ordinary usage of foreign nation employs moon in the sense of day.

19. But even the Lessons of the Old Testament shew that different days are to be observed for the Passion and Resurrection: for there it runs, Exod. xii. 5–8. Your lamb shall be without blemish, a male of the first year: ye shall take it out from the sheep or from the goats; and ye shall keep it up until the fourteenth day of the same month, and the whole assembly of the congregation of Israel shall kill it in the evening. And they shall take of the blood, and strike it on the two side posts, and on the upper door post of the house wherein they shall eat it. And they shall eat the flesh in that night, roast with fire, and further on, And ye shall eat it with anxiety[138]: it is the Lord's Passover. For I will pass through the land of Egypt this night, and will smite all the first-born in the land of Egypt, both man and beast; and in all the land of Egypt[139] will I execute vengeance: I am the Lord. And the blood shall be to you for a token in the houses where ye are; and I will see the blood and I will protect you and the plague of extermination shall not be on you. Exod. xii. 11–14. And I will smite the land of Egypt, And this day shall be unto you for a memorial; and ye shall keep it a feast to the Lord throughout your generations: ye shall keep it a feast by an ordinance for ever.

20. We observe that the day of the Passion is marked out as a fast, for the lamb is to be slain at the evening: though we might understand by evening the last time, according to John who says, 1 S. John ii. 18. Children, it is the last time. But even according to the mystery, it is plain that it was killed in the evening, when darkness immediately took place, and true fasting is to be observed on that day, for thus shall ye eat it with anxiety: but anxiety belongs to those who fast. But on the day of the Resurrection there is the exultation of refreshment and joy, on which day the people appears to have gone out of Egypt, when the first-born of the Egyptians had been killed. And this is shewn more evidently by what follows, wherein the Scripture says, that after the Jews kept the Passover as Moses ordered, Exod. xii. 29. It came to pass that at midnight the Lord smote all the first-born in the land of Egypt from the first-born of Pharaoh. Ib. 31. And Pharaoh called for Moses and Aaron by night, and said, Rise up, and get you forth from among my people, both ye and the children of Israel, and go serve the Lord. Ib. 33. And the Egyptians were urgent upon the people, that they might send them out of the land in haste. Eventually the Israelites went in such manner, that they had not opportunity to leaven their dough, for the Egyptians thrust them out, and would not wait for them to take the preparation they had made for themselves for the way.

21. We have made it clear then that the day of the Resurrection ought to be observed after the day of the Passion, and that this day of the Resurrection ought not to be on the fourteenth moon, but later, as the Old Testament says, because the day of the Resurrection is that on which the people going out of Egypt, after being 1 Cor. x. 2. baptized, as the Apostle says, in the sea and in the cloud, overcame death, receiving spiritual bread, and drinking spiritual drink from the rock: and further that the Lord's Passion cannot be celebrated on the Lord's day, and that if the fourteenth moon should fall upon the Lord's day, that another week ought to be added, as was done in the seventy sixth year[140] of the era of Diocletian. For then without any doubt or hesitation on the part of our fathers we celebrated Easter Sunday on the twenty-eighth day of the month Pharmuthi, which is the 23rd of April. And both the course of the moon and the reason of the case concur in recommending this, for next Easter is to be kept on the twenty first moon, for to that day its range has commonly extended.

22. Since therefore so many indications of truth are combined, let us after the example of our fathers celebrate the festival of our general Salvation with joy and exultation, colouring our side posts, between which is the door of the word Col. iv. 3. which the Apostle wishes to be opened unto him, with faith in the Lord's Passion. Of this door David also says, Ps. cxli. 3. Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips, that we may speak of nothing but the Blood of Christ, whereby we have conquered death, whereby we are redeemed. Let the sweet odour of Christ burn in us. To Him let us listen, on Him let us turn the eyes both of mind and body, admiring His works, proclaiming His blessings; over the threshold of our door let the confession of holy Redemption shine resplendent. Let us with fervent spirit keep the holy Feast, 1 Cor. v. 8. in the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth, and singing in pious doctrine with one accord the Glory of the Father and of the Son and the undivided Majesty of the Holy Spirit.

LETTER XXIV. A.D. 387.

S. AMBROSE HERE reports the result of his second mission to Maximus in behalf of Justina and her son Valentinian the 2nd. He had before gone, as he mentions in this letter, immediately after the murder of Gratian, A.D. 383, and had then, at much risk to himself, done them good service, and been mainly instrumental in securing peace, and inducing Maximus to abstain from invading Italy, and to leave Valentinian in possession of a share of the Empire. Now it seemed certain that Maximus was preparing to cross the Alps and deprive Valentinian of his dominions and probably of his life, and once more Justina and her son seek the aid of the great Bishop, whom they had so cruelly persecuted during the peace he had procured for them. It is very striking to see the persecutors thus reduced to be suppliants of their victim, and the good Bishop at once rendering them the service which they sought. He writes this report while on his way back, and sends it before him, that Valentinian and his mother might learn the truth at once, and lose no time in making preparation to meet their danger. He was commissioned to induce Maximus to maintain peace, and to restore the body of Gratian for burial at Milan. S. Ambrose was less successful in this embassy than in the former one, and Justina and Valentinian had to escape to the East and put themselves under the protection of Theodosius, who took up arms in their behalf, and marched to the West, defeated and captured Maximus at Aquileia, and had him put to death, and so restored Valentinian to the Empire of all the West, A.D. 388.

S. Ambrose cannot have started on his mission till after Easter, as this was the year in which he baptized S. Augustine.

AMBROSE TO THE EMPEROR VALENTINIAN.

1. OF my fidelity in my former mission you were so well assured as to require from me no account of it. Indeed the very fact that I was detained some days in Gaul sufficiently proved that I had made no promises acceptable to Maximus, nor agreed to any measures which inclined to what was pleasing to him rather than to the establishment of peace. And again, had you not approved of my first mission you would not have committed to me a second. But since as I was on the point of retiring he laid upon me the necessity of a discussion with him, I have thought it best to address to you in this letter an account of my mission, for fear any one should give you an account which mingled truth with falsehood, before my return could declare to you the truth in its perfect and sincere characters.

2. The day after I reached Trèves I presented myself at the palace; a Gaul came out to receive me, who was the Emperor's Chamberlain, and one of the royal eunuchs. I requested an audience; he enquired whether I had your Majesty's commission: I replied that I had. He said that I could only be heard in the Consistory. I answered that this was not usual for Bishops, and at all events that there were matters whereon I required serious conference with his master. To be brief; he consulted his master, and brought back the same answer, so that it was plain that the former had originated with his will. I said that such a course was inconsistent with the office I bore, but that I would not shrink from the duty I had undertaken, and that more especially in your service, and as it really was to support your brotherly affection, I was glad to humble myself.

3. As soon as he had taken his seat in the Consistory I entered; he rose to give me the kiss of peace. I stood among the members of the Consistory; some of them urged me to go up the steps, and he himself invited me. I replied, 'Why do you offer a kiss to one whom you do not acknowledge[141]? for had you acknowledged me you would not have seen me here.' 'You are excited, Bishop,' said he. 'It is not anger,' I said, 'that I feel, but shame at appearing in a place unsuited to me.' 'Yet on your first mission,' he said, 'you entered the Consistory.' 'True,' I replied, 'but the blame rests on him who summoned, not on me who entered.' 'Why,' said he, 'did you then enter?' 'Because,' I replied, 'I was then suing for peace on behalf of one who was inferior to you, but I now appear for your equal.' 'By whose favour,' said he, 'is he my equal?' 'By that of Almighty God, who has maintained Valentinian in the empire He bestowed on him.'

4. At length he broke out, 'It is you who have cajoled me, you and the wretch Bauto, who wished by setting up a boy to acquire sovereignty for himself, who also brought barbarians upon me; as if I also had not those whom I could bring, seeing I have so many barbarians in my service and pay. But had I not been withheld at the time of your arrival, who could have resisted me and my power?'

5. I answered mildly, 'You need not be excited, for there is no occasion for excitement; listen rather with patience to the reply which I have to make. My reason for coming is, that you have declared that on my first mission you trusted me and were deceived by me. It is a glory to me to have done this for the safety of an orphan Emperor, for whom rather than orphans ought we bishops to protect? For it is written, Isa. i. 17. Relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow; and in another place, Ps. lxviii. 5. father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows.'

6. But I will not make a boast of my services to Valentinian. To speak the truth, when did I oppose your legions, and resist your descent upon Italy? By what works, by what armies, with what forces? Did I block up against you the passes of the Alps with my body? Would that this were in my power, then I should not fear this allegation, nor your charges. By what promises did I beguile you into a consent to peace? Did not Count Victor, whom you had sent to request peace, meet me within the frontier of the provinces of Gaul, near the city of Mayence? Wherein then did Valentinian deceive you, whom you asked to grant you peace before he himself asked for it? Wherein did Bauto deceive you, who shewed fidelity to his Emperor? Did he do so by not betraying his own master?

7. Wherein have I circumvented you? Was it when, on my first arrival, on your saying that Valentinian ought to have come to you as a son to a father, I answered that it was not reasonable for a boy with his widowed mother to cross the Alps in severe winter weather, or without his mother be exposed under critical circumstances to such a journey? My business was to bring a message concerning peace, not to make any promise of his coming: it is certain that I have given no pledge of that, concerning which I had received no commands, and that I did not make any promise whatever, for you said, 'Let us wait to see what answer Victor will bring back.' But it is well known that he arrived at Milan while I was detained here, and that his request was refused. It was only about peace that we felt a common zeal, not about the Emperor's arrival; whose coming ought not to have been required. I was present when Victor returned. How then did I meet Valentinian? The emissaries who were sent a second time into Gaul to say that he would not come, found me at Valence in Gaul. The soldiers of either party, sent to guard the mountain passes, I met on my return. What armies of yours did I then recall? what eagles did I turn back from Italy? what barbarians did Count Bauto send against you?

8. And what wonder if Bauto, whose native country lies beyond the Rhine, had done so, when you yourself threaten the Roman Empire with barbarian allies, and with troops from beyond the military frontier, whose commissariat was supplied by the taxes of the provinces? But consider what a difference there is between your threats and the mildness of the young Emperor Valentinian. You insisted on making an incursion into Italy accompanied by armies of barbarians, Valentinian turned back the Huns and Alans on their approach to Italy through the territory of the Germans. What need for displeasure is there if Bauto set the barbarians at variance with each other? While you were employing the Roman forces, while he was presenting himself to oppose you on both sides, the Juthungi[142] in the very heart of the Roman Empire were laying Rhætia waste, and so the Huns were called in against the Juthungi. And yet when he was attacking the country of the Alemanni on your frontier, and was already threatening the provinces of Gaul with the near approach of danger, he was obliged to relinquish his triumphs, lest you should be alarmed. Compare the acts of the two; you caused the invasion of Rhætia, Valentinian by his gold has regained peace for you.

9. Look too at the man[143] who now stands at your right hand, whom Valentinian, when he had the opportunity of avenging his grief, sent back to you loaded with honours. He had him in his own territory, and yet restrained his hand: even when he received the tidings of his brother's death, he restrained his natural feelings, and abstained from retaliation, where the relationship was the same, though the rank was not. Compare therefore, yourself being judge, the two actions. He sent back your brother alive; do you restore to him his brother at least now that he is dead. Why do you refuse to him his relation's remains, when he refused not to you those who would assist you against him?

10. But you allege that you are alarmed lest the grief of the troops should be renewed by the return of these remains. Will they then defend after death one whom they deserted in life? Why do you fear him now he is dead, whom, when you might have saved him, you slew? 'It was my enemy' you say, 'that I have slain.' It was not he that was your enemy, but you that were his. He is no longer conscious of my advocacy, do you consider the case yourself[144]. If any one were to think of setting up a claim to the empire in these parts against you, I ask whether you would deem yourself to be his enemy, or him to be yours? If I mistake not, it is the part of an usurper to excite war, of an Emperor to defend his rights. Will you then withhold even the body of him whom you ought not to have slain? Let Valentinian have at least the remains of his brother as a pledge of your peaceful intentions. How moreover will[145] you assert that you did not command him to be slain, when you forbid him to be buried? Will it be believed that you did not grudge him life, when you even grudge him burial?

11. But to return to myself. I find that you complain of the followers of Valentinian betaking themselves to the Emperor Theodosius rather than to yourself. But what could you expect, when you called for punishment on the fugitives, and put to death those who were taken, Theodosius on the other hand loaded them with gifts and honours. 'Whom,' said he, 'have I slain?' 'Vallio,' I replied. 'And what a man, what a soldier! Was it then a just cause of death, that he maintained his fidelity to his Emperor?' 'I gave no orders,' said he, 'for his death.' 'We have heard,' I replied, 'that the order was given for him to be put to death.' 'Nay,' said he, 'had he not laid violent hands on himself I had ordered him to be taken to Cabillonum[146] and there burnt alive.' 'Yes,' I replied, 'and that was why it was believed that you had put him to death. And who could suppose that he would himself be spared, when a valiant warrior, a faithful soldier, a valuable comrade was thus slain?' At that time, on taking my leave, he said he was willing to treat.

12. But afterwards on finding that I would not communicate with the Bishops who communicated with him, or who sought the death of any one, even though they were heretics[147], he grew angry and bade me depart without delay. And I, although many thought I should be waylaid, set forth gladly, grieving only that the aged Bishop Hyginus, now almost at his last gasp, was being carried into exile. And when I appealed to his guards against their suffering the old man to be driven out without a curtain or a pillow to rest upon, I was driven forth myself.

13. Such is the account of my mission. Farewell, your Majesty, and be well on your guard against a man who conceals war under the cloak of peace.

LETTER XXV.

THAT THIS AND the following letter were addressed to the same person is clear from their contents, especially from the commencement of Letter xxvi. Whether Studius and Irenæus were two names of the same person, as the Benedictines suggest, or whether there is any error in either title, cannot be ascertained for certain. Is it not most probable that the name of Irenæus, to whom a long series of letters follows, has been affixed to one immediately preceding them by mistake, and that we should put ‘Studio’ for ‘Irenæo’ at the head of xxvi?

The letter deals briefly with the question which Studius, a layman apparently and a judge, puts to S. Ambrose, whether he did violence to his duty as a Christian in sentencing criminals to death. S. Ambrose replies that it is lawful, but recommends merciful dealing wherever possible, in hope of amendment of life.

AMBROSE TO STUDIUS.

I RECOGNIZE in your application to me a pure intention of mind, zeal for the faith, and fear of our Lord Jesus Christ. And indeed I should fear to reply to it, being checked on the one hand by the obligation of the trust committed to you for the maintenance of the laws, and on the other by claims of mercy and clemency, had you not in this matter the Apostle’s authority that he who judgeth Rom. xiii. 4. beareth not the sword in vain, for he is the avenger of God, upon him that doeth evil.

2. But although you knew this, it was not without reason that you have thought fit to make the enquiry. For some there are, although out of the pale of the Church[148], who will not admit to the divine Mysteries those who have deemed it right to pass sentence of death on any man. Many too abstain of their own accord, and are commended, nor can we ourselves but praise them, although we so far observe the Apostle's rule as not to dare to refuse them Communion.

3. You see therefore both what power your commission gives you, and also whither mercy would lead you; you will be excused if you do it, and praised if you do it not. Should you feel unable to do it, and are unwilling to afflict the criminal by the horrors of a dungeon, I shall, as a priest, the more commend you. For it may well be that when the cause is heard, the criminal may be reserved for judgment, who afterwards may ask for pardon for himself, or at any rate may suffer what is called mild confinement in prison. Even heathen are, I know, wont to boast that they have borne back their axes from their provincial government unstained by blood. And if heathen do this what ought Christians to do?

4. But in all these matters let our Saviour's answer suffice for you. The Jews apprehended an adultress and brought her to the Saviour, with the insidious intent that if He were to acquit her He might seem to destroy the law, though He had said, S. Matt. v. 27. I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil the law, and on the other hand, were He to condemn her, He might seem to be acting against the purpose of His coming. Wherefore the Lord Jesus, foreseeing this, stooped down and wrote upon the earth. And what did He write but that word of the prophet, Jer. xxii. 29, 30. O Earth, Earth, Write these men deposed[149], which is spoken of Jeconiah in the prophet Jeremiah.

5. When the Jews interrupt Him, their names are written in the earth, when the Christians draw near, the names of the faithful are written not on the earth but in heaven. For they who tempt their Father, and heap insult on the Author of salvation, are written on the earth as cast off[150] by their Father. When the Jews interrupt Him, Jesus stoops His head, but not having where to lay His head, He raises it again, is about to give sentence, and says, S. John viii. 8. Let him that is without sin cast the first stone at her. Ib. 9. And again He stooped down and wrote on the ground.

6. When they heard this they began to go out one by one beginning at the eldest, and this either because they who had lived longest had committed most sins, or because, as being most sagacious, they were the first to comprehend the force of His sentence, and though they had come as the accusers of another's sins, began rather to lament their own.

7. So when they departed Jesus was left alone, and lifting up His head, He said to the woman, S. John viii. 10, 11. Woman, where are those thine accusers? hath no man condemned thee? She said, No man, Lord. And Jesus said unto her, Neither do I condemn thee, go, and sin no more. Being the Redemption, He refuses to condemn her, being the Life He restores her, being the Fountain He washes her. And since Jesus, when He stoops down stoops that He may raise up the fallen, He says, as the Absolver of sins, Neither do I condemn thee.

8. Here is an example for you to follow, for it may be that there is hope of amendment for this guilty person; if he be yet unbaptized, that he may receive remission, if baptized that he may do penance[151], and offer up his body for Christ. See how many roads there are to salvation!

9. This is why our ancestors thought it better to be indulgent towards Judges; that by the terror of their sword the madness of crime should be repressed, and no encouragement given to it. For if Communion were denied to Judges, it would seem like a retribution on their punishment of the wicked. Our ancestors wished then that their clemency should proceed from their own free-will and forbearance, rather than from any legal necessity. Farewell, and love us, as we on our part love you.

LETTER XXVI.

THAT THIS LETTER is addressed to the same person as the preceding, in spite of the discrepancy in the address, is clear from the first sentence (See Introd. to xxv.). It resumes the subject, and dwells in detail on the example of our Lord's dealing with the woman taken in adultery.

AMBROSE TO IRENÆUS. [STUDIUS?]

1. ALTHOUGH in my previous letter I have resolved the question which you proposed to me, I will not refuse your request, my son, that I would somewhat more fully state and express my meaning.

2. Much agitated has ever been the question, and very famous this acquittal of that woman who in the Gospel according to John was brought to Christ accused of adultery. The stratagem which the equivocating Jews devised was this, that in case of the Lord Jesus acquitting her contrary to the Law, His sentence might be convicted of being at variance with the Law, but if she were to be condemned according to the Law, the Grace of Christ might seem to be made void.

3. And still more warm has the discussion become, since the time that bishops[152] have begun to accuse those guilty of the most heinous crimes before the public tribunals, and some even to urge them to the use of the sword and of capital punishment, while others again approve of such kind of accusations and of blood-stained triumphs of the priesthood. For those men say just the same as did the Jews, that the guilty ought to be punished by the public laws, and therefore that they ought also to be accused by the priests before the public tribunals, who, they assert, ought to be punished according to the laws. The case is the same, though the number is less, that is to say, the question as to judgment is similar, the odium of the punishment is dissimilar. Christ would not permit one woman to be punished according to the Law; they assert that too small a number has been punished.

4. But in what place does Christ give this decision? For He generally vouchsafed to adapt His discourses to the character of the place wherein He was teaching His disciples[153]. For instance while walking in the porch of Solomon, that is, of the Wise man, He said, S. John x. 30. I and My Father are One; and in God's Temple He said, Ib. vii. 16. My doctrine is not Mine, but His that sent Me. It was in the Temple also that He gave the sentence of which we now speak, for in the verse following it is thus written, Ib. viii. 20. These words spake Jesus in the treasury, as He taught in the Temple, and no man laid hands on Him. What is the Treasury? It is the place of offering for the faithful, the bank of the poor, the refuge of the needy, near which Christ sat, when, according to Luke, S. Luke xxi. 2. He declared that the widow's two mites were to be preferred to the gifts of the rich, thus bearing Divine testimony to a zealous and cordial charity as preferable to the offerings of an affluent munificence.

5. Now let us consider what He Who passed such a judgment as this contributed when sitting near the Treasury, for not without a purpose did He prefer the woman who threw in two mites. Precious was her poverty, and rich in the mystery of faith. These are the same two pieces of money which the Ib. x. 35. Samaritan in the Gospel left with the host in order to cure the wounds of the man who had fallen among thieves. So too this woman, outwardly a widow, but mystically representing the Church, thought it right to cast into the sacred Treasury this gift whereby the wounds of the poor might be healed and the hunger of the strangers satisfied.

6. Now then it behoves you spiritually to consider what Christ bestows; Ps. xi. 7. for He distributed among the people silver tried by the fire of the heavenly oracles, and to the desires of the people He told out money stamped with the Royal image. No one could give more than He Who gave all. He satisfied the hungry, He replenished the needy, He enlightened the blind, He redeemed the captives, He raised the palsied, He restored the dead, nay, what is more, He gave absolution to the guilty and forgave their sins. These are the two pence which the Church cast in, after having received them from Christ. And what are the two pence but the price of the New and Old Testament? The price of the Scripture is our faith, for it is according to the intelligence and will of each that what we read therein is valued. So then the remission of sins is the price of both Testaments, and is announced in type by the Lamb, and accomplished in verity by Christ.

7. You understand therefore that the Exod. xii. 3. Lev. xii. 2. purification of seven days brought with it also the purification of three days. The purification of seven days is according to the Law, which, under the semblance of the sabbath that now is, announced a spiritual sabbath; the purification of three days is according to Grace, and is sealed by the witness of the Gospel, S. Luke xxiv. 7. for the Lord rose on the third day. Where a penalty for sin is prescribed there also must penitence be, where remission of sins is accorded there follows Grace. Penitence precedes, Grace follows. So that there can neither be penitence without Grace, nor Grace without penitence, for penitence must first condemn sin, that Grace may abolish it. S. Matt. iii. 11. Wherefore John, fulfilling the type of the Law, baptized unto repentance, Christ unto Grace.

8. Now the seventh day denotes the mystery of the Law, the eighth that of the Resurrection, as you have in Ecclesiastes, Eccles. xi. 2. Give a portion to seven and also to eight. In the prophet Hosea also you have read that it was said to him, Hosea i. 2. Go, take unto thee a wife of whoredoms for fifteen pieces of silver, seeing that by the double price of the Old and

New Testament, that is, by the full price of faith, that woman is hired who was attended by a vagrant and licentious train of sojourners.

9. Ib. iii. 2. And I bought her to me, saith the prophet, for fifteen pieces of silver, and for an homer of barley, and an half homer of barley and a measure[154] of wine[155]. By barley is signified that the imperfect are called to the Faith that they may be made perfect, by the homer is understood a full measure, by the half homer a half measure. The full measure is the Gospel, the half measure is the Law, the fulfilment of which is the New Testament. Thus the Lord Himself saith, S. Matt. v. 17. I am not come to destroy the Law, but to fulfil.

10. Nor is it without meaning that we read in the Psalms of David of fifteen degrees, and that the sun had risen fifteen degrees, Isa. xxxviii. 8. when Hezekiah the righteous king received a new supply of life. Hereby was signified the coming of the Mal. iv. 2. Sun of Righteousness, Who was about to enlighten by His presence these fifteen steps of the Old and New Testament whereby our faith mounts up to life eternal. And this leads me to believe that what was read this day Gal. i. 18. from the Apostle of his remaining fifteen days with Peter has a mystical meaning; for it appears that while the holy Apostles held various discourses among themselves upon the interpretation of the Divine Scriptures a full and bright light fell upon them, and the shades of ignorance were dispersed. But now let us come to the absolution of the woman taken in adultery.

11. A woman accused of adultery was brought by the Scribes and Pharisees to the Lord Jesus with the malicious intent, that, if He was to acquit her, He might seem to annul the Law, if He condemned her, that He might seem to have changed the purpose of His coming, since He came to remit the sins of all men. To the same purport He said above[156], S. John viii. 15. I judge no man. So when they brought her they said, Ib. 4, 5. Lev. xx. 8. This woman was taken in adultery, in the very act; now Moses in the Law commanded us that such should be stoned, but what sayest Thou?

12. While they were saying this, Jesus stooped down and wrote with His finger on the ground. And as they waited for His answer, He lifted up His head and said, v. 7. He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her. What can be more Divine than this sentence, that he should punish sins who is himself free from sin? For how can we endure one who takes vengeance on guilt in another and excuses it in himself? When a man condemns in another what he commits himself, does he not rather pronounce his own condemnation?

13. Thus He spake, and wrote upon the ground. What then did He write? This, S. Matt. vii. 3. Thou beholdest the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye. For lust is like a mote, it is quickly kindled, quickly consumed; the sacrilegious perfidy which led the Jews to deny the Author of their salvation declared the magnitude of their crime.

14. He wrote upon the ground with the finger with which He had written the Law. Jer. xvii. 13. Sinners' names are written in the earth, those of the just in heaven, as He said to His disciples, S. Luke x. 20. Rejoice, because your names are written in heaven. And He wrote a second time, that you may know that the Jews were condemned by both Testaments.

15. When they heard these words they went out one after another, beginning at the eldest, and sat down thinking upon themselves. And Jesus was left alone, and the woman standing in the midst. It is well said that they went out who chose not to be with Christ. Without is the letter, within are the mysteries. For in the Divine lessons they sought, as it were, after the leaves of trees, and not after the fruit; they lived in the shadow of the Law, and could not discern the Sun of Righteousness.

16. Finally, when they departed Jesus was left alone, and the woman standing in the midst. Jesus about to remit sin remains alone, as He says Himself, S. John xvi. 32. Behold the hour cometh, yea is now come, that ye shall be scattered, every man to his own, and shall leave Me alone; for it was no messenger, no herald, but the Lord Himself Who saved His people. He remains alone, because in the remission of sins no man can participate with Christ. This is the gift of Christ alone, Who Ib. i. 29. took away the sins of the world. The woman too was counted worthy to be absolved, seeing that, on the departure of the Jews, she remained alone with Jesus.

17. Then Jesus lifted up His head, and said to the woman, Ib. viii. 10. Where are those thine accusers, hath no man condemned thee? She said, No man, Lord. And Jesus said unto her, Neither do I condemn thee, go, and sin no more. See, O reader, these Divine mysteries, and the mercy of Christ. When the woman is accused, Christ stoops His head, but when the accusers retire He lifts it up again; thus we see that He would have no man condemned, but all absolved.

18. By the words, Hath no man condemned thee? He briefly overthrows all the quibbles of heretics, who say that Christ knows not the day of judgment. He Who says, S. Matt. xx. 23. But to sit on My right hand and on My left is not Mine to give, says also in this place, Hath no man condemned thee? How is it that He asks concerning that which He saw? It is for our sakes that He asks, that we might know the woman was not condemned. And such is the wont of the human mind, often to enquire concerning that which we know. The woman too answered, No man, Lord, that is to say, Who can condemn when Thou dost not condemn? Who can punish another under such a condition as Thou hast attached to his sentence?

19. The Lord answered her, Neither do I condemn thee. Observe how He has modified His own sentence; that the Jews might have no ground of allegation against Him for the absolution of the woman, but by complaining only draw down a charge upon themselves; for the woman is dismissed not absolved; and this because there was no accuser, not because her innocence was established. How then could they complain, who were the first to abandon the prosecution of the crime, and the execution of the punishment?

20. Then He said to her who had gone astray, Go, and sin no more. He reformed the criminal, He did not absolve the sin. Faults are condemned by a severer sentence, whenever a man hates his own sin, and begins the condemnation of it in himself. When the criminal is put to death, it is the person rather than the transgression which is punished, but when the transgression is forsaken, the absolution of the person becomes the punishment of the sin. What is the meaning then of, Go, and sin no more? It is this; Since Christ hath redeemed thee, suffer thyself to be corrected by Grace; punishment would not reform but only afflict thee. Farewell, my son, and love me as a son, for I on my part love you as a parent.

LETTER XXVII. A.D. 387.

WHO IRENÆUS WAS to whom the series of letters from xxvii. to xxxiii. are addressed is not ascertained. From the affectionate and parental way in which S. Ambrose addresses him, and from Irenæus' applying to him for elucidation of his difficulties in the study of Holy Scripture, it is probable that he was one who had been trained, perhaps converted by him. The Benedictine Editors think that he must have been one of his Milan Clergy. All the letters are occupied in expounding passages of the Old Testament, or in solving questions connected with it; they are specimens of his method of mystical interpretation, in which he took great delight.

In this Letter he begins a reply to a question on Exodus viii. 26. and then goes off into a mystical interpretation of Rachel and Leah, making them an allegory, as S. Paul does Hagar and Sarah.

AMBROSE TO IRENÆUS, GREETING.

1. YOU tell me that you have felt a difficulty in the text Exod. viii. 26. We shall sacrifice the abomination of the Egyptians to the Lord our God. But you had the means of solving it, for it is written in the book of Genesis, that Gen. xlvi. 34. a shepherd is an abomination to the Egyptians, and this not on account of the shepherd himself, but of his flocks. For the Egyptians were tillers of the ground, but Abraham and Jacob, and afterwards Moses and David, were shepherds, and in this function exercised a certain kingly discipline.

2. The Egyptians then hated sacrifices which were duly offered; the pursuit of virtue, that is, which is perfect and replete with discipline. But that which these evil men hated is in the sight of the good sincere and pious.

The licentious man hates the works of virtue, the glutton shrinks from them. And so the Egyptian's body, loving the charms of pleasure, has an aversion to the virtues of the soul, hates its rule, and shrinks from the discipline of virtue, and all such like works.

3. But what the Egyptian shrinks from — he who is an Egyptian rather than a man, — that do thou, who hast the knowledge of what befits man, embrace and follow: and shun those things which they pursue and choose; for these two things cannot agree together, wisdom and folly. Thus as wisdom and continence remove themselves from those who are, as it were, in the ranks of unwisdom and intemperance, so no foolish and incontinent man has any part in what belongs to the goods and heritage of the wise and continent man.

4. Again, those women who were sanctified by their marriage, Leah and Rachel, (the one meaning 'wearied,' the other 'strong breath'[157]) from aversion not to the ties of kindred but to their differing manners, and informed by the much tried Jacob, that he desired to depart in order to shun the envy and sloth of Laban and his sons, made answer thus: Gen. xxxi. 14, 15. Is there yet any portion or inheritance for us in our father's house? Are we not counted of him strangers? for he hath sold us, and hath quite devoured also all our money? Observe first that the slothful and envious man alienates from himself one who labours and keeps strict discipline; he flies from her and seeks to separate himself. Finding that they will be burthensome to him he thinks he has gained by their removal, and esteems this to be his reward, and this the point of his pleasure.

5. Now let us hear how what virtue has, sloth has not: for they say, Ib. v. 16. For all the riches which God hath taken from our father, that is ours, and our children's. Rightly do they say that they were taken away by God's appointment, for it is He Who created the good, for whose sake the slothful are despoiled; for weak and evil men cannot apprehend the beauty of the Divine inheritance; and thus the resolute, and he who hath in him the spirit of a brave man, succeeds to it. But who is strong but God alone Who regulates and governs all things?

6. To these therefore the heritage of God is justly due. Wherefore Isaiah also says, Isa. liv. 17. There is an heritage for them that believe in the Lord. Well saith he, There is an heritage, for this is the sole heritage, there is no other. For neither is blind treasure an heritage, nor have any transitory things the advantage of an heritage; that alone is an heritage wherein God is the portion. Wherefore the Saint of the Lord saith, Ps. cxix. 57. Thou art my portion, O Lord, and again, Ib. 111. Thy testimonies have I claimed as mine heritage for ever. You see what are the possessions of the just, the commandments of God, His oracles, His precepts, hereby he is enriched, hereby he is fed, hereby he is delighted as by all manner of riches.

7. Now Leah and Rachel, possessing these, required not their father's riches, for therein there was base coin, a senseless outward show, destitute of spiritual vigour. Again, being rich and liberal themselves they accounted their father rather indigent than rich. For no one who participates in good and liberal discipline deems any foolish man to be rich, but poor and needy, and even abject; and this although he overflow with royal riches, and in the pride of his gold boasts of his own power.

8. The society of such we must shun then, even though they be united to us by the ties of kindred: the conversation of the foolish is to be avoided, for it infects and discolors the mind, for as Ps. xviii. 26. with the clean thou shalt be clean, so with the froward thou shalt be froward. For it frequently happens that one who listens to an intemperate man against his own resolution, much as he himself desires to maintain the rule of continence, is yet stained by the hue of folly, and thus discipline and insolence truly prove themselves contrary and repugnant to each other.

9. Hence when much-tried Jacob inquired their opinion, they utter the words of virtue now proved by long exercise, Gen. xxxi. 14. Is there yet any portion or inheritance for us in our father's house? that is, 'Do you ask us whether we wish to depart from him? As if you knew not that we have no desire of his society, nor are we possessed with that thirst for riches and delight in luxury which is so sweet to most worldlings. These are the things which we deem miserable and alien to our feelings, these are the things which we deem to be full of poverty and want.'

10. They add also the cause of their departure, that Laban had lost the true glory and those stores of good treasure in which we are born. Vigour of mind has been given us, and the good coinage of God's image and likeness, which is a spiritual coinage. He lost these because he preferred the splendour of this world to things true and profitable for his true life; for the beauty of these things escapes one who is ignorant of the good things of God, while in his judgment of what is beautiful he deludes and deceives himself. Hear then his words and judge.

11. He pursued holy Jacob and his daughters, thinking haply to find upon them some of his own vices, and thus to have a plea for reclaiming them to himself, censuring the righteous, whereas he himself was refuted by reason, and could give no answer or reply why he had any right to detain him. Gen. xxxi. 27. Wherefore, says he, didst thou not tell me, that I might have sent thee away? Wherein he discloses what it was the just man feared, namely, such attendance, such a convoy, lest he should go forth escorted by such a company: in the first place because it behoved him not to submit himself to the service of many masters, so as to be dismissed by Laban as a servant: and next because this man, intent upon good discipline and desirous of following the true path of virtue, sought no man to guide him but the heavenly oracles. These, said he, have commanded me to depart from hence and now accompany me on my journey.

12. But how wouldst thou have dismissed me, he would say? Would it have been with such joy as thine which is full of sadness, with cymbals namely and instruments of ill-modulated harmony, and with the sweet notes of flutes sounding forth unpleasing strains, dissonant sounds, discordant noises, mute voices, cymbals jarring upon the sense? Didst thou believe that I could be delighted, that I be recalled by such things? It is from them that I fled, nor do I fear thy reproachful words. I fled that such things might not follow me, that I might receive no present from thee on my departure.

13. It is not by such guides as these that we arrive at the Church of Christ, to which Jacob was bending his steps, to carry down thither the wealth of the nations and the riches of the Gentiles, that he might transplant thither his posterity, flying from the shadows of empty things, preferring to senseless images of virtues their breathing beauty, and serious things to outward show. You see how the Gentiles deck out their banquets, and proclaim their feasts; but such things are hateful to pious minds, for by their means many are deceived, they are captivated by pleasant food, by the bands of dancers, while they fly from our fasts, deeming them irksome to them, and noxious and troublesome to the body.

14. Or didst thou think that I should desire thy gold? But thou hast not Ps. xii. 7. gold tried by that fire wherein the just are proved. Or was it silver that I desired? But thou hast not silver, for thou possessest not the brightness of the heavenly words. But perhaps I hoped that thou wouldst give me some of thy slaves to serve me? Nay, I seek for free men, and not the slaves of sin. But perhaps companions of my journey and guides of my path were necessary? Would that they had power to follow me! for I would have shewn them the ways of the Lord. But ye who know not God, how can ye know His ways? The elect of the Lord walk in His ways, not every one who enters them, and yet no man is excluded.

15. Let him who is prepared follow, let him enter upon the way which leads to Mesopotamia; so that he who seeks that country may pass through the waters, the waters of Tigris and Euphrates, the waters of courage and righteousness, through the tears of penitence, the baptism of grace. Here is the path of the army of God, for all who are in the Church are God's soldiers. There is that flock marked with divers virtues, Gen. xxx. 32. which Jacob chose for himself; for every soul which is not so marked is unlearned and uninstructed, ignorant of discipline: but that which is marked is rich in works and fertile in grace.

16. Let him who comes to it first be reconciled to his angry brother. Let him who comes to it inhabit Shechem, that precious and active laboratory of virtue, Ib. xxxiv. 25. sqq. where injured chastity is so deeply avenged. Ib. xxxii. 24. Let him who comes to it wrestle with God, that he may inure himself to imitate Him, that he may come in contact with the humility of Christ and His sufferings. Let him take up his cross and follow Christ. Lastly, a good combatant 1 Cor. xiii. 4. envieth not, is not puffed up, nay, he even blesses his antagonist with a like gift.

17. Let us then follow holy Jacob and his ways, that we may reach these sufferings, these combats, that we may reach the shoulder[158], that we may attain to patience, the mother of the faithful, and to their father Isaac, that is, one capable of delight[159], abounding in joy. For where patience is, there also is joy, for after tribulation comes patience, and Rom. v. 3, 4, 5. patience worketh experience, wherein is hope, whereby we are not ashamed, for whoso is not ashamed the cross of Christ, neither will Christ be ashamed of him.

Farewell, my son; blush not to ask questions of your father, as you blush not to glory in the sufferings of Christ.

LETTER XXVIII. A.D. 387.

S. AMBROSE IN this Letter maintains that Pythagoras derived much of his wisdom from a knowledge of the Hebrew Scriptures, and dwells on his maxim, ‘not to follow the beaten track,’ as one specially addressed to the priesthood.

AMBROSE TO IRENÆUS, GREETING.

1. IN the writings of certain authors we find a precept of Pythagoras forbidding his disciples to enter upon the common path trodden by the people. Now the source from whence he drew this is not unknown. For as he derived (according to the general opinion) his descent from the Jews, from their learning he derived also the precepts of his school. This rendered him highly esteemed among philosophers, so that he hardly met, it is said, with his equal. Now he had read in the book of Exodus that by the Divine command Moses was bid Exod. iii. 5. put off his shoes from off his feet. This command was also given to Joshua the son of Nun, Josh. v. 15. namely that they, when desired to walk along the Lord’s path, should shake off the dust of the beaten and vulgar tracks. Exod. xxiv. 13, 14. He had also read the command to Moses to go up to the mount with the priests, while the people stood apart. So God separated the priests from the people, and subsequently commanded Moses himself to enter into the cloud.

2. You see then the separation. Nothing vulgar, nothing popular, nothing in common with the desires and usages and manners of the rude multitude is looked for in priests. The dignity of the priesthood claims for itself a sober and unruffled calmness, a serious life, an especial gravity. How can he be respected by the people, who is in nothing distinct from the people, or different from the multitude? And what can a man look up to in you who recognizes himself in you, who sees nothing in you which is beyond himself, and who finds in you, to whom he deems respect to be due, the things which he blushes at in himself?

3. Wherefore let us pass over the opinions of the people, and the resorts of the common herd, and the line of the beaten track, the ground also of that common path along which he runs, whose Job ix. 25. days are swifter than a post, of whom it is said, they flee away, they see no good. But let us find for ourselves a path secluded from the conversation of the proud, inaccessible to the works of the unlearned, trodden by no polluted person, polluted that is by the stains of his own sloth, and smeared by the smoke of iniquity, his soul darkened and ruinous, one who has never tasted the sweetness of virtue, or at any rate has thought that she should be looked upon askance rather than met with direct regard and with open arms, who moreover (as is the wont of many who seem to themselves witty and polite, and transform the beauty of wisdom into dishonourable guile,) regards not true Grace, but shrouded as it were in darkness, gives no credence to those who live in the light of day, being of the number of the men of Tema and Sheba, who fall off and turn away from the truth; of whom Job says, Ib. vi. 19–21. Behold ye the ways of them of Tema, the paths of the Sabæans, for they shall be confounded who put their hopes in cities and in riches. So ye also have risen against me without pity, therefore when ye see my wound, be afraid.

4. Let us then abandon these devious paths of them that turn aside, and this dust of those who fail, who through their lust fall oftentimes in the desert, and let us be converted and follow the way of wisdom, that way which the children of those who boast and glorify themselves have not trodden, that way which destruction knows not, and death is ignorant of; for God hath marked it out; Ib. xxviii. 14. the depth saith, It is not in me, and the sea saith, It is not with me. But if you seek for the way of wisdom and discipline, to worship God, and to be subject to Him is wisdom, and to abstain from sin is discipline.

5. What then have we to do with the way of this world, wherein is temptation; yea the life itself of men is temptation, and more empty even than vain fables, living in houses of clay, spending nights and days in quest of gain, with their thoughts ever upon it, seeking like hired servants their daily wages, and as they say grasshoppers do[160], feeding on the empty breath of desires. Truly, like grasshoppers, living from day to day, they burst with their own complainings[161]. For what is the semblance of men without gravity or discipline, but that of grasshoppers, born to a daily death, chirping rather than speaking? These beneath the heat of burning desires soothe themselves with a song hurtful to themselves, and quickly die bearing no fruit, and possessed of no grace. Noxious and crooked are their ways as those of serpents, whose bodies are drawn along in poisoned folds, who gather themselves up into a coil of wickedness[162], and cannot raise themselves to heavenly things.

6. But let us enter the gates of the Lord, Ps. cxviii. 19. the gates of righteousness, which the righteous entereth and giveth praise unto the Lord. But few enter in here, wherefore the Lord saith, S. Matt. vii. 14. Straight is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it. But the wide gate and broad way, wherein the many walk, leads to death, and carries thither them that travel on it.

7. Let our way then be narrow, our virtue abundant, our steps more careful, our faith more lofty, our path narrow, our energy of mind overflowing, our paths straight, for the steps of virtue cannot be turned aside; wherefore Solomon saith, Prov. ii. 13. Who leave the paths of uprightness.

8. Let our steps tend upward, for it is better to ascend. Lastly, as we read to-day, Is. xxxi. 1. Woe to them that go down to Egypt! Not that to pass over into Egypt is blameable, but to pass into their habits, to pass into their cruel perfidy and hideous lusts. He that passes over thither descends, he that descends falls. Wherefore let us avoid the Egyptian, who is man, not God. For the king of Egypt himself was given over to the dominion of his vices, and compared with him Moses was accounted a god, ruling over kingdoms and subjecting to himself powers. Hence we read that he was addressed thus, Exod. vii. 1. See I have made thee a god to Pharaoh. Farewell, and love me, as indeed you do, with the affection of a son.

LETTER XXIX. A.D. 389.

THIS LETTER IS in fact a meditation on Christ as the true Chief good of man, the true Source of happiness, and Food of the soul, and Fountain of life, to be sought therefore with eagerness, and clung to with all the affection of the soul, which must therefore scorn all meaner delights.

AMBROSE TO IRENÆUS, GREETING.

1. WHILE engaged in reading, after resting my mind for a while and desisting from study, I began to meditate on that versicle which in the evening we had sung at Vigils, Ps. xlv. 3. Thou art fairer than the children of men, and, Rom. x. 15. Is. lii. 7. How beautiful are the feet of them that bring good tidings of Him. And truly nothing is more beautiful than that chief good, the very preaching of which is beyond measure lovely, and specially the progress of continuous discourse, and the foot-steps, so to speak, of Apostolic preaching. But who is equal to these things? They to whom God gave not only to preach Christ, but also to suffer for Him.

2. Let us, as far as we can, direct our minds to that which is beautiful seemly and good, let us be occupied therein, let us keep it in mind, that by its illumination and brightness our souls may become beautiful and our minds transparent. For if our eyes, when obscured by dimness, are refreshed by the verdure of the fields and are able by the beauty of a grove or grassy hill to remedy every defect of the failing vision, while the very pupils and balls of the eye seem to be coloured with the hue of health: how much more does this eye of the mind, beholding that chief good, and dwelling and feeding thereupon, brighten and shine forth, so as to fulfil that which is written, Ps. lxiii. 6. My soul shall be satisfied even as it were with marrow and fatness. Moreover, he who has a skilful knowledge of the souls of his flock, pays attention to wild grasses, that he may obtain much pasturage: for by the sweeter kind of herbage lambs are made fatter, and the milky juice more healthful. On these pastures those Ib. xxii. 29. fat ones have fed, who have eaten and worshipped, for good indeed are those pastures wherein is placed the saint of God.

3. There is grass also, whereby the flocks of sheep are nourished, for whence come the fleeces of wisdom, and the clothing of prudence. And perchance this is the Prov. xxvii. 25. grass of the mountain, upon which the words of the prophet distil Deut. xxxii. 2. as the showers upon the grass, and which the wise man carefully gathers, that he may have a fleece for a covering, that is, for a spiritual garment. And thus proper food and clothing are provided for that soul which cleaves to the chief Good, that Good Which is Divine, and which the Apostle Peter exhorts us to seek for, that by the acquisition of such knowledge we may become 2 S. Pet. i. 4. partakers of the Divine nature.

4. The knowledge hereof the good God opens to His saints, and grants it out of His good treasury, even as the sacred Law testifies, saying, Deut. xxviii. 11, 12. The Lord sware unto thy fathers to give thee and open unto thee His good treasure. From this heavenly treasure Ib. xxxii. 2. He gives rain to His lands, to bless all the works of thy hands. By this rain is signified the utterance of the Law, which moistens the soul fruitful and fertile in good works, that it may receive the dew of Grace.

5. The knowledge of this good David sought; as he himself declares, saying, Ps. xxvii. 4. One thing have I desired of the Lord, which I will require, even that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life to behold the fair beauty of the Lord, and to visit His temple. And that this is the chief Good he straightway added in the same Psalm, v. 13. I believe verily to see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living. He must be sought after, there He will be clearly seen face to face. This good is in the house of God, in His secret and hidden place. Wherefore he says again, Ps. lxv. 4. He shall be satisfied with the pleasures of thy house. In another place too he has shown this to be the highest blessing, saying, Ps. cxxviii. 5. The Lord shall bless thee out of Sion, and thou shalt see the good of Jerusalem. Wherefore blessed is he who dwells then in the vestibule of faith and in the spiritual abode, the dwelling place of devotion and the life of virtue.

6. In Him therefore let us be and in Him abide, of Whom Isaiah says, Isa. lii. 7. How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of Him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace. 1 Cor. i. 1. Who are they that preach but Peter, Paul, and all the Apostles? What do they preach to us but the Lord Jesus? He is our Peace, He is our chief Good, for He is Good from Good, S. Matt. vii. 17. and from a good tree is gathered good fruit. And good also is His Spirit, Who takes of Him and Ps. cxliii. 10. leads His servants forth into the land of righteousness. For who that hath the Spirit of God within him will deny that He is good, since He says Himself, S. Matt. xx. 15. Is thine eye evil because I am good? May this Good which the merciful God gives to them that seek Him come into our soul, and into our inmost heart. He is our Treasure, He is our Way, He is our Wisdom, He is our Righteousness, our Shepherd, the good Shepherd, He is our Life. Thou seest how many goods are in this one Good! These goods the Evangelists preach to us. David seeking for these goods saith, Ps. iv. 6. Who will shew us any good? And he shews that the Lord Himself is our Good by adding, Lord, lift Thou up the light of Thy Countenance upon us. But Who is the Light of the Father's Countenance, but Heb. i. 3. the Brightness of His Glory, and the Image of the invisible God, in Whom the Father is both seen and glorified, as He also glorifies His Son?

8. Wherefore the Lord Jesus Himself is that chief Good which was announced to us by Prophets, declared by Angels, promised by the Father, 1 Tim. iii. 16. preached by Apostles. He hath come to us as ripeness; nor as ripeness only, but as ripeness in the mountains; to the intent that in our counsels there should be nothing sour, or unripe, nothing harsh or bitter in our actions or manners, the first Preacher of good tidings hath come among us. Wherefore also He saith, I, Who spoke, am present with[163] you, that is, I Who spoke in the Prophets, am present in that Body which I took of the Virgin; I am present as the inward Likeness of God, and the Heb. i. 3. express Image of His person, I am present too as Man. But who knows Me? For they saw the Man, but His Works made them believe He was above man. S. John xi. 35. Was He not as man when weeping over Lazarus? again, was He not above man, when He raised him to life? Was He not as man when scourged? and again, above man when Ib. i. 29. He took away the sin of the world?

9. To Him therefore let us hasten in Whom is the chief Good: for He is the bounty and patience of Israel, Who calls thee to repentance, that thou come not into condemnation but mayest receive the remission of thy sins. He saith, S. Matt. iv. 17. Repent. This is He of Whom the Prophet Amos cries, Amos v. 14. Seek good. He is the chief Good, Who is in need of nothing, but abounds in all things. And well may He abound, Col. ii. 9. in Whom dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily; of S. John i. 16. Whose fulness we have all received, and in Whom we are filled, as saith the Evangelist.

10. If then the mind with its capacities of desire and pleasure hath tasted the chief Good, and by means of these two affections hath drank It in, unalloyed by sorrow and fear, it is wonderfully inflamed. For having embraced the Word of God, she knows no measure and yet feels no satiety, as it is written, Ps. cxix. 68. Thou art good and gracious, O teach me Thy statutes: having embraced the Word of God, she desires Him above all beauty, she loves Him above all joy, she is delighted with Him above all perfumes, she desires often to see, often to look upon Him, often to be drawn to Him that she may follow. Cant. i. 3. Thy Name, it is said, is as ointment poured forth; therefore we maidens love Thee, therefore we strive but cannot attain to Thee. Draw us that we may run after Thee, that by the fragrance of Thy ointments we may gain power to follow Thee.

11. And the mind presses forward to the sight of internal mysteries, to the place of rest of the Word, to the very dwelling of that chief Good, His light and brightness. In that haven and home-retreat she hastens to hear His words, and having heard, finds them sweeter than all other things. Learn of the Prophet who had tasted and saith, Ps. cxix. 103. O how sweet are Thy words unto my throat, yea sweeter than honey unto my mouth. For what can that soul desire which hath once tasted the sweetness of the Word, and seen His brightness? Exod. xxxiv. 28. When Moses received the Law he remained forty days on the mount and required no bodily food; 1 Kings xix. 4. Elijah, hastening to this rest, prayed that his life might be taken away; Peter, himself also beholding on the Mount the glory of the Lord's Resurrection, would fain not have come down, saying, S. Matt. xvii. 4. It is good for us to be here. How great then is the glory of the Divine Essence and the graces of the Word, 1 Pet. i. 12. which things the Angels desire to look into.

12. The soul then which beholds this chief Good, requires not the body, and understands that it ought to have as little connexion with it as possible; it renounces the world, withdraws itself from the chains of the flesh, and extricates itself from all the bonds of earthly pleasures. Acts vii. 55. Thus Stephen beheld Jesus, and feared not being stoned, nay, while he was being stoned, prayed not for himself but for his murderers. Paul also, when 2 Cor. xii. 2. caught up to the third heaven, knew not whether he was in the body or out of the body: caught up, I say, into Paradise, he became invisible to the presence of his own body, and having heard the words of God he blushed to descend again to the infirmities of the body.

13. Thus, knowing what he had seen and heard in Paradise, he cried saying, Col. ii. 20–22. Why, as though living in the world, are ye subject to ordinances? Touch not, taste not, handle not, which all are to perish with the using. For he would have us of this world in figure and semblance, not in use or possession, using as though we used it not, as our place of sojourn, not of rest, walking through it as in a vision, not with desire, so as to pass as lightly as possible over the mere shadow of this world. In this way S. Paul, who walked by faith not by sight, was 2 Cor. v. 8. absent from the body and present with the Lord, and although upon earth conversed not with earthly but with heavenly things.

14. Wherefore let our soul, wishing to draw near to God, raise herself from the body, and ever adhere to that chief End which is divine, Which is everlasting, S. John i. 1. Which was from the beginning, and Which was with God, that is, the Word of God. This is that Divine Being, Acts xvii. 28. in Whom we live and move and have our being. This is That which was in the beginning, the true I AM. 2 Cor. i. 19. For the Son of God, Jesus Christ, was not yea nor nay but in Him was yea. He bid Moses say, Exod. iii. 14. I AM hath sent me.

15. With this Good therefore let our soul be, and if possible, be continually, that each of us may say, Ps. cxix. 109. My soul is continually in my hand. And such will be the case, if it be not in the flesh, but in the spirit, and does not entangle itself in earthly things. For when it turns back to carnal things, then the allurements of the body creep over it, then it swells with rage and anger, then it is pierced with sorrow, then it is lifted up with arrogance, then it is bowed down with grief.

16. These are the heavy griefs of the soul by which it is often brought down to death, while its eyes are blinded so that they see not the light of true glory, and the riches of its eternal heritage. But by keeping them always fixed on God, it will receive from Christ the brightness of wisdom, so as to have its vision enlightened by the knowledge of God, and to behold that hope of our calling, and see that which is good and well-pleasing and perfect. For that which is good is well-pleasing to the Father, and that which is well-pleasing is perfect, as it is written in the Gospel, S. Matt. v. 44, 45. Love your enemies, that ye may be the children of your Father Which is in heaven, for, He sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust, which is surely a proof of goodness. Afterwards He concludes by saying, Ib. 48. Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father Which is in heaven is perfect. For charity is perfect; in short it is Rom. xiii. 10. the fulfilling of the Law; for what can be so good as charity which thinketh no evil?

17. Fly then those regions where dwell envy, ambition, and contention. Therefore let thy mind open itself to receive this Good, that it may mount above the clouds, that it may be Isa. xl. 31. renewed as the eagle, and like the eagle spread abroad its wings, that with new vigour in its pinions it may fearlessly soar aloft and leave its earthly dwelling-place behind it, Wisd. ix. 15. for the earthly habitation weigheth down the mind. Let it put off old things, let it cast off wandering desires, let it purge its eyes that it may see that Fountain of true wisdom, that Source of eternal life Which flows and abounds with all things and is in want of nothing. For who hath given to Him, seeing that Rom. xi. 36. of Him and through Him and to Him are all things?

18. The Fountain of life then is that chief Good from Which the means of life are dispensed to all, but It hath life abiding in Itself. It receiveth from none as though It were in need, It confers good on others rather than borrows from others for Itself, for It hath no need of us. Thus in the person of man it is said, Ps. xvi. 2. my goods are nothing unto Thee. What then can be more lovely than to approach to Him, to cleave to Him; what pleasure can be greater? He who has seen and tasted freely of the Fountain of living water, what else can he desire? what kingdoms? what powers? what riches? perceiving how miserable even in this world is the condition of kings, how mutable the state of empires, how short the space of this life, in what bondage sovereigns themselves must live, seeing that their life is according to the will of others, not their own.

19. But what rich man passes to eternal life unless he be supported by the riches of virtue, that gift which is the portion of all, S. Matt. xix. 26. and declared to be impossible for the rich alone? Happiness then does not consist in using these things but in perceiving that whereby you may despise them, may regard them as void of truth[164], may judge them to be empty and fruitless, and may love the true beauty of naked truth which confesses the cheating vanities of this world.

20. Lift up therefore your eyes, O my soul; those eyes of which the Word of God saith, Cant. iv. 9. Thou hast ravished my heart, my sister, my spouse, thou hast ravished my heart with one of thine eyes. Ib. vii. 8. Go up then to the palm tree, overcome the world, that thou mayest reach the height of the Word. Leave out of doors the vain shows of this world, leave its malice, but bring in with you that goodness of mind which has grace in the tree of life, that is, if she wash her robes and enter into the city which is the true grace of the saints, wherein is the Tabernacle of God, around which the scribes of the Lord encamp, where neither day nor sun nor moon afford light, but Rev. xxi. 23. the Lord Himself is the light thereof, and enlightens all that city. For He is the S. John viii. 12. Light of the world, not indeed the visible light, but the intellectual brightness of the souls which are in this world, upon which He pours the bright beams of reason and of prudence, S. Luke xxiv. 32. and in the Gospel is said to inspire with the breath of His spiritual influences the inmost soul, and the recesses of the mind.

21. If then any man hath begun to be an inhabitant of that heavenly city, an inhabitant, that is, by his life and manners, let him not depart from it, let him not go out again, or retrace his steps, the steps, that is, not of his body but of his mind; let him not turn back. Behind is luxury, behind is impurity. Gen. xix. 30. When Lot went up into the mountain he left behind him the crimes of Sodom, but she who looked back, could not reach the higher ground. It is not your feet but your manners which are never to turn back. Let not your hands hang down, or the knees of your faith and devotion become feeble. Let not the weakness of your will be backsliding, let there be no recurrence of crime. Thou hast entered in, remain therefore; thou hast arrived, stay still; Ib. 17. escape for thy life.

22. In your ascent your steps must tend directly upwards, no man can safely turn back. Here is the way, there, downfall; here ascent, there a precipice. In ascending there is labour, in descending danger; but the Lord is mighty, Who, when thou art founded there will guard and hedge thee round with prophetic walls and apostolic bulwarks. Therefore the Lord says to thee, Joel iii. 13. Come, get you down, for the press is full. Let us be found within, not out of doors. In the Gospel too the Son of God saith, S. Luke xvii. 31. He which shall be upon the house-top let him not come down to take away his vessels. And this He says not of this house-top, but of that of which it is said, Ps. civ. 2. He spreadeth out the heavens like a vault.

23. Remain within therefore, within Jerusalem, within thine own soul, peaceful, meek, and tranquil. Leave her not, nor descend in order to raise up this vessel of thine, either with honour, or wealth, or pride. Remain within, that aliens may not pass through thee, that sins may not pass through thy mind, vain acts, and idle thoughts: and they will not pass, if thou wilt wage a holy war in the cause of faith and devotion, for the love of truth against the snares of passion, and wilt take up the arms of God against spiritual wickedness and the craft of the devil, who tempts our senses by fraud and stratagem, but who is easily crushed by the gentle warrior, who sees no strife, but, as becomes the servant of God, teaches the faith with modesty, and convinces those who oppose themselves. Of him the Scripture says, Joel iii. 9. Let the warrior who is gentle arise[165], and let him that is weak say, Phil. iv. 13. I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me.

24. Supported by this faith, even he who is weak shall prevail, and his soul will be holy, and the prophetic or apostolic mountains shall Joel iii. 18. drop down new wine for him, and the hills shall flow with milk, like that hill which 1 Cor. iii. 2. gave milk to the Corinthians to drink, and water shall flow for him from their vessels, and from their well-heads. S. John iv. 14. From his belly shall flow living water, that spiritual water which the Holy Spirit supplies to His faithful; may He vouchsafe to water thy soul also, that in thee may be a fountain springing up into life eternal. Farewell: love me as a son, for I love you as a father.

LETTER XXX. A.D. 389.

S. AMBROSE HERE continues the subject of the last Letter, dwelling especially on the duty of rising above the level of earthly things, and bringing together various passages of the Old Testament which he interprets spiritually as setting forth this Lesson. The true follower of Christ will build Him a Temple in his heart, which his Lord will fill with the adornment of spiritual graces.

AMBROSE TO IRENÆUS, GREETING.

1. AFTER I had finished my last letter and directed it to be conveyed to you, the words which the Lord spake by the prophet Haggai came into my mind, Hag. i. 4. Is it time for you, O ye, to dwell in your cieled houses? What is the meaning of this but that we ought to dwell on high, not in low and subterranean abodes? For they who dwell beneath the earth, cannot build the temple of God, but say, Ib. 2. The time is not come, the time that the Lord's house should be built, because it is the mark of sensual persons to seek underground dwellings, courting the cool of summer, being enervated by indulgence and requiring shady retreats to enable them to bear the heat, or because the slothful live at ease beneath the earth, or lastly because dark and shady places suit them best, concealing, (as they believe,) their crimes. Ecclus. xxiii. 18. I am compassed about with darkness, the walls cover me, what need I to fear? But in vain do they hope for this, when God beholds the hidden depths of the abyss, and discovers all things before they take place.

2. But neither Elijah nor Elisha dwelt in underground dwellings. 1 Kings xvii. 19. Moreover the former carried the dead son of the widow up into the loft where he abode, and there raised him to life; and for the latter, that 2 Kings iv. 8, 10. great woman, the Shunamite, prepared a chamber on the wall, and there she obtained the privilege of Ib. 16 et seq. conceiving a son, for she was barren, and there also she saw the miracle of his restoration to life. And what shall I say of Acts x. 9. Peter who at the sixth hour went up upon the house-top, and there learnt the mystery of the baptism of the Gentiles. 2 Sam. xviii. 17, 18. But the homicide Absalom had reared for himself a pillar in the King's dale, and then, after his death, he was cast into a great pit. So then the saints ascend unto the Lord, the wicked descend to crime; the saints are on the mountains, the wicked in the valleys; 1 Kings xx. 23. For God is the God of the hills, not of the plains.

3. Those therefore who dwelt in the plain, where God dwells not, could not have the house of God in themselves; for this is the house which God required of them, that they should build up themselves, and should erect within them the temple of God with the living stones of faith. For it was not the erection of earthly walls nor of wooden roofs that He required, for these, had they existed, would have been destroyed by the enemies' hand; but He sought for that temple which should be raised in men's minds, to whom it might be said, Ye are the Temple of God, wherein the Lord Jesus was to dwell, and from whence He was to proceed for the redemption of the world. Thus in the womb of a Virgin a sacred chamber was to be prepared, wherein the King of heaven might dwell, and the human Body might become the temple of God, Which also when It was destroyed, was to be raised again in three days.

4. But such a house as this sensual persons, Hag. i. 4. they who dwell in cieled houses and delight in chased silver, do not build. For as they despise pure silver, so also they despise simple dwellings. They enlarge the site of their houses, they add more and more, joining house to house and farm to farm, they dig up the ground; so that the very earth itself gives way to their habitations, and like sons of the earth they are laid up within her womb, and hidden in her bowels. They surely are those of whom Jeremiah says, Jer. xxii. 13. Woe unto him that buildeth his house in unrighteousness. For he who builds in righteousness, builds not on earth but in heaven.

5. Ib. 14. Thou hast built, saith the Prophet, a house, measure the upper chambers of it, even airy chambers, furnished with windows, cieled with cedar, and painted with vermilion. Now he measureth the upper chambers, who, having contemplated the judgment of God, judgeth the judgment of the humble and the judgment of the poor. But he who seeks after gain and the blood of the innocent builds not his chambers with judgment, nor keeps the due measure, because he has not Christ, nor looks for the breath of Divine grace upon him, nor does he desire the brightness of full light, nor has he chambers painted with vermilion, for it cannot be said to him, Cant. iv. 3. Thy lips are like a thread of scarlet.

6. Jer. xxii. 19. He shall be buried with the burial of an ass. Engl. Vers. A man of this sort, it is said, shall not be buried, for he who has burrowed in the earth, and buried himself alive, so to speak, in a tomb, has deprived himself when dead of the rest of burial. And thus, laid in the pit of carnal pleasures, he has found no grave from whence to rise. Such a man therefore builds no temple to God, because he hath not known the time of his correction. How then can such men build a temple, who like wild beasts betake themselves to dens and hiding places, who like serpents bury themselves in ditches, and burrow in the earth like crafty foxes?

7. Neither does he build a sepulchre for himself who dies before the time, for 1 Tim. v. 6. he is dead while he liveth; and he hears not the voice of Haggai, that is being interpreted, of the Feaster, for he enters not the Tabernacle of God, Ps. xlii. 5. in the voice of praise and thanksgiving, the sound of one feasting. For how can he hear His voice, who sees not His works? If he saw them, he would have heard the Word which has been put in His Hand, rejoicing in His acts, whereby S. Matt. vii. 7. He knocked and it was opened to Him, and He descended into his soul that He might feed therein upon the food of sincerity and truth.

8. Now because he has not heard, the word of Haggai comes again to hand, and says, Rise up from your Hag. i. 8. cieled houses that are weighed down by wickedness, and go up to the mountain of the heavenly Scriptures, and hew wood, the wood of wisdom, the wood of life, the wood of knowledge; and make straight your ways, direct your acts that they may keep their due order which is useful and necessary for building the house of God.

9. For if ye do it not, the Ib. 10. heaven over you shall be stayed of her dew, that is, the heavenly Word, Which descends as the dew upon the grass, shall not temper the fevered motions of your bodily passions, nor extinguish the fiery darts of your various desires; and the earth, that is, your soul, shall be stayed from her fruit, so that it shall be dried up, unless fully watered by the Word of God, and sprinkled with heavenly dew, even the fulness of spiritual Grace.

10. And as He knew how slothful they are who dwelt beneath the earth, and in the dark abodes of pleasure, Hag. i. 14. I will stir up, it is said, the spirit of Jerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, Governor of Judah, and the spirit of Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, that they may be stirred up to build the Divine house. For Ps. cxxvii. 1. except the Lord build the house, their labour is lost that build it. Now Zerubbabel means, 'constant overflowing,' like the Fountain of life, and the Word of God, Col. i. 16, 17. by Whom and from Whom are all things and in Whom all things consist. Thus saith the overflowing Fountain, S. John vii. 37. If any man thirst, let him come unto Me, and drink; drink, that is, from the stream of the unfailing flood. We read also of Zabulon, a nocturnal flood, that is to say prophetic, but it also is now brightened by the intermixture of this stream, whereby was swallowed up that flood of vanity typified by Jezabel, which was opposed to truth and to the utterances of prophets, and was so torn in pieces by dogs that not a trace of it remained, but all its frame with every mark of its posterity was destroyed. Zerubbabel therefore of the tribe of Judah, and Jesus the High Priest, thus designated both by tribe and name seem to represent two persons, though one only is meant; for He Who as Almighty is born from the Almighty, as Redeemer is born of the Virgin, being the Same in the diversity of His two divisible natures, hath fulfilled as the Giant of salvation[166] the verity of the one Son of God.

11. Now being about to raise from the dead holy Zerubbabel He says, Hag. ii. 6. Yet once, it is a little while, I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land. Once before he had shaken these things when He delivered his people from Egypt, Exod. xiii. 21. when there was in heaven a pillar of fire, dry land among the waves, a wall in the sea, a path in the waters, when in the desert a daily supply of heavenly food was produced, Ib. xiv. 22. and the rock was melted into streams of water. But He shook them also afterwards in the Passion of the Lord Jesus, S. Luke xxiii. 44. when the heaven was covered with darkness, the sun withdrew his light, the rocks were rent, the tombs opened, the dead raised, the Dragon, vanquished on his own waves, saw the fishers of men not only sailing, but even walking on the sea without danger.

12. The dry land was also shaken when the barren Gentile nations began to ripen with the harvest of devotion and faith, and the desert and the Gentiles were so much shaken, that the preaching of the Apostles, whom He sent to call the Gentiles, was so loud and vehement, that Ps. xix. 4. their sound went out into all lands, and their words unto the ends of the world. So greatly, indeed, was the desert shaken that Is. liv. 1. more are the children of the desolate than the children of the married wife, and Ib. xxxv. 1. the desert blossomed as a rose, the elect of the Gentiles entered in to the remnant of the people, that the Rom. xi. 5. remnant might be saved according to the election of grace.

13. Hag. ii. 7, 8. And I will fill, it is said, this house with My silver and gold, with the heavenly oracles, which are as Ps. xii. 7. silver tried in the fire, and in the brightness of the true light, glistening like spiritual gold in the secret hearts of the saints. These riches He confers on His Church, riches whereby spiritual treasures are increased, and the glory of the house is exalted above the former glory which the elect people enjoyed.

14. For peace and tranquillity of the soul is above all glory of any house; for Phil. iv. 7. peace passeth all understanding. This is that peace above all peace which shall be granted after the third shaking of the heaven, the sea, the earth and the dry land, when He shall destroy all Principalities and Powers. For S. Matt. xxiv. 35. heaven and earth shall pass away, and all the fashion of this world; and every man shall rise up against his brother with the sword, that is, with the word Heb. iv. 12. piercing the marrow of the soul, that whatever opposes itself, the Zech. ix. 10. chariot from Ephraim and the horse from Jerusalem may be cut off, as Zechariah says. And thus there will be peace over all, the passions of the body offering no resistance, and the unbelieving mind no obstacle, that Christ may be all in all, offering in subjection to the Father the hearts of all men.

15. Wherefore to Him alone is it mystically said, Hagg. ii. 23. I will take thee, O Zerubbabel, and will make thee as a signet, for I have chosen thee. When our mind shall have become peaceful so that it may be said to her, Cant. vi. 13. Return, return, o Shulamite, which signifies ‘peaceful,’ or, to use your own name, Irenice, then shall she receive Christ like a signet on herself, that is, the Image of God, that she may be according to that Image, for 1 Cor. xv. 48. as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly. And it behoves us Ib. 49. to bear the image of the heavenly, that is, peace.

16. And that we may know the truth of this, it is said in the Canticles to the soul now fully perfect, that which may the Lord Jesus say to you also, Cant. viii. 6. Set me as a seal upon thine arm; that peace may shine in your heart and Christ in your works, and that wisdom and righteousness and redemption may be formed in you. Farewell, my son: love me for I love you.

LETTER XXXI.

IRENÆUS HAD ASKED S. Ambrose whether God had greater love for those who had believed from their early years than for those who had been converted later in life. In answering this question, S. Ambrose enters into the history of the Jewish and Christian Churches, which he considers as set forth under the figures of David's two wives.

AMBROSE TO IRENÆUS, GREETING.

1. YOU have wisely thought it a subject of inquiry, whether there be any difference in God's love towards those who have believed from their childhood, and those who have believed in the course of their youth or more advanced age; for this also has not been past over nor left unnoticed in the sacred Scriptures. For it is not without meaning that the Lord our God says to the Prophet Joel, Joel i. 8. Lament to me for the spouse girded with sackcloth and for the husband of her youth, expressing his grief for the Synagogue, who, before, in her virginity, had been espoused to the Word of God, or, it may be, for a soul which had fallen from her good deeds, that by the heinousness of her sins she had incurred hatred, and through the defilement of impiety and the stains of unbelief had become miserable and despised, and far removed from the grace of that Spouse which had before been counted worthy to be told, Hosea ii. 19. I will betroth thee unto Me in righteousness and in judgment and in lovingkindness and in mercies.

2. Not without reason is she considered miserable, who has lost gifts of so great a price, and suffered so grievous a loss of her dowry of virtues as to be deprived of the Spouse of her virginity. For according to our merits the Word of God either lives or dies in us; for if our desires and works are good, the Word of God lives and acts in us: if our thoughts and actions are darksome, Mal. iv. 2. the Sun of righteousness sets within us. And therefore He bids lamentation to be made for such a soul. For as they have cause of congratulation and feasting with whom the Bridegroom dwells, so that soul is to be mourned for, from whom the Spouse has been taken, as it is written of the Apostles in the Gospel; for S. Matt. ix. 15. when the Bridegroom shall be taken away from them, then shall they fast in those days.

3. Thus too this soul, in former times when she possessed the Virgin Word, had joy and gladness. And therefore she fasted not, because it was the season of feasting and refreshment; the Bridegroom was present bestowing by His presence the riches of plenty, stores of heavenly food, and dropping Ps. civ. 15. wine, whereby the hearts of men are made glad. But after she lost the Bridegroom by her acts, she is commanded to do penance in sackcloth for her sins, and to bewail herself, because Christ, Who is the Virgin Word, died and was crucified for her.

4. If this soul was espoused from early age, and never bore any other yoke, but from the beginning dedicated the maiden flower of her faith to Christ and as a virgin was united to Him in early days in the mysteries of piety, received a training in holiness as a heifer does the yoke; she is the very soul of the ancient Jewish stock from the family of the patriarchs, who, had she kept her course of faith without stumbling, would have been counted worthy of great things, the Spouse of the Virginal Word, as she who lays hold of Wisdom, Ecclus. xv. 2. and as a mother shall she meet him, and receive him as a wife married of a virgin.

5. The other likewise is procured from the Gentiles, and both are the Spouse of the One Word, which is a great mystery. And this is set forth to you in the book of Kings; since David had two wives, Ahinoam the Jezreelitess and 1 Sam. xxv. 39. Abigail whom he obtained afterwards; the first more severe, the latter full of mercy and grace, an hospitable and liberal soul, who saw the Father with open face, having beheld His glory; she who received the divine dew of paternal Grace, as the interpretation of the name signifies. Now what is the dew of the Father, but the Word of God, Who has filled the hearts of all with the moisture of faith and justice?

6. Well therefore does the true David say to this soul what was said to Abigail, Ib. 32. Blessed is the Lord God of Israel which sent thee this day to meet me. And again he says to her, Ib. 35. Go up in peace to thine house; see, I have hearkened to thy voice, and have accepted thy person. Lastly in the Song of Solomon these are the words of the Bridegroom to the Bride, Cant. ii. 14. Let me see thy countenance; let me hear thy voice.

7. And at the time she was dismissed, for she had another husband who in Hebrew was called Nabal, which in Latin means foolish, a man harsh, inhospitable, uncourteous, ungrateful, who knew not how to repay good offices; but after his death, she was set free from the law of her husband, and the prophet David took her to wife. By this marriage the mystery of the Church which was to be called from among the Gentiles is signified, for she, having lost the husband to whom she had been married, became converted to Christ, bringing with her a dowry of piety, of humility and faith, enriched also with the patrimony of mercy.

8. But in this place it is not this wife, but that Ahinoam, who was evilly disposed towards her brother, wherefore her brother was made a trouble to her, and in their person it is said, Ps. xliv. 15. thou makest us to be a bye-word among the heathen, and that the people shake their heads at us. The devil, finding her off her guard, fell upon her as a lion, and deprived her of her charms, rooted up Mic. iv. 4. her vine and fig-tree under which she used to repose, and caused her fruit to wither.

9. But now God, having compassion on them, thus dried up and withered by drought, saith to the prophet, Joel i. 8. Lament to Me for virgin girded with sackcloth and for the husband of her youth, that is to say, over the dead husband of this soul or of the Synagogue. And with her He expostulates in another place, Hosea iv. 6. forasmuch as she had forgotten her resolution, forgotten His grace, had wandered from discipline, and had lost her former affections as a wife. Lastly therefore He reproves her with His words, calling to mind and repeating her tenderness and her expressions of affection: 'Didst Thou not call me one of Thy household, the parent and guide of Thy virginity.'

10. Wherefore for this soul, to whom through her infidelity the Word of God is dead, and this Virgin Word is dead also, He appoints grief and brings in an Intercessor, that so she may be called to penitence, and may thereby earn compassion. But she who is of prudent understanding and very beautiful to look upon, was gained for him, like Abigail, in battle; her adversaries were conquered, and her husband, he who, surrounded by spiritual wickedness, struggled and fought not to lose his beautiful wife, being dead. On her, her victorious and loving Spouse confers sweetness and grace, cleansing her from all that might obscure her beauty, and taking off from her the garments of her captivity, that so, laying aside all the hairs of her head, that is, the curls of sins, which seem to be superfluous parts of our person (for 1 Cor. xi. 14. if a man have long hair it is a shame unto him), she may strive to come Eph. iv. 13. in the unity of the faith, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ, that she may lay aside all trouble of mind, and founded in love may grow up in the Lord Jesus, and make increase of the whole body.

11. This is that soul whom the Law shews to thee under the figure of a beautiful woman, and Deut. xxi. 12. if thou seest her among the captives, and hast a desire unto her, that thou wouldest have her to thy wife, it says to thee, thou shalt bring her home to thine house, that thou mayest commit to her the whole interior of thy house, the possession of all thy secrets, that thou mayest take away her superfluities, and cut off her transgressions; and with a razor not too sharp, lest it come to evil, may cut off the slough of thy passions, and thy idle senses. Wherefore it is said, Ib. 12. she shall shave her head, that so the Eccles. ii. 14. wise man's eyes that are in his head may meet with no hindrance. And Deut. xxi. 13. she shall remain, it is said, in thine house a full month, bewailing the sins of her nativity, and the lies of her wicked father the devil, who would fain Jer. xvii. 12. Vulg. gather what he hath not laid, that so, cleansed by the purification of this mystic number, she may obtain the keys of marriage.

12. And it is well said, Deut. xxi. 13. After that thou shalt go in unto her, bidding thee to enter wholly into thy soul, and collect thyself within her, and so dwell in her that thou mayest be not in the flesh but in the spirit, and purpose to associate her to thyself in the commerce of life, knowing that she will communicate to thee of her goods, and that filled with her grace thou mayest say, Wisd. viii. 19. I was a witty child, and had a good spirit; and she may answer thee, Cant. iii. 4. I will take thee, and bring thee into my mother's house, and unto the chamber of her that conceived me. A good mother of souls in that Jerusalem which is in heaven.

13. She then shall be thy wife, she shall find thee and kiss thee. Deut. xxi. 14. And it shall be, if thou hast no delight in her, because she chastiseth her body, and bringeth it into slavery, thou shalt not suffer her to be a slave, that is, to the lusts of the body, nor subject her to the flesh, but suffer her to remain free; thou shalt not alienate her, for this were to sell her, nor shalt thou despise her, but shalt allow her to serve God in the chastity of faith and sobriety of good works. Farewell: love me, for I love you.

LETTER XXXII. A.D. 387.

S. AMBROSE IN this Letter applies the words of Jeremiah about the partridge (Jer. xvii. 11.) to Satan, and from it sets forth the way in which Jesus Christ has overcome him, and rescued man from his power.

AMBROSE TO IRENÆUS, GREETING.

1. Jer. xvii. 11. THE partridge hath cried, she hath gathered what she hath not hatched[167]. From the conclusion of my last letter I may borrow the opening of the ensuing. The question has been much mooted: with a view therefore of solving it, let us consider what natural history tells us of the nature of this bird. For it is the part of no little sagacity to consider even this, for Solomon knew the nature 1 Kings iv. 33. of beasts and of fowl, and of creeping things and of fishes!

2. Now this bird is said to be full of craft, fraud, and guile, skilled in the ways of deceiving the fowler, and experienced in the arts of turning him aside from her young ones; omitting no artful stratagem which may draw off the pursuer from her nest and lurking place. And we know that on observing his approach, she beguiles him until she has given her offspring the signal and opportunity for flight. As soon as she perceives they have escaped, she also withdraws herself, leaving her enemy deluded by her treacherous wiles.

3. It is said also to be a bird which copulates indiscriminately, and that the male bird rushes eagerly on the female, and burns with unrestrained desires. Wherefore it has been thought suitable to compare this impure malicious and deceitful creature with the adversary and circumventor of the human race, with him who is the arch-deceiver and author of impurity.

4. The partridge then cried, he that is, who derives his name from destroying[168]: even Satan, which in Latin means the adversary[169]. Gen. iii. 4, 5. He cried first in Eve, he cried in Cain, Exod. v. 2. he cried in Pharaoh, in Num. xvi. 2. Dathan, Abiram, Korah. Exod. xxxii. 1. He cried in the Jews, when they demanded gods to be made for them, while the law was being given to Moses. He cried again, when they said of the Saviour, S. Matt. xxvii. 23–25. Let Him be crucified, let Him be crucified, and, His blood be on us and on our children. 1 Sam. viii. 5. He cried, when they required that a king should be given them, that they might revolt from the Lord God their King. He cried in every one who was vain and faithless.

5. And by these cries he gathered to himself a people whom he had not created; Gen. i. 27. for God made man after His own likeness and image, and the Devil drew man to himself by the allurements of his voice: He gathered to himself the nations of the Gentiles, Jer. xvii. 11. getting riches not by right[170]. Wherefore it is a common saying concerning the rich and covetous man, that he is a partridge gathering riches not by right. But my Jesus, as a good Judge, does all things with righteousness[171], for He came saying, as it is written, Isa. lxiii. 1. I speak righteousness and judgement[172] of salvation.

6. By that grace then He despoiled that partridge the Devil, took from him the ill-gotten riches, even the multitude that followed Him, recalled from error the souls of the Gentiles, and the minds of the nations that wandered from the way. And since He knew that they were beguiled by the voice of the Devil, and in order that He might Himself loose the bonds and chains of ancient error, Gen. iv. 10. He cried first in Abel, the voice of whose blood cried out. He cried in Moses, to whom He said, Exod. xiv. 15. Wherefore criest thou unto Me? Josh. i. 1. He cried in Joshua, He cried in David, who says, Ps. cxix. 146. Unto Thee do I call, help me. He cried too in all the Prophets. Wherefore He says also to Isaiah, Isa. xl. 6. Cry, and Isaiah answers, What shall I cry? He cried in Solomon, calling to all with a very loud voice in the power of Wisdom, Prov. ix. 5. Come eat of my bread, and drink of the wine which I have mingled. He cried also in His Body, as the Hab. ii. 11. Beam out of the timber. He cried that He might deceive and circumvent the lurking Enemy, saying, S. Matt. xxvii. 46. My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me. He cried that He might spoil him of his prey, replying to the thief, S. Luke xxiii. 43. Verily I say unto thee, this day shalt thou be with Me in Paradise. Wherefore when Jesus cried, Jer. xvii. 11. straightway that partridge was left by those whom he had gathered in the midst of his days.

7. Wherefore some have thought that this also agrees with the nature of the partridge, forasmuch as it steals the eggs of others, and hatches them with its own body, seeking by this treachery to gain for itself the offspring of others. But when she whose eggs have been stolen, or nest invaded, or her young have been tempted by a fraudulent resemblance, and deceived by the appearance of beauty, when she, I say, perceives this, she ‘picks out the crow’s eyes[173]‘ as the saying is, and, being inferior in strength, puts on and arms herself with cunning. And when all the labour she has bestowed on their nurture has exhausted her store of food, and her young ones have begun to grow up, she utters her cries, and calls to her offspring with the trumpet (as it were) of affection. And they, roused by this natural sound, recognise their mother, and desert their pretended parent. And thus, seeking to gather what he has not hatched, he loses those whom he thought to bring up.

8. Not without need therefore was it that Jesus also cried; it was in order that the whole universe which had been deceived by the voice, the allurements, the art, the specious beauty of the partridge, and enticed by his treacherous wiles, and had wandered from the true Author of their being, might be recalled by the voice of her true Parent, might abandon this deceiver, and desert him in the midst of his days, that is, before the end of this world. From him the Lord Jesus has rescued us, and called us to eternal life. Wherefore now, Rom. vi. 8. being dead to the world we live to God.

9. When then this partridge shall have been completely forsaken by his false children, then that foolish one whom God has chosen and 1 Cor. i. 27. who has confounded the wise man, will be saved. Wherefore Ib. iii. 18. if any man seemeth to be wise in this world let him become a fool, that he may be wise.

Farewell my son, and love me, as indeed you do, for I love you.

LETTER XXXIII.

S. AMBROSE IN this Letter explains more fully the text of Deut. (xxi. 15 &c.) which he had alluded to in Letter xxi. and makes the two wives represent qualities.

AMBROSE TO IRENÆUS, GREETING.

1. IN a previous letter I said that the soul ought to be delivered from its adversaries, and a bond of life which shall be inseparable entered into with it. And inasmuch as my discourse took as a proof of its assertion that passage in the Book of Deuteronomy Deut. xxi. 15. which speaks of the man who had two wives, one beloved and the other hated, you seem to have felt much concern lest any one should suppose this man had taken to himself two souls, which is impossible.

2. But you yourself know that sometimes, when Scripture uses allegory, it refers some things to the figure of the Synagogue, some to that of the Church; some things to the soul, others to the mystery of the Word, others to souls of different kinds and qualities, which he who has spiritual discernment can distinguish. And so I conceive that it is not two souls, but different qualities of the same soul, which are treated of in the following chapter of the Law. For there is an amiable kind of soul, which desires pleasure, which shuns labour, shrinks from compunction, slights the judgments of God. It is amiable because it seems gentle and sweet for the time, and one that soothes rather than distresses the mind. But there is another severer kind, which is consumed with zeal for God, which, like a strict wife, will not permit or suffer her consort to commit whoredoms, allows no indulgence to the body, gives no licence to delight or pleasure, renounces the hidden deeds of shame, devotes herself to arduous labours and to severe perils.

3. If therefore both have borne children, Ib. 16. he may not, it is said, when he maketh his sons to inherit that which he hath, make the son of the beloved first[174] before the son of the hated, which is indeed the first. The meaning of which I conceive not to be so much a simple preference as between two first ones, but rather a declaration that the son of the hated wife alone has the prerogative of being first. Now the word 'primitivus' means as first-born[175], and the first-born are holy, for Exod. xiii. 2. S. Luke ii. 23. every male that openeth the womb shall be called holy to the Lord. Nevertheless all first-born are not holy, for Esau who was the first-born was not holy.

4. But the holy are the first-born, for it is written in Numbers; Numb. iii. 12, 13. Behold, I have taken the Levites from among the children of Israel instead of all the first-born that openeth the matrix among the children of Israel. For on the day that I smote all the first-born in the land of Egypt, I hallowed unto Me all the first-born in Israel. Wherefore He took the Levites for the first-born, as being holy, for we know that the holy are first-born from the Epistle to the Hebrews, where it is written, Heb. xii. 22. But ye are come to Mount Sion, and unto the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of Angels and to the Church of the first-born. Wherefore as the first-born of the Church are holy, so also are the Levites, for they also are the first-born. For it is not by the order of their birth but by the gift of sanctification that they are holy; Gen. xxix. 34. Levi being the third son of Leah and not the first.

5. But he who is sanctified himself opens the womb. What womb? Hear the words, Ps. lviii. 3. As soon as they are born they go astray. As you have understood the first-born who opens the womb, so understand here the womb of the good mother, from which it is not saints, but sinners who go astray. But the Levites are taken away from the midst of Israel, because they have nothing in common with the people, whose earthly first-born are destroyed. The first-born of the world are of another mother, Gal. i. 15. from whose womb Paul was separated when he was called to the grace of God. He received the Word Who is in the midst of our hearts. Whence it is said also, S. John i. 26. There standeth One among you, Whom ye know not.

6. This digression then of ours from one part of the Law to the other, for the purpose of shewing that the first-born is not the son of the beloved, that is of the more remiss and voluptuous wife, has not been needless, although the words of the chapter before us express the same truth: Deut. xxi. 16. He may not make the son of the beloved first-born before the son of the hated, which is indeed the first-born. He is indeed the first-born who is the holy son of a holy mother; just as she is indeed the mother, from whose womb not her true sons but sinners go astray. Wherefore the former is not the son of the true mother, nor the true first-born, but as though he were so, subsistence is indeed provided for him that he may not want, but he is not honoured, that he may become rich. But the other has received double from all, that he may abound; Gen. xlv. 22. just as in Genesis each of the patriarchs had two changes of raiment given to them by their brother Joseph, when they were sent back to their father to tell him that he whom he had believed to be dead was found.

7. Thus the first-born has received the prerogative of inheritance, as the Scripture says, Deut. xxi. 17. He is the beginning of his strength, the right of the first-born is his. Thus from the first-born Son of God the first-born are holy, and from that beginning, Rev. i. 8. (for He is the Beginning and the Ending,) the beginning is called holy, the beginning is the son to whom the prerogative of the first-fruits is due, according to that which was said to Abraham, Gen. xxi. 10. Cast out this bondwoman and her son, for the son of this bondwoman shall not be heir with my son, even with Isaac.

8. Now the Divine Oracle teaches us that this relates to the inheritance of virtues rather than that of mercy, for the Lord says, Ib. xxi. 12. In all that Sarah hath said unto thee, hearken unto her voice; for in Isaac shall thy seed be called. What other inheritance was there in Isaac which could ennoble his father, but that of sanctity? The son of the handmaid indeed he set over the Gentiles, as bestowing upon him a simple portion of his patrimony, but to the son of Sarah he gave a double portion, for on him he bestowed not only temporal but also heavenly and eternal things.

Farewell: love me, for I love you.

LETTER XXXIV.

HORONTIANUS ASKS WHETHER the soul is from heaven. S. Ambrose first refers him to the Book of Esdras, and then dwells upon S. Paul's statement in Rom. viii.

AMBROSE TO HORONTIANUS[176], GREETING.

1. YOU have enquired of me whether the soul is formed of a heavenly substance; for you are too well instructed to suppose that the soul is made of blood or fire or any harmony of nerves, as the common herd of philosophers believe, nor as that patrician sect of them, the descendants of Plato assert, does that which moves of itself and is not moved by others appear to you to be the soul, nor indeed have you approved that fifth kind of element which the keen genius of Aristotle has introduced, namely a kind of[177] perfection of which the essence of the soul might be (as it were) framed and compounded.

2. On this subject I advise you to read the book of Esdras, who despised these trifles of the philosophers, and with a deeper wisdom which he had gathered from Revelation, pointed out that the soul is of a nobler substance.

3. The Apostle also, though he has not said it in so many words, has yet given us to understand, like a good master and spiritual husbandman calling forth the faculties of his disciples by the hidden seeds of doctrine, that our souls are of a better creation and a more excellent nature. For when he says that Rom. viii. 20, 21. the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly but by reason of Him Who hath subjected the same in hope, because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the sons of God, he shews that the grace of souls is not small, seeing that by their strength and excellence mankind rises to the adoption of the sons of God, having within itself that which is given to it to make it in the likeness and image of God. For souls are not perceived by truth, nor are they seen by the bodily eye, wherefore they bear upon them the likeness of this incorporeal and invisible nature, and excel in their substance corporeal and sensible qualities. For the things that are seen are temporal, they represent and are united to things that are temporal, but the things that are not seen are united to the Eternal and Chief Good, Acts xvii. 28. in Him they live and move and have their being, and suffer not themselves, if they are wise, to be separated or divided from Him.

4. Every soul therefore, seeing herself shut up in the prison-house of the body, if it be not debased by her connexion with this earthly habitation, 2 Cor. v. 4. groans under the burthen of the body to which she is joined; Wisd. ix. 15. for the corruptible body presseth down the soul, and the earthy tabernacle weigheth down the mind that museth upon many things, knowing also that she walks 2 Cor. v. 7, 8. by faith not by sight, she is willing to be absent from the body to be present with the Lord.

5. Let us consider then how the creature hath been made subject to vanity, not indeed willingly, but by the Divine ordinance, which has appointed that our souls should be united to our bodies on account of their hopes, in order that, hoping for good, they should make themselves worthy of a heavenly recompense. Ib. 10. For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things belonging to the body[178]. Every man's soul must therefore consider that she will be rewarded according to deserts of life. And he says well the things belonging to the body, that is to say, the body which was assigned to her to govern, that if she have governed it well she may receive the reward for the sake of which she was subjected in hope, but if ill, she may be punished, forasmuch as she did not trust in God, nor aspire to that adoption of sons, and to the liberty of true glory.

6. So then the Apostle has taught that man is a creature subject to vanity. For what is so truly the man as his soul? of its companions he says, 2 Cor. v. 4. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan being burthened. David also says, Ps. cxliv. 4. Man is like a thing of nought, and, Ib. xxxix. 6. Every man living is altogether vanity. Wherefore the life of man in this world is vanity, to which vanity the soul is subject. And when a holy man doeth the things of the body, he doeth them not willingly but by reason of Him Who hath subjected the same in hope, he does them for obedience sake. From this example of the soul then let us proceed to the other creatures.

7. Consider the sun the moon and the stars; these heavenly luminaries, although they shine with an excellent brightness, are yet but creatures, and rise and set in performance of their daily task, obeying the ordinance of the eternal Creator, dispensing the radiance wherewith they are clothed, and giving light by night and by day. As often as the sun is obscured by clouds, as often as is it hidden by the interposition of the earth, or when the rays of its light are intercepted, eclipses occur, and, as the Scripture saith, Ps. civ. 19. The moon knoweth her going down[179]. She knows when she shines with a full, and when with a diminished orb. The stars also are overclouded and disappear, while going through the service of this earthly ministry, not willingly indeed but in hope; for they hope for the reward of this their toil from Him Who subjected them. Wherefore they go through it for His sake, that is, to do His will.

8. Nor is it surprising that they bear it with patience, knowing that their Lord, the Creator of all things in heaven and in earth, took upon Him our frail body and our servile state. Should not they then patiently bear the bondage of their corruption, seeing that the Lord of all humbled Himself even to death for the whole world, took upon Him the form of a servant, and was made the sin of the world, nay even a curse for us? Wherefore the heavenly bodies although they groan in that they are subject to the vanity of this world, yet follow the example of His goodness, and console themselves with the expectation of being delivered from the bondage of corruption into the liberty of glory, when the adoption of the sons of God, that is, the redemption of all men, shall have arrived. For when Rom. xi. 25, 26. the fulness of the Gentiles shall be come in, then all Israel shall be saved. For what people will He not pardon when He even pardons that persecuting people, who said, S. John xix. 6. Crucify Him, crucify Him, and, S. Matt. xxvii. 25. His blood be on us and on our children. Rom. viii. 20. But since even the heavenly creation is subject to vanity, albeit in hope, will not He Who is truly Mercy itself and the Redeemer of the world, suffer even the perfidy and insolence into which these men through the vanity of the world have fallen to obtain pardon?

9. To conclude then, both this great and glorious sun, and this moon which is not obscured by the shades of night, and these stars which are the garniture of the heaven, all these now suffer the bondage of corruption, for all creatures are corruptible, and the heavens shall perish and S. Matt. xxiv. 35. the heaven and earth pass away. But hereafter the sun and moon and the stars of heaven shall rest in the glory of the sons of God, when God shall be 1 Cor. xv. 28. all in all, He Who now in His immensity and mercy is in thee and in us.

10. And shall we not believe that the Angels themselves, who in the toils of this world fulfil divers ministries, Rev. iii. 1 &c. as we read in the Revelation of S. John, do not also groan when made the ministers of vengeance and destruction? Seeing that their life is blessed, would they not rather pass it in their ancient state of tranquillity than be interrupted by the infliction of vengeance on our sins? They who rejoice in the salvation of one sinner must surely groan over the miseries of so grievous sins.

11. If therefore the creatures and powers of heaven suffer the bondage of corruption, but still in hope, that hereafter they may rejoice on our behalf and together with us, let us also alleviate the sufferings of this present time by the hope and expectation of future glory. Farewell, my son; love me, for I love you.

LETTER XXXV.

IN THIS LETTER S. Ambrose continues his comment on the passage of S. Paul, especially on the 'groans of creation.'

AMBROSE TO HORONTIANUS.

1. MY former Letter was a reply to your inquiry; this is a part of my answer, supplemental not contradictory to the former. In reviewing the latter part of the passage I was struck, I confess, with his adding, Rom. viii. 22. we know that every creature groaneth, seeing that previously he had said without any addition, Ib. 20. The creature was made subject to vanity. For he said not every creature, but, the creature was made subject. And again he says, Ib. 21. Because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption. But in the third place he adds that Ib. 22. every creature groaneth together.

2. Now what does this addition mean? It means haply that every creature is not subject to vanity, and therefore every creature will not be delivered from the bondage of corruption. For why should that be delivered which is free and secure from the subjection of vanity and the bondage of that corruption? But they all groan together not in their own but in our pangs, and haply are in travail together of the Spirit of Salvation, the Spirit of sweetness, waiting for the adoption of the sons of God, that in the redemption of the human race they may attain to a common joy and gladness. So then either because of their charity they all groan for our labour, or for us as a member of their body, whose head is Christ. But you may understand this as you please, either as we have said, or simply that every creature groans and travails together.

3. And now let us consider what follows. Rom. viii. 23. And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first-fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit the redemption of the body. We are taught in the previous passage what the adoption of sons is; therefore, in order to explain its meaning, to that passage we must recur.

4. Ib. 13. He who through the Spirit, says S. Paul, mortifies the deeds of the body shall live. Nor is it surprising that he should live, since he who has the Spirit of God, becomes the son of God. Wherefore he is the son of God that he may receive not the spirit of bondage, but the spirit of adoption of sons; to the intent that the Holy Ib. 16. Spirit may bear witness with our spirit that we are the children of God. But this is the testimony of the Holy Spirit, that He it is Who cries in our hearts, Gal. iv. 6. Abba Father, as it is written to the Galatians. There is also the great testimony that we are the sons of God; namely that we are Rom. viii. 17. heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ. Now he is joint heir with Him, who is glorified together with Him, and he is glorified together with Him who by suffering for Him suffers together with Him.

5. And in order to encourage us to suffer, he adds that all things which we suffer fall far below and are not worthy to be compared with the recompense of our labours, the reward of future good, which shall be revealed in us, when we shall be formed anew after the Image of God, and shall be worthy to behold His Glory face to face.

6. And to exalt the greatness of this future revelation, he adds that the creation also waits for this revelation of the sons of God, which now is made subject to vanity, not willingly, but in hope, because it hopes for the reward of its ministry from Christ, or else because it also will be Rom. viii. 21. delivered from the bondage of corruption, and received into the glorious liberty of the sons of God, that there may be one liberty of the creation and of the sons of God, when their glory shall have been revealed. But now, so long as this revelation is delayed, the whole creation groans together, looking for the glory of our adoption and redemption, already travailing with that Spirit of salvation, and willing to be delivered from the servitude of vanity.

7. And to this the Apostle has conjoined the groans of the saints, who have the first-fruits of the Spirit, for they groan also. Of their own merits they are indeed secure, but since the redemption of the whole body of the Church is still future, they suffer together with it. For seeing that the members of this our body still suffer, shall not the other members, although higher, sympathize with the suffering members of one and the same body?

8. And this, I suppose, is why the Apostle has said that the 1 Cor. xv. 28. Son Himself shall be subject unto Him that put all things under Him, for they who still labour are not yet subject, and in these perhaps Christ still thirsts, in these is still hungry, in these is still naked, in that they do not fulfil the word of God, nor put on Christ, Who is the Garment of believers, and the Robe of the faithful. They also in whom He is sick still need medicine, and therefore are not yet subdued, for this subjection is of strength not of weakness: again, in those who are strong and obey the commands of God, the Son of God is subject. But now His travail is greater in those who do not succour those who are toiling, than in those who still require aid themselves. And this is the pious and true meaning of the subjection of the Lord Jesus, Who will subject Himself, to the intent Ib. that God might be all in all.

9. We have received the Apostle's meaning, let us now consider who are they that Rom. viii. 23. have the first-fruits of the Spirit. With this view let us inquire what is intended under the name of first-fruits or of beginning, Exod. xxii. 29. Thou shalt not delay, it is said, Ib. xxxiv. 26. to offer the first of thy ripe fruits, and of thy liquors; further on, Gen. iv. 4. The first of the first-fruits of thy lands thou shalt bring into the house of the Lord thy God. First-fruits and tenths are different, first-fruits are of greater merit, an act of pious consecration. And on this account Abel pleased God, for he delayed not to offer his gift, but offered of the first-fruits of his flock. Although some suppose that there is a difference between first-fruits[180] and first-born[181], in that on gathering in the crops, the beginning, so to speak, of all kinds in the threshing floor are offered, while the first reaping of the harvest is offered to the Lord; but of this we will speak in another place. But by the offering of the first-fruits, the whole harvest appears to be sanctified, but the first-fruits themselves are the most holy.

10. In like manner the saints are the first-fruits of the Lord, and the chief are the Apostles, 1 Cor. xii. 28. for God hath set in the Church first Apostles, who have prophesied many things and preached the Lord Jesus, for they first received Him. S. Luke ii. 28. Simeon too received Him, and the prophet Zacharias, John his son, Nathanael, S. John i. 47. in whom there was no guile, who rested under the fig tree, S. Luke xxiii. 53. Joseph also who was called just, who buried Him. These are the first-fruits of our faith, nevertheless the nature of other seeds is the same as that of the first-fruits, although in some there is less grace, for S. Matt. iii. 9. God is able of these stones to raise up children to Abraham.

11. You have an example in the Lord Jesus Himself. In the resurrection of the dead He is called Col. i. 18. the first-born from the dead. The Apostle also has called Him the first-fruits; 1 Cor. xv. 23. Vulg. In Christ shall all be made alive, but every man in his own order, Christ the first-fruits, afterward they that are Christ's, who have believed in His coming. His body is as truly a body as our own, nevertheless He is called the first-born from the dead, because He rose first; and He is called the first-fruits because He is holier than all the other fruits, and they by union with Him are hallowed also. He also as Col. i. 15. the Image of the invisible God is the Head of those found after that Image; in Him according to His Divinity there is nothing corporeal, nothing temporary; for Heb. i. 3. He is the brightness of His Father's glory, and the express Image of His Person. But in our desire to explain the meaning of first-fruits we have greatly extended the length of our letter.

12. Now the Apostles are our first-fruits, chosen from all the first-fruits of that time; to them it is said, S. John xiv. 12. And greater things than these shall ye do, for the Grace of God hath poured itself into them. These, I say, groaned, waiting for the redemption of the whole body, and they still groan, because many are still toiling, who are yet tossing on the sea. Just as, if a man is reaching the higher shore, but the waves still dash up to his middle, he groans and is in travail until he be wholly out of danger. Verily he groans, who still says to us, 2 Cor. xi. 29. Who is weak, and I am not weak?

13. We need not then to be perplexed by the words, Rom. viii. 23. We, which have the first-fruits of the Spirit, groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit the redemption of our body, for the sense is plain, forasmuch as they, having the first-fruits of the Spirit, groan, waiting for the adoption of sons. This adoption of sons is the redemption of the whole body, when he who is to be the son of God by adoption shall see face to face that Divine and Eternal Good; for there is the adoption of sons in the Church of God, when the Spirit cries, Gal. iv. 6. Abba, Father, as it is written to the Galatians. But this will be perfected when all shall rise again in incorruption power and glory who are counted worthy to see the Face of God, for then the human race will judge itself to be truly redeemed. And so the Apostle boasts, saying, Rom. viii. 24. For we are saved by hope. For hope saves, as also faith, whereof it is said, S. Luke xviii. 42. Thy faith hath saved thee.

14. Therefore the creature which is made subject to vanity not willingly but in hope, is saved by hope; just as Paul too, knowing that to die was gain to him, that he might be freed from the body and be with Christ, Phil. i. 24. remained in the flesh for their sakes whom he wished to win to Christ. Now what is hope but the expectation of things future? Wherefore he says, Rom. viii. 24. But the hope that is seen is not hope. For it is not what is seen but what is unseen that is eternal, for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for? The things that we see we seem to possess, how then can we hope for that which we already possess? Thus none of those things which we hope for can we see; 1 Cor. ii. 9. eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, the things that God hath prepared for them that love Him.

15. Wherefore, if that which is seen cannot be hoped for, it is not well to read as some do, 'for[182] because any one sees a thing he also hopes for it;' unless it may be understood thus, 'for that which any one sees, why does he also hope for or expect it?' For most true it is that we hope for that which we see not, and therefore, although it seem to be absent from us, we still look for it in patience; Ps. xl. 1. I waited patiently for the Lord, and He inclined unto me. And we wait patiently, because Lament. iii. 25. the Lord is good unto them that wait for Him. And it seems to agree with this, that through patience He has given it back to us. We wait for the things which we hope for, but see not. For he does much who hopes and looks for those things which are not seen, and endures because he directs his mind to that which is.

16. Now it is well said that Rom. viii.24. hope that is seen is not hope, referring to the power and honour and riches of this world. You may see a man distinguished by his retinue and equipages, but he has not hope in his equipages which are seen. Nor is hope in the firmament of heaven, but in the Lord of heaven. The Chaldæan has not hope in the stars which he watches; nor the rich man in his possessions or the avaricious man in usury; but he hath hope who places his hope in Him Whom he sees not, that is, in the Lord Jesus, S. John i. 26. Who stands in the midst of us, yet is not seen.

Finally, 1 Cor. ii. 9. eye hath not seen, nor ear heard the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him.

LETTER XXXVI.

S. AMBROSE CONTINUES, in reply to a question of Horontianus, his discussion of the passage of S. Paul, and explains what are his ‘groanings unutterable.’

AMBROSE TO HORONTIANUS.

1. OUR letters are so linked together that we seem to be holding actual conversation with one another, so well do you with your question and I with my explanations supply subject matter for our correspondence.

2. You have intimated your doubt of what spirit it is said that he Rom. viii. 26. maketh intercession for us with groanings that cannot be uttered. Let us then refer to what has gone before, that the passage may make plain what we are seeking. Likewise, it is said, the Spirit helpeth our infirmities. Does it not seem to you that this is the Holy Spirit, for He is our Helper, as He to Whom it is said, Ps. xxvii. 9. Thou hast been my succour, leave me not neither forsake me, O God of my salvation?

3. For what other Spirit could teach Paul how to pray? The Spirit of Christ, like Christ Himself, S. Luke xi. 1. teaches His disciples to pray, for who could teach us, after Christ, but His Spirit, Whom He sent to teach us, and to direct our prayers, 1 Cor. xiv. 15. for we pray with the Spirit and we pray with the understanding also. That the understanding may pray well, the Spirit goes before and Ps. cxliii. 10. leads it forth into the right way, so as to prevent carnal things, or what either falls below or exceeds its strength, from secretly stealing over it. 1 Cor. xii. 7. For the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal. It is written also, S. Matt.

vi. 33. Seek great things, and small things shall be added unto you; seek heavenly things, and earthly things shall be added unto you.

4. Wherefore He wishes us to seek greater things, not to linger upon earth. And He knows what to bestow upon us, 1 Cor. xii. 11. dividing unto every man severally as He will. Sometimes, knowing our capacity, which we are ignorant of, He says to us, Ye cannot receive it now. I ask for myself the sufferings of martyrdom, S. Matt. xxvi. 41. the Holy Spirit is willing, but sees the weakness of my flesh, and lest, while I seek for greater things I should lose what is less, says to me, 'Thou canst not bear this.' What opportunities have I not had and yet when near the goal I have been held back[183]. The good physician knows what food is suitable to each disease, and to each season, for the benefit of health. Sometimes food seasonably taken restores health; but if a man eat food unseasonably or of an improper kind, it is dangerous to him.

5. Therefore since we know not what to pray for, nor how to pray, the Holy Spirit prays for us; for He is the Spirit of Jesus our Advocate, and He prays with groans unutterable, for Christ also mourns for us. And God the Father says, Jer. iv. 19. My bowels, My bowels, I am pained at the very heart. We often read too of Him as being indignant and grieved. He groans to take away our sins, and to teach us to do penance. For there are pious groans, and of prevailing power with God, whereof the Prophet speaks, Ps. xxxviii. 9. And my groaning is not hid from Thee. For he did not hide himself, like Adam, but said, Behold I am the shepherd, 1 Chron. xxi. 17. but these sheep, what have they done? it is I that have sinned, let Thine hand be on me.

6. Hence then cometh the groaning of the Spirit of God, and those groans of the Prophet[184], truly unutterable because they are divine. So those words which Paul heard in heaven are 2 Cor. xii. 4. unspeakable, which it is not lawful for a man to utter, but what is hidden from man is known to God.

Now He Who is the Searcher of hearts Rom. viii. 27. knows all things, but the things which He searches are those which the Spirit hath cleansed. God therefore knoweth what the Spirit prays for, and what is the wisdom of the Spirit Which intercedes for the saints, as it is written, Ib. For the Spirit maketh intercession for us. For those for whom Christ suffered, and whom He cleansed by His Blood, for them the Spirit also intercedes.

Farewell: love me as a Son, for I too love you.

LETTER XXXVII. A.D. 387.

SIMPLICIAN, TO WHOM this and the following Letters, and several later ones, are addressed, seems, from what little we know of him, to have been a very learned and yet simple-minded man. He was older than S. Ambrose, who speaks in this Letter of his ‘fatherly love’ towards himself, and was probably his adviser in the early days of his episcopate, and possibly, as the Benedictine Editors, (note on Letter lxv,) suggest, his ‘father in the faith,’ as having prepared him for his ordination, or even taught him as a catechumen at Rome in earlier days. Paulinus tells us that when S. Ambrose was on his death-bed he overheard some of his Clergy discussing the probabilities as to his successor, and when they mentioned Simplician’s name, he said “as if he were taking part in the convention, ‘Trahitur autem sapientia de occultis.’” Certainly Simplician was unanimously chosen his successor.

In this Letter he dwells in detail upon the theme that goodness is true freedom and sin slavery, which he illustrates at great length and with much rarity of argument. It is one of the most interesting of his expository Letters.

AMBROSE TO SIMPLICIAN, GREETING

1. WHEN we were lately conversing together, in the intimacy of an old-standing affection, you let me see that you were much pleased by my taking a passage from the writings of the Apostle Paul to preach upon to the people. You said further that this was the case, because the depth of his counsels is difficult to grasp, while the loftiness of his sentiment rouses the audience, and stimulates the preacher; and also because his discourses are so fully, for the most part, the interpreters of his meaning, that the expounder of them finds nothing to add of his own, and, if he would say ought, fills the part of a critic rather than of a preacher.

2. However since I recognize herein the feelings of long friendship, and what is still more precious, the tenderness of your paternal regard, (for in length of attachment many may participate, but in paternal love they cannot;) since moreover you consider that I have already done what you ask satisfactorily, I will comply with what you desire, and that the more, as I am admonished and stimulated by my own example, an example not difficult for me to follow, since I shall imitate no great one, but myself only, thus returning to my own humble customs.

3. As to the plan pursued in my discourse, seeing that the image and character of the blessed life is delineated therein, I think I have so arranged the argument of it that it will not be disapproved by others, certainly not by yourself who are so partial to me, although it is more difficult to satisfy your judgment than theirs, only your affection softens its severity and renders it more indulgent to me.

4. Now this Letter, written as it is in your absence, has for its subject the sentence of the Apostle Paul, who calls us from slavery into liberty, saying, 1 Cor. vii. 23. Ye are bought with a price, be not ye the servants of men, shewing that our liberty lies in the knowledge of wisdom. This opinion has been bandied to and fro by philosophers in energetic discussions, while they assert that every wise man is free and every fool a slave.

5. But this was said long before by the son of David, Ecclus. xxvii. 11. The fool changeth as the moon. The wise man on the other hand is not dispirited by fear, nor changed by power, nor exalted by prosperity, nor cast down by sadness; for where wisdom is, there also is strength of mind, constancy, and fortitude. Now the wise man remains the same in mind, neither depressed nor exalted by the vicissitudes of things, he is not Eph. iv. 14. tossed to and fro as a child, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, but continues perfect in Christ, grounded in charity, rooted in faith. Hence he is not conscious of failure, he knows not the various losses which befal the soul, but S. Matt. xiii. 43. shall shine forth as the Sun of righteousness Who shines in the kingdom of His Father.

6. But let us now consider from what source Philosophy more fully derived this, from what discipline and wisdom of the Patriarchs. Did it not come first from Noah who, perceiving that his son Ham had foolishly derided the nakedness of his father, cursed him in these words, Gen. ix. 25. Cursed be Ham[185], a servant of servants shall he be unto his brethren, and set his brethren as lords over him, seeing that they had wisely deemed their fathers old age worthy of honour?

7. Did not also that source of all good discipline, Jacob, who on account of his wisdom was preferred to his elder brother, instil into the breasts of all the riches of this copious subject? Gen. xxvii. 29. So also the pious father, whose paternal affection was equally strong towards his two sons, although his judgment varied, (for while the ties of blood sway the affections, our judgments are formed according to desert,) and who therefore dispensed to the one grace, to the other mercy, to the wise grace, to the foolish mercy, seeing that Esau could not raise himself to virtue by his own proper strength nor make progress spontaneously, blessed him in rendering him the subject and servant of his brother, shewing thereby that folly was so much worse than slavery that slavery itself is a remedy for it; because a fool cannot govern himself, and unless he has some director he falls by his own will.

therefore he laid a yoke as on one untamed, and to him who had said he would live by his sword he denied even freedom; that he might not fall away through presumption he set his brother over him, that being subdued by his authority and governance he might make progress towards conversion. And since there are two kinds of service, (for that which proceeds from necessity is weaker, that from free will stronger, for that good is more transcendent which proceeds not from necessity but from free will,) he therefore first laid upon him the yoke of necessity, and afterwards imparted to him the blessing of voluntary subjection.

9. It is not then nature which makes a person a slave, but folly; not manumission which sets free, but discipline. Esau was born free, and was made a servant, Joseph was sold into slavery, and then elected to power, to rule over those who bought him. He disdained not to be sedulous and obedient, but he maintained the height of virtue, he preserved the liberty of innocence, the dignity of integrity. The Psalmist therefore says well, Ps. cv. 18. Joseph was sold to be a bond-servant; they humbled his feet in fetters. He was sold, it is said, to be a bond-servant, but they could not make him a bond-servant; they humbled his feet, not his soul.

10. For how was that soul humbled of which it is said: His soul pierced the iron? For while sin pierces the souls of others, (for the iron means sin, which has a penetrating power,) the soul of holy Joseph was so far from being vulnerable by sin that it pierced through sin itself. The blandishments of his mistress' charms moved him not, and with reason was he insensible to the flames of lust, seeing that he was consumed by the brighter fire of Divine grace. It is therefore well said of him also, Ib. 19. The word of the Lord inflamed him; for thereby Eph. vi. 16. he quenched the fiery darts of the Devil.

11. How was he a bond-servant who directed the princes of the people to store up the corn, Gen. xli. 48. that thus they might forestall and provide for future dearth? Or how was he a bond-servant, Ib. xlvii. 20. who gained the whole land, and reduced all the Egyptians to bondage? And this, not in order to impose upon them the condition of an ignoble bondage, but that he might establish a tribute from all but the lands of the priesthood, which he preserved free from tribute, Ib. 22. that among the Egyptians also respect for the priesthood might be held inviolable.

12. His being sold then did not make him a slave; for though of a truth he was sold to merchants, yet, if you regard price merely, you will find many who have bought for themselves maidens of an elegant form, and then, captivated by love, have basely enslaved themselves to them. 1 Esdr. iv. 29, 30, 31. Apame the concubine of King Darius was once seen sitting at his right hand, taking his diadem off his head, and placing it on her own, and with the palm of her left hand striking his face, while the King gazed upon her with open mouth, glad if she would only smile upon him, and thinking himself miserable and afflicted if she scorned him, laying aside his authority, and seeking to soothe and persuade her to be reconciled to him.

13. But why should I quote this at so great a length? Do we not often see parents who have been made slaves by pirates or cruel barbarians ransomed by their children? Are then the laws of mercy more powerful than the laws of nature? Is natural affection produced in slavery? People often buy lions and yet have no mastery over them, nay are so much their slaves that if they see them becoming enraged and shaking out their manes on their brawny necks, they run away and hide themselves. Money then determines nothing, for it often buys masters over itself, nor do catalogues of auctions, for by them the purchaser himself is often sold and allotted to another. A contract of sale does not change a man’s nature, nor deprive wisdom of her liberty. Many free men, as it is written, serve a wise servant, and Prov. xvii. 2.LXX. there is a wise slave, who governs foolish masters.

14. Whom then do you consider as more truly free? Wisdom alone is free, she sets the poor over the rich, and makes the servants lend at usury to their to their own masters; lend, that is, not money but understanding, lend the talent of that Divine and eternal Treasure which is never wasted, the mere loan of which is precious: to lend that mystical money of the heavenly oracles of which the Law says, Deut. xv. 6. Thou shalt lend unto many nations, but thou shalt not borrow. This the Jew lent to the Gentiles, for he received not instruction from them but imparted it; to him the Lord opened His treasures, that He might moisten the Gentiles with the dew of His Word, and might become the Head of the nations, while He Himself had no head over Him.

15. He then who is wise is free, bought with the price of the heavenly oracles, with that gold, that silver of the Divine Word; bought with the price of blood (for it is no small thing to acknowledge one's Redeemer;) bought with the price of Grace: he who heard and understood the words, Is. lv. 1. Ho every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money, come ye, buy and drink and eat.

16. He is free who going forth to war, if he have seen a beautiful woman, and when he spoils his enemies' goods has found her among them and Deut. xxi. 11. has a desire unto her, takes her to wife, having first shaved her head and pared her nails, and taken off from her the raiment of her captivity, taking her no longer as a slave but free, for he understands that prudence and discipline are not liable to a state of bondage. And therefore the Law says, Deut. xxi. 14. Thou shalt not sell her at all for money, for truly she is above all price. And Job says, Job xxviii. 18, 19. Take[186] wisdom into thine inmost parts. The topaz of Ethiopia shall not equal it, for it is more precious than gold and silver.

17. Freedom therefore is not his alone who has never had the auctioneer for his master, nor seen him raising his finger, but he is more truly free, who is free within himself, who is free by the laws of nature, knowing that this law has a moral not merely an arbitrary sanction, and that the measure of its obligations is in accordance not with the will of man but with the discipline of nature. Does such a person therefore seem to you free merely? Does he not rather appear to you in the light of a censor and director of morals? Hence the Scripture says truly that the poor shall be set over the rich, and private men over those who administer the state[187].

18. Think you that he is free who buys votes with money, who courts the applause of the people more than the approbation of the wise? Is he free who is swayed by the popular breath, who dreads the hisses of the populace? That is not liberty which he who is manumitted receives, which he obtains as a gift from the blow of the lictor's palm. For it is not munificence but virtue that I hold to constitute liberty; liberty, which is not bestowed by the suffrages of others, but is won and possessed by a man's own greatness of mind. For a wise man is always free, always honoured, always one who presides over the laws 1 Tim. i. 9. For the law is not made for the righteous but for the unrighteous, for the just man is a law unto himself, having no need to fetch for himself from a distance the form of virtue, seeing that he bears it within his heart, having the works of the law written on the tablets of his heart, to whom it is said, Prov. v. 15. Drink waters out of thine own cistern, and running waters out of thine own well. For what is so near to us as the Word of God? This word is in our hearts, and in our mouth; we see it not, and yet possess it.

19. The wise man therefore is free, for he who does that which he wills is free. But it is not every will that is good, but it is the part of a wise man to will all things which are good, for he hates what is evil, having chosen that which is good. If therefore he has chosen what is good, he whose choice is free and who has chosen what he will do is free, for he does what he wills to do: the wise man therefore is free. All that the wise man does he does well.

But he that does all things well does all things rightly, and he that does all things rightly does them all without offence or reproach, without causing disturbance or loss to himself. Whoever then has this power of doing all things without offence or reproach, without loss or disturbance to himself, does nothing foolishly but does all things wisely. For he who acts wisely has nothing to fear, for fear is in sin. But where no fear is, there is liberty, and where liberty is, there is the power of doing what one wishes: the wise man therefore alone is free.

20. He who can neither be compelled nor forbidden is no slave; now it belongs to the wise man to be neither compelled nor forbidden; the wise man, therefore, is not a slave. Now he is forbidden who does not execute what he desires, but what does the wise man desire but the things which belong to virtue and discipline, without which he cannot exist? For they subsist in him, and cannot be separated from him. But if they are separated from him he is no longer wise, seeing that he is without the use and discipline of virtue, of which he would deprive himself if he were not the voluntary interpreter of virtue. But if he be constrained, it is manifest that he acts unwillingly. Now in all actions there are either corrections proceeding from virtue, or falls proceeding from malice, or things between the two and indifferent. The wise man follows virtue not compulsorily but voluntarily, for all things that are pleasing he does, as flying from malice, and admits not so much as a dream of it. So far is he from being moved by things indifferent, that no forces have the power to move him hither and thither as they do the herd of men, but his mind hangs as in a balance in equal scales, so that it neither inclines to pleasure, nor in any respect directs its desires however slightly to things which ought to be avoided, but remains unmoved in its affections. Whence it appears that the wise man does nothing unwillingly or by compulsion, because were he a slave he would be so compelled; the wise man therefore is free.

21. The Apostle likewise gives this definition, saying, 1 Cor. ix. 1. Am I not an Apostle, am I not free? Truly he was so free that when certain persons had Gal. ii. 4. come in privily to spy out his liberty, he gave place, as he himself says, by subjection, no not for an hour, that the truth of the Gospel might be preached. He therefore who yielded not preached voluntarily. Where free will is, there is the reward of free will; where obligation is, there is the service of obligation. Free will therefore is better than obligation; to will is the part of the wise man, to obey and to serve is the part of the fool.

22. This is also the Apostle's definition, who says, 1 Cor. ix. 17. For if I do this thing willingly, I have a reward: but if against my will a dispensation is committed to me. On the wise man therefore a reward is conferred, but the wise man acts willingly, according to the Apostle therefore the wise man is free. Wherefore he also exclaims, Gal. v. 13. Ye have been called unto liberty, only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh. He separates the Christian from the Law, that he may not seem to yield to the Law against his will; he calls him to the Gospel, which the willing both preach and practise. The Jew is under the Law, the Christian is by the Gospel; in the Law is bondage, in the Gospel, where is the knowledge of wisdom, is liberty. Every one therefore who receives Christ is wise, and he who is wise is free, every Christian therefore is both wise and free.

23. But the Apostle has taught me something even beyond freedom itself, namely that to serve is real freedom, 1 Cor. ix. 19. Though I be free from all, he says, yet have I made myself servant unto all, that I might gain the more. What is that which surpasses liberty but to have the Spirit of grace, to have charity? Liberty renders us free to men, but charity renders us beloved by God. Wherefore Christ also says, S. John xv. 15. But I have called you friends. Good indeed is charity; whereof it is said, Gal. v. 13. By love of the Spirit[188] serve one another. Christ also became a servant that He might make all free. Ps. lxxxi. 6. LXX. His hands served in the baskets: He Who Phil. ii. 6. thought it not robbery to be equal with God, took upon Him the form of a servant, and was made all things to all men, that He might bring salvation to all. Following this example, Paul was both, as it were, under the Law, and lived without the Law, for the benefit of those whom he desired to gain: to the weak he voluntarily became weak that he might strengthen them; 1 Cor. ix. 24, 27. he ran so as to obtain, he kept under his body that he might be victorious over heavenly powers in Christ.

24. To the wise man therefore even bondage is freedom; whence we may gather that even to be in power is bondage to the fool, and what is worse, while he rules over a few, he serves more and severer masters. For he serves his own passions, his own lusts, their tyranny he can escape neither by night nor day, for he carries these masters within his own breast, and suffers within himself an intolerable bondage. For there is a double bondage, one of the body, another of the soul; now the lords of the body are men, but the lords of the soul are evil dispositions and passions, from which liberty of the mind alone frees the wise man and enables him to depart from his bondage.

25. Let us seek therefore that truly wise man, that truly free man, who although he live under the dominion of many, says freely, Job xiii. 19–21. Who is he that will plead with me? from Whose sight I shall not be able to hide myself, only do Thou withdraw Thy hand far from me, and let not Thy dread make me afraid.

26. And King David, who followed him, said, Ps. li. 6. Against Thee only have I sinned. For being supported by the royal dignity, and being, so to speak, master of the laws, he was not subject to them but was liable to God alone, Who is the Lord of hosts.

27. Hear another free man; 1 Cor. iv. 3, 4. But with me it is a very small thing that I should be judged of you, or of man's judgment: yea, I judge not mine own self, for I know nothing against myself, ... but He that judgeth me is the Lord. The freedom of the spiritual man is a true freedom, because 1 Cor. ii. 15. he judgeth all things, yet he himself is judged of no man, because he knows himself to be subject to nothing which has any participation in the creature, but to God alone, Who only is without sin, of Whom Job also says, Job xxvii. 2. God liveth Who hath taken away my judgment, for the just man can only be judged by Him Ib. xxv. 5. in Whose sight the heavens are not clean, nor the light of the stars pure and clean.

28. Will any one bring forward those verses of Sophocles which say 'Jupiter, and no mortal man is ruler over me?' How much more ancient is Job, how much older is David? Let them acknowledge then that they have borrowed from us the more excellent of their sayings.

29. Who then is wise but he who has arrived at the very mysteries of the Godhead, and has known the hidden things of wisdom to be manifested to him. He then alone is wise who has taken God as his guide, to conduct him to the secret resting-place of truth, and although but a mortal man has become by grace the heir and successor of the eternal God, and partaker, as it were, of His sweetness, as it is written, Ps. xlv. 8. Wherefore God, even thy God hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows.

30. Now if any man will examine more closely these matters, he will perceive what great assistance the wise man finds and what great obstacles the foolish, in the very same things; that to the one freedom is an aid, to the other bondage is an impediment. For the wise man rises as a conqueror, having vanquished and triumphed over lust, fear, sloth, sadness and other vices. This he does until he casts them out from the possession of his mind, driving and excluding them from all its bounds and limits, for as a cautious general he knows how to guard against the incursions of robbers, and those hostile stratagems which the wicked enemies of our soul are frequently attempting with their fiery darts; for we have both wars in peace and peace in war. Whence also he says, 2 Cor. vii. 5. Without were fightings, within were fears. But Rom. viii. 37. in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us. He says this because he was terrified neither by straits nor persecutions, nor hunger, nor danger, nor death.

31. But he who fears these things, who dreads death, how is he not a slave? Truly he is a slave, and that in a miserable bondage; for nothing so subjects the mind to all kind of bondage as the fear of death. For how can the abject and vile and ignoble sense raise itself up, when it is deeply sunk in the pit of corruption, through the lusts of this life. Behold, how much he is a slave: Gen. iv. 14. I shall be hid, he says, and I shall be a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth, and it shall come to pass that every one that findeth me shall slay me. Therefore as a slave he received a sign, but even thus he could not escape death. Thus the sinner is a slave to fear, to cupidity, to avarice, to lust, to malice, to anger, nay, he is a greater slave than if he were set under tyrants.

32. But they are free who live by the laws. Now true law is right reason, true law not sculptured on tablets, nor engraved in brass, but impressed on the mind, and fixed in the senses; for the wise man is not under the law, but is a law unto himself, bearing the work of the Law in his heart, inscribed and formed therein by a kind of pen natural to himself. Are we then so blind as not to see the manifest characters of things, and the images of virtues? And how unworthy is it that whole nations should obey human laws, that they may become thereby partakers of liberty: but that wise men should neglect and abandon the true law of nature formed according to the image of God, and true reason, the sign-bearer of liberty; since there is so much liberty therein, that when children we are unconscious of any bondage to vice, being removed from anger, free from avarice, ignorant of lust. How miserable therefore, that we who are born in liberty should die in bondage!

33. But this arises from the levity of our mind and the infirmity of our character; because we are occupied by idle cares, and superfluous actions: but the heart of the wise man, his works and deeds, ought to be stedfast and immoveable. Moses taught us this, Exod. xvii. 12. when his hands became heavy, so that Joshua the son of Nun could scarcely hold them up. And therefore the people were victorious when works not of a perfunctory kind, but full of gravity and virtue were being carried on, not the works of a mind unsteady, and staggering to and fro in its affections, but of one firmly rooted and established. The wise man therefore stretches out his hands, but the fool draws them together, as it is written, Eccles. iv. 5 The fool foldeth his hands together, and eateth his own flesh, meditating on carnal more than spiritual things. But not so did that daughter of Juda, who stretched forth her hands and cried to the Lord Susanna 43. Thou knowest that they have borne false witness against me. She thought it better not to sin and to incur the calumnies of her accusers, than to commit sin under the veil of impunity. And by the contempt of death she preserved her innocence. Not so, either, the daughter of Jepthah, Judges xi. 36. who by her own consent confirmed and even encouraged her father's vow concerning her own immolation.

34. For I will not produce the books of philosophers on the contempt of death, or the gymnosophists of the Indians, of whom the answer of Calanus[189] to Alexander, when he commanded him to follow him, is especially commended. 'To what praise' said he 'do you consider me entitled, that you require me to travel to Greece, if I can be compelled to do that to which my will consents not?' A reply truly full of dignity, and yet his mind was more full of liberty. He wrote this letter also.

CALANUS TO ALEXANDER.

35. “Your friends persuade you to lay hands and even constraint on the Indian philosophers, not even in their dreams beholding our works. Our bodies you may remove from place to place, our souls you cannot compel to do what they do not will, no more than wood or stone to utter sounds. A great fire burns pain into living bodies and begets corruption; on this fire we are, for we are burning alive. There is neither king nor prince who can compel us to do what we have not determined to do. Nor are we like the philosophers of Greece, who have conceived words rather than realities, in order to give celebrity to their opinions; in our case realities are associated with words and words with realities; our acts are swift and our discourses short, we enjoy a delightful freedom in the exercise of virtue.”

36 and 37. Excellent words, but still words; excellent constancy, but that of a man; excellent letter, but that of a philosopher. But amongst us, even maidens through desire of death have mounted even up to heaven by the lofty steps of virtue. Why should I mention Thecla, Agnes, or Pelagia, who sprouting forth as noble tendrils[190] have hastened to death as if to immortality? The virgin exulted among lions, and dauntlessly beheld the roaring beasts. And to compare our history with that of the Indian philosophers, what Calanus boasted in words holy Laurence proved by his acts, for he was burnt alive, and surviving the flames said, ‘Turn me and eat me.’ Nor did the youths of the race of Abraham[191] or the sons of the Maccabees strive less boldly; the former sung while in the midst of the flames, and the latter, during their punishment, asked not to be spared, but reproached their persecutor in order to enrage him more. The wise man therefore is free.

38. But what can be more sublime than holy Pelagia, who was surrounded by persecutors, but before she came into their presence said; ‘I die willingly, no man shall touch me, no one with wanton look shall defile my chastity, I will carry away with me my modesty, my honour untainted;

these ruffians shall reap no profit from their insolence. Pelagia will follow Christ, no man shall deprive her of her liberty, no man shall see her free faith made captive, her illustrious chastity, her inheritance of wisdom. What is enslaved shall remain here, not amenable to any duty.' Great therefore is the freedom of that pious virgin, who encircled by her persecutors gave way not the least in the midst of these great dangers to her integrity and her life.

39. But he is not free over whom anger reigns, for he is subject to the yoke of sin; for Prov. xxix. 22. stirreth up strife. E.V. an angry man diggeth out sin, and, S. John viii. 34. Whosoever committeth sin, is the servant of sin. Neither is he free who is enslaved to avarice, for he cannot possess his vessel. Neither is he free who seeing his desires and pleasures, fluctuates in his devious course. He is not free who is bowed down by ambition, for he obeys the rule of another. But he is free who is able to say, 1 Cor. vi. 12, 13. All things are lawful unto me, but all things are not expedient, all things are lawful for me, but I will not be brought under the power of any. Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats. He is free who says, 1 Cor. x. 29. For why is my liberty judged of another man's conscience?

40. Liberty therefore belongs to the wise man not to the fool; for Prov. xxvi. 8. he who binds a stone in a sling is like him who giveth honour to a fool, for he wounds himself, and while brandishing his dart chiefly endangers his own body. Certainly as he is stung by the sling, and by the falling of the stone the evil is increased, so the fall of a fool when he is set at liberty is more rapid. Wherefore the power of a fool is rather to be retrenched than any new liberty added, for slavery is suitable for him. And therefore it is added, Ib. 9. As a thorn goeth up into the hand of a drunkard, so is a parable in the mouth of fools. For as he is wounded by his cups, so is the fool by his deeds. The one by drinking involves himself in sin, the other by acting subjects himself to censure, and by his deeds is drawn into bondage. Paul saw himself Rom. vii. 23. brought into captivity by the law of sin, and therefore, in order to be freed, he fled to the grace of liberty.

41. Fools then are not free, for it is said to them, Ps. xxxii. 10. Be ye not like to horse and mule, which have no understanding, whose mouths must be held with bit and bridle lest they fall upon thee. Great plagues remain for the ungodly; for they have need of these, in order that their folly may be restrained. It is good discipline which requires this, not severity. Further, Prov. xiii. 24. he that spareth his rod hateth his son: for a man's own sins scourge him still more severely. For heavy is the weight of crime, heavy the scourges of sin; they are heavy as a sore burthen, Ps. xxxviii. 4, 5. they inflict wounds upon the soul, and make the ulcers of the mind to stink.

42. Wherefore let us lay aside this grievous burthen of slavery, let us renounce sensuality, and the evil delights which bind us with the bonds, as it were, of lusts, and fetter us with chains. For these delights profit not the fool, and whoever has given himself to them from his boyhood will abide in bondage; living he will be as dead. Let sensuality then be cut down, let evil delights be pruned away, and let him who has been wanton bid farewell to his former courses. For the vine which has been cut down bears fruit, that which has been partly pruned puts forth leaves, that which has been neglected grows too luxuriantly. Therefore it is written, Prov. xxiv. 30. Like a field is the foolish man, and like a vineyard the man void of understanding; if you leave him alone, he will become desolate. Let us then tend this body of ours, let us chasten it, let us reduce it to subjection, let us not neglect it.

43. For our members are Rom. vi. 13. instruments of righteousness, they are also instruments of sin. If they are raised upwards, they are instruments of righteousness, that sin should not reign in them: if our body has died to sin, transgression will not reign therein, and our members will be free from sin. Let us not therefore obey its lusts, nor Ib. yield our members instruments of unrighteousness unto sin. If you have looked upon a woman to lust after her, your members are the instruments of sin. If you have spoken and solicited her, your tongue and your mouth are instruments of sin. If you have removed the landmarks which your fathers set up, your members are instruments of sin. If you have hasted Ps. xiv. 6. with swift feet to shed the blood of the innocent, your members are instruments of sin.

44. On the other hand, if you have seen a poor man, and taken him into your house, your members are instruments of righteousness. If you have rescued one who was suffering wrong, or one who was being led to execution; if you have cancelled the bond of the debtor, your members are instruments of righteousness. If you have confessed Christ (for Prov. xiv. 7. the lips of knowledge are the instruments of understanding,) your lips are the members of righteousness. He who can say, Job xxix. 15. I was eyes to the blind, and feet was I to the lame, I was a father to the poor, his members are members of righteousness.

45. Being therefore set free from sin, and redeemed, as it were, at the price of the Blood of Christ, let us not be made subject to the bondage of men or of passion. Let us not blush to confess our sins. Behold how free he was who could say, Job xxxi. 33. I feared not the multitude of the people; that I should not confess my sin in the sight of all. For he that confesses his sin is released from servitude, and Prov. xviii. 17. the just accuses himself in the beginning of his speech. Not the free but the just man also; but justice is in liberty and liberty in confession, for as soon as a man shall confess he is absolved. Lastly, Ps. xxxii. 6. I said I will confess my sins unto the Lord, and so Thou forgavest the wickedness of my sin. The delay of absolution depends on confessing, the remission of sins follows closely on confession. He therefore is wise who confesses; he is free whose sin is remitted, for he contracts now no debt of guilt. Farewell: love me as indeed you do, for I also love you.

LETTER XXXVIII. A.D. 387.

IN THIS LETTER S. Ambrose continues the subject, maintaining that the truly wise man is not only free but rich also, illustrating his statements with instances from the Old Testament.

AMBROSE TO SIMPLICIAN, GREETING.

1. WHEN we lately pointed out, taking our theme from the epistle of the Apostle Paul, that every wise man is free, we seemed to have fallen into philosophical discussion. But afterwards, in reading the epistle of the Apostle Peter, I perceived that every wise man is also rich: and this he says without distinction of sex, for he writes that all a woman's ornaments consist in a virtuous life, not in costly jewels, 1 S. Pet. iii. 3, 4. Whose adorning, he says, is not that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel, but the hidden man of the heart.

2. Here then are two things, both that there is a man within the man, and that he is rich who seeks not for himself the enjoyment of any riches. And he has well said, the man of the heart, in that the whole man of wisdom is hidden, as is wisdom itself, which is not seen but understood. No one before Peter used such an expression as, the man of the heart; for the outward man consists of many members, but the inward man of the heart is entirely full of wisdom, full of grace, full of beauty.

3. 1 S. Pet. iii. 4. In that, he says, which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price. And he is truly rich, who can appear rich in the sight of God, in whose sight the earth is small, the world itself is narrow, but God considers him only to be rich who is rich for eternity, who lays up the fruit not of riches, but of virtues. And who is rich before God but that meek and quiet spirit which is never corrupted? Does not he appear to you to be rich, who possesses peace of mind and the tranquillity of rest? who desires nothing, is not tossed by the storms of lust, despises not old things, seeks not new, so as by his constant desire to become poor in the midst of riches?

4. That peace is truly rich, which Phil. iv. 7. passeth all understanding. Peace is rich, modesty is rich, faith is rich, for Prov. xxviii. 10. to the faithful the whole world is a possession. Simplicity is rich, for there are also the riches of simplicity; for she scrutinizes nothing, has no mean, no suspicious, no deceitful thoughts, but pours herself forth with pure affection.

5. Goodness too is rich, and if a man preserve it he is fed by the riches of the heavenly inheritance. To quote also the more ancient examples of Scripture, Job v. 17–24. Happy, it is said, is the man whom God correcteth. Therefore despise not thou the chastening of the Almighty ... in famine He shall redeem thee from death, and in war from the power of the sword. Thou shalt be hid from the scourge of the tongue; ... the beasts of the field shall be at peace with thee, and thou shalt know that thy tabernacle shall be in peace. For the vices of this flesh being subdued, and those passions which are wont to war against the soul, your tabernacle shall be undisturbed, Gen. xxvii. 37. your house without offence, your seed shall not fail, your posterity shall be as the smell of a fruitful field, your burial as the harvest. Job v. 26. For while others are looking for theirs to fail, the heap of your corn will be carried ripe into the heavenly garners.

6. Ps. xxxvii. 26. Fit it is that the righteous ever lendeth, while the wicked man is in want. He lendeth justice, he lendeth the commandments of God to the poor and needy; but the fool does not possess even that which he believes himself to possess. Do you suppose that he can be said to possess, who brooding over his treasure night and day, is troubled by covetous and wretched anxiety? Such a one truly wants; although to others he appears rich, to himself he is poor, because he who is still grasping after more and desiring more uses not that which he possesses. For where there are no bounds to desire, what profit can there be in riches? No man is rich who cannot carry away with him that which he has, for that which is left behind, is not our own but another's.

7. Gen. v. 24. Enoch was rich who carried away with him that which he had, and laid up all the riches of his goodness in the heavenly treasure-house; he was Wisd. iv. 11. taken away lest that wickedness should alter his understanding. 2 Kings ii. 11. Elias was rich, who riding in a chariot of fire carried the treasures of his virtues up to the heavenly mansions. Not small were the riches he left to his heir, and yet he himself did not lose them. Who would have called him poor even then, when being himself in need of the sustenance of daily food, 1 Kings xvii. 9. he was sent to the widow that he might be nourished by her, when at his voice the heaven was shut and opened, when at his word the barrel of meal and the cruse of oil failed not for three years, but overflowed; when it was replenished not diminished by use? 2 Kings i. 14. Who would call him poor at whose word there came fire down from heaven, Ib. ii. 8. whom the river impassible by others could not retard, retiring back to its source that the prophet might pass over dry-shod?

8. Ancient history tells us of two neighbours, king Ahab and the poor Naboth; which of these do we believe to be the richer, which the poorer? The one, endowed with the royal support of riches, insatiable and not to be replenished with wealth, coveted the little vineyard of the poor man; the other, despising in his mind the golden fortunes of kings, and imperial treasures, was content with his own vines. Does not he appear richer and more kingly, who was sufficient to himself, and controlled his own desires, coveting nothing that belonged to another? Does not he, on the other hand, appear most needy, in whose eyes his own gold was accounted vile, and another man's vine precious. But learn for what reason he was most needy: because Job xx. 15. riches unjustly gotten are vomited up again, but Prov. xii. 12. the root of the righteous yieldeth fruit, Ps. xcii. 11. and flourishes like a palm-tree.

9. Is not he more needy than the poor man, who passeth away like a shadow? Ps. xxxvii. 35, 36. To-day the ungodly is in great power, to-morrow he is not, and his place can no more be found. But what is it to be rich, unless it be to abound? But who abounds whose mind is contracted, and therefore straightened, and what abundance can there be in straits? He therefore is not rich who does not abound. Wherefore David says well, Ps. xxxiv. 10. LXX, Vulg. The rich lack and suffer hunger; for although they possessed the treasures of the Divine Scriptures, they still lacked in that they did not understand, and hungered in that they tasted not the food of spiritual grace.

10. Nothing can therefore be richer than the temper of the wise man, nothing poorer than that of the fool. For since the S. Matt. v. 3. kingdom of God belongs to the poor, what can be richer? And therefore the Apostle says well, Rom. xi. 33. O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! Well also David, who Ps. cxix. 14. had as great delight in the way of the heavenly testimonies as in all manner of riches. And Moses says expressly, Deut. xxxiii. 23. Naphtali, satisfied with favour. Now Naphtali means when translated, 'abundance' or 'increase.' So that to be satisfied and to abound go together, but where there is the hunger of desire and insatiable lust, there truly is poverty. But since scarcely any desire of money or of this world can be satisfied, it is added, Ib. 23. full with blessing.

11. It is in accordance with these principles that the Apostle Peter has declared that 1 S. Pet. iii. 3. the ornament of women consists not in gold and silver and apparel, but in the secret and hidden man of the heart. Wherefore let no woman put off the dress of piety, the ornament of grace, the inheritance of eternal life.

Farewell: love me, for I love you.

LETTER XXXIX. A.D. 387.

S. AMBROSE IN this Letter seeks to rouse Faustinus from excessive grief for his sister's death, first on the ground of duty towards the children left to his care and protection, and then on the higher ground of submission to the Divine will, and realization of Christian hopes.

AMBROSE TO FAUSTINUS, GREETING.

1. I WAS well aware that you would grieve with bitter grief for the death of your sister: still you should not go into banishment, but rather give yourself back to us, for although mourners are little inclined to receive consolation, it is sometimes necessary for them. But you have fled to the recesses of the mountains, and made your dwelling in the caves of wild beasts, laying aside all customary human converse and, what is worse, the use of your own reason.

2. Is it in accordance with your esteem for your sister, that human nature, which ought to be much regarded by you for producing a woman so excellent, should on her account be of less value in your eyes? In quitting this life it doubtless was a consolation to her to believe that she left you behind her as a parent to your nephews, a guardian of their tender years, a succour to their destitution; but you so utterly withhold yourself both from your nephews and from us, that we do not reap any benefit from what she thus found a ground of consolation. These dear pledges invite you not to grieve, but to comfort them, that in seeing you they may believe their mother to be still alive. In you then let them recognize her; in you let them enjoy her presence, in you think that she still survives to them.

3. But you grieve that she has been lately cut off in the flower of her age. This however is the common fate not only of men, but of states and countries themselves. Coming from Bononia[192] you left behind you Claterna, Bononia itself, Matina, Rhegium; Brixillum was on your right, in front of you Placentia, by its very name still recalling its ancient lustre, on the left you saw with pity the wastes of the Apennines, you surveyed the fortresses of these once flourishing tribes, and remembered them with sorrowful affection. Do not then the carcases of so many half-ruined cities, and states stretched on their bier beneath your eyes, do not these remind you that the decease of one woman, holy and excellent as she was, is much less deplorable especially as these are for ever laid prostrate and destroyed, but she though removed from us for a while is passing a more blessed life elsewhere?

4. Wherefore I deem that you ought not so much to deplore her, as to offer for her your prayers; make her not sorrowful by your tears, rather commend her soul to God by oblations.

5. Perhaps however you will declare yourself to be secure of her merits and faith, you cannot endure the feeling of regret at seeing her no longer after the flesh, which is to you a better grief. And does not the Apostolic saying move you that 2 Cor. v. 16. henceforth we know no man after the flesh; yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we Him no more. For our flesh cannot be perpetual and lasting, it must needs die that it may rise again, it must be dissolved that it may rest, and sin come to an end. We too have known many according to the flesh, but now we know them no more. We have known the Lord Jesus, says the Apostle, after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we Him no more. For now He has put off the coil of the body, and is not seen in fashion as a Man, but has died for all and all are dead in Him, to the intent that being renewed by Him and quickened in the Spirit they may no longer live to themselves but to Christ. Wherefore the same Apostle also says elsewhere, Gal. ii. 20. I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me.

6. And well indeed was it that he who had before known Christ after the flesh, who had before Acts ix. 1. &c. persecuted and oppressed with bitter hatred the disciples of the Man, and the attendants on His bodily presence, but who now recognized His invisible workings, discerning not His bodily presence but His power, — well indeed was it that he became the teacher of the Gentiles, and began to instruct and prepare the worshippers of His Divinity to become preachers of the Gospel. Wherefore he added, 2 Cor. v. 17. if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature, that is, he that is perfect in Christ is a new creature, for all flesh is imperfect. And the Lord saith, Gen. vi. 3. My spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh. No carnal man then is in Christ, but if any man be in Christ he is a new creature, formed by newness not of nature but of grace. These old things which are according to the flesh 2 Cor. v. 17. have past away, all things are made new. And what are they but the things which S. Matt. xiii. 52. the scribe instructed unto the kingdom of heaven knows, like unto that householder, who brings forth out of his treasure things new and old; neither old things without new, nor new things without old? Thus too the Church saith, Cant. vii. 13. things new and old have I laid up for Thee. For old things, that is, the hidden mysteries of the Law are passed away, all things are made new in Christ.

7. This is the new creature of which the Apostle writing to the Galatians saith, Gal. v. 6. For in Jesus Christ neither circumcision availeth any thing nor uncircumcision, but a new creature, already our flesh now renewed flourishes, and having before borne the thorns of inveterate sin hath now found the fruit of grace. Why then need we grieve, if we can now say to the soul, Ps. ciii. 5. thy youth is renewed like the eagles? And why should we bewail the dead, now that by our Lord Jesus 2 Cor. v. 19, 20. the world has been reconciled to the Father? Since then we hold the benefits which Christ hath given, we are to you as well as to all ambassadors in Christ's stead, that you may know His Gift to be irrevocable, that you may believe what you always have believed, and not bring your opinion into discredit by too much sorrow. For the Lord Jesus was made sin that He might S. John i. 29. take away the sin of the world, and we all might be 2 Cor. v. 21. made the righteousness of God in Him; now no longer subject to the penalty of sin, but sure of the reward of righteousness.

Farewell; love me, for I love you.

LETTER XL. A.D. 388.

IN THE YEAR 388 A.D. the synagogue of the Jews at Callinicum in Mesopotamia was burnt by the Christians, at the instance, it was asserted, of the Bishop. Some monks also in the same district, having been insulted by some Valentinian heretics, while singing Psalms in procession on the Festival of the Maccabees, (Aug. 1st.) had burnt their conventicle. Theodosius had ordered that the Bishop should re-build the synagogue at his own cost, and that the monks should be punished, and the whole matter carefully sifted, and justice done. This Letter is written by S. Ambrose to remonstrate. He urges his plea with the boldest importunity, and, as he tells his sister in the following letter, Theodosius eventually yielded.

TO THE MOST GRACIOUS PRINCE AND BLESSED EMPEROR HIS MAJESTY THEODOSIUS, BISHOP AMBROSE SENDS GREETING.

1. NEARLY incessant are the cares which harass me, most excellent Emperor, but never was I in such trouble as at present; for I see I must be on my guard against the danger even of a charge of sacrilege. Wherefore I beseech you patiently to hear my address. For if I am unworthy to be heard by you, I am unworthy to offer for you, or to have your vows and prayers intrusted to me. Will you not hear him whom you wish to be heard in your behalf? Will you not hear him pleading for himself whom you have heard when pleading for others? Will you not dread the consequences of your own judgment; and fear to render him unworthy to be heard in your behalf, by treating him as unworthy of a hearing from you.

2. But it is neither the part of an Emperor to deny liberty of speech, nor of a Bishop not to utter what he thinks. There is no quality more amiable and popular in an Emperor than to cherish freedom even in those who owe him military allegiance. For there is this difference between good and bad rulers, that the good love freedom, the bad slavery. And there is nothing in a Bishop so offensive in God's sight, or so base before men, as not freely to declare his opinions. For it is written, Ps. cxix. 46. I spake of Thy testimonies also even before kings, and was not ashamed, and in another place, Ezek. iii. 17. Son of man, I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel; with the intent, it proceeds, Ezek. iii. 20, 21. that if the righteous man doth turn from his righteousness and commit iniquity, because thou hast not given him warning[193] that is, hast not told him what to beware of, his righteousness which he hath done shall not be remembered; but his blood will I require at thine hand. Nevertheless, if thou warn the righteous man, that the righteous sin not, and he doth not sin, he shall surely live, because he is warned; also thou shalt deliver thy soul.

3. I prefer then, to have fellowship with your Majesty in good rather than in evil; and therefore the silence of a Bishop ought to be displeasing to your Clemency, and his freedom pleasing. For you will be implicated in the danger of my silence, you will share in the benefits of my outspokenness. I am not then an officious meddler in matters beyond my province, an intruder in the concerns of others, but I comply with my duty, I obey the commandment of our God. This I do chiefly from love and regard to you, and from a wish to preserve your well-being. But if I am not believed, or am forbidden to act on this motive, then in truth I speak from fear of offending God. For if my own danger could deliver you, I would consent to be offered for you, though not willingly, for I would rather that without danger to myself you should be accepted and glorified by God. But if I am to suffer under the charge of silence and dissimulation without effecting your exculpation I had rather you should deem me too importunate than useless or mercenary. For it is written, in the words of the holy Apostle Paul, whose teaching you cannot gainsay, 2 Tim. iv. 2. Be instant in season, out of season: reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine.

4. We then also have One Whom it is even more dangerous to displease; especially as even Emperors themselves are not offended with any man for fulfilling his function, but you patiently give ear to every one speaking concerning his own department, nay you reprove him for not acting in accordance with his line of duty. Can that then which you readily accept from your soldiers, seem to you offensive in a Bishop; seeing that we speak not according to our own wills, but as we are commanded? For you know that it is written, S. Matt. x. 19, 20. when ye shall be brought before governors and kings take no thought how or what ye shall speak, for it shall be given you in that same hour what ye shall speak. For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father Which speaketh in you. Were it in civil causes that I had to speak, my not obtaining an audience would not give me such apprehension, although even then justice ought to be observed, but in God's cause whom will you hear, if you hear not the Bishop, at whose great peril it is that sin is committed? Who will dare to tell you the truth, if a Bishop does not?

5. I know that you are pious, merciful, meek and gentle, having at heart the faith and fear of the Lord; but some failings oftentimes escape our notice. Some men Rom. x. 2. have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge, and we ought, I think, to beware lest this steal even over faithful souls. I know your piety towards God, your lenity towards men; I am myself indebted to your courtesy for many benefits. Wherefore I feel greater fear, and deeper solicitude lest even your own judgment should hereafter condemn me for having failed, through cowardice or flattery, in saving you from a fall. If I had seen you sin against myself, I ought not to have kept silence, for it is written, S. Matt. xviii. 15–17. If thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault; then rebuke him before two or three witnesses, and if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the Church. Shall I then be silent in the cause of God? Now then let us consider what it is I have to apprehend.

6. The military Count of the East[194] reported that a synagogue had been burnt, and that this had been done at the instigation of the Bishop. You decided that the others should be punished, and that the synagogue should be rebuilt by the Bishop himself. I will not insist on the propriety of calling for the Bishop's own statement; for the clergy are wont to check disturbances and desirous of peace, save when they are themselves moved by some offence against God or insult to the Church. But suppose this Bishop to have been too eager in setting fire to this synagogue, and now to grow timid before the judgment-seat, has your Majesty no fear, lest he should acquiesce in your sentence, no apprehension of his becoming apostate?

7. Do you not fear, what will certainly be the case, that he will meet your officer with a refusal; and so he will be obliged to make him either an apostate or a martyr, and both of these are adverse to your interests and savour of persecution, that he should be forced either to become an apostate or undergo martyrdom. You see then whereunto this matter tends; if you think the Bishop firm, avoid driving his firmness to martyrdom; if you think him frail, shun exposing his frailty to a fall. For a heavy responsibility lies on him who has caused one who is weak to fall.

8. Under these circumstances I suppose that the Bishop will say that he himself kindled the fire, gathered the crowd, collected the people; so as not to lose an opportunity of martyrdom, and in place of the weak to offer up a bolder victim. O happy falsehood; obtaining for others acquittal, for himself Grace. This is my request also to your Majesty, that you would turn your vengeance upon me, and, if you consider this a crime, impute it to me. Why do you order the absent to be punished? you have the guilty person before you, you hear his confession, I openly affirm that I myself set the synagogue on fire, or at least, that I ordered others to do so; that there might be no place in which Christ is denied. And if it be objected, why did I not set it on fire in this very city? It began to be burnt, I reply, by the Divine judgment, my work was superseded. And to speak the truth, I was the less zealous because I expected no punishment. Why should I do that which being unavenged would also be unrewarded? These words are a shock to modesty, but they also bring back grace; they provide against the commission of that which may offend Almighty God.

9. But suppose that no one will cite the Bishop to do this; for this is what I have begged of your Clemency, and though I have not yet read that the edict is revoked, I will nevertheless assume it to be so. But what if other more timid persons, from a fear of death offer to rebuild the synagogue from their own funds, or the Count, finding this previously ordained, should himself command it to be restored at the expense of the Christians? Your Majesty will then have an apostate Count, and you will entrust your victorious banner, your labarum, which is consecrated by the name of Christ, to one who is the restorer of the synagogue which knows not Christ. Command the labarum to be carried into the synagogue, and let us see if they do not resist.

10. Shall then a building be raised for perfidious Jews out of the spoils of the Church, and shall that patrimony, which by Christ's mercy has been assigned to Christians, be transferred to the temples of the unbelieving? We read that temples were in former days erected from the spoils of the Cimbri and other enemies of Rome. Shall the Jews inscribe this title on the front of their synagogue: 'The temples of impiety built from the spoils of Christians?'

11. But the maintenance of discipline is perhaps what influences your Majesty. Is the show of discipline then weightier than the cause of religion? Police should give place to religion.

12. Has your Majesty never heard that when Julian commanded the temple at Jerusalem to be restored, they who cleared away the rubbish were destroyed by fire from heaven? Are you not afraid lest this should now happen? Surely you ought not to have commanded what Julian commanded.

13. But why are you thus moved? Is it generally because a public building has been burnt, or because it is a synagogue? If you are moved by the conflagration of the meanest edifice, (and what else could there have been in so obscure a town,) does not your Majesty remember how many prefects' houses have been burnt at Rome, and yet no man enacted vengeance for them? Nay, if any Emperor had desired to punish such an act severely, he would rather have injured the cause of those who had suffered so great a loss. Which then is the more fitting, that the partial burning of some houses at Callinicum[195], or the burning of the city of Rome should be punished, if indeed either of them ought to have been so. At Constantinople, a while ago, the Bishop's[196] house was burnt, and your Majesty's son interceded with you, that you would not avenge the wrong done to him, the youthful Emperor, nor the burning of the Bishop's palace. Your Majesty should consider, that, if you should in like manner command this act to be punished, he may again intercede to prevent it. The former boon however was happily obtained from the father by the son, for it was only fitting that he should first remit the injury to himself. A good distribution of favour and well allotted it is, that the son should be petitioned for his own loss, and the father for the offence against his son. In this case there is nothing which you need keep back on your son's account, beware also lest you derogate ought from God.

14. There is then no adequate reason for any such commotion, that the people should be so severely punished for the burning of any building; much less seeing that it is a synagogue that has been burnt, a place of unbelief, a house of impiety, a receptacle of madness, which God Himself hath condemned. For thus we read what the Lord our God spake by the mouth of Jeremiah, Jer. vii. 14–17. Therefore will I do unto this house, which is called by My Name, wherein ye trust, and unto the place which I gave to you, and to your fathers, as I have done to Shiloh. And I will cast you out of My sight, as I have cast out all your brethren, even the whole seed of Ephraim. Therefore pray not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them, neither make intercession to Me, for I will not hear thee. Seest thou not what they do in the cities of Judah? God forbids him to intercede for those whom you think worthy of being avenged.

15. Were I pleading according to the law of nations, I should assuredly recount how many Churches the Jews burnt in the time of Julian's reign: two at Damascus, one of which is but just repaired, and that at the expense, not of the synagogue, but of the Church, while the other is still a mass of shapeless ruins. Churches were likewise burnt at Gaza, Ascalon, Berytus, and nearly every town in that region, and yet no man asked for vengeance. At Alexandria too the most beautiful Church of all was burnt down by the Gentiles and Jews. The Church has not been avenged, shall then the synagogue be?

16. And shall the burning of the temple of the Valentinians likewise be punished? For what but a temple is the place where Gentiles assemble? The Gentiles indeed reckon twelve gods, the Valentinians worship thirty two Æons[197], whom they call gods. Concerning these I am informed that they have called for punishment upon some monks. For the Valentinians having endeavoured to stop them as they were going in procession according to ancient custom, chanting psalms, to celebrate the festival of the Maccabees, the monks exasperated by this affront, set fire to one of their rudely constructed temples in some country village.

17. How many have to offer themselves to this choice, remembering that in Julian's time he who threw down the altar and disturbed the sacrifice was condemned by the judge, and suffered martyrdom. And accordingly the judge who tried him was never considered other than a persecutor, no man would associate with him, no man deemed him worthy of a kiss of greeting. Were he not now dead, I should fear your Majesty's taking vengeance upon him. Nevertheless he escaped not the Divine vengeance, but saw his son die before him.

18. But it is reported that the judge was ordered to take cognizance of the matter, and was informed that he ought not to have reported upon it, but to have punished it, that the offerings which had been taken away were to be demanded back. Other particulars I will omit; but when the Jews burnt our Churches, nothing was restored, nothing demanded, nothing sought for. But what could the synagogue possess in that distant place, when everything in it was but of little value, nothing precious or abundant. In short of what could a fire deprive the treacherous Jews? These are devices of the Jews who wish to accuse us falsely, that through their representations an extraordinary military tribunal may be appointed, and an officer sent, who perhaps will say what one said here before your accession, 'How shall Christ help us, when we fight for the Jews against Christ? when we are sent to take vengeance on their behalf? They have lost their own armies, and they wish to destroy ours.'

19. Nay, what are the calumnies into which they will not rush, who by false witnesses have slandered Christ Himself? who are false even in matters relating to God? Whom will they not charge with the guilt of this sedition? whom will they not thirst after, even though they know them not? They desire to see rank after rank of Christians in chains, to see the necks of the faithful placed under the yoke, the servants of God hidden in darkness, smitten with the axe, delivered to the fire, or sent to the mines, that their pains may be slow and lingering.

20. Will your Majesty give this triumph to the Jews over the Church of God? this victory over the people of Christ, this joy to the unbelievers, this felicity to the Synagogue, this grief to the Church? They will place this solemnity among their feast-days; numbering it among those wherein they triumphed over the Ammonites, or Canaanites, or over Pharaoh king of Egypt, or which delivered them from the hands of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon. This festival they will add in memory of the triumph they have gained over Christ's people.

21. Although they refuse to be bound by Roman laws, deeming them even criminal, they now pretend to claim vengeance according to those laws. Where were those laws, when they burnt the roofs of the consecrated Basilicas? If Julian avenged not the Church because he was an Apostate, will your Majesty, being a Christian, avenge the injury done to the Synagogue?

22. And what will Christ hereafter say to you? Do you not remember what he said to holy David by the prophet Nathan? 2 Sam. vii. 8. 'I have chosen thee the youngest of thy brethren, and from private life have made thee Emperor. I have placed thy offspring upon the Imperial throne. I have put barbarous nations under thy feet, I have given thee peace, I have delivered thine enemy captive into thy hands. Thou hadst no corn to support thy army, I opened to thee the enemies' gates, the enemies' granaries, by their own hand; they gave thee the very stores which they had provided for themselves. I confounded the counsels of thy enemy, so that he laid bare his own plans. The very usurper of thy empire I so bound, and so fettered his mind, that although he had the means of flying from you he shut himself in with all his followers, as if fearing lest any should escape you. His lieutenant[198] and his forces on the other element, whom I had before dispersed to prevent their combining to make war on thee, I now called together again to render thy victory complete. Thy army, an assemblage of many fierce nations, I caused to keep faith and peace and concord, as if they had been one nation. And when there was imminent danger lest the perfidious plots of the barbarians should penetrate the Alps, I gave thee victory within the very barrier of the Alps, that thy victory might be without loss. Thus I made thee to triumph over thy enemy, and thou art giving my enemies a triumph over my people.'

23. Was it not the very reason why Maximus was abandoned, that before he set out on his expedition, hearing that a synagogue had been burnt at Rome, he sent an edict thither, acting as if he were the guardian of public order. Wherefore the Christians said, No good awaits this man. That king is become a Jew, and we have heard of him as a protector of order, but Christ, who died for sinners, shortly after put him to the proof[199]. And if this was said of words only, what will be said of actual punishment? So he was soon defeated by the Franks and by the Saxons, in Sicily, at Siscia[200], at Petavio, and in every quarter of the globe. What has a devout man in common with an unbeliever? The precedents of his impiety ought to be obliterated together with the impious man himself. That which injured the vanquished, that at which he stumbled, the victor ought to condemn, not to imitate.

24. Now I have recounted these things to you not as though you were ungrateful; rather I have spoken of them as being rightly bestowed, that reminded thereby you may love much, as being one on whom much has been bestowed. To Simon's answer our Lord thus replied, S. Luke vii. 43. Thou hast rightly judged; and then, turning straightway to the woman who had anointed His feet with ointment, and was the type of the Church, He said to Simon, Ib. 47. Wherefore I say unto thee, her sins, which are many, are forgiven, for she loved much: but to whom little is forgiven, the same loveth little. This is that woman who entered the house of the Pharisee, and cast out the Jew, but gained Christ. For the Church shut out the Synagogue, and why is it now attempted, that, with the servant of Christ, that is, from the breast of faith, and abode of Christ, the Synagogue should shut out the Church.

25. It is from affection and regard for your Majesty, that I have introduced these things into my pleading. The beneficence which has led you, at my request, to liberate many persons from exile, from prison, from the extreme penalties of death, obliges me to incur the danger of offending you for the sake of your own good, rather than lose in one moment that privilege of every Bishop which I have for so long possessed. For no man can feel greater confidence than he who zealously loves, no man certainly ought to injure him who is careful for his well-being. And yet it is not the loss of favour I deprecate, but the danger to salvation.

26. Yet how important it is that your Majesty should not think of enquiry or punishment in a matter with regard to which no one up to this time has ever held enquiry or inflicted punishment! It is a grievous thing to hazard your faith for the sake of Jews. When Gideon killed the consecrated calf, the Gentiles[201] said, Let the gods themselves avenge this affront towards them. Who is to avenge the Synagogue? Christ Whom they slew, Whom they denied? Or will God the Father avenge them, seeing that by rejecting the Son they have rejected the Father also. Who is to avenge the heresy of the Valentinians? how will your Piety be able to avenge them, seeing that you have commanded them to be shut out, and forbidden them to meet together? And should I bring forward to you the example of King Josiah as approved of God, will you condemn in this case that for which he is praised?

27. But if you do not place sufficient confidence in me, let your Majesty command the presence of those bishops whom you do approve, and let the question be discussed, what ought to be done so as not to injure the Faith. If in financial matters you consult your Courts, how much more fitting is it that in the cause of religion you should consult the Bishops of the Lord?

28. Let your Clemency consider what dangerous spies and liers in wait the Church has against her, if they find ever so small an opening they will plant a dart therein. I speak after the manner of men; but God is feared more than men, and is rightly preferred to Emperors themselves. If any man thinks obedience should be paid to a friend, a parent, or a neighbour, am I wrong in deeming that God should be obeyed, and that in preference to all others. Let your Majesty consult for your own well-being, or suffer me to consult for mine.

29. What shall I hereafter answer, if it shall appear that by an edict issued from hence Christians have been slain by the sword, or beaten to death with clubs or thongs loaded with lead? How shall I justify such an act, how shall I excuse it to those Bishops who having discharged the office of the priesthood for thirty years, nay for many more, have now bitterly to bewail, being deprived of their sacred functions and called to undertake municipal offices. If[202] those who fight for you are set free after a certain period of service, how much more ought you to consider those who fight for God! How I repeat, shall I defend this to the Bishops who complain in behalf of the clergy, and write word that the Churches are overborne by violent oppression.

30. This however I desired should be made known to your Majesty; about this you will deign to deliberate and direct according to your will; but as to that which distresses and rightly distresses myself, exclude and reject it from your consideration. You do yourself whatsoever you have commanded to be done; even if he[203] do it not, I would rather that you should be merciful than that he should refuse to do what he has been commanded.

31. Here are persons in dealing with whom you ought still to invite and earn the Clemency of God towards the Roman empire; here are persons for whom rather than for yourself you have to hope; let their grace, their well-being, appeal to you in what I now say. I fear your entrusting your cause to the judgement of others. As yet you are committed to nothing. Herein I will pledge myself for you to our God, fear not your oath. That change cannot be displeasing to God which is made for His honour. You have no need to alter your former letter whether it be yet dispatched or not, but command another to be written which shall be replete with faith and piety. It is open to you to change, it is not open to me to keep back the truth.

32. You have forgiven the people of Antioch[204] their offence against you, you have recalled the daughters of your enemy[205], you have committed them to be nurtured by their relative, you have bestowed money from your treasury on the mother of your enemy. This great piety, this great faith towards God will be obscured by your present act. Having thus spared your armed foes, and preserved your enemies, do not, I beseech you, so eagerly seek for vengeance upon Christians.

33. And now I entreat your Majesty not to disdain to listen to my fears both for yourself and myself; for it is the saying of an holy man, 1 Macc. ii. 7. Woe is me, wherefore was I born to see this misery of my people? is it that I should incur the risk of offending God? Assuredly I have done what is most respectful to you: I have sought that you should listen to me in the palace, that you might not have to listen to me in the Church.

LETTER XLI. A.D. 388.

IN THIS LETTER to his sister S. Ambrose relates the sequel of the affair referred to in the preceding one. That Letter failed to produce the effect which he had hoped for, and so he was driven to fulfil the threat with which he had ended it, and 'make the Emperor listen to him in the Church.' He gives his sister a full account of the sermon which he preached before the Emperor, and how he insisted on a promise that the matter should be quashed altogether, before he would celebrate the Eucharist, and how the Emperor at last gave way, and so all ended as he had wished.

THE BROTHER TO HIS SISTER.

1. YOU have kindly written me word, holy sister, that you are still anxious about me, because I told you of my own anxiety; this makes me wonder that you have not received the letter, in which I told you that tranquillity had been restored to me. Complaints had been made that a synagogue of the Jews had been burnt by the Christians, at the instigation of their Bishop, and also a conventicle of the Valentinians; and while I was at Aquileia a decree was issued that the synagogue should be rebuilt by the Bishop, and that the monks who had set fire to this building of the Valentinians should be punished. Wherefore, when I found that my personal endeavours were of little avail, I wrote and despatched a letter to the Emperor, and on his going to the Church, I delivered this discourse.

2. In the book of the Prophet it is written, Jer. i. 11. Take to thyself the rod of an almond tree; and with what intent the Lord said this to the prophet we ought to consider, for it was not written without a purpose, and we also read in the Pentateuch that the rod of Aaron the priest, Num. xvii. 8. budded after being long laid up. Now the rod seems to signify that prophetic or sacerdotal authority ought to be unswerving, and to exhort rather to what is useful than to what is pleasing.

3. And the reason why the prophet is bidden to take the rod of an almond is this, that the fruit of this tree has a bitter rind and hard shell, while its inside is juicy, and so in like manner the prophet should hold out what is hard and bitter, and not shrink from declaring painful things. So too with the priest: his teaching may seem bitter for a time to some, and, like Aaron's rod, may for a long while be laid up in the ears of dissemblers, yet afterwards, when it is thought to have withered, it puts forth buds.

4. Hence the Apostle says, 1 Cor. iv. 21. What will ye, shall I come unto you with a rod, or in love, and in the spirit of meekness. First he speaks of a rod, and as with the rod of an almond tree had smitten the wanderers, that he might afterwards comfort them 2 Cor. ii. 10. with the spirit of meekness. Just so did meekness restore the man whom the rod had driven from the Divine sacraments. To his disciple too he gave the same injunctions, 2 Tim. iv. 2. Reprove, beseech, rebuke. Here are two harsh terms and one gentle; but they are only harsh, that they may themselves be softened. For like as bitter food or drink becomes sweet to these bodies which are laden with excess of gall, and on the other hand sweet repasts are bitter to them, so also when the mind is wounded it languishes under the flattering touch of pleasure, but is healed again by the bitterness of correction.

5. Thus much let it suffice to have gathered from the lesson from the Prophets, let us next consider what that from the Gospel would teach us: S. Luke vii. 36–38. And one of the Pharisees desired the Lord Jesus that He would eat with him; and He went into the Pharisee's house and sat down to meat. And behold, a woman in the city, which was a sinner, when she knew that Jesus sat at meat in the Pharisee's house brought an alabaster box of ointment, and stood at His feet behind Him weeping. And then the passage was recited as far as the words, Thy faith hath saved thee, go in peace. How simple, I added, are the words of this Gospel lesson, how profound its counsels! Wherefore, seeing that it is spoken by the Is. ix. 6. great Counsellor, let us consider its depth.

6. Our Lord Jesus Christ believed that kindness has a greater power of constraining and inciting men to do what is right than fear; and that love avails more for correction than terror. And so, when He came on earth by the Virgin's womb, He first sent His free grace, forgiving our sins in baptism to make us more grateful to Him. Then if we will repay Him with such services as befit grateful men, He has declared by this example that He will give fresh gifts of grace to every man. Had He only remitted to us our first debt, He would have seemed cautious rather than merciful, more heedful of our amendment than munificent in His rewards. To allure is merely the cunning of a narrow mind, but it is befitting to God that those whom He has invited by grace He should lead forward by the increase of that grace. And so He first bestows on us His gifts in baptism, and afterwards if we serve him faithfully gives more abundantly. And so the benefits of Christ are both the incentives and the rewards of virtue.

7. Let no man be alarmed at the word creditor. We were indeed under an unforgiving creditor, who could not be satisfied by anything less than the death of his debtor; then the Lord Jesus came and found us burthened with a heavy debt. This debt no man could satisfy by his natural innocence; I had nothing of my own wherewith to purchase my freedom, and therefore He bestowed on me a new kind of acquittance; He made me debtor to Himself, seeing I had no means of discharging my debt. Now we became debtors not by nature but by our own fault; by our sins we contracted heavy debts, so that we who were free came under a bond; for he is a debtor who has received of his creditor's money. Now sin is from the devil, this is the money which belongs to the wicked one as his patrimony; for as virtues are the treasure of Christ, so crimes are the riches of the devil. He had brought the human race under the perpetual slavery of an inherited liability by that heavy debt which our improvident ancestor transmitted by inheritance to his posterity. But then the Lord Jesus came, He gave His life for the life of all, and shed His blood for the blood of all.

8. Thus we have changed our creditor, not discharged our debt, nay we may even say we have discharged it, for although it remains, our bond is cancelled, the Lord Jesus having Is. xlix. 9. said to the prisoners, Go forth; to them that are in darkness, Shew yourselves; your sins therefore are forgiven. Thus He has forgiven all, nor is there any one to whom He has not shewn mercy. For so it is written, that He has Col. ii. 13, 14. forgiven all trespasses; blotting out the hand-writing of the ordinances that was against us. Why then do we hold the bonds of others? why would we exact our claims from others when we have obtained remission of our own? He Who has shewn mercy to all requires of each of us that what he remembers to have been remitted to himself he should himself remit to others.

9. Beware lest you begin to incur heavier blame as a creditor than you did as a debtor; S. Matt. xviii. 23. et seq. as that servant in the Gospel to whom his Lord forgave all his debt began to exact from his fellow servant what he himself had not paid; wherefore his Lord was wroth, and exacted from him with the greatest severity what he had before remitted to him. Let us beware therefore lest the same evil befal us, lest by not remitting our debts we also be called on to pay what had been forgiven us, for so it is written in the words of the Lord Jesus, Ib. 35. So likewise shall My heavenly Father do also unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses. Let us then forgive small things to whom great have been forgiven, and understand that the more we forgive the more acceptable we shall be to God, for we are so much the more acceptable to God the more we have been forgiven.

10. Further, when the Pharisee was asked by our Lord, S. Luke vii. 42. Which of them loved him most, he answered, Ib. 43. I suppose that he to whom he forgave most. Whereupon the Lord said, Thou hast rightly judged. The Pharisees judgment is praised, but his affection is blamed. Of others he judges correctly, but what he believes of others, he does not believe in his own case. Thus you hear the Jew praising the discipline of the Church, praising its true graces, honouring its priests; but when you exhort him to believe he refuses to do so, and thus follows not himself what he praises in us. His eulogy then is not complete, though Christ has said to him, Thou hast rightly judged, for Cain also offered rightly, but did not divide rightly, wherefore God said unto him, Gen. iv. 7. If thou offer rightly, but divide not rightly, thou hast sinned; be still. And so this man offered rightly, because he judges that Christ, having forgiven Christians many sins, ought to be more earnestly loved by them; but he has not divided rightly, because he believes that He Who remitted the sins of men could possibly be ignorant of them.

11. And therefore He says to Simon, S. Luke vii. 44. Seest thou this woman? I entered into thine house, thou gavest Me no water for My feet, but she hath washed My feet with tears. We are all one body of Christ, the Head is God, and we are the members: some perhaps as the Prophets, may be the eyes; others the teeth, as the Apostles, who have filled our hearts with the food of the Evangelical preaching, and of whom it is written, Gen. xlix. 12. His eyes shall be red with wine, and his teeth white with milk. They are His hands who perform good works: His belly are they who bestow the strength of nourishment on the poor: Some too are His feet also, and would that I might be counted worthy to be even His heel. He then who pardons the very lowest their sins, pours water on the feet of Christ, and while he frees only the mean, yet washes the feet of Christ Himself.

12. He also pours water on the feet of Christ who cleanses his conscience from the pollution of sin; for Christ walks in the breast of each of us. Beware then lest your conscience be defiled, or you thus begin to stain the feet of Christ. Beware lest He encounter the thorn of wickedness within you, whereby His heel as He walks in you may be wounded. The reason why the Pharisee did not pour water on the feet of Christ was because his soul was not clean from the stain of wickedness. How could he cleanse his conscience, who had not received that water which Christ gives? But the Church has that water, and the Church has tears, the waters of Baptism and the tears of penitence. For faith, which mourns for former sins, is also wont to avoid fresh ones, wherefore Simon the Pharisee as he had no water so neither had he tears. For how could he have them, who did no penance? but as he believed not in Christ so neither had he tears. Had he had them, he would have washed his eyes that he might see Christ, Whom as yet, when he first sat down, he saw not. For had he seen Him, he would not have doubted of His power.

13. Nor had the Pharisee hair, in that he knew not the Nazarite; but the Church had hair, and she sought for the Nazarite. Hairs are considered a superfluous part of the body, but if they are anointed they send forth a good smell, and are an ornament to the head, but if not anointed with oil they grow heavy. So likewise riches are a burthen, if you know not how to use them, if you sprinkle them not with the odours of Christ. But if you feed the poor, if you wash and cleanse their filth, their wounds, you have truly wiped the feet of Christ.

14. S. Luke vii. 45. Thou gavest Me no kiss, but this woman, since the time I came in, hath not ceased to kiss My feet. A kiss is the sign of love. But how could the Jew possess this, who knew not peace, who received not peace from Christ when He said, S. John xiv. 27. Peace I leave with you, My peace I give unto you? This kiss belongs then not to the Synagogue but to the Church, to her who looked for Him, who loved Him, who said, Cant. i. 2. Let Him kiss me with the kisses of His mouth. For the ardour of that lingering desire, which had grown with waiting for the Lord's coming, she sought slowly to quench by His kiss, and to satisfy her thirst by this gift. Wherefore the holy Prophet says, Ps. li. 17. Thou shalt open my lips, and my mouth shall shew Thy praise. He then who praises the Lord Jesus kisses Him; and he who praises surely believes in Him. Thus David Himself says, Ib. cxvi. 10. I believed, and therefore have I spoken; and before, Ib. lxxi. 8. Let my mouth be filled with Thy praise, and let me sing of Thy glory.

15. Concerning the gift of special grace the same Scripture also teaches thee that he who receives the Spirit kisses Christ, for the holy Prophet says, Ib. cxix. 131. I opened my mouth, and drew in the spirit[206]. He then kisses Christ, who confesses Him; Rom. x. 10. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. He kisses the feet of Christ, who, reading the Gospel, recognizes the acts of the Lord Jesus, and admires them with pious affection; thus religiously kissing, as it were, the Lord's steps as He walks. We kiss Christ then with the kiss of Communion; S. Matt. xxiv. 15. Whoso readeth let him understand.

16. But how can the Jew have this kiss? For as he believed not in His Advent, so neither did he believe in His Passion, for how can that man believe that He suffered, who believes not that He came? Hence the Pharisee had no kiss save haply that of the traitor Judas. But neither had Judas this kiss, and therefore when he would have shewn to the Jews that kiss which was the concerted sign of his betrayal, the Lord says to him: S. Luke xxii. 48. Judas, betrayest thou the Son of man with a kiss? that is, 'Thou offerest a kiss, though thou hast not the love that the kiss should express, thou offerest a kiss who art ignorant of the mystical meaning[207] of the kiss.' What is required is not the kiss of the lips, but of the heart and mind.

17. But you will say that he kissed the Lord. True it is he kissed Him with his lips, and this kiss the Jewish people has, wherefore it is said, S. Matt. xv. 8. This people honoureth Me with their lips, but their heart is far from Me. Wherefore he has not the kiss who has not faith and charity; for by a kiss is conveyed the force of love. Where love is not, nor faith, nor charity, how can there be any sweetness in kisses?

18. Now the Church ceases not to kiss the feet of Christ, and therefore in the Cant. i. 1. Song of songs she asks not for one but many kisses; like holy Mary she is attentive to all His discourses, she receives all His words, when the Gospel is read, or the Prophets; she S. Luke ii. 51. keeps all His sayings in her heart. The Church, alone, then, as being the spouse, has kisses, for a kiss is, as it were, the pledge of marriage and the privilege of wedlock. How can the Jew have kisses who believes not in the Spouse, who knows not that He is already come?

19. Nor is it kisses alone that he lacks, but oil also, wherewith to anoint the feet of Christ, for if he had had oil he would before now have bowed down his neck. For Moses says, Exod. xxxiv. 9. It is a stiff-necked people; and the Lord says that S. Luke x. 31, 32. the priest and levite passed by on the other side, nor did either of these pour oil and wine into the wounds of him who had been wounded by robbers; had they possessed this oil they would have poured it into their own wounds. But Isaiah says, Is. i. 6. They cannot apply ointment nor oil nor bandage.

20. But the Church has oil wherewith she dresses the wounds of her children, that the hardness of the wound may not sink inwards; she has oil, which she has received secretly. With this oil Asher has washed his feet, as it is written, Deut. xxxiii. 24. A blessed son is Asher; and he shall be acceptable to his brethren, dip his foot in oil. With this oil therefore the Church anoints the necks of her children, that they may receive the yoke of Christ; with this oil she has anointed the martyrs to purify them from the dust of this world; with this oil she has anointed confessors, that so they might not yield to labour, or sink down through weariness, or be overwhelmed by the waves of this world; it is for the purpose of refreshing them with spiritual oil that she has thus anointed them.

21. The Synagogue possesses not this oil, for she hath not the olive, Gen. viii. 11. she did not recognize that dove which brought back the olive branch after the deluge. This same dove afterwards descended, when Christ was being baptized, and abode upon Him, as John testifies in the Gospel, saying, S. John i. 32. I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon Him. But how could he see the dove, who saw Him not upon whom the Spirit descended as a dove?

22. So then the Church both washes the feet of Christ, and wipes them with her hair, and anoints them with oil, and pours ointment upon them, in that she not only tends the wounded and comforts the weary, but also sprinkles over them the sweet odours of grace. Nor is it upon the rich and powerful only that she sheds this grace, but on men of low birth also, she weighs all in an equal balance, she receives all in the same bosom, and cherishes them in the same lap.

23. Christ died once, and was buried once, nevertheless He daily desires that ointment should be poured upon His feet. Now what are these feet of Christ whereon we pour ointment? The feet of Christ are they of whom He saith Himself, S. Matt. xxv. 40. Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me. These feet that woman in the Gospel tends[208], and washes with her tears, when the lowest have their sins remitted, their faults washed away, their pardon granted. These feet he kisses who loves even the lowest of the holy congregation. These feet he anoints with ointment, who imparts even to the weaker brethren the graces of His meekness. In these the martyrs, in these the Apostles, in these the Lord Jesus Himself declares that He is honoured.

24. Thou seest what instruction the Lord imparts, how by His example He stimulates thee to devotion; for He instructs by His censure. And He thus accuses the Jews, Micah vi. 3, 4. O My people, what have I done unto thee, and wherein have I wearied thee? testify against Me. For I brought thee up out of the land of Egypt, and redeemed thee out of the house of servants; adding, and I sent before thee Moses, Aaron, and Miriam. Ib. 5. and Num. xxiii. 2. Remember what Balak devised against thee, he, that is, who sought the aid of enchantments, but I suffered him not to hurt thee. Truly thou wert oppressed while sojourning in foreign lands, thou wert laden with heavy burthens: I sent Moses Aaron and Miriam before thy face, and he who had spoiled the strangers was himself despoiled. Thou, who hadst lost thine own goods gainedst others, thou wert delivered from the enemies that surrounded thee, Exod. xiv. 29. and in the midst of the waters thou sawest in safety the death of thine enemies, for the same wave which had separated and carried thee forward flowed back again and drowned the Egyptians. When thou wert in want of food while journeying through the wilderness, did I not Ib. xvi. 4. rain bread from heaven for thee, and scatter food around thee, whereon thou wentest? Did I not subdue all thy enemies and bring thee into the region of Num. xiii. 24. the cluster of grapes? Did I not deliver up to thee Ib. xxi. 24. Sihon (which means ‘proud’) king of the Amorites (that is, chief of them that provoked thee); did I not also Joshua viii. 23. deliver to thee alive the king of Ai, whom, subject to the sentence of the ancient curse, Ib. 29. thou nailedst to the wood and hangedst upon a tree? What shall I say of the Josh. x. 26. slaughter of the hosts of the five kings, who strove to exclude thee from the promised land? Micah vi. 8. And what doth the Lord require of thee, o man, for all these things, but to do justly and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?

25. And to king David himself, that meek and holy man, what was His expostulation by the prophet Nathan? I chose thee, He says, the youngest among thy brethren; I filled thee with the spirit of meekness; by the hand of Samuel, in whom was My Spirit and My Name, 2 Sam. xii. 7. I anointed thee king. And from an exile I made thee a conqueror, taking out of the way that former king whom an evil spirit instigated to persecute the priests of the Lord. Upon thy throne I set one of thy seed not so much as an heir as a colleague. I made even strangers subject to thee, that they who resisted might serve thee, and wilt thou deliver My servants into the hands of My enemies, wilt thou take away that which was My servant's, whereby both thou wilt be branded with sin, and My adversaries will have whereof to glory?

26. Seeing therefore, O Emperor, (for I will now not only discourse of you but address myself to you) how severe the Lord's censures are wont to be, you must take care, in proportion as you become more illustrious, to submit so much the more humbly to your Maker. For it is written: When the Lord thy God shall have brought thee into a foreign land, and thou shalt eat the fruits of others, say not, Deut. ix. 4. 'By my own strength and righteousness I obtained these things,' but, 'The Lord God gave them to me, Christ in His mercy conferred them on me,' and therefore by loving His body, that is, the Church, pour water on His feet and kiss His feet; S. John xii. 5. thus shalt thou not only absolve those who have been taken in sin, but in giving to them peace you will bring them into concord and restore to them rest. Pour ointment on His feet, that the whole house wherein Christ sits at meat may be filled with the odour of thy ointment, and let all who sit at meat with Him rejoice in thy fragrance; that is to say, pay such regard even to the lowest, that in their absolution the Angels may rejoice, S. Luke xv. 10. as they do over one sinner that repenteth, the Apostles may be glad, the Prophets may exult. For 1 Cor. xii. 21. the eye cannot say unto the hand,

I have no need of thee, nor the head to the feet, I have no need of you. Since therefore each member is necessary, do thou protect the whole body of the Lord Jesus, that He also of His divine mercy may protect thy kingdom.

27. On my coming down he says to me, ‘You have been preaching at me to-day.’ I replied that in my discourse I had his benefit in view. He then said, ‘It is true, I did make too harsh a decree concerning the reparation of the synagogue by the Bishop, but this has been rectified. As for the monks, they commit many crimes.’ Then Timasius, one of the Generals-in-chief[209], began to be very vehement against the monks. I replied to him, ‘With the Emperor I deal as is fitting, because I know that he fears God, but with you, who speak so rudely, I shall deal differently.’

28. After standing for some time, I said to the Emperor, ‘Enable me to offer for you with a safe conscience, set my mind at rest.’ The Emperor sat still, and nodded, but did not promise in plain words; then, seeing that I still remained standing, he said that he would amend the order. I said at once that he must quash the whole enquiry, for fear the Count[210] should make it an opportunity for inflicting wrong on the Christians. He promised that it should be done. I said to him, ‘I act on your promise,’ and repeated the words again. ‘Do so’ said he. Then I went to the altar; but I would not have gone, if he had not given me his distinct promise. And indeed so great was the grace attending the oblation, that I myself was sensible that this favour he had granted was very acceptable to our God, and that the divine Presence had not been withheld. Then all was done as I wished.

THE LETTER OF POPE SIRICIUS TO THE CHURCH OF MILAN. A.D. 389.

THE Letter of Siricius was addressed to the Church of Milan to inform them of the sentence of excommunication passed against Jovinian and his followers. Jovinian had been a monk, but had abandoned the ascetic life and rushed into extremes of self-indulgence: there is a good description of him in Tillemont, (Vie de S. Ambr. 63, 64,) who calls him ‘cet Epicure des Chrétiens.’ The false doctrines with which he ‘barked at the true doctrines of the Church’ are stated in this Letter and in the reply of the Synod of the Church of Milan which follows. Jovinian was answered by S. Jerome, who writes against him with much vehemence.

SIRICIUS TO THE CHURCH OF MILAN.

1. I WOULD fain always, beloved brethren, send you tidings of joys, sincere as you are in love and peace, so that by means of the mutual interchange of letters we might be pleased by the tidings of your welfare[211]. Our ancient Adversary however[212] does not suffer us to be free from his attacks, he who is a liar from the beginning, the enemy of truth, envious of man, in order to deceive whom he first deceived himself, the adversary of chastity, the teacher of sensuality, who is fed by cruelty, punished by abstinence, who hates fasts, asserting, as his followers also give out, that they are superfluous, having no hope of things to come, obnoxious to the censure of the Apostle, 1 Cor. xv. 32. Let us eat and drink for to-morrow we die.

2. O miserable boldness, O craft of a desperate mind! Already was this unknown language of heresy spreading through the Church like a cancer, seeking to fill the breast, and plunge the whole man in destruction: and unless the Lord of Sabaoth had broken through the snare which they had laid, the public exhibition of so much evil and hypocrisy would have led to ruin the hearts of many simple ones, for the human mind is easily drawn aside towards evil, choosing rather to fly through open space, than to travel with pain along the narrow way.

3. Wherefore it was very necessary, most dearly beloved, to commend what has been done here to your notice and consideration, lest through the ignorance of any priest, the Church might be infected by the contagion of these most wicked men who are breaking in upon it under a religious pretext, as it is written and the Lord has said, S. Matt. vii. 15, 16. Many come to you in sheeps' clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves; ye shall know them by their fruits.

These are they who under a mean garb boast themselves as Christians, that walking under the semblance of piety they may enter the house of prayer and utter the words of wily disputation, Ps. xi. 2. that they may privily shoot at them which are true of heart, and, seducing them from Catholic truth, may draw them over, after the example of Satan, to the madness of their own doctrines, beguiling the simplicity of the flock.

4. And indeed from the times of the Apostles up to now we have heard and known by experience of many malignant heresies, but the sacred truth of the Church has never been assailed by the barking of such dogs as those who have now suddenly broken in upon us, with the doctrines of unbelief fully sprouted, enemies of the faith; who by the fruit of their works have betrayed whose disciples they are. For while other heretics misunderstanding single points have proposed to bear away and abstract from the Divine system of teaching, these men, S. Matt. xxii. 12. not having on a wedding garment, wound the Catholics, perverting, as I have said, the continuity of the New and Old Testament, and interpreting it in a diabolical spirit, have by their alluring and false arguments already begun to ruin some Christians, and to make them associates of their madness, not keeping within themselves the poison of their iniquity: but some of their chosen ones have betrayed their blasphemies by writing rash discourse, which the rage of a desperate mind has led them openly to publish, favouring, as it does, the cause of the Heathens.

5. But of their madness I suddenly received intelligence by means of a shocking writing which certain faithful Christians, men of high rank, and signal piety, caused to be conveyed to me, unworthy as I am, in order that the opposition of these men to the Divine Law might be detected by the discernment of the Clergy and repressed by a spiritual sentence. Assuredly we receive without scorn the vows of those marriages which we assist at with the veil[213], but virgins, for whose existence marriage is necessary, as being devoted to God, we honour more highly.

6. Having therefore held an assembly of my clergy it became clear that their sentiments were contrary to our doctrine, that is, to the Christian law. Therefore, following the Apostolic precept, we, seeing that they were Gal. i. 8. preaching another Gospel than that which we received, have excommunicated them. Know therefore that it was the unanimous sentence of us all, as well of the presbyters and deacons as of the other clergy, that Jovinian, Auxentius, Genialis, Germinator, Felix, Prontinus[214], Martianus, Januarius, and Ingeniosus, who were discovered to be the promoters of the new heresy and blasphemy, should be condemned by the Divine sentence and our judgment, and remain in perpetual exclusion from the Church.

7. Nothing doubting that your Holiness will observe the aforesaid decree, I have sent you this Epistle by my brethren and fellow-priests, Crescens, Leopardus and Alexander, that they, with a fervent spirit, may perform a religious and faithful service.

LETTER XLII. A.D. 389.

IN THIS, THEIR reply to Siricius, drawn up in all probability by S. Ambrose himself, the Council of Milan thank him for his care, and announce that they have followed his example and condemned Jovinian and his followers in the same way. They dwell upon his errors, particularly on his disparagement of virginity, on his denial of the virginity of our Lord's Mother, on his contempt of widowhood, and of fasting, and condemn him as a follower of Manes. They argue in especial detail against his argument with regard to the Virgin Mary, which differs from that of Helvidius and other assailants of the ἀεὶ πάρθενος.

TO THEIR LORD, THEIR DEARLY BELOVED BROTHER, POPE SIRICIUS, AMBROSE, SABINUS, BASSANIUS, AND THE REST SEND GREETING.

1. IN your Holiness' Letter we recognized the vigilance of a good shepherd, for you faithfully guard the door which has been entrusted to you, and with pious solicitude watch over the fold of Christ, being worthy to be heard and followed by the sheep of the Lord. Knowing therefore the lambs of Christ, you will easily discover the wolves, and meet them as a wary shepherd, so as to keep them from scattering the Lord's flock by their unbelieving life and dismal barking.

2. We praise you for this, our Lord and brother dearly beloved, and join in cordial commendations of it. Nor are we surprised that the Lord's flock was terrified at the rage of wolves in whom they recognized not the voice of Christ. For it is a savage barking to shew no reverence to virginity, observe no rule of chastity, to seek to place every thing on a level, to abolish the different degrees of merit, and to introduce a certain meagreness in heavenly rewards, as if Christ had only one palm to bestow, and there was no copious diversity in His rewards.

3. They pretend that they are giving honour to marriage. But what praise can rightly be given to marriage if no distinction is paid to virginity? We do not deny that marriage was hallowed by Christ, for the Divine words say, S. Matt. xix. 5. And they twain shall be one flesh, and one spirit, but our birth precedes our calling, and the mystery of the Divine operation is much more excellent than the remedy of human frailty. A good wife is deservedly praised, but a pious virgin is more properly preferred, for the Apostle says, 1 Cor. vii. 38. He that giveth his virgin in marriage doeth well, but he that giveth her not in marriage doeth better; Ib. 34. for the one careth for the things of the Lord, the other for the things of the world. The one is bound by the chains of marriage, the other is free from chains; the one is under the Law, the other under Grace. Marriage is good, for thereby the means of continuing the human race has been devised, but virginity is better, for thereby the heritage of the heavenly kingdom is regained, and the mode of attaining to heavenly rewards discovered. By a woman care entered the world; by a virgin salvation was brought to pass. Lastly, Christ chose virginity as His own special gift, and displayed the grace of chastity, thus making an exhibition of that in His own person which in His Mother He had made the object of His choice.

4. How great is the madness of their dismal barkings, that the same persons should say that Christ could not be born of a virgin, and yet assert that women, after having given birth to human pledges, remain virgins? Does Christ grant to others what, as they assert, He could not grant to Himself? But He, although He took on Him our flesh, although He was made man that He might redeem man, and recal him from death, still, as being God, came upon earth in an extraordinary way, that as He had said, Isa. xliii. 19. Behold I make all things new, so also He might be born of an immaculate virgin, and be believed to be, as it is written, S. Matt. i. 23. God with us. But from their perverse ways they are induced to say 'She was a virgin when she conceived, but not a virgin when she brought forth.' Could she then conceive as a virgin, and yet not be able to bring forth as a virgin, when conception always precedes, and birth follows?

5. But if they will not believe the doctrines of the Clergy, let them believe the oracles of Christ, let them believe the admonitions of Angels who say, S. Luke i. 37. For with God nothing shall be impossible. Let them give credit to the Creed of the Apostles, which the Roman Church has always kept and preserved undefiled. Mary heard the voice of the Angel, and she who before had said Ib. 34. How shall this be? not asking from want of faith in the mode of generation, afterwards replied, Ib. 38. Behold the handmaid of the Lord, be it unto me according to thy word. This is the virgin who conceived, this the virgin who brought forth a Son. For thus it is written, Behold a Virgin shall conceive and bear a Son; declaring not only that she should conceive as a virgin, but also that she bring forth as a virgin.

6. But what is that Ezek. xliv. 1, 2. gate of the sanctuary, that outward gate which looketh towards the East, which remains shut, and no man, it is said, shall enter in by it but the Lord, the God of Israel. Is not Mary this gate, by whom the Saviour entered into the world? This is the gate of righteousness, as He Himself said, S. Matt. iii. 15. Suffer us to fulfil all righteousness. Blessed Mary is the gate, whereof it is written that Ezek. xliv. 2. the Lord hath entered in by it, therefore it shall be shut after birth; for as a virgin she both conceived and brought forth.

7. But why should it be incredible that Mary, contrary to the usage of natural birth, should bring forth and yet remain a virgin; when contrary to the usage of nature, Ps. cxiv. 3. the sea saw and fled, and the floods of Jordan retired to their source. It should not exceed our belief that a virgin should bring forth, when we read that Exod. xvii. 6. a rock poured forth water, Ib. xiv. 22. and the waves of the sea were gathered up like a wall. Nor need it, again, exceed our belief that a man should be born of a virgin, Numb. xx. 11. when a running stream gushed forth from the rock, 2 Kings vi. 6. when iron swam upon the waters, S. Matt. xiv. 26. and a man walked upon them. If therefore the waves carried a man, could not a virgin bring forth a man? But what man? Him of Whom we read, Is. xix. 20, 21. The Lord shall send them a Man Who shall deliver them; and the Lord shall be known to Egypt. Wherefore in the old Testament Exod. xv. 20. a Hebrew virgin led the people through the sea, in the New Testament a royal virgin was elected to be a heavenly abode for our salvation.

8. But what more? let us also subjoin the praises of widowhood, since in the Gospel next after that most illustrious birth from a virgin, comes the widow Anna; she who S. Luke ii. 36, 37. had lived with an husband seven years from her virginity; and she was a widow of about fourscore and four years, which departed not from the temple, but served with fastings and prayers night and day.

9. And fitting it is that these men should despise widowhood, which is wont to keep fasts, for they regret that they should have been mortified by these for any time, and avenge the wrong they inflicted on themselves, and by daily banquets and habits of luxury seek to ward off the pain of abstinence. They do nothing more rightly than in thus condemning themselves out of their own mouth.

10. But they even fear lest their former fasting should be reckoned against them. Let them choose whichever they like: if they ever fasted, let them repent of their good work, if never, let them confess their own intemperance and luxury. And so they assert that Paul was a teacher of excess. But who can be a teacher of temperance if he was a teacher of excess, 1 Cor. ix. 27. who chastised his body and brought it into subjection, and recorded his performance of the service he owed to Christ 2 Cor. vi. 5. by many fastings; and this not for the purpose of praising himself and his doings, but that he might teach us, what example to follow. Did he then teach excess who said, Col. ii. 20. sqq. Why, as though living in the world, are ye subject to ordinances? Touch not, taste not, handle not, which all are to perish with the using; who also says, Not in indulgence of the body, not in any honour to the satisfying and love of the flesh, not in the lusts of error; but in the Spirit by Whom we are renewed.

11. If what the Apostle has said is not enough, let them hear the Prophet saying, Ps. lxix. 10. I chastened myself with fasting. He therefore who fasts not is uncovered and naked and exposed to wounds. And if Adam had clothed himself with fasting Gen. iii. 7. he would not have been found to be naked. Jonah iii. 5. Nineveh delivered itself from death by fasting. And the Lord Himself says, S. Matt. xvii. 21. This kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting.

12. But why need we say more to our master and teacher? seeing that these persons have now paid the worthy price of their perfidy, who have on this account come even hither, that no place might remain where they were not condemned; who have proved themselves to be truly Manichees, by not believing that He came forth from a virgin. What madness is this, almost equal to that of the modern Jews? If He is not believed so to have come, neither is He believed to have taken upon Him our flesh, therefore He was seen only in figure, He was crucified only in figure. But He was crucified for us in truth, He is in truth our Redeemer.

13. He is a Manichee who denies the truth, who denies that Christ came in the flesh; and therefore the remission of sins is not their's; but it is the impiety of the Manichees which both the most merciful Emperor has abhorred[215], and all who saw them have fled from as a plague. Witnesses thereof are our brethren and fellow-presbyters, Crescens, Leopardus, and Alexander, fervent in the Holy Spirit, by whose means they have been exposed to common execration, and driven as fugitives from the city of Milan.

14. Wherefore you are to know that Jovinian, Auxentius, Germinator, Felix, Plotinus, Genialis, Martianus, Januarius and Ingeniosus, whom your Holiness has condemned, have also, in accordance with your judgment, been condemned by ourselves.

May our Almighty God keep you in safety and prosperity, Lord and brother most beloved.

LETTER XLIII.

THIS LETTER IS a reply to a question from Horontianus, why man, the highest work of God's creation, was made the last. S. Ambrose brings forward various analogies to shew that the last is first, and each with an enthusiastic and poetical description of man's greatness and of his dominion over the other works of creation.

AMBROSE TO HORONTIANUS.

1. You have intimated to me your surprise at finding in my Treatise on the Gen. i. 16. Six days of Creation, that, while you found both the Sacred Narrative and the tenor of my discourse assigning greater gifts to man than to any other creature in the earth, still that the land and the waters brought forth all flying and creeping things and things in the waters before him for whose sake they were all created: and you ask me the reason of this, which Moses was silent about, and I did not venture to touch upon.

2. And perhaps that spokesman of the Divine Oracles purposely kept silence, lest he should seem to render himself the judge and counsellor of the Divine ordinances; for to give utterance to that with which he was inspired by the Spirit of God is one thing, to interpret the will of God is another. I am of opinion however that we, not as speaking in God's Name, but as gathering up scattered principles of reason from human usage, may be able, from the way in which God has disposed other things for man's use, to come to the conclusion that it was fitting for man to be the last work of creation.

3. For he who sets out a banquet, S. Luke xiv. 16. like that rich man in the Gospel, (for we must compare Divine things with each other the better to draw our conclusion,) prepares every thing first, kills his oxen and fatlings, and then bids his friends to supper. The more trivial things therefore are prepared in the first place, and then he who is worthy of honour is invited. Hence the Lord also first provided for the food of man all other animals, and then invited to the feast man himself, as His friend: and truly His friend, seeing that he was partaker of the Divine Charity and heir of His Glory. To man himself it is that He says: S. Matt. xxii. 12. Friend, how camest thou in hither? So then all things that precede are to minister to the need of the friend, and it is the friend who is invited last.

4. Take another instance. What is the world but a sort of arena of continual strife? Wherefore also in the Apocalypse the Lord says, Rev. ii. 10. To him that overcometh will I give a crown of life; and Paul says, 2 Tim. iv. 7. I have fought a good fight; and in another place, Ib. ii. 5. No man is crowned except he strive lawfully. He who institutes this combat is Almighty God. Now he who in this world offers a combat, does he not first provide all things which are necessary thereto, and prepare the chaplets of victory before he summons the athletics to contend for the prize; and all this that the conqueror may not suffer delay, but retire from the contest crowned with his reward? Now the rewards of man are the fruits of the earth and the lights of heaven; the former for the use of this present life, the latter for the hope of life eternal.

5. As a wrestler therefore he enters the lists last of all; he raises his eyes to heaven, he sees that even the heavenly Rom. viii. 20. creation was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope. He sees that the whole creation groaneth in pain together, waiting for redemption. He sees that labour awaits us all. He raises his eyes, he sees the circlets of lights, he surveys the orbs of the moon and stars: Dan. xii. 3. For the just, who overcome, shall be as the stars in heaven. And he chastises his body, that it may not be his enemy in the combat, he anoints it with the oil of mercy, he exercises it with daily trials of virtue, he smears himself with dust, he runs to the goal of the course but 1 Cor. ix. 26. not as uncertainly, he aims his blows, he darts forth his arms, but not into empty space, he strikes the adversary whom he sees not, for he has respect to Him alone to Whom all enemies give way, even those who are invisible, in Whose Name the powers of the air were turned aside. It is he therefore who poises the blow, but it is Christ Who strikes, it is he who lifts up his heel, but Christ Who directs it to the ground. Lastly, although Paul saw not those whom he struck, he was not as one that beateth the air, because by the preaching of Christ he wounded those evil spirits which assaulted him. Rightly therefore did man, for whom a race was prepared, enter the course last, that he might be preceded by heaven which was to be, as it were, his reward.

6. But we wrestle not only Eph. vi. 12. against spiritualities of wickedness in high places, but also against flesh and blood. We wrestle with satiety, with the very fruits of the earth, with wine, Gen. ix. 21. by which even a righteous man was made drunk, and the whole people of the Jews overthrown; we wrestle with wild animals, with the fowls of the air; for our flesh, if pampered by these, cannot be brought to subjection; we wrestle 2 Cor. xi. 26. with perils of the way, with perils of waters, as Paul says; we wrestle with rods of the wood, Acts xvi. 22. those rods with which the Apostles were beaten. You see how severe are our combats. Thus the earth is man’s trial-ground, heaven is his crown; and fitting therefore it was that as a friend, what was to minister to his wants should precede him, as a combatant, his reward.

7. Take another illustration. In all things the beginning and the ending are most excellent. If you look upon a house, it is the foundation and the roof which are more considerable than the other parts, if you look upon a field it is the sowing and the harvest, the planting and the vintage. How sweet are the grafts of trees, how pleasant are the fruits! In the same manner also was the heaven created first, and man last, as a kind of heavenly creature upon earth. For although in body he is compared with the beasts, in mind he is numbered among the inhabitants of heaven; for 1 Cor. xv. 49. Gen. i. 27. as we have borne the image of the earthy; we shall also bear the image of the heavenly. How should he not be heavenly, who is made after the image and likeness of God?

8. Rightly therefore in the creation of the world the heaven is both first and last, wherein is that which is beyond heaven, even the God of heaven. And of man is rather to be understood the text, Is. lxvi. 1. Heaven is my throne, for God does not sit above the element, but in the heart of man. Wherefore the Lord also says, S. John xiv. 23. We will come unto Him, and make our abode with Him. Heaven therefore is the first work in the creation of the world, and man the last.

9. Heaven is of the world, man above the world; for the former is a portion of the world, the latter is an inhabitant of Paradise, and the possession of Christ. Heaven is thought to be undecaying, yet it passes away; man is deemed to be incorruptible, yet he puts on incorruption; the fashion of the first perishes, the latter rises again as being immortal; yet the hands of the Lord, according to the authority of Scripture, formed them both. For as we read of the heavens, Ps. cii. 25. And the heavens are the work of Thy hands; so also man says, Ib. cxix. 73. Thy hands have made me and fashioned me; and again, Ps. xix. 1. The heavens declare the glory of God. And as the heaven is resplendent with stars, so are men S. Matt. v. 16. bright with the light of good works, for their works shine before their Father Which is in heaven. The former is the firmament of heaven which is on high, and the latter firmament is not unlike to it, whereof it is said, Ib. xvi. 18. Upon this rock will I build My Church; the one is the firmament of the elements, the other of virtues, and the last is more excellent; Deut. xxxii. 13.

they sucked honey out of the firm rock, for the Rock is the flesh 1 Cor. x. 4. of Christ, which redeemed the heaven and the whole world.

10. Why should I add further, carrying you, as it were, through the whole course, that God made man 2 S. Pet. i. 4. partaker of the Divine nature, as we read in the Epistle of Peter? Whence one says not improperly, We also are His offspring, for He made us akin to Himself, and we are of a rational nature, that we might seek for that Godhead Acts xvii. 27, 28. Which is not far from each one of us, in Whom we live and move and have our being.

11. Having therefore conferred on man that which is the greatest of graces, Gen. i. 28. He granted to him as to that creature who was dearest and very nearest to Him, all the things which are in this world, that he might want for nothing which is necessary either for life or for a good life, some of which things were to be supplied by the abundance of earthly plenty to minister pleasure, others again by the knowledge of heavenly secrets, to arouse man's mind by the love and desire of that discipline which should enable us to reach the summit of the Divine mysteries. Both these therefore are most excellent gifts, both to have all the riches of the world subject to him, all flying and creeping things and fishes, and, as being lord of the elements, the use of the sea, and without toil or want, after the model and likeness of his adorable Creator, to abound in all things, living in the greatest plenty, and also to open paths for himself, and make progress, so as to ascend to the royal abode of heaven.

12. You will easily discover that the traveller along this arduous path is the man, who has been so fashioned in purpose of heart and will, as to be, as far as possible, estranged from his body, as not to enter into any fellowship with vice, nor suffer himself to be smoothed down by the words of flatterers: one who does not, when riding on the chariot of prosperity, despise the humble, shun sorrow, discard and disparage the praises of the holy, nor, by desire of glory or of wealth, grasped at too prematurely, exhaust all the ardour of hope; one whose mind is not bowed down by sadness nor broken by injury, which is not harassed by suspicion, nor excited by lust, whom the passions of the body do not overcome, whom no desire of vanities or charms of pleasure disquiet and disturb. Add to all this the virtues of chastity, soberness and temperance; let him be able easily to curb the irregular sallies of light passion, set bounds to his pleasures and desires, clear up ambiguity by an equitable judgment, by tranquillity of mind settle what is doubtful, and with all the strifes of the mind and body reconciled, so to speak, preserve in a just balance the concord of the exterior and interior man unimpaired, stilling them as they lie within his own breast, while, should he be called to it, no evil counsellor is able to turn him away from the crown of suffering, such a man surely will be adopted not only as a friend but a son by the Father, that he may obtain the riches of His glory and inheritance.

13. Rightly therefore did he come last, being, as it were, the end of nature, formed to righteousness, and the arbiter of right among other creatures. And, if we may employ the illustration, as among men Rom. x. 4. Christ is the end of the Law for righteousness to every one that believeth, so are we as beasts in the sight of the Lord, for thus says the Prophet, Ps. lxxiii. 21. I became as a beast before Thee. Yet what comparison is there between the two, when He has redeemed those who were ready to perish, and we put them to death, He calls slaves to liberty and we inflict bondage on the free? Ps. lxxxix. 9. But who is like God?

14. Man however came forth the last of all created things, in form comely, in mind lofty, to be admired by all creatures, having in him, after the image of the eternal God, an invisible intelligence[217] clothed in human form. This is that intelligence or power of the soul which claims to itself, as the ruling principle, authority over the soul and body. This it is that all other living creatures dread although they see it not, just as we fear God Whom we see not, and fear Him only the more because we see Him not.

15. For, if we may presume to speak of ourselves Gen. i. 26. after His image and likeness, as Scripture says, in the same way as He is established in the fulness of His Majesty, and sees all things, heaven, air, earth and sea, embracing the universe and penetrating each part, so that nothing escapes Him, and there is nothing which does not consist in Him and depend on Him, and which is not full of Him, as He Himself says, Jer. xxiii. 24. I fill heaven and earth, saith the Lord, so likewise the mind of man sees all things and is not seen, but maintains its own essence invisible. By means of discipline forethought and perception she apprehends hidden things, dives into the secret of the deep, and those lurking-places which are spread throughout all lands, scrutinizing the nature of both elements, after the likeness of the great God Whom she imitates and follows, Whose image in minute portions is represented in each individual. She raises herself likewise into the air, and rising above the cloudy region, soars, in zeal for knowledge and thirst for wisdom, to the height of heaven, and resting there awhile, rapt in wonder at the heavenly constellations and charmed with their brightness, looks down upon the things of earth. Then she approaches also to Hesperus and Arcturus and those other stars which although Planets err not, and sees that they keep their course without stumbling, that course along which, in order the better to visit all regions, they seem to circuit and to wander. And thus with greater ardour she raises herself to the very bosom of the Father, wherein is the S. John i. 18. Only-Begotten Son of God Who declares the secrets of God, which in the time to come are to be revealed face to face. But even now He discloses them partly and in a figure to those whom He deems worthy, and at the same time sheds forth from the Spirit and from His own countenance floods of resplendent light, so that he who is illuminated thereby may say, Jer. xx. 9. But it was as a fire blazing in my bones and I am melted on all sides, and cannot stay. And David says, Ps. xvii. 2. Let my sentence come forth from Thy presence!

16. By this vigour of mind, therefore, to return to the point from whence I have digressed, whereby she subjects to herself things external, comprehends in her view things distant and separate from each other, and subdues the more powerful animals, she has inspired the rest with such reverence for herself, that they emulously obey her as their king, and pay ready attention to her voice. Nay, although they are irrational they still acknowledge reason, and fix within themselves that discipline which nature has not given them. Furthermore wild beasts, seeing man's gentleness, grow gentle under his rule. Often have they closed their jaws, recalled by the sound of the human voice. We see hares caught without injury by the harmless fangs of dogs, and even lions, if they hear man's voice, letting their prey escape: leopards also and bears urged on and recalled by the sound of his voice: the horses stimulated by the applause of man, and slackening their speed at his silence: nay, often, untouched by the lash they outstrip others that are scourged on, so much more powerfully does the scourge of the tongue incite them.

17. But what shall I say of the creatures' services to man? In order to please him the ram nourishes his fleece, and is plunged in the stream to enhance its beauty; sheep also crop the best herbage to distend with sweeter juice of milk their teeming udders; and, that they may offer to man their gifts, suffer the pangs of travail; bulls groan all day under the plough pressed down in the furrows; camels, besides the service of bearing burthens, suffer themselves to be shorn like rams, so that each animal contributes to man, as to a king, its service, and pays its annual tribute. The horse, exulting in such a rider, prances proudly, and curving his neck when his master mounts, gives his back to afford him a seat. And if you are still at a loss why man was made last, let the same animal teach us that this is to be deemed an honour not a slight. For he bears one who came after him, not despising but fearing him, and bearing him with pain to himself from place to place. In a moment of time man reaches far distant places and traverses long distances, transported sometimes on single horses, sometimes in triumphal chariots[218].

18. And since I have mentioned triumphal chariots it is needful that I should add thereto 2 Kings ii. 11. the chariot of Elijah which carried him through the air, and those of elephants, whereon man sits as conqueror, and governs although he be last and they precede him. And thus the steersman of a ship sits in the stern, and yet guides the whole ship. Whence I deem it not without a purpose that we are told in the Gospel S. Matt. viii. 24; S. Mark iv. 38. that the Lord Jesus was asleep in the stern of the ship; and that when awakened He commanded the wind and the sea, and laid the storm, shewing thereby that He came last because He came as the Pilot. Wherefore the Apostle says, 1 Cor. xv. 45, 46. The first man Adam was made a living soul, the last Adam was made a quickening Spirit. Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural, and afterwards that which is spiritual; and then he adds, Ib. 47. The first man is of the earth, earthy, the second man is from heaven, heavenly.

19. Rightly therefore is man the last, being as it were the consummation of the whole work, the cause of the world, for whose sake all things were made; the habitant, as it were, of all the elements, he lives among beasts, swims with fishes, soars above birds, converses with Angels, dwells upon the earth, and has his warfare in heaven, ploughs the sea, feeds upon air, tills the soil, is a voyager over the deep, a fisher in the floods, a fowler in the air, Rom. viii. 17. in heaven an heir even joint-heir with Christ. These things he does by his diligence.

20. Hear also things above man’s natural power. Exod. xiv. 29. Moses walked along the bottom of the sea, S. John xxi. 7. the Apostles upon the surface, Bel and the Dragon 36. Habbacuc flew without wings, Elijah conquered upon earth, and triumphed in heaven.

Farewell, my son; love me for I also love you.

LETTER XLIV. A.D. 389.

S. AMBROSE HERE first dwells on the distinction between God and the Universe which is His work. He then speaks of the six days of Creation, and of the mystical meaning of the numbers seven and eight, applying various passages of Scripture in which they occur, and bringing forward analogies from nature.

AMBROSE TO HORONTIANUS.

1. YOU have done well to mark the prophet's distinction between the Creator and His works, or rather, God's own distinction; for Moses wrote not of himself, but by inspiration and revelation, particularly in what relates to the formation of the world. For the One being impassible, the other liable to suffering, he has referred that which was impassible to God the Creator, but the passible part, without life or motion of its own, but receiving life and motion and form from its Creator, he has assigned to the world; and as this world, after its creation, ought not to be left without a ruler, or unprotected by any father, he therefore plainly describes the invisible God as the Ruler and Governor of this visible world. 2 Cor. iv. 18. For the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal.

2. He therefore states the creation of the world to have taken place in six days, not that God required time to form it in, for He can do in a moment what He wills, for Ps. cxlviii. 5. He spake the word, and they were created, but because things which are made, need some certain order, and order requires both time and number. And especially for the purpose of giving us a model for our works has He observed a certain number of days and certain seasons; for we also require time wherein to do aught perfectly, so as not to be precipitate in our counsels and works; nor to neglect their proper order. For when we read that God, as Scripture tells us, has Ps. civ. 24. made all things in wisdom, and by a certain counsel disposition and order, it is agreeable to reason that He should first have made the heavens which are the most beautiful; it is fitting also that we should first raise our eyes thither and conceive that it behoves us to aim at arriving thither, and that we should consider that it is to be preferred to all earthly habitations.

3. Wherefore in six days He created the world, Gen. ii. 2. on the seventh day He rested from His works. The number seven is good, and we treat it not according to the manner of Pythagoras and other philosophers, but according to the form and divisions of spiritual grace, Is. xi. 2. for the prophet Isaiah has set forth the seven principal virtues of the Holy Spirit. This sacred seven, like the venerable Trinity of the Father Son and Holy Ghost, knows neither time nor order, and is the origin of number, not bound by any of its laws. Wherefore as the heaven the earth and the sea were formed in honour of the eternal Trinity, and also the sun moon and stars, so in like manner we observe that it is according to this sevenfold circle of spiritual virtues, and this swiftly revolving orbit of Divine operation, that a certain sevenfold ministry of planets, whereby this world is illuminated, has been created. And their service is said to agree with the number of these stars, which are fixed, or, as they are called in Greek, ἀπλανεῖς[219]. The North has likewise received its Latin name (Septemtrio) from being irradiated by seven stars, upon the brightness of which as their guide pilots are said specially to fix their gaze.

4. And this peculiar property has come down from heaven to earth; for not to speak of the sevenfold fashion of the head, in the two eyes, the two ears and nostrils, and the mouth whereby we enjoy the taste of great sweetness, how wonderful is it that in the seventh month most men are conceived, and he that is afterwards born receives at that time the commencement of his vital course. But in the eighth month we perceive that by a natural law the season of bringing forth is suspended, and if some fatal compulsion has opened the barriers of the womb, the danger both of the mother and her offspring is nigh at hand.

5. But he who is born on the seventh day, although he be born well, is born to labour, but he who on the eighth day, obtains the mysteries of regeneration, is consecrated by grace, and called to the inheritance of the celestial kingdom. Great in the virtues of the Spirit is the grace of the holy number seven, but the same grace answers to the number seven, and consecrates the number eight. In the first we have the name, but in the latter the fruit, and therefore the grace of the Spirit, conferred on the eighth day, restored to Paradise those whom their own fault had banished.

6. The Old Testament too knew this number eight which in Latin we call the Octave, for the preacher says, Eccles. xi. 2. give a portion to seven and also to eight. The number seven belongs to the Old Testament, the number eight to the New, for then Christ rose, and the day of new salvation shone upon all. This is the day whereof the Prophet says, Ps. cxviii. 24. This is the day which the Lord hath made, let us rejoice and be glad in it: for on that day the brightness of full and perfect circumcision was infused into the hearts of men. On this account the Old Testament also gave a part to eight in the solemnity of circumcision. But this still lay in darkness: then came Mal. iv. 2. the Sun of righteousness, and by the consummation of His passion revealed His rays of light; these He unfolded to all, and opened the brightness of eternal life.

7. These then are that seven and eight whereof Hosea says that by that number he purchased to himself, and acquired the fulness of faith, for thus it is written, Hosea iii. 2. So I bought her to me for fifteen pieces of silver, and for an homer of barley, and an half homer of barley, and a measure of wine[220]. But in the former verses God had commanded him to hire to himself an harlot, and it is manifest that he did so, in that he has mentioned the price of her hiring. Now the fifteen pieces of silver are made up of the numbers seven and eight, wherefore they represent these numbers. And by the price of the two Testaments, that is, of perfect faith, the prophecy hath received the consummation of its faith and the Church her fulness. For by the first Testament the people of Israel were gained, by the second the heathen and Gentiles. And so by a perfect faith the harlot is hired, seeking herself a consort either among the Gentiles, or from the adulterous people of the Jews, who had deserted their Lord, the Author of their virgin faith, and spread their congregations over the breadth of the whole world.

8. With regard to the words, an homer of barley, and half an homer of barley, in the homer we have a full measure, in the half homer the measure is but partly full; fulness in the Gospel, half-fulness in the Law, as we read in our Lord's own words, S. Matt. v. 17. I am not come to destroy the law, but to fulfil the law. And in another place the Lord says by the prophet Micah, Micah v. 5. Then shall there be peace in the land of Israel, when the Assyrian shall come into his land; and there arose against him seven shepherds, and eight bites[221] of men. For the faithful people will then enjoy perfect peace and be freed from all temptations and vanities, when peace and grace shall have shut out the vanity of this world from our hearts, the peace, that is, of the Old, the grace of the New Testament.

9. The seven shepherds are the precepts of the law, whereby the flock not yet endued with reason are led through the wilderness by the rod of Moses, and governed. The eight bites of man are the commandments of the Gospel, and the words of the Lord's mouth. Rom. x. 10. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. Those bites are good whereby we have tasted the gift of eternal life, and in the Body of Christ have received the remission of sins. In the Old Testament the bite of death is bitter, wherefore it is said, Isa. xxv. 8.

Prevailing death has devoured[222]. In the New Testament sweet is the taste of life, which has swallowed up death, wherefore the Apostle says, 1 Cor. xv. 54, 55. Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting, O grave, where is thy victory?

10. Moreover, to use the testimony of the Apostles, when God made man, Heb. iv. 4. He rested from all His works on the seventh day. But when the Jews wilfully disobeyed the commands of their God, the Lord said, Ib. 3. If they shall enter into My rest. And therefore the Lord appointed another day, whereof He says, Ps. xcv. 8. To-day if ye will hear My voice. For in general Scripture speaks of two days, yesterday and to-day, of which it is said, Heb. xiii. 8. Jesus Christ the same, yesterday to-day and for ever. On the first day the promise is made, on the second it is fulfilled. But since on the former day neither Moses nor Joshua brought the people into their rest, Christ, to Whom the Father said, This day have I begotten Thee, has brought them in to-day, for by His Resurrection Jesus has obtained peace for His people. The Lord Jesus is our rest; Who says, S. Luke xxiii. 43. To-day shalt thou be with Me in Paradise. For rest is in heaven, not on earth.

11. Why then need I watch the rising and setting of the stars, at whose rising the fallows should be ploughed up and pierced by the hard ploughshares, and at whose setting the fruitful crop should be cut down by the sickle? One star suffices for me in the place of all others, Rev. xxii. 16. the bright and morning Star, at Whose rising was sown the seed not of corn but of martyrs; when Rachel wept for her children, and offered in the stead of Christ her children washed in her own tears. The setting of this Star raised from the tomb not the senseless relics of the funeral pile, but the triumphant bands of the re-animated dead.

12. Let then this number seven be observed by us, seeing that the life of man passes through seven stages to old age, as Hippocrates the teacher of medicine has explained in his writings. The first age is infancy, the second boyhood, the third youth, the fourth adult age, the fifth manhood, the sixth fulness of years, the seventh old age. Thus we have the infant, the boy, the youth, the young man, the man, the elder, the aged.

13. Solon however made ten periods of life, each of seven years; so that the first period, or infancy, should extend to the growth of the teeth, to chew its food, and utter articulate words so as to seem intelligible; boyhood again extends to the time of puberty and of carnal temptation; youth to the growth of the beard; adult age lasts until virtue has attained its perfection; the fifth is the age of manhood, fitted, during its whole course, for marriage; the sixth belongs also to manhood, in that it is adapted to the combat of prudence, and is strenuous in action; the seventh and eighth period also exhibit man ripe in years, vigorous in faculties, and his discourse endowed with a grace of utterance not unpleasing; the ninth period has still some strength remaining, and in speech and wisdom are of a chastened kind; the tenth period fills up the measure, and he who has strength to reach it, will after a full period of years knock late at the gate of death.

14. Thus Hippocrates and Solon recognized either seven ages, or periods of age consisting of seven years. In this then let the number seven prevail; but the octave introduces one uninterrupted period during which we grow up into Eph. iv. 18. a perfect man, in the knowledge of God, in the fulness of faith, wherein the measure of a legitimate period of life is completed.

15. In our inward parts also the virtue of the seventh number is manifested; for it is said that we have within us seven organs, the stomach, heart, lungs, spleen, liver, and the two kidneys, and outwardly seven also, the head, the hinder parts, the belly, two hands and two feet.

16. Very excellent are these members, but subject to pain. Who then can doubt that the office of the Octave, which has renewed the whole man, so as not to be susceptible of pain, is more exalted? Wherefore the seventh age of the world being completed, the grace of the Octave has shone upon us, that grace which has made man to be no longer of this world, but above the world. But now we live not according to our own life but to that of Christ. For to us Phil. i. 21. to live is Christ, and to die is gain, Gal. ii. 20. and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God. So says the Apostle, 1 S. John ii. 18. whence we gather that the day of the world is come to a close. Again, at the last hour the Lord Jesus came, and died for us, 2 Cor. v. 15. and we are all dead in Him, that we may live to God. It is not then our former selves that now live, but Christ liveth in us.

17. The number seven is passed away, the octave is arrived. Yesterday is gone, to-day is come, that promised day wherein we are admonished to hear and follow the word of God. That day of the Old Testament is passed away, that new day is come, wherein the New Testament is perfected, whereof it is said, Jer. xxxi. 31, 32; Heb. viii. 8, 9. Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah; not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt. He adds too the reason why the Testament was changed, Ib. 9. Because they continued not in My covenant, and I regarded them not, saith the Lord.

18. The priests of the Law, the tribunals of the Law have passed away; let us draw nigh to Heb. iv. 14. our new High Priest, to the throne of grace, to the guest of our souls, to the Priest, Ib. vii. 16. Who is not made after the law of the carnal commandment, but elected after the power of an endless life[223]. For He took not this honour to himself, but was chosen by the Father, as the Father Himself saith, Ib. 17. Ps. cx. 4. Thou art a Priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedech. Other priests offered for themselves and for their people; this Man, not having sin, that He should offer for Himself, offered Himself for the whole world, and by His own blood entered into the Sanctuary.

19. He then is the new Priest and the new Victim, not of the law but above the law, the universal Mediator, the Light of the world, Who said, Heb. x. 7. Lo I come, and came. To Him then let us draw near in the fulness of faith, adoring and beseeching and hoping in Him, Whom with our eyes we see not, but Whom we embrace with our hearts, to Whom be glory and honour for ever. Farewell, my son; love me, for I love you.

LETTER XLV. A.D. 385.

S. AMBROSE REPLIES to the inquiry of Sabinus whether he had written concerning Paradise, and what was his opinion concerning it. Having first touched on the historical description of the place, he proceeds to the mystical explanation of it. And having shewn that Paradise is situate in the principal region of the soul, he teaches what is signified by the several parts thereof, and what men should imitate in the serpent. Lastly, having declared the greatness of human weakness and what great love God has shewn us from the beginning, he exhorts men to fly the pleasures of the senses.

AMBROSE TO SABINUS.

1. HAVING read my work on the six days of creation, you have thought good to enquire whether I have added ought concerning Paradise, and to express your strong desire to know what opinion I hold concerning it. I have, in truth, written on this subject, though not yet a veteran priest.

2. The opinions about it I have found to be many and various. Josephus, as an historian, tells us it is a place filled with trees and thick shrubs, and that it is watered by a river which divides itself into four streams. Its waters being thus gathered into one, this region does not entirely empty and deprive itself of its feeders, but up to this day bursts out into fountains and sends forth its winding streams, nourishing by them her offspring as from the full breasts of a pious mother.

3. Others expound it differently, but all agree that in Paradise is the deep rooted Tree of life, and the Tree of Knowledge whereby good and evil are discerned, the other trees also, full of vigor, and life, endued both with breath and reason. Wherefore we conclude that the real Paradise is no earthly one which can be seen; that it is placed in no spot of ground, but in the highest part of our own nature, which receives animation and life from the powers of the soul, and from the communication of the Spirit of God.

4. Moreover, Solomon by inspiration of the Spirit has plainly shown that Paradise is in man himself. And seeing that he declares the mysteries either of the soul and the Word, or of Christ and the Church, he says of the virgin soul, or of the Church which he wished 2 Cor. xi. 2. to present as a chaste virgin to Christ, Cant. iv. 12. A garden enclosed is my sister, my spouse, a spring sealed up, a fountain closed.

5. 'Paradisus' is the Greek, 'hortus' the Latin name. And in the Latin text we read that Susannah was in a paradise. Adam too was in a paradise. Let it not trouble you then that some Latin manuscripts have the word 'hortus,' others 'paradisus.'

6. Where the chaste wife is, there also is the virgin; the chosen virgin has indeed her barriers and enclosures, but both are in a garden, that thus by the shade of virtue they may be shielded from the heats of the body and concupiscence of the flesh.

7. Hence also Paradise is in our highest part, thick set with the growth of many opinions, and wherein chiefly God hath placed the Tree of life, that is, the root of piety, for this is the true substance of our life, that we should offer due service to our Lord and God.

8. He has likewise planted within us a seed-plot of the knowledge of good and evil; for man alone of all creatures of the earth possesses the knowledge of good and evil. Divers other plants are also there, whose fruits are virtues.

9. Now since God knew that man's affections, once endued with knowledge, would more readily incline towards craft than towards perfect prudence, (for how could the qualities of His work be concealed from His discerning eye, Who had set up certain boundaries in our soul?) He desired to cast out craft from Paradise, and as the provident Author of our salvation, to place therein the desire of life and the discipline of piety. Gen. iii. 2, 3. Wherefore He commanded man to eat of every tree which is in Paradise, but that of the tree of knowledge of good and evil he should not eat.

10. But since all creatures are subject to passions, lust, with the stealth of a serpent, has crept over man's affections: well therefore has holy Moses represented lust under the similitude of a serpent; for it creeps upon its belly like a serpent, not walking on foot, nor raised up on legs, gliding along by the sinuous contortions, as it were, of its whole body. Its food, as that of the serpent, is earthly, for it knows not heavenly food, but feeds on carnal things, and changes itself into various kinds of desire, and bends to and fro in tortuous wreaths. It has poison in its fangs, whereby the belly of every luxurious man is ripped up, the glutton is slain, the licker up of dishes perishes. How many have been burst by wine, weakened by drunkenness, distended by gluttony.

11. Now I understand why the Lord God breathed on the face of man; for there is the seat and there are the incitements to lust, the eyes, the ears, the nose and the mouth; it was to fortify our senses against lust. Now it was this lust, which, as a serpent, inspired us with craft, for it is not lust but labour and constant meditation, which, by God's grace, gives perfect wisdom.

12. Now since the posterity of Adam are involved in the snares of the serpent, let us imitate herein the fraud of the serpent, and not run our head into danger, but be careful of its security beyond that of our other members, for 1 Cor. xi. 3. the head of every man is Christ. Let this remain safe, that the poison of the serpent may not harm us. For Eccles. vii. 11. Wisdom is good with an inheritance, that is, with faith, for there is an inheritance to them that believe in God.

13. But if that first man, who, dwelling in Paradise, conversed with God, could fall so easily, though made of that virgin clay which had lately been formed and created by the word of God, nor as yet clotted with gore and the murder of kindred, nor polluted by iniquity and shame; nor condemned in our flesh to the curse of a guilty posterity; how much more easily afterwards did the smooth-worn path of sin lead the human race to a greater fall, when, one after another, generations more and more depraved succeeded others less wicked?

14. For if the magnet has such natural power as to attract iron to it, and transfuse itself into the character of iron, so that often when persons, wishing to try the experiment, apply iron rings to the same stone, it retains all equally firmly: whereas, if to that ring to which the stone adheres you add another, and so on in succession, although the natural power of the magnet reaches through all in succession, it binds the first with a firm, the hindermost with a slighter bond: if such be the case, how much more must the condition and nature of the human race have fallen from a pure state into one less pure, seeing that it was always attracted to a generation more wicked than itself?

15. For if the power of nature is diminished even by passing through those substances which are not capable of sin, how much more must its vigour be abated by minds and bodies polluted by the stain of crime? Wherefore, seeing that wickedness had increased, that innocence had decayed, that Ps. xiv. 3. there was no one that did good, no, not one; the Lord came in order to form anew, nay to augment, the grace of nature; Rom. v. 20. that where sin had abounded, grace might much more abound. It is plain then both that God is the Creator of man, 1 Cor. viii. 5, 6. and that there is one God not many gods; but that there is one God Who made the world, and one world, not many worlds, as the philosophers assert.

16. First therefore He created the world, and then its inhabitant, man, that the whole world might be his country. For if, up to this day, wherever the wise man goes, he finds himself a citizen, he understands his own position, he considers himself no where as a stranger or sojourner, how much more was that first man an inhabitant of the whole world, and, as the Greeks say, a cosmopolite, he who was the recent creation of God, conversing continually with Him, the fellow-citizen of the saints, the seed-plot of virtue, set over all creatures in the earth sea and air, who considered the whole world to be his dominion; whom the Lord defended as His own work, and as a loving Father and Maker never deserted? In fine He so cherished this His creation, as to redeem him when lost, to receive him when banished, when dead to raise him to life by the passion of His Only-begotten Son. Wherefore God is the Author of man, and, as a good Creator, loves His own work, as a gracious Father, abandons not him, whom, in the character of a rich householder, He has redeemed at the cost of His own possessions.

17. Let us be on our guard therefore that this man, that is, our understanding[224] be not enervated by that woman, that is passion, who was herself deceived and beguiled by the pleasure of our senses; that she do not circumvent and draw him over to her own maxims and opinions. Let us fly pleasure as a serpent; it has many allurements, and especially as regards man. For other animals are captivated by greediness after food; man, in that the powers of his eyes and ears are more varied, is exposed to greater dangers.

Farewell; love me, as you indeed do, for I love you.

LETTER XLVI. A.D. 389.

SABINUS, WHO WAS Bishop of Placentia, had written to S. Ambrose to tell him of an Apollinarian heretic, who appears, after being condemned at Placentia, to have gone to Milan. S. Ambrose in this reply states how he had answered him from Holy Scripture, and refuted his false interpretations, especially of the passage in the Epistle to the Philippians and announces that he has baffled him, and that he is 'preparing to flee.'

AMBROSE TO SABINUS.

1. THE man of whom you have written to me as a disseminator of pernicious doctrines is a very light character, and has already received the reward of his poison. For he has been replied to publicly, and what he had sown in private he has reaped openly. I had previously esteemed him vain and envious only, but when this language of his reached my ears, I immediately answered that he was infected by the venom of Apollinaris, who will not admit that our Lord Jesus became a servant for us when He took upon Him our flesh; and this, although the Apostle declares that Phil. ii. 7. He took on Him the form of a servant. This is the bulwark, this is the hedge of our faith; he who destroys this shall be destroyed himself, as it is written, Eccles. x. 8. Whoso breaketh an hedge, a serpent shall bite him.

2. At first I gently asked him, Why do you what is in itself good with evil intent? For I esteem it a favour if any one who reads my writings will tell me of any thing which causes him surprise. And this, first, because even in things which I know I may be deceived. Many things pass by the ear unheeded, many things sound differently to others, it is well, if it be possible, to be on one's guard in all matters. Next, because it does not become me to be disturbed, seeing that many questions are mooted concerning the words of the Apostles and those of the Gospel and our Lord Himself, if things are found in my writings also, which people consider subjects of dispute. For many indulge their own humour, like that man who compassed the whole world, that he might find some one to censure, not one whom he might deem worthy of imitation.

3. Now this man discovered a nasty means of cavilling at something in my writings, since in commenting upon the passage in which the Lord Jesus said, S. Matt. xi. 25. I thank Thee, Father, Lord of heaven and earth, I stated that it was intended to show that He is the Father of the Son and the Lord of the creature. Nevertheless in the Psalm the Son has plainly called the Father, Lord: Ps. cix. 25, 26. They that looked upon Me shaked their heads: help Me, O Lord My God. For speaking in the form of a servant He called Him Lord Whom He knew to be His Father; though equal in the form of God, proclaiming Himself to be a servant according to the substance of His flesh; for slavery is of the flesh, lordship of the Godhead.

4. First then your great sagacity perceives that what is said in the Gospel has reference to the times of the Gospel, when the Lord Jesus dwelt among men in human form; but now 2 Cor. v. 16. we know Christ according to the flesh no longer. Be it that He was so seen and known by them of old, now 2 Cor. v. 17. old things are passed away, all things are become new. But all things are from God, Who has reconciled us by Christ unto Himself; for we were dead, and therefore One was made Phil. ii. 7. a servant for all. Why do I say, a servant? He was made sin, a reproach, a curse. For the Apostle has said that 2 Cor. v. 21. He was made sin for us, that the Lord Jesus Gal. iii. 13. was made a curse for us. He has said, 1 Cor. xv. 28. when all things shall be subdued unto Him, then shall He also Himself be subject. Peter also said in the Acts of the Apostles, Acts iii. 6. In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk. Then he said also, that God had Ib. 13. glorified

His Servant Jesus, and no one brings any charge against him concerning the time. But in the Apocalypse He is called Rev. v. 12. a Lamb by John, in the Psalm He is called Ps. xxii. 6. a worm and no man. He was made all these things that 1 Cor. xv. 55. He might blunt the sting of our death, that He might take away our slavery, that He might abolish our curses, our sins, our reproaches.

5. These things and others and many more you have written me word that you answered to one who consulted you; and, seeing that they are contained in Holy Scripture, how should any one hesitate to utter what has been thus piously written, tending as they do to the glory of Christ, not to His disparagement? For if it is said of His gift, that is, of the manna, that Exod. xvi. 18. he that gathered little had no lack[225], he that gathered much had nothing over[226], could He Himself suffer diminution or increase? For in what respect was He diminished by Is. liii. 4. taking upon Him our bondage, our infirmities? He was humbled, Phil. ii. 7. He was in the form of a servant, but He was also Ib. 11. in the glory of God the Father. He was Ps. xxii. 7. a worm upon the Cross, S. Luke xxiii. 34. but He also forgave the sins of His persecutors. He was a reproach, but He is also the glory of the Lord, as it is written, Isa. xl. 5. The glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together. What did He lose Who is wanting in nothing? He had indeed Ib. liii. 2. no form or comeliness, but He had the fulness of the Godhead. He was accounted weak, but He ceased not to be the Power of God. He was seen in human form, but there shone upon earth the Divine Majesty and the glory of the Father.

6. Well therefore has the Apostle repeated the same word, saying of the Lord Jesus, Phil. ii. 6, 7. Who being in the form of God thought it not robbery to be equal with God; but made Himself of no reputation and took upon Him the form of a servant. What is the meaning of in the form of God but in the fulness of the Godhead, in the expression of the Divine perfection? Being therefore in the fulness of the Godhead, He emptied Himself of it, and received the fulness of human nature and perfection: as nothing was wanting to Him as God so neither was there any thing wanting to His completeness as Man, that in either form He might be perfect. Wherefore David also says, Ps. xlv. 2. Thou art fairer than the children of men.

7. The Apollinarian is confuted, he has no refuge to turn to, he is caught in his own net. For he himself had said, He took upon him the form of a servant, He was not chosen to be a servant. I ask again therefore, what is the meaning of in the form of God? He replies, In the nature of God. For there are those, says the Apostle, Gal. iv. 8. which by nature are no gods. I enquire, what is the meaning of Phil. ii. 7. took upon Him the form of a servant? Doubtless, as I have stated, the perfection of the nature and condition of man, that He might be in the likeness of man. And he has said well Ib. the likeness, not of the flesh, but of men, for He is in the same flesh. But since He alone was without sin, but all men are in sin, He was seen in the form of man. Wherefore the prophet also says, Jer. xvii. 9. He is a man yet who can know him[227]? Man according to the flesh, but beyond man according to the Divine operation. S. Matt. viii. 2, 3. When he touched the leper He was seen as man, but above man when He cleansed him. S. John xi. 33, 44. When He wept over Lazarus dead, He wept as man, but He was above men when He commanded the dead to come forth with bound feet. He was seen as man when He hung upon the cross, but above man S. Matt. xxvii. 52. when the graves were opened and He raised the dead.

8. Nor has the Apollinarian venom any cause for complaining because it is thus it written, Phil. ii. 8. And being found in fashion[228] as a man, for Jesus is not hereby denied to be man, for in another place Paul himself calls Him, 1 Tim. ii. 5. The Mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus, but rather His manhood is established. For it is the custom and manner of Scripture so to express itself, and we read also in the Gospel, S. John i. 14. And we beheld His glory, the glory as of the Only-begotten of the Father. In the same way therefore that He is called as the only-begotten, yet it is not denied that He is truly the only-begotten Son of God, so He is said to be as man, yet it is not denied that the perfection of manhood existed in Him.

9. While, then, He was Phil. ii. 7. in the form of a servant, humbled even unto death, He yet remained in the glory of God. What injury then was His state of subjection to Him? We read that He was made a servant, because we read that Gal. iv. 4. He was made of a Virgin and created in the flesh, for every creature is a servant, as the Prophet says; Ps. cxix. 91. For all things serve Thee. Wherefore also God the Father says, Ib. lxxxix. 20, 26, 27. I have found David My servant, with My holy oil have I anointed him. He shall call Me, Thou art my Father, my God, and my strong salvation; and I will make him My first-born; and in another Psalm, Ib. lxxxvi. 2. Preserve Thou my soul for I am holy: save Thy servant, and afterwards in the same Psalm, Give Thy strength unto Thy servant, and help the son of Thy handmaid. Thus I have collected the words of the Father and of the Son, that I may answer not with human arguments but by the Divine oracles.

10. In another passage He says, Ps. xxxi. 5. Into Thy hands I commend My spirit, and, Ib. 8. Thou hast set My feet in a large room, and, Ib. 11. I became a reproof among all Mine enemies. And in the same Psalm, Ib. 16. Shew Thy servant the light of Thy countenance. By the mouth of Isaiah too the Son of God Himself says, Isa. xlix. 1–3. From my mother's womb the Lord hath called My name, and He hath made My mouth like a sharp sword, in the shadow of His hand hath He hid Me, and made Me a polished shaft; in His quiver hath He hid Me; and said unto Me, Thou art My servant, O Israel. For the Son of God is also called Israel, as in another place, Ib. xli. 8. But thou, Israel, My Servant Jacob, whom I have chosen.

For He alone hath truly not only seen but also S. John i. 18. declared God the Father.

11. And it goes on, Isa. xlix. 3, 4, 5. In whom I will be glorified. Then I said, I have laboured in vain, I have spent my strength for nought, and in vain: yet surely my judgment is with the Lord, and my work with my God. And now saith the Lord that formed me from the womb to be His servant, to bring Jacob again to Him and Israel. Who hath gathered the people of God but Christ? Who is glorified before the Lord? Who is the Power of God? He to Whom the Father hath said, Isa. xlix. 6. It is a light thing that Thou shouldest be My servant[229], and He to Whom He says Ib. xlii. 6. xlix. 6. Behold, I will give Thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles, that Thou mightest be My Salvation unto the end of the earth. Of Him He has also spoken by the mouth of the prophet Ezekiel, saying, Ezek. xxxiv. 23, 24. I will set up one Shepherd over them, and He shall feed them, even My Servant David, He shall feed them, and He shall be their Shepherd. And I the Lord will be their God, and My Servant David a Prince among them. Now king David was already dead, and therefore the true David, the truly humble, the truly meek, the true Son of God, strong of hand, is announced by this name; he also is intended in the book of the prophet Zechariah, where God the Father says, Zech. iii. 8. Behold I will send my servant, the Orient[230] is His name. Did then His being Ib. iii. 3. clothed in filthy garments deprive the Sun of righteousness of the brightness of His Godhead?

12. And why need I say more? Shall we deem servitude to be a state of greater weakness than that of being made sin, of being a curse, a reproach, than the infirmities which He bore for our sakes that we might be saved from them? For He was made all of these that He might relieve the world from them. But they will not admit that He was made a servant, a reproach, a curse, because they affirm that the Word and the flesh are of one substance, and say, Because He redeemed us He is called a servant, and ought to be called sin. And they do not perceive this to be the glory of Christ, that in His Incarnation He took upon Him the state of a servant that He might restore liberty to all; He bore our sins, that He might take away the sin of the world.

13. He was made a servant, He was made sin and a curse, that thou mightest cease to be a servant of sin, and that He might absolve thee from the curse of the Divine judgment. He therefore took upon Him thy curse, for Gal. iii. 13. Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree. He was made a curse upon the cross, that thou mightest be blessed in the kingdom of God. He was disgraced, He was vilified and set at nought. He said, Is. xlix. 4. I have laboured in vain, through Whom Paul was enabled to say, Phil. ii. 16. I have not laboured in vain. This He did that He might confer on His servants the fruit of good works and the glory of the preaching of the Gospel, whereby the world might be released from the burthen of its toil.

14. On hearing these things Jer. xvii. 11. the partridge[231] was left in the midst of her days, she who cried that she might gather the things which she did not lay, and was overcome by the voice of the Lord Jesus. And even now is she preparing for flight.

Farewell; love me, for I love you.

LETTER XLVII. A.D. 390.

THIS BRIEF LETTER was sent with a book which Sabinus had asked for. It is a friendly invitation to a regular correspondence, as bringing friends together in spirit who are severed in body.

AMBROSE TO SABINUS.

1. I HAVE transmitted the volume you asked for, written more clearly and neatly than the one which I had previously sent, in order that by the facility of its perusal your judgment of it might be unimpeded. For the original copy was written not for appearance, but for use, for I do not always employ a scribe, especially at night, at which time I am unwilling to be a trouble and a burthen to others, and further, because the words I am then dictating flow on with a kind of impetuosity, and in a rapid stream.

2. But as I am desirous to select with precision the words which my old age employs in its familiar intercourse, and to proceed with a slow step, I think the use of my own hands in writing befits me better; that I may seem rather to conceal my words than lustily give vent to them; and may not have to blush at the presence of him who is writing for me, but, having no one in the secret of my words, may weigh what I write with eye as well as with ears. For, in the words of Scripture, the tongue is swifter than the hand; Ps. xlv. 2. My tongue is the pen of a ready writer.

3. And though you may perhaps say that the swiftness is here attributed to the writer, the meaning will nevertheless not escape you that it is only the swiftness of a ready writer which can take down the words of the prophetic tongue. The Apostle Paul also wrote with his own hand, as he says himself,

Gal. vi. 11. I have written unto you with mine own hand. He did it to show honour, we do it from bashfulness.

4. But while your judgement of my book is still in suspense, let us entertain each other by letters; the advantage whereof is that although severed from each other by distance of space we may be united in affection; for by this means the absent have the image of each other's presence reflected back upon them, and conversation by writing unites the severed. By this means also we interchange thoughts with our friend, and transpose our mind into his.

5. Now if, according to your admonition, there is any savour of ancient writings in our letters, not only do our minds seem to be united by this progress in true doctrine, but also the form and fashion of a more intimate converse seems to be set forth, in that the discussion which is thus entered upon by mutual inquiry and reply appears to place in presence of each other those friends who in this manner challenge and engage one another.

6. And why need I produce the example of our ancestors, who by their letters have instilled faith into the minds of the people, and have written to whole nations together, and have shewn themselves to be present although writing from a distance, according to the words of the Apostle, that he was 1 Cor. v. 3. absent in body, but present in spirit, not only in writing but also in judging. Again, he condemned them while absent by epistle, and also absolved them by epistle; for the epistle of Paul was a certain image of his presence and form of his work.

7. For the epistles of the Apostles were not, like those of others, 2 Cor. x. 10. weighty and powerful, but his bodily presence weak, and his speech contemptible, but his letter was of that kind that such as was the substance of his work such also was the form of his precept; for Ib. 11. such, says he, as we are in word by letters when absent, such will we be also in deed when we are present. He imprinted the image of his presence on his letters, he declared its fruit and testimony in his work.

Farewell; love me, as indeed you do, for I love you.

LETTER XLVIII.

S. AMBROSE IN this letter begs Sabinus to examine the books which he sends to him carefully, and to criticise them freely, as a proof of true friendship, and at the same time adding to the value of the works.

AMBROSE TO SABINUS.

1. YOU have sent me back my volumes, and I shall hold them in greater esteem owing to your judgment. I have therefore sent you others, not so much because I was delighted at wishing for your favourable judgment, as of that truth which I have asked and you have promised to declare to me; for should any thing strike you I would rather it had the correction of your judgment before it goes abroad beyond the power of recal, than that you should praise what is blamed by others. It is on this account that I have requested to have your opinion of those things which you asked me to write, for I have not so much desired that what I publish from time to time should be read by you, as that they should be submitted to the account which your judgment shall take of them. And this judgment, as one said of old, will not require[232] a long sitting and delay. For surely it is easy for you to judge of my writings.

2. Thus far, on your invitation, I have thought it right to proceed; it is now your part to discern clearly and examine carefully what requires correction, that you may thus escape being inculpated in those faults which may have stolen unawares upon myself. For somehow over and above that want of caution which envelops me as with a mist, every one is beguiled in what he himself writes, and its faults escape his ear. And as a man takes pleasure in his children even though deformed, so also is a writer flattered by his own discourses however ungraceful. How frequently are words put forth uncautiously or understood less charitably than one means; or some ambiguity escapes from us; things, moreover, which are to be subjected to the judgment of others we ought to weigh not so much by our own as by another's opinion, and to separate from it every grain of malevolence.

3. Be so kind therefore as to lend an ear of keen attention, peruse the whole thoroughly, test my discourses, see whether they contain, not rhetorical charms and persuasive words, but a sound faith and a sober confession. Affix a mark on words of doubtful weight and which are deceitful in the scales, that the adversary may not make out any thing to tell in his favour. Let him meet with defeat if he enters into the contest. That book is in a bad condition, which cannot be defended without a champion; for a book which goes forth without a mediator has to speak for itself; my book however shall not go forth from me, unless it receive authority from you. When then you bid it go forth, and give your word for it, let it be left to its own keeping.

4. But, since 1 Cor. iv. 20. the kingdom of God is not in word but in power, if a word offend you consider the power of its profession. By profession I mean that decision of faith which we hold, as handed down by our fathers, against the Sabellians and Arians, that we worship God the Father and His Only-begotten Son and the Holy Spirit, that this Trinity is of one Substance Majesty and Divinity; that in this S. Matt. xxviii. 19. Name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, we baptize, as it is written; that the Son, co-eternal with the Father, took upon Him our flesh, born of the Holy Spirit and of the Virgin Mary, equal to the Father as touching His Godhead, in the form of God, that is, in all the fulness of the Godhead Which Col. ii. 9. dwells in Him, as the Apostle says, bodily; Who, in the person of man, Phil. ii. 7, 8. took upon Him the form of a servant, and humbled Himself even unto death.

5. Wherefore as against Photinus this is our sentence, and as against Apollinaris it is also a proper safeguard; our confession, namely, that as in the form of God He lacked nothing of the Divine nature and fulness, so in that human form there was nothing wanting in Him so as to cause Him to be judged imperfect as Man; for He came in order to save man altogether. Truly it would not have been fitting that He Who had accomplished a perfect work in others should suffer it to be imperfect in Himself; for if aught was wanting to Him as Man, then He did not redeem the whole man, and if He did not redeem the whole man, He deceived us, for He said that He had come in order to save the whole man. But since it is Heb. vi. 18. impossible for God to lie, He deceived us not; wherefore, seeing that He came to redeem and save the whole man, He took upon Him the whole of that which belonged to human perfection.

6. Such, as you will remember, is my belief. Should my words in any passage raise a doubt, still they will not raise any prejudice as to my faith, for if the mind continue stedfast, it extends its protection over ambiguous language, and preserves it from error.

7. This preface then I send you, and will insert it, if you please, in the books of our letters, and place it among their number; that so it may be recommended by your name, and by our letters to each other our mutual love in the Lord, may be increased: that, finally, you may so read as to give me your judgment, and to communicate to me whatever may strike you, for true love is proved by constancy. For the present we have chosen that which old men find more easy, the writing of letters in ordinary and familiar language: subjoining, should such present itself, any appropriate passage from the sacred Scriptures. Farewell, my brother, and love one who is your lover, for I greatly love you.

LETTER XLIX. A.D. 390.

S. AMBROSE SAYS that he never feels less solitary, than when by himself writing to a friend. He then dwells on the benefit of solitude; especially in that we may then have God present with us, and lay open our souls to Him.

AMBROSE TO SABINUS.

1. SINCE you also take pleasure in receiving my letters, by means of which, although separated from each other, we discourse together as if present, I will for the future more frequently converse with you by letter when I am alone. For[233] I am never less alone than when I seem to be so, nor ever less at leisure than in the intervals of labour. For then I summon at pleasure whom I will, and associate to myself those whom I love most or find most congenial; no man interrupts or intrudes upon us. Then it is that I more intimately enjoy you, that I confer with you in the Scriptures, that we converse together more at length.

2. Mary was alone when addressed by the Angel, alone when the S. Luke i. 35. Holy Ghost came upon her, and the power of the Highest overshadowed her. She was alone when she effected the salvation of the world, and conceived the Redemption of the universe. Acts x. 10. Peter was alone when the mystery of the sanctification of the Gentiles all over the world was made known to him. Adam was alone, and he fell not, because his mind adhered to God. But when the woman was joined to him he lost his power of abiding by the celestial precepts, and therefore Gen. iii. 8. he hid himself when God walked in Paradise.

3. And even now, while I read the sacred Scriptures, God walks in Paradise. The book of Genesis, wherein the virtues of the Patriarchs bud forth, is Paradise; Deuteronomy, wherein grow the precepts of the Law, is also Paradise, wherein the tree of life brings forth good fruit, and diffuses over all nations the precepts of eternal hope.

4. So when I hear, S. Matt. v. 44. Love your enemies, when I hear, Ib. xix. 21. Sell that thou hast, and give to the poor; when I hear, S. Luke vi. 29. unto him that smiteth thee on the one cheek offer also the other; when I hear these things and do not perform them, nay, when I barely love him who loves me, when I will not part with what I have, when I desire to avenge the injuries I have received, and to recover what has been wrested from me, whereas the Scripture bids me give up more than I have been asked for or deprived of, I perceive that I am acting contrary to the commands of God. Thus opening the eyes of my conscience, I perceive that God is present and walking with me; I desire to hide, I desire to clothe myself; but I am naked in His sight unto Whom Heb. iv. 13. all things are naked and opened! I am abashed therefore, and desire to conceal the shame of my crimes as though they were the secret members of my body; but since God sees all things, since I am manifest to Him, though covered with leaves and shaded by thickets, I think to conceal myself from Him by the covering of my body. This is that coat of skins, in which Adam was clothed when he was cast out of Paradise, neither shielded from the cold, nor protected from scorn, but exposed to misery as well as guilt.

5. From whence it appears that it is when alone that we offer ourselves to God, that we open to Him our souls, that we put off the cloak of fraud. Gen. iii. 8. Adam was alone when placed in Paradise; Ib. i. 27. alone also when made in the image of God: but when cast out of Paradise he was not alone. S. John xvi. 32. The Lord Jesus was alone when He redeemed the world; for it was no herald or messenger, but the Lord Himself alone Who redeemed

His people, although He, in Whom the Father always dwells, can never be alone. Let us also then be alone, that the Lord may be with us. Farewell: love me, for I also love you.

LETTER L.

THIS LETTER CONTAINS an interesting discussion of the question how an evil man like Balaam could be employed by God to utter true prophecies, and deals with other difficulties which arise out of Balaam's history.

AMBROSE TO CHROMATIUS.

1. DOES God lie? Truly He lies not, because it is impossible for God to lie. And further, does this impossibility arise from infirmity? No, truly, for how can He be Almighty if He cannot do all things? What then is impossible to Him? Not that which is difficult to His Power, but what is contrary to His Nature. Heb. vi. 18. It is impossible, it is said, for Him to lie. This impossibility comes not of infirmity, but of Power and Majesty, for truth admits not of falsehood, nor God's Power of the weakness of error. Wherefore Rom. iii. 4. let God be true and every man a liar.

2. The truth therefore is always in Him; He remains faithful; change or deny Himself He cannot. But if He deny that He is true, He lies, but to lie belongs not to power but to weakness. Nor can He change, for His nature admits not infirmity. This impossibility therefore comes of His fulness, which cannot be diminished or increased, not of infirmity, which, in that it increases itself, is weak. Whence we gather that this impossibility on the part of God is indeed most powerful. For what can be more powerful than to be ignorant of all infirmity?

3. There is however another 1 Cor. i. 25. weakness of God which is stronger than men, and a foolishness of God which is wiser than men, but this has reference to the Cross, the former to His Godhead. If then His weakness is strength, how can that which comes of His power be weak? Let it therefore be an axiom with us that God lies not.

4. Deut. xviii. 10. But there was no diviner of auguries in Israel according to the law of God. How then was it that Balaam said that he was forbidden by the oracle of God to go and curse the people of Israel, and yet he went, and the Angel of the Lord who had forbidden his going, met him, and stood in the way of the ass that carried him, and nevertheless the Angel himself bid him go, only he must speak that which should be put into his mouth? If there was to be no deceiver in Israel, how did this oracle of God, declaring things for true, come to him who was a deceiver? If he spoke as the oracle of God, whence did he derive the grace of the Divine inspiration?

5. But you are not to wonder that the Lord should put into the mouth of a diviner what he should speak, when you read in the Gospel that it was put into the mouth even of the prince of the Synagogue, one of the persecutors of Christ, that S. John xi. 50. it is expedient that one man should die for the people? Herein then is no merit of prophecy, but an assertion of the truth; that by the testimony even of adversaries the truth might be declared, so that the perfidy of unbelievers might be confuted by the words even of their own diviners. Just so Abraham[234] the Chaldæan is called to belief, that the superstition of the Chaldæans might be put to silence. It is not therefore the merit of him who utters, but rather the oracle of God Who calls, the grace of God Who reveals.

6. Now what was the guilt which Balaam incurred, Numb. xxii. 12. but that he spoke one thing, and designed another? For God requires a clean vessel, not one defiled by uncleanness and pollution. Balaam therefore was tried, not approved, for he was full of deceit and treachery. Again, when he first enquired whether he should go to that vain people, and was forbidden, he excused himself: afterwards, when more honourable messages were sent, he who ought to have refused consent, seduced by ampler promises and more abundant gifts, Ib. 19. was led again to enquire of God, as if many gifts could influence the mind of God.

7. Answer was made to him as to a covetous man, not as to one who sought the truth, that so he might rather be deceived than rightly informed. He set out, Ib. 25. an Angel met him in a narrow place, and shewed himself to the ass, but not to the diviner. To the former he revealed himself, the latter he crushed; yet, that he might at length be recognized by him, he opened his eyes also. He saw, but even yet he did not believe the manifest oracle, and though his very eyes ought to have convinced him, he answered confusedly and doubtingly.

8. Then the Lord, being angry, said to him by the Angel, Numb. xxii. 35. Go with the men, but only the word that I shall speak unto thee, that shalt thou speak. As an empty instrument you shall give utterance to My words. It is I Who will speak, not you; you will only echo what you hear and do not understand. You will gain no advantage by going, because you will return without either a reward of money or progress in grace. Again, these are his first words, Ib. xxiii. 8. How shall I curse whom God hath not cursed? in order to shew that the benediction of the Hebrew people depended not on his will but on the grace of God.

9. From the top of the rocks, he says, I see him; for I cannot embrace within my ken this people, which shall dwell alone, marking out their boundaries, not so much by the occupation of space as by the abode of virtue, and extending them into eternal ages by the distinctive peculiarity of their manners. For which of the bordering nations shall be numbered with this one, which is raised above their fellowship by its exalted righteousness? Who shall understand the nature of its generation? Their bodies we indeed perceive to have been compounded and fashioned of human seed, but their minds have sprung from higher and wondrous seed-plots.

10. Ib. 10. Let my soul die with their souls, die to this bodily life, that with the souls of the just it may attain to the grace of that eternal life. Herein even then was revealed the excellence of our heavenly Sacrament and of holy Baptism, by the operation whereof men die to original sin and to evil works; that being transformed by newness of life into fellowship with the just they may rise again to live as do the just. And what wonder is it that it should be so, when men die to sin in order to live to God?

11. Balak hearing this, was wroth and said, Ib. 11. 'I brought thee to curse and thou blessest.' He answered, 'I am reproved for that of which I am not conscious; for I speak nothing of my own, but utter sounds like 1 Cor. xiii. 1. a tinkling cymbal.' Again, being carried to a second and a third place, although he wished to curse, he blessed; Numb. xxiii. 21. He hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob, neither hath he seen perverseness in Israel; the Lord his God is with him. And afterwards he commands seven altars and sacrifices to be prepared. He ought, indeed, to have departed, but his weak mind and mutability of purpose led him to believe that he could turn aside the Will of God: he himself, the while, being in a trance, desired one thing but spoke another.

12. Ib. xxiv. 5, 6. How goodly, said he, are thy tents, O host of the Hebrews! As the valleys are they spread forth, as gardens by the river's side and as cedar trees beside the waters. A man v. 19. shall come out of Jacob, and v. 8. shall subdue many nations, and v. 7. his kingdom shall be exalted on high: in the earth also he shall extend his dominion in Egypt. v. 9. Blessed is he that blesseth thee, and cursed is he that curseth thee. Now to whom did he point but to the people of Christ? God blesses him into whose heart the Word of God enters, Heb. iv. 12. even to the dividing asunder of the soul, and of the joints and marrow; in him Balaam would have found the grace of the Lord if he had acted according to the intent and purpose of his heart. But since an evil mind is confuted by its own counsels, and the secrets of the soul are betrayed by events, his mind was thus discovered by the treachery which followed.

13. Therefore also he met with a worthy reward of his malice. For finding while in his trance that he could not curse, he gives his advice to the king, saying, ‘Such is the utterance of what God has commanded, hear now my counsel against the oracles of God. This people is just, it has the protection of God: since it has not given itself to divinations and auguries, but to the eternal God above; and therefore its faith excels that of others. But sometimes even faithful minds fall through corporeal charms and the blandishments of beauty. Numerous are your women, and many of them not uncomely; now the male sex is in no respect more prone to fall than through the frailty with which it is captivated by female beauty, particularly if their minds are excited by frequent converse, and thus become inflamed as by a torch; if, while they drink in the hope of enjoying, their passions are kept in suspense. Let your women therefore cast their hooks by their converse, let them offer no obstacles to a first access, but roam abroad and spread themselves through the camp, exposed to view and affable of speech. Let them so artfully deal with these men as not to admit them to carnal intercourse until they shall have proved the strength of their love by becoming participators in sacrilege. For they may thus be deprived of the protection of heaven, if they shall themselves depart by sacrilege from the Lord their God.’

14. Unrighteous therefore, as the counsellor of fornication and sacrilege, was Balaam; for thus it is plainly written in the Apocalypse of John the Evangelist, when the Lord Jesus says to the Angel of the Church of Pergamos; Rev. ii. 14, 15. Thou hast there them that hold the doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balak to cast a stumbling-block before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrified unto idols, and to commit fornication; so hast thou also them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitans. Wherefore it appears that from hence has flowed the impiety of the Manichees, like that of Manasseh, who mingle and unite sacrilege with impurity.

15. Neither, then, was God unjust, nor His purpose mutable; for He detected Balaam's mind and the secrets of his heart, and He therefore tried him as a diviner, He did not choose him as a prophet. Surely he ought to have been converted if it were only by the grace of such great oracles and the sublimity of his revelations, but his mind, full of iniquity, brought forth words but did not yield belief, seeking to frustrate by its counsels that event which it had predicted. And since he could not defeat the prophecy, he suggested deceitful counsels whereby the fickle people of the Jews were tempted but not overcome; for Num. xxv. 11. by the righteousness of one priest all the counsel of this wicked man was overthrown, and that the host of our fathers could be delivered by one man was much more wonderful than that it could be deceived by one man.

16. This little gift I have sent to your Holiness, because you wish me to compile somewhat from the interpretations of the ancient authors. But I had undertaken to write letters in a familiar style, savouring of the tone of thought of our fathers; and should you relish their flavour I shall be emboldened to send you of the same kind hereafter. For I prefer conversing garrulously with you like an old man concerning heavenly things, which is called in Greek Gen. xxiv. 63. to meditate E.V. ἀδολεσχῆσαι: Isaac went forth into the field, ἀδολεσχῆσαι, seeing in his mind, on the approach of Rebecca, the mysteries of the Church which was to come: this conversing with you with the words of an old man, that I may not seem to have abandoned my art, I prefer, I say, to uttering in a more vehement style things no longer adapted to our studies or strength.

Farewell: love me, for I also love you.

LETTER LI. A.D. 390.

THIS IS THE famous Letter addressed by S. Ambrose to Theodosius after the massacre at Thessalonica. The details of that occurrence are too familiar to need repeating here. In this Letter S. Ambrose explains to the Emperor why he had avoided meeting him on his return to Milan, and urges him with respectful and most affectionate, but firm remonstrance, to follow David in penitence as he had followed him in crime, and tells him that God Himself had in a vision forbidden him to offer the Sacrifice of the Eucharist in his behalf while he remained impenitent. The Letter, far from deserving Gibbon's scornful title of 'a miserable rhapsody on a noble subject,' may rather be regarded as a model of dignified remonstrance, well befitting an eminent prelate addressing a great earthly Sovereign.

AMBROSE BISHOP, TO HIS MAJESTY THE EMPEROR THEODOSIUS.

1. VERY pleasant to me is the remembrance of your long friendship, and I also bear a grateful sense of those benefits which at my frequent intreaties you have most graciously extended to others. You may be sure then that it could not be from any ungrateful feeling that on your arrival, which I was wont to long for so ardently, I shunned your presence. The motives of my conduct I will now briefly explain.

2. I found that I alone in all your court was denied the natural right of hearing, in order to deprive me of the power of speaking too: for you were frequently displeased at decisions having reached me which were made in your Consistory. Thus I have been debarred from the common privilege of men, though the Lord Jesus says, S. Luke viii. 17. Nothing is secret which shall not be made manifest. Wherefore I did my utmost to obey with reverence your royal will, and I provided both for you and for myself; for you, that you should have no cause of disturbance, to which end I endeavoured that no intelligence should be brought me of the Imperial decrees; and as to myself, I provided against my not seeming to hear when present, from fear of others and thus incurring the charge of connivance, and also against hearing in such manner that while my ears were open my mouth must be closed, and I must not utter what I heard, lest I should injure those who had fallen under suspicion of treachery.

3. What then was I to do? was I not to listen? But I could not close my ears with the wax of the old tales. Must I disclose what I heard? But then I had reason to fear that the same result which I apprehended from your commands would ensue from my own words; that they might become the cause of bloodshed. Was I then to be silent? But this would be the most miserable of all, for my conscience would be bound, my liberty of speech taken away. And what then of the text, Ezek. iii. 18. if the priest warn not the wicked from his wicked way, the wicked man shall die in his iniquity, but the priest shall be liable to punishment, because he did not warn him?

4. Suffer me, gracious Emperor. You have a zeal for the faith, I own it, you have the fear of God, I confess it; but you have a vehemence of temper, which if soothed may readily be changed into compassion, but if inflamed becomes so violent that you can scarcely restrain it. If no one will allay it, let no one at least inflame it. To yourself I would willingly trust, for you are wont to exercise self-control, and by your love of mercy to conquer this violence of your nature.

5. This vehemence of yours I have preferred secretly to commend to your consideration, rather than run the risk of rousing it publicly by my acts. And so I have preferred to be lacking somewhat in duty rather than in humility, and that others should complain of my want of priestly authority, rather than that you should find any want of respect in me, who am so devoted to you; and this in order that you may restrain your emotions, and have full power of choosing what counsel to follow. I alleged as my reason, bodily sickness, which was in fact severe, and not to be mitigated but by more gentle treatment; still I would rather have died than not have waited two or three days for your arrival. But I could not do so.

6. An act has been committed in the city of Thessalonica, the like of which is not recorded, the perpetration of which I could not prevent, which in my frequent petitions before the court I had declared to be most atrocious, and which by your tardy revocation you have yourself pronounced to be very heinous: such an act as this I could not extenuate. Intelligence of it was first brought to a synod held on the arrival of the Gallican Bishops: all present deplored it, no one viewed it leniently; your friendship with Ambrose, so far from excusing your deed, would have even brought a heavier weight of odium on my head, had there been no one found to declare the necessity of your being reconciled to God.

7. Is your Majesty ashamed to do that which the Royal Prophet David did, the forefather of Christ according to the flesh? It was told him that a rich man, who had numerous flocks, on the arrival of a guest took a poor man's lamb and killed it, and recognizing in this act his own condemnation, he said, 2 Sam. xii. 13. I have sinned against the Lord. Let not your Majesty then be impatient at being told, as David was by the prophet, Ib. 7. Thou art the man. For if you listen thereto obediently and say, I have sinned against the Lord, if you will use those words of the royal Prophet, Ps. xcv. 6. O come let us worship and fall down, and kneel before the Lord our Maker, to you also it shall be said, Because thou repentest, 2 Sam. xii. 13. the Lord hath put away thy sin, thou shalt not die.

8. Another time, when David had commanded the people to be numbered, his heart smote him, and he said unto the Lord, Ib. xxiv. 10. I have sinned greatly in that I have done, and now, I beseech thee O Lord, take away the iniquity of thy servant, for I have done very foolishly. And 2 Sam. xxiv. 12. Nathan the prophet was sent again to him, to offer him three things, to choose one of them, which he would; seven years famine in the land, or to flee three months before his enemies, or three days pestilence in the land. Ib. 14. And David said, I am in a great strait, let us now fall into the hand of the Lord, for His mercies are great, and let me not fall into the hand of man. His fault lay in wishing to know the number of all the people which were with him, a knowledge which ought to have been reserved for God.

9. And Scripture tells us that when the people were dying, on the very first day and at dinner time, David saw the Angel that smote the people, he said, Ib. 17. Lo, I have sinned and done wickedly; but these sheep, what have they done? let Thine hand, I pray Thee, be against me, and against my father's house. So the Lord repented, and commanded the Angel to spare the people, and that David should offer sacrifice: for there were then sacrifices for sin, but we have now the sacrifices of penitence. So by that humility he was made more acceptable to God, for it is not wonderful that man should sin, but it is indeed blameable if he do not acknowledge his error, and humble himself before God.

10. Holy Job, himself also powerful in this world, saith, Job xxxi. 33. (the sense, not the words.) I covered not my sin, but declared it before all the people. And to the cruel king Saul Jonathan his son said, 1 Sam. xix. 4. Let not the king sin against his servant, against David; and Ib. 5. Wherefore then wilt thou sin against innocent blood to slay David without a cause? For although he was a king he still would have sinned in slaying the innocent. Again when David was possessed of the kingdom, and heard that innocent Abner had been slain by Joab the Captain of his host, he said, 2

Sam. iii. 28. I and my kingdom are guiltless before the Lord for ever from the blood of Abner the son of Ner, and he fasted for sorrow.

11. This I have written, not to confound you, but that these royal examples may induce you to put away this sin from your kingdom; for this you will do by humbling your soul before God. You are a man; temptation has fallen upon you; vanquish it. Sin is not washed away but by tears and penitence. Neither Angel nor Archangel can do it. The Lord Himself, Who alone can say S. Matt. xxviii. 20. I am with you; even He grants no remission of sin save to the penitent.

12. I advise, I entreat, I exhort, I admonish; for I am grieved that you who were an example of singular piety, who stood so high for clemency, who would not suffer even single offenders to be put in jeopardy, should not mourn over the death of so many innocent persons. Successful as you have been in battle, and great in other respects, yet mercy was ever the crown of your actions. The devil has envied you your chief excellence: overcome him, while you still have the means. Add not sin to sin by acting in a manner which has injured so many.

13. For my part, debtor as I am to your clemency in all other things; grateful as I must ever be for this clemency, which I have found superior to that of many Emperors and equalled only by one, though I have no ground for charging you with contumacy, I have still reason for apprehension: if you purpose being present, I dare not offer the Sacrifice. That which may not be done when the blood of one innocent person has been shed, may it be done where many have been slain? I trow not.

14. Lastly, I will write with my own hand what I wish should be read by yourself only. As I hope for deliverance from all tribulation from the Lord, it has not been from man, nor by man's agency that this has been forbidden me, but by His own manifest interposition. For in the midst of my anxiety, on the very night whereon I was about to set out, I saw you in a vision coming into the Church, but I was withheld from offering Sacrifice. Other things I pass over, which I might have avoided, but I bore them for your sake, I believe. May the Lord cause all things to turn out peacefully. Our God gives us divers admonitions, by heavenly signs, by prophetic warnings; and by visions vouchsafed even to sinners, He would have us understand that we ought to beseech Him to remove from us commotions, that He would bestow peace on you, our rulers, that the Church, for whose benefit it is that we should have pious and Christian Emperors, may be kept in faith and tranquillity.

15. Doubtless you wish to be approved by God. Eccles. iii. 1. To every thing there is a season, as it is written; Ps. cxix. 126. It is time for Thee Lord, saith the prophet, to lay to Thine hand, and, It is an acceptable time to God. You shall make your oblation when you have received permission to sacrifice, when your offering will be pleasing to God. Would it not be a delight to me to enjoy your Majesty's favour, and act in accordance with your will, if the case permitted it? Prayer by itself is a sacrifice; it obtains pardon while the oblation would be rejected, for the former is evidence of humility, the latter of contempt: for God Himself tells us that He prefers the performance of His commandments to sacrifice. God proclaims this, Moses announces it to the people, Paul preaches it to them. Do that which you understand is for the time better. S. Matt. ix. 13. I will have mercy, it is said, and not sacrifice. Are not those therefore rather to be called Christians who condemn their own sin than those who think to excuse it? Prov. xviii. 17. Vulg. The just accuses himself in the beginning of his words. He who, having sinned, accuses himself, not he who praises himself, is just.

16. I would that previously to this I had trusted rather to myself than to your accustomed habits. Remembering that you quickly pardon, and revoke your sentence, as you have often done, you have been anticipated, and I have not shunned that which I had no need to fear. But thanks to the Lord,

Who chastises His servants, that they may not be lost. This I share with the prophets, and you shall share it with the saints.

17. Shall not I value the father of Gratian at more than my own eyes? Your other sacred pledges too claim pardon for you. On those whom I regarded with impartial affection I conferred by anticipation a name that is dear to me. You have my love, my affection, my prayers. If you believe my words, I call on you to act according to them; if, I say, you believe, acknowledge it, but if not, excuse my conduct in that I prefer God to my sovereign. May your gracious Majesty, with your holy offspring, enjoy in happiness and prosperity perpetual peace.

LETTER LII. A.D. 392.

TITIANUS, OR TATIANUS, for both forms of the name are given, was a person in high position under Theodosius, and filled the office of Prætorian Prefect. He had incurred, as this Letter implies, the enmity of the Emperor's favourite minister Rufinus, who eventually procured his exile. He is here congratulated on Rufinus' removal from the position of 'Master of the offices,' and thereby from exercising an unfavorable influence on some private suit in which Tatianus was engaged.

AMBROSE TO TITIANUS.

1. YOU have obtained a harmless victory, enjoying the security of victory without the bitterness of entreaty; for Rufinus from being Master of the Offices[235], has been made in his consulate a Prætorian Præfect. By this he has acquired more power for himself, but to you he can be hurtful no longer, for he is become the Præfect of another district. I greatly rejoice both with him, as a friend, in having thus received an increase of honour, and at the same time a relief from odium, and also with you, as a son. And this, because you are delivered from him whom you deemed would be too rigid a judge to you, so that if you shall have arranged your business with your grand-daughter, it will have arisen from your affection, not from fear.

2. Exert yourself, therefore, to obtain an adjustment, both the hope and profit of which are now greater: the hope, because the father of your grand-daughter, who promised himself much from the sentence of Rufinus, has no longer anything to hope from him; for Rufinus is now concerned about other things, and neglects the past, or has laid it aside together with the office which he then held; the father now looks rather to the merits of his cause, than to a patron of his sentiments; the fruit too of an adjustment will be sweeter, for the credit of it must be ascribed to yourself; for you might have scorned it, and have not done so, regarding the pious claims of kindred, rather than the angry suggestions of injury.

Farewell: love me as a son, for I love you as a parent.

LETTER LIII. A.D. 392.

S. AMBROSE HERE writes to Theodosius to express his grief at the death of Valentinian II, and mentions the preparations made for his burial. S. Ambrose spoke his funeral oration, which is extant, and is full of expressions of deep attachment. Valentinian had been slain by Arbogastes, who put Eugenius on the throne.

AMBROSE TO THE EMPEROR THEODOSIUS.

1. YOUR Majesty's letter has broken my silence; for I had persuaded myself that in sorrow so great I could do nothing better than withdraw into retirement. But not being able to conceal myself in any retreat, or abdicate my bishopric, I at least retired within myself by silence.

2. I am filled, I confess, with bitter grief, not only because the death of Valentinian has been premature, but also because, having been trained in the faith and moulded by your teaching, he had conceived such devotion towards our God, and was so tenderly attached to myself, as to love one whom he had before persecuted, and to esteem as his father the man whom he had before repulsed as his enemy. I have mentioned this not for the sake of recalling former wrongs, but as a proof of his conversion. For the one he learnt from others, the other was his own, and retained by him when once received from you, so firmly, as to fortify him against all the arguments of his mother. He professed that he owed his education to me, he longed for me as for a careful parent, and when some pretended to have received tidings of my arrival, he anticipated it with impatience. Moreover, on those very days of public mourning, although he had within the limits of Gaul holy and eminent bishops of the Lord, he thought proper nevertheless to write to me to confer upon him the Sacrament of Baptism. By this request, in an unreasonable but affectionate way, he gave testimony of his love towards me.

3. Shall I not then sigh after him with my inmost spirit, shall I not embrace him in the secret recesses of my heart and soul? Shall I deem him dead to me? Yes, indeed to me he is assuredly dead. How thankful was I to the Lord, that he was so changed towards me, so improved, and had assumed a character so much more mature. How thankful also was I to your Clemency, in that you had not only restored him to his kingdom, but also, what is more, had disciplined him in your own faith and piety. Shall I not weep therefore that he, while fresh in years, and before he had obtained as he desired the grace of the Sacraments, has met with a sudden death? It has been a solace to my mind that you have yourself condescended to testify to my grief. I have your Majesty for judge of my affections and interpreter of my thoughts.

4. But hereafter we shall have time for sorrow; let us now care for his sepulture, which your Clemency has commanded to take place in this city. If he has died without Baptism, I now keep back what I know. We have here a most beautiful porphyry vessel, and well adapted for the purpose; for Maximian the colleague of Diocletian was so buried. There are also very precious tablets of porphyry, to encase the covering in which the royal remains are inclosed.

5. All this was prepared, but we waited for your Majesty's order; and its arrival has comforted your holy daughters, sisters of your son Valentinian, who greatly afflict themselves, and the more in that for a long while they received no answer. This has been no small solace to them, but so long as his remains lie unburied, they do not spare themselves, for they daily imagine that they are celebrating the funeral of their brother. And in truth they never are without many tears and heavy sorrow, and whenever they visit his body they return almost lifeless. It will be for their good therefore, and for that of his beloved remains, that the burial should shortly take place, lest the heat of summer should wholly dissolve them, for its first fervour is scarcely past.

6. I observe your command and commend it to the Lord; may He love you, for you love the Lord’s servants.

LETTER LIV. A.D. 392.

THE EUSEBIUS TO whom this and the following letters are addressed is probably not the Bp. of Bologna who took a leading part in the Council of Aquileia, though he appears to be also connected with Bologna, (Lett. lv. 2.). S. Ambrose does not write to him in the style in which he would address an eminent Ecclesiastic. He was probably a layman, on very intimate terms with S. Ambrose, as the whole tone of the Letters implies. Both are on affairs of private life, both, especially the latter, are written in a tone of playful pleasantry and a not irreverent adaptation of sacred things, such as has often marked the familiar correspondence of a great Bishop.

Eusebius seems to have had a son Faustinus, and this son a large family, of whom another Faustinus an Ambrosius and an Ambrosia are here mentioned. It was to this Eusebius, on the occasion of Ambrosia's dedication as a professed Virgin, that S. Ambrose wrote the treatise 'De Institutione Virginis.' She is the 'sancta soror,' the 'holy sister' of Lett. liv.

AMBROSE TO EUSEBIUS.

1. THE Secretary of the Prefecture, who had got into trouble on account of the works at Portus[236] is now safe in port. He came at the right moment, for as soon as I received your letters I saw the Prefect, and interceded for him; and he immediately pardoned him, and ordered the letter which he had dictated for the sale of his goods to be recalled. Even if his arrival had been less speedy, no man would more readily have admitted the embarrassments attending that work of repairing the port than he who would have made shipwreck therein had he not had you for his pilot; and from whence he could otherwise only have escaped with his bare life.

2. The little Faustinus is suffering from a cough, and has come to his holy sister to be cured, and came willingly, for he found that the complaint of his stomach is better cared for here. He also considers me to be a physician and looks to me for his dinner. So he has his medicine here twice a day, and he had begun to get strong, but while from their too great love they keep him away, his stomach-cough has returned, worse than before, and unless he returns to his medicines he will still suffer from it.

Farewell: love me, for I also love you.

LETTER LV. A.D. 392.

AMBROSE TO EUSEBIUS.

1. THE two Faustinuses are herewith restored to you, the two little Ambroses stay with me. You have in the father what is best, in the younger son what is most agreeable; for you have at once the summit of virtue, and shew forth the grace of humility. I have what is intermediate between father and younger son. With you is the head of the whole family, and the continuous succession of a name handed down; with me remains that frugal mean which both depends upon the head, and has a common being with what follows it. You have him who is our common rest, who when he comes to me in my turn, smooths all the cares of my soul. You have him who alike by his life and works, and by his offspring has found favour with our Lord, you have him who in the storms of this world nourished Gen. viii. 11. a spiritual dove, to bring him the fruit of peace, anointed with the oil of chastity. Ib. 20. You have him who built an altar to the Lord, he whom God blessed together with his sons, and said unto them, Ib. ix. 1. Be fruitful and multiply; with whom He Ib. 9. established the covenant of His peace, that it might be unto Ib. 12. him and his sons for perpetual generations.

2. You have then one who is an heir of Divine benediction, a partner in grace, a sharer in righteousness. But take care, I beseech you, that this our husbandman Noah, Ib. 20. the good planter of the fruitful vineyard, does not become inebriated with the cup of your love and favour, as one filled with wine, and so indulge too long in rest, and then if haply he fall asleep the longing for our Shem awake him.

3. There also is Japhet the youngest of the brethren, Ib. 23. who with pious reverence may cover his father's nakedness, whom his father may see even in sleep and never dismiss from his remembrance, but keep him ever in his sight and in his bosom, and when he wakes may know Gen. ix. 24. what his younger son has done unto him. In Latin his name signifies 'health,' in that Ps. xlv. 3. grace is spread over his lips and over his life, wherefore God hath blessed him, because he, going backward, one may say, to Bologna, covered his father with the pious garment of charity, and shewed honour to piety; of whom also his father said, Gen. ix. 27. God shall enlarge Japhet, and he shall dwell in the tents of Shem. Wherefore also in the Ib. x. 1. enumeration of this generation he is preferred to his elder brother, he is substituted for him in the blessing: he is preferred in regard of honour to his name, he is substituted in regard of the prerogative of elder birth and the honour due to nature.

4. Now in Latin Shem signifies a 'name.' And truly is this Ambrose of ours a good name, in whose tents Japhet may be enlarged, Prov. xxii. 1. because a good name is rather to be chosen than great riches. Let him therefore also be blessed, let his name be above gold and silver, let the seed of Abraham be in his portion, let all his blessing rest on his posterity, and on the whole family of the just man. But no one is cursed, all are blessed, for blessed is the fruit of Sarah.

5. The Ambroses salute you, the beloved Parthenius salute you, so does Valentinian, disposed to humility, which is in Hebrew 'Canaan', Gen. ix. 26. being as it were the servant of his brother, to whom he has also given place as regards his name. And therefore he is like Nimrod, mighty in his double name, a great hunter upon the earth, of whom it is said; Ib. x. 9. Even as Nimrod the mighty hunter before the Lord. For being somewhat rude in intellect, but of great bodily strength, he surpasses in strength those whose genius he cannot equal; so that he would seem to carry with him the Comacine[237] rocks, and to resemble them in his outward appearance, being as he is somewhat like a bull, wrathful at being set aside, at being deprived of his paternal name, at being subjected, through an inhabitant of the capital, to one from Bologna, for he knows not the blandishments of infancy, and sprung without suffering injury from his nurse's bosom.

Farewell: love me for I love you.

LETTER LVI. A.D. 392.

A NOTE IN p. 71 gives a brief outline of the schism in the Church of Antioch up to the time of the Council of Aquileia, which made some efforts to bring about a settlement. Meletius was then succeeded by Flavian, so that there still remained two rival Bishops, Flavian and Paulinus. Another opportunity for closing the schism came at Paulinus' death, at the end of 388 A.D., but so far from allowing the wound to be so healed Paulinus on his death-bed consecrated Evagrius as his successor in violation of the Canons of Nicæa, (Theod. H.E. v. 23) which 'do not allow a Bishop to appoint his successor, but require all the Bishops of the province to be summoned to elect, and forbid consecration without at least three consecrating Bishops.' The western Bishops therefore continued to press Theodosius to call a Council to deal with the matter, which was accordingly assembled at Capua. Flavian, though ordered by the Emperor, did not appear, and the Council referred the question to the decision of Theophilus of Alexandria and the Bishops of Egypt who were not committed to either side, and in this letter S. Ambrose replies to Theophilus who had written to him that Flavian still refused to submit himself to their decision and again appealed to the Emperor, and urges him to summon Flavian once more, and endeavour to bring the matter to a peaceful issue, advising him to consult also Siricius, the Bishop of Rome. He points out that both parties rely rather on the weakness of their opponent's case than on the soundness of their own, and expresses a hope that an end may be put to the schism, and peace restored to the Church. Tillemont, in note 41 on the Life of S. Ambrose, discusses the date of the Synod of Capua, and fixes it at the end of A.D.

391, chiefly on the ground that Theodosius did not return to Constantinople from Milan till November of that year, while it must have been held before the disturbance in the west occasioned by the revolt of Arbogastes and the death of Valentinian, which took place in the spring of A.D. 392.

AMBROSE TO THEOPHILUS.

1. EVAGRIUS has no good ground for preferring his claim, Flavian has cause to fear, and therefore avoids the trial. Let our brethren pardon our just grief, for on account of these men the whole world is agitated, yet they do not sympathize with our grief. Let them at least patiently suffer themselves to be censured by those whom they perceive to have been for so long a time harassed by their obstinacy. For between these two who would agree upon nothing which appertains to the peace of Christ, a grievous discord has arisen and spread through the whole world.

2. To this shipwreck of pious peace the holy Council of Capua had at length opened an haven of tranquillity; that communion should be given to all throughout the East who profess the Catholic faith, and that the cause of these two men should be referred to the judgment of your Holiness, and to our brethren and fellow-bishops of Egypt, as assessors. For we deemed your judgment likely to be true, in that, having embraced the communion of neither party, it would be inclined by no favour towards either side.

3. But while we were hoping that by these most equitable decrees of the Council a remedy was now provided, and an end put to discord, your Holiness writes word that our brother Flavian has again had recourse to the aid of prayers, and to the support of Imperial Rescripts. And thus the toil of so many Bishops has been spent to no purpose; we must have recourse once more to the civil tribunals, to the Imperial Rescripts, once more must they cross the sea, once more, though weak in body, exchange their own country for a foreign soil, once more must the Holy Altars be deserted that we may travel to distant lands, once more crowds of indigent Bishops, whose poverty was before no burthen to them, but who now need external aid, must suffer want themselves, or at any rate use for their journey what else had fed the poor.

4. Meanwhile Flavian, alone exempt, as he fancies, from the laws, does not come when all others are assembled. The money-lender and debtor meet each other, these men alone cannot meet: Flavian by his own will deprives himself of Episcopal fellowship, and will not appear in person either at the Imperial order, or when cited by his brethren.

5. Nevertheless, even this cause of offence does not induce me to consider our brother Evagrius entirely in the right, although he seems to himself the more defensible either because Flavian avoids him, or because he thinks his opponent to be in no better case than himself, each of them relying more on the defects of his opponent's ordination than on the validity[238] of his own. We however would recall them to a better course, wishing them to be aided rather by the goodness of their own cause than by the defects of others.

6. Now since you have stated in your letter that some form may be devised touching this matter, whereby the discord of our brethren may be removed; and as the holy Synod has trusted the right of cognizance to the unanimous judgment of yourself and our other fellow-bishops from Egypt, it is fitting that you should again summon our brother Flavian, so that, if he should persist in not choosing to appear, you may then without prejudice to the decrees of the Council of Nice, and also of the Synod of Capua, take such measures for the preservation of general peace as may not destroy what has been built up: Gal. ii. 18. For if I destroy what I have built, or build again what I destroyed, I make myself a transgressor. Let the grace of that peace which has been obtained be thus preserved by all, and the refusal of either party to appear will not have the effect of frustrating it.

7. Moreover we are of opinion that it will be well for you to refer to our holy brother the Bishop of the Roman Church; for we do not doubt that what you shall determine he also will approve. For the resolution that is come to will be useful, and our peace and quiet will be secure, if such a decree is made by your advice as shall not create discord in our communion. And thus we also, receiving the series of your decrees, and assured that the Roman Church has given its undoubting approbation to what has been done, shall with gladness participate in the result of this trial.

LETTER ON THE CASE OF BONOSUS. A.D. 392 or 393.

THIS LETTER IS certainly not written by S. Ambrose, though included among his letters. The writer of it speaks of ‘our brother Ambrose.’ Tillemont discusses the authorship in a note, (45.) and makes it probable that it was written by Siricius.

The case of Bonosus had been brought before the Synod of Capua, and they had decided that it should be referred to the Bishops of Macedonia, under the presidency of Anysius Bishop of Thessalonica, as being his nearest neighbours. These Bishops seem to have written a letter to consult Siricius, the Bishop of Rome, and this is believed to be his reply, in which he declines to interfere with their decision, only adding a few remarks upon one point. Bonosus was Bishop of Sardica[239] in Illyria, and the founder of an obscure sect. They were accused of Photinianism, and Bonosus is called a fore-runner of Nestorius, but the Helvidian doctrines of which this letter speaks are the most clearly ascertained of their errors. The sect survived at least till the vith Century.

A LETTER CONCERNING THE DECIDING OF THE CASE OF BONOSUS, ACCORDING TO THE DECREE OF THE SYNOD OF CAPUA.

1. YOU have written to us a Letter concerning Bishop Bonosus in which, either from love of truth or from modesty, you enquire our opinion. But since it has been the judgment of the Council of Capua that those who are neighbours to Bonosus and his accusers should be assigned his judges, and specially the Macedonian Bishops, who, with the Bishop of Thessalonica, should judge of his acts and writings, we have to remark that the function of judging cannot appertain to ourselves. Otherwise, were the question of the Synod at this day still open, we might well have decided concerning these things which are included in what you have written at length. Having taken upon yourselves this judgment, it is now your part to form your decision on the whole question, to give no power of retreat or escape either to the accusers or the accused; for, being chosen by the Synod to conduct the examination, you have taken upon you its functions.

2. Again, when Bishop Bonosus, after your judgment, sent to our brother Ambrose to enquire his opinion whether he should break into and enter upon the church which was closed to him, he received for reply that he must do nothing rashly, that everything must be carried on modestly, patiently and in order, that nothing contrary to your decision must be attempted, that you, to whom the Synod had committed such authority, would appoint what appeared to you agreeable to justice. The first point therefore is that judgment should be given by those to whom the power of judging has been given; for you, as we have said, judge in place of the entire Synod; as to ourselves it does not befit us to judge as though by the authority of the Synod.

3. Assuredly we cannot deny that he is justly blamed concerning the sons of Mary, and that your Holiness deservedly repudiated the opinion that from the same Virgin womb, of which according to the flesh Christ was born, other offspring was produced. For the Lord Jesus would not have chosen to be born of a Virgin, if He had conceived she would be so wanting in continence as to suffer that birthplace of the Lord's Body, that palace of the eternal King, to be polluted by human intercourse. To propound such an opinion as this, what is it but to fortify the unbelief of the Jews who say that it was impossible He could be born of a Virgin, and who, thus confirmed by the authority of Christian Bishops, will strive with greater earnestness to overthrow the true faith?

4. What else can be the meaning of that text wherein the Lord says to His Mother of John the Evangelist, S. John xix. 26, 27. Woman, behold thy son, and again to John of Mary, Behold thy mother? With what purpose was it that while the Lord was hanging upon the cross and atoning for the sins of the world, He declared also the integrity of His Mother? Wherefore was it said but that unbelief might close its lips and be silent, nor dare to offer any insult to the Mother of the Lord? He therefore, in pronouncing upon and asserting His Mother's chastity, likewise bears witness that S. Matt. i. 18. she was only espoused to her husband Joseph; and that she was ignorant of that carnal commerce which is the accustomed right of the marriage bed; for, had it been that she was to conceive children of Joseph, He would not have chosen to separate her from the company of her husband.

5. But if this is not enough, the Evangelist has added his testimony, saying that the S. John xix. 27. disciple took her unto his own home. Did he then cause a divorce? Did he carry her off from her husband? How can he who reads this in the Gospel stagger and waver to and fro as one who has been shipwrecked?

6. This then is the testimony of the Son concerning His Mother's chastity, this is the rich heritage of Mary's immaculate Virginity, this is the consummation of the entire work. He spake thus, and Ib. 30. gave up the ghost, crowning the whole mystery with a good end of filial duty.

7. We have also read and perused the whole of the instructions, as well what relates to Senecio being joined with our brother and fellow-bishop Bassus in the government of his Church, as what relates to other matters, and we now look for the direction of your sentence.

LETTER LVII.

VALENTINIAN II. HAVING been murdered by Arbogastes, one of his Generals, the latter, not venturing to claim the empire for himself, set up Eugenius, who was really his puppet, as Emperor of the West. Theodosius temporised with him, till he should be fully prepared to attack him, and it was whilst he was thus for a time accepted as Emperor that S. Ambrose addressed this letter to him. He excuses himself in it for withdrawing from Milan when Eugenius came there, on the plea that he was bound to fear God rather than man, and reproves him for granting the restoration of their former revenues to the heathen temples, which Gratian and Valentinian had before refused, and exposes the futility of his plea that he was merely granting favour to his friends, reminding him that God sees the heart. He quotes at length the conduct of the Jews in the time of Antiochus, as recorded in the Book of Maccabees, as a precedent which Christians were bound to follow. At the same time he says that he is willing to address Eugenius in matters which do not affect his duty to God.

TO THE MOST GRACIOUS EMPEROR EUGENIUS, AMBROSE, BISHOP, SENDS GREETING.

1. I withdrew from Milan from fear of God, to Whom I am wont to refer, as far as I am able, all my acts, never turning my mind from Him nor making more account of any man’s favour than of the grace of Christ. By preferring God to every one else I wrong no man, and trusting in Him, I dare to tell your Majesties, the Emperors, my poor thoughts. Wherefore I will not refrain from saying to your most gracious Majesty what I never refrained from saying before other Emperors. And that I may preserve the order of events, I will touch one by one the points which relate to this transaction. The illustrious Symmachus, when prefect of the city, memorialised[240] the Emperor Valentinian the younger, of august memory, begging that he would command what had been withdrawn from the temples to be restored. He performed his part in accordance with his own wishes and mode of worship. It became me also, as Bishop, to recognize the duties of my office. I presented two petitions to the Emperors wherein I declared that a Christian man could not contribute to the expenses of the sacrifices; that I had not advised the withdrawal of the payments, but that I did advise that they should not be now decreed, and lastly, that he would seem to be giving rather than restoring these expenses to the images; for what he had not withdrawn, he could not be said to restore, but of his own free-will to give it for the uses of superstition. Lastly, if he had done so, he either must not come to the Church, or if he did, he would either not find a priest, or one who would withstand him. Nor could it be offered as an excuse that he was only a catechumen, for it is not lawful for catechumens to contribute to the expense of idols.

3. My petitions were read in the Consistory; Count Bauto, a man of the highest military rank, and Rumoridus, himself too of the same dignity, and from the first year of his boyhood attached to the Gentile worship, were present. Valentinian then listened to my suggestion, and did nothing but what our faith reasonably required. And they submitted to his officer.

4. Afterwards I openly addressed myself to the most gracious Emperor Theodosius, and hesitated not to speak to him face to face. He having received the intimation of a similar message from the Senate, although it was not the whole Senate who asked it, at length gave his consent to my suggestion, and so for some days I did not come near him, nor was he displeased thereat, for I did not act for my own advantage but for his profit, and that of my own soul also; Ps. cxix. 46. I was not ashamed to speak in the king's presence.

5. Once more an Embassy was sent from the senate to the Emperor Valentinian, of blessed memory, when he was in Gaul, but was able to extort nothing from him. At that time I was absent and had not written anything to him.

6. But when your Majesty assumed the reins of government it was found that this boon had been granted to men of eminence in the state but in religion heathens. And perhaps it may be said, your Majesty, that it is not a restitution to the temples on your part, but a boon to men who had deserved well of you. But the fear of God ought, you know, to lead us to act with constancy, as is done in the cause of liberty not only by priests but by those who serve in your armies or are reckoned among the provincials. Envoys petitioned you, as Emperor, for restitution to the temples, but you consented not; others again required it, but you resisted; yet subsequently you have thought fit to grant it as a boon to the petitioners themselves.

7. The Imperial power is indeed great, but let your Majesty consider the greatness of God; He sees all hearts, He scrutinizes the inmost conscience, He knows all things before they come to pass, He knows the secrets of your breast. You will not suffer yourselves to be deceived, and do you hope to hide anything from God? Has not this suggested itself to your mind? Although they urged their suit with such perseverance, ought not your Majesty from respect for the most high and true and living God, to have resisted still more perseveringly, and to have refused what was derogatory to the Divine law?

8. Who grudges your bestowing upon others whatsoever you chose? We do not pry closely into your munificence, nor are we jealous of the advantages of others; but we are the ministers of the Faith. How will you offer your gifts to Christ? your acts will be estimated by few, your wishes by all; whatever they have done will be ascribed to you, whatever they have not done to themselves. You are indeed Emperor, but you ought all the more to submit yourself to God. Else how shall the priests of Christ dispense your gifts?

9. There was a question of this kind in former times, and then persecution itself yielded to the faith of our fathers, and heathendom gave way. For 2 Macc. iv. 18 sqq. when the game that was used every fifth year was kept at Tyre, and the wicked king of Antioch had come hither to see it, Jason sent special messengers from Jerusalem, to carry three hundred silver drachms, and give them to the sacrifice of Hercules. But our fathers would not give the money to the heathen, but sent trusty persons to make declaration that such money was not to be devoted to sacrifices to the gods, for this was not convenient, but was to be applied to other expenses. And it was decreed that, forasmuch as Jason had said that the silver was sent for the sacrifice of Hercules, that which was sent ought to be so applied. And yet seeing that they who brought it pleaded in opposition, in their zeal and devotion, that it should not be employed for sacrifice but for other exigencies, the money was applied to build ships. They sent the money, that is, because they were compelled, but it was not applied to sacrifices, but to other public expenses.

10. Again, they who brought the money might have been silent, but they were led to violate secrecy because they knew whither it was being carried, and so they sent men who feared God, and who were to do their endeavour that the money might be applied to the equipment of ships, and not to the temple. Thus they entrusted the money to men who were to plead the cause of the Divine law, and He who cleanses the conscience was made Judge of the matter. If those who were in the power of others took these precautions, it cannot be doubted what it was your Majesty's duty to do. You, whom no man constrained, who were in no man's power, ought certainly to have referred for advice to the priest.

11. For my own part, although I was alone in the resistance I then made, still others both willed and advised it. Being thus bound by my own words both before God and before all men, I have felt that I had no other choice or duty but to consult for myself, for I could not properly trust to you. For a long time I stifled and concealed my grief, I gave no hint to any one, but now I am no longer at liberty to dissemble, or to be silent. And this was why, at the beginning of your reign, I made no reply to your letters, because I foresaw that what you have done would happen. Afterwards, when you found I did not answer, and sent to demand a reply, I said, 'The reason why I do not write is that I think it will be wrung from him[241].'

12. But when a just occasion for the exercise of my office arose, I both wrote and petitioned for those who were anxious on their own account, with a view of shewing that in the cause of God a due fear of Him affected me, and that I did not set a higher value on flattery than on my own soul; but that in the matters wherein petition is proper to be made to you, I paid just deference to your authority, as indeed it is written, Rom. xiii. 7. honour to whom honour, tribute to whom tribute. For seeing that I cordially deferred to a private person, how should I not defer to the Emperor? But as you desire deference to be shewn to yourselves, suffer us to defer to Him from Whom you would fain prove your authority to be derived.

LETTER LVIII. A.D. 393.

IN THIS LETTER S. Ambrose informs Sabinus that Paulinus and Therasia had resolved to give up all their wealth to the poor, and retire to Nola, and complains of the objections raised against such self-denial, ending with a mystical interpretation of David dancing before the ark.

AMBROSE TO SABINUS, BISHOP.

1. CREDIBLE information has reached me that Paulinus, the lustre of whose birth was inferior to none in the region of Aquitania, has sold both his own possessions and those of his wife, and entered upon a course of life which enables him to bestow upon the poor the property which has been converted into money; while he himself having become poor instead of rich, as one relieved of a heavy burden, has bid farewell to his home his country and his kindred, in order to serve God more diligently; and he is reported to have chosen a retreat in the city of Nola, to pass the rest of his days in avoiding the turmoil of life.

2. The lady Therasia too approaches closely to his zeal and virtue, and objects not to the resolve he has taken. Having transferred her own property to other owners, she follows her husband, and contented with his little plat of ground will console herself with the riches of religion and charity. Offspring they have none, and therefore desire to leave behind them good deeds.

3. When the great of the world hear this, what will they say? That a man of his family, his ancestry, his genius, gifted with such eloquence, should have seceded from the senate, that the succession of a noble family should become extinct, such things, they will say, are not to be borne. And though they, when they perform the rites of Isis, shave their heads and eyebrows, they nevertheless call it an unworthy deed should a Christian man out of zeal for holy religion change his habit.

4. Truly I grieve that, while falsehood is so respected, there should be such negligence as regards the Truth, that many are ashamed of seeming too devoted to our holy religion, not considering His words Who says, S. Matt. x. 33. S. Mark viii. 38. Whosoever shall be ashamed of[242] Me before men, of him will I also be ashamed[243] before My Father Which is in heaven. But Moses was not thus ashamed, for though invited into the royal palace he Heb. xi. 26. esteemed the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt. David was not thus ashamed when he 2 Sam. vi. 20. danced before the Ark of the testimony in the sight of all the people. Isaiah was not thus ashamed, Isa. xx. 4. when he walked naked and bare-foot through the people, proclaiming the heavenly oracles.

5. Viewed by the outward eye what can be a more unseemly spectacle than an imitation of the gestures of players, and a wreathing of the limbs after the manner of women? Lascivious dances are the companions of luxury and the pastime of wantonness. What did David himself mean by singing, Ps. xlvii. 1. O clap your hands together, all ye people? If we regard the bodily action we must suppose that he clapped his hands as if mingling with female dancers, and shouted with unseemly noise. Of Ezekiel too it is said, Ezek. vi. 11. Smite with thine hand, and stamp with thy foot.

6. But the things which viewed corporeally are unseemly, when viewed in regard to holy religion become venerable, so that they who blame such things will involve their own souls in the net of blame. Thus Michal reproves David for his dancing and says to him, 2 Sam. vi. 20. How glorious was the king of Israel to day, who uncovered himself to day in the eyes of his handmaids! And David answered her, Ib. 21, 22. It was before the Lord, which chose me before thy father, and before all his house to appoint me ruler over the people of the Lord, over Israel: therefore will I play before the Lord, and I will be yet more vile thus, and will be base in mine own sight, and of the maid-servants which thou hast spoken of, of them shall I be had in honour.

7. David therefore did not shrink from female censure, nor was he ashamed to hear their reproaches for his religious service. For he played before the Lord as being his servant, and was the more pleasing to Him in that he so humbled himself before God, as to lay aside his royal dignity and to offer to God the very lowest ministry, as though he were a servant. She also who censured such dancing was condemned to barrenness and had no children by the king, that she might not bring forth a proud offspring; and so, as it turned out, she obtained no continuance of descendants or of good deeds.

8. If any one is still doubtful, let him hear the testimony of the Gospel, for the Son of God said, S. Matt. xi. 17. We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced. Therefore were the Jews abandoned, because they danced not, nor clapped their hands, and the Gentiles were called in, who gave to God spiritual applause. Eccles. iv. 5. The fool foldeth his hands together and devoureth his own flesh, that is, he entangles himself in corporeal matters, and devours his own flesh, like prevailing death[244], and so he shall not find eternal life. But the wise man, who so holds up his works that they may S. Matt. v. 16. shine before his Father Which is in heaven, has not consumed his flesh but has raised it to the grace of the resurrection. This is that glorious dance of the wise man which David danced, and thus by the loftiness of his spiritual dancing he ascended even to the throne of Christ, that he might see and hear Ps. cx. 1. the Lord saying to his Lord, Sit Thou on My right hand!

9. Now if you are of opinion that this interpretation of the dancing has not been made unreasonably, do not spare yourself the trouble of reading a little further, in order that we may consider together the case of Isaiah, how, as is well known to you, Isa. xx. 4. he was uncovered, not in mockery but gloriously, in the sight of the assembled people, as one who reported with his own mouth the oracles of God.

10. But perhaps it may be said, Was it not then disgraceful for a man to walk wholly uncovered through the people, seeing that he must be met both by men and women? Must not the sight itself have shocked the eyes of all, especially of women? Do not we ourselves generally shrink from looking upon naked men? And are not men's persons concealed by garments that they may not offend the eyes of beholders by an unseemly spectacle?

11. In this I also acquiesce; but consider what it was this act represented, and what was set forth under this outward show; it was, that the young men and maidens of the Jews should be led away prisoners, and walk naked, Isa. xx. 3. like as My servant Isaiah, it is said, hath walked naked and barefoot. This might also have been impressed in words, but God chose to render it more expressive by example, that the sight itself might thus strike greater terror, and what they shrunk from in the person of the prophet, that they might dread for themselves. In which of the two then does the baseness most shock us; in the person of the prophet, or in the sins of those unbelievers which deserved to fall into this great misery of captivity?

12. But what if there was nothing worthy of reproach in the prophet's body? He indeed alluded not to corporeal but to spiritual things; for in his ecstasy of mind he says, not Ps. lxxxv. 8. I will hearken what I shall say, but, what the Lord God shall say in me. Nor does he consider whether he is naked or clothed. Again, Gen. ii. 25. Adam before his sin was naked, but knew not he was naked, because he was endued with virtue; Ib. iii. 7. after he had committed sin he saw that he was naked, and covered himself. Noah was uncovered, but he blushed not, because he was full of gladness and spiritual joy, while he who derided him for being naked, himself remained subject to the disgrace of perpetual baseness. Joseph too, that he might not be basely uncovered, Ib. xxxix. 12. left his garment, and fled away naked; now which of the two was base in this instance, she who kept another's garment, or he who put off his own?

13. But that it may be more fully evident that the prophets regard not themselves nor what lies at their feet, but heavenly things, when Stephen was stoned he saw Acts vii. 56. the heavens opened, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God; and therefore he felt not the blows of the stones, he regarded not his bodily wounds, but his eyes were fastened on Christ, he clung closely to him. So also Isaiah Isa. xx. 2. looked not on his own nakedness, but offered himself to be the organ of the Divine voice, that he might utter what God spake within him.

14. But be it supposed that he saw himself, could he not do that which he was commanded? Could he believe that to be base which God enjoined? Sarah, Gen. xviii. 12. because she laughed, was convicted of unbelief; Abraham was praised, Ib. xv. 6. because he doubted not the word of God; yea, he received a very great reward, because he believed that at God's command, Ib. xx. 3. even parricide might be piously committed.

15. What cause for shame then had the prophet here, when one thing was enacted, but that of which it was a figure was quite different? The Jews, being deserted by God for their wickedness, began to be vanquished by their enemies, and were fain to betake themselves to the Egyptians, to be a protection to them against the Assyrians, whereas had they consulted for good, they ought rather to have returned to the faith. The Lord, being angry, shews that their hope was vain in thinking that the offence against Him could be removed by a greater sin, for that very people in whom the Jews were trusting, were themselves to be vanquished. This was the meaning as regards the actual history.

16. But this history itself is a figure, signifying that he trusts in the Egyptians who is given up to impurity, and enslaved to wantonness. For no man abandons himself to excess but he who departs from the precepts of the true God. But as soon as a man waxes wanton, he begins to fall off from the true faith. And then he commits two grievous crimes, lassitude as regards the flesh, and sacrilege as regards the mind. He then who follows not the Lord his God ingulfs himself in impurity and lust, those pestilential passions of the body. But he who has engulfed and plunged himself in such wallowing places, falls also into the snare of unbelief; for Exod. xxxii. 6. the people sat down to eat and to drink, and required that gods should be made for them. Hereby the Lord teaches us that he who gives up his soul to these two kinds of vices, is stript of the garment, not of a woollen vest, but of living virtue; that clothing which is not temporal but eternal.

Farewell, love me, for I also love you.

LETTER LIX. A.D. 393.

S. AMBROSE HERE writes to Severus, Bishop of Naples, to tell him of one James, a presbyter of Persia, who was seeking a retreat from the world in Campania. This leads him to dwell on the contrast of the many troubles with which he is surrounded at Milan.

AMBROSE TO SEVERUS, BISHOP.

1. JAMES, our brother and fellow-presbyter, has come from the depths of Persia, and chosen the coast of Campania and your pleasant abodes for his resting-place. You see in what spot he has anticipated for himself the enjoyment of a haven sheltered, as it were, from the storms of this world, where, after his long toils, he may spend the remainder of his life.

2. For your coast, removed not only from danger, but from all tumult, fills the senses with tranquillity, and transports the mind from the fearful and raging billows of care to an honourable rest. So that those words of David concerning the holy Church, which belong in common to all, appear to be especially fitting and appropriate to yourselves; Ps. xxiv. 2. For He hath founded it upon the seas, and prepared it upon the floods. For a mind undisturbed by inroads of barbarians and the evils of war, has leisure for prayer, devotes itself to the service of God, cares for the things of the Lord, cherishes those things which belong to peace and tranquillity.

3. We meanwhile, exposed to the outbreaks of the barbarians and the storms of war, are tossing in the midst of troubles, and from these toils and dangers can only gather that those of our future life will be still more grievous. Wherefore that saying of the Prophet seems to accord with our condition, Hab. iii. 7. I saw the tents of Cushan in affliction.

4. For since I have now lived in the body fifty and three years, among the shadows of this world, whereby the truth of future perfection is obscured, and have already endured such heavy afflictions, am I not camping in the tents of Cushan, Ps. cxx. 5. and having my habitation among the dwellers of Midian? For these, owing to their consciousness of their darksome works, dread being judged even by mortal men, 1 Cor. ii. 15. but he that is spiritual judgeth all things, yet he himself is judged of no man.

Farewell, my brother; love me, as indeed you do, for I also love you.

LETTER LX. A.D. 393.

IN THIS LETTER S. Ambrose urges Paternus not to break the laws both of God and man by promoting a marriage between his son and his daughter's daughter, who were within the forbidden degree of relationship, and shews him what confusion would arise from such an union.

AMBROSE TO PATERNUS.

1. I HAVE read your greeting, my like-minded friend Paternus, but the question on which you ask my advice, wishing to marry your son to your grand-daughter by your daughter, is by no means paternal, but unworthy of you both as grand-father and as father. Consider therefore what it is you ask about, for in all that we wish to do, we ought first to investigate the nature of the deed, and then we shall be able to estimate whether it is worthy of praise or blame. For instance, carnal intercourse with women is a pleasure to some, physicians even say it is healthful to the body; but we must consider whether it be with a wife or a stranger, with a married or an unmarried woman. If a man have commerce with one who is espoused and given to him he calls it marriage; he who assails the chastity of one who belongs to another commits adultery, by the very name of which the temerity of the attempt is generally repressed. To slay an enemy is accounted a victory, to slay a criminal is justice, to slay an innocent man murder, and if a man is conscious of this he withholds his hand. Wherefore I beg that you also will consider what it is you propose.

2. You wish to arrange a marriage between our children. But I would ask whether you would have equals or those who are unequal joined together? if I mistake not, they are wont to be called 'pairs[245].' He who yokes oxen to the plough, or horses to the chariot, chooses pairs, that both their age and their form may harmonize, that there be no natural difference, nor blemish of diversity. You are proposing to unite your son and your grand-daughter by your daughter, that is, that he should marry his sister's daughter, true though it is that he was born of a different mother from his professed mother in law. Consider what restraint is implied in the very names; he is called her uncle, she is called his niece. Does not the very sound of the names[246] recal you, when the one has in it the sound of grand-father, and the other refers alike to uncle and to grand-father? How great again is the confusion of the other terms? You will be called both grand-father and father in law, she too will receive the different names of niece and daughter in law. The brother and sister also will exchange different names, she will be the mother in law of her brother, he the son in law of his sister. The niece will marry her uncle, and the affection of these your unstained offspring be exchanged for an irregular love.

3. On this point you tell me that the holy man your Bishop is looking for my sentiments. I cannot think or believe this. For if this were so, he would himself have chosen to write, but by not doing so he has intimated that he considers there is no ground for doubt upon the point. For how can there be any such doubt, when the prohibition of marriage between first cousins extends, according to the Divine law, to those who are related in the fourth degree. But this is the third degree, which even by the civil law seems to be excepted from the fellowship of marriage.

4. But let us first inquire what are the decrees of the Divine law, for you allege in your letters that an union between such persons must be considered as allowed by that Law, in that it is not forbidden. I however assert that it is actually forbidden; for seeing that first cousins are forbidden slighter familiarities, much more must I deem this forbidden which contains within it the bond of a much closer union. For he who affixes censure to lighter offences does not acquit but rather condemn heavier ones.

5. But if you consider it to be permitted because it is not specially forbidden, neither will you find it forbidden by the words of the Law that the father should take his daughter to wife. But is this lawful, merely because it is not forbidden? By no means; it has been interdicted by the law of nature, by that law which is in the hearts of each of us, by the inviolable rule of piety, on the ground of nearness of kin. How many things of this kind will you find which are not forbidden in the law promulgated by Moses, but which are yet forbidden by the voice of nature.

6. There are many things which are lawful, but which are not expedient, for 1 Cor. x. 23. all things are lawful, but all things are not expedient, all things are lawful, but all things edify not. If then the Apostle recalls us even from those things which edify not, how can we imagine that may be done which is not permitted by the oracle of the Law, and which edifies not, because it differs from the rule of piety? Yet those very things in the old Law which were more severe were mitigated by the Gospel of the Lord Jesus. 2 Cor. v. 17. Old things are passed away, behold, all things are become new.

7. What is so usual as a kiss between an uncle and a niece, which he owes to her as a daughter, she to him as a parent? Will you therefore cast suspicion on this kiss of unoffending piety by proposing such a union, will you deprive your beloved offspring of a sacrament so venerable?

8. But if the Divine law pass by you unheeded, at least the laws of Emperors, from whom you have received such ample honours, ought not to have been so disregarded. Now the Emperor Theodosius forbad even cousins by either the fathers' or mothers' side to be united under the name of marriage, and affixed a severe penalty upon any rash union of brothers' children. And yet these are equal as regards each other, but, as they are bound together by the ties of mankind and brotherly union, he would have them owe their birth to piety.

9. But you will say this rule has been relaxed in favour of some. The law however is not prejudiced thereby, for that which is [not][247] enacted for general use is only profitable to him in whose favour the relaxation takes place, and so the odium is much less. Now although we read in the Old Testament of one calling his wife his sister, it is unheard of that any man should marry his niece and call her his wife.

10. It is indeed a curious plea which leads you to assert that your grand-daughter is not connected with your son, her uncle, by any close bond, merely because they have no relationship by the father's side[248]. As if an uterine brother and sister, born that is, of the same mother but by a different father, would be united together when of a different sex, for as much as they have no relationship by the father's side[249], but are only united to each other by the mother's side[250].

11. You ought therefore to relinquish your intention, which, even were it lawful, would not tend to propagate your family, for your son owes to us grand-children, your dear grand-daughter owes to us great-grand-children.

Farewell to you and all yours.

LETTER LXI. A.D. 394.

THIS LETTER WAS addressed to Theodosius after his victory over Eugenius. S. Ambrose in it explains his absence from Milan, and after expressing his gratitude to God for His blessing on the arms of Theodosius, urges the Emperor to a merciful use of his victory.

AMBROSE TO THE EMPEROR THEODOSIUS.

1. YOU seem to have supposed, most blessed Emperor, as I understood from your Majesty's letters, that I had removed to a distance from Milan because I believed your cause was forsaken by God. But in my absence I was not so foolish, nor so unmindful of your virtues and good deeds, as not to feel sure that the assistance of heaven would aid your piety, and assist you to rescue the Roman Empire from the cruelty of a barbarian robber, and the rule of an unworthy usurper.

2. Wherefore I made immediate haste to return, as soon as ever I was aware that he whom I thought it right to avoid was gone, for I had not deserted the Church of Milan, which the judgment of God had committed to me, but I shunned the presence of one who had involved himself in sacrilege. So I returned about the first of August, and from that day I have been in residence here, and here your Majesty's letter[251] has found me.

3. Thanks be to our Lord God, Who has responded to your faith and piety, and revived among us the pattern of ancient sanctity, giving to us to see in our own times what we marvel at in the Lessons of Holy Scripture, so effectual a presence, I mean, of Divine aid in battle[252], that no mountain tops delayed your passage, no hostile arms presented any impediment.

4. For this you think I ought to give thanks to the Lord our God; and this I will willingly do, conscious of your good deeds. That victim is certainly pleasing to God, which is offered in your name; and how great faith and devotion does this evince! Other Emperors, as soon as ever they gain a victory, order triumphal arches or other badges of triumph to be erected, but your Clemency provides a victim for God, and desires that oblations and thanksgivings should be offered to the Lord by the priests.

5. I therefore, though unworthy and unequal to such an office, and to the offering of such prayers, will yet tell you how I have acted. I carried with me your Majesty's letter to the altar, and laid it thereon, bearing it in my hand, when I offered the Sacrifice; that so your faith might speak with my voice, and the Imperial letter itself might perform the functions of the priestly oblation.

6. Truly the Lord is merciful to the Roman Empire, seeing that He hath chosen such a prince and parent of princes, whose virtue and power, raised on so great and triumphant an eminence of dominion, is supported by such humility as to vanquish Emperors in valour and priests in humility. What shall I wish for, or what shall I desire? You possess everything; from your stores therefore I will obtain the sum of my wishes; your Majesty is pitiful, and has great clemency.

7. But I desire for you again and again an increase of mercy, than which the Lord hath given nothing more excellent; that by your clemency, the Church of God, as it rejoices in the peace and tranquillity of the innocent, so it may also rejoice in the absolution of the guilty. I would chiefly ask you to pardon those who have sinned for the first time. May the Lord preserve your Clemency. Amen.

LETTER LXII. A.D. 394.

IN THIS LETTER also S. Ambrose urges on Theodosius a merciful use of his victory, and appeals to him specially for some of the defeated party who had sought the protection of the Church. He acknowledges the greatness of the request, but pleads for it on the score of the divine favour which had been miraculously displayed in his behalf.

AMBROSE TO THE EMPEROR THEODOSIUS.

1. ALTHOUGH I lately wrote to your Clemency even a second time, still I was not satisfied to fulfil my duty of corresponding with you letter by letter; for your gracious benefits have so often laid me under obligation that by no services can I pay my debt to your Majesty, most blessed Emperor.

2. The very first occasion ought not therefore to have been omitted, but through your chamberlain I ought to have offered to you my thanks, and laid before you the expression of my duty; and this that my omitting to write previously might not seem to arise from sloth rather than necessity: I had also to inquire for some mode whereby I might offer to your Goodness my proper and dutiful greeting.

3. Rightly then do I send my son Felix the Deacon, to convey to you my letter, and to offer to you in my name both my dutiful respects, and also a memorial in behalf of those who, suing for mercy, have fled to the Church, the Mother of your piety. Their tears have constrained me to anticipate your Clemency's mind by my petition.

4. Our request is indeed a great one, but it is addressed to one on whom the Lord has bestowed unheard-of and wonderful things, to one whose mercifulness we have experienced, and whose piety we have as a hostage.

We confess then that we look for even more, for as you have surpassed yourself in valour, so also you must surpass yourself in pity. For your victory is considered to have been bestowed on you in the primitive manner, and miraculously, as it was on Moses, on holy Joshua the son of Nun, on Samuel and on David, not by human respect but by the outpouring of celestial grace. Wherefore we look for a measure of pity corresponding to that by means of which such a victory has been earned.

LETTER LXIII. A.D. 396.

THIS, THE LONGEST and latest, and certainly not the least interesting, of S. Ambrose's Letters, is addressed to the Church of Vercellæ, which, owing to intestine divisions, had been for some time without a Bishop. S. Ambrose first urges them to remember Christ's Presence among them, and to proceed to Election with that thought especially in their minds. He then speaks of two follows of Jovinian, Sarmatio and Barbatianus, who had introduced their evil doctrines among them, and so fostered divisions. This leads him to dwell at length on the evils of sensuality and the benefits of self-denial, on the profit of fasting, and the excellence of a virgin life, and bids them 'stand fast,' and not be led astray by false teachers. Then he recurs to the subject of the election of a Bishop, and bids them lay aside all evil feelings, and choose one worthy of so high an office, setting before them the examples of our Lord Himself, of Moses and Aaron. He then speaks of the qualities to be looked for in a true Bishop, and urges them to choose one worthy to succeed to the see of the holy martyr Eusebius, and, recurring to the examples of the old Testament, dwells on the history of Elijah. He ends by a general exhortation to all the Church of Vercellæ to the chief Christian virtues, after the model of S. Paul's Epistles, to which the outline of this letter bears a general resemblance. Some questions as to its genuineness have been alluded to in the notes. There seems no sufficient reason for doubting that it is a genuine letter of S. Ambrose. It is thoroughly Ambrosian in style and method, and in its treatment of Scripture, especially of the history of the old Testament and of the lives of the great saints of the old dispensation. It was written not more than a year before S. Ambrose's death.

AMBROSE, SERVANT OF CHRIST, CALLED TO BE BISHOP, TO THE CHURCH OF VERCELLÆ, AND TO THEM WHO CALL ON THE NAME OF THE LORD JESUS CHRIST, GRACE UNTO YOU FROM GOD THE FATHER AND HIS ONLY-BEGOTTEN SON BE FULFILLED IN THE HOLY SPIRIT.

1. I AM overcome by grief that the Church of the Lord, which is among you, has still no Bishop, and alone in all the regions of Liguria and Æmilia, of Venetia[253] and the adjacent parts of Italy, stands in need of those ministrations which other Churches were wont to ask at her hands, and, what causes me still more shame, the contention[254] which causes this delay is ascribed to me. For as long as there are dissensions among you, how can either we determine anything, or you make your election, or any man accept the election, so as to undertake among men who are at variance an office difficult to bear the weight of, even among those that agree?

2. Are you the scholars of a confessor, are you the offspring of those righteous fathers, who as soon as they saw holy Eusebius[255], though before he was unknown to them, put aside their own countrymen, and forthwith approved of him; and required no more than the sight of him for their approval? Rightly did he who was chosen unanimously by the Church, turn out so eminent a man, rightly was it believed that he whom all demanded was chosen by the judgment of God. It is fitting therefore that you follow the example of your fathers, especially since it behoves you, who have been trained by so holy a Confessor, to be better than your fathers, forasmuch as you have been trained and taught by a better preceptor; and to show forth a visible sign of your moderation and concord, by unanimously agreeing to the choice of a Bishop.

3. If the Lord has said, S. Matt. xviii. 19, 20. If two of you shall agree as touching any thing that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of My Father which is in heaven: For where two or three are gathered together in My name, there am I in the midst of them; how much less, when many are assembled in the name of the Lord, where all agree together in their petitions, how much less ought we in any wise to doubt that there the Lord Jesus will be present to inspire their will and grant their petition, to preside over the ordination and confer the grace?

4. Make yourselves therefore worthy that Christ should stand in the midst of you; for wheresoever is peace there is Christ, for Christ is Eph. ii. 14. Peace; wheresoever is righteousness there is Christ, for Christ is 1 Cor. i. 30. Righteousness. Let Him stand in the midst of you, that you may see Him, that it be not said to you also, S. John i. 26. There standeth One among you, Whom ye know not. The Jews saw Him not, for they believed not on Him; we behold Him by devotion, and Him by faith.

5. Let Him therefore stand in the midst of you, that you may have the Ps. xix. 1. heavens which declare the glory of God, opened to you; that you may do His will and work His works. The heavens are opened to him who sees Jesus, as they were opened to Stephen, when he said, Acts vii. 56. Behold I see the heavens opened, and Jesus standing at the right hand of God. Jesus stood as an intercessor, He stood, as being eager to assist His soldier Stephen in his combat; He stood as being prepared to crown His martyr.

6. Let Him therefore stand in the midst of you, that you may not fear Him when seated on His throne, for seated thereon He will judge, according to the saying of Daniel, Dan. vii. 9, 10. I beheld till the thrones were cast down, and the books were opened, and the Ancient of days did sit. And in the 82nd Psalm it is written, Ps. lxxxii. 1. God standeth in the congregation of princes, He decideth among gods. So then being seated He judges, standing He decides. He judges concerning them that are not perfected, He decides among the gods. Let Him stand for you as a Defender, as the good Shepherd, that cruel wolves may not attack you.

7. Nor is it without reason that my admonition directs itself to this point; for I hear that Sarmatio and Barbatianus[256] have come among you, vain boasters, who assert that there is no merit in abstinence, no grace in a strict life, none in virginity, that all are to be rated at one price, that they who chastise their flesh, in order to bring it into subjection to the body, are beside themselves. But had the Apostle Paul thought it a madness, he never would have practised it himself, nor written it for the instruction of others. Yet he thus glories, saying, 1 Cor. ix. 27. But I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection, lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself be found a reprobate[257]. So that they who chastise not their own bodies, yet would fain preach to others, are themselves accounted reprobates.

8. For is there aught so reprobate[258] as that which excites us to impurity, to corruption, to wantonness? as the fuel of lust, the enticer to pleasure, the nurse of incontinence, the incentive of desire? What new school has sent forth these Epicureans? No school of philosophers, as they affirm, but of ignorant men who are setters forth of pleasure, who persuade to luxury, who hold chastity to be useless. 1 S. John ii. 19. They were with us, but they were not of us, for we blush not to say what the Apostle John said. It was when placed here that they first fasted, within the monastery they were under restraint; there was no room for licence, all opportunity of jesting and altercation was cut off.

9. This these men of delicacy could not bear. They departed, and when they desired to return were not received, for I had heard many things concerning them against which it behoved me to be on my guard; I admonished them, but in vain. Thus they began to boil over and spread abroad what might prove the miserable incentives of all kinds of vice. Thus they lost the fruits of their fasting, they lost the fruits of having contained themselves a little while. And now with Satanic malice they envy others those good works, the fruits of which they have themselves lost.

10. What virgin can hear without grieving that her chastity will have no reward? Far be it from her readily to give credence to this, still less let her lay aside her earnestness, or change the intention of her mind. What widow, were she to find her widowhood profitless, would choose to preserve inviolate her first marriage-vow, and live in sorrow, instead of allowing herself to be comforted? What wife is there who hearing that no honour is due to chastity, might not be tempted by unwatchful heedlessness of mind or body? And that is why the Church, in her sacred Lessons, in the discourses of her priests, daily sends forth the praises of chastity, the glory of virginity.

11. Vainly then has the Apostle said, 1 Cor. v. 9. I wrote to you in an Epistle not to company with fornicators: and lest perhaps they should say, 'We speak not of the fornicators of this world, but we say that he who has been baptized into Christ ought not to be deemed a fornicator, but whatever his life may be, it will be accepted by God,' the Apostle has added; 1 Cor. v. 10. Yet not altogether with the fornicators of this world, and below, Ib. 11, 12. If any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such an one no not to eat. For what have I to do to judge them also that are without? And to the Ephesians, Eph. v. 3. But fornication, and all uncleanness or covetousness, let it not once be named among you, as becometh saints, adding straightway, Ib. 5. For this ye know, that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God. This, it is plain, is said of the baptized, for they receive an inheritance who are baptized into the death of Christ, and are Rom. vi. 3. buried together with Him, that they may rise together with Him. Wherefore they are Ib. viii. 17. heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ, heirs of God because the Grace of God is conveyed to them, and coheirs of Christ because they are renewed according to His life; heirs also of Christ because by His Death He grants to them as Testator His inheritance.

12. Now such as these, who have somewhat to lose, ought more to take heed to themselves than they who have nothing. These ought to act with greater caution, to avoid the snares of vice and the incentives to sin, which chiefly arise out of meat and drink. 1 Cor. x. 7. Exod. xxxii. 6. The people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play.

13. Even Epicurus himself, whose example these men prefer to that of the Apostles, he, the champion of pleasure, while he denies that it produces evil, denies not that certain consequences flow from it, from which evils are generated: he maintains too that not even the life of the licentious, which is filled with pleasures of this kind, can be said to be objectionable, unless it be assailed by the fear of pain or death. How far removed he is from the truth, may be discovered even from this, that he declares pleasure to be the work of God in man as its originator, as his follower Philomarus[259] maintains in his Epitomes, Gen. iii. 1–4. referring this opinion to the Stoics as its authors.

14. But this is refuted by holy Scripture, which teaches us that pleasure was instilled into Adam and Eve by the snares and enticements of the Serpent. For the Serpent itself is pleasure, and, in accordance with this, the passions of pleasure are various and slippery, and infected by the poison, so to speak, of corrupt enticement. Hence it is plain that Adam, deceived by the sensual appetite, fell from his obedience to God, and the reward of grace. How then can pleasure recal us to Paradise, when it alone cast us out of Paradise?

15. Wherefore the Lord Jesus, willing to strengthen us against the S. Matt. iv. 2. temptations of the Devil, fasted before His combat, to teach us that otherwise we cannot conquer the snares of evil. Moreover, the Devil himself employed the force of pleasure in launching the first dart of his temptations, saying, Ib. 3. If Thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread. To which the Lord replies, Ib. 4. Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God; nor would He do it, although within His power, that He might teach us by this wholesome precept to attend rather to love of reading, than to pleasure. Now seeing they deny that we ought to fast, let them be prepared with some reason why Christ fasted, unless it were that His fast might be an example to us. Lastly in a subsequent instance He has taught us that except by fasting evil cannot easily be conquered. These are His words, Ib. xvii. 21. This kind of evil spirits goeth not out but by prayer and fasting.

16. Or what can be the meaning of Scripture which teaches that Acts x. 10. Peter fasted, and that it was while he was fasting and praying that the mystery of the baptism of the Gentiles was revealed to him? what but to convince us that the Saints themselves by fasting are advanced in virtue? Exod. xxxiv. 28. It was while fasting that Moses received the Law, and in like manner, Peter, while fasting, was taught the grace of the New Testament. To Daniel also it was vouchsafed through fasting to Dan. vi. 22. stop the mouths of the lions, and Ib. ix. 2. to behold the events of times to come. Lastly, what hope of salvation can there be for us, unless by fasting we wash away our sins, since Scripture says, Tobit xii. 8, 9. Fasting and alms purge away sin?

17. Who then are these new teachers who deny the merit of fasting? Are they not heathen words which say, Let us eat and drink? And well does the Apostle tell them, saying, 1 Cor. xv. 32. If after the manner of men I have fought with the beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me, if the dead rise not? let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die. That is to say, What did it profit me to contend even unto death, save that I might redeem my body? For in vain is it redeemed if there is no hope of the resurrection. If therefore all hope of this is to be abandoned, let us eat and drink, let us not lose the fruit of things present, seeing that future things are not within our grasp. It is for those then to indulge in meat and drink, who have nothing to hope for after death.

18. Lastly, the Epicureans, the champions of pleasure, assert that death is nothing to us: what is dissolved, they say, is insensible, and what is insensible is nothing to us. By this they show plainly that they live by the body only and not by the mind, and do not perform the functions of the soul but of the body only, in that by separation of soul and body they deem all their vital functions to be dissolved, the merits of their virtues and all vigor of their souls to perish, that with his bodily senses the whole man fails, and that, though the body itself is not immediately dissolved, the mind leaves not a relic behind it. Then they would have the soul perish sooner than the body, whereas even according to their own opinion they ought to remember that the flesh and bones remain after death; and, would they abide by the truth, they ought not to deny the grace of the resurrection.

19. Well therefore does the Apostle, confuting these persons, admonish us not to be overthrown by such opinions, saying, Ib. 33, 34. Be not deceived, evil communications corrupt good manners. Be sober[260] unto righteousness and sin not; for some are ignorant of God. To be sober then is good, for drunkenness is sin.

20. But to Epicurus, this advocate of pleasure, him of whom we make such frequent mention, in order to prove that these men are disciples of the heathens, and follow either the sect of the Epicureans or the man himself who was excluded even by philosphers from their company as the pattern of luxury, what if we can prove even him to be more tolerable than these men? Now he asserts, as Demarchus[261] tells us, that it is not drinking-bouts, nor banquettings, nor the birth of sons, nor the embraces of women, nor a large supply of fish and such delicacies provided for sumptuous feasts, it is not these which make life sweet, but sober discourse. He added also that they who are not excessive in seeking the dainties of the table, are moderate in the use of them. The man who cheerfully limits himself to the juices of plants and to bread and water, despises delicate feasts, for from these arise many evils. Elsewhere too they say that it is not excessive banquets and revels which make pleasure sweet, but a temperate life.

21. Seeing then that philosphy has renounced these men, shall not the Church exclude them? They themselves too, as is usual in a bad cause, often attack themselves by their own arguments. For although it be their main opinion, that there is no sweetness of pleasure but that which arises from eating and drinking; yet, perceiving that they cannot lay down so shameful a definition without the utmost disgrace, and that none stand by them, they have sought to disguise it under the gloss of colourable arguments, and thus one of them has said, In seeking pleasure by means of feasting and song, we have lost that which is derived from hearing that Word whereby alone we can be saved.

22. Do we not then perceive in this complicated discussion how inconsistent and variable these men are? Scripture condemns them, for it has not passed over those whom the Apostles confuted, as Luke records in the Acts of the Apostles, which he has written in narrative style, Acts xvii. 18. Then certain philosophers of the Epicureans[262], and of the Stoics encountered him. And some said, What will this babbler say? other some, He seemeth to be a setter forth of strange gods.

23. Yet not even from this number did the Apostle part devoid of success. For Dionysius the Areopagite, and Damaris his wife, with many others, believed. And thus by their acts this assembly of the learned and eloquent proved themselves vanquished by the simple discourse of the faithful. What then do these men mean by attempting to pervert those whom the Apostle has won, and Christ redeemed with His own blood, insisting that the baptized have no need to apply themselves to the exercise of virtue; that they are not injured by revellings, by excess of pleasure; that they who deprive themselves of such things are foolish; that virgins ought to marry and bear children; widows also ought to renew that carnal commerce which they had better never have known; and that although they might be able to contain themselves they are mistaken in refusing again to enter into the bond of marriage?

24. What then? Shall we put off the man and put on the beast? shall we strip off Christ, and be clothed over and over with the garments of Satan? The very heathen sages held that pleasure was not to be esteemed honourable, lest they should seem to couple men with brutes, and can we instil the habits of animals into the human breast, and engrave on the rational mind the irrational instincts of wild beasts?

25. Yet there are many kinds of animals, who when they have lost their mate, will no longer copulate, but lead, as it were, a solitary life. Many also feed on simple herbs and only quench their thirst in the pure stream; you may also often see dogs refuse food which they have been forbidden, and, if bid to refrain, close up their hungry jaws. Do men then require to be recalled from that in which even mute animals have learnt from man's teaching not to transgress[263]?

26. But what is more excellent than abstinence, which makes even the years of youth to be old, and produces an old age of conduct? For as by excess of food and drunkenness even old age is inflamed, so on the other hand, the insolence of youth is restrained by sparing food and by the flowing stream. Fire without us is quenched by the pouring on of water, no wonder then if even internal heat is allayed by draughts from the brook; for the flame is nourished or fails, according as it is fed or not. As hay, stubble, wood, oil, and the like are the fuel of fire, and feed it, and if you withdraw or do not supply them the fire is quenched, so also the warmth of the body is nourished or diminished by food; by food it is excited and by food allayed. Gluttony therefore is the mother of lust.

27. And shall we not say that temperance is accordant with nature, and with that Divine law, which in the very origin of all things, gave us to drink of the fountains and to eat of the fruit of trees? Gen. ix. 20. After the flood the just man found himself tempted by wine. Wherefore let us use the natural drink of temperance, and would that we all could do so. But since we are not all strong, the Apostle says, 1 Tim. v. 23. Use a little wine for thine often infirmities. It is to be drunk then because of infirmity not for pleasure, and therefore as a remedy, sparingly, not as a luxury, profusely.

28. Again, Elijah, when the Lord God was training him to the perfection of virtue, found 1 Kings xix. 6. a cake baken on the coals, and a cruse of water at his head; Ib. 8. and in the strength of that meat he fasted forty days. Our fathers, when they passed over the sea on foot, Exod. xvii. 6. drank water, not wine. It was Dan. i. 8; xiv. 30; iii. 40. when fed on their homely food and drinking water, that Daniel repressed the rage of the lions, and the Hebrew children saw the fiery furnace playing round their limbs with harmless flames.

29. And why should I speak of men only? Judith xiii. 16. Judith, in no wise moved by the luxurious banquet of Holofernes, won a triumph which men's arms had found desperate, by the sole merit of her temperance, delivering her country from invasion, and slaying with her own hand the captain of the host: a manifest example both that this warrior dreaded by the people had become enervated by his luxury, and that temperance in food had made this woman stronger than men. It was not in her sex that she surpassed nature, but by her spare diet she conquered. Esther iv. 16; v. 2. Esther obtained favour from the proud king by her fasts. Anna, S. Luke ii. 37. a widow of about fourscore and four years, serving in the temple with fastings and prayers night and day, came to the knowledge of Christ, and S. Matt. iii. 4. John the Teacher of abstinence, and, as it were, a new Angel upon earth, was His herald.

30. O foolish Elisha! 2 Kings iv. 39. to feed the prophets with wild and bitter gourds; O Ezra[264] Ezra viii.2. Neh. viii. 2. unmindful of Scripture though from memory thou dost restore Scripture! O senseless Paul, 2 Cor. xi. 27. to glory in fasting, if fasting avails nothing!

31. But how can that not profit whereby our vices are purged? And if you offer it together with humility and mercy, then, as Isaiah has said by the Divine Spirit, Is. lviii. 11. thy bones shall be made fat, and thou shalt be like a watered garden! Thy soul then is fattened, and its virtues are enriched by the spiritual fat of fasting, and thy fruits are multiplied by the richness of thy mind, that thou mayest be made drunk, as it were, with soberness[265], as is that cup whereof the Prophet speaks, Ps. xxiii. 5. Vulg. And my cup which inebriateth me, how goodly is it!

32. But not only is that temperance praiseworthy which is sparing in food, but that also which restrains desires. For it is written, Ecclus. xviii. 30, 31. Go not after thy lusts, but refrain thyself from thine appetites. If thou givest thy soul the desires that please her, she will make thee a laughing stock to thine enemies! and again, Ib. xix. 2. Wine and women will make men of understanding to fall away! 1 Cor. vii. 4. Hence Paul teaches temperance even in marriage; for he who commits excess therein is, as it were, an adulterer, and violates the Apostolical law.

33. But how can I express the greatness of the grace of virginity, which was counted worthy to be chosen by Christ, to be the bodily temple of God, wherein dwelt, as we read, Col. ii. 9. the fulness of the Godhead bodily! A virgin conceived the Saviour of the world, a virgin brought forth the Life of the universe. Ought not then virginity to be above all other states[266] which was profitable to all in Christ? A virgin bore Him Whom this world cannot contain or support. He, born of the womb of Mary, preserved inviolate her chastity, and the seal of her virginity. Therefore Christ found in the Virgin what He would take for His own, what the Lord of all would assume to Himself. By the woman and the man our flesh was cast out of Paradise, by the Virgin it was re-united to God.

34. And what shall I say of the other Mary[267], Exod. xv. 20. the sister of Moses, who, leading the female band, passed on foot over the straights of the sea? By the same grace Thecla was reverenced even by lions, so that the unfed beasts, lying at the feet of their prey, underwent a holy fast, neither with wanton look nor sharp claw venturing to harm the virgin, for even by a look the sanctity of virginity is profaned.

35. Again, with what reverence has the holy Apostle spoken, 1 Cor. vii. 25. Now concerning virgins I have no commandment of the Lord, yet I give my judgement as one that hath obtained mercy of the Lord. Commandment he has not, but counsel; for that which is above the Law is not commanded, but counselled and advised. Nor is any authority assumed, but grace is shewn, and that not by any chance person, but by him who hath obtained mercy of the Lord. Are then the counsels of these men better than those of the Apostles? The Apostle says, I give my counsel, but they dissuade all from leading a virgin's life.

36. And we ought to wonder at the greatness of the commendation of it which the Prophet, or rather Christ in the person of the Prophet, has expressed in one short verse. Cant. iv. 12. A garden inclosed is my sister, my spouse, a spring shut up, a fountain sealed. Christ says this to the Church, whom He would have Eph. v. 27. a virgin without spot or wrinkle. Virginity is a fertile garden, which bears many fruits of a good odour; a garden inclosed because it is surrounded on all sides with the wall of chastity; a fountain sealed, in that virginity is the fountain and source of modesty, and that which keeps unbroken the seal of purity; that fountain wherein is reflected the image of God, since with chastity of body accords likewise holy simplicity.

37. Nor can any one doubt that the Church herself is a virgin, whom even at Corinth the Apostle Paul espoused, that he 2 Cor. xi. 2. might present her a chaste virgin to Christ. Thus in his 1 Cor. vii. first Epistle he gives counsel and sets a high value on the gift of virginity, for that it is not disquieted by the needs of this present world, nor defiled by its corruptions, nor agitated by its storms. In the latter he espouses the Corinthians to Christ, that so, in the purity of that people, he may ratify the virginity of the Church.

38. Answer me now, O Paul, in what way Ib. 26. for the present distress dost thou give counsel? Ib. 32. He that is unmarried, thou sayest, careth for the things that belong to the Lord, how he may please the Lord, adding further, Ib. 34. the unmarried woman careth for the things of the Lord, that she may be holy both in body and spirit. She has therefore a bulwark against the storms of this world, and thus shielded and fortified by the Divine protection she is disquieted by none of the blasts of this world. Ib. 35. Counsel then is good, because therein lies profit, but in commandment is a bond[268]. Counsel leads forward the willing, commandment binds the reluctant. So that if any follow this counsel, and repent not, she hath profited; on the other hand, if she change her purpose, she hath no ground to accuse the Apostle, for she ought to have judged better of her own weakness, and thus she is responsible to herself for her own choice, for she has bound herself by a bond and knot heavier than she can bear.

39. Wherefore, as a good physician, who desires both to preserve for the strong the stability of their virtue, and to restore health to the weak, he gives to the one counsel, to the other a remedy; Rom. xiv. 2. Whoso is weak, let him eat herbs; let him take a wife; he that is stronger, let him use the strong meat of continence. And he well adds; 1 Cor. vii. 37–40. He that standeth stedfast in his heart, having no necessity, but hath power over his own will, and hath so decreed in his heart that he will keep his virgin, doeth well. So then he that giveth her in marriage doeth well, but he that giveth her not in marriage doeth better. The wife is bound by the law as long as her husband liveth; but if her husband be dead she is at liberty to be married to whom she will; only in the Lord. But she is happier if she so abide, after my judgment, and I think also that I have the Spirit of God. Now having the counsel of God consists in examining all things diligently, in urging what is best, and pointing out what is safest.

40. A careful guide points out many ways, that each person may walk on which he will, and which he finds suitable for himself: provided only he lights on one which will lead him into the camp. Good is the way of virginity, but, being lofty and steep, it requires the stronger sort. Good too is the way of widowhood, not so difficult as the former, but, being rocky and rough, it requires the more cautious sort. Good too is the way of matrimony, but, being smooth and direct, it arrives by a longer circuit at the camp of the faithful, and this way is trodden by the larger number. We have therefore the rewards of virginity, the merits of widowhood, there is also a place for conjugal chastity. They are the degrees and advances of several virtues.

41. Stand stedfast therefore in your hearts, that no man may unsettle or overthrow you. The Apostle has taught us what ‘to stand’ signifies, that is, what was said to Moses, Exod. iii. 5. For the place whereon thou standest is holy ground; for no one stands but he who stands by faith, who stands firm in the resolution of his heart. In another place too we read, But as for thee, stand thou here by Me. Both are addressed to Moses by the Lord, both Deut. v. 31. the place whereon thou standest is holy ground, and stand thou here by Me, that is to say, 'thou standest with Me, if thou standest in the Church. For the place itself is holy, the land itself bears the fruit of holiness, and is rich with the haunts of virtue.'

42. 'Stand therefore in the Church, stand where I appeared to thee, there I am with thee. For where the Church is, there is the most secure resting-place for thy soul; there is the support of thy mind, when I appeared to thee out of the bush. Thou art the bush, I am the fire: the fire in the bush, and I in the flesh. And therefore am I the fire, that I may give thee light, that I may burn up thy thorns, that is, thy sins, and discover to thee My grace.'

43. Stand firm therefore in your hearts, and drive away from the Church those wolves which seek to carry off prey. Let there be no sloth in you, nor an evil mouth or bitter tongue. Sit not with vain persons, for it is written, Ps. xxvi. 4. I have not dwelt with vain persons. Listen not to those who detract from their neighbours, lest, hearing others, ye be yourselves excited to do likewise, and it be said to each of you, Ib. l. 20. Thou satest and spakest against thy brother.

44. Sitting we speak against others, but standing up we praise the Lord, as it is said; Ps. cxxxiv. 1, 2. Behold now, praise the Lord, all ye servants of the Lord; ye that stand in the house of the Lord. He who sits, to speak of the habit of the body, is, as it were, dissolved by ease, and relaxes the energy of his mind. But the careful watchman, the unwearied scout, the wakeful sentinel who keeps the outposts of the camp, these stand. The brave warrior also, who would prevent the designs of his enemy, stands[269] ready in his rank ere he is looked for.

45. 1 Cor. x. 12. Let him that standeth take heed lest he fall. He who stands is free from detraction, for it is by the talk of the idle that slander is disseminated and rancour displayed. Wherefore the Prophet says, Ps. xxvi. 5. I have hated the congregation of the wicked, and will not sit among the ungodly. And in the 37th Psalm, which is full of moral precepts, he has placed in the very outset, Ib. xxxvii. 1. Be not malignant among them that are malignant, neither be thou envious against the evil-doers. Malignity does more harm than malice, for its property is neither pure simplicity nor open malice; but a hidden malevolence, and it is more difficult to guard against what is concealed than against what is known; and so our Saviour bids us beware of evil spirits, for they captivate us by the outward show of charming pleasures, and the false show of other things, holding forth honour as a lure to ambition, wealth to riches, power to pride.

46. Wherefore in every act, but especially in the search after a Bishop, by whose model the life of all is formed, malignity ought to be absent, that by a composed and peaceful exercise of judgment he may he preferred to all who is to be chosen from all and who may heal all. For Prov. xiv. 30. LXX. a gentle-minded man is the physician of the heart, of that whereof our Lord also in the Gospel has professed Himself a Physician, S. Matt. ix. 12. They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick.

47. He is the good Physician, Who has taken upon Him our infirmities, Who has healed our sicknesses, and yet He, as it is written, Heb. v. 5. glorified not Himself to be made an High Priest, but He that said unto Him, even the Father, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten Thee, as He saith also in another place, Thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedeck. And as He was to be the type of all priests, He took upon Him our flesh, that Ib. 7. in the days of His flesh, He might offer up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears unto God the Father, and though He were the Son of God, might even learn obedience from the things

He suffered, in order to teach us, that He might become to us the Author of salvation. Finally, having accomplished His sufferings, and being Himself made perfect, He gave health to all, He bore the sin of all.

48. Thus He Himself chose Numb. xvii. 8. Aaron the High Priest, that human ambition might not sway the choice, but the grace of God; no voluntary offering, nor taking upon himself, but a heavenly call, that he might offer gifts for sins, who could have compassion on sinners Heb. v. 2. for that he himself also, it is written, is compassed with infirmity. A man should not Ib. 4. take this honour to himself, but he that is called of God as was Aaron; so also Christ did not assume but received His priesthood.

49. And further, since the succession derived by descent from Aaron produced heirs of his race rather than partakers of his righteousness, therefore there came the antitype of that Ib. vii. 2, 3. Melchisedeck whom we read of in the Old Testament, the true Melchisedeck, the true King of Peace, the true King of Righteousness, for this is the interpretation of his name; being without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life, which also has reference to the Son of God, for in His Divine generation, He had no mother, and in His birth from the Virgin Mary He knew no father; Who, born of the Father alone before the world, and from the Virgin alone in the world, could have no beginning of days, for He was in the beginning. And how could He have any end to His life, Who is the Author of life to all? He is Rev. i. 8. the Beginning and the Ending. But this is referred to also by way of example, that a Bishop ought to be without father and without mother, in that it is not nobility of birth, but holiness of life and preeminence in virtue that is chosen in him.

50. Let him possess faith and ripeness of conduct, not one without the other, but let both continue in one, with good works and deeds. Wherefore the Apostle Paul wishes us to be imitators of those who Heb. xi. 9. by faith and patience possess the promises of Abraham, of him who by patience was counted worthy to receive and possess the grace of the blessing promised to him. The prophet David has admonished us that we ought to be imitators of holy Aaron, for he has proposed him to us, among the saints of the Lord, as an example for our imitation, saying, Ps. xcix. 6. Moses and Aaron among his priests, and Samuel among such as call upon His Name.

51. An example worthy to be followed by all truly was he, seeing that when death, owing to the rebels, was spreading among the people, Numb. xvi. 48. he placed himself between the living and the dead, thereby to arrest death so that no more might perish. Of a priestly mind and temper truly was he, who thus with pious zeal offered himself, as a good Shepherd, for the Lord's flock. Thus he broke the sting of death, checked its violence, refused to let it pass. Thus piety aided his services, because he offered himself for those who resisted.

52. Wherefore let those also who separate themselves learn to fear the anger of the Lord, and to appease His priests. What? Ib. 32. did not the earth open and swallow up Dathan Korah and Abiram on account of their schism? For when Korah Dathan and Abiram stirred up two hundred and fifty men Ib. 3. against Moses and Aaron to separate themselves from them, they rose up against them, saying, Let it suffice for you that all the congregation are holy, every one of them, and the Lord is among them.

53. Wherefore the Lord was angry and spake to the whole congregation. 2 Tim. ii. 19. The Lord knoweth them that are His, and hath drawn His saints to Himself; and those whom He hath not chosen, He has not so drawn to Himself. And the Lord commanded that Korah and all those who together with him had rebelled against Moses and Aaron, the priests of the Lord, should take censers, and put incense therein, that he who was chosen of the Lord, might be declared to be holy among the ministers of the Lord.

54. And Moses said unto Korah, Numb. xvi. 8, 9. Hear, I pray you, ye sons of Levi, seemeth it but a small thing unto you that the God of Israel hath separated you from the congregation of Israel, to bring you near to Himself to do the service of the tabernacle of the Lord? and below, Ib. 10, 11. Seek ye the priesthood also? for which cause both thou and all thy company are gathered together against the Lord: and what is Aaron that ye murmur against him?

55. The whole people therefore, weighing the cause of offence, that these men, though unworthy, wished to fill the office of the priesthood, and therefore separated themselves, murmuring against the Lord, and censuring His judgment in the choice of their priests, were seized with great fear, and oppressed with apprehension of punishment. But at the general entreaty that all may not be involved in destruction through the insolence of a few, the guilty are marked out, and two hundred and fifty men with their leaders are separated from the rest, the earth quakes and is rent asunder in the midst of the people, a deep gulf is opened and swallows up the offenders, and thus they are removed from the pure elements of creation, so as neither to pollute the air by breathing it, nor the heavens by looking on them, nor the sea by their touch, nor the earth by their burial.

56. The punishment ceased, the wickedness ceased not; for owing to this very act a murmuring arose among the people that by means of the priests the people had perished. Indignant at this the Lord would have destroyed all, had He not first been moved by the prayers of Moses and Aaron, and afterwards, at the intercession of Aaron His priest, (in order to render their pardon more humiliating,) consented to spare their life at the prayer of those, whose prerogative they had denied.

57. Miriam the prophetess herself, she who with her brethren had crossed the straights of the sea dryshod, because, Numb. xii. 1. being still ignorant of the mystery of the Ethiopian woman, she had murmured against her brother Moses, Ib. 10. became leprous white as snow, and even at the prayer of Moses was scarcely healed of this great plague. This her murmuring however is to be considered as a type of the Synagogue, which, uninstructed in the mystery of this Ethiopian woman, that is, of the Gentile Church, utters daily reproaches, and envies that people by whose faith she herself will also be relieved from the leprosy of her unbelief, according as we read, Rom. xi. 25. that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in.

58. And that we may observe that it is Divine rather than human grace which operates in priests, of all those rods which Moses received from the tribes and laid by, the rod of Aaron alone budded, and thus the people perceived that the Divine commission is a gift which is to be looked for in a priest, and though they before thought that a similar prerogative belonged to themselves, they now ceased to claim the same privilege for a merely human election. But this rod, what else does it indicate, but that priestly grace never decays, and in the utmost lowliness has in the exercise of its functions the flower of strength committed to it, or because this also has reference to a mystery? Nor is it without a meaning that we deem this to have taken place near the end of the life of Aaron the priest. It appears to be intimated that the ancient Jewish people, decaying and worn away by the long-continued infidelity of their priesthood, will in the latter times be reclaimed to zealous faith and devotion by the example of the Church, and by the aid of reviving grace will again put forth the blossoms which have so long been dead.

59. But what is signified by the fact Numb. xx. 26. that on the death of Aaron it was not to all the people, but to Moses alone, who is among the priests of the Lord, that God gave the command to invest with the garments of Aaron the priest Eleazar his son, what but to teach us that a priest ought to be consecrated by a priest, and clothed with his proper garments, that is, with priestly virtues; and then, when it appears that he lacks no part of his priestly array, but is complete in all things, that he should be brought near to the holy altars. For being about to Heb. v. 1. offer for the people, he ought to be chosen by the Lord, and approved by the people; and this lest some grave cause of offence should be found in him whose duty it is to intercede for the sins of others. No ordinary degree of virtue befits a priest, for he ought sedulously to shun not only more heinous sins, but even the smallest; he ought to be open to compassion, not to revoke his promise, to raise the fallen, to sympathise with sorrow, to preserve meekness, to love piety, to drive away or stifle wrath, to be a trumpet to rouse the people to devotion, or to soothe them into tranquillity.

60. It is an old saying; Accustom yourself to be single-minded that your life may be as a picture, and ever preserve the same stamp which it has received. How can he be one and the same, who at one time is inflamed with anger, at another, boils with bitter indignation, whose countenance burns and then changes to paleness, varying and changing colour every moment. But suppose that it is natural to be angry, or that for the most part there is cause to be so; it also is the part of a man to moderate his wrath, and to resist being carried away by brutal fury, so as not to know how to be appeased; it is his duty not to embitter family discord, for it is written, Prov. xv. 18. A wrathful man diggeth up sin. He is not one with himself who is double-minded, nor he who cannot restrain his wrath, of whom David says well, Ps. iv. 4. Vulg. LXX. Be ye angry, and sin not. Such a one does not command his anger, but rather indulges his natural passions, which cannot indeed be prevented but may be moderated. Although then we are angry, let our passion admit only such emotion as is according to nature, not sin which is contrary to nature. For it is intolerable that he who undertakes to govern others should be unable to govern himself.

61. And so the Apostle has given us a model, that it behoves a 1 Tim. iii. 2. Tit. i. 7. Bishop to be blameless, as he also says elsewhere, For a Bishop must be blameless, as the steward of God, not self-willed, not soon angry, not given to wine, no striker, not given to filthy lucre. For how can the compassion of the almsgiver and the avarice of the coveter agree together?

62. I have set down those things which I have learnt are to be avoided; it is the Apostle who teaches what virtues are needed, and he tells us that the Ib. 9. gainsayers are to be convinced with patience, and commands a Bishop to be Ib. 6. the husband of one wife, and this not in order to exclude him from marriage, (for this is beyond the bounds of the precept,) but that by conjugal chastity he may preserve the grace of his Washing; nor again, that he may feel that he has the sanction of Apostolical authority for begetting children after he is a priest, for he speaks of one having children, not of one begetting them or marrying again.

63. And I have thought it better to touch upon this, because many persons argue as if the being husband of one wife had reference to a man marrying once after Baptism, seeing that by Baptism all the sin which would interpose any obstacle is removed. True indeed it is that in Baptism all sins and offences are washed away, so that even to one who has polluted his body with many women not united to him by wedlock, all is remitted. But Baptism does not dissolve marriage, if a man has married again, for it is sin, not the Law, which is destroyed by the Bath, and in marriage there is no sin but a law. Being therefore a law it is not dissolved as if it were a fault, but retained, in that it is a law. Now the Apostle has laid down a rule saying, If any be blameless, the husband of one wife. So that if any man be blameless, the husband of one wife, he comes under the forms of the rule for undertaking the priestly office, but he who marries again incurs not indeed the sin of pollution, but loses the prerogative of a priest.

64. We have declared what the law prescribes, let us speak also of what is prescribed by reason. But in the first place we are to understand that the Apostle has not ordained this with reference to Bishops and Presbyters only, but that the Fathers of the Nicene Council[270] have also decreed that no man should be a cleric at all who has contracted a second marriage. For how can he give consolation or honour to a widow; how can he exhort her to continue a widow, or to preserve that faith to her husband which he has not preserved to his own first marriage? Or what difference would there be between the people and the priest, if they were bound by the same laws? The life of the priest ought to be pre-eminent as well as his graces, for he who obliges others by his precepts ought himself to observe the precepts of the law.

65. How vehemently I resisted ordination! and when I was at last constrained to consent, how I strove that it might be postponed! but the popular impulse[271] prevailed over prescribed[272] rules. And yet it was approved by the judgement of the Bishops of the West, and its example followed by those of the East[273]; and this notwithstanding the prohibition to ordain a 1 Tim. iii. 6. novice, lest he be lifted up with pride. If my ordination was not postponed, it was owing to a constraining force, and if proper humility be not wanting to the priest, where the fault does not lie with him no blame will be imputed.

66. But if even in other Churches such deliberation is used in ordination, how much care is required in that of Vercellæ, where two duties seem equally required of the Bishop, monastic severity and ecclesiastical discipline. For Eusebius of blessed memory was the first to bring together in the West these two differing requisites, and though living in the city observed the monastic institute, and with the government of his Church united the sobriety of an ascetic life. Great increase accrues to the grace of the priesthood when young men are thus obliged to practise abstinence and to obey the laws of chastity, and, though living within the city, to renounce its customs and ways.

67. Hence sprung those famous men Elijah, Elisha, and John the son of Elizabeth, who clothed Heb. xi. 37. in sheepskins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented, wandered about in deserts, in mountains thickets and precipices, among pathless rocks, in horrid caves, through marshy fords, Ib. 38. of whom the world was not worthy. Hence Daniel, Ananias, Azarias and Misael, who were brought up in the royal palace, Dan. i. 16. were fed sparingly as though they had been in the desert, with coarse food and water to drink. Rightly then did the king's servants prevail over kingdoms, shake off the yoke and set at nought captivity, Heb. xi. 33, 34. subdue kingdoms, conquer the elements, quench the violence of fire, escape the edge of the sword, stop the mouths of lions, out of weakness were made strong, shrank not from the mockings of men, seeing that they hoped for heavenly rewards, nor dreaded the darkness of the prison, since on them had shone the brightness of eternal light.

68. Following their example, holy Eusebius[274] left his country and kindred, and preferred foreign sojourn to the enjoyment of home. For the faith's sake he also chose and desired the hardships of exile, having for his companion Dionysius of blessed memory, who chose a voluntary banishment in preference to the Emperor's friendship. Thus when these illustrious men, beset by arms, hemmed round by soldiers, were being carried off from the greater church, they triumphed over the imperial power. Troops of soldiers and the din of arms could not rob them of their faith, but they subdued the fierceness of the brutal mind, depriving it of power to hurt the Saints. For, as it is written in Proverbs, Prov. xix. 12. the king's wrath is as the roaring of a lion.

69. He confessed himself vanquished, by requesting them to relinquish their purpose, but they deemed their pen of reeds more powerful than his iron swords. Thus it was unbelief, not the faith of the Saints, which was wounded and fell: they for whom a heavenly abode was prepared needed not a sepulchre in their own country. They wandered through the world 2 Cor. vi. 10. as having nothing, yet possessing all things. Every place whither they were sent appeared full of delights, nor could they feel any want who always abounded in faith. They were tempted but not overcome, in fastings, in labours, in watchings, in prisons; Heb. xi. 34. out of weakness they were made strong. Fed to the full by fasting they looked not for the charms of pleasure; refreshed by the hope of eternal grace, the burning summer parched them not, nor did the cold of icy regions break them down; for the warm breath of devotion invigorated them; they feared not the bonds of men, for Jesus had loosed them; they desired not to be redeemed from death, for they looked forward to be raised again by Christ.

70. Holy Dionysius again prayed that his life might close in exile, fearing that, if he returned, he should find the minds of the clergy or people perplexed by the doctrines and customs of the unbelieving, and he won this grace and carried with him with calm mind the peace of the Lord. Thus as holy Eusebius first lifted up the standard of confession, so blessed Dionysius, dying in his exile, won a higher title even than martyrdom.

71. Now this endurance in holy Eusebius throve under the monastic discipline, and by being accustomed to a stricter rule, he imbibed a power of bearing hardships. For it is certain that in the higher kinds of Christian devotion these two things are the most excellent, the Clerical function and the Monastic rule. The first is trained to be obliging and courteous in its behaviour, the second is accustomed to abstinence and endurance; the one lives as on a theatre, the other in secret; the one is seen, the other hidden. It is the saying of one who was a noble combatant, 1 Cor. iv. 9. We are made a spectacle unto the world, and to Angels. Worthy truly was he to have Angels as his spectators, when he wrestled that he might attain the prize of Christ, when he contended that he might lead on earth an Angel's life, that he might overcome the wickedness of spirits in heaven, for Eph. vi. 12. he wrestled with spiritual wickedness. Rightly was the world a spectator of him whom it was called on to imitate.

72. Thus one of these lives is on the stage, the other in the cell; the one contends with the distractions of the world, the other with the lusts of the flesh; the one subdues, the other flees from corporal pleasures; the one regulates, the other refrains itself, for to the perfect it is said, S. Matt. xvi. 24. If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me. Now he follows Christ who can say, Gal. ii. 20. Nevertheless I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me.

73. Paul denied himself, when, knowing that chains, bonds and tribulations awaited him in Jerusalem, he voluntarily exposed himself to these dangers, saying, Acts xx. 24. Neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry, which I have received of the Lord Jesus. And though many stood round him, weeping and beseeching, they did not affect his resolution, so strict a censor over itself is a ready faith.

74. Thus the one kind of life fights, the other retires into seclusion; the world is triumphed over by the one, and placed at a distance by the other; Gal. vi. 14. to the one the world is crucified, and to it the world, to the other the world is unknown; the one has more temptations and therefore a more signal victory; the other falls less frequently and more easily keeps guard over itself.

75. So also Elijah himself, that the word of his mouth might be confirmed, 1 Kings xvii. 3. was sent by the Lord to the brook Cherith. Both Ahab and Jezebel threatened him, Elijah feared and rose up, Ib. xix. 8. and went in the strength of that spiritual meat forty days and forty nights unto Horeb the mount of God; and he came thither unto a cave, and lodged there, and afterwards was sent from thence to anoint kings. Thus he was inured to endurance by dwelling in the desert, and as though fed by coarse viands unto the fatness of virtue, went forth increased in strength.

76. S. Luke iii. 2. John also grew up in the desert, and baptized the Lord, and there first exercised himself in constancy, Ib. 19. that afterwards he might reprove kings.

77. And now, seeing that we have cursorily passed over, in treating of holy Elijah's dwelling in the desert, the names of places which are not without meaning, let us return to consider this. 1 Kings xvii. 3–6. Elijah was sent to the brook Cherith, there the ravens fed him, in the morning they brought him bread, in the evening flesh. And with reason did they bring him bread in the morning, for Ps. civ. 15. bread strengthens man's heart, and it was with mystical food that the prophet was fed. In the evening he was supplied with flesh. Understand what thou readest; for Cherith is understanding, 1 Kings xix. 8. Horeb signifies, 'heart' or 'as heart;' of Ib. 3. Beersheba the signification is the 'well of the seventh,' or 'of the oath.'

78. Elijah first went to Beersheba, to the mysteries and sacraments of the Divine and holy Law, afterwards he was sent to the Brook, to the stream of that Ps. xlvi. 4. river which makes glad the city of God. Here you perceive the two Testaments, and their single Author; the ancient Scriptures as a deep and dark well whence you have to draw water with difficulty, for He Who was to fill it full was not yet come, as He said in after times, S. Matt. v. 17. I am not come to destroy the Law, but to fulfil it. Therefore the Saint is commanded by the Lord to pass over the brook, for he who shall drink of the New Testament is not only a river, but S. John vii. 38. out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water, rivers of understanding, rivers of meditation, spiritual streams, which yet are dried up in time of unbelief, lest the profane and faithless should drink of them.

79. And there the ravens acknowleged the Lord's prophet whom the Jews acknowleged not. They fed him whom that royal and noble nation persecuted. Who is Jezebel who persecuted him, but the Synagogue, vainly flowing, vainly abounding in the Scriptures, which it neither keeps nor understands? Who are the ravens that fed him, but they whose young ones call upon Him, to whose cattle He Ps. cxlvii. 9. giveth fodder, as we read, and feedeth the young ravens that call upon Him. These ravens knew whom they were feeding; for they had a spiritual intelligence, and brought food to that stream of sacred knowledge.

80. He too feeds the prophet who understands and keeps what is written. Our faith supports him, our advance gives him nourishment; he feeds on our minds and senses, his discourse is sustained by our understanding of it. We give him bread in the morning, in that, placed in the light of the Gospel, we bring to him the stablishing of our hearts. By these things is he nourished and strengthened and fills the mouths of them that fast, to whom the unbelief of the Jews administered no food of faith. All prophetic words are fasting diet to them, for they cannot discern its interior richness, to them it is food weak and thin, such as cannot make fat their bones.

81. Perhaps the reason why they brought him flesh in the evening was that it is, as it were, stronger food, such as the Corinthians, who were weak, could not bear, and were therefore 1 Cor. iii. 2. fed with milk by the Apostle; and thus in the evening of the world stronger meat was brought, in the morning of the world bread. And so since it was the Lord Who commanded this food to be administered to him, we may suitably address Him in this place with these prophetic words, Ps. lxv. 8, 9. Thou makest the outgoings of the morning and evening to praise Thee, and below, Thou preparest their corn, for so Thou providest for the earth.

82. But now I think we have said enough of the teacher, let us now follow up the lives of his disciples, who have given themselves to praise the Divine Name, and celebrate it with hymns night and day. For this is the service of Angels, always to be praising God, and with frequent prayers to propitiate and beseech the Lord. They give themselves to reading, and occupy their minds with continual labours, separated from all female society, they mutually protect each other. What a life this is, wherein there is nothing you need to fear, but much for you to imitate! The pain of fasting is repaid by tranquillity of mind, alleviated by custom, made supportable by rest, or beguiled by occupation; worldly solicitude does not burthen nor outward troubles engross it, nor do the distractions of the city draw down upon it any difficulty.

83. For the maintenance or teaching of this gift an instructor is to be sought: what kind of one he ought to be you perceive, and by your unanimous aid we shall be able to obtain him, Eph. iv. 32. if you mutually forgive one another, if any of you consider himself injured by the other. For it is not the sole condition of virtue not to hurt him who has not hurt you, but it consists also in forgiving him who has injured you. We are generally injured by the fraud of others, by the guile of our neighbour, but we must not deem it to be the part of justice to repay guile with guile, and fraud with fraud. For if justice be a virtue, it must be free from the imputation of crime, and not return evil for evil. For what kind of virtue is it for you to do yourself what you punish in another? This is merely to propagate iniquity, not to punish it; and the character of the person whom you injure, whether he be just or unjust, makes no difference, for you ought not to have done evil. Nor does the mode of your transgression signify, whether it proceed from the desire of avenging yourself, or of injuring others, for in neither kind are you free from blame. There is no difference between being ungodly and unjust, and therefore it is said, Ps. xxxvii. 1. Fret not thyself because of the ungodly, neither be thou envious against the evil-doers, and above, Ib. xxvi. 5. I have hated the congregation of the wicked. Thus he comprehends all, without exception; he points to their wickedness without enquiring for the cause.

84. And what can be a better model than the Divine justice? For the Son of God says, S. Matt. v. 44. Love your enemies. And again He says, Pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you. So far does He remove the love of revenge from the perfect, that he enjoins upon them charity towards their persecutors. And as in the Old Testament He said, Deut. xxxii. 35. To Me belongeth vengeance, I will repay, so in the Gospel He commands us to pray for them that injure us, that He Who has threatened to punish them may not do so. For He desires you to pardon of your own free-will, with which He agrees according to His promise. And if you call for vengeance, you know that the unrighteous is more severely punished by his own thoughts, than by judicial severity.

85. And as no man's life can be free from adversities, let us take care that they do not befal us by our own fault. For no man is condemned more severely by another's judgment than the foolish man, who is the author of his own misery, is by his own. Wherefore let us avoid such occupations as are troublesome and contentious, which bear no fruit, but only bring obstacles. But we ought to see that we have no cause to be ashamed either of our choice or of our act; for it is the part of a prudent man, to guard against having to feel frequent sorrow for his acts, since it is the prerogative of God alone never to repent. For what is the fruit of justice but calmness of mind, or what does living justly bring with it, but a life of tranquillity? According to the model of the master will be the condition of the whole house. But if this is required in a family, how much more in the Church, Col. iii. 11. where both rich and poor, bond and free, Greek and Scythian, noble and plebeian, are all one in Christ Jesus.

86. Let no man suppose that because he is rich more deference ought to be shewn him. In the Church he is rich, who is rich in faith, for the faithful have a whole world of riches. What wonder is it that the faithful should possess the world, seeing he possesses the heritage of Christ, which is more precious than the world? 1 S. Pet. i. 19. Ye were redeemed with precious blood, is said to all, and not to the rich only. But if ye would be rich, follow him who says, Ib. 15. Be ye holy in all manner of conversation. This is said not to the rich only but to all, for He judges without respect of persons, according to the faithful testimony of His Apostle. Wherefore, says he, Ib. 17. pass the time of your sojourning here not in indulgence, nor pride, nor elation of heart, but in fear. Upon this earth ye have received what is temporal, not what is eternal, use therefore those temporal things as knowing that you must shortly depart hence.

87. Trust not therefore in riches, for all these things must be left behind, and faith alone will accompany you; justice indeed, if faith precede, will also be your companion. Why do riches entice you? Not with Ib. 18, 19. silver and gold, not with silken vests and riches were ye redeemed from your vain conversation; but with the precious blood of Christ. He therefore is rich who is an Rom. viii. 17. heir of God, and co-heir of Christ. Despise not then a poor man, it is He Who hath made thee rich. Scorn not a needy man; Ps. xxxiv. 6. lo! the poor crieth, and the Lord heareth him. Reject not a needy man; for Christ, when He was 2 Cor. viii. 9. rich became poor, and this for thy sake, that by His poverty He might make thee rich. Exalt not thyself therefore, as though thou wert rich, for He sent forth His disciples without money.

88. And the chief of these said, Acts iii. 6. Silver and gold have I none. He glories in his poverty as if he shunned contamination. Silver and gold he says, have I none, he does not say, gold and silver, for he who knows not the use of these things knows not the relative value of them. Silver and gold have I none, but faith I have. I am rich enough in the name of the Lord Jesus, Phil. ii. 9. which is above every name. Silver I have none, nor do I ask for it, gold I have not, nor do I desire it, but I have that which ye that are rich are without, which even ye esteem of more value, and this I give to the poor, namely, to say in the name of Jesus, Isa. xxxv. 3. Strengthen ye the weak hands and lift up the feeble knees.

89. But if ye would be rich, become poor. For ye shall in all things be made rich, if ye become poor in spirit. It is not money but the disposition which makes a man rich.

90. There are those who humble themselves when riches abound, and this is well and prudently done, for the law of nature is enough for all, and what suffices to her is easily found, but where lust is, there, in the abundance of riches, is still poverty. And no man is born poor, but becomes so. Thus poverty lies not in nature but in our notions of it, and therefore to find riches is easy to nature, but difficult for lust. In proportion to man's gains this thirst for gain increases, and he is, as it were, inflamed by the intoxication of his lusts.

91. Why do ye seek to accumulate riches as though they were necessary? Nothing is so necessary as to know what is not necessary. Why do ye cast the blame upon the flesh? it is not the lust of the belly, but the desires of the mind which make a man insatiable. Is it the flesh which blots out the hope of the future; is it the flesh which takes away the sweetness of spiritual grace; is it the flesh which obstructs faith; is it the flesh which in every way defers to the frantic domination of vain opinions? The flesh loves rather that frugal temperance, which relieves it of its burthen, which endues it with health, for so it rids itself of keen anxiety, and obtains for itself tranquillity.

92. But riches in themselves are not blameable. For Prov. xiii. 8. the ransom of a man's life are his riches, for he who gives to the poor, redeems his soul. There is therefore scope for virtue even in these material riches. Ye are as it were pilots, in a great sea. If any man steers well his ship, he quickly passes over the sea, and reaches his haven, but he who cannot manage his property is sunk together with his burthen. Wherefore it is written, Prov. x. 15. The rich man's strength is his strong city.

93. And what is this city but Jerusalem, which is in heaven, in which is the kingdom of God? Good is this possession, which brings perpetual fruit.

Good is this possession, which we do not leave behind us, but possess in heaven. He who finds himself in this possession says, Ps. cxix. 94. The Lord is my portion. He says not, My portion stretches and extends itself to such and such limits. He says not, My portion is among such and such neighbours, unless haply with reference to the Apostles, the prophets and the saints of the Lord, for these are the portion of the just. He says not, My portion is in the meadows, or in the woods, or in the fields, less perchance in the fields of the wood, wherein the Church is found, of which it is written, Ib. cxxxii. 6. We found it in the wood. He says not, Troops of horses are my portion, for Ib. xxxiii. 16. a horse is counted but a vain thing to save a man. He says not, Herds of oxen asses or sheep are my portion, except so far as he numbers himself among those herds which Isa. i. 3. know their owner, and with that ass which shuns not the crib of Christ; that lamb too is his portion which was Ib. liii. 7. brought to the slaughter, and that sheep which before her shearers was dumb, which opened not his mouth; by whose humility judgment has been exalted. And it is rightly said, before her shearers because, on that Cross He put off what was but accidental, not part of His essence, for He put off His body, but lost not His Divinity.

94. It is not every one therefore who can say the Lord is my portion. Not the covetous man, for avarice comes and says; Thou art my portion, I have thee in subjection, thou art my slave, thou hast sold thyself to me with that gold, thou hast adjudged thyself to be mine with these goods. The sensual man says not, Christ is my portion, because luxury comes and says, Thou art my portion, I have brought thee into subjection to myself by that banquet, I have caught thee by the snare of those feasts, I keep thee in my bondage by the constraints of thy gluttony. Wilt thou not acknowledge that thou didst set a higher value on the indulgence of thy appetite than on thy life? I condemn thee by thine own judgment; deny it if thou canst; but thou canst not. Again, thou hast reserved nothing for thy subsistence, thou hast spent it all on thy table. The adulterer cannot say, The Lord is my portion, for lust comes and says, I am thy portion, thou hast enslaved thyself to me by the love of that damsel, by a night spent with that harlot thou hast committed thyself to my dominion. The traitor cannot say, Christ is my portion, because his wickedness immediately seizes upon him and says, He is deceiving thee, O Lord Jesus, this man is mine.

95. We have an example of this, for, S. John xiii. 2. when Judas had received the sop from Christ, the devil entered into his heart, as claiming him for his own possession, retaining his right to his own portion, and saying, This man is not Thine but mine; my servant, Thy betrayer; to me, then, he manifestly belongs. With Thee he sits at table, but it is I who feed him, from Thee he has received bread, from me money; with Thee he drinks, but to me he has sold Thy Blood. And the event proved how truly he spoke. Then Christ departed from him, and Judas also left Jesus, and followed the devil.

96. How many masters has he, who deserts that one Master! But let us not desert Him. Who would fly from Him Whom Paul and Timothy follow, bound with chains, but voluntary ones, chains which do not bind but loose, chains in which they glory, saying, Philem. i. 1. Paul, a prisoner of Jesus Christ, and Timothy. Bondage under Him is more honourable than freedom and release from others. Who then would fly from peace, who would fly from salvation, who would fly from pity, who would fly from redemption?

97. Ye see, my sons, what they have become who have followed this course, how they, though dead, still work. Now we join in praising their virtue, let us also study to attain to their diligence, and silently recognize in ourselves that which we speak of with approval in others. Nothing effeminate, nothing frail can deserve praise, S. Matt. xi. 12. The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force. Our fathers ate the Paschal lamb in haste. Faith makes good speed, devotion is lively, hope unwearied; it loves not perturbations of the soul, but it loves to pass from profitless inactivity to fruitful labour. Why put off till to-morrow? you may still gain to-day; beware lest you fail to attain the one, and lose the other also. The loss even of one hour is not unimportant; one hour forms part of our whole life.

98. There are some young persons who wish straightway to arrive at old age, that they may no longer be subject to the will of their elders, and there are old men who would return if they could to youth. Now I can approve of neither of these desires; the young men, disdaining things present, desire that their life may be changed, the old men that it may be prolonged. But it is in the power of the young to become old by gravity of mind, and of the old to grow young by vigorous actions. For it is not age so much as discipline which brings with it correction of life. How much more therefore ought we to lift up our hopes to the kingdom of God, where our life will be renewed, and where there will be a change not of age but of grace.

99. It is not by indolence or sleep that we obtain for ourselves a reward. The sleeper cannot work, there comes no fruit from indolence, but rather loss. Esau, being slothful, lost the first-fruits of blessing, choosing to receive rather than to seek for food. The industrious Jacob found grace at the hands of both his parents.

100. But Jacob, although superior in virtue and grace, gave way to his brother's anger, who was indignant that his younger brother should be preferred to him. Wherefore it is written, Rom. xii. 19. Give place unto wrath, to the intent that displeasure against another may not draw you also into sin, while wishing to resist and to be avenged. If you will consent to yield you may remove the blame both from yourself and from him. Imitate the patriarch, who by his mother's advice Gen. xxvii. 43. went into a far country. And who was this mother? Rebecca, that is, patience. For who could give this counsel but patience? The mother loved her son, and chose that he should be separated from herself rather than from God. And thus as a good mother she gave benefits to both her sons, but on her younger son she conferred a blessing which he had power to keep. For she did not prefer one son to the other, but she preferred diligence to sloth, faith to unbelief. And even on her elder son she conferred no little favour, for she sent away the younger, to save him from unworthy fratricide.

101. His piety not his fault having thus banished him from his parents, he conversed with God, he increased in his estate, in his children, in grace. Nor was he elated by these things on meeting with his brother, but he humbled himself and did obeisance, not to his brother, implacable as he was, but to God Whom in his person he honoured. Therefore he bowed down to him seven times, being the number which signifies remission, for it was not a man that he adored, but Him of Whom He foresaw in spirit that He should come in the flesh, S. John i. 29. to take away the sins of the world. And this mystery is unfolded to you in the reply of Peter, who says, S. Matt. xviii. 21. How oft shall my brother sin against me and I forgive him, till seven times? Thus you see this forgiveness of sins is a type of that great sabbath, of that perpetual rest of grace; and therefore it receives the gift of contemplation.

102. But what is the meaning of his Gen. xxxiii. 6. setting in array his wives, and sons, and all his servants, and commanding them to bow themselves to the earth? It was not to the earth, as an element, which is often filled with blood, which is the receptacle of crimes, and which is made hideous by desolate rocks, or by precipices, or by a barren and hungry soil, but as that Flesh Which was to be our salvation. And perhaps this is that mystery which the Lord has taught thee in the words, S. Matt. xviii. 22. I say not unto thee, until seven times, but, until seventy times seven.

103. Do ye therefore Col. iii. 13. forgive the wrongs done to you, that ye may be the sons of Jacob. Be not provoked as was Esau. Imitate holy David, who as a good teacher, has left us an example in the words, Ps. cix. 4. For the love that I had unto them, lo! they take now the contrary part, but I give myself unto prayer, and so when men reviled him, he prayed. Prayer is a good shield, a shield which wards off contumely, which repels curses, and throws them back on the heads of those who utter them, so that they are wounded by their own weapons: Ps. cix. 28. Let them curse, it is said, but bless Thou. That curse of men is to be courted, for it obtains for us a blessing from the Lord.

104. For the rest, my most dearly beloved, remembering that Heb. xiii. 12. Jesus suffered without the gate, do ye go forth from this earthly city, for your city is Jerusalem, which is above. Do ye dwell there that ye may say, Phil. iii. 20. For our conversation is in heaven. Jesus went forth from the city, that ye, going forth from the world, may be above the world. Moses alone, who saw God, Exod. xxxiii. 7. had his tabernacle without the camp when he talked with God; and when sacrifices were offered for sin, the blood indeed was carried to the altar, Ib. xxix. 12, 13. but the bodies were burned without the camp; for no man living among the temptations of this world can lay aside sin, nor can his blood be accepted by God until he has put off the defilement of this body.

105. Love hospitality, for thereby holy Abraham Gen. xviii. 3. found favour in God's sight, received Christ as his guest, and Sarah, already worn with age, obtained grace to bear a son; Ib. xix. 24. Lot also escaped the flames which destroyed Sodom. And thou also mayest receive Angels, if thou wilt offer hospitality to strangers. And what shall I say of Josh. ii. 14. Rahab, who, by performing this office, escaped destruction?

106. Compassionate those who are kept in bondage, as though ye also were bondsmen. Console those who are under sorrow; Eccles. vii. 2. It is better to go to the house of mourning than to the house of feasting. From the one we win the merit of discharging a duty, from the other the stain of a transgression. And again in the one case the reward is yet hoped for, in the other it is received. Sympathise with those who suffer as if ye suffered together with them.

107. Let a woman be obedient not servile to her husband, let her offer herself to be ruled not coerced. Let the husband also direct his wife as her governour, honour her as the companion of his life, share with her as his fellow-heir in grace.

108. Mothers, wean your own children, love them, and pray for them, but pray that their life[275] may be prolonged above this earth, rather than in it, for there is nothing longlived in this earth, and that which seems permanent is at the best short and fragile. Admonish them rather to take up the Cross of Christ than to love this life.

109. Mary, the mother of the Lord S. John xix. 25. stood by the cross of her Son; it is no other than the holy Evangelist John who teaches me this. Others have told us that S. Matt. xxvii. 45. in the Lord's passion the earth was shaken, the heaven covered with darkness, the sun withdrew its light, the thief, after a faithful confession, was received into paradise. John has taught what the others have not, how when nailed to the Cross He spoke to His mother, esteeming rather this exhibition of pious offices to His mother than that gift of a heavenly kingdom, which, after triumphing over His pains, He conferred. For if it be pious to grant pardon to the thief, much more pious is it that the Son should shew such solicitous honour to His Mother: S. John xix. 27. Behold, He says, thy son, Behold thy mother. Christ testified from the Cross, and distributed the offices of piety between the mother and the disciple. The Lord made not only a public but also a private Testament, and John signed this His Testament, a witness worthy of so great a Testator, a good Testament, not of money but of eternal life, written not with ink, but by the Spirit of the living God, Who says, Ps. xlv. 1. My tongue is the pen of a ready writer.

110. Nor did Mary fall below what became the Mother of Christ. When the Apostles fled she stood before the Cross, and with pious eyes looked upon the wounds of her Son, for she expected to see not the death of her Offspring, but the salvation of the world. Or perhaps because she who was the Palace[276] of the King had learnt that the redemption of the world would ensue from the death of her Son, she thought that by her own death she might add something to the general good. But Jesus needed no helper for the redemption of all, Who without any helper saved all. Wherefore He says, Ib. lxxxviii. 4, 5. I am become like a man without help; free among the dead. He received the affection of His Mother, but He sought not aid from others.

111. Imitate her, ye holy mothers, who in her only and beloved Son exhibited such an example of maternal virtue, for your children cannot be dearer to you than hers was, nor did the Virgin seek consolation in the bearing of another son.

112. Masters, command your servants not as your inferiors in rank, but as remembering that they are partakers of the same nature as yourselves. 1 S. Pet. ii. 18. Servants also, serve your masters cheerfully, for every one ought cheerfully to endure that state whereunto he is born; and obey not only the good, but also the froward. For what merit has your service, if ye serve the good diligently; but if ye serve the froward also ye have merit, for neither do the free obtain any reward, if, having transgressed, they are punished by the judges, but herein lies their merit if they suffer wrongfully. Thus if ye, considering Jesus Christ, serve even austere masters with patience, ye will have your reward. For the Lord Himself suffered, the just from the unjust, and with admirable patience nailed our sins to His Cross, that he who shall imitate Him may wash away his sins in His blood.

113. In short, turn all of you to the Lord Jesus. Take pleasure in this life so that it be with a good conscience; let the hope of immortality make you patient of death, let your assurance of the resurrection be confirmed by the grace of Christ; let there be truth and simplicity, faith and confidence, abstinence and holiness, industry and sobriety, modest conversation, learning without vanity, sobriety of doctrine, faith not intoxicated by heresy. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all, Amen.

LETTER LXIV[277]

S. AMBROSE REPLIES to Irenæus, who had asked why the manna, which was given to the children of Israel, was not given now, that the Body of Christ, Which is given to Christians, is the true Manna, of which the other was a type; as it was also of Divine Wisdom, which is the food of souls.

AMBROSE TO IRENÆUS, GREETING.

1. You ask me why the Lord God does not now rain manna as He did on our fathers. If you consider, He does rain manna from heaven on those who serve Him, and that day by day. The earthly manna indeed is to this very day found in many places, but it is not now an event so miraculous because 1 Cor. xiii. 10. that which is perfect is come. Now that which is perfect is the Bread from heaven, the Body born of the Virgin, as to which the Gospel sufficiently instructs us. O how greatly does this excel what went before it! For they who eat that manna or bread, are dead, S. John vi. 58. but he that eateth of this bread shall live for ever.

2. But there is also a spiritual manna, the dew that is of spiritual Wisdom, which descends from heaven upon those who sincerely seek for it, and which waters the souls of the righteous, and puts sweetness into their mouths. Wherefore he who comprehends this out-pouring of divine wisdom receives pleasure from it, nor requires any other food, S. Matt. iv. 4. nor lives by bread alone, but by every word of God. He who is more curious, will ask what that is which is sweeter than honey. The servant of God answers him, Exod. xvi. 15, 16. This is the bread which the Lord hath given you to eat. And hear further what this bread is, the word, he says, which the Lord hath commanded. Now this food so commanded by God nourishes the soul of the wise, imparting light and sweetness, brightened by the beams of truth, and communicating to it the soothing sweetness of divers virtues and the word of wisdom like that of an honey-comb; for pleasant words, it is written in the Proverbs, Prov. xvi. 24. are as an honey-comb.

3. And now hear the reason why it was small; it was because S. Luke xiii. 19. a grain of mustard-seed which is compared to the kingdom of heaven is also small, and because faith, which is as a grain of mustard-seed, Ib. xvii. 6. can remove mountains and cast them into the sea. Again, Ib. xiii. 21. the kingdom of heaven is like leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened. Again, Exod. xxxii. 20. Moses ground the head of the golden calf to powder, and cast it into water, and made the people drink of it; for their heart was hardened by the greatness of their perfidy, and he did thus that it might be softened and made refined by faith. Lastly, that woman who S. Matt. xxiv. 41. grinds meal well and fine shall be taken, but she who grinds ill shall be left.

4. Follow then these examples as regards thy faith, that thou mayest be like that soul which excites in itself the love of Christ, and which, as it ascends aloft, is admired by the host of heaven; that it may rise without impediment, that it may soar above this world with joy and gladness, lifting itself on high like the vine stock and like the smoke, sending forth the fragrance of a holy resurrection, and the sweetness of faith, as it is written, Cant. iii. 6. Who is this that cometh out of the wilderness like the stock of vine burned with smoke, perfumed with myrrh and frankincense, with all powders of ointment?

5. The refined nature of this faith is well expressed by being compared with powder or by the Exod. xxx. 8. mention of perfume; for we read in Exodus of that prophetic incense which is the prayer of the Saints, as being a subtile perfume and compounded of many things, that it may be set forth in the sight of the Lord, as David also says, Ps. cxli. 2. Let my prayer be set forth in Thy sight as the incense. And so it is in the Greek also, κατευθυνθήτω ἡ προσευχή μου ὡς θυμίαμα ἐνώπιον σου. And in the Revelation of John we read that Rev. viii. 3, 4. an Angel stood at the Altar, having a golden censer; and there was given unto him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne. And the smoke of the incense, it is said, with the prayers of the Saints, ascended up before God out of the Angel's hand.

6. Small too is the navel and the belly of that soul which ascends up to Christ, and therefore it is praised by the words of the spouse saying, Cant. vii. 2. Thy navel is like a round goblet, which wanteth not liquor, thy belly is like an heap of wheat set about with lilies. For it is rounded and polished with all kinds of learning, and is a spiritual drink not failing in fulness, and in the knowledge of heavenly secrets. The belly of the soul is also like the navel, mystical, and not only strong food whereby the heart is strengthened, but also sweet and flowery food whereby it is delighted, is received therein. And perhaps this is what Moses meant, that by many and pious prayers the sacrilege was to be atoned for.

7. In the book of Kings also, when the Lord revealed Himself to holy Elijah, a small still voice was first heard, and then the Lord revealed Himself to him; thereby to teach us that bodily things are solid and gross, but such as are spiritual tender and so fine as not to be perceptible to the eye. In the same way we read in the book of Wisdom that the Spirit of Wisdom is subtile and lively Wisd. vii. 22. for in her is an understanding spirit, holy, one only, manifold, subtile and lively; and she grinds her words before she speaks, that neither her mode of speech nor her meaning may give offence. Lastly, it shall be said to Babylon herself, when about to be destroyed, Rev. xviii. 22. And the sound of a millstone shall be heard no more at all in thee.

8. The manna then was fine, and was gathered each day, not reserved for the day following; because the extemporaneous inventions of Wisdom please the most; when made at leisure they excite not the same admiration as when struck out at the moment by the spark of genius. Or it may be that future mysteries are revealed herein: the manna kept till the rising of the sun was unfit to be eaten, in other words, after the coming of Christ, it lost its grace. For when the Sun of Righteousness arose, and the more illustrious Sacraments of the Body and Blood of Christ appeared, lower things were to cease, and the people were to take in their stead what was more perfect.

Farewell; love me, for I also love you.

LETTER LXV.

THIS LETTER CONTAINS a mystical explanation of the statement in Exodus xxiv. 6. that Moses put half the blood of the sacrifices into basons and poured half on the altar.

AMBROSE TO SIMPLICIANUS, GREETING.

1. YOU were perplexed, you tell me, when reading that Moses, after offering sacrifice and the immolation of salutary victims to the Lord, Exod. xxiv. 6. put half of the blood in basons, and sprinkled half on the altar, to know what could be the purport of this. But why need you doubt and inquire of me, when for the sake of the faith, and of acquiring Divine knowledge, you have traversed the whole world, and night and day have devoted the whole time of your life to constant reading? Thus with your keen intellect you have embraced all the objects of the understanding, and are wont to prove as concerns even the books of philosophy, how far they deviate from the truth, many of them being so futile that the words of their writers perished sooner than their life.

2. But since gathering words, like money, is of great profit, and great increase is thereby obtained for the general good of trade, I cannot refrain from mentioning how wonderful is that division of the blood. For part of it seems to signify the moral, and part the mystical discipline of wisdom. That part which is put into basons is moral, that which is sprinkled on the altar is mystical; in that by the Divine gift and a certain inspiration it is instilled into men’s minds, that the sentiments they conceive of God may be suitable and full of faith.

3. Moreover, they who have spoken of His majesty, and of heavenly things, whether apostles or holy prophets, have only dared to speak of such things as were shewn them by revelation. Hence Paul has testified in his Epistle that he was 2 Cor. xii. 4. caught up into Paradise, and heard words which it is not lawful for a man to utter; Stephen also Acts vii. 55. saw the heavens opened, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God, and the Prophet David saw Him Ps. cx. 1. sitting on His right hand. And what shall I say of Moses, of whom the Scripture says that Deut. xxxiv. 10, 11. there arose not such a prophet since in Israel, who knew the Lord face to face, in all the signs and the wonders which he did in the land of Egypt.

4. The mystical part therefore is offered to God, Who by the brightness of the Divine Wisdom, Whose Father and Parent He is, quickens the vigour of the soul, and enlightens the mind. But the Wisdom of God is Christ, on Whose breast John lay, that from that secret source of wisdom he might be known to have imbibed Divine mysteries. He himself, conscious of his gift, has recorded this, for he dreaded to claim for himself, and to ascribe to his own genius that which he had received. The Lord also said to the Apostles, opening their mouths, S. John xx. 22. Receive ye the Holy Ghost, whereby He declared that He is the same Who said to Moses, Exod. iv. 12. I will open thy mouth, and teach thee what thou shalt say. Wherefore this wisdom, divine, unspeakable, unadulterated and incorruptible, pours her grace into the minds of her saints, and discloses to them knowledge that they may behold her glory.

5. But that is the discipline of moral wisdom which is poured into basons, and is taken and drank from them. The basons therefore are the organs of the senses. The basons are the two eyes, the ears, the nose, the mouth and other parts suitable to this function; for the eyes are the recipients and ministers of sight, the ears of hearing, the nose of smell, the mouth of taste, and so with the rest. Into these basons that Word in Whom is the Headship of the priestly and prophetic office poured the half of His blood; that He might quicken and animate the irrational parts of our nature, and endow them with reason.

6. Again, having rehearsed and proclaimed the precepts of the Law to the people, and being about to explain the meaning of that mystical ark of the testimony, and of the candlestick, and of the censers, he slew victims, and offered sacrifice, sprinkling half of the blood on the sacred altar, and putting half in basons.

7. A division therefore is made between that mystical or divine and moral wisdom. For the Λόγος is a divider of souls and of virtues: the Λόγος is the Heb. iv. 12. Word of God, quick and powerful, which pierces and penetrates even to the dividing asunder of the soul, and which also distinguishes and divides virtues, whose minister, Moses, by the division of the blood, distinguished the kinds of virtue.

8. And forasmuch as nothing is so emphatically declared in the Law as Christ's Advent, or prefigured as His Passion, consider whether this be not the saving victim which God the Word offered by Himself, and sacrificed in His own body. For first both in the Gospel and also in the Law He taught us moral discipline, and manifested it in His own patience and in very act and deed, transfusing into our lives and senses, as if into basons, the very substance and marrow as it were of wisdom, and quickening thereby men's minds to be a seed-plot of virtue, and instructed in piety, and then, drawing near the altar, He poured out the blood of His offering.

9. Should you choose then to understand it thus, the sense is pious; the interpretation also which follows that of Solomon is, if you prefer it, equally concordant, namely, that whereas the prophet Moses put the blood into basons, this is the same blood whereof it is written that Prov. ix. 2. Wisdom hath mingled her wine, bidding men to forsake foolishness, and seek after understanding. From the bason then we drink wisdom, discipline, understanding, correction, amendment of life, regulation of habits and counsels, the grace of piety, increase of virtue, a fountain of plenty.

10. But by this sprinkling the blood on the Altar you may understand the cleansing of the world, the remission of all sins. For He sprinkles that blood on the Altar as a Victim to atone for the sins of many. For the Victim is a Lamb, but a Lamb not of irrational nature but of divine power, of Which it is said, S. John i. 29. Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world. For not only has He cleansed with His blood the sins of all men, but has also gifted them with divine power. Does not He seem to you to have indeed shed his blood, Ib. xix. 34. from Whose side blood and water flowed over the very altar of his Passion?

Farewell; love me as you do, with the affection of a parent.

LETTER LXVI.

HERE IS A mystical exposition of Aaron's taking the earrings of the women to make the golden calf, and of other details connected with it.

AMBROSE TO ROMULUS.

1. THERE is no doubt that letter-writing was invented that we might hold a sort of converse with the absent, but this becomes more excellent in use and example when frequent and pleasant colloquies pass between a parent and his sons, whereby is really produced a sort of image of actual presence, even though they are separate in body; for by such offices love attains its growth, just as it is augmented by our mutual letters between ourselves. All this I begin to experience much more abundantly in these last addresses of your affection, wherein you have thought fit to ask me with what intent Exod. xxxii. 2. Aaron took the gold from the people when they required gods to be made them, and why the head of a calf was fashioned with that gold, and why Moses was so deeply incensed that he commanded every man to rise upon his neighbour and slay him with the sword. For it is a great thing that the absent should suffer no loss either of kindness or of the liberal communication of mutual knowledge. My sentiments on this point, therefore, as you require it, I will offer for the purpose rather of comparison than of instruction.

2. While Moses was receiving the Law on Mount Sinai the people were with Aaron the Priest. Prone as they were to transgress, we do not find that they committed sacrilege so long as the Law was being delivered, but when the Divine Voice ceased, sin overtook them, so that they required gods to be made them. Aaron, thus constrained, asked for their rings and the women's earrings, which, when given to him, he cast into the fire, and the head of a calf was molten of them.

3. We can neither excuse this great priest, nor dare we condemn him. It was not however unadvisedly that he deprived the Jews of their rings and earrings; for they who designed sacrilege could have neither the seal of faith nor ornaments of their ears. Gen. xxxv. 2. The patriarch Jacob too hid the earrings along with the images of the strange gods, when he hid them in Shechem, that no one might come to know of the superstitions of the Gentiles. And he said well, Exod. xxxii. 2. Break off the golden earrings which are in the ears of your wives; not as leaving the men their earrings, but in order to shew that they had them not. Fitly also are the earrings taken from the women, that Eve may not again hear the voice of the serpent.

4. Because they had listened to sacrilegious counsel, an image of sacrilege was formed by the melting of their earrings; for he who hears amiss is wont to perpetrate sacrilege. Why the head of a calf came forth, the sequel shews, for it was signified thereby, either that in time to come Jeroboam would introduce this kind of sacrilege, 1 Kings xii. 30. and that the people of the Hebrews should worship golden calves; or else that all unbelief bears the semblance of brutal and savage folly.

5. Moses, incensed by this unworthy act, broke the tables, and ground the head of the calf to powder, that he might abolish all traces of their impiety. The first Tables were broken in order to the restoration of the second, whereby, through the preaching of the Gospel, unbelief was broken to pieces, and done away. And thus Moses brought down this Egyptian pride, and repressed this self-exalting arrogance, by the authority of the eternal Law. Wherefore David also says, Ps. xxix. 5, 6. The Lord shall break the cedars of Libanus, and shall reduce them to pieces, as a calf of Libanus.

6. The people drank up all their perfidy and pride, that impiety and arrogance might not drink them up. For it is better that every one should prevail over the flesh and its vices, that it may not be said that Isa. xxv. 8. prevailing[278] death hath swallowed him up, but rather, 1 Cor. xv. 54, 55. Death is swallowed up in victory; O death, where is thy sting, O grave, where is thy victory? And of the Lord it is said, Ps. cx. 7. He shall drink of the brook in the way; for S. John xix. 30. He received the vinegar, that He might drink up the temptations of all men.

7. But in his causing every man to slay his neighbour, the parents their children, the brother his brother, we find an evident precept that religion is to be preferred to friendship, piety to kindred. For that is true piety which prefers divine things to human, eternal to temporal. Wherefore also Moses himself said to the sons of Levi, Exod. xxxii. 26, 27. Who is on the Lord's side, let him come to me. And he said unto them, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Put every man his sword by his side, and go throughout the camp, that thus, by the contemplation and love of the Divine Majesty all human ties and affections might be destroyed. It is written that three thousand men were slain, nor need we feel any jealousy of the number being so great, for it is better that by the punishment of a few the body should be exonerated, than that vengeance should be taken on all; nor indeed does any punishment of wrong against God appear too severe.

8. Again, the ministry of the Levites, Num. xviii. 6. whose portion is God, was chosen for this work, as being more holy than the others: for they know not how to spare their own who know nothing of their own, for to the holy God is everything. Now he is the true Levite and punisher and avenger, who kills the flesh that he may preserve the spirit, such as he was who says, 1 Cor. ix. 27. I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection. And who are such close neighbours as the flesh and the soul? What is so akin to us as the passions of the body? These the good Levite slays within himself with that spiritual Heb. iv. 12. sword which is the word of God, sharp and powerful.

9. There is also a sword of the Spirit, which pierces the soul, as was said to Mary, S. Luke ii. 35. A sword shall pierce through thy own soul also, that the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed. Is not the flesh united with the soul by a kind of fraternal bond? Is not discourse also related and akin to our mind? When therefore we check our discourse, that we may not incur the sin of much speaking, we put aside the rights of blood, and loose the bonds of this fraternal connexion. Thus by the force of reason the soul severs from itself its irrational and, as it were, cognate part.

10. And so Moses taught the people to rise against their neighbours, by whom faith was in danger of being mocked, and virtue hindered, that whatever in us was straying from virtue, perplexed by error, or entangled in vice might be cut off. By this direction to the people he obtained not only a mitigation of the Divine wrath and a turning away of offence, but even conciliated for them grace.

11. Thus, according to our apprehension, we have explained, since you asked it, our sentiments. And do you, if you have aught preferable, impart it to us, that from you and from ourselves we may learn which to choose and follow.

Farewell: love me as a son, for I also love you.

LETTER LXVII.

S. AMBROSE BEGINS by pointing out that Moses deferred to Aaron in matters connected with the Priesthood, and then goes on to dwell on the rarity and the blessing of true penitence.

AMBROSE TO SIMPLICIANUS, GREETING.

1. THE greatness of each person as regards his own functions is taught us in that Scripture lesson by which your attention has been justly attracted, that Moses, Num. xii. 8. than whom no man saw God more intimately, Deut. xxxiv. 10. neither arose there a prophet since in Israel whom the Lord knew face to face; he who was constantly Exod. xxxiv. 28. with the Lord forty days and nights, when he received the law in the Mount, he, I say, Ib. iv. 12. to whom the Lord gave the words which he should speak, is found to have approved the counsel of his brother Aaron more than his own. Was there then any man more prudent and learned than Moses? Nay, of Aaron himself we afterwards read that Num. xii. 1. together with Miriam he transgressed concerning the Ethiopian woman.

2. But I would have you carefully consider this very thing, how Moses excelled in knowledge, Aaron in counsel. Moses was the greatest prophet, who said of Christ, Deut. xviii. 15. Like unto me, unto Him shall ye hearken. And the Lord Himself says of him, S. Luke xvi. 31. if they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead. In the matter of prophecy therefore Moses is preferred as a prophet; but where the subject and function and office relates to the Priesthood, Aaron is preferred as being a Priest. Let us now treat the passage itself.

3. A he-goat was slain for sin; offered for an whole burnt-offering. Moses afterwards sought for it, and it was burnt. Lev. x. 16–18. And he was angry with Eleazar and Ithamar, the sons of Aaron which were left alive, saying, Wherefore have ye not eaten the sin-offering in the holy place, seeing it is most holy, and God hath given it you to bear the iniquity of the congregation? Ye should indeed have eaten it in the holy place as I commanded. Now when Aaron saw that Moses was angry he replied to him meekly, Behold, this day have they offered their sin-offering and their burnt-offering before the Lord, and such things have befallen me, and if I had eaten the sin-offering to-day, should it have been accepted in the sight of the Lord? And when Moses heard that, he was content. Let us consider what these things mean.

4. Not to sin is an attribute of God alone: to amend and correct one's error and to do penance for one's sin is the part of a wise man. But this is very difficult in this human life. For what is so rare as to find a man who will convict himself, and condemn his own act? Rare is the confession of sin, rare is penitence, rare among men is the admission of that word. Nature and shame both recoil from it; nature, because all are under sin, and he who wears flesh is subject to transgression. Thus the nature of the flesh, and the allurements of the world are repugnant to innocence and integrity. Shame recoils also, because every man blushes to confess his own fault, thinking more of the present than of the future.

5. Now Moses desired to find a soul free from sin, that it might lay aside the slough of error, and depart, relieved from transgression, without any cause of shame within itself. But such a soul he found not, because an irrational impulse comes quickly on, and a certain flame, whose motions are very swift, feeds upon the soul, and burns up its innocence. For the future is outweighed by the present, moderation by violence, worth by numbers, soberness by pleasure, hardness by luxury, sadness by joy, austerity by blandishments, slowness by too great precipitance. And iniquity, which suggests occasions of doing evil, is a thing swift in its nature, for its Ps. xiv. 6. feet are swift to shed blood; but all virtue uses gentle and long delays, judging beforehand and looking narrowly into what is to be undertaken. And thus the good mind scrutinizes its own counsels, and examines beforehand what is becoming and excellent; but in iniquity the act outstrips consideration. Penitence therefore is tardy and abashed, because it is oppressed and drawn back by present shame; having, in itself, regard only to things future, the hope whereof is late, the fruit tardy, and so the desire of them is tardy also.

6. During these strivings of hope and virtue shamelessness runs onward, and by the glare of things present, penitence is excluded, its affections are, as it were, burnt up, and all that has respect to it is lost. The Law seeks and finds it not, for it is scorched by the heat and smoke of iniquity, and the anger, as it were, of the Law is roused. Moses says that the sin-offering ought to have been eaten in the holy place, and rebukes the priests as remiss; Aaron replies that the priestly judgment ought to be cautious; that such a function must not be lightly entrusted to an unsound conscience, lest this error be worse than the first. For by a filthy vessel wine or oil is easily tainted and spoilt.

7. But how could sin be burnt out when the fire was strange fire; and this in the sight of the Lord to Whom even hidden things are known? Can it please the Lord, if a man, while he is yet engaged in sin, and keeps unrighteousness in his heart, professes that he is doing penance? It is the same thing as if one who is sick should feign himself well, he will only become worse; for the pretence of health can avail him nothing; since it is but shadowed forth by words, not sustained by any support of virtue.

8. This strange fire then is lust, this strange fire is every incentive of cupidity, this strange fire is all burning avarice. By this fire man is not cleansed but rather burned up. For where this strange fire is, if any man offer himself in the sight of the Lord, the celestial fire consumes him as it did Nadab and Abihu who were burned together with those sacrifices which had been offered for sin on the sacred Altars. He therefore who would cleanse his sin let him remove from him strange fire. Let him offer himself to that fire only which burns up the fault not the man.

9. And who this fire is, let us learn from the words, that Jesus S. Matt. iii. 11. shall baptize with the Holy Ghost and with fire. This is that fire which dried up Ib. ix. 20. her issue of blood who had suffered it for twelve years; that fire, which took away the sin of S. Luke xix. 8. Zacchæus when he said that he would give half of his goods to the poor, and if he had taken any thing from any man would restore fourfold. This is that fire, which wiped away the thief's crime, for He is Heb. xii. 29. a consuming fire Who said, S. Luke xxiii. 43. To-day shalt thou be with Me in Paradise. Thus He healed those in whom He found a simple and pure confession; no malice, no fraud.

10. Judas moreover could not obtain a remedy, although he said, S. Matt. xxvii. 4. I have sinned, in that I have betrayed the innocent blood, for he cherished within his breast strange fire, which urged him on to destroy himself. He was not worthy to be healed, for he wept not through conversion of his inmost mind, nor did he diligently do penance; for such is the love of the Lord Jesus that He would have granted pardon even to him, had he waited for the mercy of Christ.

11. This fault therefore the priests cannot remove, nor the sin of him who offers himself in guile, and still harbours a desire of transgressing. For they cannot eat of that which is full of fraud, and has the serpent's scar within; for the food of the priest lies in the remission of sins. Wherefore Christ the chief of Priests says, S. John iv. 34. My meat is to do the will of My Father which is in heaven. What is the will of God but this, Isa. xxx. 15. In returning and rest shall ye be saved? In the guileful man therefore there is no food. Neither again can he taste the sweetness of a feast whose conscience is not sincere and pure; for the bitterness of fraud takes away the sweetness of the viands; and an evil conscience will not permit penitence to refresh and feed the guilty soul.

12. Such affections therefore, such petitions, such penitence are neither useful nor a pleasure to the priests. And that Lev. xvi. 27. he-goat offered as an whole burnt offering for sin was deservedly burnt, because strange fire was found in the sacrifice. On that account it was not a pleasing and acceptable sacrifice to God; for that is not accepted which has not been approved among the riches of sincerity and truth.

13. And so elsewhere also you read of Ib. xvi. 8. two he-goats, one whereon was the lot of the Lord, the other that of the scape-goat, and that that whereon was the lot of the Lord was offered and sacrificed, while the one whereon was the lot of the scape-goat was sent into the wilderness to take away the iniquities of the people, or of any sinner. For as there are S. Matt. xxiv. 40 two men in the field, and one of them shall be taken and the other left, so are there two he-goats, one of which is used for sacrifice, and the other sent into the wilderness. The one is of no use, neither to be eaten nor fed upon by the sons of the priests. For as in matters of food, what is good is eaten, what is useless or bad is thrown away, in the same way we call good works festive, as fit for eating.

14. It will not therefore be pleasing to the Lord if the priest eat of a sacrifice which presents a deceptive offering, not the sincerity of a diligent confession. And therefore that goat is to be sent into the wilderness, where our fathers wandered, where they wandered and could not attain to the land of the resurrection, but the memory of them passed from the land. Hear again what are festive works. Lev. xxv. 6. And the sabbath of the land shall be meat for you. For rest in God, which causes tranquillity of mind, is festive and refreshing. And now let us also rest from discoursing.

Farewell; love me as you do, for I also love you.

LETTER LXVIII.

AN EXPLANATION OF the text, Thy heaven shall be brass and thy earth iron.

AMBROSE TO ROMULUS.

1. BEING yourself in the country I am surprised at your having been led to inquire of me the reason why God should have said, Deut. xxviii. 23. And thy heaven shall be brass, and thy earth iron. For the very appearance of the country and its present fertility might teach us how great is the mildness of the air, and how genial is the climate, when God vouchsafes to give plenty, but when sterility, how all things are closed up, how dense the air, so as to seem hardened into the very substance of brass. Elsewhere also you read that in the days of Elijah 1 Kings xvii. 1. S. Luke iv. 25. the heaven was shut up three years and six months.

2. By the heaven then being brass is signified its being shut up, and refusing its use to the earth. The earth also is iron, for it withholds its produce, and with hostile rigour excludes from its fructifying soil the seeds thrown upon it, which its wont is to cherish as in the bosom of a tender mother. For when does iron bring forth fruit, when does brass melt into showers?

3. Those impious men therefore He threatens with miserable famine, that they who know not how to shew filial piety to the common Lord and Father of all, may be deprived of the support of His paternal clemency, that the heaven may be to them as brass, and the air condensed into the substance of metal; that the earth may be to them as iron, deprived of its natural productions, and as is usually the case with poverty, a sower of strife. For they who are in want of food commit robberies, that at the expense of others they may relieve their own hunger.

4. If further the offence of the inhabitants be so great that God stirs up and brings war upon them, then their land is truly iron, bristling with crops of spears, and stripped of its own fruit, fruitful as regards punishment, barren as regards nourishment. But where is abundance? Exod. xvi. 4. Behold I will rain bread for you, saith the Lord.

Farewell; love me, for I also love you.

LETTER LXIX.

IN THIS LETTER S. Ambrose answers a question propounded to him as to the ground of the severity of the Mosaic Law against those who disguised their sex.

AMBROSE TO IRENÆUS, GREETING.

1. YOU have referred to me, as to a father, the inquiry which has been made of you, why the Law was so severe in pronouncing those unclean who used the garments of the other sex, whether they were men or women, for it is written, Deut. xxii. 5. The woman shall not wear that which pertaineth unto a man, neither shall a man put on a woman's garment; for all that do so are an abomination unto the Lord.

2. Now, if you will consider it well, that which nature herself abhors must be incongruous. For why do you not wish to be thought a man, seeing that you are born such? why do you assume an appearance which is foreign to you? why do you play the woman, or you, O woman, the man? Nature clothes each sex in their proper raiment. Moreover in men and women, habits, complexion, gestures, gait, strength and voice are all different.

3. So also in the rest of the animal creation; the form, the strength, the roar of the lion and lioness, of the bull and heifer are different. Deer also differ as much in form as they do in sex, so that you may distinguish the stag from the hind even at a distance. But in the case of birds the similitude between them and men, as regards covering, is still closer; for in them Nature distinguishes their sex by their very plumage. The peacock is beautiful, but the feathers of its consort are not variegated with equal beauty. Pheasants also have different colours to mark the difference of the sexes. And so with poultry. How sonorous is the cock's voice, night by night performing his natural office of calling us from sleep by crowing. They do not change their form; why then do we desire to change ours?

4. A Greek custom has indeed prevailed for women to wear men's tunics as being shorter. Be it allowed however that they should imitate the nature of the more worthy sex; but why should men choose to assume the appearance of the inferior? A falsehood is base even in word, much more in dress. So in the heathen temples, where there is a false faith, there also is a false nature. It is there considered holy for men to assume women's garments, and female gestures. And therefore the Law says that every man who puts on a woman's garment is an abomination unto the Lord.

5. I conceive however that it is spoken not so much of garments as of manners, and of our habits and actions, in that one kind of act becomes a man, the other a woman. Wherefore the Apostle also says, as the interpreter of the Law, 1 Cor. xiv. 34, 35. Let your women keep silence in the Churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak, but Gen. iii. 16. they are to be under obedience, as also saith the Law. And if they will learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home. And to Timothy: 1 Tim. ii. 11, 12. Let the woman learn in silence with all subjection; but I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man.

6. But how unseemly is it for a man to do the works of a woman! As for those who curl their hair, like women, let them conceive also, let them bring forth. Yet the one sex wears veils, the other wages war. Let them however be excused who follow their national usages, barbarous though they be, the Persians and Goths and Armenians. Nature is superior to country.

7. And what shall we say of others who think it belongs to luxury to have in their service slaves wearing curls and ornaments of the neck? It is but just that chastity should be lost where the distinction of sexes is not preserved, a point wherein the teaching of nature is unambiguous, according to the Apostle's words; 1 Cor. xi. 13–15. Is it comely that a woman pray unto God uncovered? Doth not even nature itself teach you that if a man have long hair it is a shame unto him: but if a woman hath long hair, it is a glory unto her; for her hair is given her for a covering. Such is the answer which you may make to those who have referred to you.

Farewell; love me as a son, for I love you as a father.

LETTER LXX.

S. AMBROSE IN this Letter considers a part of the prophecy of Micah as describing the recovery of a fallen soul.

AMBROSE TO HORONTIANUS.

1. THE Prophets indeed announced the gathering together of the Gentiles, and the future establishment of the Church; but as the Church sees not only the continuous progress of strong souls, but likewise the relapse of weak ones, and their subsequent conversion, we are able to gather from the Prophetical books both how the gracious and strong soul advances without stumbling, and also how the weak soul falls, and how she repairs her falls and recovers her steps.

2. Accordingly as in the Song of Songs we read of this continuous progress of blessed souls, so let us now consider, as set forth in the prophet Micah, concerning whom we have begun to speak, the conversion of a fallen soul. For it is not without good reason that the prophet's words, Mic. v. 2. But thou Bethlehem Ephratah, excited your attention. For how can that house where Christ was born be the house of wrath? Such is, indeed, what the name of the place signifies, but certain mysterious operations are declared thereby.

3. Let us first consider what Micah signifies in Latin. It means 'Who is from God,' or as we find elsewhere 'who is this man,' the son of the Ib. i. 1. Morasthite, that is, the heir? Now, who is this heir, but the Son of God, Who says, S. Matt. xi. 27. All things are given unto Me of My Father; and Who, being Himself the Heir, would have us His co-heirs. And well may we say 'Who is that man?' not one of the people, but chosen to receive the grace of God, in whom the Holy Spirit speaks, who began to prophesy Mic. i. 1. in the days of Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah kings of Judah. By which order is signified the course of the vision, for the progress is from the times of evil kings to that of a good king.

4. Thus as the afflicted soul was first oppressed under evil kings, let us consider what was the progress of her conversion. Being weak she was overthrown, and all her fences were made as a way for the passers-by, or for the inroads of passion; dissolved in luxury and pleasure, she was trodden down and removed from the presence of the Lord. Her Ib. iv. 8. tower was decayed, that tower which, as we read in the song of Isaiah, Isa. v. 2. was placed in the midst of a choice vineyard. Now this is the case with the tower, when the vine is withered, and her flock wanders; but when the verdure of the vine comes back, or the sheep returns, it grows bright again, for nothing is so decayed as iniquity, or so bright as righteousness.

5. To this tower the sheep is recalled, when the soul is recalled from her relapse, and in that sheep that reign of Christ returns, which was in the beginning, for He is Rev. i. 8. the Beginning and the Ending, even the beginning of our salvation. Still the soul is first severely rebuked, in that she has grievously transgressed, and she is asked, Mic. iv. 9. Why hast thou learnt evil? was there no king in thee? that is, thou hadst a king to govern and protect thee, thou oughtest not to have strayed from the path of righteousness, nor to have left the ways of the Lord, Who imparted to thee sense and reason. Where were thy thoughts and counsels, whereby by innate vigour thou mightest have guarded against unrighteousness and warded off transgression? Why have Ib. pangs taken thee, as a woman in travail; that thou shouldest be in labour of iniquity, and bring forth unrighteousness? For there is no greater grief than for a man to wound his conscience with the sword of sin; nor is there any heavier burden than the weight of sin and the load of transgression. It bows down the soul, it bends it even to the earth, so that it cannot raise itself. Heavy, my son, heavy indeed is the weight of sin. S. Luke xiii. 11. Thus that woman in the Gospel, who was bowed together, and thus bore the semblance of a heavy-laden soul, could be made straight by Christ alone.

6. To such a soul it is said, Mic. iv. 10. Be in pain and labour to bring forth, O daughter of Sion. For the pains of child-birth work tribulation, and Rom. v. 3–5. tribulation patience, and patience experience, and experience hope, and hope maketh not ashamed. At the same time all that is opposed to virtue is plucked up and cast forth, lest its seeds should remain behind and revive, and put out new buds and fruit.

7. Nor is it without a meaning that Mic. iv. 13. horns and hoofs were given to her, that she might bruise all the sheaves of the floor, like the calf of Mount Lebanon. For unless the sheaves were bruised, and the straw winnowed, the corn that is within cannot be found and separated. Wherefore let the soul that would advance in virtue first bruise and thrash out its superfluous passions, that so, when the harvest is come, it may shew forth its fruits. How many are the weeds which choke the good seed! These must first be rooted out, that they may not destroy the fertile crop of the soul.

8. Then the provident guide of the soul has regard to this, that he may circumscribe her pleasures and cut off her desires, that she may not delight herself in them. That father's corrections are profitable, Prov. xiii. 24. who spares not the rod, that he may render his son's soul obedient to salutary precepts. For he visits with a rod, as we read, Ps. lxxxix. 32. I will visit their offences with the rod. And so he who smites the soul of the Israelites with a rod on the cheek, by this Divine punishment instructs her in the discipline of patience. But no man need despair who is chastised and corrected, for Ecclus. xxx. 1. he who loveth his son chastiseth him. Let no man therefore despair of a remedy.

9. Behold therefore, that house which was to thee ‘the house of one seeing wrath,’ is become ‘the house of bread;’ where rage was, there is now piety; where the slaughter of the Innocents, there now the redemption of all mankind, as it is written, Mic. v. 2. But thou, Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall He come forth that is Ruler in Israel. Bethlehem is the house of bread; Ephratah the house of one seeing wrath. This is the interpretation of these names. S. Luke ii. 4. In Bethlehem Christ was born of Mary, but Bethlehem is the same as Ephratah. Thus Christ was born in the house of wrath, and therefore it is no longer a house of wrath, but the house of bread, for it received that S. John vi. 50. bread which came down from heaven. But Ephratah is the house of one that was wrath, because while Herod searches there for Christ, he commands the Innocents to be slain, wherefore S. Matt. ii. 18. In Rama was there a voice heard, Rachel weeping for her children.

10. But let no man fear any longer; for that rest which David sought after Ps. cxxxii. 6. is heard of at Ephrata, and found in the fields of the wood. A wood, as yet, was the assembly of the Gentiles, but after it believed in Christ it became fruitful, receiving S. Luke i. 42. the fruit of the blessed womb. And Gen. xxxv. 19. Rachel died in childbirth, because even then, as the patriarch’s wife, she saw the wrath of Herod, which spared not the tenderest age. Or again, because in Ephratah she gave birth to that Benjamin who excelling in beauty came last in the order of the mystery, I mean Paul, who before his birth caused no small grief to his Mother, by persecuting her sons. And she died, and was buried there, that we, dying and being buried together with Christ, may rise again in His Church. Therefore according to another interpretation, Ephratah signifies ‘enriched or filled with fruit.’

11. Now here, that is, in the book of the Prophet, we find the expression, Mic. v. 2. thou art ὀλιγοστός, that is, one of few. But in Matthew we find, S. Matt. ii. 6. And thou, Bethlehem, in the land of Judah, art not among the few. In one the expression is house of Ephratah, in the other house of Juda; but this is a difference of words not of meaning. For inwardly Judæa saw this exhibition of wrath, outwardly she suffered it. And she is among the few, because they are few who enter the house of bread by the narrow way. But he is not among the few, that is among those that make progress, who knows not Christ. Nor is she the least, who is the house of blessing, and the receptacle of Divine grace; yet in this she is the least, for any thing which is offered to Christ seems to be offered to her. And he who seeks for the Church seeks for Christ; and He is either honoured or despised in every little one, wherefore He says Himself, S. Matt. xxv. 40. Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these, ye have done it unto Me.

12. Now that Bethlehem is the very same place as Ephratah we learn from the passage in Genesis, which says, Gen. xxxv. 19. And Rachel died, and was buried in the way to Ephrath, which is Bethlehem. Holy Rachel, being a type of the Church, was buried in the way, that they who go by might say, Ps. cxxix. 8. The Lord prosper you, and Ib. cxxvi. 7. they shall come again with joy.

13. Wherefore every soul which receives that bread which comes down from heaven is the house of bread, that is, the Bread of Christ, being nourished and supported and having its heart strengthened by that heavenly bread which dwells within it. Hence Paul also says, 1 Cor. x. 17. For we being many are one bread. Every faithful soul is Bethlehem, as Jerusalem also is said to be, which has the peace and tranquillity of that Jerusalem which is above, in heaven. That is the true Bread which, when broken into pieces, fed all men.

14. The fifth version[279] has the words, ‘the house of Bread.’ For ‘Beth’ signifies a house, and ‘lehem’ signifies bread. From the other versions I imagine that the unbelief of the Jews, who feared to convict themselves, either led the writers to omit it or others to erase it.

15. And that Bethlehem is of the tribe of Judah we learn from that passage in the book of Judges, Jud. xix. 2. where the Levite took to him a concubine out of Bethlehem-judah, and his concubine was incensed against him, and returned to her father's house in Bethlehem-judah.

16. Now Christ's Mic. v. 2. goings forth were from everlasting[280], because our life[281] then commenced, when He Ps. xix. 5. went forth to run His course, and gave to Israel the day of salvation. Mic. v. 3. Until the time that she which travaileth hath brought forth. To that soul to which Christ hath come fruitfulness or bringing forth hath come also; so it was with the Church, who has Is. liv. 1. brought more than she that had children; who has brought forth seven, that is, a lawful peaceful and tranquil progeny. Now that soul begins to conceive, and Christ to be formed in her, which welcomes Him on His arrival and is so fed by His plenty that she is in want of nothing, and other souls by seeing her return unto the way of salvation.

17. Mic. v. 5. And there shall be peace to him, but it is by temptations that he must be tried; then, when he has shut out or repulsed vain thoughts, when he has subdued all the motions of his rising passions, when distress and persecution and hunger and peril and the sword press hard upon him, will the value of his peace and tranquillity be tested. Then, it is said, shall be peace; because in all these things Rom. viii. 37. we are conquerors through Him that loved us, because we trust in Him that neither death nor the power of temptations shall cast off or separate us from His love. He will send temptations, that the just may be proved. The Lord sends temptations, not that He wishes any man to be beguiled, but because the weak are for the most part vanquished by temptation, whilst the strong are proved by them.

18. Then there shall be to them Mic. v. 7. dew from the Lord, and rest; then the soul of the just shall be Ib. 8. as a young lion among the flocks of sheep. I cannot doubt but that this similitude should, after the manner of the Gospel, be referred to Christ, for He has said, S. Matt. xiii. 43. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. For Mic. v. 10. his chariots shall be broken; that is to say, the senseless impulses and motions of the body shall be appeased; that condition shall cease wherein 2 Cor. vii. 5. Without are fightings, within are fears, and over all, that is, within and without, tranquillity shall prevail; nor shall there be any resistance or repugnance to this good will, because the obedience of the flesh, when Eph. ii. 14. the middle wall of partition is broken down, and both are made one, shall abolish all discord.

19. But if any weak soul, like Israel according to the flesh have stumbled, and, shaken by persecutions, have separated herself in some degree from the love of Christ, she is checked and reproved as faithless, and ungrateful, and unbelieving, as one who, after being freed from the vanities of the world, has looked behind her and so relapsed into them again; as one from whom no gifts, no sacrifice of bulls, but only to know what is good and to do justly, has been required. Mic. vi. 8. He hath showed thee, o man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to have mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God? But since the weaker soul has not kept this commandment, the Lord says to her, Ib. vii. 1. Woe is me, for I am as when they have gathered the summer fruits, as the grape-gleanings of the vintage. And the prophet, in whom the Lord spoke, says to that soul, Ib. 2. Woe is me, the good man is perished out of the earth. This is as though the Lord Himself spoke, in compassion for the future punishment of sin, and as weeping over our transgressions.

20. Then the soul, learning that she will gather no fruit from what she has sown; that in the loss of her harvest nothing will remain to strengthen her, that she will press her olives, but will find no oil of gladness, nor will drink the wine of pleasantness; finding also in the works of the flesh all things full of blood, full of circumvention, of fraud and deceit, hollow shows of affection, and pre-concerted guile; nay, those of her own household adverse to her; and therefore that the motions of her companion the body, which are grievous enemies of the soul, must be guarded against; turns to God, and begins to hope in Him, and knowing that the flesh is truly an enemy to her, says to it, Ib. 8. Rejoice not against me, O mine enemy, when I fall I shall arise, when I sit in darkness, the Lord shall be a light unto me.

21. Finding moreover that she is mocked by some power which opposes her following a better path, and domineers over her, so that she has been delivered 1 Cor. v. 5. for the destruction of the flesh, to be afflicted with various evils, assigned to her either by the Lord to satisfy for her sins, or by the Evil One who is envious of her conversion, and desires to harass and regain her to himself, finding this, she says, Mic. vii. 9. I will bear the indignation of the Lord, Who either chastens me in my fall, or has given thee power to persecute me, because I have sinned against Him, but I will endure until He plead my cause. For unless I shall confess, and pay the price of my iniquities, I cannot be justified. But being justified and having paid double for my sins, He shall Mic. vii. 9. execute judgment for me, laying aside His wrath, since the sentence against me is satisfied. Ib. He will bring me forth to the light, and I shall behold His righteousness and gaze on His delights. Then she that is mine enemy, that is, the malice of the devil, shall see the light of my reconciliation and shame shall cover her which saith to me, Where is the Lord thy God? She shall behold in me His pity and His love.

22. Wherefore let us not listen to him when we are in any of the troubles of this world, be it bodily pain, or the loss of our children, or of other necessaries, let us not listen to his words, Where is the Lord thy God? It is under severe pain that his temptations are to be feared, it is then that he seeks to turn the sick soul astray.

23. Wherefore the soul which has not listened to his allurements, seeing afterwards the wonderful works of God, seeing herself in heaven, and the devil creeping upon the earth, will congratulate herself saying, Ib. 18. Who is a God like unto Thee, that pardoneth iniquity and passeth by transgression? Thou hast not been mindful of Thy indignation, but hast cast all our iniquities into the sea as the lead of Egypt, and hast graciously returned to have pity upon us, both forgiving and hiding our offences, as it is written, Ps. xxxii. 1. Blessed is he whose unrighteousness is forgiven, and whose sin is covered. For some sins Thou dost wash away in the blood of Thy Son, others Thou dost remit unto us, that by good works and confession we may cover our errors. The expression therefore that pardoneth iniquities, appertains to remission; because He takes them away altogether, so that the things which He remembers not are as though they did not exist. But the words passeth by transgression, signify that inasmuch as we confess our failings, and cover them with the fruit of our good works, they are referred to the author of our fault, and the instigator of our sin. For what else does he who confesses his fault do but prove himself to have been beguiled by the craft and malice of that spiritual wickedness which is his adversary?

24. For this therefore this soul gives thanks, that the Lord both pardoneth iniquities and passeth by transgressions, and casts them into the deep of the sea. Which may also be referred to Baptism, wherein the Egyptian is drowned, the Hebrew rises again; and whereby by the depths of His wisdom, and the multitude of her good works her former sins are covered, through the riches of the mercy of our God, Who is mindful of the promise which He gave to Abraham, and suffers not that soul which is heir of Abraham to perish.

25. It is by these means that such a soul is recovered. But do you, my son, who from the first flower of boyhood have been an heir of the Church which bore and which sustains you, persevere in your purpose, mindful of the grace of God, and of the gift which you have received by the imposition of my hands, that in this degree[282] also, as in the holy office of deacon, you may shew faith and industry, and expect a recompense from the Lord Jesus.

Farewell; love me as a son, for I also love you.

LETTER LXXI.

S. AMBROSE IN this letter continues the subject of the last, and, having described in that the steps by which the fallen soul recovers herself, here considers how the faithful soul is taken in charge, taught and conducted to perfection by Christ: and shews that the stages in the progress of such a soul are typified by the journies of Christ.

AMBROSE TO HORONTIANUS.

1. IN my last letter I spoke of the soul that has made in its progress certain devious circuits, wavering, as Israel according to the flesh did of old, to and fro. For Israel herself also, when Rom. xi. 25. the fulness of the Gentiles shall be come in, shall be delivered by the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ: the Gentile soul meanwhile, whose transgression has been lighter, having by her conversion worked her own recovery. In my present letter I will treat of the daughter of the Church; and consider how the Lord Jesus first took her under His care, taught her, and, in His Gospel, led her on to perfection.

2. Now it was as she lay in misery and confusion that He first took her under His care, — for how else but miserably can that soul live, which is exiled from Paradise? — and brought her to Bethlehem. The progress then, of this soul is at once signified in that it goes up to the "house of bread[283]," where it can know no death or barrenness of faith. Observe, I am now speaking of souls in general, those souls by which we live and move, not of any soul in particular; for it is not of the individual or species, but of souls in general that I purpose to discourse.

3. Christ went down into Egypt, as Protector and Guide of our soul, from thence He returned into Judæa. He was in the wilderness, in Capernaum; near the borders of Zabulon; by the sea coast; He passed through the corn fields; He was in Bethphage; in Ephraim; in Bethany; then He passed over into the garden, where He gave Himself up; on Calvary, where He suffered.

4. All these are the progresses of our soul, and exercised thereby she receives the graces of a holy life[284]. For the human race, when excluded from Paradise in Adam and Eve, and banished to the village[285], began to roam up and down and to wander about with careless steps: but in His own good time the Lord Jesus Phil. ii. 8. emptied Himself that He might receive this exile into himself, and re-form her again to her previous state of grace. And thus, when found, she retraced, as the Gospel lesson teaches us, her devious course of error, and was recalled to Paradise.

5. He led her through the cornfields that He might satisfy her hunger, first in the desert, then to Capernaum, making her abode to be not in the city but in the field: next He brought her to the borders of Zabulon, near unto the floods of night, that is, the darker riddles of the prophets; that she might learn thereby to reach to the borders of the Gentiles, that common centre, and not to fear the storms and billows of this world. Why should she, seeing that Christ has 1 Kings x. 22. ships of Tarshish, mystical ships I mean, which traverse the sea, and bring pious offerings for the building of the Temple? In such ships as these Christ sails, and like a good pilot rests in the stern while the sea is calm; when it is disturbed He awakes, and rebukes the winds, that He may anew shew peace on His disciples. Furthermore, by passing over to the Gentiles, He delivers the soul which was bound by the chains of the Law, that she may not pass over and keep company with the heathen.

6. He came to Bethany to the “place of obedience;” therefore was the dead there raised; for when the flesh is subdued to the spirit, human nature no longer lies as if dead in the tomb, but is raised again by the grace of Christ; there also she professes to offer herself to 'suffering'[286] for the Name of God. From the place of obedience, as John tells us, S. John xi. 54. He is led to Ephraim, that is, to the "fecundity of good fruits." Hence Ib. xii. 1. He returns to Bethany, that is, to "obedience;" for she who has once tasted the fruit of holy obedience is for the most part ready to preserve it and to be proved thereby.

7. And now, having been proved, she comes to Jerusalem, being made worthy to become the temple of God wherein Christ may dwell. Here it is that the Lord Jesus, sitting upon the foal of an ass, is received with the joy and congratulation of the age of innocence.

8. Afterwards are taught in the garden the words of eternal life; in that place where the Lord permitted Himself to be taken, Ib. xviii. 8. as John the Evangelist writes, signifying that our soul, or rather human nature, released from the bonds of error, is restored by Christ to that abode from whence in Adam she was cast. Wherefore to the thief who confessed Him it is said, S. Luke xxiii. 43. Verily I say unto thee, To-day shalt thou be with Me in Paradise. The thief had said, Ib. 42. Lord, remember me when Thou comest into Thy kingdom. Christ answered not concerning His kingdom, but yet to the purpose, To-day thou shalt be with Me in Paradise, that is, What has been lost must first be restored, then the increase bestowed; that thus the progress may be through Paradise to the kingdom, not through the kingdom to Paradise.

9. For the disciples it is reserved that they may receive an ample reward for their labours; and therefore to the thief He promised a sojourn, but deferred the kingdom. So that to him who is converted under the stroke of death, and confesses the Lord Jesus, to him let an abode in Paradise be vouchsafed, but for him who has undergone long travail, who has fought for Christ, who has won over souls and offered himself for Christ, for his wages let the kingdom of God be prepared; and let him rejoice in the fruition of this reward. To Peter it is said, S. Matt. xvi. 19. I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven; and thus, while the convert from robbery obtains rest, on him who has been proved in the Apostolate authority is bestowed.

10. This is the Evangelical soul, the soul of the Gentiles, the daughter of the Church, far better than the soul cast out of Judæa; raising herself from her earthly course to the Lord Jesus and to higher things by good counsels and works; received by Christ upon Golgotha. Upon Golgotha was the sepulchre of Adam; that Christ by His Cross might raise him from death. Thus where 1 Cor. xv. 22. in Adam was the death of all, there in Christ was the resurrection of all.

Farewell, my son; love me, for I also love you.

LETTER LXXII.

IN THIS LETTER S. Ambrose deals with the question of the rite of circumcision, and explains to Constantius why it was established in the Old Testament and yet done away in the New. He speaks also of the true and spiritual circumcision which belongs to Christians.

AMBROSE TO CONSTANTIUS.

1. MANY persons have raised an important question why circumcision should be enjoined as profitable by the authority of the Old Testament, Acts xv. 10. and rejected as useless by the teaching of the New; especially since it was Abraham, who S. John viii. 56. saw the day of the Lord Jesus and was glad, Gen. xvii. 10. who first received the command to observe the rite of circumcision. For it is manifest that he directed his mind not to the literal but to the spiritual sense of the Divine Law, and so in the sacrifice of the lamb saw the true passion of the Lord's Body.

2. What then shall we consider to have been the aim of our father Abraham, in first instituting that which his posterity were not to follow? or for what reason are the bodies of infants circumcised, and in their very birth subjected to dangers, and this at the Divine command, so that peril of their life ensues from a mystery of religion. What is the meaning of this? For the ground of the truth is hidden, and either something should have been signified by an intelligible mystery, or else it should have been indicated by a mystery which was not so full of danger.

3. And why was the sign of the Divine Testament attached to that member which is considered as less comely to sight; or with what purpose did the Creator of our body Himself, in the very beginning of our race, choose that His work should be wounded and stained with blood, and a portion of it cut off, which He, Who has disposed all things in order, deemed proper to form together with the other members, as though it were necessary? For this portion of our bodies is either contrary to nature, and then no man ought to have that which is contrary to nature, or it is according to nature, and that ought not to be cut off which was created according to the perfection of nature; especially since aliens from the portion of the Lord our God are wont to make this a chief subject of ridicule. Again as it is God's purpose, as He has frequently declared, to induce as many persons as possible to the observance of holy religion, how much more would they be invited, were not some deterred either by the danger or reproach of this very circumcision.

4. To return therefore to my first purpose and follow the order I have proposed, it seems good to speak of the nature itself of circumcision. The defence of this ought to be twofold, for so is the accusation, the one brought by the Gentiles, the other by those who are considered as belonging to the people of God, more vigorously on the part of the Gentiles, for they deem men marked with circumcision to be worthy even of scorn and disgrace. Yet their own wisest men approve of circumcision, so as to think it right to circumcise those whom they select to know and celebrate their mysteries[287].

5. The Egyptians too, who apply themselves to geometry and observing the courses of the stars, consider a priest who does not bear the mark of circumcision impious. For they believe that neither the wisdom of incantation, nor geometry, nor astronomy can attain their due power without the seal of circumcision. And therefore, in order to render their operations efficacious they choose to solemnize a certain purification of their own by means of the secret rite of circumcision.

6. And we find in ancient history that not only the Egyptians but also some of the Æthiopians Arabs and Phœnicians used circumcision. And in maintaining this custom they think that they are maintaining one still to approved, for being thus initiated by means of the first fruits of their own body and blood, they conceive that by the consecration of this small portion, the snares which demons lay for our kind will be defeated; and that those who attempt to injure the well-being of the whole man, may find their power baffled either by the law or the semblance of sacred circumcision. For I am of opinion that heretofore the Prince of devils has deemed that his arts would lose their baneful efficacy if he were to attempt to injure one whom he found initiated by the seal of sacred circumcision, or one who seemed at least in this respect to obey the Divine law.

7. Now he who diligently considers the functions of our several members will be able to judge that it was for no unmeaning purpose that as regards this little portion of this member the child was not only circumcised but Gen. xvii. 12. circumcised also on the eighth day; when the mother of the child begins to be in pure blood, having before the eighth day been considered as sitting in unclean blood. Let so much have been said in reply to those who are not joined with us in unity of faith; on which account discussion with them, as differing from us, becomes more difficult.

8. But to those who believe in the Lord Jesus Christ we have to offer the following reply, which, when we were disputing against the opinions of Gentiles, we were unwilling to disclose. For if we were 1 S. Pet. i. 18, 19. redeemed not with corruptible silver and gold, but with the precious blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, and purchased from no one but him who had purchased with money, and was owner of, the services of our now sinful race, beyond a doubt he demanded a price for releasing from his service those whom he kept in bondage. But the price of our freedom was the Blood of the Lord Jesus, which of necessity was to be paid to him to whom we were sold by our sins.

9. Until, therefore, this price should have been paid for all men which by the shedding of the Lord's Blood had to be so paid for the absolution of all, the blood of every man, who, by the Law and solemn custom were to follow the precepts of holy religion, was required. But, since one Lord Christ suffered, seeing that the ransom is now paid for all, there is now no longer any need that the blood of every man one by one should be shed by circumcision, for in the Blood of Christ the circumcision of all has been solemnized, and in His Cross we are all crucified together with Him, and buried in His sepulchre, and Rom. vi. 5 sq. planted together in the likeness of His death, that henceforth we should not serve sin: for he that is dead, is free from sin.

10. But if any one, such as Marcion and Manichæus, deem the judgment of God to be worthy of blame, either because He thought fit to give command concerning the observance of circumcision, or because He published a law directing the effusion of blood; he must needs consider the Lord Jesus also worthy of blame, Who shed not a little but much blood for the redemption of the world, and up to this hour commands us also to shed our blood for the great contest of Religion, saying, S. Matt. xvi. 24. If any man will follow Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow Me. But if in the case of a man offering his whole self out of piety, and cleansing himself by the effusion of much blood, such an accusation is not just, how can we blame the Law, for exacting a little drop of blood, when we proclaim the command of the Lord Jesus for the shedding of much blood, and the death of the whole body?

11. Nor was the very symbol and semblance of circumcision useless, for the people of God, signed thereby as by a certain bodily seal, was distinguished from the other nations. But the name of Christ being now bestowed upon them they have no need of a bodily sign, for they have obtained the honour of a Divine appellation. But what was there absurd in somewhat of pain or labour seeming to be imposed for piety's sake, to the intent that by such contests devotion might be better tried? It is becoming also that from the very cradle of life the symbol of religion should grow with our growth, and that all of a maturer age should be ashamed to yield either to labour or pain when their tender infancy had conquered both.

12. But now Christians have no need of the light pain of circumcision, for bearing about with them the Lord's Death, they at every act engrave on their foreheads contempt of their own death, as knowing that without the cross of the Lord they can have no salvation. For who would use a needle to fight with when armed with stronger weapons?

13. And now any one may easily perceive how easily the suggestion may be refuted, that more persons might be incited to the observance of holy religion unless they were withheld by the fear of pain or the appearance of labour. For could this terrify an older person, when many infants endured it without danger? Granting however that some Jewish children unable to bear the pain of circumcision and of so keen a stroke may have died, still this did not deter those of a robuster and more advanced age, and one who thus obeyed the celestial precepts it only made more praiseworthy.

14. But if they imagine that this light pain was such an obstacle to confession, what will they say of martyrdom? For if they choose to blame the pain of circumcision, they must blame also the death of martyrs, by whom religion so far from being impaired has received its perfection. But the pain of circumcision is so much removed from being hurtful to faith, that faith is approved by pain, for greater is the grace of faith if any one for religion's sake despise pain; and such a one has a greater reward than he who was only willing to endure the pain of circumcision that he might glory in the Law, and win praise of men rather than of God.

15. It was fitting therefore that this partial circumcision should take place before His advent Who was to circumcise the whole man, and that the human race should receive a partial preparation for believing in that which is perfect. But if circumcision must take place, in what region of the body ought it rather to fall than on that which seems to some less comely? 1 Cor. xii. 23. And those members of the body, which we think to be less honourable, upon those we bestow more abundant power; and our uncomely parts have abundant comeliness. For in what member ought men to be rather reminded of his blood than in that which is wont to minister to transgression?

16. And now is the fitting time to reply to those also who say, If this part of our body is according to nature it ought not to be cut off, but if contrary to nature, then it ought not to have been born together with it. Let these men, being so subtle, themselves answer me, whether the succession of the human race, which arises by generation is according to nature or contrary to nature? If according to nature, it ought never to be interrupted, and then how can we praise the chastity of men, the virginity of maids, the abstinence of widows, the continence of wives? No effort then to promote this succession should be suffered to lie idle. But the Author of nature Himself did not pay this regard to generation, for He gave us, when living in the body, His own example, and exhorted His disciples to chastity, saying, S. Matt. xix. 12. There be eunuchs, which have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it.

17. Man being made up of body and soul, (for at present it will suffice to speak of these and not to mention the spirit,) he is not naturally the same in both, but what is according to the nature of the body is contrary to the nature of the soul, and what is according to the nature of the soul is contrary to the nature of the body; so that were I to speak that which is according to nature in that which is seen, it will be contrary to nature as regards the unseen, and what is according to nature in the unseen is contrary to nature as regards the seen. It is no incongruity therefore in the man of God, if there should be things contrary to the nature of the body which are according to the nature of the soul.

18. With regard to those who say that more would have believed if circumcision had not been instituted, let them receive this answer, that more would have believed if there had been no martyrdom, but the constancy of a few is to be preferred to the remissness of a larger number. For as many kinds of washings preceded, because that one true Sacrament of Baptism with water and the Spirit, whereby the whole man is redeemed, was to follow, so also the circumcision of many was to precede, because the circumcision of the Lord's Passion, which Jesus suffered as the Lamb of God, that He might S. John i. 29. take away the sins of the world, was to follow.

19. My object in writing this has been to shew that it was fitting that circumcision, which is outward, should precede, that now after the Lord's Advent it might seem to be justly excluded. But now that circumcision is necessary which is in secret, in spirit not in the letter, seeing that there are two men in one, of whom it is said, 2 Cor. iv. 16. Though our outward man perish according to the desires of error, yet the inward man is renewed day by day, and in another passage, Rom. vii. 22. For I delight in the law of God after the inward man; that is, our inward man which is made according to the image and likeness of God, our outward is that which is formed of clay. So again in Genesis two creations of man are declared to us, and it is signified that by the second man was truly made.

20. As therefore there are two men, so also is his conversation two-fold; one of the inward the other of the outward man. And indeed many acts of the inward man reach to the outward man, in the same way that the chastity of the inward man passes into bodily chastity. He who is free from adultery of the heart is free from adultery of the body, but it does not also follow that he who has not sinned in body should not have sinned even in heart, for it is written, S. Matt. v. 28. Whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath already committed adultery with her in his heart. For although he be not yet an adulterer in body, still in affection he is one. So that there is a circumcision of the inward man, for he who is circumcised has put off, like a foreskin, all the allurements of the flesh, that so he may be in the spirit, not in the flesh, and by the spirit may mortify the deeds of the flesh.

21. And this is that circumcision which is in secret, Rom. iv. 11. as Abraham was first in the uncircumcision and afterwards came to be in the circumcision. Thus our inward man, while it is in the flesh, is as it were in uncircumcision, but when he is now no longer in the flesh but in the spirit, he begins to be in the circumcision not in the uncircumcision. And as he who is circumcised does not put off the whole flesh but his foreskin only, where corruption more frequently lies, so he who is circumcised in secret, puts off that flesh of which it is written, Isa. xi. 6, 7. All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field; the grass withereth, the flower fadeth, but the word of our God shall stand for ever; and there remains the flesh which will see the salvation of God, as it is written, S. Luke iii. 6. And all flesh shall see the salvation of God. What this flesh is cleanse your ears that you may understand.

22. Now that circumcision which is secret ought to be of such a kind as to bear no comparison with that which is outward. He therefore who is a Jew in secret, is he who excels, he who is from Judah, whose Gen. xlix. 8, 9. hand is in the neck of his enemies, who stooped down and couched as a lion, and as a lion's whelp, whom his brethren praise. From this Judah the prince departs not, because his word makes princes, such as are not overcome by worldly allurements and ensnared by the pleasures of this world. And since Judah himself was born into this generation, many of those who were born afterwards are preferred, that they may enjoy a pre-eminence of virtue. Let us have therefore the circumcision which is in secret, and the Jew that is in secret, that is, the spiritual: but he that is spiritual, as being a prince, 1 Cor. ii. 15. judgeth all things, yet he himself is judged of no man. It was fitting therefore, that the circumcision commanded by the prescript of the Law, which was partial, should cease after His coming Who was to circumcise the whole man, and fulfil the circumcision of the Law. And who is this but He Who said S. Matt. v. 17. I am not come to destroy the Law, but to fulfil it?

24. That the fulness of the Gentiles is come in is another reason, if you will attend to it carefully, why the circumcision of the foreskin ought to cease. For it was not upon the Gentiles but upon the seed of Abraham that circumcision was enjoined, for this is the first Divine promise, Gen. xvii. 9. sqq. And God said unto Abraham, Thou shalt keep My covenant therefore, thou and thy seed after in their generations. This is My covenant, which ye shall keep, between Me and you and thy seed after thee; Every man child among you shall be circumcised, and ye shall circumcise the flesh of your foreskin; and it shall be a token of the covenant betwixt Me and you. And he that is eight days old shall be circumcised among you, every man child in your generations. He that is born in thy house, or bought with money of any stranger, which is not of thy seed, must needs be circumcised; and My covenant shall be in your flesh, for an everlasting covenant. And the uncircumcised man child whose flesh of his foreskin is not circumcised on the eighth day, shall be cut off from the people; he hath broken My Covenant. It is affirmed indeed that the Hebrew text, as Aquila intimates, does not contain the words ‘on the eighth day;’ but all authority does not rest with Aquila, who being a Jew has passed it by in the letter, and not inserted, ‘on the eighth day.’

25. Meanwhile you have heard that both the eighth day and circumcision were given for a sign; now a sign is an indication of a greater matter, a symbol of a future verity; and a covenant was given to Abraham and his seed, to whom it was said, Ib. xxi. 12. In Isaac shall thy seed be. The circumcision of the Jews therefore, or of one born in his house, or bought with his money was permitted. But we cannot extend this to a foreigner or proselyte, unless they were born in the house of Abraham, or bought with his money, or of his seed. Again, nothing is said of proselytes; when it is wished to speak of them they are expressly mentioned, as it is written: Lev. xvii. 1, 8. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak unto Aaron, and unto his sons, and unto all the children of Israel, and say unto them: ... Whatsoever man there be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers which sojourn among you, that offereth a burnt-sacrifice. When therefore they are intended to be included the Law touches them; when the Divine word does not point to them, how can they seem to be bound? Again, it is written, Speak unto the sons of Aaron, when the priests are intended; and so as regards the Levites also.

26. Thus it is abundantly manifest that even according to the letter of the Law, although the Law be spiritual, yet that according to the very letter of the Law the Gentiles could not be obliged to observe circumcision, but that circumcision itself was a sign, until the fulness of the Gentiles should be come in, and so all Israel be saved by circumcision, not of a small portion of one member, but of the heart. And both the excuse on our parts is sufficient, and the continuance of circumcision among the Jews up to this day is excluded.

27. But as to its being imputed it as a cause of blame, now or in past time, by the Gentiles, I would say, first, it is not competent to them to blame or deride what others who are their fellows do. Suppose however that there were cause for their ridicule, why ought this to move us, when the very cross of the Lord is 1 Cor. i. 23, 24. a stumbling-block to the Jews, and foolishness to the Greeks, but to us the power of God and the wisdom of God. And the Lord Himself has said, S. Matt. x. 33. S. Luke ix. 26. Whosoever shall be ashamed[288] of Me before men, of him will I also be ashamed before My Father Which is in heaven; teaching us not to be disturbed by those things which are laughed at by men, if we observe them in the service of religion.

LETTER LXXIII.

IRENÆUS HAVING ENQUIRED why the Law was ever given, seeing that Paul declares it to be injurious: S. Ambrose replies that it would have been useless, had we kept that natural law which is written on our hearts, and is found even in infants; but that, this being broken, the former became necessary, that it might take away all excuse by its manifestation of that sin which was afterwards removed by the grace of Christ.

AMBROSE TO IRENÆUS.

1. GREATLY, it would seem, have you been moved by the lesson from the Apostle, having heard read to-day, Rom. iv. 15. Because the Law worketh wrath; for where no law is, there is no transgression. And therefore you have thought fit to ask why the Law was promulgated, if it profited nothing, nay rather, by working wrath and bringing in transgression, was injurious.

2. And indeed, according to the tenor of your question, it is certain that the Law, which was given by Moses, was not necessary. For had men been able to keep the natural Law, which our God and Maker implanted in the breast of each, there would have been no need of the Law, which, written on tables of stone, tended rather to entangle and fetter the infirmity of human nature, than to set at large and liberate it. Now that there is Ib. ii. 14. a natural Law written in our hearts the Apostle also teaches us, when he writes, that for the most part the Gentiles, which have not the Law, do by nature the things contained in the Law, and, though they have not read the Law, have yet the works of the Law written in their hearts.

3. This law therefore is not written but innate; not acquired by reading, but flowing as from a natural fountain, it springs up in each breast, and men’s minds drink it in. This Law we ought to have kept even from fear of a future judgment, a witness whereof we have in our conscience, which shews itself in those silent thoughts we have towards God, and whereby either our sin is reproved or our innocence justified. And thus that which has ever been manifest to the Lord, Rom. ii. 15. will be clearly revealed in the day of judgment, when those secrets of the heart, which were thought to be concealed, will be called into account. Now the discovery of these things, these secrets, I mean, would do no harm, if the natural Law still remained in the human breast; for it is holy, free from craft or guile, the companion of justice, free from iniquity.

4. Moreover let us interrogate the age of childhood, let us consider whether any crime can be found therein, avarice, ambition, guile, rage, or insolence. It claims nothing for its own, assumes no honours to itself, never prefers itself to others, neither wishes or knows how to avenge itself. Its pure and simple mind cannot even comprehend the meaning of insolence.

5. Gen. iii. 6. Adam broke this Law, seeking to assume to himself that which he had not received, that thus he might become as it were his own maker and creator, and arrogate to himself divine honour. Thus by his disobedience he incurred guilt, and through arrogance fell into transgression. Had he not thus violated his allegiance, but been obedient to the commands of heaven, he would have preserved to his posterity the prerogative of nature and the innocence which he possessed at his birth. Wherefore as by disobedience the authority of the Law of Nature was corrupted and blotted out, the written law was found necessary; in order that man, having lost all, might at least regain a part; attaining by instruction to the knowledge of that which he had received at his birth, but had subsequently lost. Moreover, since the cause of his fall was pride, and pride arose from the dignity of innocence, it was needful that some law should be passed which should subdue and subject him to God. Rom. vii. 8. For without the Law he was ignorant of sin, and thus his guilt was less because he knew it not. Wherefore also the Lord says, S. John xv. 22. If I had not come and spoken to them they had not had sin, but now they have no excuse for their sin.

6. The Law then was published, Rom. iii. 19. first to take away all excuse lest man should say, I knew not sin, because I received no rule what to avoid. And next that all the world might become guilty[289] before God by the confession of sin. For it made all subject; in that it was not only given to the Jews but also called the Gentiles; for proselytes from the Gentiles were associated with them. Nor can he seem to be excepted, who after being called was found wanting, for the Law also bound those whom she called. And thus the fault of all worked subjection, subjection humility, humility obedience. And thus as pride had drawn after it transgression, so on the other hand, transgression produced obedience. And thus the written Law, which seemed superfluous, was rendered necessary, redeeming sin by sin.

7. But again, lest anyone should be deterred, and say that an increase of sin was caused by the Law, and that the Law not only did not profit but was even injurious, he has a consolation for his solicitude, because although Rom. v. 20. by the Law sin abounded, grace did much more abound. And now let us consider the meaning of this.

8. Sin abounded by the Law because Ib. vii. 7. by the Law is the knowledge of sin, and thus it began to be injurious to me to know that which through infirmity I could not avoid; it is good to foreknow in order to avoid, but if I cannot avoid, to have known was injurious. Thus the effect of the Law was changed to me into its opposite, yet by the very increase of sin it became useful to me, because I was humbled. Wherefore David also said, Ps. cxix. 71. It is good for me that I have been humbled. For by my humiliation I have broken those bonds of that ancient transgression, whereby Adam and Eve had bound the whole line of their posterity. Hence too the Lord came in obedience that He might loose the knot of disobedience and of man's transgression. And so, as by disobedience sin entered, so by obedience sin was remitted. Wherefore the Apostle also says, Rom. v. 19. For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous.

9. Here is one reason the Law on the one hand was superfluous and yet became necessary. It was superfluous herein, that it would not have been needed could we have kept the natural Law, but as we kept it not, the law of Moses became needful for us, to the intent that it might teach us obedience and loose that knot of Adam's transgression which has fettered his whole posterity. Guilt indeed was increased by the Law, but pride, the author of this guilt, was overthrown by it, and this was profitable to me, for pride discovered the guilt, and this guilt brought grace.

10. Hear another reason. At first Moses' Law was not needed; it was introduced subsequently, and this appears to intimate that this introduction was in a sense clandestine and not of an ordinary kind, seeing that it succeeded in the place of the natural Law. Had this maintained its place, the written Law would never have entered in; but the natural Law being excluded by transgression and almost blotted out of the human breast, pride reigned, and disobedience spread itself; and then this Law succeeded, that by its written precepts it might cite us before it, and Rom. iii. 19. every mouth be stopped, and all the world become guilty before God. Now the world becomes guilty before God by the Law, in that all are made amenable to its prescripts, but no man is justified by its works. And since by the Law comes the knowledge of sin, but not the remission of guilt, the Law, which has made all sinners, would seem to have been injurious.

11. But when the Lord Jesus came, He forgave all men that sin which none could escape, and Col. ii. 14. blotted out the handwriting against us by the shedding of His own Blood. This then is the Apostle's meaning; Rom. v.

20. sin abounded by the Law, but grace abounded by Jesus; for after that the whole world became guilty, He took away the sin of the whole world, as John bore witness, saying: S. John i. 29. Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world. Wherefore let no man glory in works, for by his works no man shall be justified, for he that is just hath a free gift, for he is justified by the Bath. It is faith then which delivers by the blood of Christ, for Rom. iv. 7. Blessed is the man to whom sin is remitted, and pardon granted.

Farewell, my son; love me, for I also love you.

LETTER LXXIV.

IN THIS LETTER S. Ambrose explains the meaning of S. Paul's expression, that 'the Law was our schoolmaster,' and shews how, while the letter of the precepts fitted the Jews, the spiritual sense which lay under the letter applies to Christians.

AMBROSE TO IRENÆUS.

1. YOU have heard, my son, the lesson of to-day in the Apostle, that Gal. iii. 24. the Law was our schoolmaster in Christ, that we might be justified by faith. And by this one text I believe that those questions are resolved, which are wont to perplex many. For there are those who say, 'Since God gave the Law to Moses, what is the reason that there are many things in the Law which now seem abrogated by the Gospel?' And how can the Author of the two Testaments be one and the same, when that which was permitted in the Law, when the Gospel came, was permitted no longer? as for instance there is a circumcision of the body, which was even then only given for a sign, that the verity of spiritual circumcision might be preserved, yet why was it even given as a sign? Why was there such diversity, that then it was esteemed piety to be circumcised, but now it is judged to be impiety? Again it was ordered by the Law that the Sabbath day ought to be a holiday, Num. xv. 35. so that if any one carried a bundle of sticks, he became guilty of death; but now we perceive that the same day is devoted to bearing burthens and to transacting business without any punishment. And there are many precepts of the Law which at the present time would seem to have ceased.

2. Let us consider then what is the cause of this; for it was not without a purpose that the Apostle said, the Law was our schoolmaster in Christ[290]. To whom does a schoolmaster belong, to one of riper years or to a youth? Doubtless to a youth or boy, that is, to one of infirm age. For a pædagogus, as the word is rendered in the Latin, is the teacher of a boy; and he cannot apply perfect precepts to an imperfect age, because it cannot bear them. Again, the God of the Law says by the Prophet, Ezek. xx. 25. I gave them also statutes that were not good, that is, not perfect. But the same God has preserved more perfect things for the Gospel, as He says, S. Matt. v. 17. I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil the Law.

3. What then was the cause of this difference, but human diversity? Exod. xxxiv. 9. He knew the Jews to be a stiff-necked people, prone to fall, base, inclined to unbelief, that heard with the ear but understood not, that saw with their eyes but perceived not, fickle with the instability of infancy, and heedless of commands; and therefore He applied the Law, as a Schoolmaster, to the unstable temper and impious mind of the people, and moderating the very precepts of the Law, He chose that one thing should be read, another understood; that thus the foolish man might at least keep what he was reading, and depart not from the prescript of the letter; while the wise should understand the sentiments of the Divine mind, which the letter did not alter; that the unwise man might keep the command of the Law, the prudent might observe the mystery. The Law therefore has the severity of the sword, as the schoolmaster holds the rod, that at any rate by the denunciation of punishment it may keep in awe the weakness of the imperfect people; but the Gospel has indulgence whereby sins are forgiven.

4. Rightly therefore does Paul say that 2 Cor. iii. 6. the letter killeth but the spirit giveth life. For the letter circumcises a small portion of the body; the understanding spirit keeps the circumcision of the whole soul and body; that the superfluous parts being cut off, (for nothing is so superfluous as the vices of avarice, the sins of lust, which nature had not, but sin caused,) chastity might be observed, and frugality loved. The sign therefore is bodily circumcision, but the truth is spiritual circumcision, the one cuts off the member, the other cuts off sin. Nature has created nothing imperfect in man, nor has she commanded it to be taken away as if it were superfluous, but that they who cut off a part of their body might perceive that sins were much more to be cut off, and those members which led to offences were to be retrenched, even though they were joined together by a certain unity of body, as it is written, S. Matt. v. 30. If thy right hand offend thee, cut it off, and cast it from thee, for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell. To the Jews then, as to children, are enjoined not complete precepts but partial ones, and, seeing that they were unable to keep the whole of their bodies clean, they were commanded to keep clean, as it were, one portion of it.

5. They were also commanded to keep the holiday of Exod. xxxi. 13. the Sabbath one day in the week, so as to be subjected to no burthen, and I would that being thus released from earthly works they had escaped, carrying with them to that perpetual sabbath of future ages the burthen of heavy crimes. But as God knew how prone to fall the people were, He enjoined a part upon the weaker by the observance of one day, He reserved the fulness for the stronger: the Synagogue observes the day, the Church immortality. In the Law therefore is a part, in the Gospel is perfection.

6. Num. xv. 33. The people of the Jews are forbidden to carry sticks, that is, such things as are consumed by fire. He keeps in the shade, who flies from the sun. But to you the Sun of Righteousness suffers not the shade to be an hindrance, but pouring forth the full light of His grace says to you, S. John viii. 11. Go, and sin no more. The follower of that eternal Sun says to you, 1 Cor. iii. 12, 13. Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble; every man's work shall be made manifest, for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. Wherefore let us build upon Christ, for Christ is our foundation, that which may not be burnt but purified. Gold is purified by fire, and so is silver.

7. You hear me speak of gold and silver, you think it to be the material substance, you desire to gather it, but you are losing your labour. This gold and silver brings burthen but no fruit. The toil of him who seeks it turns to the profit of his heir. This gold is burned like wood, not preserved; this silver will bring detriment not profit to your life in that day. Another kind of gold and silver is required of you, that is, a good meaning, a word fitly spoken, of which God says that He gives vessels of gold and silver. These are the gifts of God. Ps. xii. 6. The words of the Lord are pure words; even as the silver which from the earth is tried and purified seven times in the fire. The grace of your understanding, the beauty of chaste discourse is required of you; the brightness of faith not the tinkling of silver. The one remains, the other perishes; the one has reward, and we carry it away with us, the other, which we leave behind, brings loss.

8. If any rich man thinks that the gold and silver which he has hoarded and stored up can avail him for life, let him know that he carries an empty burthen, which the fire of judgment will consume. Leave here your burthens, ye rich men, that your burthen may not add fuel to the fire which is to come. If you will bestow some of these goods, your burthen will be diminished, and what remains will be no burthen. Lay not up wealth, O miser; lest you should become in mere name only a Christian, in work a Jew, perceiving that your burthens are a punishment to you. For it has been said to you, not in the shade but in the sun, 1 Cor. iii. 14, 15. If any man's work abide, he shall receive a reward, if any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss.

9. And therefore, as a perfect man, taught in the Law, confirmed in the Gospel, receive the faith of both Testaments. For Isa. xxxii. 20. Blessed is he that sows beside all waters, that sends forth thither the feet of the ox and the ass, as we read to-day, that is, who sows upon the people who follow the doctrine of both Testaments; this is that ox of the plough, carrying the yoke of the Law, of which the Law says, Deut. xxv. 4. Thou shalt not muzzle the ox, when he treadeth out the corn; that ox which has the horns of the Divine Scriptures. S. Luke xix. 33. But the foal of the ass the Lord rides upon, in the Gospel, representing the people of the Gentiles.

10. But I think that since the word of God is rich in meanings, we ought also to understand that the ox has horns full of terror, the bull is fierce, the ass mild, and that this is fitly applied to our present purpose, for happy is he who observes both severity and mildness; that so by the one discipline may be maintained, while by the other innocence may be cherished; for too great severity is wont by means of terror to tempt to falsehood. God prefers being loved to being feared; for the Lord exacts love, the servant fear, for terror cannot be perpetual in man, for it is written as we read to-day Behold, in your fear, they whom ye feared, shall fear.

Farewell, my son; love me, for I too love you.

LETTER LXXV.

THIS LETTER IS a sequel to the preceding, and deals with the context of the passage of S. Paul which that letter discussed. S. Ambrose ends by maintaining that the Jews were ‘heirs’ only of the letter of the Old Testament promises, the Christian being the heir of the Spirit.

AMBROSE TO CLEMENTIANUS[291].

1. I AM indeed aware that nothing is more difficult than to treat properly concerning the Apostle’s meaning, for even Origen’s expositions of the New Testament are far inferior to his expositions of the Old. Yet since in my previous letter you think that I have not explained amiss the reason of the Law being called a Schoolmaster; in what I say to-day too I purpose to unfold to you the actual force of the Apostle’s statement.

2. Now the former part of his discourse declares that no man shall be justified by the works of the Law, but by faith, Gal. iii. 10. For as many as are of the works of the Law are under the curse; but Ib. 13. Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the Law, being made a curse for us. The inheritance therefore is not given by the Law but by promise. Ib. 16. Now to Abraham were the promises made, and to his seed which is Christ. Thus the Law Ib. 19. was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made; and therefore Gal. iii. 22. all are concluded under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe. Ib. 25. But after that faith is come, we are no longer under the Law, that is, under a schoolmaster; and this because we are all the sons of God, and are all in Christ Jesus. Now if we are all in Christ Jesus, then are we Ib. 29. Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise. And this is the conclusion at which the Apostle arrives.

3. Still however he is met with this objection, that even the Jew might say, I also, being under the Law, have an heirship, for the Law is also called the Old Testament, and where is a Testament there also is an inheritance. And although the Apostle himself told the Hebrews Heb. ix. 17. that a testament is of no force, until the death of the testator happen, that is to say, a testament is of no strength while the testator liveth, but is established by his death, yet as in Jeremiah the Lord, speaking of the Jews, has said, Jer. xii. 8. Mine heritage is unto Me as a lion, he would not deny that they were heirs. But there are heirs without possessions, there are heirs also with them; and while the testator lives those whose names are written in the will are called heirs, though without possessions.

4. Little children are also heirs, but they Gal. iv. 1. differ in nothing from a servant, in that they are still under tutors and governors. Ib. 3. Even so we were in bondage under the elements of the world. But, when the fulness of the time was come, Christ also came, and now we are no longer servants but sons, if we believe in Christ. Thus He gave them the semblance of an inheritance, but withheld from them the possession of it. Thus they have the name but not the benefit of being heirs, for like children they possess the bare name of heirship without its privileges, and have no right either to command or to use, waiting for the fulness of their age that they may be delivered from their governors.

5. As then young children, so the Jews also, are under a schoolmaster. The Law is our schoolmaster, the schoolmaster brings us to our Master; and our One Master is Christ: S. Matt. xxiii. 10. Neither be ye called masters, for one is your Master, even Christ. The schoolmaster is feared, the Master shews the way of salvation. Thus fear brings us to liberty, liberty to faith, faith to love; love obtains adoption, adoption the inheritance. Where then faith is there is liberty; for the servant acts from fear, the free-man by faith; the one by the letter, the other by grace; the one in slavery the other by the Spirit; but 2 Cor. iii. 17. where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. If then where faith is, there is liberty; where liberty there grace, where grace there inheritance; and he that is a Jew in the letter not in spirit is in bondage, he who hath not faith hath not the liberty of the spirit. Now where there is no liberty there is no grace, where no grace no adoption, where no adoption there no succession.

6. Thus, the tablets being, as it were, closed, he beholds[292] his inheritance but possesses it not, he has no permission to read it. For how can he say 'Our Father' who denies the true Son of God, Him by Whom our adoptive sonship is obtained for us? How can he rehearse the will who denies the death of the testator? How can he obtain liberty, who denies the Blood whereby he has been redeemed? For this is the price of our liberty, as Peter says, 1 S. Pet. i. 18, 19. ye were redeemed with the precious Blood, not indeed of a lamb, but of Him Who came as a lamb, in meekness and humility, and redeemed the whole world with the one offering of His Body, as He himself says, Isa. liii. 7. I was brought as a lamb to the slaughter. Wherefore John also says, S. John i. 29. Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.

7. Hence the Jew, being heir in the letter not in the spirit is as a child under tutors and governours; but the Christian, who recognizes that fulness of time wherein Christ came, Gal. iv. 4. made of a woman, made under the Law, that He might redeem all who were under the Law; the Christian, I say, Eph. iv. 13. by unity of faith and knowledge of the Son of God grows up unto a perfect man: unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ.

Farewell, my son; love me, for I also love you.

LETTER LXXVI.

AT IRENÆUS' REQUEST S. Ambrose points out the scope of the Epistle to the Ephesians. Therein is proposed to us a heavenly inheritance, a seat in heavenly places together with Christ, Who has obtained freedom for us. It sets forth to us charity, whereby we are united to Christ, as the end of faith. He adds that no other Epistle contains the mention of so many blessings, and he briefly recounts these one by one.

AMBROSE TO IRENÆUS, GREETING.

1. YOU have asked me to set forth to you the scope and substance of the Epistle to the Ephesians, an Epistle which seems somewhat obscure, unless by analyzing it we can gather what those motives are by which the Apostle would persuade us not to despair of the kingdom of God.

2. In the first place then he points out that the hope of reward and the inheritance of those heavenly promises which have been brought within our reach by the Passion and Resurrection of Christ, are wont to be a great encouragement to the good in the pursuit of virtue.

3. To this he has added that not only has a mode of return to Paradise been opened to us by Christ, but that even the honour of sitting in heavenly places has been imparted to this flesh of our body by its fellowship with the Body of Christ; so that you need no longer doubt the possibility of your own ascension, now that you know that your fellowship with the flesh of Christ subsists even in the kingdom of heaven, knowing also that by His Blood reconciliation has been made for all things, both on earth and in heaven, for He descended that He might fill all things: and, further, that by His Apostles, prophets, and priests, the whole world has been established, and the Gentiles gathered in; and that the end of our hope is the love of Him, that we may Eph. iv. 15. grow up into Him in all things; for He is the Head of all things, and unto Him according to the measure of His working we are all raised and built up by charity into one body.

4. We ought not therefore to despair of the members adhering to their Head; especially since from the beginning we have Eph. i. 5. been predestinated by Jesus Christ to adoption as children of God in Himself: which predestination He has ratified, instructing us that the prediction made from the first, that Gen. ii. 24. a man shall leave his father and mother, and shall be joined unto his wife, and they two shall be one flesh, is a sacrament of Christ and the Church. If therefore the union of Adam and Eve is Eph. v. 31, 32. a great sacrament which relates to Christ and the Church, it is certain that as Eve was bone of the bones of her husband, and flesh of his flesh, so we are members of the Body of Christ, bone of His Bones and flesh of His Flesh.

5. No other Epistle has pronounced so many blessings over the people of God as this. For herein the pregnant witness of Divine grace has declared that we are Ib. i. 3, 5, 9. blessed with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places, and predestinated unto the adoption of children, richly endowed also with grace in the Son of God, which things have abounded unto the knowledge of the mystery of His eternal will. Especially now, in the fulness of time, when Ib. 10. all things are reconciled in Christ, both in heaven and on earth, have we attained an inheritance in Him, to the intent that both what is of the Law and what is of Grace might be fulfilled in us. For even according to the Law we seemed to be elected in that season of youth, by which is signified a holy life, without either the wantonness of childhood or the infirmity of age. We have been taught also how we must vigorously Ib. vi. 12. wage war not only against flesh and blood, but also against spiritual wickedness in high places.

6. Wherefore as the possession of lands taken from the enemy fell to their lot, so to us has fallen the lot of grace, that we may become the heritage of God, Who possesses our reins, the seat of chastity and temperance. Do you seek to know this lot? Remember that lot Acts i. 26. which fell upon Matthias, that he might be chosen into the number of the twelve Apostles. The Prophet David also says, Ps. lxviii. 13. If ye sleep in the midst of the lots, because he who is placed in the middle, between the lot of the Old and New Testament, resting upon both, arrives at the peace of the heavenly kingdom. This lot of their paternal inheritance Num. xxvii. 1. the daughters of Zelophehad sought for, and their petition was admitted by God's judgment. But they sought for it in the shade, for Zelophehad means 'the shade of the mouth;' they sought it then in dark sayings, they spoke not what was revealed. Hence the supplication for their inheritance by the daughters of Zelophehad was couched in dark sayings, but in our case it stands in the light of the Gospel and in the revelation of grace.

7. Let us therefore be the possession of God, and let Him be our portion, for in Him are the riches of His glory and inheritance. For who is rich but God alone, Who created all things? Especially however is He Eph. ii. 4. rich in mercy, in that He redeemed all mankind, and, as being the author of nature, changed us, who according to our fleshly nature were the children of wrath, and exposed to trouble, that we might become the children of peace and charity. For who can change nature but He Who created nature? Wherefore He raised the dead, and those that were Ib. 6. quickened in Christ He hath made to sit in heavenly places in the Lord Jesus.

8. Not that any man has been thought worthy of the privilege of sitting in that seat of God, for to the Son alone hath the Father said, Ps. cx. 1. Sit thou on my right hand; but because in that Flesh of Christ the flesh of the whole human race has been honoured, because it partakes of the same nature. For as He was subjected in our flesh by His unity therewith, and by the obedience of the body, wherein He was made obedient even unto death, so we, in His Flesh, are sat down together with Him in heavenly places. We therefore are not set down by ourselves but in the Person of Christ, Who alone, as the Son of man, sitteth at the right Hand of God; as He said Himself, S. Matt. xxvi. 64. Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of God. To this end has His Grace and Goodness been formed upon us in Christ Jesus, that being dead according to works, redeemed through faith and saved by grace, we might receive the gift of this great deliverance. Our very nature, raised, as it were, in Him, has been made partaker of the Grace of a new creation, that being new created in Christ, we, who had before fallen away through the corruption of our guilty lineage, might walk in good works.

9. For the strife which before existed in the flesh being removed, Eph. ii. 14. an universal peace has been made in heaven; that men might be like Angels upon earth, that the Gentiles and Jews might be made one, that both the new and old man might be united, the middle wall of partition, which, as a hostile barrier, had once divided them, being broken down. For the nature of our flesh having stirred up anger discord and dissension, and the law having bound us with the chains of condemnation, Christ Jesus subdued by mortification the wantonness and intemperance of the flesh, and made void Ib. 15. the law of commandment contained in ordinances, declaring thereby that the decrees of the spiritual Law are not to be interpreted according to the letter; putting an end to the slothful rest of the Sabbath and to the superfluous rite of outward circumcision, and opening to all Ib. 18. access by one Spirit unto the Father. For how can there be any discord, where there is one calling, one body and one spirit?

10. For what else did the Lord Jesus effect by His descent but our deliverance from captivity into liberty, and the subjection to Himself of that captivity which the bonds of unbelief had fettered, but which is now restrained by the fetters of wisdom, every wise man putting his feet into its bonds? For it is written that when He had descended He ascended also, Ib. iv. 10. that He might fill all things, and that we might all receive of His fulness.

11. Wherefore Ib. 11. He gave first Apostles in the Church, filling them with the Holy Spirit, others prophets, others evangelists, others pastors and teachers, that by their exhortations the progress of believers might be accomplished, and the work of the ministry of faith might receive increase. Every one by the growth of virtue is built up unto the measure of the inward life, which Ib. 13. measure, being that more perfect one of a holy life, that is, of a perfect man, taking of the fulness of Christ, has received the fulness of grace.

12. But who is a perfect man, but he who, being delivered from the weakness of a childish mind, from the unstable and slippery ways of youth, and from the unbridled passions of adult age, has attained to the strength of full manhood, and has grown up unto such maturity of character as not to be easily turned aside by the address of a wily disputer, nor cast, as it were, upon the rocks by the turbid violence of foolish doctrine? Who but he that betakes himself to the remedies of error, who follows truth not only in his words but also in his works, and, takes upon him the edifying of himself in love, that he may be united with others in the unity of faith and knowledge, and, as a member, not fall off from his Head, that is, from Christ, Who is the Head of all, Eph. iv. 16. from whom the whole body of the faithful and prudent fitted and compacted and joined together by the rational harmony of the Word (for this is the meaning of συναρμολογούμενον, ἁρμονίᾳ τοῦ Λόγου δεδεμένον[293],) by that which every joint supplieth, according to the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying itself in love; that so it may rise as one temple of God in all, and one habitation of the heavenly mansion in the spirit of all.

13. Herein I conceive we are to understand that not only holy men but all believers, and all the heavenly and reasonable hosts and powers are united in faith and spirit; that by a certain concord of powers and offices one body, composed of all spirits of a reasonable nature, may adhere to Christ their Head, being so united to the framework of the building, that in no single point of juncture the several members may seem to be severed from each other. For this is the meaning of the Greek ἁφὴν τῆς χορηγίας κατ᾽ ἐνέργειαν ἐν μέτρῳ. And to unite each one to Himself according to the due measure of his merits and faith will not be difficult: for the edifice of love closes and blocks up every crevice through which offences may enter. We ought not then to doubt that in the building up of this temple the company of the heavenly hosts will be united with us; for it is unreasonable to suppose that while the Temple of God can be so built up by human love as that we shall become an habitation of God in the Spirit, He should not dwell within the heavenly Host.

14. On this account, that the building may be raised within us more rapidly, the Apostle exhorts us Eph. i. 18. to open the eyes of our understanding, to lift them to things above, diligently to follow after the knowledge of God, to unravel the truth, to hide in our hearts the commandments of God, Ib. iv. 22. to put off deceitful lusts and hidden deeds of shame, to seek to be renewed by the graces of the Sacraments, Ib. 26. to moderate anger, to calm all disturbance of spirit before the sun goes down, to beware lest the adversary gain the upper hand of us, S. John xiii. 27. that mighty spirit who entered into the heart of Judas, and broke through the gates of his soul, overpowering his resistance, to shut out theft, to eschew falsehood, to rise from the dead, to put on sobriety. He tells us likewise that Eph. v. 24. wives should be subject to their husbands, as the Church is to Christ, and that husbands should offer up their own lives for their wives, Ib. 25. as Christ gave Himself for the Church. And lastly, that, as good soldiers, we should Ib. vi. 13. put on the armour of God, and continually fight, not only against Ib. 12. flesh and blood, but also against spiritual wickedness; that we may neither be corrupted by friends nor vanquished by enemies.

This summary account of the Epistle I offer you as the best which I have in my power to give.

Farewell, my son; love me, for I also love you.

LETTER LXXVII.

THIS LETTER DWELLS on the Gospel, as the true Inheritance, and on the contrast between the Jew, who by rejecting Christ made Moses in whom he believed his accuser, and the Christian, who received true liberty in Christ, while the Jew remained a slave.

AMBROSE TO HORONTIANUS.

1. NOT without reason have you thought fit to enquire into the nature of the Divine inheritance; and why it should be so highly esteemed that for its sake many should even offer up their lives. But if you will consider that even in human affairs the advantage of inheriting worldly goods gives an additional sanction to the laws of natural affection, and that even on this account greater respect is shown to parents, for fear, namely, lest the slighted love of a father may avenge itself by disinheriting or renouncing the rebellious offspring, you will cease to wonder why men so greatly desire a Divine inheritance.

2. Now there is an inheritance offered to all Christians; for Isaiah thus speaks, Isa. liv. 17. There is an heritage for them that believe on the Lord, and this inheritance is hoped for by the promise, not by the Law. This the history of the Old Testament proves, in the words of Sarah, Gen. xxi. 10. Cast out this bond-woman and her son, for the son of the bond-woman shall not be heir with my son, even with Isaac. The son of Sarah was Isaac, the son of the bond-woman was Ishmael; and these were before the Law, wherefore the promise was older than the Law. We are after Isaac sons by the promise, the Jews are the sons of the bond-woman after the flesh. We have a free mother, which bore not, but afterwards, according to the promise, brought forth and produced a child; they have Agar for their mother, Gal. iv. 24. gendering to bondage. He is free, to whom grace is promised, he is a slave on whom the yoke of the Law is imposed, wherefore the promise came to us before the Law came to them, and in the course of nature liberty is more ancient than bondage. Liberty therefore comes of the promise, bondage of the Law. But although the promise itself, as we have said, is before the Law, and by the promise comes liberty, and in liberty is love, still love is according to the Law, and love is greater than liberty.

3. Are we not then servants? and is it not written, Ps. cxxxiv. 1. praise the Lord, all ye servants, or how does the Apostle say, Eph. vi. 6. But as the servants of God, doing the will of God from his heart? But there is also a free and voluntary service, whereof the Apostle says, 1 Cor. vii. 22. He that is called, being free, is Christ's servant. And this service is from the heart, not of necessity. Wherefore we are the servants of our Creator; but we have a liberty which we have received through the grace of Christ, born of the promise according to faith. Wherefore, being born of the freedwoman, let us, signed in the forehead, offer the sacrifice of liberty as becomes freemen; that we may rejoice and not be confounded, being signed in the spirit and not in the flesh. For to us it is rightly said, Gal. v. 1. Stand fast, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage. He does not say, Be not slaves, but Be not entangled with the yoke of bondage, for the yoke of bondage is heavier than the bondage itself.

4. Isaac also says to his son Esau, when he sought his blessing, Gen. xxvii. 39, 40. Behold thy dwelling shall be the fatness of the earth, and of the dew of heaven from above; and by thy sword shalt thou live, and shalt serve thy brother. But the time shall come when thou shalt have the dominion and shalt break his yoke from off thy neck. How then is this to be reconciled, that although he shall break his brother's yoke from off his neck he shall still serve, unless we recognize the difference that there is in servitude? Now in what this difference consists, let the Scripture itself explain to us. Isaac signifies good, and he is good to us, for after him we are born into liberty, and he is a good father to both his sons. His love for them both he proved, in the one case by affection, in the other by blessing, for he commanded his elder son to bring him food, that he might receive his blessing; but while he makes delay and seeks for wild venison from a distance, the younger brother brings him home-food, from the sheep of the flock.

5. Good food for all is Christ, good food too is faith, sweet food is mercy, pleasant food is faith. These are the meats whereon are fed the people of holy Church. Good food too is the Spirit of God, good food is the remission of sins. But very hard food is the rigour of the Law, and the terror of punishment; and very coarse food is that observance of the letter which is preferred to the grace of pardon. Gal. iii. 10. The Jews again are under a curse, we included in a blessing. A ready food too is faith: Deut. xxx. 14. Rom. x. 8. The word is nigh thee, in thy mouth and in thy heart: the food of the Law is more tardy. For while waiting for the Law the people fell into transgression.

6. Thus it was on the son who was diligent and faithful that the father bestowed his blessing, but he reserved one, for he was a good father, for his elder son also, in that he made him servant to his brother. For he did this, not as wishing to subject his family to any unworthy bondage, but because he who cannot rule and govern himself ought to serve and be subject to one more prudent; that so he may be governed by his counsel, and not fall through his own folly, nor stumble from walking rashly. It is as a blessing then that such a state of service is given. Moreover it is numbered among blessings, together with the gift of the fatness of the earth, and of the dew of heaven from above. Having said, Gen. xxvii. 40. By thy sword thou shalt live, lest he should be harmed by the confidence arising from strength or power, he added, Ib. and thou shalt serve thy brother: that thou mayest thus obtain both the rich fruits of the flesh, and the dew of Divine grace, and mayest follow him who is able to direct and govern thee.

7. Ib. But it shall come to pass, when thou shalt have broken his yoke from off thy neck, that thou shalt have the reward of thy willing servitude, and not undergo the evils of a compulsory bondage. For that kind of bondage is dishonourable which is the result of necessity, that is honourable which is offered by piety. Hence the Apostle says, 1 Cor. ix. 17. For if I do this thing willingly, I have a reward, but if against my will, a dispensation is committed unto me. Better then is it to reap a reward, than to obey a dispensation. Wherefore let us not be restrained by the yoke of bondage, but let us serve in the spirit of charity, for the Apostle says, Gal. v. 13. By love serve one another. The fear of the Law becomes the love of the Gospel. Again, Ecclus. i. 14. To fear the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, but the fulness of the Law is charity. And the Law itself says, Gal. v. 14. Rom. xiii. 8. For all the Law is fulfilled in one word, even in this, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

8. This therefore is what we asserted, for although bondage is by the Law, liberty is by the Law also, for charity belongs to liberty, fear to bondage. There is therefore both a charity of the Law, and a service of charity, but the Law is the forerunner of charity, the charity of the Gospel is the free giver of a pious service.

9. The Law then is not superfluous; Gal. iii. 24. for like a schoolmaster, it attends upon the weak; and by weakness I mean weakness of character not of body; for they are infants who know not how to declare the word of God, who receive not His works. For if Wisd. iv. 9. an unspotted life is old age, a life full of stains is the time of youth. The Law then, that is, Νόμος, was our schoolmaster, until faith came. Gal. iii. 23. We were kept, it is said, under the Law, as being weak, shut up unto the faith which should afterwards be revealed. But afterwards faith came; he does not say the Gospel, but faith, for that only is faith which is in the Gospel. For although the Rom. i. 17. righteousness of God is revealed therein which is from faith to faith, still this of the Law is faith indeed when it attains to the fulness thereof. Rightly therefore is this faith spoken of as single and alone; because without it the former is not faith, and in it alone it has its confirmation. Finally, when this faith came, fulness and the adoption of sons came with it, infirmity ceased, infancy was at an end, we grew into a perfect man, we put on Christ. How then can any one be weak or childish, in whom Christ is the power of God? Thus we have arrived at perfection, and have been instructed in its precepts.

10. You heard read to-day, S. John v. 30. Of Mine own Self I can do nothing, as I hear, I judge. You heard read, I accuse you not, I judge not. I accuse you not, Ib. 45. it is Moses that accuseth you, in whom ye trust. You heard read, Ib. 31. If I bear witness of Myself, My witness is not true. Thus I have learnt what kind of judge, what kind of witness I ought to be. For it is not as being weak that He says, Of Mine own self I can do nothing, he rather is weak who so understands it. The Father does nothing without the Son, for between them there is a community of operation and an unity of power; but in this place He speaks as Judge, that we men may learn that, when we judge, we ought to form our sentence equitably and not according to our mere will and power.

11. When a criminal is set before him proved guilty and convicted of crime, who does not frame for himself pleas of defence, but prays for pardon, and prostrates himself at the knees of his judge, the judge answers him, Of myself I can do nothing, it is my justice not my power which I exercise in judgment. It is not I but your own deeds that judge you, they accuse, and they condemn you. The Laws are your tribunal, and I as judge do not alter but keep the Laws. Of myself I originate nothing, but the judicial sentence against you proceeds from yourself. I judge as I hear, not as I will, and my judgment is true because I consult what is agreeable to equity not to my own will.

12. Let us next consider what is the Divine rule of judgment. The Lord of heaven and earth and the Judge of all says, S. John v. 30. of Mine own self I can do nothing, as I hear I judge; and man says to his Lord, Ib. xix. 10. Knowest Thou not that I have power to crucify Thee, and have power to release Thee? But why is not the Lord able? Because, He says, Ib. v. 30. My judgment is just, because I seek not Mine own will, but the will of the Father Who hath sent Me, that is, not the will of man, whom ye see, not the will of man, whom ye only judge as man, not the will of the flesh, (for the spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak,) but the Divine will, which is the Origin of law, and the Rule of judgment. So likewise that witness is true, who bears witness not to himself but to another, for it is written, Prov. xxvii. 2. Let another man praise thee, and not thine own mouth.

13. In a mystical sense it is well said to the Jews: I judge you not, that is, I, the universal Saviour, I, who am the Remission of sins, judge you not, for ye have not received Me. I judge you not, I freely pardon you. I, who by My Blood redeem sinners, judge you not. I judge you not, Ezek. xviii. 23. for I would not the death but the life of a sinner. I judge you not, for I condemn not but justify those who confess their sins. Moses accuses you, he in whom you trust convicts you. He can accuse you, he cannot judge you, this is reserved to his Creator. He then in whom ye trust accuses you, He in Whom ye would not trust absolves you.

14. O great folly of the Jews! Rightly are they accused of their crimes, for they have chosen one who accuses them, and have rejected a merciful Judge; and therefore they are without absolution, but not without punishment.

15. Well therefore, my son, have you begun by the Law, and been confirmed in the Gospel, Hab. ii. 4. Rom. i. 17. from faith to faith, as it is written, The just shall live by faith.

Farewell; love me for I also love you.

LETTER LXXVIII.

IN THIS LETTER S. Ambrose shews, that we, like Abraham, are justified by faith, through which we are sons of the freewoman; that circumcision derived all its efficacy from Christ, and was abolished, after He had undergone it in His own person, by Him. Righteousness is therefore only to be looked for from faith, which if it be perfect, is never destitute of charity.

AMBROSE TO HORONTIANUS.

1. IF Gal. iii. 6. Abraham believed God, and it was accounted unto him for righteousness, and that which is accounted for righteousness passes from unbelief to faith, then are we justified by faith, not by the works of the Law. Ib. iv. 22. Now Abraham himself had two sons, Ishmael and Isaac, one of the bondwoman, the other of the freewoman; and it was told him that he should cast out the bondwoman and the son of the bondwoman, for that the son of the bondwoman should not be his heir. We therefore are children not of the bondwoman but of the free woman, in that liberty wherewith Christ has made us free. Hence it follows that they are specially Abraham's sons, who are so by faith, for the heirs of faith excel heirs by natural birth. Ib. iii. 24. The Law is our schoolmaster, faith is free; let us therefore cast away the works of bondage, let us preserve the grace of liberty, let us leave the shade, and follow the Sun, let us desert Jewish rites.

2. The circumcision of one member is of no avail. For the Apostle says, Ib. v. 2. Behold I Paul say unto you, that if ye be circumcised Christ shall profit you nothing, not because He cannot, but because He judges those unworthy of His benefits who desert His ways.

3. Exod. iv. 25. And Zipporah of old had circumcised her child, and driven off the danger which hung over him; but then Christ profited while perfection was still deferred. While the people of believers were small, the Lord Jesus came, not as small, but as perfect in all things. He was circumcised first, according to the Law, that He might not break the Law, afterwards by the Cross, that He might fulfil the Law. Thus that which is in part has ceased, because 1 Cor. xiii. 10. that which is perfect has come; for in Christ the Cross has circumcised not one member only, but the superfluous pleasures of the whole body.

4. But perhaps it may still be asked why He Who had come to declare to us perfect circumcision should choose to be circumcised in part. Concerning this however we need not deliberate long. For if 2 Cor. v. 21. He was made sin that He might expiate our sins, if Gal. iii. 13. He was made a curse for us that He might annul the curses of the Law, for the same reason He was also circumcised for us, that being about to bestow salvation by the Cross, He might abolish the circumcision of the Law.

5. The Apostle therefore declares that it is from faith that our hope of righteousness in the spirit is to be derived, and that though called to liberty we are not Ib. v. 13. to use our liberty for an occasion to the flesh. Ib. 6. For neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision; but faith which worketh by love. And therefore it is written, Deut. vi. 5. Thou shalt love the Lord thy God. Now he who loves also believes, and in believing each man begins to love. Abraham believed, and so began to love, and he believed not in part, but entirely. For otherwise he would not have perfect charity, for it is written, 1 Cor. xiii. 7. Charity believeth all things. If it believe not all things, charity does not seem to be perfect. Perfect charity then has all faith.

6. But I would not lightly assert that all faith has immediately perfect charity, for the Apostle says, Ib. 2. Though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing. A Christian man has three principal virtues, Ib. 13. faith hope and charity, but the greatest of these is charity.

7. On the other hand I conceive the Apostle was led to say this by the tenor of his argument, for I cannot see how he who has all faith, so that he could remove mountains, can be destitute of charity; nor how such can be the case with that man who Ib. 2. understands all mysteries and all knowledge; especially as John says, 1 S. John v. 1. Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God, and the same Apostle had said before, 1 S. John iii. 9. Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin. Whence we infer that if he who believes that Jesus is the Christ is born of God, and he who is born of God sins not, then he who believes that Jesus is the Christ sins not. But if any man sin, he believes not, and he that believes not loves not, and he that loves not is subject to sin. So then he who sins loves not, 1 S. Pet. iv. 8. for charity shall cover the multitude of sins. But if charity exclude the desire of sin, it excludes also fear, charity then is full of perfect faith.

8. The Apostles too, who came to be His friends, said, S. Luke xvii. 5. Increase our faith, begging the good Physician to strengthen their failing faith. Their faith must indeed still have been weak, when even to Peter it could be said, S. Matt. xiv. 31. O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt? Thus faith as the herald of charity preoccupies the mind, and prepares the ways of coming love. Thus where is the perfection of charity there is also all faith.

9. For this reason I conceive it is said that 1 Cor. xiii. 7. charity believeth all things, that is, leads faith to believe them all, and that a soul of this kind possesses all faith; and hence wherever is perfect charity there is all faith. Moreover, as it believes all things so also it is said to hope all things. And it is on this account the greatest, because it includes the other two.

10. He that has this charity fears nothing, for charity 1 S. John iv. 18. casteth out fear; and fear being thus banished and thrown aside, charity 1 Cor. xiii. 7. beareth all things, endureth all things. He who by charity endures all things, cannot fear martyrdom; and so in another place he speaks as a conqueror at the end of his course, Gal. vi. 14. The world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world.

Farewell, my son; love me for I also love you.

LETTER LXXIX.

S. AMBROSE HERE assures Bellicius, whose recovery from sickness had occurred just at the time when he professed himself a believer in Christ, that both his sickness and recovery were to be ascribed to his so doing, and exhorts him to endeavour to keep Christ near him, and to prepare himself with all diligence for the other Sacraments.

AMBROSE TO BELLICIUS, GREETING.

1. YOU have sent me word that while you were lying afflicted by a severe sickness you believed in the Lord Jesus, and straightway began to recover. This sickness therefore was unto salvation, bringing greater pain than danger, for you had long deferred your promise. This is the meaning of the text, Deut. xxxii. 39. I wound, and I heal. He wounded by sickness, He healed by faith. For He saw that the inward affection of your mind was not without pious desires, but that they were shaken and unsettled by delays, and so He thought fit to admonish you, in a way which while it did not injure your health, excited your devotion.

2. For how should He do an injury to health Who is wont to say, as we read in the Gospel, S. Matt. viii. 7. I will come and heal him. Being invited by your friends to visit your house He doubtless said, I will come and heal him; Although you heard Him not, He, as God, spoke to you imperceptibly, and although you saw Him not, still beyond doubt He visited you in spirit.

3. But in truth you have seen Him, for you have believed in Him, you have seen Him, for you have received Him into the dwelling of your mind, you have seen Him in the Spirit, you have seen Him with your inward eyes. Take care then not to let this new Guest depart, long expected, late received, even Him Acts xvii. 28. in Whom we live and move and have our being. You have tasted the first beginnings of faith, let not the word be hidden in your heart. Herein lies all grace and every gift. For no man judges of the secret recesses of a house by its entrance, since all the fruit is within; nor is it the part of a wise man to look from the window into the house, and it is folly for a man to listen at the door.

4. The mysteries of the more perfect Sacraments are of one kind; for the Scripture says, 1 Cor. ii. 9. Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him. Of another kind are the things which the prophets have announced concerning future glory, 1 S. Pet. i. 12. unto whom it was revealed, and to whom the saints have preached the Gospel with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, which things the Angels desired to look into. Of another kind again are those mysteries wherein is the redemption of the world, the remission of sins, the distribution of graces, the participation of the Sacraments: when you receive these you will wonder that a gift so transcendent should have been bestowed on man, Exod. xvi. 15, 16. as to make the manna which we wonder should have been rained down from heaven on the Jews seem to you to have possessed neither so much grace nor so much efficacy towards salvation. For all who received this manna in the wilderness died, Numb. xxvii. 12. save Joshua the son of Nun, and Caleb, whereas he who tastes this Sacrament shall never die.

May the Lord Jesus send you restoration. Farewell.

LETTER LXXX.

S. AMBROSE HERE shews that the case of the man who was blind from his birth was the work of Divine power, and censures the question which the disciples asked about him; and dwells on some of the details of the miracle.

AMBROSE TO BELLICIUS.

1. YOU have heard, my brother, the lesson of the Gospel, wherein it is narrated that as S. John ix. 1. the Lord Jesus passed by He saw a man which was blind from his birth. Now if the Lord saw him He did not pass him by, neither ought we to pass him by whom the Lord overlooked not; especially since he was blind from his birth, which is not mentioned without reason.

2. Now there is a blindness in which by the operation of illness the sight of the eyes is obscured, and this by the help of time is mitigated; there is a blindness also which is caused by the entrance of humours, and this, when the defect is removed, is cured by the aid of medicine; and this I say that you may know that it was not by skill but by Divine Power that he who was blind from his birth was healed. For the Lord gave him health as a free gift, not by any medicinal skill, for they whom the Lord Jesus healed were they whom no one could cure.

3. But how foolish was the inquiry of the Jews, S. John ix. 2. Who did sin this man or his parents? ascribing bodily diseases to the score of sin. Wherefore the Lord said, Ib. 3. Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents, but that the works of God should be made manifest in him. That which nature created, the Creator, being the Author of nature, was capable of remedying. He added therefore, Ib. 5. As long as I am in the world I am the light of the world, that is, all who are blind may see whether they need Me Who am the Light. Ps. xxxiv. 5. Approach ye, and be enlightened, that ye may see.

4. In the next place why did He Who restored life at command, Who gave health by His word, saying to the dead, S. John xi. 43. Come forth, and Lazarus came forth from the grave, saying also to the sick of the palsy, S. Mark ii. 11. Arise and take up thy bed, and the sick of the palsy rose and himself began to carry his bed, whereon, when all his limbs were paralyzed, he had been wont to be carried; why, I say, did He S. John ix. 6, 7. spit on the ground and make clay, and anoint the eyes of the blind man, and say to him, Go, wash in the pool of Siloam, which is by interpretation, Sent. He went his way therefore, and washed, and came seeing — What is the reason of this? Great indeed is the reason, if I mistake not, for he who is taught by Jesus comes to see more clearly.

5. Observe at the same time both His Divinity and His sanctity; as being Himself Light He touched and so communicated light to others; as being a Priest He fulfilled by the figure of Baptism the mysteries of spiritual grace. He spat, that you might learn that the inner parts of Christ are light; and clearly indeed does he see who receives cleansing thereby. His spittle cleanses, and so does His discourse, as it is written, S. John xv. 3. Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you.

6. But His making clay and anointing the eyes of the blind was intended to signify to us that the Same Who Gen. ii. 7. made man of clay, restored him to health by anointing with clay, and to signify also that this flesh of our clay must receive the light of eternal life by the Sacrament of Baptism. Do you also draw near to Siloam, that is, to Him Who was sent from the Father, as it is written, S. John vii. 16. My doctrine is not Mine, but His that sent Me. Let Christ wash you that you may see. Come to Baptism, the time itself is at hand, make haste and come that you may say, Ib. ix. 11. I went, and washed, and I received sight; that you may also say, Ib. 25. whereas I was blind, now I see, that you may say, as that man on whom light was poured said, Rom. xiii. 12. the night is far spent, the day is at hand.

7. The night was blindness. It was night S. John xiii. 27. when Judas received the sop from Jesus, and Satan entered into him. To Judas, in whom the Devil was, it was night; to John, who lay on the breast of Christ, it was day. To Peter also it was day, S. Matt. xvii. 2. when he saw the light of Christ on the mount. To others it was night, but to Peter it was day. To Peter himself however it was night Ib. xxvi. 70. when he denied Christ. But the cock crowed, and he began to weep, that he might correct his error, for now the day was at hand.

8. The Jews enquired of the blind man, S. John ix. 10. How were thine eyes opened? What signal folly! They enquired concerning what they saw; they enquired into the cause, seeing the effect.

9. Ib. 28. Then they reviled him, and said, thou art His disciple. Their curse is a blessing, for their blessing is a curse. Thou, they say, art His disciple. They confer a benefit, while they think they are doing an injury.

Farewell, my son; love me as you do, for I also love you.

LETTER LXXXI.

IN THIS LETTER S. Ambrose seeks to comfort some of his clergy, who were in despondency on account of their labours and difficulties, and sets before their eyes both the reward they may expect, and also the ready aid they will receive from Christ. He then presses upon them passages of Scripture applicable to their case, and exhorts them not to suffer themselves to be separated from Jesus their Saviour.

AMBROSE TO CERTAIN OF THE CLERGY.

1. IT is a fault which frequently besets the human mind, that, if things do not at once fall out according to their wishes, they lightly take offence, and desist from their duty. In other classes of men this is tolerable, but in those who are devoted to the Divine service it is a frequent cause of sorrow.

2. There are certain persons in the clerical function, into whose minds the Enemy, if he cannot otherwise deceive them, thus seeks to creep, that he may instil evil thoughts of the following kind; ‘What does it avail me to remain among the clergy, to suffer injuries, to bear toil, as if my own farm could not support me, or, if I have no farm, as if I could not otherwise obtain support?’ It is by such thoughts as these that even good dispositions are withdrawn from their duty, as if provision for his own sustenance was the only function of a cleric, and not rather to purchase for himself the Divine assistance after death. Whereas he only shall be rich after death, who on earth has had strength to contend unharmed against the wiles of his numerous adversaries.

3. It is said therefore in Ecclesiastes, Eccles. iv. 9. Two are better than one, because they have a good reward for their labour, For if they fall, the one will lift up his fellow. Where are the two that are better than one, but where Christ is, and he whom Christ defends? For if he who is with the Lord Jesus falls, Jesus raises him up.

4. But in what sense is it said, for their labour? Is Christ then weary[294]? Yes truly, for He says, Ps. lxix. 3. I am weary of crying. He labours, but it is on us. Moreover after His toil S. John iv. 6. He sat down wearied on the well; but what is the mode of His labours? The Apostle by his own humbler example has taught us in the words, 2 Cor. xi. 29. Who is weak, and I am not weak? Our Lord Himself has also taught us in the words, S. Matt. xxv. 43. I was sick, and ye visited Me not, naked and ye clothed Me not. He labours, in order to raise me in my falls.

5. Hence in Elisha also our Lord is prefigured, 2 Kings iv. 34. for he stretched himself upon the dead child that he might raise him to life, and in this we have a symbol that Christ died with us, that He might rise for us. Thus Christ placed Himself on the level even of our frailty, that He might raise us again. He did not fall, but of His own will cast Himself down, and in rising raised up His fellow. For He has taken us into fellowship with Himself, being anointed, as it is written, Ps. xlv. 8. with the oil of gladness above His fellows.

6. Well says the Preacher, If they fall, the One, not being Himself lifted up, will lift up his fellow; for Christ needed not the assistance and aid of another to raise Him, but rose by His own power. Again, S. John ii. 19. Destroy, He says, this temple, and in three days I will raise it up. But this He said of the Temple of His Body. And it is well that he who has not fallen should not be raised by another, for he who has been so raised must have fallen, and he who has fallen needs assistance that he may be raised. This is taught also by the words of Scripture which follows, Eccles. iv. 10, 11. Woe to him that is alone when he falleth, for he hath not another to lift him up. Again, if two lie together, then they have heat. For Rom. vi. 8. we are dead with Christ, and therefore we also live with Him. And Christ has thus died that He might give us warmth, as He has said, S. Luke xii. 49. I am come to send fire upon the earth.

7. I was dead, but because in Baptism I died together with Christ, I received the light of life from Christ. And he who dies in Christ, being warmed by Christ, receives the breath of life and resurrection. The boy was cold, Elisha warmed him with his breath, and imparted to him the warmth of life. He slept together with him that being thus buried with him in a figure the warmth of his rest might raise him up. He is cold then who dies not in Christ; he cannot be warmed to whom no burning fire is applied; he who has not Christ with him cannot grow warm by being near another.

8. And that you may understand it to be said as a mystery and not in reference to the bare number that two are better than one, he adds a mystical saying, Eccles. iv. 12. A threefold cord is not quickly broken. For that which is threefold and uncompounded cannot be broken. Thus the Trinity, being of an uncompounded nature, cannot be dissolved; for God is, whatever He is, one and simple and uncompounded; and what He is that He continues to be, and is not brought into subjection.

9. It is a good thing therefore to adhere closely to that other One, and to put your neck into His chain, and to bow down your shoulder and bear Him, and be not grieved with His bonds; because He went forth from the house of bondmen to assume His kingdom, that Ib. 13. Child who is better than an older and foolish king. Wherefore they who follow Him are also bound with chains. Paul too is Eph. iii. 1. the prisoner of Jesus Christ. And Jesus Himself Ps. lxviii. 18. Eph. iv. 8. led captivity captive. He thought it not enough to destroy that captivity which the devil had imposed, so that he might not again assault those who were wandering at large. But to dwell in subjection to Christ, putting your feet into the fetters of wisdom, and becoming His captive that you may be free from the adversary, this is what He accounted perfect liberty.

10. Rightly is He called a Child, for Is. ix. 6. unto us a Child is born, and truly a good Child to Whom it has been said by God the Father, Ib. xlix. 6. puer, Vulg. It is a light thing that Thou shouldst be My Servant; wise also, as the gospel teaches us, for He S. Luke ii. 52. increased in wisdom and stature; and properly called poor, for, 2 Cor. viii. 9. though He was rich, for our sakes He became poor, that we through His poverty might be rich. Wherefore in His kingdom He does not despise the poor man, but listens to him and frees him from all straits and troubles.

11. Let us then live in obedience to Him, that that old and foolish king may have no power over us. For he, desiring to reign and be supreme after his own will, and not to be under subjection to the Lord Jesus, grows old in sin, and falls into the deformity of folly. For what can be more foolish than for a man to relinquish heavenly and apply himself to earthly things, for him to neglect what is eternal, and to choose the frail and perishing?

12. Let no one then say, 1 Kings xii. 16. We have no portion in Jacob nor inheritance in Israel. Let no one say, I am not among the Clergy, for it is written, Deut. xxxiii. 8. Give unto Levi his lots[295]; and again David says that he who Ps. lxviii. 13. Vulg. lieth in the midst among the lots ascends to heaven with spiritual wings. Say not of your God, Wisd. ii. 15. He is grievous to us, nor of your place, it Ib. v. 12. is not for our turn, since Scripture says, Eccles. x. 4. Leave not thy place: For the adversary would fain deprive thee of it, he would fain drive thee away, for he envies thee thy hopes and thy function.

13. But thou that art in the lot of the Lord, His portion and possession, depart not therefrom, that thou mayest say to Him, Ps. cxxxix. 13. For Thou hast possessed my reins, Thou hast covered me in my mother's womb; and that He may say to thee, as to a good servant, S. Luke xvii. 7. Go, and sit down to meat.

Farewell, my sons: serve the Lord, for the Lord is good.

LETTER LXXXII.

S. AMBROSE TELLS Marcellus that he has been appointed to decide the case in which he and his brother Lætus and their sister were concerned, and why he undertook rather to act as arbiter than as judge in it. He urges Marcellus to submit willingly to his loss, praising him at the same time for having himself offered so equitable an adjustment of the matter, and tells him why he has nevertheless made some change in the settlement, and ends by shewing how the success gained by the several parties has been without general detriment to the Church.

AMBROSE TO MARCELLUS.

1. THE law suit which you did not indeed institute of your own accord, but took up when begun by others, the obligations of piety and a desire of approving your bounty towards the poor leading you thereto, has in the course of its adjudication devolved into my hands. I took cognisance of it by the tenor of the Imperial enactment, and both the authority committed to me by the blessed Apostle and the form and character of your own life and conduct have laid this upon me. Having myself censured the keeping alive amongst you your ancient animosity, I found myself obliged by the parties to hear their cause.

2. I blushed to refuse, I must confess, particularly since the advocates of either party recriminated on each other, asserting that my investigation would make manifest to whose side the suffrages of right and justice would incline. Why need I say more? When the days were almost concluded, and only a few hours remained, in which the Prefect was hearing other business; the advocates in the suit requested that it should be adjourned for a few days, that I might preside as judge. So much zeal was shewn by Christians to prevent the Prefect from interfering with the jurisdiction of the Bishop. They stated moreover that certain matters had been conducted in an unseemly manner, and each party, according to his own inclination, brought forward points as proper to be heard by the Bishop rather than the Prefect.

3. Overcome by these reasons, reminded also of the Apostolical precept, which reproves Christians, saying, 1 Cor. v. 12. Do not ye judge them that are within? and again, Ib. vi. 4–6. If then ye have judgments of things pertaining to this life, set them to judge who are least esteemed in the Church. I speak to your shame. Is it so that there is not a wise man among you, no, not one that shall be able to judge between his brethren? But brother goeth to law with his brother, and that before unbelievers, I accepted the hearing of the cause, on condition however that I should settle the terms of the compromise. For I saw that, if I decreed in your favour, the other party might not acquiesce; while, if the sentence were given for him, you and your holy sister would abandon your defence. And thus there would have been an unequal rule of decision. Suspicion might also have attached in their eyes to the influence which the sacerdotal relation would exercise over my mind. For when does the defeated party consider the others to have greater equity than himself? And truly, the expenses of this old-standing contest would have been intolerable to both parties, had its termination been without fruit, or without, at least, the solace of munificence.

4. Since, therefore, I perceived that the issue was doubtful, the law disputed, the pleas on both sides numerous, and that petitions to the emperor of an invidious character were being prepared[296] which contained charges of tampering with his decrees, perceiving also that in case of his being victorious he would rigorously sue for double the mesne profits, and for the costs of this protracted suit; while it was unbecoming your office to demand the expenses of the cause, and not competent for you to claim any of those profits which as possessor you had received, I preferred settling the dispute by a compromise to any aggravation of it by a decree. For there were other disputes liable to be raised, and what was still more grievous, although these disputes might be removed, hatreds would remain which are detrimental to feelings of good will.

5. Involved in these difficulties, and feeling that the office of the priest, the sex of the woman and the gravity of her widowed state, and regard for my friend appealed to me with a threefold and weighty claim, I thought that my course of conduct should be to desire no one's defeat, but the success of all. Nor was my intention baffled; you have all overcome, as regards kindred, as regards nature, as regards Scripture which says, 1 Cor. vi. 7. Why do ye not rather take wrong, why do ye not rather suffer yourselves to be defrauded?

6. But perhaps you deem yourself aggrieved by the unfavourable issue of the suit, and by your pecuniary losses. Better surely for priests are the losses than the gains of the world; For Acts xx. 35. it is more blessed to give than to receive. But perhaps you will say, I ought not to have been exposed to fraud, to have suffered injury, to undergo loss. What then? Would you have inflicted these things? But although you did not do so, he would have complained of suffering them. Consider therefore what the Apostle says, 1 Cor. vi. 7. Why do ye not rather suffer yourselves to be defrauded? So one may almost say that he who suffers not a wrong, inflicts it, for he who is the stronger ought to be the one to bear it.

7. But why do I treat with you as if this was my concern rather than your own? For in order to compound the quarrel you offered that for the time of her life your sister should possess part of the farm, but that after her death all the property should be ceded to your brother, and that no one should sue him either in your name or in that of the Church; but that, if he chose, he should hold it without being called on to dispense any portion to the Church. When I had declared this, and extolled the great grace of munificence which had thus been implanted in your mind, your brother replied that such an arrangement would be pleasing to him if all fear of injury to the property were removed. For how, he asked, could a woman, who was a widow besides, manage a property liable to tribute? How could it profit him, your yielding up to him your right of possession, if he supposed that greater losses would accrue to him from the bad cultivation of the land?

8. The advocates on either side were influenced by these considerations. Wherefore, with the consent of all, it was determined that the honourable[297] Lætus should undertake the farm, and should pay yearly to your sister a certain quantity of corn wine and oil. By this means your holy sister was relieved from anxiety, not deprived of her rights; she relinquished, not the fruits but the labour, not the revenues, but the hazard as it is often called of an uncertain return of them. If violent storms of wind should destroy the harvest, your sister will still retain undiminished the fruits of the seed-time. Lætus will ascribe to himself the unfavourable conditions of the arrangment, and should the pressure of necessity from time to time and of extraordinary imposts become severe, your sister will stand clear both of Lætus' loss and of receiving benefits from you; while Lætus will console himself with the proprietorship of the estate.

9. Thus all have gained their point: Lætus, because he obtained the right over the property, which he had not before; your sister, because she will now enjoy the annual profits without dispute or strife; no one, however, will have gained so complete and glorious a victory as yourself, for together with the fulfilment of your bountiful dispositions towards your sister, you have rendered her partner of your fraternal union. For you have conceded, to your brother the property, to your sister the usufruct. But as regards the Church, nothing is lost to her which is gained to piety; for charity is no loss but a gain to Christ, charity also is the fruit of the Holy Spirit. And thus the cause has been concluded according to the Apostolic model. We used to grieve that you were at strife, but your strife has been profitable, because it has led you to put on the form of the Apostolical life and discipline. Your strife was unbecoming the priesthood, but this transaction befits even the Apostolic rule.

10. And fear not that the Church should be placed out of the range of your bounty. She also partakes of your fruits, fruits even more plentiful, for she enjoys the fruit of your teaching, the service of your life, she has that fertility which you have watered by your discipline. Rich in these profits she seeks not temporal things, for she is in possession of what is eternal. But you have added not only Apostolical but also Evangelical fruits, for the Lord has said, S. Luke xvi. 9. Make to yourselves friends of the Mammon of unrighteousness. You also have made to yourself friends, and, what is remarkable, from those who were at variance with you. You have made brethren return under the laws of kindred, you have assured then by this charity and this grace that they shall be received into eternal habitations.

11. Thus, under the guidance of Christ, and the directions of two priests, yourself, that is, who gave the first outline, and myself who gave the sentence, the peace which we have made will not fail; for there have been so many concurrent voices in favour of fidelity, that perfidy cannot be without punishment.

12. Lætus will now plough for his sister, whereas before he grudged her the services of others; Lætus will now gather the harvest for his sister, though he could not before endure the gifts of others; he will bear the fruits to the granaries of his sister, and this he shall do gladly[298], in renewed accordance with the proper signification of his name.

13. You meanwhile, being conformed to the image of the Apostle of Christ, and assuming the prophetic authority, shall say unto the Lord, Ps. cxxxix. 13. Thou hast possessed my reins. This possession better becomes Christ, that He may possess the virtues of His priest, that He may receive those fruits which belong to integrity and continence, and what is more, to charity and tranquillity.

Farewell; love me, for I also love you.

LETTER LXXXIII.

IN THIS LETTER S. Ambrose praises Sisinnius for forgiving his son, who had married without his leave, and compares him with some of the Saints of the Old Testament, and with the father in the parable of the prodigal son.

AMBROSE TO SISINNIUS.

1. YOUR forgiving our son at my request for having married a wife without your knowledge I attribute to your natural affection rather than to your regard for me; for it is better that natural affection should have gained this from you than any one's request. Assuredly it is in the triumph of virtue that the priest's petition has its chief success, for he then obtains most when virtue is powerful, his petition must always coincide with the dictates of natural affection. And nature and your son obtained the more fully their request, in that the consideration of requests is usually a brief matter, whereas the habit of virtue is lasting and natural affection permanent.

2. It was indeed worthily done to recognize yourself to be a father, particularly since your cause for indignation was a just one; for I prefer to admit the fault, so that your fatherly indulgence may gain higher praise; for it was as a father that you were offended; since you had a claim to exercise the choice of your judgment as to one to whom you were to become a father, and who was to be to you in the place of a daughter. For we obtain children either by nature or adoption; in nature it is a matter of chance; in adoption, of judgment; and we are more liable to blame in the case of our adopted than of our natural offspring; because it is ascribed to nature if our children by birth should happen to be degenerate, but that those who become ours by adoption or other such tie should prove unworthy of it is ascribed to our own mistake. You had therefore cause of displeasure against your son in this his choice of a wife to himself; you have also reason for forgiving him. For you have obtained a daughter for yourself without the danger of making a selection for yourself; if he has married well, he has obtained for you this advantage; if he has been deceived, you will make them better by receiving them into favour, but worse by disowning them.

3. It is with riper judgment that a father chooses a bride for his son, but when she is brought by the son to his father, when she enters her father-in-law's roof as the chosen of her husband, their purpose of obedience is stronger, the son fearing lest his election should be disapproved, the daughter-in-law that her attentions may not be acceptable. While the distinction of the paternal choice elevates the one, the other is humbled by the fear of giving offence and bowed down by modesty. The son will not be able to throw blame on the wife, as if he himself were not answerable for any of those causes of offence which are wont to occur; on the contrary he will strive more diligently to obtain approbation of his judgment in regard of his wife, of his obedience in regard of himself.

4. You have therefore acted the part of a good parent and pardoned readily, but still upon supplication; before this was made, you would have been not pardoning but sanctioning. When this was done, to defer pardon any longer would have been unprofitable to them and very painful to yourself, for your paternal affection could no longer have held out.

5. Determined by motives of high devotion, Abraham, obeying the oracle of God, Gen. xxii. 6. offered his son for a whole burnt sacrifice; and, as if destitute of natural affection, drew his sword, that no delay might obscure the brightness of the offering. But when he was commanded to spare his son he willingly sheathed his sword, and he who with this faithful intention was hastening to offer up his only son with still more zealous piety hastened to substitute a ram as a sacrifice.

7. Joseph also, in order to get his younger brother to him, Ib. xliv. 15. feigned anger against his brethren on the plea that they had concerted an act of fraud. But when Judah, one of his brethren, fell at his feet, while the others wept, he was moved and overcome by fraternal affection and was no longer able to maintain his assumed severity, but sending away all witnesses he told them they were his brethren, and he that very Joseph whom they had sold. He added that he remembered not his own wrong, making brotherly excuses for the malice of their betrayal of him, and referring what was so blameworthy to higher and deeper causes; forasmuch as by the providence of God it must needs so have been, to the end that by passing over into Egypt he might supply his kindred's need of provisions from another country, and in the time of dearth assist in supporting his father and his father's sons.

8. And what shall I say of holy David, 2 Sam. xiv. 22. who at the petition of one woman suffered his mind to be softened, and with paternal compassion received into his house his degenerate son, stained with his brother's blood?

9. S. Luke xv. 22. So that father in the Gospel, when the younger son had spent all the substance he had received from his father by riotous living, yet when he returned confessing that he had sinned against him, moved by the humility of a single sentence, gave him an affectionate greeting, fell upon his neck, commanded the best robe and a ring and shoes to be brought forth, and having thus honoured him with a kiss, and loaded him with gifts, entertained him with a sumptuous banquet.

10. You have become an imitator of these by that parental affection whereby we approach nearest to the Divine likeness, and therefore I have exhorted our daughter that, though it be winter, she should undertake the toil of the journey, for that she will pass the winter more commodiously not only in the mansion, but also in the bosom of her father, now that wrath has given place to pardon. Moreover, that you may fully assimilate yourself to the likeness and pattern of the saints, you have accused those who by concocted falsehoods endeavoured to excite your mind against your son.

Farewell; love me, for I also love you.

LETTER LXXXIV.

A BRIEF LETTER of assent and approval.

AMBROSE TO CYNEGIUS.

1. HOW ingenuous is the modesty with which you have commended yourself, in that you have consulted me concerning a matter which you did not approve, out of deference to your father that you might not injure piety, feeling safe that no reply could be made by me which was unbeseeming holy relationships.

2. But I have willingly taken upon me your burdens, and have reconciled, I hope, the niece to her uncle. Truly I am ignorant with what view he desired that she should become his daughter-in-law, changing his own character of uncle for that of father-in-law. I need not add more, lest this also should be a cause of confusion.

Farewell my son, and love us, for we also love you.

LETTER LXXXV.

S. AMBROSE THANKS Siricius for sending him letters by the Presbyter Syrus, whose speedy return he promises.

AMBROSE TO SIRICIUS.

1. I AM always pleased to receive a letter from you, but when you also send to me some of our fellow servants, as you have now given our brother and co-presbyter Syrus a letter to me, my joy is doubled. I would however that this pleasure had been more lasting; for as soon as he had arrived he thought he must return, and this diminished my regret and added greatly to my estimation of him.

2. For I love those presbyters and deacons who when they have performed their mission will not allow themselves to remain absent any longer from their duties. For the prophet says, Jer. xvii. 16. I have not been weary in following thee. And who can be weary in following Jesus, when He Himself says, S. Matt. xi. 28. Come unto Me all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Let us therefore never cease from following Jesus, which if we do we shall never fail, for He gives strength to them that follow Him. The more nearly you approach to the Source of power the stronger you will be.

3. Often, while we are thus following Him, the adversaries say to us, Jer. xvii. 15. Where is the word of the Lord? let it come now. But let us not grow weary in following Him, let us not be turned aside by meeting with this crafty question. It was said to the prophet, when he was thrown into prison, when he was cast into the pit of mire, Where is the word of the Lord? let it come now. But he followed him so much the more, and therefore attained the prize, and received the crown; for following Jesus he was not weary; for Numb. xxiii. 21. there is no weariness in Jacob, neither shall sorrow be in Israel.

Farewell; love me, for I love one who loves me, and whom I regard as a father.

LETTER LXXXVI.

S. AMBROSE SPEAKS briefly in praise of Priscus.

AMBROSE TO SIRICIUS.

1. WHEN Priscus, my friend and co-equal in age, was coming here, you gave him a letter to me, and now that he is returning I give him the reply which I send both to duty and affection. By this service he has recompensed us both, for he has given me yours, and you mine, and therefore ought to reap the reward of this his service by an increase of favour.

Farewell, my brother; love me, for I love you.

LETTER LXXXVII.

A LETTER OF commendation.

AMBROSE TO BISHOPS SEGATIUS AND DELPHINUS.

1. MY son Polybius, on his return from Africa, where he discharged the duties of the proconsulship with credit, passed some days with us, and inspired my heart with singular affection towards him.

2. Then, when he wished to go from hence, he requested me to write to both of you. I promised to do so, and having dictated a letter delivered it to him superscribed with both your names. He asked for another; but I said that I had directed this to both of you according to our custom and usage, forasmuch as your holy minds are gratified not by the number of letters but by the association of names, and that, united as you were in feeling, you would not allow yourselves to be separated in name; farther, that to employ this compendious form of love was a prescribed part of my duty.

3. Why need I say more? He asked for another, and I gave it, but so as neither to deny him what he asked, nor to change my accustomed mode of action. Thus he has a letter to deliver to each of you, for this was all he put forward, his having nothing for one, when he had delivered his letter to the other. And this office of undivided affection I may render to you without any danger of offence, or thought of division; especially since this form of writing is Apostolical, so that either one may write to many as Paul to the Galatians, or two to one, as we read, Philem. i. 1. Paul a prisoner of Jesus Christ, and Timothy our brother, unto Philemon.

Health to you; love me and pray for me, for I love you.

LETTER LXXXVIII.

A FRIENDLY LETTER of commendation of Priscus.

AMBROSE TO ATTICUS.

1. YOU entrusted my friend Priscus with a letter, which he delivered to me, and I now give mine in turn to Priscus. Continue to love Priscus, as you do, and even more than before; this I advise, because I also value my Priscus highly. For I feel towards him that ancient love, which from our childhood upwards has grown together with our years; but it is long since I saw him before, so that not only in name but from so long an interval of time he came to me as truly Priscus.

Farewell: love me your lover, for I also love you.

LETTER LXXXIX.

A BRIEF ACKNOWLEDGEMENT of letters.

AMBROSE TO ALYPIUS.

1. ANTIOCHUS, a man of consular rank, delivered to me your Excellency's letter; nor did I neglect to reply to it; for I sent you a letter by my own messenger, and another occasion having offered, I sent, if I mistake not, a second. But since the offices of friendship are rather, I think, to be added to than balanced; it became my duty, especially on his return who had laid upon me such a debt of obligation by your letters, to make some return in the way of my own correspondence, that so I might stand clear with both of you, and he with you, bound as he was to bring you back what he had brought from you.

Farewell; love me, who love you.

LETTER XC.

S. AMBROSE DWELLS on the mutual love of himself and Antonius.

AMBROSE TO ANTONIUS.

1. YOU never are silent in regard of me, nor ought I ever to complain of being neglected by your silence, knowing that I am not absent from your thoughts. For since you bestow that which is the most precious, how can you withhold that which many others receive, not so much from any habitual affection as from an interchange of civility.

2. And even from my own feelings I can judge in turn of yours, and these lead me to believe that I am never absent from you, nor you from me, so closely are our souls united. Nor do I feel as if we ever required each others' letters, for I daily converse with you as if present in body, turning towards you my eyes, my affections, and all my regards.

3. In such things as these I delight to cope with you; for, to speak openly with one who is inseparable from my heart, your letters make me ashamed. I beg therefore that you will cease to be always returning me thanks, for my services to you have their highest reward, if I may believe I have not been wanting in my duty towards you.

Farewell; love me, for I also love you.

LETTER XCI.

A GRACEFUL LETTER of affection.

AMBROSE TO HIS BROTHER CANDIDIANUS.

1. GREAT is the beauty of your language, but that of your love is still more apparent, for your letters manifest to me the bright colours of your mind, blessed and most dear brother. The Lord give you His Grace and Blessing, for in your letters I recognize your good wishes rather than my good deserts. For what merits of mine can equal such commendations as yours?

Love me, my brother, for I love you.

EPISTOLA V. A.D. 380.

(SEE PAGE 19.)

SENTENTIAM abs se in causa Indiciæ latam defendens, Syagrii judicium arguit, quod legitima in eo forma non servata sit. Maximum tragœdiæ auctorem apud se non comparuisse: Syagrium inspectionem virgini contumeliosissimam decrevisse, cum alia, unde judicari virgo debeat, suppetant: inspectionem incertam atque inutilem; aliud enim obstetricum officium esse; non ergo hac ratione causam decidendam; præsertim cum peperisse diceretur Indicia. In quibus inspectio sit toleranda. Syagrium vanam afferre excusationem: Maximum vere accusatorem esse. Postremo accusatione ac testibus rursus vituperatis, refertur Marcellinæ aliarumque pro Indicia testimonium, post quod judicium Ambrosianum subjicitur.

AMBROSIUS SYAGRIO.

1. PROSPICIENDUM esse ne de nostro obloquantur judicio carissimi nostri Veronenses, propriis texuisti litteris. Non arbitror fore, certe non solent. Aut si obloquantur, de quo obloqui soleant haud dubie liquet: cum exasperati huc veniant, pacifici ad te revertantur; præsertim cum hoc judicium nostrum cum fratribus et consacerdotibus nostris participatum processerit: tu autem sine alicujus fratris consilio hoc judicium tibi solus vindicandum putaris; in quo tamen ante judicium præjudicium feceris, ut puellam Zenonis sanctæ memoriæ judicio probatam, ejusque sanctificatam benedictione, post tot annos, sine auctore criminationis, sine accusatore, sine professore delationis, in periculum reatus deducendam arbitrare: cui invidia esset a vanis, ab hæreticis, ut ipsi volunt, a turpibus personis conflata per scelus, per avaritiam, per intemperantiam, quærentibus proprii libertatem flagitii; ab iis postremo qui domo ejus ejecti atque eliminati forent, quod discolora opera subtexerent, quam prima fronte suæ professionis prætenderant.

2. Hujusmodi accusatores, hujusmodi testes in tuo constituebas judicio, qui neque accusare audebant, neque delationis se nexu obligare; atque ita inspectioni adjudicandam constituebas virginem, quam nullus argueret, nullus deferret. Ubi hæc cognitionis solemnitas? Ubi talis judicandi formula? Si leges publicas interrogamus, accusatorem exigunt: si Ecclesiæ; S. Matt. xviii. 16. Duobus, inquit, et tribus testibus stat omne verbum: sed illis testibus qui ante hesternum et nudiustertius non fuerint inimici; ne irati nocere cupiant, ne læsi ulcisci sese velint.

3. Inoffensus igitur affectus testium quæritur; ita tamen ut accusator prius in medium procedat. Hist. of Sus. 34 sqq. Ipsi illi presbyteri Judæorum manus suas prius supra caput imposuerunt Susannæ, et accusationem professi sunt, et pariter addiderunt testimonii auctoritatem, quam imprudenter populus sub errore positus acceperat: sed divino judicio per prophetam retexit et redarguit omnipotens Deus; ut liqueret omnibus eos velle invidiam præseminare adversum innocentis periculum, qui deficerent accusationis argumento, et firmamento probationis, conjicientes videlicet quod si præoccupatis vulgi auribus invidia mentem incesseret, præjudicium examinandæ veritatis inferret. Etenim cum audita præveniunt, aurem obstruunt, animum occupant; ne probatio desideretur, ut rumor pro convicto teneatur crimine.

4. Nos igitur accusatorem exegimus, et auctorem totius scenæ Maximum perurgendum arbitrati sumus. Verum ille accusationem, quam studio informaverat, verbo detulerat, deseruit professione; et tamen affectu urgebat, arte exsequebatur, sed fugiebat nomine, quod diffideret probationi. Denique sparsis rumoribus, sed etiam epistolis compositis et destinatis, quæsivit acerbare invidiam delationis: sed nequaquam opprimi potuit integritas et circumveniri. Nam si habuisset probationes, numquam inspectionem tua sententia flagitavisset.

5. Quid igitur sibi velit, et quo spectet quod obstetricem adhibendam credideris, non possum advertere. Itane ergo liberum erit accusare omnibus, et, cum probatione destiterint, patebit ut genitalium secretorum petant inspectionem, et addicentur semper sacræ virgines ad hujusmodi ludibria, quæ et visu et auditu horrori et pudori sunt? Denique non minima etiam in tuis litteris tentatæ expressionis verecundia est. Quæ ergo sine damno pudoris in alienis auribus resonare non queunt, ea possunt in virgine sine ejus tentari verecundia?

6. Invenisti tibi vile mancipium, procacem vernulam, cur non abutaris pudibundo ministerio, et exponas ejus modestiam; cum præsertim nihil sanctius in virgine sit, quam verecundia? Non enim sacra virgo ut corpore tantummodo integra sit quæritur, et non ut in omnibus ejus inoffensus maneat pudor. Virgo Domini suis est nixa fulcris ad sui probationem, nec alienis dotibus eget; ut se virginem probet: et nec abditorum occultorumque inspectio, sed obvia omnibus modestia adstipulatur integritati. Non placet Deo, quam non suorum gravitas morum probat: non probatur Domino, quæ unius obstetricis indiget testimonio, quod plerumque quæritur pretio. Ea ergo tibi locuples videtur ad fidem, quæ et redimi et falli potest; ut excuset ream, et crimen tegat, aut nesciat, et non possit flagitium deprehendere?

7. Neque vero illud justum arbitror, quod tuis comprehendisti litteris, quia nisi inspecta fuerit, integritas periclitetur, et incerto sui fluctuet. Ergo omnes quæ inspectæ non sunt, periculum subierunt pudoris? Ergo et quæ nupturæ sunt, prius inspiciantur, ut nubant probatiores? Ergo et quæ velandæ sunt, prius subjiciendæ sunt hujusmodi adtrectationi; non enim visitantur, sed adtrectantur: et rectius secundum tuam sententiam inspicitur non probata, quam consecrata.

8. Quid, quod etiam ipsi archiatri dicunt non satis liquido comprehendi inspectionis fidem, et ipsis medicinæ vetustis doctoribus id sententiæ fuisse? Nos quoque usu hoc cognovimus, sæpe inter obstetrices obortam varietatem, et quæstionem excitatam; ut plus dubitatum sit de ea, quæ inspiciendam se præbuerit, quam de ea quæ non fuerit inspecta. Siquidem et proximo id comperimus exemplo: nam quædam conditionis servilis Altini inspecta et refutata, postea Mediolani non meo quidem jussu, sed Nicenti ex tribuno et notario domini vel patroni sui voluntate visitata est a peritissima et locupleti femina hujusmodi artis; et cum simul ista suppeterent, ut neque paupertas obstetricis suspectam faceret fidem, neque indocilitas imperitiam, tamen adhuc manet quæstio.

9. Quid profuit igitur eam inspici, cum damnatio maneat? Nam ut quisque voluerit, aut imperitam medicam, aut redemptam asseret; ita sine effectu ullo injuria inspectionis est. Quid deinde fiet? Quotiescumque emerserit, qui non credat, toties virgo adtrectabitur? Nam si umquam se visitandam abnuerit, secundum adsertionem tuam de crimine confitebitur. Et facilius est ut refutet, quod numquam fecerit, quam quod fecerit. Variabuntur igitur obstetrices, ne suspectæ aliqua repetatur gratiæ. Erit itaque inter plures, quamquam paucarum etiam in magnis urbibus hic usus medendi sit, erit, inquam, vel malevola, vel imperita, quam pudoris claustra prætereant, et per imperitiam integro notam affigat pudori. Vides in quod periculum inducas virginalem professionem, dum obstetricem adhibendam putas; ut jam non solum verecundiæ suæ dispendio, sed etiam obstetricis incerto periclitetur.

10. Nunc consideremus quod obstetricis officium sit. Legimus etiam in veteri Testamento obstetrices, sed non inspectrices; denique ad parturientes ingrediebantur, non ad virgines; ut partus susciperent, non ut pudorem examinarent. Unde et obstetrices dictæ, eo quod obsistant dolori, vel certe pignori, ne laxatis uteri genitalibus claustris, in terram defluat. Secundo et tertio loco in Scripturis invenimus obstetrices adhibitas: sed ubique partui, nusquam inspectioni. Gen. xxxv. 17. Primo ubi Rachel parturit, deinde ubi Thamar parit, Ib. xxxviii. 27. tertio ubi necandos mares Pharao mandat Hebræorum obstetricibus; quando responderunt illæ, Ex. i. 15 sqq. non eo more Hebræas feminas parere, quo pariunt Ægyptiæ: sed Hebræas prius parere, quam introeant obstetrices ad eas. Qui locus ut superiori utilis ad Hebræorum salutem; ita reliquo confragosus ad obstetricum fidem, quæ didicerunt mentiri pro salute, et fallere pro excusatione.

11. Quid igitur suspecta et dubia captamus; cum majora sint alia examinandæ veritatis documenta et testimonia, in quibus expressiora insignia vel temerati pudoris sint? Quid enim est quod magis publicum sit, quam offensa pudoris, et defloratio virginitatis? Nihil profecto quod magis se prodat, quam castitatis dispendium. Tumescit alvus, et incedentem fœtus sui onera gravant; ut prætermittamus alia, quibus se vel tacita prodit conscientia.

12. At forte sterilitatis obtentu abscondi in aliquibus possit flagitium. Hic vero cum editus partus et expositus, vel necatus, (dum invidiæ magis, quam probationi consulitur,) dissipatus sit per aures universorum, strangulata est libertas calumniarum, si peperit. Nempe Veronæ fuit, visebatur frequenter a virginibus et mulieribus; in honore enim semper erat. Visebatur et a sacerdotibus propter pudicitiæ reverentiam, et gravitatis speculum. Quomodo ergo potuit occulere crimen, quod se vel specie sui proderet? Quomodo texit uterum? Quomodo non refugit adspectum mulierum, oculos salutantium? Quomodo parturiens vocem repressit? Sed hoc non patitur dolor: Gen. iii. 16. denique Scriptura hos maximos dicit dolores, qui sunt parturientis. Sic enim inquit, Isa. xiii. 8, 9. Dies Domini subito venit, et improvisus adest, ut dolor partus, qui intercludit omnia effugia delitescendi.

13. Hæc est verior documentorum fides, quam erubescunt et mulieres. S. Luke i. 24. Denique Elizabeth occultabat se mensibus quinque; eo quod sterilis conceperat in senectute. His signis et ipsa Mariæ virginitas apud ignaros mysterii probri suspectabatur. S. Matt. i. 18. Unde et Joseph, cui desponsata erat Virgo, suspectum habebat vitium, dum adhuc nesciret Dominicæ incarnationis sacramentum.

14. Quid ergo, negamus inspiciendas virgines? Interim quod nusquam legerim, non adstruo, nec verum arbitror. Sed quia pleraque ad speciem facimus, non ad veritatem; et erroris gratia complura frequenter prætendimus, (sunt enim qui nesciant recte facere, nisi metu pœnæ,) relinquamus hoc illis, quas non verecundia revocat a lapsu, sed solus injuriæ deterret metus: apud quas nulla cura pudoris et castitatis gratia, sed pœnæ timor est. Relinquamus vernaculis, quibus formido est deprehendi magis, quam peccasse. Absit a virgine sacra, ut obstetricem noverit: partus putatur, et remedium doloris ducitur, non examen pudoris. Relinquamus etiam illis, si quæ gravibus appetitæ calumniis, oppressæ testimoniis, strangulatæ argumentis, ad id confugiant, ut se offerant inspectioni, quo vel corporis probetur custodia; si tamen deprehendi potest, in quibus nutat pudoris gratia, et disciplina integritatis. Male tamen se habet causa, ubi potior est carnis quam mentis prærogativa. Malo morum signaculo, quam corporis claustro virginitatem exprimi.

15. Jam illud præclarum, quod scripsisti insinuatum tibi a quibusdam quod nequaquam tibi communicarent, si eam sine visitatione suscipiendam crederes. Ergo judicandi accepisti formulam. Quales illi, qui volunt præscribere sacerdotibus quid sequi debeamus? Liberavimus itaque te a cognitionis gravissimæ necessitate, ne necesse haberes formulam mandatam exsequi. Quid nobis futurum est, qui eorum studiis non obtemperavimus?

16. Sed tamen scio illic plerosque esse, qui timeant Dominum. Nam et hic vidimus dudum, et illic esse comperimus, qui compositam hanc querantur calumniam: quos aiunt eo offensos favisse Maximo, quod ista virgo non circumeat domos, nec eorum matronas salutet atque ambiat. Quid igitur fiet, quomodo tanto eam exuemus crimine? quomodo persuadebimus ut cultus adsumat novos, suos exuat? Grave flagitium virginem intra secreta domus degere, claudi penetralibus suis! Sic certe lectio docet Mariam domi repertam, S. Luke i. 28. cum ad eam Gabriel Archangelus venisset. Hist. of Sus. 15 sqq. Susanna fugiens turbarum inducitur. Denique cum se lavaret, paradisum claudi jubebat. Quid autem præstantius, (præsertim in virgine, cujus præcipuum opus verecundia,) quam secretum? quid tutius secreto, et ad omnes actus expeditius? Munia enim pudoris induit, non concursationis. Sed de aliis videro, tuæ nunc mihi respondendum epistolæ est.

17. Te miror, frater, qui tantopere defendas Maximum non fuisse accusatorem, sed parentis dolore doluisse invidiam sparsi rumoris; cum ille se inimicum et adversarium litigatorem, proposito jam jurgio, negare non potuerit adversus sacram virginem judicia adtentavisse: muroque interjecto, discretas ædes uxoris suæ ac virginis, divisam germanitatis inter sorores societatem; aliaque, quibus doleret quod virgo in agro affinitatis suæ refugisset consortium. Quomodo ergo non accusator, qui affectum accusatoris jamdudum exercuit, qui sermone suo accusationem detulit, aures tuas implevit clamore, et testes auditionis deduxit, cognitionem poposcit?

18. Quamlibet argumentatus, negare non potuisti quod ad Indiciam scripseris, quoniam Maximus seu impulsu aliorum, seu dolore proprio crimen grave detulerit. Sola hæc epistola satis est ad accusationis testimonium; neque enim te ego tuis ad me datis litteris urgendum putavi, sed iis lectis quas ad virginem dederas, adverti diversum esse, quod ad me scripseras: et tamen cum epistola tuæ sibi non convenirent, consulendum te, non arguendum putavi. Quid igitur sibi vult illa argumentatio, quia illud detulerit, quod ad me scripseras, delatam videlicet eam in turpi crimine; ita ut editum et obrutum partum dici adserat? Quasi vero istud ad Indiciam, non ad me scripseris. Illa ubi audivit litteris tuis Maximum subduci accusationi, litteras tuas protulit, quibus eum criminis delatorem probavit: ad me datas non legerat, nec quid haberent, sciebat.

19. Ego autem exhorrui a primo calumniam, quia advertebam non crimen intendi, sed injuriam virginis desiderari, cujus inspectio et visitatio postulabatur, non aliquod flagitium deferebatur. Quis enim istud a principio fraude compositum nequaquam sibi congruere et convenire non arbitraretur? Cucurrisse mulieres viles ad monasterium, jactasse partum virginis, et necem pignoris, de monasterio rumorem per populos sparsum, eumque affluxisse in aures novi affinis Maximi, ab ipso interpellatum episcopum, dimissas eas quæ dixisse ferebantur, atque in fugam coactas, ut apud nos patuit: eos qui audisse se dicerent, ad Ecclesiam vocatos prodisse Renatum et Leontium, 1 Kings xxi. 10. Hist. of Sus. 15 sqq. S. Matt. xxvi. 59, 60. duos illos iniquitatis viros, quos apposuit Jezabel, redarguit Daniel, subornavit Judæorum populus; ut auctorem vitæ suæ falso appeterent testimonio. Qui tamen cum simul composuissent flagitium, simul ingressi essent viam, et ne quid prætream a juncti Maximo, comitantibus, ut dixit Leontius, iis qui illum rumorem sparserant; tamen ubi in meo adstiterunt judicio, cum primo de origine causæ quærerem, diversa et distantia prompsere, non locorum separati, sed mendaciorum divortio.

20. Cum igitur sibi ipsi non convenirent, Mercurium et Leam vilissimæ conditionis et detestabilioris nequitiæ personas amandavissent, aufugisset Theudule, non ignara objiciendi sibi facinoris, quod ante lectum Renati sola cubitavisset, ancilla præesto esset alia, quæ stupro ejusdem Renati se diceret coinquinatam; die ipso, qui dictus erat cognitioni, subtraxerunt se episcoporum conventui; licet etiam pridie subito se profecturos idem Renatus clamaverit.

21. Unde ego judicio præscripsi diem, et tamen nullo accusante, nullis testimoniis perurgentibus, insinuavi sanctæ sorori quod peteres coram ipsa inspici et visitari memoratam virginem. At illa sancte inspectionem quidem recusavit, sed testimonium non declinavit, dicens nihil se in Indicia comprehendisse, nisi quod esset virginalis pudoris et sanctitatis: habitasse eam Romæ in domo nostra, nobis absentibus, nulli eam se vitiorum familiaritati dedisse, optare cum ea sibi a Domino Jesu partem reservari in regno Dei.

22. Paternam quoque filiam nostram interrogavi, quod ab ea numquam soleat discedere, cujus caritas vitæ hujus testimonium est. Itaque etsi quod injurata diceret, fidei sacramento conferendum foret; sub obstestatione tamen professa est alienam criminis quo appetebatur, nec quidquam in ea scire se bonæ vacuum conversationis.

23. Nutricem quoque liberæ conditionis interrogavimus, cui et status haudquaquam degeneri servitio obnoxius libertatem vera fatendi daret, et fides atque ætas ad veritatem adstipularetur, et officium nutricis ad cognitionem secreti. Ea quoque nihil se indecorum vidisse, nihil sibi quasi parenti commissum a virgine aliqua dignum reprehensione.

24. His moti, Indiciam inoffensi virginem muneris pronuntiavimus: Maximum autem et Renatum et Leontium ita involvit sententia, ut Maximo, si errorem emendaret, spes reditus reservaretur; Renatus autem et Leontius excommunicati manerent, nisi forte probata sui pœnitentia, et hujus facti diuturna deploratione, dignos se præberent misericordia. Vale, frater, et nos dilige; quia nos te diligimus.

EPISTOLA VI. A.D. 380.

CUM SYAGRIO QUOD Indiciam contumeliosæ inspectioni sententia sua addixisset, Ambrosius amice expostulat; eique atrocissimam ultionem, quam Israelitæ ob violatam in levitæ uxore castitatem repetiverunt, ante oculos ponens, totam rei seriem eleganter describit.

AMBROSIUS SYAGRIO.

1. QUÆ sint in nostro judicio decursa, comperta retines; et ideo nunc quasi animæ portionem convenio meæ, habens apud te pro castitatis contumelia familiarem et dolentem querelam. Itane oportuit inoratam atque inauditam virginitatis causam adjudicari, ut non possit absolvi? Hoc est, nisi sua injuria, nisi ab honesto pudore traducatur ad indecoram sui corporis oblationem, grande videlicet relatura sui testimonium, ut exponatur ludibrio, et procacitatis notetur. Hanc igitur prærogativam detulisti integritati, hujusmodi honorificentiam, qua se lacessiri aut invitari gaudeant, quæ hoc munus recipiendum putant; ut amittant libertatem communis adsertionis, nec se jure tueantur vel sanctæ legis, vel publico, ut non accusatorem exigat, non arcersitorem urgeat: sed impudentiam solam induat, ac sese projiciat ad injuriam?

2. Non ita majores nostri despicabilem habebant castimoniam, cui tantum deferebant reverentiæ, ut bellum adversum temeratores pudicitiæ suscipiendum putarent. Judg. xx. 1 sqq. Denique tantum fuit ultionis studium; ut omnes tribules de Benjamin tribu extinguerentur, Ib. 47. nisi sexcentos qui bello reliqui forent natura editioris loci defendisset; sic enim lectionis divinæ serie expressum tenetur, cujus tenorem recensere congruit.

3. Ib. xix. 1 sqq. Levites vir animo major quam opibus, habitabat in partibus montis Ephræm; ei quippe tribui sortito obtigerat locus in possessionem terræ datus pro funiculo hereditatis. Is sibi accepit jugalem de Juda Bethleem. Et ut se habent prima copularum exordia, ardebat juvenculam immodica animi cupiditate: simul quia similibus ejus non fungebatur, exardescebat magis magisque possessione, atque immane quantum exæstuabat. Unde quia nihil referebatur ex parte adolescentulæ, vel levitate amoris, vel vi doloris, quod haud quaquam mercede pari secum decerneret, cum eadem expostulabat. Hinc frequens jurgium: quo mulier offensa, claves remisit, domum revertit.

4. Judg. xix. 3 sqq. At ille amore victus, qui quod speraret non habebat aliud; cum quartum jam mensem fluere cerneret, eo contendit, fretus quod consilio parentum emolliretur animus adolescentulæ. Occurrit pro foribus socer, generum introduxit, filiam reconciliavit; et ut lætiores dimitteret, triduo tenuit, quasi repararet nuptias: ac volenti abire, quartum quoque diem comperendinavit, prætenta humanitatis specie, moras innectendo. Pari modo cum etiam quintum diem vellet adjungere superioribus, et jam novæ deessent causæ morandi, paterno tamen affectu retinendæ filiæ desiderium non deforet, promissam profectionis copiam distulit in meridiem ut viam cibo curati adorirentur. Post epulas quoque volens dilationem adtexere, eo quod jam vesper appropinquaret, generi precibus, ægre licet, tamen adquievit.

5. Ib. 10 sqq. Ille iter suum perrexit lætus animi, quod dilectam sibi recuperavisset. Qui uno comitati servulo, cum jam declinaret dies, festino viam celerabant gradu. Mulier vehebatur jumento, viro nullus sensus laboris, qui fructu desiderii, simul et vario mulieris ac vernaculi sermone viam levaret. Denique ubi Hierosolymam appropinquarunt, quæ triginta stadiis aberat, quam tunc temporis Jebusæi tenebant; suggessit puer deflectendum in civitatem, quia sub noctem suspecta essent etiam illa, quæ tutiora sunt, cavendaque tenebrarum ambigua; maxime quia locorum incolæ non essent de filiis Israel. Et ideo prævertendum ne quid adversa studia gerentes insidiarum inferrent, obscuro noctis dolum quærentibus ad perpetrandum facinus satis opportuno. Sed domino ejus haudquaquam placuit sententia, ut inter alienigenas hospitio succederent; cum Gaba et Rama non longe abessent civitates Benjamin. Itaque prævalens sententia, posthabuit servuli suggestionem; quasi ex conditione consilium æstimaretur, et non consilio quamvis infima conditio allevaretur. Et jam sol in occasu erat: denique vix occurrit, cum jam urgeretur vespere in civitatem succedere.

6. Judg. xix. 15 sqq. Gabaonitæ incolebant locum, inhospitales, immites, intolerabiles; omnia tamen tolerabiliores, quam si aliquem hospitio recepissent. Denique commodius huic viro levitæ cesserat, si in Gabaa hospitium non reperisset. Verum ne quid deesset offensionis, primo ingressu diversorium non reperit: et cum in publico situs, alienam misericordiam imploraret, offendit advenientem ex agro senem, quem vesper ex opere agresti compulit nocte decedere. Et cum esset ei conspicuus, rogatus quo iret, et unde adventaret, respondit: De Bethleem Juda revertor, contendo ad montem Ephræm, et mulier est mecum: sed ecce huc diverti, et nemo est qui hospitio recipiat, et requiescendi usum ministret. Non quo cibi aut potus sibi, aut pecori pabulorum esset indigentia, sed tecti hospitio prohiberentur: præsto esse illa, nudum tecti hospitium desiderari. Ad ea senior benigne satis et placide: Pax, inquit, tibi: et succede hospes pariter et civis; nam et mihi origo de montis Ephræm partibus, et hic hospitalis habitatio: sed tempore diuturno incolatus sedes fundavit. Itaque receptos domicilio ministerio sui et subsidiis hospitalibus juxta fovit.

7. Ib. 22. Hortabatur ad lætitiam senior, et frequentioribus provocabat poculis, ut vino aboleret curarum oblivia; cum subito circumsistunt eos Gabaonitæ, juvenes ad omnem projecti libidinem, nihil pensum ac moderatum habentes: quos forma mulieris illexerat, et in omnem amentiam præcipitabat; capti enim ejus decore, et per senectutem hospitis, atque infirmitatem subsidii, accepta spe potiundi, poscunt mulierem, et pulsant januam.

8. Ib. 23, 24. Itaque egressus senior rogabat eos, ne hospitales mensas turpi flagitio fœdarent, et reverendum jus etiam indomitis barbararum gentium nationibus violandum arbitrarentur: contribulem illum sibi, Israelitem virum legitimi thori subnixum copula non sine indignatione cælestis arbitri tanta affici contumelia. Quod ubi parum procedere advertit, esse sibi filiam virginem adjecit, illam se offerre majore parentis dolore, sed minore gratiæ hospitalis dispendio: publicum flagitium privato dedecore tolerabilius habere. At illi exagitati æstu furoris, et inflammati incentivo libidinis, eo amplius ardebant formam juvenculæ, quo magis negabatur. Et justitiæ exsortes ridebant verba æquitatis, filiam senis, quia minore invidia sceleris offerebatur, despectui habentes.

9. Judg. xix. 25 sqq. Itaque cum piæ nihil proficerent preces, et seniles frustra hospes manus tenderet, desperato præsidio, rapitur mulier, et per totam noctem injuriæ impletur. At ubi lux finem intemperantiæ dedit, januam hospitalem repetit, non quo viri conspectum exposceret, quem magis declinandum putaret, contumeliæ pudore miserabilis: sed ut affectum viro referret, quæ castitatem amiserat, et contumeliæ suæ funus lamentabili specie ante januam hospitalem exponeret. Egressus itaque levita, cum jacentem invenisset, arbitratus quod verecundia vultum nequaquam adtollere auderet, consolari cœpit: quia non voluntate, sed invita tantæ injuriæ succubuisset: hortari adsurgere, et secum repetere domum. Sed ubi nullum responsum referebatur, quasi quiescentem majore voce e somno excitare.

10. Ib. 28. Verum ubi mortis supremæ patuit fides, impositas jumento reliquias domum pertulit, et divisos artus mulieris in partes duodecim misit per singulas tribus Israel. Ib. 20 sqq. Quo commotus universus populus convenit in Massephat, atque ibi querela per levitam cognita, omnes in bellum exarsere, statuentes neminem virorum fas esse in tabernaculum succedere, priusquam de tanti sceleris auctoribus ultio capesseretur. Animis itaque ruebant in prælium; sed consilium prudentiorum prævertit sententiam, non temere confligendum bello cum civibus, sed prius verbis experiendum de flagitio, et decernendum conditionibus pro delictis: neque justum videri, ut paucorum sceleris pretium ad omnes perveniret, et privata adolescentium peccata statum salutis publicæ labefactarent. Itaque miserunt viros, qui denuntiarent Gabaonitis, ut tanti reos flagitii offerrent: sin autem, cognoscerent non minoris esse criminis tantum facinus defendisse, quam exercuisse.

11. Judg. xix. 15 sqq. Verum illis superba referentibus, consilia pacis bello mutata. Neque primo aut secundo conflictu cum plurimi a paucis afflictarentur, cedendum Israelitæ adversis præliis æstimarunt; quadringenta enim millia virorum bellantium adversum vigintiquinque millia Benjamin tribus, et septingentos Gabaonitas expertos belli juvenes decertabant. Et cum sinistra sorte duo sibi jam cecidissent prælia; animi tamen promtus haudquaquam deposuit Israel vincendi fiduciam, et ulciscendi præsumtam spem.

12. Ib. 26 sqq. Sed quia causa numeroque præstantiores, inferiores pugnæ eventu pedem retulerant, divinam offensam rati, jejunio et fletu maximo reconciliationem gratiæ cœlestis affectavere. Itaque orata Domini pace, acriores in bellum revertuntur; ut pote quibus oraculum animos dederat, spem accumulaverat. Et simulato a fronte quod cederetur, ac dispositis per noctem insidiis a tergo urbis, in qua locata erat manus hostium; dum hi cedunt, et illi sectantur, invadendi urbem vacuam facta copia, et mox admoto statimque adulto incendio, flammarum fragor atque æstus furens captæ urbis speciem manifestarunt. Quo et suis fracti animi, et erecti hostium. Nam et Benjamin viri clausos se et circumventos rati, priusquam a tergo invaderentur, dispergere sese, atque in desertum fugere cœperunt; et contra Israel gemino agmine urgere eos, ac palantes persequi.

13. Ib. 35 sqq. Cæsa itaque vigintiquinque millia, id est, omnes fere de viris Benjamin, præter sexcentos, qui arrepto scrupeæ rupis munimento, partim loci ingenio et subsidio naturæ, partim desperatione victoribus terrori fuere. Nam secundæ res cautionis admonent: in adversis ultio pro victoria habetur. Nec feminarum numerus tanti discriminis exsors fuit: sed omnis tribus Benjamin muliebris sexus cum pueris et puellis, omnique ætate gladio aut igne extinctus; sacramentumque additum, ne quis tribus illius viro filiam suam in uxorem daret, quo reparandi nominis omnis aboleretur successio.

14. Ib. xxi. 2, 3. Belli finis simul atque iræ factus, et furor in pœnitentiam vertit: armisque positis, in unum convenientes viri Israel fleverunt fletum magnum, et celebrarunt jejunium, dolentes unam tribum perisse ex fratribus, atque extinctam populi sui validam manum: jure quidem pro delicti pretio bellatum adversum propugnatores flagitiorum, sed misere in sua populum conversum viscera, et bello civili utrumque afflictum. Lacrymarum effusio movit passionem animi, et affectum perpulit, sævitiæ ratio successit: missique legati ad sexcentos illos Benjamin viros, qui per quatuor menses edito se præruptarum tuebantur rupium, aut deserti indigentia, quæ multitudini obsidentium periculo foret, deploraverunt communem illam ærumnam, quod illi contribules, isti cognatos et socios amisissent; sed tamen non penitus interceptam reparandæ tribus successionem, consulere se in medium quomodo et sacramenti fides sibi constet, et tribus una nequaquam a corpore avulsa intercidat.

15. Judg. xxi. 4 sqq. Altari itaque posito, reconciliationis et pacis oblatum sacrificium. Et quia Jabis Galaad populus erat pœnæ et maledicto obnoxius, (obstrinxerat enim se omnis Israel magno sacramento, ut si quis non ascendisset cum eo ad puniendum flagitium, morte moreretur,) duodecim millia bellatorum directa: ut et viri omnes et mulieres ferro extinguerentur, solas virilis thori exsortes reservarent adolescentulas. Interfectis itaque omnibus Jabis Galaad, solæ virgines quadringentæ exitio ceterorum superfuerunt. Quas accipiens Israel, statuit viros Benjamin belli metum deponere, et in conjugium sibi sumere integras ævi juxta ac pudoris puellas: quibus et causa esset apud viros integra, quod nemo suorum adversum eos bellum susceperat: et caritatis gratia, quia propter eos supremo supplicio ereptæ forent. Hoc igitur modo quadringentis juvenibus quæsita copularum consortia sunt.

16. Ib. 16 sqq. Sed quia ducenti numero supererant, quibus jugales deerant, iis quoque sine fraude sacramentorum consultum accepimus. Die festus in Silo quotannis celebrabatur. Ibi exsultare solitæ virgines, et choreas ducere in honorem religionis: aliæ præire matribus, et totum iter agmine viantum repleri. Dixit unus ex senioribus: Si ducenti illi tribus Benjamin viri intra vineas siti excubias tenderent, donec se omnis feminea turba effunderet, et surgentes ex vineis unusquisque quam occursus dederit, uxorem sibi vindicaret, fraudi id nequaquam futurum; populum etenim favere reparandæ tribus successioni, propter sacramentum impertire non posse filiarum suarum societatem: neque tamen contra sacramentum videri, si prohibendum non putaret; quia sacramento neque cogendi, neque prohibendi necessitas imposita videretur: illos sibi sine metu consulere oportere. Sane si puellarum parentes vindictam efflagitarent, partim prece, partim etiam retorquendo in ipsos invitæ culpam custodiæ, sese revocaturos; quia cum scirent Benjamin viros exsortes esse jugalium, cum filiabus processerint: dignam sane tribum jam non pœna, sed misericordia: satis dure sævitum in eos, et debellatam corporis sui partem: immoderatius exarsisse plebem, ut successionem domesticam extingueret, atque ex suis necaret: placere Deo non perire populo tribum, neque pro una muliere tam acerbe consuli.

17. Judg. xxi. 23. Probaverunt consilium Israelitæ: exsequuti sunt viri Benjamin, et dispositi in vineis loco opportuno et tempore, plenas feminei agminis vias occupaverunt. Præbuit illis festum nuptiarum religionis solemnitas. Avulsæ de complexu patrum filiæ, tanquam in manum ab ipsis parentibus tradebantur, et velut pactam e gremio matris non abduci, sed prodire arbitrareris. Ita tribus Benjamin pene intercepta atque extincta brevi floruit, documentum exhibens, quod magno exitio sit insolentibus vindicta pudicitiæ, et læsæ castitatis ultio.

18. Nec hoc solo loco, sed plerisque Scriptura hoc docet. Gen. xii. 17. Nam et in Genesi legimus exercitum quæstionibus regem Ægypti Pharao, quod Saram adtentavisset; et tamen alienam esse uxorem nesciebat.

19. Est igitur Domino castitatis tuendæ voluntas, quanto magis est defensandæ integritatis? Unde nulla debet virginibus sacris irrogari injuria; quæ enim non nubunt, et qui uxores non ducunt, S. Luke xx. 36. habentur sicut Angeli Dei in cælo. Et ideo cœlesti gratiæ non inferamus corporalem contumeliam; quoniam potens est Deus, quem nec prævaricatio prætereat, et moveat accepti sibi muneris et consecratæ virginitatis acerba et gravis contumelia. Vale, frater, et nos dilige: quia nos te diligimus.

ENDNOTES.

The word in the original is Sacerdos. It is constantly used by S. Ambrose and other writers of his time for Bishops, though they sometimes add a qualifying epithet, ‘Summus Sacerdos.’ But even alone it is used where the writer is clearly speaking of Bishops, and of Bishops quâ Bishops. Thus it occurs frequently in the Proceedings of the Council of Aquileia, which is itself styled ‘Sacerdotale Concilium.’ See the Article ‘Bishop’ by Mr. Haddan in Dict. of Chr. Ant. Vol. 1 p. 210 b., who refers also to Bp. Taylor, Episc. Assert. § 27. It has therefore been rendered ‘Bishop’ throughout this volume, wherever it is plain that the reference is to Bishops, and ‘Priest’ wherever it is used in a more general way.

This forms the two first books of the ‘De Fide’ still extant among the works of S. Ambrose. The other three books were added afterwards, as S. Ambrose explains at the beginning of Bk. iii, to maintain his statements against the attacks of heretical teachers. The Treatise, ‘De Spiritu Sancto,’ in 3 books, was sent afterwards in 381 A.D.

3

Nivei. This is the reading all MSS. Ed. Rom. has ‘vivi,’ which would agree better with the text of S. John.

4

The Benedictine reference for the first of these texts is Prov. xiv. 3. The lips of the wise shall preserve them, with which the Sept. and Vulg. agree. In the second the English Vers. has The lips of the wise disperse knowledge. Here S. Ambr. agrees with the Sept.

5

Forum Cornelii was on the Via Æmilia, about 23 miles S.E. of Bononia. It was at this time in the Province Æmilia. The modern name is Imola.

6

The Benedictine Editors refer this to the ravages of the Goths after Valens' defeat at Hadrianople A.D. 375. It is on this that they found the date of the letter, but the reference is somewhat vague.

8

Amentata illa non manipularis sententia. Ed. Ben. refers to Junius, Adagiorum Centuriae 3, 10, who says 'Amentatam sententiam dixit D. Ambrosius pro validâ et haud vulgari firmisque argumentis roboratâ. Est autem amentum lori genus quo hasta praeligata validius certiusque libratur evibraturque: hinc amentata sententia ea est quæ neutiquam trivialis est et pedanea, cujusmodi manipularis vocatur, velut a gregario milite profecta, sed eximia et artificio vallata.' He quotes two passages from Cicero, De Orat. 1 57, 242. Brut. 78. 271, in both which places he uses 'amentatæ hastæ' of arguments, and also Tertull. adv. Marc. iv. 33 where he says that our Lord amentavit [Phariseis] hanc sententiam, non potestis Deo servire et mammonæ, where it plainly means, 'gave them this home-thrust.'

10

Bassianus is mentioned among the Bishops who took in the Council of Aquileia, as Bishop of Laus Pompeia, now Lodi Vecchio, S.E. of Milan. The modern town of Lodi is about 5 miles from the site of the ancient one.

11

He means the day of his consecration as Bishop. So S. Ambr. speaks of his own consecration day as his birthday, Comm. in Luc. vii. 78.

12

These words are added by S. Ambrose.

17

There is no text in Holy Scripture exactly corresponding to this. Lev. xxv. 11 which is referred to by Ed. Ben. is hardly to the point.

18

There can be little doubt that the true date is iii. Non. Sept. i. e. the 3rd of Sept., and not Nonis, the 5th. For in 381 A.D. the 5th of Sept. was on a Sunday, and it is hardly likely that a Council would have sat from daybreak till one o'clock (Ep. 10. 5) in the Church on such a day, and moreover it would not have been natural for Palladius to say, as he does in § 47. Non respondebo nisi auditores veniant post Dominicam diem, if he were speaking on a Sunday.

19

The reading of Ed. Rom. has been adopted, which omits the preposition 'cum.' If this were correct, it would imply that the consuls were themselves taking a leading part in the Council; whereas it is clear that they are mentioned solely as the ordinary way of fixing the year; nor had the consuls at this time any other than such ornamental functions. See Gibbon's description, ch. xvii. vol. ii. ed. Smith p. 206–208.

20

By 'acta' here are meant formal and official records taken down and published by authority. Thus Jul. Cæsar ordered the 'Acta' of the Senate to be regularly published. Suet. Cæs. 20.

21

It is to be remembered that ‘diocese’ was then a civil and not an Ecclesiastical term. A ‘diœcesis’ was an aggregate of provinces, under the charge of a Vicarius, who was subordinate to one of the four Præfecti Prætorio, each Præfectus having under him a number of dioceses. Thus the Vicarius Italiæ, who was subordinate to the Præfectus Prætorio Italiæ, had in his diocese fourteen provinces, including both Liguria of which Milan was the capital, and Venetia in which Aquileia was situated. It is to be remembered also that Italia at this time meant only the north of Italy, the rest of Italy being now included in the Diocese of Rome, and under the Vicarius Urbis Romae. See the table given in Smith’s Gibbon, vol. ii. p. 315. taken from Marquardt. When the word diocese came into Ecclesiastical use, it was applied, first to “an aggregate not merely of several districts, governed each by its own bishop, but of several provinces (ἐπαρχίαι) each presided over by a metropolitan. The diocese itself was under an Exarch or Patriarch.” Dict. of Chr. Ant. sub voc. ‘Creditâ’ is here read for ‘creditam,’ as required by the order of the words.

22

It is not certain to whom the Emperor’s letter was addressed. Some have thought that it was addressed to the Pretorian Prefect of Italy. Tillemont maintained that it was addressed to Valerian, Bishop of Aquileia, in whose see the Council was held. The language, though not decisive, seems in favour of the former supposition. In § 7. the Prefect of Italy is spoken of as issuing letters in pursuance of it.

23

i. e. a copy of S. Paul’s Epistles.

24

i. e. the Emperor’s letter.

25

The text here seems defective, nor is there any thing to guide us to supply the lacuna. What is given in the translation is no more than a guess at the meaning of the sentence. The general connection is however clear enough even if it be omitted.

26

The reading of Ed. Rom. is here adopted, as alone furnishing a reasonable sense. The Benedictine text is unintelligible.

27

By Illyricum is here meant Illyricum Occidentale, which at this time was under the jurisdiction of the Vicarius Italiæ. (See the Table in Smith's Gibbon, referred to in note[299]299 p. 33.) Sirmium, which in the following Century was entirely destroyed by the Goths under Attila, was at this time a place of great importance both civil and ecclesiastical. It is spoken of by Justinian as capital of Illyricum both in civil and episcopal matters (Tillemont, note xv on the Life of S. Ambrose vol. x. p. 739). Its ecclesiastical importance is shewn by the contest in which S. Ambrose engaged with Justina, two years before the Council, 379 A.D. to bring about the election of Anemius as Bishop, when the Empress was using all her influence to cause an Arian Bishop to be appointed. Arianism had been rife there for some time, and Germinus a previous Bishop had been one of the leaders of that party. (Tillemont, S. Ambr. ch. xx.) Illyricum had been finally separated into two divisions, Orientale and Occidentale, by Gratian, in 379 A.D. who transferred the Eastern Division to Theodosius when he made him Emperor of the East, from which time it formed part of the Eastern Empire. (Tillemont, Hist. des Emp. vol. v. p. 716.)

28

The context requires the reading 'bonus' for 'omnibus,' which is that of one MS. The same MS. also inserts 'Deum' in Eusebius' next speech, which is required by the argument.

29

made Himself of no reputation E.T.

30

But now ye seek to kill me, a man &c. E.V.

31

By 'tractatus concilii Nicæni' is meant simply the Nicene Creed. This is established by S. Ambr. De Fide iii. 15. 125 (518 Ed. Ben.) where, speaking of the letter of Eusebius of Nicomedia read at the Council, in reference to the word ὁμοούσιος, he says, Hæc cum lecta esset epistola in Concilio Nicæno, hoc verbum in tractatu fidei posuerunt Patres, etc.

32

The reading in Ed. Ben. is 'carendum.' If it is genuine, the word must have acquired a sort of transitive sense and have come to mean 'to be deprived.' No traces of such an use is to be found in Facciolati or in Ducange. Ed. Ben. quotes a parallel use of 'abstinendus' but without any instances.

Rom. reads ‘privandum,’ Chifflet ‘curandum,’ either of which give the required sense, but seem corrections without MS. authority.

The text in this passage is defective and confused: but the general sense, as given here, may fairly be made out of it as it stands.

34

It is to be noticed that the sentence of only twenty-five Bishops are here given out of thirty two or thirty three. It is probable therefore that the Record is defective, and that the sentences of the rest have been lost.

35

Ed. Ben. here reads, Et cum Secundianus subripuisset. As subripuisset by itself could have no sense, the reading of Ed. Rom. has been adopted, Et cum Secundianus se paullulum subripuisset et postea convenisset. This is adopted in Tillemont’s narrative, Il sortit mesme de l’assemblée, mais il revint quelque temps après.

36

This is according to the text of Ed. Rom.

37

The abrupt termination of the discussion with Secundianus, without any account of a decision in his case, seems to point to the same conclusion as the incomplete list of Bishops who give sentence on Palladius, that the Record is defective. Moreover the unusual number of various readings is generally a sign of a defective text. The force and cleverness of the evasions of Secundianus seem sometimes to be lost thereby.

38

With regard to the names of the sees, those of which the modern name is as familiar or more familiar than the ancient have been rendered by the modern name, those of which the modern name would be unfamiliar to general readers have been left in their ancient form. It would be affectation to call S. Ambrose Bishop of Mediolanum: on the other hand nothing would be gained by calling Felix Bishop of Jadera, Bishop of Zara.

39

This name is omitted in the list at the beginning, so that there are thirty three in this list, only thirty two in the other. The two presbyters were probably representatives of Bishops, but it is not stated of whom.

40

It is probable that similar letters were addressed to the Bishops of the other Provinces of Gaul, who had sent Justus as their deputy, and to Africa and Illyricum, though no record of them remains. Possibly they were identical, except the address. Gaul had at this time been so subdivided, that the Vicariate or civil Diocese consisted of no less than seventeen provinces. See Marquardt's Table, as quoted above.

41

There is no mention of the condemnation of Attalus in the Records, another proof that they are not complete.

42

Julianus Valens was Bishop of Petavio or Pettau on the Drave, into which See he had apparently been introduced in the place of the orthodox Bishop Marcus: for this is, according to Tillemont, the meaning of the word 'superpositus.' When Pannonia and Illyricum were overrun by the Goths after Valens' defeat at Hadrianople, (378 A.D.) he deserted his charge. The ravages of the Barbarians are described by S. Jerome ad cap i. Zephan. vol. iii. p. 1645. See Gibbon ch. 26. (from a note in Newman's Fleury, vol. 1 p. 38.)

43

The reading here is uncertain. Ed. Rom. has 'prout jam et sacerdotum concilio sententia in eos lata est.' Nor is it certain to what laws allusion is made. A long note in Ed. Ben. does not seem to clear up the matter.

44

Dacia Ripensis. The original Province of Dacia was beyond the Danube. It was conquered and included in the Empire by Trajan. In the time of Aurelian it was abandoned again, and the Danube re-established as the frontier. Then the Roman colonists were removed to the South of the Danube, into the central district of Mœsia, which was then called Dacia Aureliani. This was afterwards divided into two Provinces, called Dacia Ripensis and Dacia Mediterranea, Ripensis being the northern part, extending along the bank of the Danube, whence the name.

"Damasus was made Pope on the death of Liberius A.D. 366. Ursinus, called by some Ursicinus, was, as Damasus had been, Deacon at Rome, and could not endure the exaltation of his former colleague who is suspected of having taken part with Felix, the successor to the power of Liberius, when exiled by the Arians. Ursinus was factiously consecrated by one Bishop, and a contest ensued in which even much blood was shed. Ursinus was banished, and being recalled the next year, was banished again after two months. In 371 he was allowed to leave his place of exile, and only excluded from Rome and the suburbicarian provinces. In 378 he held the factious meetings mentioned in the letter, and was exiled to Cologne. He continued to petition Gratian to restore him, and hence the request of the Bishops at Aquileia." Note in Newman's Fleury vol. 1, p. 38.

48

This Lucius the person who, after the death of S. Athanasius, was forced upon the Church of Alexandria as Bishop, in the place of Peter who had been duly elected, by the Governor of the Province. His crimes and cruelties are recorded at length by Eccl. Hist. iv. 21, 22. He was eventually expelled from the see he had usurped, and is mentioned by Socrates, Hist. Eccl. v. 7, as afterwards dwelling at Constantinople and sharing the fate of Demophilus.

49

Demophilus was originally Bishop of Beroea, (probably Beroea in Thrace,) and was deposed from his office for Arianism. In A.D. 370, on the death of Eudoxius, he was elected by the Arian party Bishop of Constantinople, in opposition to Evagrius. He was supported by Valens who was then Emperor, and Evagrius banished. In 380 A.D. after the accession of Theodosius, matters were changed. Theodosius offered to maintain him in his see, if he subscribed the Nicene Confession, but he refused, and withdrew, and maintained, in conjunction with Lucius and others, Arian worship outside the walls of Constantinople. He died A.D. 386. He is mentioned by S. Ambrose (De Fide 1. 6. 45.) as a leader of one of the various forms of Arianism.

This refers to the long schism which had existed in the Church at Antioch, ever since 331 A.D. when Eustathius was deposed by the Arian party: in 361 A.D. Meletius was elected as successor to Eudoxius, having previously subscribed the Creed of Acacius (Socr. ii. 44.); but on his accepting the Nicene Creed, and acknowledging the Homoousion, he was deposed, and banished by the Emperor Constantius, and Euzoius, an Arian, appointed in his stead, who was afterwards succeeded by Dorotheus, (who was afterwards transferred to Constantinople, 385 A.D.) Meanwhile Meletius had returned from exile, but the extreme orthodox party refused to recognise him, because he had at first been appointed as a Semi-Arian, and elected Paulinus, though the Council of Alexandria had urged them to submit to Meletius, so that, as Socrates says, when recounting the Bishops of the chief sees in the year 379, the Church at Antioch τριχῆ διῄρητο. Paulinus was supported by the Church of Alexandria and by the Bishops of the West, and, as appears from the statements of this letter, a compromise had been proposed, that when either Meletius or Paulinus died, both parties would acknowledge the survivor. The Bishops at Aquileia urge the Emperor to enforce this, not aware that Flavian had already been elected as Meletius' successor at the Council of Constantinople. The schism was thus perpetuated, and continued till 415 A.D.

What the difficulty about Timotheus was, is not certain. He had been consecrated Bishop of Alexandria that same year, after the death of Peter, the successor of S. Athanasius. Tillemont (vol. x. p. 139) suggests that it was probably connected with the question of the succession at Antioch.

The enemy are the Goths under Fritigern. See Gibbon ch. 26.

52

The reading 'pactum' which is suggested by Valerius is here adopted instead of 'factum', which seems to give no satisfactory sense.

53

Fleury remarks on this 'This letter plainly shews that the Bishops who were there present (i. e. at the Council of Aquileia) either did not acknowledge the Council which had been lately held at Constantinople to be an Œcumenical Council, or that they were not yet informed of what had been transacted in it.

54

In the regard of the question between Nectarius and Maximus, the Western Bishops had been deceived by the latter. Maximus, called the Cynic because he retained the outward garb of a Cynic philosopher after he professed to have become a Christian, was irregularly consecrated at Constantinople, but was never recognised, and was formally pronounced by the Council not to be a true Bishop. He then went about trying to stir up other Churches in his favour. See Prof. Bright's Hist. of the Church, pp. 160–166.

Nectarius was elected after the resignation of Gregory Nazianzen, during the Council of Constantinople. He, like S. Ambrose, was unbaptized and held a high civil office at the time of his election.

This is translated from an ingenious and probable conjecture of Valesius.

56

The text through this long sentence is confused and ungrammatical, but it conveys the general sense expressed in the translation with tolerable clearness.

57

i. e. Gratian.

58

The sense is here to be elicited probably by repeating the word 'quod,' so that the sentence should run, 'dogma nescio quod, quod Apollinaris asseritur.'

59

There seems to be something corrupt in the text. Perhaps we should read 'moventur,' 'the dangerous parts of Illyricum are in commotion;' or 'suspecta' has taken the place of some word, such as 'superiora,' which would stand in antithesis to 'maritima.'

60

It may complete the subject of this series of letters to remind the reader that about the same time that the Council of the Italian Bishops was held, Theodosius convened a second Council at Constantinople to deal with the questions raised by the Westerns, where most of the Bishops who had formed the previous General Council re-assembled. They replied to the invitation to another General Council at Rome by a Synodical letter, which is given at full length by Theodoret (Eccles. Hist. v. 9.). In it they excuse themselves from attending, on the ground of their presence being required in their own Dioceses, especially after the long exile of many of them, and the prevalence of Arian usurpation, wishing that they 'had the wings of a dove,' to fly to their Western brethren. They then give a summary of the doctrinal decisions of the two Councils, and announce that they have sent three Bishops as deputies to explain all things more fully to them, and, with reference to the disputed successions at Constantinople and Antioch, give their assurance to their brethren that both Nectarius and Flavian were canonically elected, and the elections ratified both by the clergy and the faithful of each diocese, and by the Council, reminding them of the ancient Canon re-affirmed at Nicæa that each province should settle all such questions for themselves.

Acholius, or Ascholius, as he is called by Socrates, was the Bishop who baptised Theodosius, during an illness which seized him on a campaign against the Goths. He was present at the Council of Constantinople, and afterwards at that of Rome, not as one of the deputies from the East, but probably because his see had been so recently transferred to the Eastern Empire, that he might seem to belong to both East and West. (Tillemont Ambr. ch. xxxi.) It was there that he met S. Ambrose, who had gone to Rome to attend the Council, and had fallen ill. His death must have occurred in A.D. 383, for his successor Anysius was Bishop before the death of Damasus, Bishop of Rome, who died in A.D. 384. Theodoret therefore (B. v. ch. 18.) must be wrong in making him the Bishop who wrote to S. Ambrose an account of the massacre at Thessalonica, which occurred in A.D. 390. But the passage of Theodoret occurs in only one MS., and is perhaps not genuine.

62

The Goths had been settled within the boundaries of the Empire by Valens in A.D. 376, when they implored his protection against the Huns. He established them in Moesia, where they soon revolted, and ravaged Thrace, uniting with their former enemies, the Huns, and other barbarians. Valens was defeated and slain by them in A.D. 378, and then they overran all the neighbouring provinces. There is a graphic account in Gibbon, ch. xxvi.

63

The Benedictine text here reads 'claudebatur.' Several MSS., as the editors mention in a note, have 'claudebat.' They themselves suggest 'claudicabat.' But 'claudebat' really gives the same meaning, and there seems little doubt that it is the true reading. It comes from claudeo or claudo, (for both forms are to be found,) meaning 'to be lame,' 'to halt.' It occurs three times in Cicero.

64

‘fisco vel arcæ.’ The ‘fiscus,’ or imperial treasury, received whatever was assigned to the Emperor individually, as distinguished from the ‘aerarium,’ which received what belonged to the senate, as representing the old republica: ‘arca’ is sometimes used in late writers as equivalent to ‘fiscus,’ sometimes, when distinguished from it, as here, it signifies the city funds, which were distinct from both.

65

Julian’s edict, forbidding the Christians to teach in the schools of grammar and rhetoric, is mentioned with disapproval by Gibbon ch. xxiii.

66

i. e. his half brother Gratian.

67

i. e. Maximus.

68

Valentinian the 1st.

69

This is sometimes represented as an exaggerated piece of rhetoric on S. Ambrose’s part, not to be regarded as representing a real truth: but it may very well do so, for Valentinian was almost constantly occupied with wars on the frontiers of the empire, and it does not appear from his life that he was ever at Rome during his reign. Milan, not Rome, was the chief seat of the Western Emperors at this time, when they were not with their armies.

70

The Præfectus Urbi at this time ‘was regarded as the direct representative of the Emperor,’ and, among other duties, ‘he had every month to make a report to the Emperor of the transactions of the Senate,’ and also was ‘the medium through which the Emperors received the petitions and presents from their capital.’ Dict. of Ant. sub voc.

71

By the ‘late emperor’ is meant Julian; ‘his successor’ is Valentinian the 1st, and ‘last Emperors’ are Valentinian the 1st and Valens.

72

There is a play here on the words ‘nomen’ and ‘numen.’

73

Symmachus is thinking of Virgil’s invocation,

Di patrii, Indigetes, et Romule, Vestaque Mater, &c.

Georg. i. 498.

The Di patrii are explained as being those brought by Æneas into Italy, Indigetes those native to the soil of Italy.

74

In strict law a slave’s peculium was the property of his owner, but custom had allowed it to be regarded his own property.

75

Another trace of Virgil:

Cum jam glandes atque arbuta sacræ
Deficerent silvæ et victum Dodona negaret.

Georg. i. 158.

Valentinian the 1st, as Symmachus mentions above, had tolerated the heathen rites, and this he here represents as having availed to win the special favour of the gods.

77

This an official title of honour. There were three ranks among those who held office under the Emperors, 1 Illustres, 2 Spectabiles, 3 Clarissimi, which is the one here applied to Symmachus. The latter was applied to all senators: the other two were reserved for the higher offices of state. See Gibbon, ch. xvii.

78

He is referring apparently to Galba, Otho, and Vitellius, but somewhat exaggerates the brevity of their reigns. Galba reigned nearly seven months, Otho three months, Vitellius nearly eight months.

79

The captive Emperor is Valerian, who, A.D. 260, was taken prisoner by Sapor king of Persia, and treated with the utmost indignity. The other is his son Gallienus, and S. Ambrose's expression with regard to him may be explained by a sentence of Gibbon, (ch. xi. init.) 'Under the deplorable reigns of Valerian and Gallienus, the empire was oppressed and almost destroyed by the soldiers, the tyrants, and the barbarians.'

80

S. Ambrose refers here to a law of Valentinian's, forbidding the Clergy from receiving bequests from widows and unmarried females. It was addressed to Damasus, Bishop of Rome. S. Ambrose's caution in de Off. Min. 1, 20, 87, shews that control was needed. S. Jerome, speaking of this law says, 'I do not complain of the law, but grieve that we have deserved it.'

81

In the provincial towns the political power in the times of the Emperors had passed into the hands of the curia or provincial Senate; and, with the power, many burdensome and extensive duties, were laid upon the curiales or decurions, as they were called. (See § 15.) Exemption from these had been granted first by Constantine; afterwards, as it was found that persons sought Holy Orders in order to evade civil duties, the privilege was restrained: and various changes were introduced by different Emperors. A full outline of the various laws is given in a learned note in Newman's Fleury, vol. i. p. 162. where the text is speaking of S. Ambrose's Letter to Theodosius, (infr. Lett. xl.) where he again complains of the same hardship. The subject is also more fully dealt with by Bingham Antiq. B. V. ch. iii. § 14–16.

82

'Conferte' is here adopted as a manifest emendation of 'conferet.' The transfer of two letters is a common mistake of copyists.

83

This was the case in Julian's reign, as may be seen in Theod. iii. 12.

84

The reading of all the other Edd. 'sacri nemoris' for 'agri nemorum' is here adopted, as yielding a clearer sense.

85

Pannonia was at this time divided into three provinces, viz. Pannonia Prima and Secunda, and Valeria Ripensis.

86

Rhaetia Secunda was the name given to Vindelicia when separated again from Rhaetia proper, shortly before the time of Constantine: it had been united to it about the end of the first century.

87

The Reading 'nuda gignentium' is adopted from Ed. Rom. The phrase occurs in Sallust Jug. 79, 6. 'Gignentia' is used for plants, trees &c. The clause 'quae nos' &c. is strange, but probably refers to the torpidity of winter, which is felt by man as well as by the lower creation.

88

This passage seems suggested by reminiscences of Virgil, the phrase 'absconditam pretio humum' possibly from Aen. iv, 211. urbem Exiguam pretio posuit, while in the latter part S. Ambrose perhaps had in his mind the description of Evander's town in Aen. viii. See especially ll. 347–366.

89

The story of Cybele being brought to Rome, and landing outside the city, where the little stream of the Almo joins the Tiber, is told at length by Ovid, Fast. iv. 250–348. In commemoration of the washing of the Statue and sacred implements at the landing, an annual ceremony was maintained, which seems to have been popular, from the numerous allusions to it in later writers. See Lucan 1. 600, Martial iii. 47. 2, Stat. Silv. v. 1. 222, Sil. Ital. viii. 365, all quoted in Dict. of Geogr. When the rites were performed away from Rome, the nearest river was conventionally made the Almo for the time. It is remarkable that Ammianus Marcellinus xxiii, 3, 7. mentions as one of the Emperor Julian's lasts acts, his keeping the day of this rite, when on his last campaign against the Persians, and performing all the ceremonies at Callinicum or Nicephorium on the Euphrates.

90

Venus Cælestis is a Latin equivalent of Ἀφροδίτη οὐρανία, and this name was transferred, according to Herodotus (Bk. i. ch. 105.) to the Phœnician goddess Astarte, or Ashtaroth. The same author also (B. i. ch. 131.) identifies Aphrodite with the Persian goddess Mitra, which however is shewn by Prof. Rawlinson, ad loc., to be an error, as Mithras is the sun-god of the Persians. The Temple of Venus Cælestis, or Astarte, at Carthage was very shortly after this time converted into a Christian Church, as recorded by Gibbon on the authority of Prosper Aquitan. (ch. xxviii).

91

S. Ambrose's repeated assertions, that the Christians formed a majority in the Senate, are characterised by writers unfavourable to Christianity as unfounded, but they produce no proof. Gibbon (ch. xxviii. note 12.) simply says that it is an assertion 'in contradiction to common sense.' But as a large majority of the Senate voted for the abolition of the worship of Jupiter about the same time, as Gibbon himself records, common sense would seem rather to agree with S. Ambrose.

92

Referring to the unhappy end of Gratian who in the previous year (A.D. 383.) had been overpowered by Maximus, who revolted in Britain, and attacked him in Gaul. His troops deserted him and he was put to death by Maximus' orders.

93

Pompeius was murdered, as he landed in Egypt, after escaping from Pharsalia, by Achillas an Eunuch and one of the guardians of king Ptolemy.

94

Tomyris queen of the Massagetæ. See the story in Herod. i. 214.

95

This is the first of the famous Hamilcars, the one who led the great invasion of Sicily in B.C. 480, and was totally defeated by Gelon. Herodotus, B. vii. ch. 167, tells the story to which S. Ambrose alludes as the account given by the Carthaginians of his end.

96

S. Ambrose is alluding to the famous story of Julian burning his fleet, after crossing the Tigris to attack Sapor, king of Persia, in his dominions. This was regarded afterwards by the Christians as an act of judicial blindness. See Augustine de Civ. Dei iv. 29, v. 21. Ammianus, xxiv. 7. asserts that he repented of the order as soon as it was issued, but was too late to stop the flames. Gibbon endeavours to justify the act, and says, 'had he been victorious we should now admire his conduct.' See his narrative in ch. xxiv. The author of his life in the Dict. of Ant. styles it 'the best thing he could have done, if his march into the interior of Persia, had been dictated by absolute necessity.' Setting these hypotheses aside, and looking only at the actual result, we may fairly think that the Christian interpretation of the facts, even if over-strongly expressed, is the truer.

97

He here refers to Josephus Antiq. v. ch. iv.

98

The name given in the Hebrew is Ramath Lehi, which means, 'the hill or lifting up of the jaw-bone.' S. Ambrose interprets it below 'maxillae interfectionem.' He would seem to be here suggesting a Greek etymology. The Benedictine note suggests that the name Agon is a confusion on his part from the word σιαγὼν in Josephus.

99

The words 'quasi in cubitum intexti' are probably from the Old Latin Version of the Bible. Field, on Origen's Hexapla in loc. (Judg. xvi. 13.) mentions that some MSS of LXX read ἐὰν ὑφάνης ὡςει πῆχυν or ὡς ἐπὶ πῆχυν, which may very well have been translated by some such words as the above, in the Old Latin Version which S. Ambrose used.

100

The expression 'principes virtutum' seems to be a phrase from the Old Testament. In the Vulgate we find 'rex virtutum' Ps. lxvii, (lxviii. E.V.) 13, where the E.V. has 'kings of armies,' and in Judith xiv. 17 (19 E.V.) 'Quod quum audissent principes virtutis Assyriorum,' and in 1 Macc. v. 56. 'Azarias princeps virtutis.' The 'comites consistoriani' formed a sort of cabinet (consistorium) or privy council to the Emperor. The Benedictine Editors take 'principes virtutum' as meaning the Magistri militum, but the absence of any conjunction is against this.

101

This must mean the Præfectus prætorio Italiæ, one of the four great Viceroys, under whom the Dioceses of the Empire were placed. He was supreme over all Italy, and the countries north of it to the Danube, and the western part of the north of Africa. He had under him three Dioceses, containing thirty Provinces.

102

The title given them is ‘Decani.’ They seem to have been something like the lictors of the great officers of state under the republic.

103

These ‘vela’ or hangings were a token that the building was claimed for the ‘fiscus,’ or private property of the Emperor. Gibbon in his grand way says, ‘the splendid canopy and hangings of the royal seat were arranged in the customary manner,’ but, as is noticed by the writer of the Life of S. Ambrose in Dict. of Christian Biog. it is clear from the sequel of the narrative (see § 20) that they were outside, not inside the Church.

104

The words in the original are ‘missam facere.’ Prof. Bright in his History notes that this is ‘the earliest instance, apparently, of this term being used for the Eucharistic service.’

105

‘The introduction of barbarians into the Roman armies became every day more universal, more necessary, and more fatal. The most daring of the Scythians, of the Goths, and of the Germans, were enrolled not only in the auxiliaries of their respective nations, but in the legions themselves, and among the most distinguished of the Palatine troops.’ (Gibbon, ch. xvii.) The Goths were Arians. It was much about this time that Ulfilas, the apostle of the Goths, made his famous translation of the Bible into Gothic. See Bright’s Hist. of the Church p. 157.

106

107

On the high rank and great influence of the Præpositus cubiculi, or Grand Chamberlain, see Gibbon ch. xvii. They ranked with the Præfecti prætorio and other highest officers of state as Illustres. See note on Lett. xvii. § 1.

108

A reply of Valentinian the 1st to some Bishops of the Hellespont and Bithynia, who demanded permission to meet ‘to amend the doctrine of the faith,’ is given by Sozomen. (vi. 7.) His words are, ‘It is not lawful for me, as a layman, to busy myself about such matters as these: let the Bishops, whose business it is, meet by themselves wherever they will.’ To the same effect are the words of his which Theodoret reports, (iv. 6.) when bidding the Bishops of the province elect a successor to Auxentius. He bids them choose a fit person, ‘that we also, who rule the empire, may sincerely bow our heads to him, and welcome his reproofs, (for, being men, we cannot but stumble,) as a remedial discipline.’ What law is referred to is uncertain. The Benedictine Editors, after mentioning some which had been suggested ‘think it more probable that the law referred to is not extant.’

109

Gibbon (ch. xxv.) in his character of Valentinian says, ‘In the time of Julian he provoked the danger of disgrace by the contempt which he publicly expressed for the reigning religion.’ The story is told by Theod. Eccles. Hist. iii. 16. Valentinian was in official attendance on the Emperor Julian on one occasion when he went to the temple of Fortune to perform rites. ‘On either side of the door were stationed attendants, who sprinkled all who came in with lustral water to purify them, as they believed. When some of the drops fell on his cloak, Valentinian struck the attendants with his fist, saying that he was defiled not purified by them.’ For this he was dismissed from the court, and sent to a solitary garrison. The same story is told with slight variations by Sozomen. Hist. vi. 6.

110

He is alluding to his own election.

111

This is true of the first decision of the Council, but as S. Ambrose says, ‘it ended badly,’ for the Bishops were inveigled into accepting a less orthodox formula. See Prof. Bright’s Hist. p. 94, 98.

112

S. Ambrose here delicately alludes to the service he had rendered to Valentinian in going on his behalf to the court of the usurper Maximus after the death of Gratian, which is referred to in Letter xxiv.

113

‘This was not so great an inconvenience to them as might appear at first sight, for the early Basilicas were not unlike the heathen temples, or our own collegiate chapels, that is, part of a range of buildings, which contained the lodgings of the ecclesiastics, and formed a fortress in themselves, which could easily be blockaded either from within or without.’ Newman. Ch. of the Fathers. p. 22.

114

The words ‘custodiam’ and ‘amisit,’ are repeated by S. Ambrose from the former part of the sentence. ‘Amisit’ as applied here recalls the Psalmist’s expression, ‘Hath God forgotten to be gracious?’ Ps. lxxvii. 9.

115

This refers to a story thus recounted in Paulinus’ Life of S. Ambrose ch. 12, ‘Among many who tried to force S. Ambrose into exile, but through God’s protection failed of their purpose, one Euthymius more hapless than the rest, was stirred to such a pitch of frenzy that he hired a house close to the Church, and there kept a carriage, that he might the more readily carry off Ambrose into exile, by seizing him and putting him in the carriage. But his wickedness fell upon his own pate, (Ps. vii. 7.) for that very day year, he was himself put into the carriage and from the same house was carried into exile, confessing that it was by the just judgment of God that his wickedness had recoiled on himself, and he was carried into exile in the very chariot which he had prepared for the Bishop. And the Bishop did much to comfort him, by giving him money, and other necessaries.’

116

The word is ‘curiales.’ See Footnote 81 on Lett. xviii. To the authorities there referred to add Bingh. Antiq. iv, 4, 4, where Gothofred’s enumeration of their duties is given in full in the notes.

117

i. e. by causing them to commit sacrilege.

119

There is a play here on the word ‘aerarios,’ as connected with ‘aerarium’ the treasury. The aerarii were the lowest class of people at Rome, and so S. Ambrose calls the ‘pauperes Christi’ his aerarii, while at the same time they are the treasures of the Church.

120

S. Augustine mentions in his Confessions (ix. 7.) S. Ambrose's introduction both of Hymns and chanting during this period of trial. 'Then was it first instituted that, after the manner of the Eastern Churches, Hymns and Psalms should be sung, lest the people should wax faint through the tediousness of sorrow; and from that day to this the custom is retained, divers, yea, almost all Thy Congregations throughout other parts of the world following herein.' Oxf. Transl. He speaks in the same passage of the behaviour of the people: 'The devout people kept watch in the Church, ready to die with their Bishop Thy servant.' He also dwells on the effect produced on himself, these events happening shortly before his conversion. 'How did I weep in Thy Hymns and Canticles, touched to the quick by the voice of Thy sweet-attuned Church! The voices flowed into mine ears, and the Truth distilled into mine heart, whence the affections of my devotion overflowed, and tears ran down, and happy was I therein.' Ib. ix. 6. It is quite possible that some of the twelve Hymns, acknowledged by the Benedictine Editors as genuine, were then first sung. Among them are the well-known 'Aeterna Christi munera,' 'Aeterne rerum Conditor,' 'Deus Creator omnium,' and others, whose strains are now familiar in English versions.

121

This is said to be the Church now called 'S. Ambrose the greater.' The Roman Church is the one called in the previous letter the 'New Basilica,' and also the Church of the Apostles. It was probably called 'Romana' from being near the Porta Romana.

122

S. Augustine says that it was revealed to him in a dream.

123

These were ἐνεργούμενοι, or persons possessed by evil spirits. On them see Bingh. Antiq. iii. 4, 6. The laying on of hands was part of the rite of exorcism.

124

The text stands 'arriperetur urna,' nor is there any variation of MSS. noted. But it seems absolutely necessary to read 'una.' An 'urna' could have nothing to do with the matter. It might hold ashes, but surely not the bones of two men of marvellous size. The histories founded on the letter all tacitly adopt the emendation, and speak of 'a woman among the possessed.' See Fleury. B. xviii. 46. Tillemont in Vit.

125

now of S. Vitalis and S. Agricola Fleury p. 104. Eng. Tr.

126

This is distinctly asserted by S. Augustine in all the three passages referred to in the Introduction.

127

The word is ‘Enneacaidecateris.’ Mr. Hensley remarks in his article on Easter, ‘It has been often stated that the Council established a particular cycle, that of nineteen years, but this is a mistake.’

128

‘Nam incipit esse contrarium.’ According to Ducange ‘incipio’ is used in late Latin in the sense of the Greek verb μέλλω, and here, as it would seem, with the force with which that verb is so often used as equivalent to ‘it is likely’ or ‘it is sure’ that such and such is the case: see Lidd. and Scott. μέλλω, ii. 3, 4.

129

An allusion to Virg. Georg., 1, 276.

130

Days immediately following the Kalends, Nones or Ides, considered unlucky by the Romans. See A. Gellius, v. 17. What the ‘Egyptian days’ were is not ascertained.

131

This is the ordinary phrase for the day of the lunar month. See Bright Early Engl. Ch. Hist. p. 195.

132

S. Ambrose’s Latin is ‘mensis novorum.’ The LXX has ἐν μηνὶ τῶν νέων. The Vulgate ‘in mense novarum frugum.’

133

134

The Era of Diocletian was the prevalent one at this time, and till the general adoption of the Christian Era, which did not become established until the 8th Century. See Mr. Hensley's article 'Era' in Dict. of Christ. Antiq. He gives there the rule for reducing the Era of Diocletian, the epoch of which is Aug. 29th A.D. 284, to the Christian Era, viz. to add 283 years and 240 days to the given date of Diocletian's Era. According to this the Easter of the 89th year of Diocletian would be A.D. 373, and that of the 93rd would be A.D. 377. The 'times lately past' would probably refer to A.D. 383, when, as may be seen by the Table, the 'fourteenth moon' fell on a Sunday.

135

There is a slight error here. The interval is 32 days, not 31.

136

There is some uncertainty about the reading here. The original reading in the text was 'biennium,' and, as this clearly did not agree with the facts the Benedictine Editors adopted a suggestion that 'biennium' was a mistaken rendering of a MS. which had 'vi-ennium.' But the period of 6 years would not be precise, as the year referred to must be A.D. 379, (see table,) which would be seven years before.

137

The precise words are not found in either of these passages.

138

in haste E.T.

139 against all the gods of Egypt E.T.

140

This would seem to be not quite correct. Mr. Hensley remarks that in A.D. 360. Easter day was on April 23rd but that the 'fourteenth moon' of that year was a Monday and not on a Sunday. The question is discussed in Ideler Chronol. vol. II. p. 254–257.

141

i. e. as Bishop.

142

The Juthungi were a German tribe settled on the north bank of the Danube, in what is now Austria Proper and Moravia. It is uncertain whether they were, as Ammianus Marcellinus describes them, a sept of the Alemanni, or whether they were Goths. It has been suggested that the name is only another form of Gothi or Gothones, (Dict. of Antiq.) The want of a detailed and accurate history of these times, which are just beyond the range of Ammianus, makes it difficult to make out clearly the allusions which S. Ambrose here makes. Tillemont explains them thus, 'Bauton seeing the Juthungan Alemanni ravaging Rhaetia, while the Roman soldiers were engaged in guarding the passes of the Alps against Maximus, summoned the Huns and Alans to make war on them. These tribes accordingly pillaged the territories of the Alemanni up to the frontiers of Gaul. But on Maximus complaining that they had been brought against him, Valentinian, to deprive him of any pretext for breaking off the peace, induced them to retire in the midst of their victories by presents of money.' He also considers that the reason why the Juthungi came to pillage Rhaetia that year was the extraordinary fertility, and that it is this invasion to which allusion is made in Letter xxiv, 21, where S. Ambrose says that Rhaetia Secunda 'drew down an enemy on herself by her abundance.'

143

144

He seems to mean that pity for the dead should move him to less harsh treatment. But perhaps the word 'tuam' may have dropped out, and we should read 'tu tuam causam considera,' 'do you consider your own case.'

145

It seems necessary here to read 'allegabis' for 'allegabas,' as the past tense would be unmeaning.

146

Cabillonum is the ancient name of Châlons-sur-Saône.

147

He refers to the Bishops Idacius and Ithacius, who had induced Maximus to put Priscillian and others of his party to death, in spite of the remonstrances of S. Martin, who urged Maximus to be content with their having been condemned by ecclesiastical sentence. Priscillian ‘had adopted a strange compound of various errors,’ (Prof. Bright Hist. p. 160.) chiefly Manichean. There is a full account of Maximus’ dealings with them in Fleury, xviii. 29, 30. Newman’s Transl. vol. 1, p. 66–69. S. Ambrose in Letter xxvi. condemns the conduct of these Bishops, and the appeal to the civil sword in Ecclesiastical cases, in still stronger terms.

148

The Benedictine Editors consider him to be referring to the Novatians.

149

S. Ambrose’s Latin is ‘scribe hoc viros abdicatos.’ The Vulg. has ‘scribe virum istum sterilem.’ The LXX. γράψον τὸν ἄνδρα τοῦτον ἐκκήρυκτον.

150

151

Fleury remarks on this, ‘We must remember that the canonical penances inflicted for great crimes were at that time so very severe, that they were equal to a rigorous punishment.’

152

See Footnote 147 on Letter xxiv.

153

S. Ambrose makes the same statement again, De Spirit. iii. 17. ‘It is important then to notice where the Lord maintained this argument, for oft-times His oracles derive their value from the quality of the place where He was.’

154

155

These words are not in the Heb. In LXX they take the place of the half-homer of barley, γομὸρ κριθῶν καὶ νέβελ οἴνου. S. Ambrose combines both.

156

It was said just afterwards, if the story of the woman taken in adultery be in its right place, which is doubtful.

157

Leah means ‘wearied,’ and the name is supposed to refer to her ‘tenderness’ or weakness of eyes. (Gen. xxix. 16). S. Ambrose gives a mistaken meaning to the name Rachel, which really means ‘ewe.’

158

S. Ambrose often gives this exposition of the name ‘Shechem.’

159

Isaac means ‘laughter.’ Gen. xxi. 6.

160

He is here referring to Virg. Ecl. 5, 77. Dumque thymo pascuntur apes, dum rore cicadae.

161

Here again he is thinking of Virg. Georg. 3, 328. Et cantu querulae rumpent arbusta cicadae.

162

Here again S. Ambrose is thinking of Virg. Georg. 2, 154. Squameus in spiram tractu se colligit anguis.

163

Perhaps quoted from memory from S. John iv. 26.

164

‘Veri vana.’ This is simply one of the Virgilian expressions of which S. Ambrose is so full. It is taken from Aen. x. 630, Nunc manet insontem gravis exitus, aut ego veri Vana feror.

165

The Engl. Vers. is ‘Prepare war, wake up the mighty men.’ The Vulg. ‘Sanctificate bellum, suscitate robustos.’

166

This refers to Ps. xix. 5. where the sun, that rejoiceth as a giant to run his course, is usually interpreted by the Fathers of the Messiah. It was a very favourite thought with S. Ambrose. In his Hymn ‘De Adventu Domini’ he adapts the language of the Psalm to it in words of beautiful simplicity,

Procedit e thalamo suo,

Pudoris aulâ regiâ

Geminæ Gigas substantiæ

Alacris ut currat viam.

Egressus Ejus a Patre,

Regressus Ejus ad Patrem,

Excursus usque ad Inferos,

Recursus ad sedem Dei.

In the De Incarn. ch. v. he gives a fuller explanation. ‘Him the Prophet Daniel describes as a Giant, because being of a twofold nature, He partaketh in one Person both of the Godhead and of a human Body, and exulted in going forth as a Bridegroom from His chamber, like a Giant, to run His course. He is Bridegroom of the soul as being the Word, He is a Giant of earth because He fulfilled all the duties of our daily life, and, though He was ever the eternal God, took upon Him the Mystery of the Incarnation.’

167

The English Version has ‘The partridge sitteth on eggs and hatcheth them not.’ S. Ambrose is referring to § 11 of the preceding Letter, where he applies the text to Satan. He makes the same application of it in Letter xlvi. 14.

176

Horontianus appears to have been, like Irenæus, a pupil of S. Ambrose, and to have been ordained by him, and to have been, as the Benedictine Editors say, ‘In clericorum contubernio educatus ab infantia.’ Nothing more is known of him. See Letter lxx. 25.

The difference in the original is only the punctuation; in the first case, ‘Nam quod videt quis quid, et sperat:’ in the second, ‘Nam quod videt quis, quid et sperat?’

183

S. Ambrose is evidently referring to his mission to Maximus, and the persecution of Justina.

184

There is another reading of several MSS., ‘et ille profecto gemitus,’ which seems to offer a better sense, ‘and that groaning is indeed truly unutterable, etc.’

185

The Vulgate has, ‘Trahitur autem sapientia de occultis.’ The E.V. is, ‘The price of wisdom is above rubies.’

187

This is referred by the Benedictine Editors to Prov. xxii. 7. but it does not agree with either the Sept. or Vulgate.

188 τοῦ πνεύματος is inserted in a few MSS, and Spiritus is in the Vulgate.

189

The story of Calanus and Alexander is related in Arian vii. 2. It is also more briefly alluded to by Plutarch. Alex. 65. Neither writer mentions this letter.

194

‘Oriens’ or ‘the East’ was the title of the great civil ‘diocese’ which included Syria, Palestine, Cilicia, Cyprus, Mesopotamia, and some adjacent districts, and corresponded to the Patriarchate of Antioch in the ecclesiastical division. It was originally under one chief called ‘Comes orientis,’ but it would appear from this passage, as is asserted by Gothofred, that the civil and military functions had been divided, and there were now two officers, ‘Comes orientis militarium partium,’ and ‘Comes orientis civilium partium.’ The subject is somewhat obscure.

195

Callinicum was in Osrhoene, a name given to the north-western part of Mesopotamia.

196

Socrates, B. v. ch. 13., mentions that Nectarius' house was burnt by the Arian party in the same year in which this letter was written.

199

The Benedictine editors say 'tota hæc pericope in uno Cod. Reg. desideratur: forte non male.' It is difficult to elicit any sense from it.

200

Siscia, now Sissek, was a large town in upper Pannonia, on the south bank of the Save. Petavio, now Pettau, was on the Drave. It seems likely that 'in Sicilia' should be omitted, as being only a false meaning for 'Sciscia.' There is no mention of Sicily being in any way connected with the war. But see Tillemont, Theod. art. xlv.

201

S. Ambrose is quoting from memory and slightly varies the facts from the narrative in book of Judges.

202

See a learned note in Newman's Fleury vol. 1 p. 162, on the exemption of the Clergy from municipal offices, compare also Letter xviii. 14, and the note there.

204

This refers to the famous sedition at Antioch, when the mob, enraged at the imposition of new taxes, overthrew the Emperor's statues, and dragged them through the city. After a period of suspense, during which S. Chrysostom preached the Homilies on the Statues, Theodosius, who had at first been violently enraged, sent them a free pardon. This was in the previous year.

The Latin title is 'Magister equitum et peditum.' When the Præfecti Prætorio became civil rather than military officers, the chief command of the armies was transferred to two high officers, called, one 'Magister equitum,' and the other 'Magister peditum.' When the empire was divided these became four, and eventually the number was increased to eight, who were all called 'Magistri equitum et peditum.' See Gibbon ch. xvii. 3.

i. e. the 'Comes Orientis,' under whose jurisdiction the matter was, and who had sent the report to the Emperor. See Lett. xl. 6.

212

This sentence as it stands in the text is incomplete, the ‘quia’ having no correlative. The ‘at vero quia’ seems like ‘at enim’ in Classical Latin, or perhaps the ‘quia’ should be omitted.

213

See Letter xix, 7. S. Ambrose in De Abraham B. 1. c. 9, 93 alludes to the use of the veil in Christian marriages.

214

This name appears in the reply of the Milan Synod as Plotinus, which is probably the true form.

215

There are three laws in the code of Theodosius directed against the Manichees, one of the year 372 A.D. which forbade them to hold assemblies, one of 389 A.D. and one of 391 A.D. ordering their banishment. It is probably the second of these that is referred to, though Gothofred refers it to the third, in which case the date of the Letter must be altered.

216

All these names except Geminianus occur in the list of Bishops present at the Council of Aquileia. See p. 60.

This whole passage is full of expressions borrowed from Virgil.

219

This title seems here to be applied especially to the constellations of the Pleiades and Hyades, each of which consisted of seven stars.

221

Devoravit mors praevalens. The E. V. is, ‘He will swallow up death in victory.’ The Vulg. has, ‘Praecipitabit mortem in sempiternum.’

223

The word ‘vitae’ is here inserted as necessary to the sense, and to the accuracy of the quotation.

‘Ecce ego mittam servum meum, Oriens nomen Ejus.’ Vulg. has ‘Ecce ego adducam servum meum Orientem.’ ‘Oriens nomen Ejus’ comes in v. 12. ‘Behold I will bring forth my servant the Branch.’ The same word in the original is used also in Is. iv. 2. Jerem. xxiii. 5. xxiii. 15. and in all those passages the Vulg. renders it by ‘Germen.’ In the passages of Zech. and Jerem. the LXX. have the word ἀνατολή. The word in the original means ‘a sprout’ or ‘shoot.’

231

See Letter xxxii. 1.

232

He is quoting from a letter of Cicero's. Ep. ix. 3. Longi subsellii, ut noster Pompeius appellat, judicatio et mora.

233

He is here quoting from Cicero De off. iii. 1, where Cicero gives as a saying of Scipio Africanus, on the authority of Cato, 'numquam se minus otiosum esse quam quum otiosus, nec minus solum quam quum solus esset.' It is quoted again by S. Ambrose in De off. Min. iii. 1, 107.

234

This is the reading of most MSS, according to the Benedictine Editors. And, though the connection of ideas is somewhat abrupt, they explain it to be, that, as the gift of faith was bestowed on Abraham the Chaldean, so the gift of prophecy was bestowed on Balaam. All the other Editions have 'Balaam' instead of 'Abraham'. This makes the connection easier, but then 'adscitur ad fidem' is strangely applied to him, and it could only mean, 'is employed to utter the truth.' He might be called a Chaldean as the common name among the Romans for Eastern diviners generally.

235

The Magister officiorum was a sort of Chief Secretary of state, both for home and foreign affairs. A summary of his duties may be seen in Gibbon ch. xvii, iv, 2. It was the influence which this post gave him over Theodosius which enabled Rufinus to stir the Emperor's passionateness to the crime of Thessalonica.

236

The adjective Portuensis generally refers to the town called Portus, which grew up in the times of the Emperors on the harbour of Ostia. It is probable therefore that the reference is to some work of which the person spoken of had the superintendence.

237

As Lake Larius was sometimes called Lacus Comacinus in the times of the Emperors, (Dict. of Geogr. voc. Comum.) it is probable that the 'Comacinæ rupes' were some familiar rocks on its margin. The comparison to a bull is simply an adaptation of Virgil's 'Et faciem tauro propior,' Georg. iii. 58.

The word 'bonis' must certainly here be inserted in the text, 'uterque alienae magis ordinationis vitiis quam suis bonis fretus,' as suggested by the Benedictine Editors. It occurs just below in the corresponding sentence, 'suis potius bonis quam alieno vitio defendi.'

239

He is sometimes spoken of as Bishop of Nairsus in Dacia Mediterranea (see Note in p. 67.) but Tillemont (note 43 in Life of S. Ambrose) has made it probable that there were two Bishops of the name of Bonosus, one of Nairsus, and the other of Sardica, the latter of whom is the one dealt with by the Synod of Capua.

240

He is referring to the 'Memorial of Symmachus.' p. 94. The 'two petitions,' libellos duos, are Letters 17 and 18.

241

He means that the reason why he declines all communication with Eugenius, who wished to secure his great political influence on his side, was, that he felt sure that Eugenius, though at present temporising with both parties, would in the end yield to the pressure of the pagan party, and restore the revenues to the heathen temples. 'Extorquendum' is, in accordance with late Latin idiom, a mere future passive.

246

The argument here turns on the Latin words. ‘Avunculus,’ uncle, is a mere diminutive of ‘avus,’ grand-father; and the one word ‘neptis’ is used both for niece and grand-daughter without any distinction.

247

The ‘not’ is inserted according to the suggestion of the Benedictine Editors. There seems a contradiction in terms without it.

248

agnatio.

249

agnatio.

250

251

‘Apices’ here and in § 5 undoubtedly means ‘a letter.’ ‘Apex,’ in late Latin, is used for a single letter written, and ‘apices’ like ‘literae,’ for a continuous writing. Aulus Gellius (xiii. 30, 10. xvii. 9, 12.) quoted in White’s Dictionary, uses the phrase ‘literarum apices,’ and in Cod. Just. ii. 8, 6. we find ‘Augusti apices’ for ‘the Emperor’s rescripts.’

252

Theodoret, v. 24. gives a detailed account of the ways in which the special intervention of heaven was displayed in Theodosius’ campaign against Eugenius. S. Aug. De Civ. Dei, v. 26. says that Theodosius ‘contra robustissimum Eugenii exercitum magis orando quam feriendo pugnavit,’ and, after mentioning stories told by eye-witnesses of the manifest intervention of God on his behalf, quotes the well-known lines of Claudian,

O nimium dilecte Deo cui fundit ab antris

Æolus armatas hyemes, cui militat æther,

Et conjurati veniunt ad classica venti.

253

The word here used is plural, Venetiarum. From this it has been argued that this letter must be of later date than S. Ambrose's time, as Venetiæ is the usual name for the city, which was not founded till the time of Attila. (Gibbon ch. xxxv. vol. iv. p. 242 ed. Smith.) But he certainly uses the plural form in Letter xviii. 21, which is undoubtedly his, and therefore, as Tillemont has pointed out, no argument can be founded on this against the present letter. It is possible that under the plural form he intends to include Venetia and Histria, which are reckoned together as one consular province in the civil division of the empire, (see Marquardt's Table, in Smith's Gibbon vol. ii. p. 315.) and also as one ecclesiastical province in the Exarchate of Milan, (see Bingham ix. 1, 6.) By 'finitimis Italiæ partibus' he probably means Flaminia and Picenum Annonarium, which were also included in the 'Diocese' of Italy and Exarchate of Milan.

254

255

It is to be noted that Eusebius, who died in A.D. 371, was not the last Bishop of Vercellæ, but Limenius, whose name occurs among the Bishops who took part in the Council of Aquileia. This has also been made an argument against S. Ambrose's authorship, but there does not seem much weight in it. Eusebius was much the more famous man of the two, and his teaching and example and the memory of his labours and martyrdom are naturally appealed to by S. Ambrose.

256

These were, it appears, followers of Jovinian. See above, Introd. to Letter of Siricius, p. 280.

Nothing is known of this man, nor is even the name certain, as there are many various readings. The Benedictines suggest that it may mean Philodemus, who is mentioned by Diog. Laert. x. 3. as a follower of Epicurus, and is also spoken of by Cicero, De fin. 11, 35. and by Horace, Sat. 1, 2, 21.

Nothing is known of Demarchus, whom S. Ambrose here quotes. The Benedictines suggest that it may be a mistake for Hermarchus, who was Epicurus' successor as head of his school, and who wrote books in defence of the Epicurean philosophy. He is mentioned several times by Cicero.

Though the so-called Epicureans of later days perverted his theory to what is generally known as Epicureanism, Epicurus himself certainly did not mean by pleasure sensual pleasure. 'Pleasure was not with him a momentary and transitory sensation, but he conceived it as something lasting and imperishable, consisting in pure and noble mental enjoyments.' 'He was a man of pure simple and temperate habits.' Dict. of Biog. in voc. Vol. ii. p. 34, 35.

263

This must be the sense if we retain the interrogation. If it is omitted the passage would mean, 'Men then are recalled from that, in which' &c., i. e., it is plainly unfitting for men to do that, in which &c.

264

S. Ambrose is alluding apparently to Ezra proclaiming and keeping a fast to remove God's anger against his people. Should we not read 'memoriae' for 'memoriâ?' Ezra did restore the Scriptures to the memory of the people, but it does not appear that he restored them from memory?

The reading here varies. Ben. has 'in Concilio Nicaeni tractatus,' which may mean 'the Council which made the Nicene Creed,' (for the phrase 'Nicaenus tractatus' as applied to the Creed see note 1 on Acts of Council of Aquileia.) Another reading is 'in Concilii Nicaeni tractatu,' and another 'in Concilio Nicaeno tractatus.'

There is a difficulty about S. Ambrose's statement, as there is nothing on the subject in the Canons of Nicaea. The Benedictine editors, after discussing other explanations, suggest that S. Ambrose may have had an inaccurate copy of the Canons, with the one he here quotes inserted from some other Council. Some unauthentic documents professing to give Nicene regulations on the subject are quoted in Dict. of Christian Antiq. Art. Digamy.

Eusebius and Dionysius Bishop of Milan were driven into exile by the Emperor Valens, because they refused at the third Council of Milan, A.D. 355, to subscribe the condemnation of Athanasius. There is a brief but graphic account of the circumstances in Bright's History of the Church, pages 70–73.

The expression 'aula regalis,' applied to the Mother of our Lord, may be illustrated from De Instit. Virg. ch. xii. § 79. Ipse ergo Rex Israel transivit hanc portam, ipse Dux sedit in ea, quando Verbum caro factum est et habitavit in nobis, quasi Rex sedens in aula regali uteri virginalis. Compare also the expression in S. Ambrose's Hymn on the Nativity, Procedit e thalamo suo, Pudoris aula regia, &c.

With this Letter begins what the Benedictines have called a second division of the Letters, containing those which furnish no internal evidence of their date sufficient to justify their being assigned a place in chronological order. They are arranged according to their matter, 1st, those which contain expositions of passages of Holy Scripture, (lxi–lxxv.), 2nd, those which discuss as important, and mostly doctrinal subjects, (lxxvi–lxxxiii.), 3rd, a few brief letters of ordinary friendly intercourse, (lxxxiv–xci.)

279

Whether the true reading here be 'traditio' as Ben. has, or 'editio' as Rom., the reference must be to the ἐκδόσεις or versions which Origen brought together in his Hexapla, of which the fifth, the sixth, and the seventh, (for there was a seventh,) were only known by their numbers. Why this letter, which plainly declares itself in the first section to be a sequel of the previous one, is addressed to a different name, it is difficult to say. There is a similar difficulty about Letter xxvi, and possibly the same solution may apply here as is suggested by the Ben. Edd. there. See Introd. to Lett. xxvi.

292

The phrase ‘cernere hereditatem’ is a well-known law-term, meaning literally ‘to decide to accept an inheritance,’ and then ‘to enter upon it.’ But as this sense will not agree with the context, it seems necessary to take ‘cernere,’ as the Benedictine note does, in its common sense of ‘to see.’

293

The words ἁρμονίᾳ τοῦ Λόγου δεδεμένον seem to be a gloss on S. Paul’s compound συναρμολογούμενον. They are not part of his text, though S. Ambrose seems here to be quoting them as if they were.

CHARACTER, AUTHORSHIP, AND DATE OF THE TREATISE "ON THE SACRAMENTS"

THE TREATISE ON the Sacraments consists of six sermons delivered to the newly-baptized in Easter week. They deal with Baptism, Confirmation, the Eucharist, the Lord's Prayer, and Prayer. The work is nearly related to de Mysteriis, which it closely follows, embodying and expanding most of its contents. Its description of the rites of baptism is at times more exact than that of de Mysteriis, and it quotes several of the actual formularies employed, where they are either merely referred to, or passed over, in the earlier work. The author supplements the account of the "feet-washing" contained in his source by a statement that it is not practised at Rome, and while expressing his desire to follow in all respects the pattern of the Roman Church, he vindicates in this respect the custom of his own Church (iii. 1. 5-6). On the Eucharist he gives much fuller information than Ambrose. Not only does he refer to the prayers preceding the Canon (iv. 4. 14), but he quotes a considerable portion of the Canon itself, as well as the doxology at the close of the Lord's Prayer (iv. 5. 21-23; iv. 6. 26-27; vi. 5. 24). The exposition of the Lord's Prayer in Book V. is not found in de Mysteriis, nor is the description of the parts of prayer (vi. 5. 22 f.), which is modelled on Ambrose, de Inst. Virg. ii. 8-10. With these exceptions the treatise for the most part reproduces the contents of de Myst. But though the author has made free use of the materials of the earlier work, his style is different from that of Ambrose. He frequently introduces his point by a short question, a rhetorical device very sparingly used by Ambrose. He nowhere rises to the spiritual fervour exhibited by Ambrose in de Myst. vi.

29 (with its personal address to our Lord). Moreover, he shows occasionally his independence of the earlier work, rearranging its material, omitting or expanding particular points, and sometimes developing the ideas suggested by a passage of Scripture quoted in his source (cp. e.g. the application of Eccl. ii. 14 in de Myst. vi. 30 and de Sacram. iii. 1. 1). In the treatment of the doctrinal significance of the "feet-washing" he silently corrects the conclusions of Ambrose (de Myst. vi. 32; de Sacram. iii. 1. 7). In his eucharistic teaching he follows Ambrose in his assertion of the operative power of the word of Christ in changing the elements into the body and blood of Christ. But he goes further than Ambrose in his recoil from the materialistic conclusions that might be drawn from this doctrine, and in so doing he falls back on the earlier language which speaks of receiving "the likeness of the death" and "drinking the likeness of the blood," and comes very near to conceiving of the presence of Christ in the Eucharist as a presence of grace and power only (iv. 4. 20; vi. 1. 3. See further, p. xxxvii below). In the passage iii. 2. 13 f. he may possibly have in view the Pelagian denial of original sin, in which case we have an indication that the author is later than Ambrose. If, further, the reference to the Greek custom of communicating once a year (v. 4. 25) is due to acquaintance with Chrysostom's homilies (see note, l.c.), we have a further indication of late date. Lastly, it is improbable that Ambrose would have so closely copied an earlier work of his own.

Like de Myst., this treatise came prominently into notice in connexion with the controversies between Catholics and Protestants at the time of the Reformation. Its authenticity was attacked by Bullinger, by Aubertin (whose verdict was "He is the ape of Ambrose"), and by Daillé. Aubertin assigned it to the seventh century, Daillé to the eighth. Doubts were also expressed on the opposite side by Cardinal Bona and the Benedictine editors. Various theories have been propounded as to the authorship.

Tillemont's suggestion of Maximus of Turin has gained little credence. It has been revived in recent times by Schermann (Röm. Quartalschrift, xvii. (1903), 254 f.), who points out that in the oldest MS. of de Sacram. the book follows immediately the Homilies of Maximus. Another theory, advanced by Probst (Lit. des viert. Jahrh.,) and Dom Morin (Revue bénéd. (1894) xi. 343 f.), is that the book was compiled from notes taken by those who had heard the sermons of Ambrose. But this theory fails to explain the peculiar characteristics which distinguish it from the genuine works of Ambrose. The question of authorship therefore remains open.

As to date, the presence of the treatise in the St. Gall MS. 188 of the seventh century, shows that it must be earlier than that period. Other indications are supplied by the fact that the treatise presupposes a condition of Church life in which adult baptism was still the rule, and in which baptism was normally celebrated at Easter (see iv. 1. 2, note), while other passages imply that heathenism still flourished (vi. 4. 18; vi. 5. 21). The prayers quoted in iv. 5. 21-23; iv. 6. 26-27 are of an earlier type than the Roman Canon in the Gelasian Sacramentary (see below, pp. xxxii ff.). The writer refers to Arianism (vi. 2. 10; cp. v. 1. 1, note), and possibly to Pelagianism (iii. 2. 13 f.), though the indirect character of this latter reference suggests a date at which the controversy had not yet been fought out. A less certain indication of date is afforded by the character of the Scripture quotations, which present in the Old Testament a form of the Latin Version earlier than the Vulgate (see below, p. xlii). The writer shows respect for the Church of Rome, whose pattern and rule he expresses a desire to follow (iii. 1. 5), though he claims a certain degree of independence in the matter of the usages of his own Church. His attitude in fact suggests a position of affairs like that revealed in the letter of Pope Innocent I to Decentius (416 a.d.), in which the see of Rome was advancing its claims over other churches in the matter of liturgical conformity, no less than in matters of discipline. These indications suggest a date in one of the earlier decades of the fifth century. The affinity of the rites of baptism with those of Milan, the resemblance of the Canon of the Mass to that of the Roman rite, and the author's attitude to Rome, suggest that he lived in some North Italian district closely associated with Milan on the one hand and Rome on the other. Duchesne (Christian Worship, Eng. tr.,) suggests Ravenna.

The author is acquainted with other works of Ambrose, besides de Mysteriis. He makes use of the language of de Officiis in describing the sevenfold gifts of the Spirit (iii. 2. 9), and his discussion of the parts of prayer is, as we have seen, based on de Institutione Virginis. His treatment of prayer and the Lord's Prayer suggests that he was acquainted with Origen's treatise de Oratione. Elsewhere (ii. 6. 17, 19) his teaching echoes that of Greek Church writers (see notes).

The addresses, six in number, appear to have been begun on Tuesday in Easter week and concluded on the following Sunday. At the close of the fourth address (iv. 6. 29) the author expresses his intention to continue his discourses "to-morrow, Saturday, and on Sunday" (crastina die, sabbato, et dominica), where "Saturday" is in apposition to "to-morrow." But a misunderstanding of the words led to the idea that there were three more sermons to follow. Hence the St. Gall MS. divides the last book into two parts, beginning a new book with vi. 5. 25, obviously an unnatural division. Similarly, some MSS. of de Mysteriis describe that work as Book I. of de Sacramentis, and rearrange the numbering of the books of the latter treatise accordingly; while in one MS., after the present six books of the treatise, there appears, under the heading "Book VII.," a sermon found in the Appendix of Augustine's works (Serm. 247; Migne, P. L. xxxviii. 2200), which is attributed to Ivo of Chartres.

BOOK I

CHAPTER I

WHY INSTRUCTION ON the sacraments was deferred. The "opening of the ears."

The sacraments which you have received are the theme of my discourse. To have given a reasoned account of these earlier would not have been right; for in a Christian man faith is first. Therefore, at Rome the title of "faithful" is given to those who have been baptized; and also our father Abraham was justified by faith, not by works. So you received baptism, you believed. For it is wrong for me to think otherwise; for thou wouldst not have been called to grace, had not Christ thought thee worthy of his grace.

Therefore, what did we do on the Saturday? What but "the opening"? Which mysteries of "opening" were performed, when the priest touched thine ears and nostrils. It is this which our Lord Jesus Christ indicates in the Gospel, when a deaf and dumb man was brought to him, and he touched his ears and his mouth: the ears, because he was deaf; the mouth, because he was dumb: and said, Ephpheta. It is a Hebrew word, which rendered into Latin is adaperire, that is, Be opened. The reason, therefore, that the priest touched thine ears was that thine ears might be opened to the discourse and the address of the priest.

But thou sayest to me, "Why the nostrils?" In that case, because he was dumb, he touched his mouth; that, since he could not speak heavenly mysteries, he might receive utterance from Christ. Also, in that case because it was a man; in our case, because women are baptized, and there is not the same purity in the servant as in the Lord (for what comparison can there be, when the latter forgives sins, the former has his sins remitted?), therefore, on account of the grace bestowed by his act and office, the bishop touches not the mouth but the nostrils; that thou mayest receive a sweet savour of eternal godliness, and that thou mayest say, For we are a sweet savour of Christ unto God, as the holy Apostle said; and there may be in thee the full fragrance of faith and devotion.

CHAPTER II

THE UNCTION BEFORE baptism. Of the renunciations, and the dignity of the office of priests, who were witnesses of their baptismal promises.

We came to the font, thou didst enter. Consider whom thou sawest; consider what thou saidst, recall it carefully. A levite met thee, a presbyter met thee. Thou wast anointed as Christ's athlete; as about to wrestle in the fight of this world, thou didst profess the objects of thy wrestling. He who wrestles, has something to hope for; where the contest is, there is the crown. Thou wrestlest in the world, but thou art crowned by Christ, and thou art crowned for contests in the world; for, though the reward is in heaven, yet the earning of the reward is placed here.

When he asked thee, "Dost thou renounce the devil and his works," what didst thou reply? "I renounce." "Dost thou renounce the world and its pleasures," what didst thou reply? "I renounce." Be mindful of thy words, and never let the contents of thy bond pass from thy memory. If thou givest a man thy note of hand, thou art held to be under acknowledgment of receiving his money; thou art held bound, and the lender keeps thee to it, however unwilling thou mayest be. If thou deniest, thou goest before the judge, and there thou art convicted by thy bond.

Consider where thou didst promise, or to whom thou didst promise. Thou sawest a levite. But he is the minister of Christ; thou hast seen him ministering at the altar. Therefore, thy note of hand is kept, not on earth, but in heaven. Consider where thou receivest the heavenly mysteries. If the body of Christ is here, the angels are stationed here also. Where the body is, there also are the eagles, hast thou read in the Gospel. Where the body of Christ is, there also the eagles are wont to fly, that they may shun earthly things, pursue heavenly.

Why do I say this? Because men also are angels, whosoever proclaim Christ, and seem to be admitted into the place of angels. How? Take the case of the Baptist. John was born of a man and a woman. Yet hear how even he is an angel: Behold, I send my angel before thy face, and he shall prepare thy way before thee. Take another passage of the prophet Malachi: For the priest's lips keep knowledge, and they seek the law at his mouth: for he is the angel of God Almighty. These things are said to extol the dignity of the priest, not to claim anything for personal merits.

Therefore, thou hast renounced the world, thou hast renounced this life. Be careful. A man who owes money is always considering his bond. And thou who owest faith to Christ, keep faith, which is much more precious than money; for faith is an eternal possession, money a temporal. And, therefore, always remember what thou hast promised, and thou wilt be more cautious. If thou keepest thy promise, thou wilt keep also thy bond.

CHAPTER III

IN THE BAPTISMAL rite there was more than appeared to the outward eye.

Then thou drewest near; thou sawest the font, thou sawest also the priest above the font. Nor can I doubt, that this may have occurred to your mind, which occurred to the Syrian Naaman; for, although he was cleansed, yet he doubted previously. Why? I will tell; listen.

Thou didst enter, thou sawest the water, thou sawest the priest, thou sawest a levite. Let not some one haply say, “Is this all?” Yes, it is all. It is truly all, where all is innocency, all is godliness, all is grace, all is sanctification. Thou hast seen all that thou couldst see with the eyes of thy body and with human vision. Thou hast not seen the things which are effected, because they cannot be seen. The things which are not seen are far greater than those which are seen; since the things which are seen are temporal, the things which are not seen are eternal.

CHAPTER IV

THE SACRAMENTS OF Christians are more divine, and earlier, than those of the Jews. The meaning of the Passover.

Therefore, let us say this first (hold my words as a pledge, and exact full payment). We marvel at the mysteries of the Jews, which were given to our fathers, pre-eminent first in the antiquity of their sacraments, then in their holiness. This I promise, that the sacraments of Christians are more divine and older than those of the Jews.

What stands out so much as the fact that the people of the Jews passed through the sea? — to speak for the present of baptism. Yet the Jews who passed through all died in the wilderness. But he who passes through this font, that is from earthly to heavenly things — for this is the "passing over,"3 therefore, pascha, that is, his passover, a passing over from sin to life, from guilt to grace, from defilement to sanctification — he who passes through this font, dies not, but rises again.

CHAPTER V

THE STORY OF Naaman, and the baptism of Christ.

To resume, Naaman was a leper. A certain maid said to his wife, "If my lord wishes to be cleansed, let him go into the land of Israel, and there he will find him who can take the leprosy from him." She spoke to her mistress, the wife spoke to her husband, Naaman spoke to the king of Syria, who sent him as his favourite to the king of Israel. The king of Israel heard that a man had been sent to him to be cured of his leprosy, and he rent his garment. Then Elisha the prophet charges him: "Wherefore hast thou rent thy garment, as if God were not able to cleanse a leper? Send him to me." He sent him, and, when he came, the prophet said, "Go to Jordan, dip, and thou shalt be healed."

He began to reflect and to say: "Is this all? I have come from Syria into the land of Judah, and I am told, Go and descend into Jordan, dip, and thou shalt be healed, as if there were not better rivers in my native land." So his servants said to him, "My lord, why dost thou not carry out the word of the prophet? Do it rather, and make trial." Then he went to Jordan, dipped, and arose whole.

What, then, does it mean? Thou sawest water. But it is not all water that heals, but that water heals which has the grace of Christ. The element is one thing, the consecration is another; the work is one thing, the working another. The water is the work, the working is of the Holy Spirit. Water does not heal, unless the Spirit has descended and consecrated that water; as thou hast read that, when our Lord Jesus Christ was giving the pattern of baptism, he came to John; and John said to him, "I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?" Christ answered him, "Suffer it now: for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness."2 See how all righteousness is based on baptism.

Why, then, did Christ descend, unless that that flesh might be cleansed, the flesh which he took of our nature? For the washing away of his sins was not necessary for Christ, who did no sin; but it was necessary for us who remain subject to sin. Therefore, if baptism is for our sake, a pattern has been established for us, the pattern of our faith has been set forth.

Christ descended, John stood by baptizing, and, lo, the Holy Ghost descended as a dove. It was not a dove that descended, but as a dove. Remember what I said, Christ took flesh, not as it were flesh; but it was the reality of that flesh, real flesh, which Christ took. The Holy Spirit, however, descended from heaven, not in the reality of a dove, but in the likeness of a dove. Therefore, John saw and believed.

Christ descended, the Holy Spirit also descended. Why did Christ descend first, the Holy Spirit afterwards, since the form and practice of baptism provides that the font should be consecrated first, and then the person to be baptized should descend? For as soon as the priest enters, he makes an exorcism over the element of water, afterwards he offers an invocation and a prayer, that the font may be consecrated, and the presence of the eternal Trinity may come down. But Christ descended first, the Spirit followed. For what reason? That the Lord Jesus might not seem himself as it were to need the mystery of sanctification; but that he might sanctify, and the Spirit also sanctify.

Therefore Christ descended into the water, and the Holy Spirit descended as a dove. Also God the Father spake from heaven. Thou hast the presence of the Trinity.

CHAPTER VI

BAPTISM PREFIGURED IN the crossing of the Red Sea and in the story of the Flood.

Again, that there was a figure of our baptism in the Red Sea is asserted by the Apostle, when he says that our fathers were all baptized in the cloud and in the sea. And he added, Now all these things happened unto them by way of figure; to them in a figure, but to us in reality. Then Moses held his rod: the people of the Jews had been shut in; on one side the Egyptian pressed on with arms, and on the other side the Hebrews were shut in by the sea. They could neither cross the seas, nor return to the enemy. They began to murmur.

See that it tempt thee not, that they were heard. Although the Lord heard, yet they are not without fault who murmured. It is thy duty, when thou art in a strait, to believe that thou wilt escape, not to murmur; to appeal, to entreat, not to utter complaint.

Moses held his rod, and led the people of the Hebrews at night in a pillar of light, and in the day in a pillar of cloud. What is the light but truth, since it sheds a full and open brightness? What is the pillar of light but Christ the Lord, who scattered the shadows of unbelief, and poured the light of truth and spiritual grace on human hearts? The pillar of cloud, on the other hand, is the Holy Spirit. The people was in the sea, and the pillar of light went on before; then the pillar of cloud followed, as if the shadowing of the Holy Spirit. Thou seest that by the Holy Spirit and by the water he has shown a type of baptism.

As early as the flood there was also a figure of baptism, and, certainly, the mysteries of the Jews did not as yet exist. Therefore, if the figure of our baptism preceded, thou seest that the mysteries of the Christians are earlier than were those of the Jews.

But meanwhile, in view of the weakness of our voice and the consideration of the time at our disposal, let us content ourselves to-day with just having touched the mysteries concerning the holy font. To-morrow, if the Lord shall grant strength and ability to speak, I will declare them more fully. It behoves your holiness to have your ears prepared, your mind the more ready, that you may be able to retain what we may gather from the course of the Scriptures, and shall declare unto you, that you may have the grace of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, to which Trinity belongs an everlasting kingdom, from all ages, both now, and always, and for ever and ever.

BOOK II

CHAPTER I

FURTHER ILLUSTRATION FROM the story of the Flooa. Of the baptisms of heathen and Jews.

Yesterday we began to expound how in the flood also there was a prefiguring of baptism. What is the flood, but that in which the righteous is saved to be a seed-plot of righteousness, while sin dies? Therefore, when the Lord saw that the transgressions of mankind were multiplied, he saved the righteous one alone with his offspring, but he bade the water rise even above the mountains. And therefore, in that flood all corruption of the flesh perished, only the family and pattern of the righteous survived. Is not the flood the same thing as baptism, whereby all sins are washed away, only the mind and grace of the righteous is revived?

There are many kinds of baptisms: but the Apostle cries, one baptism. Why? There are baptisms of the Gentiles, but they are no baptisms. They are baths, baptisms they cannot be. The flesh is washed, but guilt is not washed away; nay, it is contracted in that bath. There were, however, baptisms of the Jews, some superfluous, others figurative. And the mere figure helps us, since it is the herald of reality.

CHAPTER II

THE HEALING OF the paralytic at the pool of Bethesda.

What was read yesterday? An angel, it says, went down at a certain season into the pool, and, so often as the angel descended, the water was troubled: and whosoever first descended, was made whole of every disease whatsoever he had. Which signifies a figure of our Lord Jesus Christ who was to come.

Why an angel? Because he himself is the Angel of Great Counsel. At a certain season, because he was kept till the last hour, that he might catch the day at its setting, and delay its setting. Therefore, as often as the angel descended, the water was troubled. Thou sayest perchance: "Why is it not troubled now?" Learn why. Signs for the unbelieving, faith for believers

Whosoever first descended, was made whole of every sickness. What is the meaning of first? Does it mean in time, or in honour? Understand in both ways. If it means he who descended first in time was made whole first, it signifies the people of the Jews, as opposed to the people of the Gentiles. If it means he who descended first in honour, that signifies that he who had the fear of God, the love of righteousness, the grace of charity, and the desire of purity, he rather was made whole. Yet at that time one only was made whole; at that time, I say, by way of figure he who first descended was alone healed. How much greater is the grace of the Church, wherein all are saved, whosoever descend!

But observe the mystical sense. Our Lord Jesus Christ came to the pool; many sick were lying there. And, naturally, there were many sick lying there, where only one was healed. Then he saith to the sick of the palsy, “Descend.” He saith, “I have no man.”1 Consider where thou art baptized. What source can there be for baptism, save the cross of Christ, the death of Christ? Herein is the whole mystery, in that he suffered for thee. In him thou art redeemed, in him thou wilt be saved.

“I have no man,” he said: that is, since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. He could not descend, he could not be saved, who did not believe that our Lord Jesus had taken flesh of the Virgin. But this man who was looking for the mediator between God and men, the man Jesus Christ, waiting for him of whom it was said, And the Lord shall send a man who shall save them, — he said, “I have no man”; and therefore he deserved to attain to health, because he believed in one who was to come. Yet he would have been better and more perfect, if he had believed that he whose coming he hoped for had already come.

CHAPTER III

THE INTERPRETATION OF the "captive maid" in the story of Naaman. Summary of types already indicated.

Now look at the types one by one. We said that baptism was prefigured in the Jordan, when Naaman the leper was cleansed. Who is that captive maid, but one who had the likeness of the Church, and exhibited a figure of it? For the people of the nations was captive. It was captive: I do not mean a captivity under some hostile people; but I mean that captivity which is worse, when the devil and his minions rule with cruel sway, and subject to themselves the captive necks of sinners.

Therefore thou hast one baptism here, another in the flood; thou hast a third kind when the fathers were baptized in the Red Sea; thou hast a fourth kind in the pool, when the water was troubled. Now I ask thee whether thou oughtest not to believe that thou hast the presence of the Trinity in this baptism which is administered in the Church.

CHAPTER IV

OUR LORD'S COMMAND to baptize. Further O.T. types of baptism.

It is, then, the same baptism which our Lord Jesus Christ speaks of in his Gospel to the Apostles: Go, baptize all nations in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. This is the word of the Saviour.

Tell me, O man. Elijah called fire from heaven, and fire came down from heaven. Elisha called on the name of the Lord, and the axe-head which had sunk came up out of the water. Here is another kind of baptism. Why? Because every man before baptism is weighed down like iron, and sinks: when he has been baptized he is no longer like iron, but now rises like the fruit-bearing wood, which is a lighter kind of thing. Therefore in this instance there is also another figure. The axe was that with which wood was cut down. The haft fell from the axe, that is, the iron sank. The son of the prophet knew not what to do; but this alone he knew, to ask the prophet Elisha and to demand help. Then he cast in wood, and the iron was raised. Dost thou see, therefore, how the weakness of all men is raised on the cross of Christ?

Another example — though we are not keeping to our order, for who can recount all the deeds of Christ, as the Apostles said? When Moses came into the desert and the people thirsted, and came to the spring of Marah, and wished to drink water (because, as soon as they drew, they tasted the bitterness, and began to be unable to drink), therefore Moses cast wood into the spring, and the water which previously was bitter began to be sweet.

What does it mean, but that every creature is subject to corruption, that water is bitter to all. Although it is sweet for a time, although it is pleasant for a time, yet it is bitter, since it cannot take away sin. When thou hast drunk, thou wilt thirst; when thou hast imbibed the sweetness of the draught, thou wilt taste its bitterness. Water, therefore, is bitter. But when thou hast received the cross of Christ, and the heavenly sacrament, it begins to be sweet and pleasant; and rightly sweet, because guilt is thereby cancelled. Therefore, if baptisms by way of figure could do so much, how much more can baptism in reality do?

CHAPTER V

THE PRESENCE OF the Holy Trinity in baptism is vindicated. The Spirit at the Baptism of Christ and on the day of Pentecost manifested by outward signs to convince unbelievers.

Now, then, let us consider. The priest comes; he says a prayer at the font; he invokes the name of the Father, the presence of the Son and of the Holy Ghost; he uses heavenly words. What heavenly words? They are those of Christ, that we should baptize in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. If, therefore, at the word of men, at the invocation of a saint, the presence of the Trinity came down, how much more does it come where the eternal word is acting? Do you wish to know that the Spirit descends? Thou hast heard that he descended as a dove. Why as a dove? That unbelievers might be called to belief. In the begining there had to be a sign, later there ought to be the fulfilment.

Take another example. After the death of our Lord Jesus Christ the Apostles were in one place, and they were praying on the day of Pentecost. And suddenly there came a great sound as if the Spirit were carried along with great violence, and there appeared divided tongues as of fire. What does this mean, but the descent of the Holy Spirit, who wished to show himself to unbelievers in bodily form also; that is in bodily form by a sign, spiritually by a sacrament? Therefore, there was given an evident proof of his coming. But to us is now offered the privilege of faith. For in the beginning signs were shown for unbelievers; now in the fulness of the Church we must gather truth not by a sign, but by faith.

CHAPTER VI

THE FALL AND its consequences. The redemptive grace of baptism.

Now let us examine what it is which is called baptism. Thou camest to the font, thou wentest down in it; thou didst watch the high priest, thou didst see the levites and the presbyter in the font. What is baptism?

In the beginning our God made man, so that, if he did not taste sin, he would not surely die. He committed sin, he became subject to death, he was driven out of Paradise. But the Lord, who wished his benefits to endure, who wished to destroy all the wiles of the serpent, and also to root out everything harmful, first gave sentence upon the man, Earth thou art, and unto earth thou shalt go; and he made man subject to death. It was a Divine sentence; it could not be paid by human means. A remedy was granted that man should die, and rise again. Why? In order that the thing which had been previously counted as a condemnation, might be counted as a benefit. What is that thing but death? Thou askest how. Because death intervening makes an end of sin. For when we die, we certainly cease to sin. Therefore, the sentence seemed satisfied, because man who had been made to live, on condition that he did not sin, was beginning to die. But, in order that the continual goodness of God might endure, man died, but Christ found the resurrection, that is, a way to restore the heavenly benefit which had been lost by the serpent's guile. Each, therefore, is for our good, since death is the end of sins, and the resurrection is the refashioning of our nature.

Nevertheless, that the craft or guile of the devil might not prevail in this world, baptism was devised. Concerning which baptism hear what the Scripture saith, nay, the Son of God, that the Pharisees who would not be baptized with the baptism of John, rejected the counsel of God. Therefore, baptism is the counsel of God. How great is the grace, where there is the counsel of God.

Hear, therefore. In order that the bands of the devil might be loosed in this world also, a means was found that man might die while living, and while living rise again. What is "living"? It is the living life of the body, when it came to the font, and was dipped into the font. What is water, but from the earth? Therefore, the heavenly sentence is satisfied without the insensibility which death brings. Thy dipping paid that sentence, Earth thou art, and unto earth thou shalt go; the sentence fulfilled, there is room for the heavenly benefit and remedy. So then, water is from the earth; Moreover the conditions of our life did not allow that we should be covered with earth, and rise from the earth; further, it is not earth, but water, that washes. Therefore the font is, as it were, a burial.

CHAPTER VII

THE THREEFOLD CONFESSION of faith and the threefold immersion in baptism described and explained. The unction after baptism.

Thou wast asked, “Dost thou believe in God the Father Almighty?” Thou saidst, “I believe,” and didst dip, that is, thou wast buried. Again thou wast asked, “Dost thou believe in our Lord Jesus Christ, and in his Cross?” Thou saidst, “I believe,” and didst dip; therefore, thou wast also buried with Christ; for he who is buried with Christ, rises again with Christ. A third time thou was asked, “Dost thou believe also in the Holy Ghost?” Thou saidst, “I believe,” and didst dip a third time, that the triple confession might absolve the manifold fall of thy former life.

Thus (that we may give you an example), after the holy Apostle Peter seemed to have fallen during the Lord’s passion by the weakness of human nature, he who had previously denied was afterwards thrice asked by Christ if he loved Christ, that he might cancel and annul that fall. Then he said, “Thou knowest, Lord, that I love Thee.”3 He said it thrice, that he might be thrice absolved.

Therefore, the Father forgives sin, just as the Son forgives; likewise also the Holy Ghost. But he bade us be baptized in one name, that is, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Wonder not that he spoke of one name, when there is one Substance, one Divinity, one Majesty. This is the name of which it was said, Wherein all must be saved. In this name ye have all been saved, ye have been restored to the grace of life.

Therefore the Apostle cries, as you have heard in the lesson just read, that whosoever is baptized, is baptized in the death of Jesus. What is in the death? It is that, as Christ died, so thou also shouldst taste of death; that, as Christ died unto sin, and liveth unto God, so thou also shouldst be dead unto the former allurements of sins through the sacrament of baptism, and shouldst rise again through the grace of Christ. It is a death, therefore; but not a death in the reality of bodily death, but in the likeness. For when thou dippest thou takest on the likeness of death and burial, thou receivest the sacrament of that cross, because Christ hung on the cross, and his body was pierced with nails. Therefore, when thou art crucified, thou cleavest to Christ; thou cleavest to the nails of our Lord Jesus Christ; let not the devil be able to tear thee away. Let the nail of Christ hold thee fast, seeing that the weakness of human nature is seeking to call thee back.

Therefore thou didst dip, thou camest to the priest. What did he say to thee? “God the Father Almighty,” he saith, “who hath regenerated thee by water and the Holy Ghost, and hath forgiven thee thy sins, himself anoint thee unto eternal life.”6 See whereunto thou art anointed; “unto eternal life,” he saith. Do not set this life before that life. For example, if any foe arise, if he wishes to take away thy faith, if he threatens death to make some one transgress, see what thou choosest. Do not choose that wherein thou wast not anointed, but choose that wherein thou wast anointed, so as to prefer eternal life to temporal life, through Christ our Lord. — Amen.

BOOK III

CHAPTER I

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF the unction upon the head, and the meaning of "regeneration." The washing of the feet of the newly-baptized is defended and explained.

Yesterday we discoursed on the font, whose appearance is somewhat like that of a tomb in shape; into which, believing in the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost, we are received, and plunged, and emerge, that is, we are raised up. Moreover, thou receivest myron, that is, ointment upon the head. Why upon the head? Because the senses of a wise man are in his head, says Solomon. For wisdom is lifeless without grace; but when wisdom has received grace, then its work begins to be perfect. This is called regeneration.

What is regeneration? Thou readest in the Acts of the Apostles that the verse which is found in the second Psalm, Thou art my son, this day have I begotten thee, appears to refer to the resurrection. For the holy Apostle Peter in the Acts of the Apostles interpreted it thus, that at the time that the Son rose from the dead, the Father's voice rang out, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. Whence he is also called the firstborn from the dead. Therefore, what is resurrection, but when we rise from death to life? So, therefore, in baptism also, since there is a likeness of death, without doubt when thou dost dip and rise again, there is a likeness of the resurrection. Rightly, therefore, according to the interpretation of the Apostle Peter, as that resurrection was a regeneration, so also is this resurrection a regeneration.

But what dost thou mean by this dipping in the water? Is it for this reason that thou art perplexed, that hesitation possesses thee? Certainly, we read, Let the earth bring forth from herself fruit that springs up. Likewise also thou hast read of the waters, Let the waters bring forth living creatures, and living creatures were born. And those, indeed, were in the beginning of creation; but for thee it has been reserved that water should regenerate thee to grace, as it generated those others to life. Imitate the fish, which, though it has obtained less grace, yet should fill thee with wonder. It is in the sea, and above the waves; it is in the sea, and swims over the billows. In the sea the storm rages, the winds howl; but the fish swims, it does not sink, because it is wont to swim. Therefore this world is a sea to thee also. It has divers billows, heavy waves, fierce storms. And do thou be a fish, that the wave of the world sink thee not. Well, however, does the Father say to the Son, This day have I begotten thee; that is, when thou didst redeem the people, when thou didst call them to the kingdom of heaven, when thou didst fulfil my will, thou didst prove thyself to be my son.

Thou camest up out of the font. What followed? Thou hast heard the lesson. The high priest was girt up (for though presbyters also carried it out, yet the ministry is begun by the high priest), the high priest, I say, was girt up, and washed thy feet. What is this sacrament? Doubtless thou hast heard that when the Lord had washed the feet of the other disciples, He cometh to Peter; and Peter saith to him, Dost thou wash my feet? That is, Dost thou, the Lord, wash the feet of the servant? Dost thou, the spotless, wash my feet? Dost thou, the maker of the heavens, wash my feet? Thou hast this in another place also. He cometh to John, and John saith to him, “I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?”4 I am a sinner, and dost thou come to me a sinner, that thou mayest as it were lay down thy sins who hast done no sin? See all righteousness, see the humility, see the grace, see the sanctification: Unless I wash thy feet, he saith, thou wilt have no part with me.

We are not ignorant that the Roman Church has not this custom. Her type and form we follow in all things; however she has not this custom of washing the feet. See then, perhaps she has declined it on account of the numbers. There are, however, some who say and try to urge that this ought to be done, not as a sacrament, not at baptism, not at the regeneration; but only as we should wash the feet of a guest. The latter is an act of humility, the former a work of sanctification. Accordingly, learn how it is a sacrament and a means of sanctification: Unless I wash thy feet, thou wilt have no part with me. This I say, not to find fault with others, but to recommend my own usage. In all things I desire to follow the Roman Church. Yet we too are not without discernment; and what other places have done well to retain, we too do well to maintain.

It is the Apostle Peter himself that we follow, to his devotion we cling. What does the Roman Church answer to this? Certainly the Apostle Peter himself supports us in this claim, he who was priest of the Roman Church. Peter himself says, Lord, not my feet only, but also my hands and my head. Look at the faith. His demurring at first showed his humility; his offer afterwards showed his devotion and faith.

Because he had said my hands and my head, the Lord answered him, He that hath washed needeth not to wash again, save to wash his feet only. Why is this? Because in baptism all guilt is washed away. Guilt, therefore, vanishes. But, because Adam was tripped up by the devil, and poison was poured over his feet, therefore thou washest thy feet; that at that point where the serpent made his treacherous attack a stronger reinforcement of sanctification may be applied, that he may not be able to trip thee up afterwards. Therefore, thou washest thy feet, to wash off the poison of the serpent. It is a help towards humility also, that in a sacrament we should not shrink from that which we scorn in an act of service.

CHAPTER II

THE "SPIRITUAL SEAL" and the sevenfold gifts of the Spirit. The effect of baptism illustrated from the healing of the blind man in John ix. Those who deny the need of baptism are refuted.

There follows the spiritual seal, which you have heard mentioned in the lesson to-day. For after the font it remains for the "perfecting"2 to take place, when, at the invocation of the priest, the Holy Spirit is bestowed, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and strength, the spirit of knowledge and godliness, the spirit of holy fear, as it were seven virtues of the Spirit.

And, indeed, all virtues belong to the Spirit; but these are as it were cardinal, as it were principal. For what is so principal, as godliness? What is so principal, as the knowledge of God? What is so principal, as strength? What is so principal, as the counsel of God? What is so principal, as the fear of God? As the fear of the world is weakness, so the fear of God is great power.

These are the seven virtues, when thou art sealed; for, as the holy Apostle saith, The wisdom of our God is manifold. And, as the wisdom of God is manifold, so is the Holy Ghost manifold, who hath divers and various virtues. Whence also we speak of the God of hosts; which can be applied to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost. But that belongs to another discourse, another time.

After this what follows? Thou hast to come to the altar, whither thou hast not come before; thou hast to see the things which thou didst not see before, that is, the mystery which thou hast read in the Gospel; if, however, thou hast not read it, thou hast certainly heard it. A blind man presented himself to the Saviour to be healed. And he, who healed others merely by a word and utterance, and brought back the light of the eyes by a command, yet in the book of the Gospel which is entitled “according to John,” — who truly beyond the others saw great mysteries, and described, and declared them: — he wished to prefigure this mystery in that miracle. All the Evangelists, indeed, were holy, all the Apostles, except the traitor — all were holy; yet Saint John, who wrote his Gospel last, having been sought and chosen by Christ to be in a sense his kinsman, uttered eternal mysteries with a louder trumpet. Whatever he spoke is a mystery. Another Evangelist told of the cure of a blind man; Matthew did, Luke did, Mark did. What does John alone say? — He took clay, and anointed his eyes, and said unto him, “Go to Siloam.” And rising he went, and washed, and came seeing.

Consider thou also the eyes of thine heart. Formerly thou sawest only the things that are bodily, with bodily eyes; but the things which pertain to the sacraments thou wast not yet able to see with the eyes of the heart. Therefore, when thou gavest thy name, he took clay, and anointed thine eyes. What does it mean? It means that thou shouldst confess thy sin, recognize thy guilt, repent of thy trespasses, that is, acknowledge the lot of human birth. For although he who comes to baptism does not confess his sin, yet he makes a complete confession of all sins by the very fact that he asks to be baptized, that he may be justified, that is, pass from guilt to grace.

Do not think it superfluous. There are some — I know for certain there was one who said so; when we said to him, “At thy time of life thou shouldest certainly be baptized,” he objected, “Why should I be baptized? I have no sin. Have I contracted sin?” He had no clay, because Christ had not washed, that is, had not opened, his eyes; for no man is without sin.

Therefore, he who takes refuge in the baptism of Christ acknowledges himself a man. So on thee also he has put clay, that is, modesty, prudence, reflection upon thy weakness, and he has said to thee, “Go to Siloam.” What is Siloam? Which is, it says, by interpretation, Sent. That is, Go to that fount wherein the Cross of the Lord is proclaimed; go to that fount wherein Christ redeemed the faults of all men.

Thou didst go, thou didst wash, thou camest to the altar. Thou didst begin to see what thou hadst not seen before; that is, through the font of the Lord and the preaching of the Lord’s passion thine eyes were then opened. Thou who seemedst before to be blinded in heart, didst begin to see the light of the sacraments. Therefore, dearly beloved brethren, we have arrived at the altar, to a richer theme. And for the reason that the time is advanced, we cannot begin a fresh subject; since it is a lengthier theme, let what has been said to-day suffice; and to-morrow, if it please the Lord, we will treat of those sacraments.

BOOK IV

CHAPTER I

THE SYMBOLISM OF the Tabernacle applied to Christian baptism.

Under the old covenant the priests used to enter continually into the first tabernacle; into the second tabernacle the high priest entered once in the year. Which the Apostle Paul clearly recalling in the Epistle to the Hebrews, explains the tenor of the Old Testament. Now there was in the second tabernacle the manna; there was also the rod of Aaron which withered and afterwards blossomed again; there was likewise the censer.

What is the purpose of this? It is that you may understand what is the second tabernacle, into which the priest introduced you, into which the high priest was accustomed to enter once in the year, that is, to the baptistery, where the rod of Aaron blossomed; it was withered before, afterwards it blossomed again. Thou too wast withered, and dost begin to blossom again in the streaming font. Thour hadst withered through sins, thou hadst withered through faults and trespasses; but now thou beginnest to bear fruit, planted by the rivers of water.

But perhaps thou sayest, “What has this to do with the people, if the priest’s rod had withered and blossomed again?” What is the people itself but priestly? To whom it was said, But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, as saith the Apostle Peter. Every one is anointed to the priesthood, is anointed to the kingdom also; but it is a spiritual kingdom and a spiritual priesthood.

In the second tabernacle is the censer also, which is wont to diffuse a sweet savour. So you also are now a sweet savour of Christ; no longer is there in you any share of sins, any savour of ranker error.

CHAPTER II

THE GRACE OF innocence and "renewal of youth" resulting from baptism.

It follows that you come to the altar. You began to come; the angels watched, they saw you approaching, and that human nature, which before was stained with the murky filth of sin, suddenly shone bright in their sight. And accordingly they said, Who is this that cometh up from the wilderness made white? The angels then also wonder. Wilt thou know that they wonder? Hear then the Apostle Paul saying that those things have been bestowed on us which even angels long to see; and again, What eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him.

Then recall what thou hast received. Holy David the prophet saw this grace in a figure, and desired it. Wilt thou know that he desired it? Again hear him saying, Thou shalt sprinkle me with hyssop, and I shall be clean; thou shalt wash me, and I shall be made whiter than snow. Why? Because snow, although it is white, quickly turns black with any dirt, and is spoilt; this grace which thou hast received, if thou hold fast that which thou hast received, will be lasting and eternal.

Thou camest thus with desire to the altar, since thou hadst seen such grace. Thou camest with desire to the altar, to receive the sacrament; let thy soul say, And I will go unto the altar of my God, unto God who maketh glad my youth. Thou hast put off the old age of sins, thou hast taken the youth of grace; this the heavenly sacraments bestowed on thee. Therefore, again hear David saying, Thy youth shall be renewed as the eagle's. Thou beginnest to be a good eagle, seeking heaven, scorning earthly things. Good eagles are about the altar; for where the body is, there also are the eagles. The altar is a type of the body, and the body of Christ is on the altar; ye are eagles, renewed by the washing away of sin.

CHAPTER III

COMPARISON OF THE Jewish and Christian sacraments. Melchizedek a type of Christ.

Thou camest to the altar, thou sawest the sacraments laid upon the altar, and thou didst wonder at those creatures; yet they are ordinary and familiar.

Perhaps some one will say: "To the Jews God granted such grace, he rained down manna upon them from heaven; what more has he given to his faithful, what more has he bestowed on those to whom he promised more?"

Hear what things I say, namely, that the mysteries of the Christians are older than those of the Jews, and the sacraments of the Christians are more divine than those of the Jews. How? Hear. When did the Jews begin? At the earliest, with Judah, the great-grandson of Abraham; or, if thou preferrest to take this view, with the Law, that is, when the Jews were deemed worthy to receive the Law. Therefore, they were called Jews from the great-grandson of Abraham, or since the time of holy Moses. And if God rained down manna from heaven then upon the murmuring Jews, still there was for thee a yet earlier figure of these sacraments, when Abraham was alive, when he gathered the men born in his house, three hundred and eighteen, and then pursued the adversaries, delivering his nephew out of captivity; then he came in triumph; Melchizedek the priest met him, and offered him bread and wine. Who had the bread and wine? Abraham had not. But who had? Melchizedek. He, then, is the author of the sacraments. Who is Melchizedek? He who is indicated as King of righteousness, King of peace. Who is the King of righteousness? Can any man be King of righteousness? Who then is the King of righteousness, but the Righteousness of God, he who is the Peace of God, the Wisdom of God? He who could say, My peace I give unto you, my peace I leave with you.

Therefore, first understand that these sacraments which thou receivest are older than are the sacraments of Moses, whatever they are that the Jews say they have; and that the Christian people began before the people of the Jews — we, however, as predetermined, while they actually bore the name.

Melchizedek, therefore, offered bread and wine. Who is Melchizedek? Without father, it says, without mother, without order of generation, having neither beginning of days nor end of life; this is in the Epistle to the Hebrews. He is without father, it says, and without mother. Like unto whom? The Son of God. The Son of God was born without mother in his heavenly generation, because he was born of God the Father only. And again, he was born without father, when he was born of the Virgin; for he was not generated of the seed of a man, but born of the Holy Spirit and the Virgin Mary, brought forth from a virgin womb, in all things like to the Son of God. Melchizedek was also a priest; since Christ too is a priest to whom it is said, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek.

CHAPTER IV

THE BREAD AND wine of the Eucharist become Christ's body and blood in virtue of the words of consecration, which are Christ's own words. Illustrations from the Virgin birth and miracles of O.T.

Who then is the author of the sacraments but the Lord Jesus? From heaven those sacraments came; for all counsel is from heaven. But it was truly a great and divine miracle that God rained down manna from heaven, and the people ate without toiling.

Thou sayest perhaps, "My bread is of the usual kind." But that bread is bread before the words of the sacraments; when consecration has been added, from bread it becomes the flesh of Christ. Let us therefore prove this. How can that which is bread be the body of Christ? By consecration. But in what words and in whose language is the consecration? Those of the Lord Jesus. For all the other things which are said in the earlier parts of the service are said by the priest — praises are offered to God, prayer is asked for the people, for kings, and the rest; when it comes to the consecration of the venerable sacrament, the priest no longer uses his own language, but he uses the language of Christ. Therefore, the word of Christ consecrates this sacrament.

What is the word of Christ? That, to be sure, whereby all things are made. The Lord commanded, and the heaven was made; the Lord commanded, and the earth was made; the Lord commanded, and the seas were made; the Lord commanded, and every creature was produced. Thou seest, therefore, how effective is the word of Christ. If, therefore, there is such power in the word of the Lord Jesus, that the things which were not began to be, how much more is it effective, that things previously existing should, without ceasing to exist, be changed into something else? The heaven was not, the sea was not, the earth was not; but hear David saying, He spake, and they were made: he commanded, and they were created.

Therefore, that I may answer thee, it was not the body of Christ before consecration; but after consecration, I tell thee, it is now the body of Christ. He spake, and it was made: he commanded, and it was created. Thou thyself didst formerly exist, but thou wast an old creature; after thou wast consecrated, thou didst begin to be a new creature. Wilt thou know how thou art a new creature? Everyone, it says, in Christ is a new creature.

Hear, then, how the word of Christ is wont to change every creature, and changes, at will, the ordinances of nature. In what way? thou askest. Hear; and, first of all, let us take an example from his generation. It is usual that a man is not generated save from a man and a woman and the use of marriage; but because the Lord willed it, because he chose this mystery, Christ was born of the Holy Spirit and the Virgin, that is, the mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus. Thou seest, then, that he was born contrary to the ordinances and course of nature, he was born as man from a virgin.

Hear another example. The people of the Jews were hard pressed by the Egyptians; they were shut in by the sea. At the divine command Moses touched the waters with his rod, and the wave divided, certainly not according to the use of its own nature, but according to the grace of the heavenly command. Hear another. The people thirsted, they came to the spring. The spring was bitter; holy Moses cast wood into the spring, and the spring which had been bitter was made sweet, that is, it changed the use of its nature, it received the sweetness of grace. Hear also a fourth example. The axe head had fallen into the waters; as iron it sank by its own use. Elisha cast wood; straightway the iron rose, and swam upon the waters, certainly contrary to the use of iron, for the matter of iron is heavier than the element of water.

From all these examples, then, dost thou not understand how effectual is the heavenly word? If the heavenly word was effectual in the earthly spring, if it was effectual in other things, is it not effectual in the heavenly sacraments? Therefore thou hast learnt that what was bread becomes the body of Christ, and that wine and water are put into the chalice, but become blood by the consecration of the heavenly word.

But perhaps thou sayest, “I do not see the appearance of blood.” But it has the likeness; for as thou hast taken the likeness of the death, so also thou drinkest the likeness of the precious blood, that there may be no shrinking from actual blood, and yet the price of redemption may effect its work. Thou hast learnt, therefore, that what thou receivest is the body of Christ.

CHAPTER V

THE WORDS WITH which the priest consecrates the sacrament are quoted, and the sacrament is shown to be a greater gift than that of the manna.

Wilt thou know that it is consecrated by heavenly words? Hear what the words are. The priest speaks. "Make for us," he says, "this oblation approved, ratified, reasonable, acceptable, seeing that it is the figure of the body and blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, who the day before he suffered took bread in his holy hands, and looked up to heaven to thee, holy Father, almighty, everlasting God, and giving thanks, he blessed, brake, and having broken, delivered it to his apostles and to his disciples, saying, Take, and eat ye all of this; for this is my body, which shall be broken for many.

Likewise also after supper, the day before he suffered, he took the cup, looked up to heaven to thee, holy Father, almighty, everlasting God, and giving thanks, blessed it and delivered it to his apostles and to his disciples, saying, Take, and drink ye all of this; for this is my blood." Observe all those expressions. Those words are the Evangelists' up to Take, whether the body or the blood. After that they are the words of Christ; Take, and drink ye all of this; for this is my blood. And observe them in detail.

Who the day before he suffered, he says, in his holy hands took bread. Before it is consecrated, it is bread, but when the words of Christ have been added, it is the body of Christ. Therefore hear him saying: Take and eat ye all of this; for this is my body. And before the words of Christ it is a cup full of wine and water. When the words of Christ have operated then and there it is made to be the blood of Christ which redeemed the people. Therefore, see in how many ways the word of Christ is mighty to change all things. There the Lord Jesus himself testifies to us that we receive his body and blood. Ought we to doubt of his trustworthiness and testimony?

Now come back with me to the point which I set out to prove. It is a great and awful thing that he rained manna on the Jews from heaven. But distinguish. What is greater, manna from heaven or the body of Christ? Certainly the body of Christ who is the maker of heaven. Then he who ate manna died. Whosoever eats this body shall have remission of sins and shall never die.

Therefore [when thou receivest] it is not superfluous that thou sayest Amen, already in spirit confessing that thou receivest the body of Christ. The priest says to thee, The body of Christ. And thou sayest, Amen, that is, True. What the tongue confesses let the heart hold fast.

CHAPTER VI

THE SACRAMENT A memorial of Christ's death and a proclamation of the forgiveness of sins.

But that thou mayest know that this is a sacrament, it was prefigured beforehand. Then learn how great is the sacrament. See what he says: As often as ye do this, so often will ye make a memorial of me until I come again.

And the priest says: Therefore having in remembrance his most glorious passion and resurrection from the dead and ascension into heaven, we offer to thee this spotless offering, reasonable offering, unbloody offering, this holy bread and cup of eternal life: and we ask and pray that thou wouldst receive this oblation on thy altar on high by the hands of thy angels, as thou didst vouchsafe to receive the presents of thy righteous servant Abel, and the sacrifice of our patriarch Abraham, and that which the high priest, Melchizedek offered to thee."

Therefore as often as thou receivest — what saith the Apostle to thee? — as often as we receive, we show the Lord's death; if we show his death, we show remission of sins. If, as often as blood is poured forth, it is poured for remission of sins, I ought always to receive it, that my sins may always be forgiven me. I, who am always sinning, ought always to have a remedy.

Meanwhile, we have explained to you to-day, also, as much as we could. But to-morrow, Saturday, and on Sunday we will speak of the order of prayer as we are able. May the Lord our God preserve to you the grace which he has given and may he deign to illuminate more fully the eyes which he has opened for you, through his only begotten Son, our Lord God, king and saviour, through whom and with whom to him is praise, honour, glory, majesty, power with the Holy Spirit from all ages, both now and ever, and world without end. — Amen.

BOOK V

CHAPTER I

THE WRITER RETURNS to the story of Melchizedek, and gives two reasons why water is mixed with wine in the chalice.

Yesterday our sermon and discourse was carried as far as the sacraments of the holy altar. And we learn that those sacraments were prefigured in the times of Abraham, when holy Melchizedek offered sacrifice, having neither beginning nor end of days. Hear, O man, what the Apostle Paul says to the Hebrews. Where are those who say that the Son of God is of time? Of Melchizedek it was said that he had neither beginning nor end of days. If Melchizedek had not a beginning of days, could Christ have it? But the figure is not greater than the reality. Thou seest therefore that he himself is the first and last. First, because he is the author of all things; last, not because he comes to an end, but because he concludes all things.

We said, therefore, that the cup and the bread are set on the altar. What is poured into the cup? Wine. And what else? Water. But thou sayest to me: "How then did Melchizedek offer bread and wine? What means the mixture of water? Hear the reason.

First of all, what does the type which was prefigured in the time of Moses tell us? That when the people of the Jews thirsted and murmured because they could not find water, God bade Moses touch the rock with his rod. He touched the rock and the rock poured forth a flood of water, as the Apostle says, But they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them; and that Rock was Christ. It was not an immovable Rock which followed the people. Drink thou also, that Christ may follow thee. Behold the mystery. Moses, that is to say, a prophet; the rod, that is the word of God. The priest touches the rock with the word of God, and the water flows and the people of God drink. Therefore the priest touches the cup, the water streams in the cup, springs up into eternal life, and the people of God drink, who have obtained the grace of God. This then thou hast learned.

Hear also another reason. At the time of the Lord's passion, when a great sabbath was nigh, because our Lord Jesus Christ was alive, or the robbers, men were sent to smite him; coming they found the Lord Jesus Christ dead; then one of the soldiers touched his side with his lance, and from his side water flowed and blood. Why water? why blood? Water to cleanse, blood to redeem. Why from his side? Because whence the guilt, thence the grace; guilt through woman, grace through the Lord Jesus Christ.

CHAPTER II

THE BLESSINGS OF the sacrament illustrated from Canticles.

Thou hast come to the altar, the Lord Jesus calls thee or thy soul or the church and says, Let her kiss me with the kisses of her mouth. Wouldst thou apply it to Christ? Nothing sweeter. Wouldst thou apply it to thy soul? Nothing pleasanter.

Let her kiss me. He sees that thou art clean from all sin because thy sins are purged away. Therefore he judges thee worthy of the heavenly sacrament and therefore he invites thee to a heavenly banquet. Let her kiss me with the kisses of her mouth.

Yet on account of what follows it is thy soul or human nature or the Church which, seeing itself cleansed from all sins, and worthy to be able to approach the altar of Christ (for what is the altar but the type of the body of Christ?), has seen the wondrous sacraments and says, Let him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth, that is, let Christ imprint a kiss on me.

Why? Because thy breasts are better than wine. That is, the sensations which thou suppliest are better — thy sacraments are better than wine: — than that wine which, though it hath sweetness, joy, agreeableness, yet therein is worldly joy, while in thee is spiritual pleasure. Even in those days Solomon represents the marriage of Christ and the Church or of the spirit and flesh and soul.

And we have further: Thy name is an ointment poured forth, therefore do the virgins love thee. Who are those virgins but the souls of individuals which have put off the old age of this body, being renewed through the Holy Spirit?

Draw us; we will run after the fragrance of thy ointments. See what he says. Thou canst not follow Christ unless he himself draws thee. Therefore, that thou mayest know this: When I am lifted up, he says, I will draw all unto me.

The king hath brought me into his chamber. The Greek text has “into his storehouse and into his cellar,” where are good draughts, pleasant savours, sweet honey, divers fruits, varied foods, that thy banquets may be seasoned with numerous dishes.

CHAPTER III

FURTHER ILLUSTRATIONS OF the blessings of Communion from Psalm xxiii. and from Canticles.

Therefore thou hast come to the altar, thou has received the body of Christ. Hear again what sacraments thou hast obtained. Hear holy David speaking. He too foresaw these mysteries in the spirit and rejoiced and said that he lacked nothing. Why? Because he that hath received the body of Christ shall never hunger.

How often hast thou heard the twenty-second Psalm and not understood? See how it is suited to the heavenly sacraments. The Lord is my shepherd; and I shall not want. In a green pasture, there hath he made me to lie down. He hath tended me by the water of comfort, he converteth my soul. He hath led me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me. Thy rod and thy staff, they have comforted me. Rod is rule, staff is passion; that is the eternal Divinity of Christ, but also his passion in the body. The one created, the other redeemed. Thou hast prepared a table before me against them that trouble me. Thou hast anointed my head with oil, and my inebriating cup how glorious it is.

Therefore thou hast come to the altar, thou hast received the grace of Christ, thou hast obtained the heavenly sacraments. The Church rejoices in the redemption of many and is glad with spiritual exultation that her white-robed household stand at her side. Thou hast this in the Song of Songs. In joy she calls Christ, having ready a feast which can seem worthy of heavenly banqueting. Therefore she says: Let my brother come down into his garden and take the fruit of his fruit-trees. What are his fruit-trees? Thou becamest a dry tree in Adam; but now through the grace of Christ thou hast budded into a fruitful tree.

The Lord Jesus willingly accepts and with heavenly condescension answers to his church. I am come down, he says, into my garden; I have gathered the vintage of myrrh with my ointments. I have eaten my bread with my honey and I have drunk my wine with my milk. Eat, he says, my brethren, and be drunk.

I have gathered the vintage of myrrh with my ointments. What is that vintage? Learn the vine and you shall recognize the vintage. Thou hast brought, he says, a vine out of Egypt, that is the people of God. Ye are the vine, ye are the vintage; planted as a vine, as a vintage have ye given fruit. I have gathered the vintage of myrrh with my unguents, that is for the sweet savour which you have received.

I have eaten my bread with my honey. Dost thou see that in this bread there is no bitterness, but all is sweetness? I have drunk my wine with my milk. Dost thou see that the joy is of that kind which is not defiled with the stains of any sin? For as often as thou drinkest thou receivest remission of sins and art inebriated with the spirit. Whence also the Apostle says: Be not drunk with wine, but be filled with the Holy Spirit. For he who is drunk with wine staggers and reels: he who is inebriated with the Spirit is rooted in Christ. And therefore it is a glorious inebriation, which works sobriety of mind. This is what we briefly mention with respect to the sacraments.

CHAPTER IV

EXPOSITION OF THE Lord's Prayer.

Now, what remains save prayer? And think not that it is a matter of little worth, to know how to pray. The holy Apostles said to the Lord Jesus: Lord teach us to pray, as John taught his disciples. Then the Lord says a prayer, Our Father, which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name; thy kingdom come; thy will be done, as in heaven, so on earth. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our debts, as we also forgive our debtors. And let us not be led into temptation, but deliver us from evil. Thou seest how short the prayer is and full of all excellencies! What grace in the first word!

O man, thou didst not dare to raise thy face to heaven, thou didst direct thine eyes to the earth, and suddenly thou didst receive the grace of Christ; all thy sins were forgiven. From a bad servant thou becamest a good son. Therefore be bold, not because of thy own action, but because of the grace of Christ. For by grace are ye saved, says the Apostle. Therefore there is no arrogance here, but faith; to proclaim what thou hast received is not pride, but devotion. Therefore raise thy eyes to the Father who has begotten thee through the laver, to the Father who has redeemed thee through the Son, and say Our Father. A good boldness that, but modest. Thou calledst him "Father" as a son; but do not claim anything specifically for thyself. He is the Father of Christ alone specially, he is Father of us all in common, because he begot him alone, us he created. Therefore say thou also through grace, Our Father, that thou mayest deserve to be a son. Commend thyself by fixing thy looks and regards on the Church.

Our Father, which art in heaven. What is in heaven? Hear the scripture saying: The Lord is high above all heavens. And everywhere thou findest it written that the Lord is above the heaven of heavens, as if there were not in heaven angels too, as if there were not in heaven dominations too, but in those heavens of which it was said: The heavens declare the glory of God. Heaven is there where guilt hath ceased, where crimes keep holiday. Heaven is where there is no stroke of death.

Our Father, which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name. What is hallowed? Is it as if we desired that he should be hallowed who says: Ye shall be holy, for I am holy, as if any hallowing could accrue to him from our prayer? Not at all. But may it be hallowed in us, that its hallowing may reach us.

Our Father, which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name, thy kingdom come. As if the kingdom of God were not eternal. Jesus himself says: To this end was I born, and dost thou say to the Father, Thy kingdom come, as if it had not come? But the kingdom of God then comes, when you have obtained his grace. For he himself says: The kingdom of God is within you.

Thy kingdom come; thy will be done, as in heaven, so on earth. Give us this day our daily bread. By the blood of Christ all things are set at peace, whether in heaven or on earth. Heaven is hallowed, the devil is cast down. The place of his resort is that place, where is also the man whom he has deceived. Thy will be done, etc., i. e. let there be peace on earth as in heaven.

Give us this day our daily bread. I remember my sermon when I was dealing with the Sacraments. I said to you that before the words of Christ that which is offered is called bread: when the words of Christ have been uttered, it is no longer called bread, but is named body. Why then in the Lord's Prayer, which follows afterwards, does he say: Our bread? He called it bread indeed, but he called it ἐπιούσιον, that is supersubstantial. It is not the bread which passes into the body, but that bread of eternal life, which supports the substance of our soul. Therefore in Greek it is called ἐπιούσιον. The Latin, however, calls this bread "daily" which the Greeks call "coming." For the Greeks call the coming day τὴν ἐπιονˆσαν ἡμέραν. Therefore what the Latin and what the Greek text said seem both useful. The Greek indicated both in one expression, the Latin said "daily."

If it is daily bread, why dost thou take it once a year, as the Greeks in the East are accustomed to do? Take daily what is to profit thee daily. So live that thou mayest deserve to receive it daily. He who does not deserve to receive it daily, does not deserve to receive it once a year; as holy Job offered sacrifice daily for his sons, lest perchance they should have done any sin in heart or word. Therefore dost thou hear that as often as sacrifice is offered, the Lord's death, the Lord's resurrection, the Lord's ascension and the remission of sins is signified, and dost thou not take this bread of life daily? He who has a wound needs a medicine. The wound is that we are under sin; the medicine is the heavenly and venerable sacrament.

Give us this day our daily bread. If thou receivest daily, "this day" is "daily" to thee. If Christ is for thee "this day," he rises again for thee "daily." How? Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. Therefore "this day" is when Christ rises again. Yesterday and to-day he himself is, says the Apostle Paul. But in another place he says, The night is far spent, the day is at hand. Yesternight is far spent, the present day is at hand.

There follows: Forgive us our debts, as we also forgive our debtors. What is the debt but sin? Therefore if thou hadst not borrowed money at interest, thou wouldst not now be in want; therefore sin is imputed to thee. Thou hast had money, wherewith thou wast born rich. Thou wast rich, being made in the image and likeness of God. Thou hast lost what thou hadst, that is humility; whilst thou desirest to indicate thy pride, thou hast lost money, thou hast become naked as Adam, thou hast accepted from the devil a debt which was not necessary. And therefore thou who wast free in Christ hast become a debtor to the devil. The enemy held thy bond, but the Lord crucified it, and blotted it out with his blood. He took away thy debt, he restored thy liberty.

Well, therefore, does he say: And forgive us our debts, as we also forgive our debtors. Mark what thou sayest. As I forgive so do thou also forgive me. If thou hast forgiven, thou doest well in suing that it be forgiven thee. If thou dost not forgive, how canst thou sue him, that it may be forgiven thee?

And let us not be led into temptation, but deliver us from evil. Mark what he says: And let us not be led into temptation which we cannot endure. He doth not say: "Lead us not into temptation," but as an athlete he wishes such a trial as human nature can bear: that each may be delivered from evil, that is from the foe, from sin.

But the Lord who has taken away your sin, and pardoned your faults, is mighty to defend and guard you against the wiles of the devil your adversary, that the foe who is wont to beget guilt may not creep upon you. But he who commits himself to God fears not the devil. For if God is for us, who is against us? To him, therefore, be praise and glory from the ages and now, always, and for ever and ever. — Amen.

BOOK VI

CHAPTER I

THE REALITY OF the gift of Christ's flesh and blood in the sacrament is shown and illustrated from John vi.

As our Lord Jesus Christ is the true Son of God, not after the manner of men, through grace, but as a son of the essence of his father, so it is true flesh, as he himself said, which we receive, and his true blood is our drink.

But perchance thou mayest say, what the disciples of Christ also said then when they heard him saying: Unless a man eat my flesh and drink my blood, he shall not dwell in me, nor shall he have eternal life — perchance thou mayest say: "How are these things real? I who see the likeness, do not see the reality of blood."

First of all, I told thee of the word of Christ, which acts so that it can change and alter the appointed forms of nature. Then when the disciples of Christ endured not his saying, but hearing that he gave his flesh to eat and gave his blood to drink, they turned back; but Peter alone said: Thou hast the words of eternal life, and how shall I withdraw from thee? Accordingly, lest others should say this, feeling a shrinking from actual blood, and that yet the grace of redemption might remain, therefore thou receivest the sacrament in a similitude, but truly obtainest the grace and virtue of the nature.

I am, says he, the living bread which came down from heaven. But flesh did not come down from heaven, that is to say, he took flesh of the Virgin on earth. How then did bread come down from heaven, and that, too, living bread? Because our Lord Jesus Christ is alike a sharer both in divinity and body. And thou who receivest his flesh partakest of his divine essence in that food.

CHAPTER II

THE SACRAMENTS SHOW the operation of the Trinity and the equality of the Three Persons. Refutation of Arian teaching.

Therefore thou hast been taught about the sacraments, thou hast learnt all things most fully, because thou hast been baptized in the name of the Trinity. In all that we have done the mystery of the Trinity has been preserved. Everywhere Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, one operation, one sanctification, though certain things seem to be as it were special.

How? It is God who anointed thee, and the Lord signed thee, and put the Holy Spirit in thy heart. Thou hast therefore received the Holy Spirit in thy heart. Hear another truth, that as the Holy Spirit is in the heart, so also is Christ in the heart. How? Thou hast Christ saying this to his Church in the Song of Songs: Set me as a seal in thy heart, as a seal upon thy arms.

Therefore God anointed thee, Christ signed thee. How? Because thou wast signed with the image of the cross itself unto his passion, thou receivedst a seal unto his likeness, that thou mayest rise unto his image, and live after His pattern, who was crucified to sin and liveth to God. And thy old man plunged into the font was crucified to sin, but rose again unto God.

Then thou hast elsewhere a special work that, while God called thee, in baptism thou art as it were specially crucified with Christ. Then (as an instance of special operation) when thou receivest the spiritual seal, note that there is a distinction of persons, but that the whole mystery of the Trinity is bound up together.

Then what said the Apostle to thee, as was read the day before yesterday? Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. There are diversities of ministries, but the same Lord. There are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all. All, says he, God worketh. These words, too, were read of the Spirit of God: one and the same Spirit dividing to each as He wills. Hearken to the Scripture saying that the Spirit divides according to His own will, not in obedience to others. So then the Spirit divides to you grace as He wills, not as He is bidden, and chiefly so because He is the Spirit of God, the Spirit of Christ. And hold fast this, that He is the Holy Spirit, the Spirit of God, the Spirit of Christ, the Spirit the Paraclete.

The Arians think that they derogate from the Holy Spirit, if they speak of Him as the Spirit the Paraclete. What does Paraclete mean but consoler? As though we did not read of the Father that He himself is the God of consolation. Thou seest then that they think that an attribute, which pious affection proclaims, as showing the power of the eternal Father, must be derogatory to the Holy Spirit.

CHAPTER III

HOW AND WHERE Christians ought to pray.

Now learn how we should pray. Many are the excellences of prayer. Where we should pray is no small matter, no small subject of inquiry. The Apostle says: I desire that men should pray in every place, lifting up pure hands without wrath and disputing. And the Lord says in the Gospel: But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy chamber, and when thou hast shut the door, pray to thy father. Does not there seem to be a contradiction between the words of the Apostle, Pray in every place, and those of the Lord, Enter into thy chamber and pray? But there is no contradiction. Let us then clear up this point. Then, how thou shouldst begin prayer, under what system order its various parts, what subjoin, what state as petition, how close the prayer, then for whom thou shouldst pray — all these we may discuss.

First, where thou shouldst pray. Paul seems to say one thing and the Lord another. Was it possible that Paul could teach anything contrary to the precepts of Christ? Surely not. Why? Because he is not the opponent, but the interpreter of Christ. Be ye imitators, he says, of me, as I also of Christ. What then? Thou canst pray everywhere, and yet always pray in thy chamber. Everywhere thou hast thy chamber. Though thou be amidst the nations, amidst the Jews, thou hast everywhere thy secret place. Thy mind is thy chamber. Though thou be set in a multitude, yet in the inner man thou possessest thy place of secrecy and retirement.

But thou when thou prayest enter into thy chamber. Well does he say enter; that thou mayest not pray like the Jew, to whom it is said: This people honoureth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me. Let not then thy prayer proceed only from thy lips. Let the whole intention of thy mind be fixed, enter into the recess of thy heart, enter it with thy whole self. Let not him, whom thou wishest to please, see thee to be careless. Let him see that thou prayest from the heart, that when thou prayest from the heart he may deign to hear thee.

But thou when thou prayest, enter into thy chamber. In another place thou hast this too: Go, my people, enter into thy secret places, shut thy door, hide thyself for a little, until the anger of the Lord be overpast. This the Lord spake by the prophet, but in the Gospel he said: But thou when thou prayest, enter into thy chamber, and, when thou hast shut the door, pray to thy Father.

What is meant by "shutting the door"? Hear what door thou hast, which thou shouldest shut, when thou prayest. Would that the women would listen to this!1 Thou hast heard it already. Holy David taught thee when he said: Lord, set a guard upon my mouth and a door round about my lips. Elsewhere there is the door, which the Apostle Paul speaks of, when he says: That the door of the word may be opened for me, to speak the mystery of Christ. That is, when thou prayest, do not shout aloud, nor let thy prayer go forth abroad, nor noise it among the people. In thy privacy pray, sure that he can hear thee in private, who sees all things, hears all things. And pray in secrecy to thy Father, who hears thy secret prayers.

CHAPTER IV

ON PRAYER IN secret. Exposition of 1 Tim. ii. 8.

But let us ask why this is profitable, why we should rather pray in secrecy, than with loud calling. Hearken. Let us take an example from the usage of men. If thou art asking of a man, who hears quickly, thou dost not think that there is need of loud shouting. Thou askest softly in moderate tones. If thou askest of some deaf person, dost not thou begin to call aloud, that he may be able to hear thee? So then he who clamours thinks that God cannot hear him, unless he clamours. And in asking Him thus he derogates from His power. But he who prays in silence shows his faith, and confesses that God is the searcher of the heart and reins, and hears thy prayer before it is uttered by thy lips.

Let us then consider this — I would that men should pray in every place. Why did he say "men"? Surely prayer is common both to men and women. I find no reason for this, unless indeed the holy Apostle said "men," lest the women should be too forward and wrongly understand the words in every place and begin to clamour everywhere. Such women we cannot endure in the Church.

I would that men, that is those who can observe the precept, should pray in every place, lifting up pure hands. What is meant by lifting up pure hands? Oughtest thou in thy prayer to show forth the cross of the Lord to all and sundry? That indeed is a proof of thy piety, not of thy modesty. But it is possible for thee to pray, without displaying any outward figure, but lifting up thy actions. If thou wouldst have thy prayer effective, lift pure hands by thy innocence. Lift them not every day. Thou hast lifted them once for all; there is no need to lift them again.

I would that men should pray in every place, lifting up pure hands without wrath and disputing. Nothing can be truer. Wrath, it says, destroys even the wise. Therefore at all times, as far as is possible, a Christian man should control his anger, and especially when he comes to prayer. Let not the fierceness of wrath disturb thy mind, let not a kind of fury hinder thy prayer. But rather come with tranquil mind. For why wilt thou be angry? Has thy servant committed a fault? Thou comest to pray that thy faults may be forgiven thee, and thou art indignant with another! That is what is meant by “without wrath.”

CHAPTER V

ON THE MODESTY which women ought to show in prayer. The parts of prayer are illustrated from 1 Tim. ii. 1. Application to the Lord's Prayer and Psalm viii. Conclusion.

Now as to "disputing." Often a man of business comes to prayer, or a covetous man. One thinks of money, the other of gain, one of honour to be won, the other of avarice; and yet he thinks that God can hear him. And therefore when thou prayest, it is right that thou shouldest put divine things before human things.

Likewise too I would that the women pray, not flaunting themselves in ornaments or in pearls, says the Apostle Paul. The Apostle Peter also says: "The influence of a woman availeth much to turn the affections of her husband by the good conversation of his wife, and to convert the unbeliever to the grace of Christ." Such power has the grave demeanour and chastity of a wife and her good conversation to summon her husband to faith and devotion, and the same is often effected by the words of a wise man. Therefore let a woman's adornment, he says, not be in decking of the hair or braided locks, but in prayer from a pure heart, where is the hidden man of the heart, which is always rich in the sight of God. Thou hast, therefore, wherein thou mayest be rich. In Christ are thy riches, the badges of chastity and purity, faith, devotion, and mercy. These are the treasures of righteousness, as the prophet said.

Next comes the question, what should be the beginning of prayer? Tell me, if you wished to make a request of a man and were to begin thus: "Come, grant me what I seek of thee," does not this seem an arrogant form of prayer? Prayer, therefore, should begin with the praise of God, that thou mayest ask of the almighty God, to whom all things are possible, who has the will to grant. Then follows the supplication, as the Apostle taught us when he said, I beseech, therefore, that first of all prayers, supplications, petitions, giving of thanks be made. The first part of the prayer, therefore, ought to contain the praise of God, the second the supplication, the third the petition, the fourth the giving of thanks. Thou shouldest not, like a starveling for food, begin with food, but with the praises of God.

Thus it is that your prudent public speakers have this rule that they court the favour of the judge. They begin with his praises, that they may have the goodwill of him who tries the case. Then he gradually begins to beg the judge to deign to listen to him patiently. Thirdly, he dares to put forward his petition, to set forth what he seeks. Fourthly, as he began with the praises of God, so he should end with praise.

Thou findest this in the Lord's prayer, Our Father, which art in heaven. It is an act of praise to God to declare Him a Father. Therein lies the glory that belongs to fatherly goodness. It is the praise of God, that he dwells in heaven, not on earth. Our Father, which art in Heaven, hallowed be thy name. That is, that he should hallow his servants. For his name is hallowed in us, when men are declared to be Christians. So then Hallowed be thy name shows a wish. Thy kingdom come — a petition that the kingdom of Christ be in us. If God reigns in us, the adversary cannot find a place. Guilt does not reign, sin does not reign. But virtue reigns, chastity reigns, devotion reigns. Then: Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. This petition is the chief of those things which are asked. And forgive us, he says, our debts, as we also forgive our debtors. Therefore daily receive, that daily thou mayest ask forgiveness for thy debt. And suffer us not to be led into temptation, but deliver us from evil. What follows? Hearken what the priest says: "Through our Lord Jesus Christ, in whom, with whom, there is to thee honour, praise, glory, majesty, power, with the Holy Spirit, from all ages, both now and always and for ever and ever. — Amen."3

Another example. Though the Psalms of David are one book, possessing the excellences of prayer, which we have mentioned above, yet often too in a single psalm we find represented all these parts of prayer, as we see in the eighth psalm. Thus he begins as follows: O Lord, our Lord, how wonderful is thy name in all the earth. So then we have the first part of the prayer. Then the supplication. For I shall behold thy heavens, the works of thy fingers, that is, I shall behold the heavens, the moon and the stars which thou hast founded. He surely does not mean, I shall see the sky, but I shall see the heavens, in which celestial grace and splendour begin to shine. These heavens then the prophet promised should be given to him, since he deserved celestial grace from the Lord. The moon and the stars which thou hast founded. He calls the Church the moon, and the saints shining with celestial grace he calls the stars. Then observe his petition: What is man that thou are mindful of him, or the son of man that thou visitest him? Thou madest him a little lower than the angels, thou hast crowned him with glory and honour, and hast set him over the works of thy hands. Then there is another thanksgiving: Thou hast put all things under his feet, all sheep and oxen, yea, and the beasts of the field.

We have taught, so far as we could grasp them, truths which perhaps we have not learned, and we have set them forth as far as we were able. May your holiness, informed by priestly training, labour to hold fast what it has received from God. And may that oblation, like a pure victim, always find in you its seal, that you yourselves may be able to attain to grace and the rewards of virtue by our Lord Jesus Christ, to whom is glory, honour, praise, everlastingness, from the ages, and now, and always, and for ever and ever. — Amen.

LIBER PRIMUS.

CAPUT PRIMUM.

EPISCOPI PROPRIUM MUNUS, docere: sibi autem discendum esse, ut doceat; immo etiam docendum quod non didicerit, aut saltem et discendum simul, et docendum. 1. Non arrogans videri arbitror, si inter filios suscipiam affectum docendi; cum ipse humilitatis magister dixerit: Venite, filii, audite me; timorem Domini docebo vos (Psal. XXXIII, 12). In quo licet et humilitatem verecundiae ejus spectare et gratiam. Dicendo enim, timorem Domini, qui 2 communis videtur esse omnibus, expressit insigne verecundiae. Et tamen cum ipse timor initium sapientiae sit, et effector beatitudinis (quoniam timentes Deum beati sunt), praeceptorem se sapientiae edocendae, et demonstratorem beatitudinis adipiscendae, evidenter significavit.

2. Et nos ergo ad imitandam verecundiam seduli, ad conferendam gratiam non usurpatores, quae illi Spiritus infudit sapientiae, ea per illum nobis manifestata, et visu comperta atque exemplo, vobis quasi liberis tradimus; cum jam effugere non possimus officium docendi, quod nobis refugientibus imposuit sacerdotii necessitudo: Dedit enim Deus quosdam quidem apostolos, quosdam autem prophetas, alios vero evangelistas, alios autem pastores et doctores (Ephes. IV, 11).

3. Non igitur mihi apostolorum gloriam vindico. 3 Quis enim hoc, nisi quos ipse Filius elegit Dei? Non prophetarum gratiam, non virtutem evangelistarum, non pastorum circumspectionem: sed tantummodo intentionem et diligentiam circa Scripturas divinas opto assequi, quam ultimam posuit Apostolus inter officia sanctorum, et hanc ipsam ut docendi studio possim discere. Unus enim verus magister est, qui solus non didicit quod omnes doceret: homines autem discunt prius quod doceant, et ab illo accipiunt quod aliis tradant.

4. Quod ne ipsum quidem mihi accidit. Ego enim raptus de tribunalibus atque administrationis infulis ad sacerdotium, docere vos coepi, quod ipse non didici. Itaque factum est ut prius docere inciperem, quam discere. Discendum igitur mihi simul et docendum est; quoniam non vacavit ante discere.

CAPUT II.

MULTIPLEX LOQUENDO INCURRI periculum, cujus remedium Scriptura in silentio demonstrat esse positum.

5. Quid autem prae caeteris debemus discere, quam tacere, ut possimus loqui: ne prius me vox condemnet mea, quam absolvat aliena; scriptum est enim: Ex verbis tuis condemnaberis (Matth. XII, 37). Quid opus est igitur ut properes periculum suscipere condemnationis, loquendo; cum tacendo possis esse tutior? Quamplures vidi loquendo peccatum incidisse, vix quemquam tacendo: ideoque tacere nosse quam loqui difficilius est. Scio loqui plerosque, cum tacere nesciant. Rarum est tacere quemquam, cum sibi loqui nihil prosit. Sapiens est ergo qui novit tacere. Denique Sapientia Dei dixit: Dominus dedit mihi linguam eruditionis, quando oporteat sermonem dicere (Esai. L, 4). Merito ergo sapiens qui a Domino accipit, quo tempore sibi loquendum sit. Unde bene ait Scriptura: Homo sapiens tacebit usque ad tempus (Eccli. XX, 7).

6. Ideo sancti Domini, qui scirent quia vox hominis plerumque peccati annuntiatio est, et initium erroris humani, sermo est hominis, amabant tacere. Denique sanctus Domini ait: Dixi custodiam vias meas, ut non delinquam in lingua mea (Psal. XXXVIII, 2). Sciebat enim et legerat divinae esse protectionis, ut homo a linguae suae flagello absconderetur, et a conscientiae suae testimonio (Job V, 21). Verberamur enim tacito cogitationis nostrae opprobrio; et judicio conscientiae: verberamur etiam vocis nostrae verbere, cum loquimur ea quorum sono caeditur animus noster, et mens consauciatur. Quis autem est qui mundum cor a peccatorum habeat colluvione, aut non delinquat in lingua sua? Et ideo quia neminem videbat sanctum os servare posse ab immunditia sermonis, ipse sibi silentio legem imposuit innocentiae; 4 ut tacendo culpam declinaret, quam vix effugere posset loquendo. 7. Audiamus ergo cautionis magistrum: Dixi, custodiam vias meas, hoc est, dixi mihi, tacito cogitationis praecepto indixi mihi, ut custodirem vias meas. Aliae sunt viae quas debemus sequi, aliae quas custodire: sequi vias Domini, custodire nostras; ne in culpam dirigant. Potes autem custodire, si non cito loquaris. Lex dicit: Audi, Israel, Dominum Deum tuum (Deut. VI, 3). Non dixit, loquere, sed audi. Ideo Eva lapsa est, quia locuta est viro, quod non audierat a Domino Deo suo. Prima vox Dei dicit tibi: Audi. Si audias, custodis vias tuas: et si lapsus es, cito corrigis. In quo enim corrigit juvenior viam suam, nisi in custodiendo verba Domini (Psal. CXVIII, 9)? Tace ergo prius, et audi, ut non delinquas in lingua tua. 8. Grave malum ut aliquis ore suo condemnetur. Etenim si pro otioso verbo reddet unusquisque rationem (Matth. XII, 36), quanto magis pro verbo impuritatis et turpitudinis! Graviora enim sunt verba praecipitationis quam otiosa. Ergo, si pro otioso verbo ratio poscitur, quanto magis pro sermone impietatis poena exsolvitur!

CAPUT III.

NON PERPETUUM NEC otiosum esse debere silentium: et quo pacto custodia cordi ac ori contra inordinatos affectus adhibenda sit.

9. Quid igitur? Mutos nos esse oportet? Minime. Est enim tempus tacendi, et est tempus loquendi (Eccles. III, 7). Deinde si pro otioso verbo reddimus rationem, videamus ne reddamus et pro otioso silentio. Est enim et negotiosum silentium; ut erat Susannae, quae plus egit tacendo, quam si esset locuta (Dan. XIII, 3). Tacendo enim apud homines, locuta est Deo: nec ullum majus indicium suae castitatis invenit, quam silentium. Conscientia loquebatur, ubi vox non audiebatur: nec quaerebat pro se hominum judicium, quae habebat Domini testimonium. Ab illo igitur volebat absolvi, quem sciebat nullo modo posse falli. Ipse Dominus in Evangelio (Matth. XXVI, 63) tacens operabatur salutem hominum. Recte ergo David non silentium sibi indixit perpetuum, sed custodiam. 10. Custodiamus ergo cor nostrum, custodiamus os nostrum; utrumque enim scriptum est: hic, ut os custodiamus, alibi tibi dicitur: Omni custodia serva cor tuum (Prov. IV, 23). Si custodiebat David, tu non custodies? Si immunda labia habebat Esaias, qui dixit: O miser ego, quoniam compunctus sum, quia cum sim homo, et immunda labia habeam (Esai. VI, 5): si propheta Domini immunda habebat labia, quomodo nos munda habemus? 11. Et cui, nisi unicuique nostrum scriptum est: Sepi possessionem tuam spinis . . . et argentum 5 et aurum tuum alliga, et ori tuo fac ostium et vectem, et verbis tuis jugum et stateram (Eccli. XXVIII, 28, 29)? Possessio tua mens tua est: aurum tuum cor tuum est: argentum tuum eloquium tuum est: Eloquia Domini, eloquia casta, argentum igne examinatum (Psal. XI, 7). Bona etiam possessio mens bona.

Denique possessio pretiosa homo mundus. Sepi ergo hanc possessionem, et circumvallato cogitationibus, munito spinis, sollicitudinibus; ne in eam irruant, et captivam ducant irrationabiles corporis passiones, ne incursent motus graves, ne diripiant vindemiam ejus, transeuntes viam. Custodi interiorem hominem tuum. Noli eum quasi vilem negligere ac fastidire, quia pretiosa possessio est. Et merito pretiosa, cujus fructus non caducus et temporalis, sed stabilis atque aeternae salutis est. Cole ergo possessionem tuam, ut sint tibi agri.

12. Alliga sermonem tuum, ne luxuriet, ne lasciviat, et multiloquio peccata sibi colligat. Sit restrictior, et ripis suis coerceatur. Cito lutum colligit amnis exundans. Alliga sensum tuum, non sit remissus ac defluus, ne dicatur de te: Non est malagma apponere, neque oleum, neque alligaturam (Esai. I, 6). Habet suas habenas mentis sobrietas, quibus regitur et gubernatur. 13. Sit ori tuo ostium, ut claudatur ubi oportet: et obseretur diligentius; ne quis in iracundiam excitet vocem tuam, et contumeliam rependas contumeliae. Audisti hodie lectum: Irascimini et nolite peccare (Psal. IV, 5). Ergo etsi irascimur, quia affectus naturae est, non potestatis; malum sermonem non proferamus de ore nostro, ne in culpam ruamus: sed jugum sit verbis tuis et statera, hoc est, humilitas atque mensura; ut lingua tua menti subdita sit. Restringatur habenae vinculis, frenos habeat suos, quibus revocari possit ad mensuram: sermones proferat libra examinatos justitiae: ut sit gravitas in sensu, in sermone pondus, atque in verbis modus.

CAPUT IV.

EADEM CUSTODIA PROSPICITUR, ne a pravis motibus, sed a recta ratione prodeat oratio: in qua potissimum nobis diabolus insidiatur.

14. Haec si custodiat aliquis, fit mitis, mansuetus, modestus. Custodiendo enim os suum, et retinendo linguam suam, nec prius loquendo quam interroget, et expendat atque examinet verba sua, si dicendum hoc, si dicendum adversus hunc, si tempus sermonis hujus est: is profecto exercet modestiam, ac mansuetudinem, et patientiam; ut non ex indignatione et ira in sermonem erumpat, non alicujus passionis indicium det in verbis suis, non ardorem libidinis flammare in sermone suo indicet, 6 et inesse dictis suis stimulos iracundiae: ne sermo postremo qui commendare interiora debet, vitium aliquod esse in moribus, aperiat et prodat. 15. Tunc enim maxime insidiatur adversarius, quando videt nobis passiones aliquas generari: tunc fomites movet, laqueos parat. Unde non immerito, sicut audisti hodie legi, Propheta dicit: Quia ipse liberavit me de laqueo venantium et a verbo aspero (Psal. XC, 3). Symmachus irritationis verbum dixit, alii perturbationis. Laqueus adversarii est sermo noster: sed etiam ipse non minus adversarius nobis. Loquimur plerumque quod excipiat inimicus, et quasi nostro gladio nos vulneret. Quanto tolerabilius est alieno gladio, quam nostro perire! 16. Explorat ergo adversarius nostra arma, et concutit sua tela. Si viderit moveri me, inserit aculeos suos, ut seminaria jurgiorum excitet. Si emisero verbum indecorum, laqueum suum stringit. Interdum mihi quasi escam proponit vindictae possibilitatem; ut dum vindicari cupio, ipse me inseram laqueo, et nodum mortis astringam mihi. Si quis ergo hunc adversarium sentit praesentem esse, tunc magis custodiam adhibere debet ori suo, ne det locum adversario: sed non multi hunc vident.

CAPUT V.

CONTRA VISIBILEM ETIAM adversarium, cum nos instigat, utendum silentio, cujus unius ope superiores evadimus, et humilitatem quae exhibenda adversus omnes, conservamus.

17. Sed etiam ille cavendus est, qui videri potest, quicumque irritat, quicumque incitat, quicumque exasperat, quicumque incentiva luxuriae aut libidinis suggerit. Quando ergo aliquis nobis conviciatur, lacessit, ad violentiam provocat, ad jurgium vocat: tunc silentium exerceamus, tunc muti fieri non erubescamus. Peccator est enim qui nos provocat, qui injuriam facit, et nos similes sui fieri desiderat. 18. Denique si taceas, si dissimules, solet dicere: Quid taces? Loquere, si audes. Sed non audes: mutus es, elinguem te feci. Si ergo taceas, plus rumpitur: victum sese putat, irrisum, posthabitum atque illusum. Si respondeas, superiorem se factum arbitratur, quia parem invenit. Si enim taceas, dicetur: Ille conviciatus est, hunc contempsit iste. Si referas contumeliam, dicetur: Ambo conviciati sunt. Uterque condemnatur, nemo absolvitur. Ergo illius est studium, ut irritet, ut similia illi loquar, similia agam: justi est autem dissimulare, nihil loqui, tenere bonae fructum conscientiae, plus committere bonorum judicio, quam criminantis insolentiae, 7 contentum esse gravitate morum suorum. Hoc est enim silere a bonis; quia bene sibi conscius, falsis non debet moveri: nec aestimare plus ponderis in alieno esse convicio, quam in suo testimonio. 19. Ita fit ut etiam humilitatem custodiat. Si autem nolit humilior videri, talia tractat, et dicit ipse secum: Hic ergo ut me contemnat, et in conspectu meo loquatur talia adversum me, quasi non possim ego ei aperire os meum? Cur non etiam ergo dicam, in quibus eum moestificare possim? Hic ergo ut mihi injurias faciat, quasi vir non sim, quasi vindicare me non possim? Hic ut me criminetur, quasi ego non possim graviora in eum componere? 20. Qui talia dicit, non est mitis atque humilis, non est sine tentatione. Tentator eum exagitat, ipse ei tales opiniones inserit. Plerumque adhibet hominem, atque apponit nequam spiritus, qui haec illi dicat: sed tu in petra fixum vestigium tene. Etsi servus convicium dicat, justus tacet; etsi infirmus contumeliam faciat, justus tacet: etsi pauper criminetur, justus non respondet. Haec sunt arma justi, ut cedendo vincat. Sicut periti jaculandi cedentes solent vincere, et fugientes gravioribus sequentem vulnerare ictibus.

CAPUT VI.

HAC IN RE silentium atque humilitatem David imitanda esse, ne digni videamur injuria.

21. Quid enim opus est moveri, cum audimus convicia? Cur non imitamur dicentem: Obmutui, et humiliatus sum, et silui a bonis (Psal. XXXVIII, 3)? An hoc dixit tantummodo, non etiam fecit David? Immo et fecit (II Reg. XVI, 6 et seq.). Nam cum ei conviciaretur Semei filius Jemini, tacebat David: et quamvis septus armatis, non retorquebat convicium, non ultionem quaerebat, eousque ut dicenti sibi Sarviae filio quod vindicare in eum vellet, non permiserit. Ibat ergo tamquam mutus et humiliatus, ibat tacens, nec movebatur, cum vir appellaretur sanguinis, qui erat conscius propriae mansuetudinis. Non ergo movebatur conviciis, cui abundabat bonorum operum conscientia.

22. Itaque is qui cito injuria movetur, facit se dignum videri contumelia, dum vult ea indignus probari. Melior est itaque qui contemnit injuriam, quam qui dolet; qui enim contemnit, quasi non sentiat, ita despicit: qui autem dolet, quasi senserit, torquetur. 8

CAPUT VII.

QUAM PULCHRE PROOEMII loco usurpatus fuerit psalmus XXXVIII, quo inductus Vir sanctus de Officiis scribere constituit: idque potiori jure quam olim Cicero ad filium, et quam ob causam.

23. Neque improvide ad vos filios meos scribens, hujus psalmi prooemio (Psal. XXXVIII, 1) usus sum. Quem psalmum propheta David sancto Idithum canendum dedit, ego vobis tenendum suadeo, delectatus ejus sensu profundo et virtute sententiarum. Advertimus enim ex his quae breviter libavimus, et silendi patientiam, et opportunitatem loquendi, et in posterioribus (Ibid., 8) contemptum divitiarum, quae maxima virtutum fundamenta sunt, hoc psalmo doceri. Dum igitur hunc psalmum considero, successit animo de Officiis scribere. 24. De quibus etiamsi quidam Philosophiae studentes scripserint, ut Panaetius, et filius ejus apud Graecos, Tullius apud Latinos; non alienum duxi a nostro munere, ut etiam ipse scriberem. Et sicut Tullius ad erudiendum filium, ita ego quoque ad vos informandos filios meos; neque enim minus vos diligo quos in Evangelio genui, quam si conjugio suscepissem. Non enim vehementior est natura ad diligendum, quam gratia. Plus certe diligere debemus quos perpetuo nobiscum putamus futuros, quam quos in hoc tantum saeculo. Illi degeneres nascuntur frequenter, qui dedeceant patrem: vos ante elegimus, ut diligamus. Itaque illi necessitate diliguntur, quae non satis idonea atque diuturna est ad perpetuitatem diligendi magistra: vos judicio, quo magnum charitatis pondus ad vim diligendi adjungitur, probare quos diligas, et diligere quos elegeris.

CAPUT VIII.

NOMEN OFFICII, NON solum philosophis, sed etiam scriptoribus sacris usitatum esse; et unde hoc deductum?

25. Ergo quoniam personae conveniunt, videamus utrum res ipsa conveniat scribere de Officiis: et utrum hoc nomen philosophorum tantummodo scholae aptum sit, an etiam in Scripturis reperiatur divinis. Pulchre itaque dum legimus hodie Evangelium (quasi adhortaretur ad scribendum) Spiritus sanctus obtulit nobis lectionem, qua confirmaremur etiam in nobis Officium dici posse. Nam cum Zacharias sacerdos obmutuisset in templo, et loqui non posset: Factum est, inquit, ut impleti sunt dies Officii ejus, abiit in domum suam (Luc. I, 23). Legimus igitur Officium dici a nobis posse. 9 26. Nec ratio ipsa abhorret, quandoquidem Officium ab efficiendo dictum putamus, quasi efficium: sed propter decorem sermonis una immutata littera, officium nuncupari: vel certe, ut ea agas, quae nulli officiant, prosint omnibus.

CAPUT IX.

OFFICIUM AB HONESTO et utili, nec non ab amborum inter se comparatione desumi: sed a Christianis nihil quod ad futuram vitam non conferat, honestum aut utile agnosci; atque adeo non supervacaneum fore hunc de Officio tractatum.

27. Officia autem ab honesto et utili duci existimaverunt, et de iis duobus eligere quid praestet: deinde incidere ut duo concurrant honesta, et duo utilia; et quaeratur quid honestius, et quid utilius. Primum igitur in tres partes Officium dividitur: honestum, et utile, et quid praestantius. Deinde haec tria in quinque genera diviserunt, in duo honesta, et duo utilia, et eligendi judicium. Prima pertinere dicunt ad decus honestatemque vitae, secunda ad vitae commoda, copias, opes, facultates: de iis eligendis subesse judicium. Haec illi. 28. Nos autem nihil omnino nisi quod deceat et honestum sit, futurorum magis quam praesentium metimur formula: nihilque utile nisi quod ad vitae illius aeternae prosit gratiam definimus, non quod ad delectationem praesentis. Neque aliqua commoda in facultatibus et copiis opum constituimus: sed incommoda haec putamus, si non rejiciantur; eaque oneri cum sint aestimari magis, quam dispendio cum erogantur.

29. Non superfluum igitur scriptionis nostrae est opus, quia Officium diversa aestimamus regula atque illi aestimaverunt. Illi saeculi commoda in bonis ducunt, nos haec etiam in detrimentis; quoniam qui hic recipit bona, ut ille dives, illic cruciatur: et Lazarus qui mala hic pertulit, illic consolationem invenit (Luc. XVI, 25). Deinde qui illa non legunt, nostra legent si volent: qui non sermonum supellectilem, neque artem dicendi; sed simplicem rerum exquirunt gratiam.

CAPUT X.

PRIUS SACRIS LITTERIS decorum quam in philosophorum libris frequentatum esse: Pythagoram silentii sui legem mutuatum a Davide: sed hujus tamen praestare disciplinam; cum primum officium sit loquendi modus.

30. Decorum autem in nostris Scripturis primo constitui loco (quod Graece πρέπον 10 dicitur) instruimur et docemur, legentes: Te decet hymnus, Deus, in Sion (Psal. LXIV, 2): vel Graece, Σοὶ πρέπει ὑμνὸς ὦ Θεὸς, ἐν Σίων. Et Apostolus ait: Loquere quae decent sanam doctrinam (Tit. II, 1). Et alibi: Decebat autem eum per quem omnia, et propter quem omnia, multis filiis in gloriam adductis, ducem salutis eorum per passionem consummari (Hebr. II, 10). 31. Numquid prior Panaetius, numquid Aristoteles, qui et ipse disputavit de Officio, quam David; cum et ipse Pythagoras, qui legitur Socrate antiquior, prophetam secutus David (Psal. XXXVIII, 2 et seq.), legem silentii dederit suis? Sed ille ut per quinquennium discipulis usum inhiberet loquendi: David autem non ut naturae munus imminueret; sed ut custodiam proferendi sermonis doceret. Et Pythagoras quidem ut non loquendo loqui doceret, David ut loquendo magis disceremus loqui. Quomodo enim sine exercitio doctrina, aut sine usu profectus?

32. Qui disciplinam bellicam vult assequi, quotidie exercetur armis, et tamquam in procinctu positus praeludit praelium, et velut coram posito praetendit hoste: atque ad peritiam viresque jaculandi, vel suos explorat lacertos, vel adversariorum declinat ictus, et vigilanti exit obtutu. Qui navim in mari regere gubernaculis studet, vel remis ducere, prius in fluvio praeludit. Qui canendi suavitatem et vocis affectant praestantiam, prius sensim canendo vocem excitant. Et qui viribus corporis, legitimoque luctandi certamine coronam petunt, quotidiano usu palaestrae durantes membra, nutrientes patientiam, laborem assuescunt. 33. Haec ipsa natura nos in parvulis docet, quod prius sonos meditantur loquendi, ut loqui discant. Itaque sonus exercitatio quaedam et palaestra vocis est. Ita ergo et qui volunt discere cautionem loquendi, quod naturae est, non negent: quod custodiae est, exerceant; ut qui in specula sunt, speculando intendant, non dormiendo. Omnis enim res propriis ac domesticis exercitiis augetur. 34. Ergo David tacebat non semper, sed pro tempore: non jugiter, neque omnibus; sed irritanti adversario, provocanti peccatori non respondebat. Et, sicut alibi ait (Psal. XXXVII, 13, 14), loquentes vanitatem, et cogitantes dolum, non audiebat quasi surdus, et quasi mutus non aperiebat illis os suum; quia et alibi habes: Noli respondere imprudenti ad imprudentiam ejus, ne similis illi fias (Prov. XXVI, 4).

35. Primum igitur officium est loquendi modus. Hoc sacrificium laudis Deo dependitur, 11 hoc reverentia exhibetur, cum Scripturae divinae leguntur, hoc honorantur parentes. Scio loqui plerosque, cum tacere nesciant. Rarum est tacere quemquam, cum sibi non prosit loqui. Sapiens ut loquatur, multa prius considerat, quid dicat, aut cui dicat, quo in loco, et tempore. Est ergo et tacendi et loquendi modus: est etiam facti modus. Pulchrum igitur tenere mensuram officii.

CAPUT XI.

OFFICIUM OMNE, AUT medium, aut perfectum esse Scripturae testimoniis ostenditur: cui subjungitur misericordiae laus, atque ad eam exhortatio.

36. Officium autem omne aut medium, aut perfectum est, quod aeque Scripturarum auctoritate probare possumus. Habemus etenim in Evangelio dixisse Dominum: Si vis in vitam aeternam venire, serva mandata. Dixit ille? Quae? Jesus autem dixit illi: Non homicidium facies, non adulterabis, non facies furtum, non falsum testimonium dices: honora patrem et matrem: et, Diliges proximum tuum sicut te ipsum (Matth. XIX, 17 et seq.). Haec sunt media officia, quibus aliquid deest. 37.

Denique dicit illi adolescens: Omnia haec custodivi a juventute mea, quid adhuc mihi deest? Ait illi Jesus: Si vis perfectus esse, vade, vende omnia bona tua, et da pauperibus, et habebis thesaurum in coelo, et veni, sequere me (Ibid., XX, 21). Et supra (Matth. V, 44, 45) ita est scriptum, ubi diligendos inimicos, et orandum dicit pro calumniantibus et persequentibus nos, et benedicere maledicentes; hoc nos facere debemus, si volumus perfecti esse, sicut Pater noster qui in coelo est, qui super bonos et malos solem jubet radios suos fundere, et pluvia et rore terras universorum sine ulla discretione pinguescere. Hoc est igitur perfectum officium, quod κατόρθωμα dixerunt Graeci, quo corriguntur omnia, quae aliquos potuerunt lapsus habere. 38. Bona etiam misericordia, quae et ipsa perfectos facit, quia imitatur perfectum Patrem. Nihil tam commendat Christianam animam quam misericordia. Primum in pauperes, ut communes judices partus naturae, quae omnibus ad usum generat fructus terrarum; ut quod habes, largiaris pauperi, et consortem et conformem tuum adjuves. Tu nummum largiris, ille vitam accipit: tu pecuniam das, ille substantiam suam aestimat. Tuus denarius, census illius est.

39. Ad haec plus ille tibi confert, cum sit debitor salutis. Si nudum vestias, te ipsum induis justitiam. Si peregrinum sub tectum inducas tuum, si suscipias egentem: ille tibi acquirit sanctorum amicitias et aeterna tabernacula. Non mediocris ista gratia. Corporalia seminas, et recipis spiritalia. Miraris judicium Domini de sancto Job? Mirare virtutem ejus, qui poterat dicere: 12 Oculus eram caecorum, pes claudorum. Ego eram infirmorum pater, velleribus agnorum meorum calefacti sunt humeri eorum. Foris non habitabat peregrinus: ostium autem meum omni venienti patebat (Job XXIX, 15, 16). Beatus plane, de cujus domo numquam vacuo sinu pauper exivit; neque enim quisquam magis beatus, quam qui intelligit super pauperis necessitatem et infirmi atque inopis aerumnam. In die judicii habebit salutem a Domino, quem habebit suae debitorem misericordiae.

CAPUT XII.

NE QUIS AB exercenda misericordia revocetur, ostenditur Deum curare actus hominum, et quemlibet improbum in ipsa opum affluentia miserum esse Jobi auctoritate demonstratur.

40. Sed plerique revocantur ab officio dispensatricis misericordiae, dum putant hominis actus non curare Dominum, aut nescire eum quid in occultis geramus, quid teneat nostra conscientia: aut judicium ejus nequaquam justum videri, quando peccatores divitiis abundare vident, gaudere honoribus, sanitate, liberis: contra autem, justos inopes degere, inhonoros, sine liberis, infirmos corpore, luctu frequenti. 41. Nec mediocris ea quaestio, quando quidem tres illi reges amici Job, propterea eum peccatorem pronuntiabant, quia inopem factum ex divite, orbatum liberis ex fecundo parente, perfusum ulceribus, inhorrentemque vibicibus, exaratum vulneribus a capite usque ad pedes videbant (Job. IV, 3, 11, 14 et seq.). Quibus hanc sanctus Job proponit assertionem: Si ego propter peccata mea haec patior, Cur impii vivunt? Inveteraverunt autem, et in divitiis semen eorum secundum voluntatem, filii eorum in oculis, domus ipsorum abundant, timor autem nusquam: Flagellum autem a Domino non est in ipsis (Job XXI, 7 et seq.).

42. Haec videns infirmus corde exagitatur, et studium avertit suum. Cujus dicturus sermones, ante sanctus praemisit Job, dicens: Portate me, ego autem loquar, deinde videte me. Nam et si arguor, quasi homo arguor. Portate ergo onus sermonum meorum (Ibid., 1 et seq.). Dicturus enim sum quod non probo: sed ad vos redarguendos proferam sermonis iniquos. Aut certe; quia ita est versus. Quid autem? Numquid ab homine arguor? hoc est, homo me non potest redarguere quia peccavi, etsi argui dignus sum; quia non ex evidenti culpa me arguitis, sed ex injuriis aestimatis merita delictorum. Videns ergo infirmus abundare injustos successibus prosperis, se autem alteri, dicit Domino: Discede a me, vias tuas scire nolo (Ibid., 14). Quid prodest, quia servivimus ipsi: aut quae utilitas, quia occurrimus ipsi? In manibus ipsorum omnia bona, opera autem impiorum non videt. 43. Laudatur in Platone, quod in Politia sua 13 posuit eum qui contra justitiam disputandi partes recepisset, postulare veniam dictorum quae non probaret, et veri inveniendi atque examinandae disputationis gratia, illam sibi impositam personam dicere. Quod eousque Tullius probavit, ut ipse in libris quos scripsit de Republica, in eam sententiam dicendum putaverit.

44. Quanto antiquior illis Job, qui haec primus reperit, nec eloquentiae phalerandae gratia, sed veritatis probandae, praemittenda aestimavit? Statimque ipse quaestionem enodem reddidit, subjiciens quod exstinguatur lucerna impiorum, et futura sit eorum eversio (Job. XXI, 17): non falli Deum doctorem sapientiae et disciplinae, sed esse veritatis judicem (Ibidem, 22): et ideo non secundum forensem abundantiam aestimandam beatitudinem singulorum; sed secundum interiorem conscientiam, quae innocentium et flagitiosorum merita discernit, vera atque incorrupta poenarum praemiorumque arbitra. Moritur innocens in potestate simplicitatis suae, in abundantia propriae voluntatis, sicut adipe repletam animam gerens (Ibid., 23 et seq.). At vero peccator quamvis foris abundet, deliciis diffluat, et odoribus fragret, in amaritudine animae suae vitam exigit, et ultimum diem claudit, nihil secum eorum quae epulatus fuerit, boni referens: nihil secum auferens, nisi scelerum suorum pretia.

45. Haec cogitans nega, si potes, divini esse judicii remunerationem. Ille suo affectu beatus, hic miser: ille suo judicio absolutus, hic reus: ille in exitu laetus, hic moerens. Cui absolvi potest, qui nec sibi innocens est? Dicite, inquit, mihi, ubi est protectio tabernaculorum ejus (Job XXI, 28)?

Signum ejus non invenietur. Vita etenim facinorosi, ut somnium. Aperuit oculos, transivit requies ejus, evanuit delectatio: licet ipsa quae videtur, etiam dum vivunt, impiorum requies in inferno sit: viventes enim in inferna descendunt. 46. Vides convivium peccatoris, interroga conscientiam ejus. Nonne gravius omnibus fetet sepulcris? Intueris laetitiam ejus, et salubritatem miraris corporis filiorum atque opum abundantiam: introspice ulcera et vibices animae ejus, et cordis moestitudinem. Nam de opibus quid loquar, cum legeris: Quia non in abundantia est vita ejus (Luc. XII, 15): cum scias quia etsi tibi videatur dives, sibi pauper est, et tuum judicium 14 suo refellat? De multitudine quoque filiorum, et de indolentia quid loquar; cum se ipse lugeat, et sine haerede futurum judicet, cum imitatores sui successores suos esse nolit? Nulla enim haereditas peccatoris. Ergo impius ipse sibi poena est: justus autem ipse sibi gratia; et utrique aut bonorum aut malorum operum merces ex se ipso solvitur.

CAPUT XIII.

REFELLUNTUR PHILOSOPHORUM OPINIONES qui Deo vel mundi totius, vel alicujus ex ejus partibus curam abjudicant.

47. Sed revertamur ad propositum, ne divisionem factam praeteriisse videamur, quia occurrimus opinioni eorum qui videntes sceleratos quosque divites, laetos, honoratos, potentes, cum plerique justorum egeant, atque infirmi sint, putant vel nihil Deum curare de nobis, ut Epicurei dicunt: vel nescire actus hominum, ut flagitiosi putant: vel si scit omnia, iniquum esse judicem; ut bonos egere patiatur, abundare improbos. Nec superfluus velut quidam excursus fuit, ut opinioni hujusmodi ipsorum affectus responderet, quos beatos judicant, cum ipsi se miseros putent. Arbitratus enim sum quod ipsi sibi facilius quam nobis crederent. 48. Quo decurso, proclive aestimo, ut refellam caetera. Et primo eorum assertionem, qui Deum putant curam mundi nequaquam habere, sicut Aristoteles asserit usque ad lunam ejus descendere providentiam. Et quis operator negligat operis sui curam? Quis deserat et destituat quod ipse condendum putavit? Si injuria est regere, nonne est major injuria fecisse; cum aliquid non fecisse nulla injustitia sit, non curare quod feceris, summa inclementia?

49. Quod si aut Deum creatorem suum abnegant, aut ferarum et bestiarum se haberi numero censent: quid de illis dicamus, qui hac se condemnant injuria? Per omnia Deum ire ipsi asserunt, et omnia in virtute ejus consistere, vim et majestatem ejus per omnia elementa penetrare, terras, coelum, maria: et putant injuriam ejus, si mentem hominis qua nihil nobis ipse praestantius dedit, penetret, et divinae majestatis ingrediatur scientia? 50. Sed horum magistrum velut ebrium, et 15 voluptatis patronum, ipsi qui putantur sobrii, irrident philosophi? Nam de Aristotelis opinione quid loquar, qui putat Deum suis contentum esse finibus, et praescripto regni modo degere, ut poetarum loquuntur fabulae, qui mundum inter tres ferunt esse divisum; ut alii coelum, alii mare, alii inferna coercenda imperio, sorte obvenerint: eosque cavere ne usurpata alienarum partium sollicitudine, inter se bellum excitent. Similiter ergo asserit quod terrarum curam non habeat, sicut maris vel inferni non habet. Et quomodo ipsi excludunt quos sequuntur, poetas?

CAPUT XIV.

DEI COGNITIONEM NIHIL fugere et Scripturarum testimoniis, et solis comprobatur exemplo, qui licet creatura sit, tamen vel lumine, vel calore cuncta penetrat.

51. Sequitur illa responsio, utrum Deum, si operis sui cura non praeterierit, praetereat scientia. Ergo qui plantavit aurem, non audit: qui finxit oculum, non videt, non considerat?

52. Non praeteriit haec vana opinio sanctos prophetas. Denique David inducit eos loquentes, quos superbia inflatos asserit. Quid enim tam superbum, quam cum ipsi sub peccato sint, alios indigne ferant peccatores vivere, dicentes: Usquequo peccatores, Domine, usquequo peccatores gloriabuntur (Psal. XCIII, 3)? Et infra: Et dixerunt. Non videbit Dominus, neque intelliget Deus Jacob. Quibus respondet propheta dicens: Intelligite nunc insipientes in populo, et stulti aliquando sapite. Qui plantavit aurem, non audit: et qui finxit oculum, non considerat? Qui corripit gentes, non arguit, qui docet hominem scientiam? Dominus scit cogitationes hominum, quoniam vanae sunt (Ibid. 7 et seq.). Qui ea quaecumque vana sunt deprehendit, ea quae sancta sunt, nescit, et ignorat quod ipse fecit? Potest opus suum ignorare artifex? Homo est, et in opere suo latentia deprehendit; et Deus opus suum nescit? Altius ergo profundum in opere, quam in auctore. Et fecit aliquid quod supra se esset, cujus meritum ignoraret auctor, cujus affectum nesciret arbiter? Haec illis.

53. Caeterum nobis satis est ipsius testimonium, qui ait: Ego sum scrutans corda et renes (Jerem. XVII, 10). Et in Evangelio ait Dominus Jesus: Quid cogitatis mala in cordibus vestris (Luc. V, 22)? Sciebat enim quod cogitarent mala. Denique Evangelista testatur dicens: Sciebat enim Jesus cogitationes eorum (Luc. VI, 8). 54. Quorum non poterit satis movere opinio, si facta eorum consideremus. Nolunt supra se esse judicem, quem nihil fallat: nolunt ei dare occultorum scientiam, qui metuunt occulta sua prodi. Sed etiam Dominus sciens opera eorum, tradidit eos in tenebras. In nocte, inquit, erit fur. Et oculus adulteri servabit tenebras, dicens: Non considerabit me oculus: et latibulum personae posuit suae (Job XXIV, 14, 15). 16 Omnis enim qui lucem fugit, diligit tenebras, studens latere, cum Deum latere non possit, qui intra profundum abyssi, et intra hominum mentes non solum tractata, sed etiam volvenda cognoscit. Denique et ille qui dicit in Ecclesiastico: Quis videt me? Et tenebrae cooperiunt me, et parietes, quem vereor (Eccli. XXIII, 25, 26)? quamvis in lecto suo positus haec cogitet, ubi non putaverit, comprehenditur. Et erit, inquit, dedecus, quod non intellexerit timorem Dei (Ibid., 31).

55. Quid autem tam stolidum, quam putare quod Deum quidquam praetereat; cum sol qui minister luminis est, etiam abdita penetret, et in fundamenta domus vel secreta conclavia vis caloris ejus irrumpat? Quis neget verna temperie tepefieri interiora terrarum, quas glacies hiberna constrinxerit? Norunt ergo arborum occultam vim caloris vel frigoris, adeo ut radices arborum aut urantur frigore, aut fotu solis virescant. Denique ubi clementia coeli arriserit, varios terra se fundit in fructus.

56. Si igitur radius solis fundit lumen suum super omnem terram, et in ea quae clausa sunt, se inserit, nec vectibus ferreis aut gravium valvarum obicibus, quominus penetret, impeditur; quomodo non potest intelligibilis Dei splendor in cogitationes hominum et corda semet quae ipse creavit, inserere: sed ea quae ipse fecit, non videt, et fecit ut meliora sint quae facta sunt, et potentiora, quam ipse est qui ea fecit, ut possint quando volunt, cognitionem sui operatoris latere? Tantam ergo virtutem et potestatem inseruit mentibus nostris; ut eam comprehendere cum velit, ipse non possit?

CAPUT XV.

QUIBUS DISPLICET QUOD bonis male, et malis bene sit, eis Lazari exemplo et Pauli auctoritate ostenditur post vitam poenas ac praemia reservari.

57. Duo absolvimus et, ut arbitramur, non incongrue nobis hujusmodi cecidit disputatio. Tertium genus quaestionis residet hujusmodi: cur peccatores abundent opibus et divitiis, epulentur jugiter, sine moerore, sine luctu; justi autem egeant, et afficiantur aut conjugum amissione, aut liberorum? Quibus satisfacere debuit illa Evangelii parabola, quod dives bysso et purpura induebatur, et epulas copiosas exhibebat quotidie: pauper autem plenus ulcerum de mensa ejus colligebat reliquias. Post obitum vero utriusque, pauper erat in sinu Abrahae requiem habens, dives in suppliciis (Luc. XVI, 25). Nonne evidens est meritorum aut praemia aut supplicia post mortem manere? 58. Et recte, quia in certamine labor est, post certamen aliis victoria, aliis ignominia. Numquid priusquam cursus conficiatur, palma cuiquam datur, aut defertur corona? Merito Paulus: Certamen, inquit, bonum certavi, cursum consummavi, fidem servavi: quod reliquum est, reposita est mihi corona justitiae, quam reddet mihi Dominus 17 in illa die, justus judex: non solum autem mihi, sed etiam his qui diligunt adventum ejus (II Tim. IV, 7, 8). In illa, inquit, die reddet, non hic. Hic autem in laboribus, in periculis, in naufragiis, quasi athleta bonus decertabat; quia sciebat quoniam per multas tribulationes oportet nos introire in regnum Dei. Ergo non potest quis praemium accipere, nisi legitime certaverit; nec est gloriosa victoria, nisi ubi fuerint laboriosa certamina.

CAPUT XVI.

CONFIRMATO QUOD SUPRA de praemiis et poenis dictum fuerat, subjungitur non mirum esse si quibus merces in futuro non destinatur, hic illi non laborent neque confligant: additurque ideo temporalia bona ipsis concedi, ne qua relinquatur excusatio.

59. Nonne injustus est, qui ante dat praemium, quam certamen fuerit absolutum? Ideoque Dominus in Evangelio ait: Beati pauperes spiritu, quoniam ipsorum est regnum coelorum (Matth. V, 3). Non dixit: Beati divites, sed pauperes. Inde incipit beatitudo judicio divino, ubi aerumna aestimatur humana. Beati qui esuriunt, quia ipsi saturabuntur. Beati qui lugent, quoniam ipsi consolationem habebunt. Beati misericordes, quoniam ipsis miserebitur Deus. Beati mundo corde, quoniam ipsi Deum videbunt. Beati qui persecutionem patiuntur propter justitiam, quoniam ipsorum est regnum coelorum. Beati estis, cum vobis maledicent, et persequentur, et dicent omne malum adversum vos, propter justitiam. Gaudete et exsultate quoniam merces vestra copiosa est in coelo (Ibid., 5 et seq.). Futuram, non praesentem: in coelo, non in terra mercedem promisit esse reddendam. Quid alibi poscis, quod alibi debetur? quid praepropere coronam exigis, antequam vincas? quid detergere pulverem? quid requiescere cupis? quid epulari gestis, antequam stadium solvatur? Adhuc populus spectat, adhuc athletae in scammate sunt, et tu jam otium petis.

60. Sed forte dicas: Cur impii laetantur? cur luxuriantur? cur etiam ipsi non mecum laborant? Quoniam qui non subscripserint ad coronam, non tenentur ad laborem certaminis: qui in stadium non descenderint, non se perfundunt oleo, non oblinunt pulvere. Quos manet gloria, exspectat injuria.

Unguentati spectare solent, non decertare: non solem, aestus, pulverem, imbresque perpeti. Dicant ergo et ipsis athletae: Venite, nobiscum laborate. Sed respondebunt spectatores: Nos hic interim de vobis judicamus: vos autem sine nobis coronae, si viceritis, gloriam vindicabitis. 61. Isti igitur qui in deliciis, qui in luxuria, rapinis, quaestibus, honoribus, studia posuerunt sua, spectatores magis sunt quam praeliatores. Habent lucrum laboris, fructum virtutis 18 non habent. Fovent otium, astutia et improbitate aggerant divitiarum acervos: sed exsolvent, seram licet, nequitiae suae poenam. Horum requies in infernis, tua vero in coelo: horum domus in sepulcro, tua in paradiso. Unde pulchre vigilare eos in tumulo Job dixit (Job. XXI, 32); quia soporem quietis habere non possunt, quem ille dormivit, qui resurrexit.

62. Noli igitur ut parvulus sapere, ut parvulus loqui, ut parvulus cogitare, ut parvulus vindicare ea quae sunt posterioris aetatis. Perfectorum est corona. Exspecta, ut veniat quod perfectum est, quando non per speciem in aenigmate, sed facie ad faciem formam ipsam redopertae veritatis possis agnoscere. Tunc qua causa ille dives fuerit, qui erat improbus et raptor alieni, qua causa potens alius, qua causa ille abundaverit liberis, ille fultus honoribus, revelabitur. 63. Fortasse ut dicatur raptori: Dives eras, qua causa aliena rapiebas? Egestas non compulit, inopia non coegit. Nonne ideo te divitem feci, ut excusationem habere non possis? Dicatur etiam potenti: Cur non adfuisti viduae, orphanis quoque injuriam patientibus? Numquid tu infirmus eras? Numquid non poteras subvenire? Ideo te feci potentem, ut non inferres violentiam, sed repelleres. Non tibi scriptum est: Eripe injuriam accipientem (Eccli. IV, 9)? Non tibi scriptum est: Pauperem, et egenum de manu peccatoris liberate (Psal. LXXXI, 4)? Dicatur etiam abundanti: Liberis, et honoribus cumulavi te, salubritatem corporis concessi tibi; cur non secutus es praecepta mea? Famule meus, quid feci tibi, aut quid contristavi te? Nonne ego tibi liberos dedi, honores contuli, salutem donavi; cur me negabas? Cur aestimabas quod ad scientiam meam quae gereres non pervenirent: cur tenebas dona mea, despiciebas mandata mea (Mich. VI, 3 et seq.). 64. Denique de Juda proditore haec colligere licet, qui et apostolus inter duodecim electus est, et loculos pecuniarum quas pauperibus erogaret, commissos habebat, ne videretur aut quasi inhonorus, aut quasi egenus Dominum prodidisse. Et ideo ut justificaretur in eo Dominus, haec ei contulit; ut non quasi injuria exasperatus, sed quasi praevaricatus gratiam, majori esset offensae obnoxius.

CAPUT XVII.

ADOLESCENTIS OFFICIA, ET exempla eidem aetati accommoda proponuntur.

65. Quoniam igitur et poenam improbitati, et virtuti fore praemium satis claruit, de Officiis aggrediamur dicere; quae nobis ab adolescentia spectanda sunt, ut cum aetate accrescant simul. Est igitur bonorum adolescentium timorem Dei habere, deferre parentibus, honorem habere senioribus, castitatem tueri, 19 non aspernari humilitatem, diligere clementiam ac verecundiam, quae ornamento sunt minori aetati. Ut enim in senibus gravitas, in juvenibus alacritas; ita in adolescentibus verecundia, velut quadam dote commendatur naturae. 66. Erat Isaac Dominum timens, utpote Abrahae indoles, deferens patri usque adeo, ut adversus paternam voluntatem nec mortem recusaret (Gen. XXII, 9 et seq.). Joseph quoque cum somniasset quod sol et luna et stellae adorarent eum, sedulo tamen obsequio deferebat patri (Gen. XXXVII, 6 et seq.): castus ita ut ne sermonem quidem audire vellet nisi pudicum: humilis usque ad servitutem, verecundus usque ad fugam, patiens usque ad carcerem, remissor injuriae usque ad remunerationem. Cujus tanta verecundia fuit, ut comprehensus a muliere, vestem in manibus ejus fugiens mallet relinquere, quam verecundiam deponere (Gen. XXXIX, 8 et seq.). Moyses quoque et Hieremias electi a Domino, ut oracula Dei praedicarent populo, quod poterant per gratiam, excusabant per verecundiam (Exod. IV, 10; Jerem. I, 6).

CAPUT XVIII.

De partibus verecundiae: quemadmodum sermonem ac silentium temperet, pudicitiam comitetur, preces nostras Deo commendet, motibus corporeis moderetur; ubi refertur historia de duobus clericis observatu minime indigna: tum subnectitur qua ratione componendus ex eadem virtute incessus, quantave cautio ne quid inverecundum ore proferatur, aut detegatur in corpore, adhibenda sit: et haec omnia exemplis appositissimis illustrantur.

67. Pulchra igitur virtus est verecundiae, et suavis gratia, quae non solum in factis, sed etiam in ipsis spectatur sermonibus; ne modum progrediaris loquendi, ne quid indecorum sermo resonet tuus. Speculum enim mentis plerumque in verbis refulget. Ipsum vocis sonum librat modestia, ne cujusquam offendat aurem vox fortior. Denique in ipso canendi genere prima disciplina verecundia est: immo etiam in omni usu loquendi; ut sensim quis aut psallere, aut canere, aut postremo loqui incipiat; ut verecunda principia commendent processum.

68. Silentium quoque ipsum, in quo est reliquarum virtutum otium, maximus actus verecundiae est. Denique si aut infantiae putatur aut superbiae, probro datur: si verecundiae, laudi ducitur. Tacebat in periculis Suzanna, et gravius verecundiae, quam vitae damnum putabat, nec arbitrabatur periculo pudoris tuendam salutem. Deo soli loquebatur (Dan. XIII, 35), cui poterat casta verecundia eloqui: refugiebat ora intueri virorum; est enim et in oculis verecundia, ut nec videre viros femina, nec videri velit. 69. Neque vero quisquam solius hanc laudem 20 castitatis putet. Est enim verecundia pudicitiae comes, cujus societate castitas ipsa tutior

est. Bonus enim regendae castitatis pudor est comes: qui si se praetendat ad ea quae prima pericula sunt, pudicitiam temerari non sinat. Hic primus in ipso cognitionis ingressu, Domini matrem commendat legentibus, et tamquam testis locuples, dignam quae ad tale munus eligeretur, astruit: quod in cubiculo, quod sola, quod salutata ab angelo tacet, et mota est in introitu ejus, quod ad virilis sexus speciem peregrinam turbatur aspectus Virginis (Luc. I, 20 et seq.). Itaque quamvis esset humilis, prae verecundia tamen salutantem non resalutavit, nec ullum responsum retulit, nisi ubi de suscipienda Domini generatione cognovit; ut qualitatem effectus disceret, non ut sermonem referret.

70. In ipsa oratione nostra multum verecundia placet, multum conciliat gratiae apud Deum nostrum. Nonne haec praetulit Publicanum, et commendavit enim qui nec oculos suos audebat ad coelum levare? Ideo justificatur magis Domini judicio, quam ille Pharisaeus, quem deformavit praesumptio (Luc. XVIII, 13, 14). Ideoque oremus in incorruptione quieti et modesti spiritus, qui est ante Deum locuples, ut ait Petrus (I Petr. III, 4). Magna igitur modestia, quae cum sit etiam sui juris remissior, nihil sibi usurpans, nihil vindicans, et quodammodo intra vires suas contractior, dives est apud Deum, apud quem nemo dives. Dives est modestia, quia portio Dei est. Paulus quoque orationem deferri praecepit cum verecundia et sobrietate. Primam hanc et quasi praeviam vult esse orationis futurae, ut non glorietur peccatoris oratio: sed quasi colore pudoris obducta, quo plus defert verecundiae de recordatione delicti, hoc uberiorem mereatur gratiam (Tim. II, 9). 71. Est etiam in ipso motu, gestu, incessu tenenda verecundia. Habitus enim mentis in corporis statu cernitur. Hinc homo cordis nostri absconditus, aut levior, aut jactantior, aut turbidior: aut contra gravior, et constantior, et purior, et maturior aestimatur. Itaque vox quaedam est animi, corporis motus.

72. Meministis, filii, quemdam amicum, cum sedulis se videretur commendare officiis; hoc solo tamen in clerum a me non receptum, quod gestus ejus plurimum dedeceret: alterum quoque cum in clero reperissem, jussisse me ne umquam praeiret mihi; quia velut quodam insolentis incessus verbere oculos feriret meos. Idque dixi, cum redderetur post offensam muneri. Hoc solum excepi, nec fefellit sententia; uterque enim ab Ecclesia recessit, ut qualis incessu prodebatur, talis perfidia animi demonstraretur. Namque alter Arianae infestationis tempore, fidem deseruit: alter pecuniae studio, ne judicium subiret sacerdotale, se nostrum negavit. 21 Lucebat in illorum incessu imago levitatis, species quaedam scurrarum percursantium.

73. Sunt etiam qui sensim ambulando imitantur histrionicos gestus, et quasi quaedam fercula pomparum, et statuarum motus nutantium, ut quotiescumque gradum transferunt, modulos quosdam servare videantur. 74. Nec cursim ambulare honestum arbitror, nisi cum causa exigit alicujus periculi, vel justa necessitas. Nam plerumque festinantes anbelos videmus torquere ora, quibus si causa desit festinationis necessariae, naevus est justae offensionis. Sed non de his dico, quibus rara properatio ex causa nascitur: sed quibus jugis et continua in naturam vertitur. Nec in illis ego tamquam simulacrorum effigies probo, nec in istis tamquam excussorum ruinas.

75. Est etiam gressus probabilis, in quo sit species auctoritatis, gravitatisque pondus, tranquillitatis vestigium; ita tamen si studium desit atque affectatio, sed motus sit purus ac simplex; nihil enim fucatum placet. Motum natura informet. Si quid sane in natura vitii est, industria emendet; ut ars desit, non desit correctio. 76. Quod si etiam ista spectantur altius, quanto magis cavendum est ne quid turpe ore exeat; hoc enim graviter coinquinat hominem. Non enim cibus coinquinat, sed injusta obtrectatio, sed verborum obscoenitas. Haec etiam vulgo pudori sunt. In nostro vero officio nullum verbum quod inhoneste cadat, non incutiat verecundiam. Et non solum nihil ipsi indecorum loqui, sed ne aurem quidem debemus hujusmodi praebere dictis: sicut Joseph ne incongrua suae audiret verecundiae, veste fugit relicta (Gen. XXXIX, 12); quoniam quem delectat audire, alterum loqui provocat.

77. Intelligere quoque quod turpe sit, pudori maximo est. Spectare vero si quid hujusmodi fortuitu accidat, quanti horroris est! Quod ergo in aliis displicet, numquid potest in se ipso placere? nec ipsa natura nos docet? quae perfecte quidem omnes partes nostri corporis explicavit; ut et necessitati consuleret, et gratiam venustaret. Sed tamen eas quae decorae ad aspectum forent, in quibus formae apex quasi in arce quadam locatus, et figurae suavitas, et 22 vultus specie semineret, operandique usus esset paratior, obvias atque apertas reliquit: eas vero in quibus esset naturalis obsequium necessitatis, ne deforme sui praeberent spectaculum, partim tamquam in ipso amandavit atque abscondit corpore, partim docuit et suasit tegendas.

78. Nonne igitur ipsa natura est magistra verecundiae? Cujus exemplo modestia hominum (quam a modo scientiae quid deceret appellatam arbitror) id quod in hac nostri corporis fabrica abditum reperit, operuit et texit; ut ostium illud quod ex transverso faciendum in arca illa Noe justo dictum est (Gen. 6, 16); in qua vel Ecclesiae, vel nostri figura est corporis: per quod ostium egeruntur reliquiae ciborum. Ergo naturae opifex sic nostrae studuit verecundiae, sic decorum illud et honestum in nostro custodivit corpore, ut ductus quosdam atque exitus cuniculorum nostrorum post tergum relegaret, atque ab aspectu nostro averteret, ne purgatio ventris visum oculorum offenderet. De quo pulchre Apostolus ait: Quae videntur, inquit, membra corporis infirmiora, necessariora sunt: et quae putamus ignobiliora esse membra corporis, his abundantiorem honorem circumdamus: et quae inhonesta sunt nostra, honestatem abundantiorem habent (I Cor. XII, 23). Etenim imitatione naturae industria auxit gratiam.

Quod alio loco etiam altius interpretati sumus (Lib. I de Noe et Arca, ca), ut non solum abscondamus ab oculis, verum etiam quae abscondenda accepimus, eorum indicia ususque membrorum suis appellationibus nuncupare indecorum putemus.

79. Denique si casu aperiantur hae partes, confunditur verecundia: si studio, impudentia aestimatur. Unde et filius Noe Cham offensam retulit, quia nudatum videns patrem risit: qui autem operuerunt patrem, acceperunt benedictionis gratiam (Gen. IX, 22 et seq.). Ex quo mos vetus et in urbe Roma, et in plerisque civitatibus fuit, ut filii puberes cum parentibus, vel generi cum soceris non lavarent, ne paternae reverentiae auctoritas minueretur: licet plerique se et in lavacro quantum possunt tegant; ne vel illic ubi nudum totum est corpus, hujusmodi intecta sit portio. 80. Sacerdotes quoque veteri more, sicut in Exodo legimus, brachas accipiebant, sicut ad 23 Mosen dictum est a Domino: Et facies illis brachas lineas, ut tegatur turpitudo pudoris. A lumbis usque ad femora erunt, et habebit eas Aaron et filii ejus, cum intrabunt in tabernaculum Testimonii: et cum accedent sacrificare ad aram Sanctuarii, et non inducent super se peccatum, ne moriantur (Exod. XVIII, 42, 43). Quod nonnulli nostrorum servare adhuc feruntur: plerique spiritali interpretatione ad cautionem verecundiae et custodiam castitatis, dictum arbitrantur.

CAPUT XIX.

DECORUM QUOMODO DESCRIBATUR ab Oratore: an et quantum ad virtutem conferat formositas: postremo qua cura ne quid affectatum aut effeminatum in nobis appareat, efficiendum?

81. Delectavit me diutius in partibus demorari verecundiae; quia ad vos loquebar, qui aut bona ejus ex vobis recognoscitis, aut damna ignoratis. Quae cum sit omnibus aetatibus, personis, temporibus et locis apta, tamen adolescentes, juvenilesque annos maxime decet. 82. In omni autem servandum aetate, ut deceat quod agas et conveniat, et quadret sibi ordo vitae tuae. Unde Tullius etiam ordinem putat in illo decore servari oportere: idque positum dicit in formositate, ordine, ornatu ad actionem apto: quae difficile ait loquendo explicari posse, et ideo satis esse intelligi.

83. Formositatem autem cur posuerit, non satis intelligo; quamvis ille etiam vires corporis laudet. Nos certe in pulchritudine corporis locum virtutis non ponimus, gratiam tamen non excludimus; quia verecundia et vultus ipsos solet pudore obfundere, gratioresque reddere. Ut enim artifex in materia commodiore melius operari solet, sic verecundia in ipso quoque corporis decore plus eminet; ita tamen ut etiam ipse non sit affectatus decor corporis: sed naturalis, simplex, neglectus magis quam expetitus, non pretiosis et albentibus adjutus vestimentis sed communibus; ut honestati vel necessitati nihil desit, nihil accedat nitori. 24 84. Vox ipsa non remissa, non fracta, nihil femineum sonans, qualem multi gravitatis specie simulare consuerunt, sed formam quamdam et regulam ac succum virilem reservans. Hoc est enim pulchritudinem vivendi tenere, convenientia cuique sexui et personae reddere. Hic ordo gestorum optimus, hic ornatus ad omnem actionem accommodus. Sed ut molliculum et infractum aut vocis sonum, aut gestum corporis non probo; ita neque agrestem ac rusticum. Naturam imitemur: ejus effigies, formula disciplinae, forma honestatis est.

CAPUT XX.

AD CONSERVANDAM VERECUNDIAM intemperantium hominum consortia, convivia extraneorum, ac mulierum commercia vitanda: sed otium nostrum domi in piis honestisque studiis insumendum.

85. Habet sane suos scopulos verecundia, non quos ipsa invehit, sed quos saepe incurrit; si intemperantium incidamus consortia, qui sub specie jucunditatis venenum infundunt bonis. Hi si assidui sunt, et maxime in convivio, ludo ac joco, enervant gravitatem illam virilem. Caveamus itaque ne dum relaxare animum volumus, solvamus omnem harmoniam, quasi concentum quemdam bonorum operum; usus enim cito inflectit naturam. 86. Unde quam prudenter factis convenire ecclesiasticis, et maxime ministrorum officiis arbitror, declinare extraneorum convivia: vel ut ipsi hospitales sitis peregrinantibus, vel ut ea cautione nullus sit opprobrio locus. Convivia quippe extraneorum occupationes habent, tum etiam epulandi produnt cupiditatem. Subrepunt etiam fabulae frequenter de saeculo ac voluptatibus: claudere aures non potes, prohibere, putatur superbiae. Subrepunt etiam praeter voluntatem pocula. Melius est tuae domui semel excuses, quam alienae frequenter: et ut ipse sobrius surgas, tamen ex aliena insolentia condemnari non debet praesentia tua.

87. Viduarum ac virginum domos, nisi visitandi gratia, 25 juniores adire non est opus: et hoc cum senioribus, hoc est, vel cum episcopo, vel si gravior est causa, cum presbyteris. Quid necesse est ut demus saecularibus obtrectandi locum? Quid opus est ut illae quoque visitationes crebrae accipiant auctoritatem? Quid si aliqua illarum forte labatur? cur alieni lapsus subeas invidiam? Quam multos etiam fortes illecebra decepit! Quanti non dederunt errori locum, et dederunt suspicioni! 88. Cur non illa tempora, quibus ab Ecclesia vacas, lectioni impendas? Cur non Christum revisas, Christum alloquaris, Christum audias? Illum alloquimur cum oramus, illum audimus cum divina legimus oracula. Quid nobis cum alienis domibus? Una est domus, quae omnes capit. Illi potius ad nos veniant, qui nos requirunt. Quid nobis cum fabulis? Ministerium altaribus Christi, non obsequium hominibus deferendum recepimus. 89. Humiles nos esse decet, mites, mansuetos, graves, patientes, modum tenere in omnibus; ut nullum vitium esse in moribus vel tacitus vultus, vel sermo annuntiet.

CAPUT XXI.

IRACUNDIAM PRIUSQUAM ORIATUR, praecavendam; si oborta fuerit, reprimendam ac mitigandam: si nec id assequi valuerimus linguam saltem a conviciis coercendam; ut sint motus nostri puerilium commotionum similes. Dictum Architae memoratur, ostenditurque Davidem ipsi hac in re factis et scriptis praeivisse.

90. Caveatur iracundia, aut si praecaveri non potest, cohibeatur; mala enim illex peccati indignatio est: quae ita animum perturbat, ut rationi non relinquat locum. Primum est igitur, si fieri potest, ut morum tranquillitas usu quodam, affectione, proposito, in naturam vertatur. Deinde quoniam ita plerumque motus infixus est naturae ac moribus, ut evelli atque evitari non queat: si praevideri potuerit, ratione reprimatur. Aut si prius occupatus fuerit animus ab indignatione, quam consilio prospici ac provideri potuerit, ne occuparetur: meditare quomodo motum animi tui vincas, iracundiam temperes. Resiste irae, si potes: cede, si non potes; quia scriptum est: Date locum irae (Rom. XII, 19).

91. Jacob fratri indignanti pie cessit (Gen. XXVII, 42 et seq.), et Rebeccae, id est, patientiae instructus consilio, abesse maluit et peregrinari, quam excitare fratris indignationem; et tunc redire, cum fratrem mitigatum putaret. Et ideo tantam apud Deum invenit gratiam. Quibus deinde obsequiis, quantis muneribus fratrem ipsum reconciliavit sibi; ut ille praereptae benedictionis non meminisset, meminisset delatae satisfactionis (Gen. XXXII, 3 et seq.)!

92. Ergo si praevenerit et praeoccupaverit mentem tuam iracundia, et ascenderit in te, non relinquas locum tuum. Locus tuus patientia est, 26 locus tuus sapientia est, locus tuus ratio est, locus tuus sedatio indignationis est. Aut si te contumacia respondentis moverit, et perversitas impulerit ad indignationem: si non potueris mitigare mentem, reprime linguam tuam. Sic enim scriptum est: Cohibe linguam tuam a malo, et labia tua ne loquantur dolum. Deinde inquire pacem, et sequere eam (Psal. XXXIII, 14, 15). Pacem illam sancti Jacob vide, qua tu primum sedato animum: si non praevalueris, frenos linguae impone tuae: deinde reconciliationis studium non praetermittas. Haec oratores saeculi de nostris usurpata in suis posuere libris: sed ille sensus hujus habet gratiam, qui prior dixit.

93. Vitemus ergo, aut temperemus iracundiam; ne sit ejus aut in laudibus exceptio, aut in vitiis exaggeratio. Non mediocre est mitigare iracundiam: non inferius quam omnino non commoveri. Hoc nostrum est, naturae illud. Denique commotiones in pueris innoxiae sunt, quae plus habent gratiae, quam amaritudinis. Et si cito pueri inter se moventur, facile sedantur, et majori suavitate in se recurrunt. Nesciunt se subdole artificioseque tractare. Nolite hos contemnere pueros, de quibus Dominus ait: Nisi conversi fueritis, et efficiamini sicut puer iste, non intrabitis in regnum coelorum (Matth. XVIII, 3). Itaque et ipse Dominus, hoc est, Dei virtus, sicut puer, cum malediceretur, non remaledixit: cum percuteretur non repercussit (I Petr. II, 23). Ita ergo te compara, ut quasi puer injuriam non teneas, malitiam non exerceas: omnia a te innocenter proficiscantur. Non consideres quid ab aliis in te revertatur. Locum tuum serva, simplicitatem et puritatem tui pectoris custodi. Noli respondere irato ad iracundiam ejus, sive imprudenti ad imprudentiam. Cito culpa culpam excutit. Si lapides teras, nonne ignis erumpit?

94. Ferunt gentiles, ut in majus omnia verbis extollere solent Architae Tarentini dictum philosophi, quod ad villicum suum dixerit: O te infelicem, quem afflictarem, nisi iratus essem! Sed jam David et armatam dexteram in indignatione compresserat (I Reg. XXV, 32). Et quanto plus est non remaledicere, quam non vindicare? Et bellatores adversus Nabal ad ultionem paratos, Abigail deprecatione revocaverat. Unde advertimus tempestivis quoque intercessionibus non solum cedere nos, sed etiam delectari oportere. Eo usque autem delectatus est, ut benediceret intervenientem, quod ab studio vindictae revocatus foret. 95. Jam dixerat de inimicis suis: Quoniam declinaverunt in me iniquitatem, et in ira molesti erant mihi (Psal. LIV, 4). Audiamus turbatus in ira quid dixerit: Quis dabit mihi pennas sicut columbae, et volabo, et requiescam (Ibid., 7)? Illi ad iracundiam provocabant, hic tranquillitatem eligebat.

96. Jam dixerat: Irascimini, et nolite peccare (Psal. IV, 5). Moralis magister, qui naturalem affectum inflectendum magis ratione doctrinae, quam extirpandum 27 noverat, moralia docet; hoc est, Irascimini ubi culpa est, cui irasci debeatis. Non potest enim fieri, ut non rerum indignitate moveamur: alioquin non virtus, sed lentitudo et remissio judicatur. Irascimini ergo ita, ut a culpa abstineatis. Vel sic: Si irascimini, nolite peccare, sed vincite ratione iracundiam. Vel certe sic: Si irascimini, vobis irascamini, quia commoti estis, et non peccabitis. Qui enim sibi irascitur, quia cito commotus est, desinit irasci alteri: qui autem vult iram suam justam probare, plus inflammatur, et cito in culpam cadit. Melior est autem secundum Salomonem (Prov. XVI, 32), qui iracundiam continet, quam qui urbem capit; quia ira etiam fortes decipit.

97. Cavere igitur debemus, ne in perturbationes prius incidamus, quam animos nostros ratio componat; exanimat enim mentem plerumque aut ira, aut dolor, aut formido mortis, et improviso percellit ictu. Ideo praevenire pulchrum est cogitatione, quae volvendo mentem exerceat; ne repentinis excitetur commotionibus, sed jugo quodam rationis et habenis astricta mitescat.

CAPUT XXII.

De cogitationibus, et appetitu: deque decoro sermonis in confabulatione, ac disceptatione servando.

98. Sunt autem gemini motus, hoc est, cogitationum et appetitus: alteri cogitationum, alteri appetitus: non confusi, sed discreti et dispares. Cogitationes verum exquirere, et quasi emolere muneris habent: appetitus ad aliquid impellit agendum atque excitat. Itaque ipso genere naturae suae et cogitationes tranquillitatem sedationis infundunt, et appetitus motum agendi excutit. Ita ergo informati simus, ut bonarum rerum subeat animum cogitatio: appetitus rationi obtemperet (si vere ut illud decorum custodiamus, animum volumus intendere) ne rationem excludat rei alicujus affectus: sed ratio quid honestati conveniat, examinet. 99. Et quoniam ad conservationem decori 28 spectare diximus, ut sciamus in factis dictisve quis modus: prior autem ordo loquendi quam faciendi est; sermo in duo dividitur, in colloquium familiare, et in tractatum, disceptationemque fidei atque justitiae. In utroque servandum, ne sit aliqua perturbatio: sed tamquam mitis et placidus, et benevolentiae plenus et gratiae, sine ulla sermo ducatur contumelia. Absit pertinax in familiari sermone contentio; quaestiones enim magis excitare inanes, quam utilitatis aliquid afferre solet. Disceptatio sine ira, suavitas sine amaritudine sit, monitio sine asperitate, hortatio sine offensione. Et sicut in omni actu vitae id cavere debemus, ne rationem nimius animi motus excludat, sed teneamus consilii locum: ita etiam in sermone formulam eam teneri convenit, ne aut ira excitetur, aut odium, aut cupiditatis nostrae, aut ignaviae aliqua exprimamus indicia.

100. Sit igitur sermo hujusmodi de Scripturis maxime. Quid enim magis nos oportet loqui, quam de conversatione optima, adhortatione observationis, disciplinae custodia. Habeat caput ejus rationem et finis modum. Sermo enim taediosus iram excitat. Quam vero indecorum, ut cum omnis confabulatio habere soleat incrementum gratiae, habeat naevum offensionis? 101. Tractatus quoque de doctrina fidei, de magisterio continentiae, de disceptatione justitiae, adhortatione diligentiae, non unus semper, sed ut se dederit lectio, nobis et arripiendus est, et prout possumus, prosequendus: neque nimium prolixus, neque cito interruptus; ne vel fastidium derelinquat, vel desidiam prodat atque incuriam. Oratio pura, simplex, dilucida, atque manifesta, plena gravitatis et ponderis: non affectata elegantia, sed non intermissa gratia.

CAPUT XXIII.

JOCOS ETSI NONNUMQUAM honesti sint, tamen in ecclesiasticis viris omnino proscribendos: vocem autem puram ac simplicem esse oportere.

102. Multa praeterea de ratione dicendi dant praecepta saeculares viri, quae nobis praetereunda arbitror, ut de jocandi disciplina. 29 Nam licet interdum honesta joca ac suavia sint, tamen ab ecclesiastica abhorrent regula; quoniam quae in Scripturis sanctis non reperimus, ea quemadmodum usurpare possumus? 103. Cavenda enim etiam in fabulis, ne inflectant gravitatem severioris propositi. Vae vobis, qui ridetis, quia flebitis (Luc. VI, 21)! ait Dominus: et nos ridendi materiam requirimus, ut hic ridentes, illic fleamus? Non solum profusos, sed omnes etiam jocos declinandos arbitror; nisi forte plenum suavitatis et gratiae sermonem esse, non indecorum est. 104. Nam de voce quid loquar, quam simplicem et puram esse satis arbitror: canoram autem esse naturae est, non industriae. Sit sane distincta pronuntiationis modo, et plena succi virilis; ut agrestem ac subrusticum fugiat sonum, non ut rythmum affectet scenicum, sed mysticum servet.

CAPUT XXIV.

TRIA IN VITAE actibus observanda, nimirum ut rationi appetitus subjiciatur, ut in studiis justa servetur moderatio, denique ut suo quaeque tempore atque ordine gerantur. Quae omnia in sanctis veteris Testamenti viris adeo praefulserunt, ut manisfestum sit eos cardinalibus, quas vocant, virtutibus egregie instructos fuisse.

105. De ratione dicendi satis dictum puto, nunc de actione vitae quid congruat, consideremus. Tria autem in hoc genere spectanda cernimus: unum, ut rationi appetitus non reluctetur; hoc enim solummodo possunt officia nostra illi decoro convenire. Si enim appetitus rationi obediat, facile id quod deceat in omnibus officiis conservari potest. Deinde ne majore studio quam res ipsa est quae suscipitur, vel minore: aut parvam magno ambitu suscepisse, aut magnam inferiore destituisse videamur. Tertium de moderatione studiorum, operumque nostrorum: de ordine quoque rerum et de opportunitate temporum, non dissimulandum puto. 106. Sed primum illud quasi fundamentum est omnium, ut appetitus rationi pareat: secundum et tertium idem est, hoc est, in utroque moderatio. Vacat enim apud nos speciei liberalis, quae pulchritudo habetur, et dignitatis contemplatio. Sequitur de ordine rerum, et de opportunitate temporum. Ac per hoc tria sunt, quae videamus utrum in aliquo sanctorum consummata possimus docere.

107. Primum ipse pater Abraham, qui ad magisterium futurae successionis informatus et instructus est, jussus, exire de terra sua, et de cognatione sua, et de domo patris sui (Gen. XII, 1 et seq.); nonne multiplicatae necessitudinis praestrictus affectu, tamen appetitum rationi obedientem praebuit? Quem enim terrae suae, cognationis, domus quoque propriae gratia non delectaret? Et hunc ergo mulcebat suorum suavitas, sed imperii coelestis 30 et remunerationis aeternae consideratio movebat amplius. Nonne considerabat uxorem imbecillem ad labores, teneram ad injurias, decoram ad incentiva insolentium, sine summo non posse duci periculo? Et tamen subire omnia, quam excusare consultius dijudicavit. Deinde cum descenderet in Aegyptum, monuit ut diceret se sororem esse, non uxorem ipsius.

108. Adverte, quanti appetitus. Timebat uxoris pudori, timebat propriae saluti, suspectas habebat Aegyptiorum libidines; et tamen praevaluit apud eum ratio exsequendae devotionis. Consideravit enim quod Dei favore ubique tutus esse posset, offenso autem Domino, etiam domi non posset illaesus manere. Vicit igitur appetitum ratio, et obedientem sibi praestitit. 109. Capto nepote, non perterritus neque tot regum turbatus populis, bellum repetit: victoria potitus, praedae partem cujus ipse fuit auctor, recusavit (Gen. XIV, 14 et seq.). Promisso quoque sibi filio, cum consideraret emortui corporis sui vires depositas, sterilitatem conjugis, et supremam senectutem, etiam contra usum naturae Deo credidit (Gen. XV, 6).

110. Adverte convenire omnia. Appetitus non defuit, sed repressus est: animus aequalis gerendis, qui nec magna pro vilibus, nec minora pro magnis duceret, moderatio pro negotiis, ordo rerum, opportunitas temporum, mensura verborum. Fide primus, justitia praecipuus, in praelio strenuus, in victoria non avarus, domi hospitalis, uxori sedulus. 111. Sanctum quoque ejus nepotem Jacob delectabat domi securum degere: sed mater voluit peregrinari, ut daret fraternae iracundiae locum (Gen. XXVII, 24 et seq.). Vicit appetitum consilii salubritas. Exsul domo, profugus a parentibus, ubique tamen convenientem mensuram negotiis tenuit, et temporibus opportunitatem reservavit. Acceptus domi parentibus, ut alter maturitate provocatus obsequii benedictionem daret, alter amore pio propenderet (Gen. XXV, 34). Fraterno quoque judicio praelatus, cum cibum suum fratri cedendum putasset: delectabatur utique alimento secundum naturam, sed secundum pietatem cessit petito. Pastor domino gregis fidus, socero gener sedulus, impiger in labore, in convivio parcus, in satisfactione praevius, in remuneratione largus (Gen. XXXI, 6 et seq.). Denique sic fraternam mitigavit iracundiam; ut cujus verebatur inimicitias, adipisceretur gratiam (Gen. XXXIII, 1).

112. Quid de Joseph loquar, qui utique habebat cupiditatem libertatis, et suscepit servitii necessitatem? Quam subditus in servitute, quam in virtute constans, quam benignus in carcere, sapiens in interpretatione, in potestate moderatus, in ubertate providus, in fame justus, ordinem laudis rebus adjungens, et opportunitatem temporibus, aequitatem populis officii sui moderatione dispensans (Gen. XXXIX, 1 et seq.) ? 113. Job quoque juxta secundis, atque adversis rebus irreprehensibilis, patiens, gratus Deo atque acceptus, vexabatur doloribus, sed se consolabatur (Job. II, 3 et seq.). 31 114. David etiam fortis in bello, patiens in adversis, in Hierusalem pacificus, in victoria mansuetus, in peccato dolens, in senectute providus, rerum modos, vices temporum per singularum sonos servavit aetatum; ut mihi videatur non minus vivendi genere, quam canendi suavitate praedulcis immortalem Deo sui fudisse meriti cantilenam (I Reg. XVII). 115. Quod his viris principalium virtutum officium defuit? Quarum primo loco constituerunt prudentiam, quae in veri investigatione versatur, et scientiae plenioris infundit cupiditatem: secundo justitiam, quae suum cuique tribuit, alienum non vindicat, utilitatem propriam negligit, ut communem aequitatem custodiat: tertio fortitudinem, quae et in rebus bellicis excelsi animi magnitudine, et domi eminet, corporisque praestat viribus: quarto temperantiam, quae modum, ordinemque servat omnium, quae vel agenda, vel dicenda arbitramur.

CAPUT XXV.

EXPOSITO CUR DUCTUM non fuerit a memoratis virtutibus exordium, easdem in veteribus Patribus exstitisse pressius demonstratur.

116. Haec forsitan aliquis dicat primo loco poni oportuisse, quoniam ab his quatuor virtutibus nascuntur officiorum genera. Sed hoc artis est, ut primo officium definiatur, postea certa in genera dividatur. Nos autem artem fugimus, exempla majorum proponimus: quae neque obscuritatem afferunt ad intelligendum, neque ad tractandum versutias. Sit igitur nobis vita majorum disciplinae speculum, non calliditatis commentarium: imitandi reverentia, non disputandi astutia.

117. Fuit igitur in sancto Abraham primo loco prudentia, de quo dicit Scriptura: Credidit Abraham Deo, et reputatum est illi ad justitiam (Gen. XV, 6). Nemo enim prudens, qui Deum nescit. Denique insipiens dixit quia non est Deus (Psal. XIII, 1); nam sapiens non diceret. Quomodo enim sapiens qui non requirit auctorem suum, qui dicit lapidi: Pater meus es tu (Jerem II, 27): qui dicit diabolo, ut Manichaeus: Auctor meus es tu? Quomodo sapiens Arianus, qui mavult imperfectum auctorem habere atque degenerem, quam verum atque perfectum? Quomodo sapiens Marcion atque Eunomius, qui malunt Deum malum quam bonum habere? Quomodo sapiens, qui Deum suum non timet? Initium enim sapientiae timor Domini (Psal. CX, 9). Et alibi habes: Sapientes non declinant de ore Domini, sed tractant 32 in confessionibus suis (Prov. XXIV, 7). Simul quoque dicente Scriptura: Reputatum est ei ad justitiam; alterius virtutis ei gratiam detulit.

118. Primi igitur nostri definierunt prudentiam in veri consistere cognitione. Quis enim illorum ante Abraham, David, Salomonem? Deinde justitiam spectare ad societatem generis humani. Denique David ait: Dispersit, dedit pauperibus, justitia ejus manet in aeternum. Justus miseretur, justus commodat (Psal. CXI, 9). Sapienti et justo totus mundus divitiarum est. Justus communia pro suis habet, sua pro communibus. Justus se ipsum, priusquam alios, accusat. Ille enim justus, qui nec sibi parcit, et occulta sua latere non patitur. Vide quam justus Abraham. In senectute susceperat filium per repromissionem (Gen. XXII, 3 et seq.), reposcenti Domino negandum ad sacrificium, quamvis unicum, non putavit.

119. Adverte hic omnes virtutes quatuor in uno facto. Fuit sapientiae, Deo credere, nec filii gratiam anteferre auctoris praecepto: fuit justitiae, acceptum reddere: fuit fortitudinis, appetitum ratione cohibere. Ducebat hostiam pater, interrogabat filius, tentabatur affectus patrius, sed non vincebatur. Repetebat filius appellationem paternam, compungebat paterna viscera, sed non minuebat devotionem. Accedit et quarta virtus, temperantia. Tenebat justus et pietatis modum, et exsecutionis ordinem. Denique dum sacrificio necessaria vehit, dum ignem adolet, dum filium ligat, dum gladium educit, hoc immolandi ordine meruit, ut filium reservaret. 120. Quid sapientius sancto Jacob, qui Deum vidit facie ad faciem, et meruit benedictionem (Gen. XXXII, 1 et seq.)? Quid justius, qui ea quae acquisierat, oblatis muneribus cum fratre divisit? Quid fortius, qui cum Deo luctatus est? Quid modestius eo qui modestiam ita et locis et temporibus deferebat, ut filiae injuriam mallet praetexere conjugio, quam vindicare; eo quod inter alienos positus amori potius consulendum, quam odia colligenda censebat?

121. Noe quam sapiens, qui tantam fabricavit arcam (Gen. VI, 14 et seq.)! Quam justus, qui ad semen omnium reservatus, solus ex omnibus et praeteritae generationis superstes est factus, et auctor futurae, mundo potius et universis magis quam sibi natus! Quam fortis, ut diluvium vinceret! Quam temperans, ut diluvium toleraret! quando introiret, qua moderatione degeret, quando corvum, quando columbam dimitteret, quando 33 reciperet revertentes, quando exeundi opportunitatem captaret, agnosceret?

CAPUT XXVI.

IN INQUIRENDA VERITATE contra sua praecepta peccasse philosophos: Moysen vero illis sapientiorem se praebuisse. Eo majori studio enitendum ad comparandam sapientiam, quo major est ipsius dignitas, ad quam omnes ipsa natura impelluntur.

122. Itaque tractant in veri investigatione tenendum illud decorum, ut summo studio requiramus quid verum sit, non falsa pro veris ducere, non obscuris vera involvere, non superfluis vel implexis atque ambiguis occupare animum. Quid tam indecorum, quam venerari ligna, quod ipsi faciunt? Quid tam obscurum, quam de astronomia et geometria tractare, quod probant; et profundi aeris spatia metiri, coelum quoque et mare numeris includere: relinquere causas salutis, errores quaerere. 123. At non ille eruditus in omni sapientia Aegyptiorum Moyses probavit ista: sed illam sapientiam detrimentum et stultitiam judicavit, et aversus ab ea, intimo Deum quaesivit affectu; ideoque vidit, interrogavit, audivit loquentem. Quis magis sapiens quam ille quem docuit Deus, qui omnem sapientiam Aegyptiorum, omnesque artium potentias operis sui virtute evacuavit (Exod. III, 1 et seq.)? Non hic incognita pro cognitis habebat, hisque temere assentiebatur: quae duo in hoc maxime naturali atque honesto loco vitanda discant, qui sibi nec contra naturam esse, nec turpe judicant saxa adorare, et a simulacris auxilium petere, quae nihil sentiant.

124. Quanto igitur excelsior virtus est sapientia, tanto magis enitendum arbitror, ut assequi eam possimus. Itaque ne quid contra naturam, ne quid turpe atque indecorum sentiamus, duo haec, id est, et tempus et diligentiam ad considerationem rerum examinandi gratia referre debemus. Nihil est enim quo magis homo caeteris animantibus praestet, quam quod rationis est particeps, causas rerum requirit, generis sui auctorem investigandum putat, in cujus potestate vitae necisque nostrae potestas sit, qui mundum hunc suo nutu regat, cui sciamus rationem esse reddendam nostrorum actuum. Nihil est enim quod magis proficiat ad vitam honestam, quam ut credamus eum jadicem futurum, quem et occulta non fallant, et indecora offendant, et honesta delectent. 125. Omnibus igitur hominibus inest secundum naturam humanam verum investigare, quae 34 nos ad studium cognitionis et scientiae trahit, et inquirendi infundit cupiditatem. In quo excellere universis pulchrum videtur, sed pancorum est assequi: qui volvendo cogitationes, consilia examinando, non mediocrem impendunt laborem; ut ad illud beate honesteque vivendum pervenire possint, atque operibus appropinquare. Non enim qui dixerit, inquit, mihi: Domine, Domine, intrabit in regnum coelorum, sed qui fecerit ea quae dico (Matth. VII, 21). Nam studia scientiae sine factis, haud scio an etiam involvant magis.

CAPUT XXVII.

PRIMUM OFFICII FONTEM esse prudentiam, ex qua derivatae tres aliae virtutes, ita cum ea atque inter se connexae sunt, ut ab invicem divelli ac separari nequeant.

126. Primus igitur Officii fons prudentia est. Quid enim tam plenum officii, quam deferre Auctori studium atque reverentiam? Qui tamen fons et in virtutes derivatur caeteras; neque enim potest justitia sine prudentia esse, cum examinare quid justum, quidve injustum sit, non mediocris prudentiae sit; summus in utroque error. Qui enim justum judicat injustum, injustum vero justum, exsecrabilis apud Deum. Ut quid abundant justitiae imprudenti? Salomon ait (Prov. XVII, 15, 16). Neque iterum prudentia sine justitia est; pietas enim in Deum initium intellectus. Quo advertimus illud ab hujus saeculi translatum magis quam inventum sapientibus; quia pietas fundamentum est omnium virtutum.

127. Justitiae autem pietas est prima in Deum, secunda in patriam, tertia in parentes, item in omnes: quae et ipsa secundum naturae est magisterium. Siquidem ab ineunte aetate ubi primum sensus infundi coeperit, vitam amamus tamquam Dei munus, patriam, parentesque diligimus, deinde aequales quibus sociari cupimus. Hinc charitas nascitur, quae alios sibi praefert, non quaerens quae sua sunt, in quibus est principatus justitiae. 128. Omnibus quoque animantibus innascitur, primum salutem tueri, cavere quae noceant, expetere quae prosint, ut pastum, ut latibula quibus se a periculo, imbribus, sole defendant, quod est prudentiae. Succedit quoque ut omnium genera animantium congregabilia natura sint: primo generis sui ac formae consortibus, tum etiam caeteris; ut videmus boves armentis, equos gregibus, et maxime pares paribus delectari: cervos quoque cervis, et plerumque 35 hominibus adjungi. Jam de procreandi studio et sobole, vel etiam generantium amore, quid loquar, in quo est forma justitiae praecipua?

129. Liquet igitur et has, et reliquas cognatas sibi esse virtutes. Siquidem et fortitudo (23, quaest. 3, c. Fortitudo) quae vel in bello tuetur a barbaris patriam, vel domi defendit infirmos, vel a latronibus socios, plena sit justitiae: et scire quo consilio defendat atque adjuvet, captare etiam temporum et locorum opportunitates, prudentiae ac modestiae sit: et temperantia ipsa sine prudentia modum scire non possit: opportunitatem noscere, et secundum mensuram reddere, sit justitiae: et in omnibus istis magnanimitas necessaria sit, et quaedam fortitudo mentis, plerumque et corporis; ut quis quod velit, possit implere.

CAPUT XXVIII.

SOCIETATEM CONSTARE JUSTITIA et beneficentia: illius partes duas ultionem et privatam possessionem a Christianis non agnosci: quod vero de rerum communitate ac mutuo auxilio tradunt Stoici, hoc eos e Scripturis sacris mutuatos esse. Quantus justitiae splendor, et quinam scopuli accessum ad illam praepediant.

130. Justitia igitur ad societatem generis humani, et ad communitatem refertur. Societatis enim ratio dividitur in duas partes, justitiam et beneficentiam, quam eamdem liberalitatem et benignitatem vocant: justitia mihi excelsior videtur, liberalitas gratior: illa censuram tenet, ista bonitatem. 131. Sed primum ipsum quod putant philosophi justitiae munus, apud nos excluditur. Dicunt enim illi eam primam esse justitiae formam, ut nemini quis noceat, nisi lacessitus injuria: quod Evangelii auctoritate vacuatur (Luc. IX, 56); vult enim Scriptura, ut sit in nobis spiritus Filii hominis, qui venit conferre gratiam, non inferre injuriam.

132. Deinde formam justitiae putaverunt, ut quis communia, id est, publica pro publicis habeat, privata pro suis. Ne hoc quidem secundum naturam, natura enim omnia omnibus in commune profudit. Sic enim Deus generari jussit omnia ut pastus omnibus communis esset, et terra foret omnium quaedam communis possessio. Natura igitur jus commune generavit, usurpatio jus fecit privatum. Quo in loco aiunt placuisse Stoicis, quae in terris gignantur, omnia ad usus hominum creari: homines autem hominum causa esse generatos; ut ipsi inter se aliis alii prodesse possint. 133. Unde hoc, nisi de nostris Scripturis dicendum assumpserunt? Moyses enim scripsit, quia dixit Deus: Faciamus hominem ad imaginem nostram et secundum similitudinem, et habeat potestatem piscium maris, et volatilium coeli, et pecorum, 36 et omnium repentium super terram (Gen. I, 26). Et David ait: Omnia subjecisti sub pedibus ejus, oves et boves universas, insuper et pecora campi: volucres coeli, et pisces maris (Psal. VIII, 8, 9). Ergo omnia subjecta esse homini de nostris didicerunt, et ideo censent propter hominem esse generata.

134. Hominem quoque hominis causa generatum esse in libris Moysi reperimus, dicente Domino: Non est bonum esse hominem solum, faciamus ei adjutorium simile sibi (Gen II, 18). Ad adjumentum ergo mulier data est viro, quae generaret; ut homo homini adjumento foret. Denique antequam mulier formaretur, dictum est de Adam: Non est inventus adjutor similis illi (Ibid., 20); adjumentum enim homo nisi de homine habere non poterat. Ex omnibus igitur animantibus nullum animal simile, et ut absolute dicamus, nullus adjutor hominis inventus est: muliebris igitur sexus adjutor exspectabatur.

135. Ergo secundum Dei voluntatem, vel naturae copulam, invicem nobis esse auxilio debemus, certare officiis, velut in medio omnes utilitates ponere, et ut verbo Scripturae utar, adjumentum ferre alter alteri, vel studio, vel officio, vel pecunia, vel operibus, vel quolibet modo; ut inter nos societatis augeatur gratia. Nec quisquam ab officio vel periculi terrore revocetur: sed omnia sua ducat, vel adversa vel prospera. Denique sanctus Moyses pro populo patriae bella suscipere gravia non reformidavit, nec regis potentissimi trepidavit arma, nec barbaricae immanitatis expavit ferociam: sed abjecit salutem suam, ut plebi redderet libertatem. 136. Magnus itaque justitiae splendor, quae aliis potius nata quam sibi, communitatem et societatem nostrane adjuvat: excelsitatem tenet; ut suo judicio omnia subjecta habeat, opem aliis ferat, pecuniam conferat, officia non abnuat, pericula suscipiat aliena.

137. Quis non cuperet hanc virtutis arcem tenere, nisi prima avaritia infirmaret atque inflecteret tantae virtutis vigorem? Etenim dum augere opes, aggregare pecunias, occupare terras possessionibus cupimus, praestare divitiis; justitiae formam exuimus, beneficentiam communem amisimus. Quomodo enim potest justus esse, qui studet eripere alteri, quod sibi quaerat? 138. Potentiae quoque cupiditas, formam justitiae virilem effeminat? Quomodo enim potest pro aliis intervenire, qui alios sibi subjicere conatur: et infirmo adversus potentes opem ferre, qui ipse gravem libertati affectat potentiam? 37

CAPUT XXIX.

JUSTITIAM IN BELLO etiam atque ipsis hostibus servari oportere Moysis ac Elisaei exemplis ostenditur: ab Hebraeis mutuo veteres accepisse, ut hostes appellarent nomine molliori: denique justitiae fundamentum in fide esse, ac formam in Ecclesia.

139. Quanta autem justitia sit ex hoc intelligi potest, quod nec locis, nec personis, nec temporibus excipitur, quae etiam hostibus reservatur; ut si constitutus sit cum hoste aut locus aut dies praelio, adversus justitiam putetur aut loco praevenire, aut tempore. Interest enim utrum aliquis pugna aliqua et conflictu gravi capiatur, an superiore gratia, vel aliquo eventu. Siquidem vehementioribus hostibus et infidis, et his qui amplius laeserint, vehementior refertur ultio; ut de Madianitis qui per mulieres suas plerosque peccare fecerant ex plebe Judaeorum, unde et Dei in populum patrum iracundia effusa est. Et ideo factum est ut nullum Moyses victor superesse pateretur (Num. XXXI, 3 et seq.): Gabaonitas autem qui fraude magis quam bello tentaverant plebem patrum, non expugnaret Jesus; sed conditionis impositae afficeret injuria (Josue IX, 20 et seq.). Syros vero Elisaeus, quos obsidentes in civitatem induxerat, momentanea caecitate percussos, ut quo ingrederentur videre non possent, volenti regi Israel percutere non acquiesceret dicens: Non percuties quos non captivasti in lancea et in gladio tuo: pone eis panem et aquam, ut manducent et bibant, et remittantur et eant ad dominum suum (IV Reg. VI, 14 et seq.); ut humanitate provocati gratiam repraesentarent. Denique postea in terram Israel venire piratae Syriae destiterunt.

140. Si ergo etiam in bello justitia valet, quanto magis in pace servanda est? Et hanc gratiam propheta his detulit, qui ad eum corripiendum venerant. Sic enim legimus, quod in obsidionem ejus miserat rex Syriae exercitum suum, cognito quod Elisaeus esset, qui consiliis et argumentationibus ejus obviaret omnibus. Quem videns exercitum Giezi servus prophetae, de salutis periculo trepidare coepit. Cui dixit propheta: Noli timere, quoniam plures nobiscum sunt, quam cum illis. Et rogante propheta ut aperirentur oculi servo suo, aperti sunt. Et vidit itaque Giezi totum montem equis repletum et curribus in circuitu Elisaei. Quibus descendentibus ait propheta: Percute, Deus, caecitate exercitum Syriae. Quo impetrato, dixit ad Syros: Venite post me, et ducam vos ad hominem quem quaeritis. Et viderunt Elisaeum, quem corripere gestiebant: et videntes, tenere non poterant. Liquet 38 igitur etiam in bello fidem et justitiam servari oportere, nec illud decorum esse posse, si violetur fides.

141. Denique etiam adversarios molli veteres appellatione nominabant, ut peregrinos vocarent; hostes enim antiquo ritu peregrini dicebantur. Quod aeque etiam ipsum de nostris assumptum dicere possumus; adversarios enim suos Hebraei Allophylos, hoc est, alienigenas Latino appellabant vocabulo. Denique in libro Regnorum primo sic legimus: Et factum est in diebus illis, convenerunt alienigenae in pugnam ad Israel (I Reg. IV, 1). 142. Fundamentum ergo est justitiae fides; justorum enim corda meditantur fidem: et qui se justus accusat, justitiam supra fidem collocat; nam tunc justitia ejus apparet, si vera fateatur. Denique et Dominus per Esaiam: Ecce, inquit, mitto lapidem in fundamentum Sion (Esai. XXVIII, 18), id est, Christum in fundamenta Ecclesiae. Fides enim omnium, Christus: Ecclesia autem quaedam forma justitiae est. Commune jus omnium: in commune orat, in commune operatur, in commune tentatur. Denique qui se ipsum sibi abnegat; ipse justus, ipse dignus Christo est. Ideo et Paulus fundamentum posuit Christum (I Cor. III, 11), ut supra eum opera justitiae locaremus; quia fides fundamentum est: in operibus autem aut malis iniquitas, aut bonis justitia est.

CAPUT XXX.

De beneficentia et ejus partibus benevolentia et liberalitate: quomodo illae simul jungendae sint; quaenamve adjuncta, ut liberalitatem cum laude ac merito quis exerceat, requirantur?

143. Sed jam de beneficentia loquamur, quae dividitur etiam ipsa in benevolentiam et liberalitatem. Ex his igitur duobus constat beneficentia, ut sit perfecta. Non enim satis est bene velle (Dist. 86, c. Non satis), sed etiam bene facere: nec satis est iterum bene facere, nisi id ex bono fonte, hoc est, bona voluntate proficiscatur: Hilarem enim datorem diligit Deus (II Cor. IX, 7). Nam si invitus facias, quae tibi merces est? Unde Apostolus generaliter: Si volens hoc ago, mercedem habeo: si invitus, dispensatio mihi credita est (I Cor. IX, 17). In Evangelio quoque multas disciplinas accepimus justae liberalitatis. 144. Pulchrum est igitur bene velle, et eo largiri consilio, ut prosis, non ut noceas. Nam si luxurioso ad luxuriae effusionem, adultero ad mercedem adulterii largiendum putes; non est beneficentia ista, ubi nulla est benevolentia. Officere enim istud est, non prodesse alteri, si 39 largiaris ei qui conspiret adversus patriam, qui congregare cupiat tuo sumptu perditos, qui impugnent Ecclesiam. Non est haec probabilis liberalitas, si adjuves eum qui adversus viduam et pupillos gravi decernit jurgio, aut vi aliqua possessiones eorum eripere conatur.

145. Non probatur largitas, si quod alteri largitur, alteri quis extorqueat: si injuste quaerat, et juste dispensandum putet; nisi forte ut ille Zacchaeus (Luc. XIX, 8), reddas prius quadruplum ei quem fraudaveris: et gentilitatis vitia fidei studio et credentis operatione compenses. Fundamentum igitur habeat liberalitas tua. 146. Hoc primum quaeritur, ut cum fide conferas, fraudem non facias oblatis; ne dicas te plus conferre, et minus conferas. Quid enim opus est dicere? Fraus promissi est: in tua potestate est largiri quod velis. Fraus fundamentum solvit, et opus corruit. Numquid Petrus ita indignatione efferbuit, ut Ananiam exstingui vellet, vel uxorem ejus (Act. V, 3 et seq.)? Sed exemplo eorum noluit perire caeteros.

147. Nec illa perfecta est liberalitas, si jactantiae causa magis quam misericordiae largiaris. Affectus tuus nomen imponit operi tuo: quomodo a te proficiscitur, sic aestimatur. Vides quam moralem judicem habeas. Te consulit, quomodo opus tuum suscipiat, mentem tuam prius interrogat. Nesciat, inquit, sinistra tua, quid faciat dextera tua (Matth. VI, 3). Non de corpore loquitur, sed etiam unanimus tuus, frater tuus quod facis nesciat; ne dum hic mercedem quaeris jactantiae, illic remunerationis fructum amittas. Perfecta autem est liberalitas, ubi silentio quis tegit opus suum, et necessitatibus singulorum occulte subvenit: quem laudat os pauperis, et non labia sua. 148. Deinde perfecta liberalitas (Dist. 86, c. Non satis, § Perfecta liberalitas) fide, causa, loco, tempore commendatur; ut primum opereris circa domesticos fidei. Grandis culpa si, sciente te, fidelis egeat: si scias eum sine sumptu esse, famem tolerare, aerumnam perpeti, qui praesertim egere erubescat: si in causam ceciderit aut captivitatis suorum, aut calumniae, et non adjuves: si sit in carcere, et poenis, et suppliciis propter debitum aliquod justus excrucietur (nam etsi omnibus debetur misericordia, tamen justo amplius) si tempore afflictionis suae nihil a te impetret: si tempore periculi quo rapitur ad mortem, plus apud te pecunia tua valeat, quam vita morituri. De quo pulchre Job dixit: Benedictio perituri in me veniat (Job. XXIX, 13).

149. Personarum quidem Deus acceptor non est, quia novit omnia. Nos autem omnibus quidem debemus misericordiam: sed quia plerique fraude eam quaerunt, et affingunt aerumnam; 40 ideo ubi causa manifestatur, persona cognoscitur, tempus urget, largius se debet profundere misericordia.

Non enim avarus Dominus est, ut plurimum quaerat. Beatus quidem qui dimittit omnia, et sequitur eum: sed et ille beatus est, qui quod habet, ex affectu facit. Denique duo aera viduae illius divitum muneribus praetulit (Luc. XXI, 3); quia totum illa quod habuit, contulit: illi autem ex abundantia partem exiguam contulerunt. Affectus igitur divitem collationem aut pauperem facit, et pretium rebus imponit. Caeterum Dominus non vult simul effundi opes, sed dispensari (Dist. 86, c. Dominus non vult): nisi forte ut Elisaeus boves suos occidit, et pavit pauperes ex eo quod habuit (III Reg. XIX, 21); ut nulla cura teneretur domestica, sed relictis omnibus, in disciplinam se propheticam daret.

150. Est etiam illa probanda liberalitas (Dist. 86, c. Est probanda), ut proximos seminis tui non despicias, si egere cognoscas. Melius est enim ut ipse subvenias tuis, quibus pudor est ab aliis sumptum deposcere, aut alicui postulare subsidium necessitati: non tamen ut illi ditiores eo fieri velint, quod tu potes conferre inopibus; causa enim praestat, non gratia. Neque enim propterea te Domino dicasti, ut tuos divites facias: sed ut vitam tibi perpetuam fructu boni operis acquiras, et pretio miserationis peccata redimas tua. Putant se parum poscere? Pretium tuum quaerunt, vitae tuae fructum adimere contendunt, et se juste facere putant. Et accusat quod eum divitem non feceris, cum te ille velit aeternae vitae fraudare mercede. 151. Consilium prompsimus, auctoritatem petamus. Primum neminem debet pudere, si ex divite pauper fiat, dum largitur pauperi; quia Christus pauper factus est, cum dives esset, ut omnes sua inopia ditaret. Dedit regulam quam sequamur, ut bona ratio sit exinaniti patrimonii; si quis pauperum famem repulit, inopiam sublevavit. Unde et consilium in hoc do, Apostolus dicit: Hoc enim vobis utile est, ut Christum imitemini (II Cor. VIII, 10). Consilium bonis datur, correptio errantes coercet. Denique quasi bonis dicit: Quia non tantum facere, sed et velle coepistis ab anno praeterito (Ibid.). Perfectorum utrumque est, non pars. Itaque docet et liberalitatem sine benevolentia, et benevolentiam sine liberalitate non esse perfectam. Unde ad perfectum hortatur, dicens: Nunc ergo et facere consummate, ut quemadmodum prompta est in vobis voluntas faciendi, ita sit et perficiendi ex eo quod habetis. Si enim voluntas prompta est, secundum id quod habet, acceptum est, non secundum quod non habet. Non enim ut aliis refectio sit, vobis autem angustia: sed ex aequalitate in hoc tempore, vestra abundantia ad illorum inopiam, ut illorum abundantia sit ad 41 vestram inopiam; ut fiat aequalitas, sicut scriptum est: Qui multum, non abundavit: et qui modicum, non minoravit (Ibid., 11 et seq.).

152. Advertimus quemadmodum et benevolentiam, et liberalitatem, et modum comprehendit, et fructum, atque personas. Ideo modum quia imperfectis dabat consilium, non enim patiuntur angustias, nisi imperfecti. Sed et si quis Ecclesiam nolens gravare in sacerdotio aliquo constitutus aut ministerio, non totum quod habet, conferat; sed operetur cum honestate quantum officio sat est, non mihi imperfectus videtur. Et puto quod hic augustiam non animi, sed rei familiaris dixerit. 153. De personis autem puto dictum: Ut vestra abundantia sit ad illorum inopiam, et illorum abundantia ad vestram inopiam; id est, ut populi abundantia sit bonae operationis ad illorum sublevandam alendi inopiam: et illorum abundantia spiritalis adjuvet in plebe inopiam meriti spiritalis, et conferat ei gratiam. 154. Unde exemplum optimum posuit: Qui multum, non abundavit: et qui modicum, non minuit. bene hortatur ad officium misericordiae omnes homines istud exemplum; quoniam et qui plurimum auri possidet, non abundat; quia nihil est quidquid in hoc saeculo est: et qui exiguum habet, non minuit; quia nihil est, quod amittit. Res sine dispendio est, quae tota dispendium est.

155. Est etiam sic intellectus bonus: Qui plurimum habet, et si non donat, non abundat; quia quantumvis acquirat, eget semper, qui plus concupiscit: et qui exiguum habet, non minuit; quia non multum est quod pauperem pascit. Similiter ergo et ille pauper qui confert spiritalia pro pecuniariis, et si plurimum habeat gratiae, non abundat; non enim onerat gratia, sed allevat mentem. 156. Sed etiam sic potest intelligi: Non abundas, o homo. Quantum est enim quod accepisti, etsi tibi multum est? Joannes quo nemo major est inter natos mulierum, inferior tamen erat eo, qui minor est in regno coelorum.

157. Potest et sic: Non abundat Dei gratia corporaliter, quia spiritalis est. Quis potest ejus aut magnitudinem aut latitudinem comprehendere, quam non videt? Fides si fuerit sicut granum sinapis, montes transferre potest, et non tibi datur ultra granum sinapis. Si abundet in te gratia, non est verendum ne mens tua tanto munere incipiat extolli; quia multi sunt qui ab altitudine cordis sui gravius corruerunt, quam si nullam habuissent Domini gratiam? Et qui parum habet, non minuit; quia non est corporeum ut dividatur: et quod parum videtur habenti, plurimum est cui nihil deest. 42 158. Consideranda etiam in largiendo (Dist. 86, c. Consideranda) aetas atque debilitas, nonnumquam etiam verecundia, quae ingenuos prodit natales; ut senibus plus largiaris, qui sibi labore jam non queunt victum quaerere. Similiter et debilitas corporis, et haec juvanda promptius. Tum si quis ex divitiis cecidit in egestatem: et maxime si non vitio suo, sed aut latrociniis, aut proscriptione, aut calumniis, quae habebat, amisit. 159. Sed forte dicat aliquis: Caecus uno loco sedet et praeteritur, et juvenis validus frequenter accipit. Et verum est, quia obrepit per importunitatem. Non est illud judicii, sed taedii. Nam et Dominus ait in Evangelio (Luc, XI, 8) de eo qui jam clauserat ostium suum, si quis ostium ejus procacius pulset, quia surgit et dat illi propter importunitatem.

CAPUT XXXI.

ACCEPTUM BENEFICIUM LARGIORI manu remetiendum terrae praecipitur exemplo: nec non adductus ad eamdem rem Salomonis de convivio locus, postea spiritali sensu exponitur.

160. Pulchrum quoque est propensiorem ejus haberi rationem, qui tibi aut beneficium aliquod, aut munus contulit, si ipse in necessitatem incidit. Quid enim tam contra officium, quam non reddere quod acceperis? Nec mensura pari, sed uberiore reddendum arbitror, et usum pensare beneficii; ut et tu subvenias, quantum ejus aerumnam repellas. Etenim superiorem non esse in referendo quam in conferendo beneficio, hoc est minorem esse, quoniam qui prior contulit, tempore superior est, humanitate prior. 161. Unde imitanda nobis est in hoc quoque natura terrarum, quae susceptum semen multiplicatiori solet numero reddere quam acceperit. Ideo tibi scriptum est: Sicut agricultura est homo insipiens, et tamquam vinea homo egens sensu. Si reliqueris eum, desolabitur (Prov. XXIV, 30, 31). Sicut agricultura ergo etiam sapiens, ut tamquam fenerata sibi majore mensura semina suscepta restituat. Terra ergo aut spontaneos fructus germinat, aut creditos uberiore cumulo refundit ac reddit. Utrumque debes quodam haereditario usu parentis, ne relinquaris sicut in foecundus ager. Esto tamen ut aliquis excusare possit quod non dederit, quomodo excusare potest quod non reddiderit? Non dare cuiquam vix licet, non reddere vero non licet.

162. Ideo pulchre Salomon ait: Si sederis coenare ad mensam potentis, sapienter intellige ea quae apponuntur tibi: et mitte manum tuam sciens quod oportet te talia praeparare. Si autem insatiabilis es, 43 noli concupiscere escas ejus; haec enim obtinent vitam fallacem (Prov. XXIII, 1 et seq.). Quas nos imitari cupientes sententias, scripsimus. Conferre gratiam bonum est: at qui referre nescit, durissimus. Humanitatis exemplum ipsa terra suggerit. Spontane os fructus ministrat quos non severis, multiplicatum quoque reddit quod acceperit. Negare tibi pecuniam numeratam non licet, quomodo licet acceptam non referre gratiam? In proverbiis quoque habes, quod ita plurimum redhibitio ista gratiae apud Deum consuevit valere, ut etiam in die ruinae inveniat gratiam quando possunt praeponderare peccata. Et quid aliis utar exemplis, cum Dominus ipse remunerationem uberiorem sanctorum meritis in Evangelio polliceatur, atque exhortetur ut operemur bonum opus, dicens: Dimittite et dimittetur vobis; date et dabitur vobis; mensuram bonam, commotam, supereffluentem dabunt in sinum vestrum (Luc. VI, 37, 38)?

163. Itaque et illud convivium Salomonis non de cibis, sed de operibus est bonis. Quo enim melius epulantur animi, quam bonis factis? Aut quid aliud tam facile potest justorum explere mentes, quam boni operis conscientia? Qui autem jucundior cibus, quam facere voluntatem Dei? Quem cibum sibi solum Dominus abundare memoravit, sicut scriptum est in Evangelio: Meus cibus est, ut faciam voluntatem Patris mei qui est in coelo (Joan. IV. 34). 164. Hoc cibo delectemur, de quo ait Propheta: Delectare in Domino (Psal. XXXVI, 4). Hoc cibo delectantur; qui superiores delectationes mirabili ingenio comprehenderunt, qui possunt scire qualis sit illa munda et intelligibilis mentis delectatio. Edamus ergo panes sapientiae; et saturemur in verbo Dei; quia non in solo pane, sed in omni verbo Dei vita est hominis facti ad imaginem Dei. De poculo vero satis expresse dicit sanctus Job: Sicut terra exspectans pluviam, sic et isti sermones meos (Job. XXIX, 23).

CAPUT XXXII.

PRAEMISSO QUID GRATIAE ob memorati convivii fercula sit referendum, variae reddendi beneficii rationes recensetur; ubi et de benevolentiae laude, effectis atque ordine disseritur.

165. Pulchrum est ergo ut divinarum Scripturarum humescamus alloquio, et quasi ros sic in nos Dei verba descendant. Cum igitur sederis ad illam mensam potentis, intellige quis sit iste potens: et in paradiso delectationis positus, atque in convivio sapientiae locatus, considera quae apponuntur tibi. Scripura divina convivium sapientiae est: singuli libri singula sunt fercula. 44 Intellige prius quae habeant ferculorum dapes, et tunc mitte manum; ut ea quae legis vel quae accipis a Domino Deo tuo, operibus exsequaris, et collatam in te gratiam officiis repraesentes: ut Petrus et Paulus, qui evangelizando vicem quamdam largitori muneris reddiderunt, ut possent singuli dicere: Gratia autem Dei sum quod sum, et gratia ejus egena in me non fuit: sed abundantius illis omnibus laboravi (I Cor. XV, 10).

166. Alius ergo fructum accepti beneficii, ut aurum auro, argentum argento rependit: alius laborem, alius, haud scio an etiam locupletius, solum restituit affectum. Quid enim si reddendi nulla facultas suppetit? In beneficio referendo plus animus quam census operatur: magisque praeponderat benevolentia, quam possibilitas referendi muneris. Gratia enim in eo ipso quod habetur, refertur. Magna igitur benevolentia, quae etiam si nihil conferat, plus exhibet: et cum in patrimonio nihil habeat, largitur pluribus; idque facit sine ullo sui dispendio, et lucro omnium. Et ideo praestat benevolentia supra ipsam liberalitatem. Ditior haec moribus, quam illa muneribus; plures enim sunt qui indigent beneficio, quam qui abundant.

167. Est autem benevolentia etiam conjuncta liberalitati, a qua ipsa liberalitas proficiscitur, cum largitatis affectum sequitur largiendi usus: et separata atque discreta. Ubi enim deest liberalitas, benevolentia manet, communis quaedam parens omnium, quae amicitiam connectit et copulat: in consiliis fidelis, in prosperis laeta, in tristibus moesta; ut unusquisque benevolentis se magis quam sapientis credat consilio: ut David cum esset prudentior, Jonathae tamen junioris consiliis acquiescebat. Tolle ex usu hominum benevolentiam, tamquam solem e mundo tuleris, ita erit; quia sine ea usus hominum esse non potest ut peregrinanti monstrare viam, revocare errantem, deferre hospitium, (non igitur mediocris virtus, de qua sibi plaudebat Job dicens (Job. XXXI, 32): Foris autem non habitabat hospes, janua mea omni venienti patebat) aquam de aqua profluenti dare, lumen de lumine accendere. Benevolentia itaque in his est omnibus, tamquam fons aquae reficiens sitient em, et tamquam lumen quod etiam in aliis luceat, nec illis desit, qui de suo lumine aliis lumen accenderint.

168. Est etiam illa benevolentiae liberalitas, ut si quod habes debitoris chirographum, scindens restituas, nihil a debitore consecutus debiti. Quod exemplo sui facere nos debere Job sanctus admonet (Ibid., 35 et seq.). Nam qui habet, non mutuatur: qui non habet, non liberat syngrapham. Quid igitur etiam si ipse non exigas, avaris haeredibus reservas, quam potes cum benevolentiae laude sine damno pecuniae repraesentare? 45 169. Atque ut plenius discutiamus; benevolentia a domesticis primum profecta personis, id est, a filiis, parentibus, fratribus, per conjunctionum gradus in civitatum pervenit ambitum, et de paradiso egressa mundum replevit. Denique cum in viro et femina benevolentem Deus posuisset affectum, dixit: Erunt ambo in una carne (Gen. II, 24), et in uno spiritu. Unde se Eva serpenti credidit; quoniam quae benevolentiam acceperat, esse malevolentiam non opinabatur.

CAPUT XXXIII.

BENEVOLENTIAM IN ECCLESIA maxime, et earumdem aut affinium virtutum hominibus perseverare.

170. Augetur benevolentia coetu Ecclesiae, fidei consortio, initiandi societate, percipiendae gratiae necessitudine, mysteriorum communione. Haec enim etiam appellationes necessitudinum, reverentiam filiorum, auctoritatem et pietatem patrum, germanitatem fratrum sibi vindicant. Multum igitur ad cumulandam spectat benevolentiam necessitudo gratiae. 171. Adjuvant etiam parium studia virtutum. Siquidem benevolentia etiam morum facit similitudinem. Denique Jonathas filius regis imitabatur sancti David mansuetudinem, propter quod diligebat eum (I. Reg. XIX, 2 et seq.). Unde et illud: Cum sancto sanctus eris (Psal. XVII, 26), non solum ad conversationem, sed etiam ad benevolentiam derivandum videtur. Nam utique et filii Noe simul habitabant, et non erat in his morum concordia (Gen. IX, 22 et seq.). Habitabant etiam in domo patria Esau et Jacob, sed discrepabant (Gen. XXV, 27). Non enim erat benevolentia inter eos, quae sibi praeferret alterum: sed magis contentio, quae praeriperet benedictionem (Gen. XXVII, 14 et seq.). Nam cum alter praedurus, alter mansuetus esset, inter dispares mores, et studia compugnantia, benevolentia esse non poterat. Adde quia sanctus Jacob paternae degenerem domus virtuti praeferre non poterat. 172. Nihil autem tam consociabile, quam cum aequitate justitia: quae velut compar et socia 46 benevolentiae, facit ut eos quos pares nobis credimus, diligamus. Habet autem in se benevolentia, etiam fortitudinem; nam cum amicitia ex benevolentiae fonte procedat, non dubitat pro amico gravia vitae sustinere pericula: Et si mala mihi, inquit, evenerint per illum, sustineo (Eccli. XXII, 31).

CAPUT XXXIV.

ALIA NONNULLA BENEVOLENTIAE commoda memorantur.

173. Benevolentia etiam gladium iracundiae extorquere consuevit. Benevolentia facit ut amici vulnera utilia quam voluntaria inimici oscula sint (Prov. XXVII, 6). Benevolentia facit, ut unus fiat ex pluribus; quoniam si plures amici sint, unus fiunt, in quibus unus spiritus et una sententia est. Simul advertimus etiam correptiones in amicitia gratas esse, quae aculeos habent, dolorem non habent. Compungimur enim censoriis sermonibus, sed benevolentiae delectamur sedulitate. 174. Ad summam, non omnibus eadem semper officia debentur, nec personarum semper, sed plerumque causarum et temporum praelationes sunt, ut vicinum quis interdum magis quam fratrem adjuverit. Quoniam et Salomon dicit: Melior vicinus in proximo, quam frater longe habitans (Ibid., 10). Et ideo plerumque amici se benevolentiae quisque committit, quam fratris necessitudini. Tantum valet benevolentia, ut plerumque pignora vincat naturae.

CAPUT XXXV.

De fortitudine quae dividitur in bellicam atque domesticam: primam sine justitia et prudentia virtutem non esse: alteram maxime in tolerantia esse positam.

175. Satis copiose justitiae loco honesti naturam et vim tractavimus. Nunc de fortitudine tractemus, quae velut excelsior caeteris, dividitur in res bellicas et domesticas. Sed bellicarum rerum studium a nostro officio jam alienum 47 videtur, quia animi magis quam corporis officio intendimus: nec ad arma jam spectat usus noster, sed ad pacis negotia. Majores autem nostri, ut Jesus Nave, Hierobaal, Samson, David summam rebus quoque bellicis retulere gloriam. 176. Est itaque fortitudo velut excelsior caeteris, sed numquam incomitata virtus; non enim seipsam committit sibi: alioquin fortitudo sine justitia iniquitatis materia est. Quo enim validior est, eo promptior ut inferiorem opprimat; cum in ipsis rebus bellicis justa bella an injusta sint, spectandum putetur. 177. Numquam David nisi lacessitus bellum intulit. Itaque prudentiam fortitudinis comitem habuit in praelio. Nam et adversus Goliam immani mole corporis virum singulari certamine dimicaturus, arma quibus oneraretur, respuit (I Reg. XVII, 40); virtus enim suis lacertis magis quam alienis integumentis nititur. Deinde eminus, quo gravius feriret, ictu lapidis hostem interemit. Postea numquam nisi consulto Domino (II Reg. V, 19 et seq.), bellum adorsus. Ideo in omnibus victor praeliis, usque ad summam senectutem manu promptus, bello adversum Titanas suscepto, ferocibus bellator miscebatur agminibus (II Reg. XXI, 15 et seq.) gloriae cupidus, incuriosus salutis.

178. Sed non haec sola praeclara fortitudo est; sed etiam illorum gloriosam fortitudinem accipimus, qui per fidem magnitudine animi obstruxerunt leonum ora, exstinxerunt virtutem ignis, effugerunt aciem gladii, convaluerunt de infirmitate fortes (Hebr. XI, 33, 34): qui non comitatu et legionibus succincti communem cum multis victoriam, sed nuda virtute animi singularem de perfidis retulerunt triumphum. Quam insuperabilis Daniel, qui circa latera sua rugientes non expavit leones! Fremebant bestiae, et ille epulabatur (Dan. XIV, 38).

CAPUT XXXVI.

FORTITUDINIS OFFICIUM ALIUD esse, ut injuriam a debiliori depellamus: aliud ut non rectos animi motus coerceamus: aliud demum tum ut aspernemur humilia, tum ut honesta infracto animo prosequamur. Quae ab universis quidem Christianis, sed potissimum ab Ecclesiasticis viris praestanda demonstrantur.

178*.

Non igitur in viribus corporis et lacertis tantummodo fortitudinis gloria est, sed magis in virtute animi: neque in inferenda (23, q. 2, c. Non in inferenda), sed in depellenda injuria lex virtutis est. Qui enim non repellit a socio injuriam, si potest, tam est in vitio, quam ille qui facit. Unde (Exod. II, 11 et seq.) sanctus Moyses hinc prius orsus est tentamenta bellicae fortitudinis. Nam cum vidisset Hebraeum ab Aegyptio injuriam accipientem, defendit; ita ut Aegyptium sterneret, atque in arena absconderet. Salomon quoque ait: Eripe eum qui ducitur ad mortem (Prov. XXIV, 10). 48 179. Unde igitur hoc vel Tullius, vel etiam Panaetius, aut ipse Aristoteles transtulerint, apertum est satis. Quamquam etiam his duobus antiquior dixerit Job: Salvum feci pauperem de manu potentis, et pupillum cui adjutor non erat, adjuvi. Benedictio perituri in me veniat (Job XXIX, 12, 13). Nonne hic fortissimus, qui tam fortiter pertulit impetus diaboli, et vicit eum virtute mentis suae? Neque vero de ejus dubitandum fortitudine, cui dicit Dominus: Accinge sicut vir lumbos tuos, suscipe altitudinem et virtutem: omnem autem injuriosum humiliato (Job. XL, 2). Apostolus quoque ait: Habetis fortissimam consolationem (Hebr. VI, 18). Est ergo fortis qui se in dolore aliquo consolatur.

180. Et re vera jure ea fortitudo vocatur, quando unusquisque se ipsum vincit, iram continet, nullis illecebris emollitur atque inflectitur, non adversis perturbatur, non extollitur secundis, et quasi vento quodam, variarum rerum circumfertur mutatione. Quid autem excelsius et magnificentius, quam exercere mentem, afficere carnem et in servitudinem redigere; ut obediat imperio, consiliis obtemperet, ut in adeundis laboribus impigre exsequatur propositum animi ac voluntatem?

181. Haec igitur prima vis fortitudinis, quoniam in duobus generibus fortitudo spectatur animi. Primo, ut externa corporis pro minimis habeat, et quasi superflua despicienda magis quam expetenda ducat. Secundo, ut ea quae summa sunt, omnes quae res in quibus honestas et illud πρέπον cernitur, praeclara animi intentione usque ad affectum persequatur. Quid enim tam praeclarum, quam ut ita animum informes tuum ut, neque divitias, neque voluptates, neque honores in maximis constituas, neque in his studium omne conteras? Quod cum ita affectus animo fueris, necesse est illud honestum ac decorum praeponendum putes, illique mentem ita intendas tuam, ut quidquid acciderit quo frangi animi solent, aut patrimonii amissio, aut honoris immunitio, aut obtrectatio infidelium, quasi superior non sentias. Deinde ut te salutis ipsius pericula pro justitia suscepta non moveant.

182. Haec vera fortitudo est, quam habet Christi athleta, qui, nisi legitimo certamine, non coronatur. An mediocre tibi videtur praeceptum fortitudinis: Tribulatio patientiam operatur, patientia probationem, probatio autem spem (II Cor VII, 5)? Vide quot certamina, et una corona. Quod praeceptum non dat, nisi qui est confortatus in Christo Jesu, cujus caro requiem non habebat. Afflictio undique: foris pugnae, intus timores. Et quamvis in periculis, in laboribus plurimis, in carceribus, in mortibus positus; animo tamen non frangebatur, sed praeliabatur, adeo ut potentior suis fieret infirmitatibus. 183. Itaque considera quemadmodum eos qui ad officia Ecclesiae accedunt, despicientiam rerum humanarum habere debere doceat. Si ergo 49 mortui estis cum Christo ab elementis hujus mundi, quid adhuc velut viventes de hoc mundo decernitis? Ne tetigeritis, ne attaminaveritis, ne gustaveritis, quae sunt omnia ad corruptelam ipso usu (Coloss. II, 20 et seq.). Et infra: Si ergo consurrexistis cum Christo, quae sursum sunt quaerite, non quae super terram (Coloss. III. 1). Et iterum: Mortificate ergo membra vestra, quae sunt super terram (Ibid., 5). Et haec quidem adhuc omnibus fidelibus: tibi autem, fili, contemptum divitiarum, profanarum quoque et anilium fabularum, suadet declinationem, nihil permittens nisi quod te exerceat ad pietatem; quia corporalis exercitatio nulli rei usui est: pietas autem ad omnia utilis.

184. Exerceat ergo te pietas ad justitiam, continentiam, mansuetudinem; ut fugias juvenilia opera, confirmatus et radicatus in gratia bonum fidei subeas certamen: non te implices negotiis saecularibus, quoniam Deo militas. Etenim si is qui imperatori militat, a susceptionibus litium, actu negotiorum forensium, venditione mercium prohibetur humanis legibus; quanto magis qui fidei exercet militiam, ab omni usu negotiationis abstinere debet, agelluli sui contentus fructibus, si habet: si non habet, stipendiorum suorum fructu! Siquidem bonus testis est qui dicit: Juvenis fui, et senui, et non vidi justum derelictum, nec semen ejus quaerens panem (Psal. XXXVI, 25). Ea est enim tranquillitas animi et temperantia, quae neque studio quaerendi afficitur, neque egestatis metu angitur.

CAPUT XXXVII.

SERVANDAM UT IN prosperis, ita et in adversis mentis aequalitatem: mala tamen interdum declinanda.

185. Ea est etiam quae dicitur vacuitas animi ab angoribus; ut neque in doloribus molliores simus, neque in prosperis elatiores. Quod si hi qui ad capescendam rempublicam adhortantur aliquos, haec praecepta dant, quanto magis nos qui ad officium Ecclesiae vocamur, talia debemus agere quae placeant Deo; ut 50 praetendat in nobis virtus Christi, et ita simus nostro probati imperatori, ut membra nostra arma justitiae sint, arma non carnalia in quibus peccatum regnet, sed arma fortia Deo quibus peccatum destruatur: moriatur caro nostra, ut in ea omnis culpa moriatur; et quasi ex mortuis viventes, novis resurgamus operibus ac moribus! 186. Haec sunt plena honesti et decori officii stipendia fortitudinis. Sed quia in omnibus quae agimus, non solum quid honestum, sed etiam quid possibile sit quaerimus, ne forte aggrediamur aliquid quod non possimus exsequi. Unde nos tempore persecutionis de civitate in civitatem concedere, immo ut verbo ipso utar, fugere (Matth. X, 23) vult Dominus; ne temere aliquis dum martyrii desiderat gloriam, offerat se periculis, quae fortasse caro infirmior, aut remissior animus ferre ac tolerare non queat.

CAPUT XXXVIII.

ADVERSUS FUTURA INCOMMODA mentem exercitatione roborandam, nec non confirmandam praevidentia: et quae hic incurrant difficultates?

187. Nec rursus propter ignaviam cedere quis ac deserere fidem debet metu periculi. Qua gratia praeparandus est animus, exercenda mens, stabilienda ad constantiam, ut nullis perturbari animus possit terroribus, nullis frangi molestiis, nullis suppliciis cedere. Quae difficile quidem sustinentur: sed quia omnia supplicia graviorum suppliciorum vincuntur formidine, ideo si consilio firmes animum tuum, nec a ratione discedendum putes, et proponas divini judicii metum, perpetui supplicii tormenta, potes animi subire tolerantiam. 188. Hoc igitur diligentiae est, ut quis ita se comparet: illud ingenii, si quis potest vigore mentis praevidere quae futura sunt, et tamquam ante oculos locare quid possit accidere, et quid agere debeat, si ita acciderit, definire; interdum 51 duo et tria simul volvere animo, quae conjiciat aut singula aut conjuncta accidere posse, et aut singulis aut conjunctis disponere actus quos intelligat profuturos.

189. Fortis ergo est viri non dissimulare cum aliquid immineat, sed praetendere, et tamquam explorare de specula quadam mentis, et obviare cogitatione provida rebus futuris, ne forte dicat postea: Ideo ista incidi, quia non arbitrabar posse evenire. Denique nisi explorentur adversa, cito occupant. Ut in bello improvisus hostis vix sustinetur, et si imparatos inveniat, facile opprimit: ita animum mala inexplorata plus frangunt. 190. In his igitur duobus illa est animi excellentia, ut primum animus tuus bonis exercitus cogitationibus, mundo corde quod verum et honestum est videat: Beati enim mundo corde, quia ipsi etiam Deum videbunt (Matth. V, 8):

atque id quod honestum est solum bonum judicet: deinde nullis perturbetur occupationibus, nullis cupiditatibus fluctuet. 191. Neque vero id facile quisquam facit. Quid enim tam difficile quam dispicere tamquam ex arce aliqua sapientiae opes, aliaque omnia quae plerisque videntur magna et praecelsa? Deinde ut judicium tuum stabili ratione confirmes, et quae judicaveris levia, tamquam nihil profutura contemnas? Deinde ut si quid acciderit adversi, idque grave et acerbum putetur, ita feras, ut nihil praeter naturam accidisse putes, cum legeris: Nudus sum natus, nudus exibo. Quae Dominus dedit, Dominus abstulit (Job I, 21); utique et filios amiserat et facultates. Servesque in omnibus personam sapientis et justi, sicut ille servavit qui ait: Sicut Domino placuit, ita factum est: sit nomen Domini benedictum (Ibid.). Et infra: Sicut una insipientium mulierum locuta es. Si bona suscepimus de manu Domini, quae mala sunt non sustinebimus (Job II, 10) ?

CAPUT XXXIX.

FORTITUDINEM ADVERSUS OMNIA vitia dimicare debere, praecipue adversus avaritiam: quod in sancto Job docetur factum.

192. Non est igitur mediocris nec discreta a caeteris animi fortitudo, quae bellum cum virtutibus gerat: sed quae sola defendat ornamenta virtutum omnium, et judicia custodiat; et quae inexpiabili praelio adversus omnia vitia decernat, invicta ad labores, fortis ad pericula, rigidior adversus voluptates, dura adversus illecebras, quibus aurem deferre nesciat, nec (ut dicitur) ave dicat; pecuniam negligat, avaritiam fugiat tamquam labem quamdam, quae 52 virtutem effeminet. Nihil enim tam contrarium fortitudini, quam lucro vinci. Frequenter pulsis hostibus, et inclinata in fugam adversariorum acie, dum exuviis caesorum capitur praeliator, inter ipsos quos stravit, miserandus occubuit: et triumphis suis dejectae legiones dum spoliis occupantur, hostem in se revocaverunt, qui fugerat.

193. Fortitudo igitur tam immanem pestem repellat et proterat, nec tentetur cupiditatibus, nec frangatur metu; quia virtus sibi constat, ut fortiter omnia persequatur vitia, tamquam virtutis venena: iracundiam velut quibusdam propulset armis, quae tollat consilium, et tamquam aegritudinem vitet. Gloriae quoque caveat appetentiam, quae frequenter nocuit immoderatius expetita, semper autem usurpata. 194. Quid horum sancto Job vel in virtute defuit, vel in vitio obrepsit? Quomodo laborem aegritudinis, frigoris, famis pertulit? Quomodo despexit salutis periculum? Numquid rapinis divitiae coacervatae, de quibus tanta inopibus affluebant? Numquid avaritiam census, aut voluptatis studia cupiditatesque excitavit? Numquid trium regum injuriosa contentio, vel servorum contumelia in iram excussit?

Numquid gloria sicut levem extulit, qui imprecabatur gravia sibi, si umquam vel non voluntariam celavisset culpam, vel reveritus esset multitudinem plebis, quominus annuntiaret eam in conspectu omnium? Neque enim consentaneae sunt vitiis virtutes, sed sibi constant. Quis igitur tam fortis quam sanctus Job: cui secundus adjudicari potest, qui parem vix reperit?

CAPUT XL.

VIRTUTEM BELLICAM NOSTRIS etiam non defuisse, veterum exemplis, maximeque praeclaro Eleazari facto demonstratur.

195. Sed fortasse aliquos bellica defixos gloria tenet, ut putent solam esse praeliarem fortitudinem; et ideo me ad haec deflexisse, quia illa nostris deforet. Quam fortis Jesus Nave, ut uno praelio quinque reges captos sterneret cum populis suis (Josue X, 5 et seq.)! Deinde cum adversum Gabaonitas urgeret praelium, et vereretur ne nox impediret victoriam, magnitudine mentis et fidei clamavit: Stet sol; et stetit, donec victoria consummaretur. Gedeon in trecentis viris de ingenti populo et acerbo hoste revexit triumphum (Judic. VII, 8 et seq.). Jonathas adolescens virtutem fecit in magno praelio (I Reg. XIV, 1 et seq.). Quid de Machabaeis loquar (I Mach. II, 35 et seq.) ? 196. Sed prius de populo dicam Patrum, qui cum essent parati ad repugnandum pro templo 53 Dei, et pro legitimis suis, dolo hostium die lacessiti sabbati, maluerunt vulneribus offerre nuda corpora, quam repugnare, ne violarent sabbatum. Itaque omnes laeti se obtulerunt morti. Sed Machabaei considerantes quod hoc exemplo gens omnis posset perire, sabbato etiam, cum ipsi in bellum provocarentur, ulti sunt innocentium necem fratrum suorum. Unde postea stimulatus rex Antiochus, cum bellum accenderet per duces suos Lysiam, Nicanorem, Gorgiam, ita cum Orientalibus suis et Assyriis attritus est copiis, ut quadraginta et octo millia in medio campi a tribus millibus prosternerentur.

197. Virtutem ducis Judae Machabaei de uno ejus milite considerate (I Machab. VI, 43 et seq.). Namque Eleazarus cum supereminentem caeteris elephantum, lorica vestitum regia, adverteret, arbitratus quod in eo esset rex, cursu concitus in medium legionis se proripuit, et abjecto clypeo, utraque manu interficiebat, donec pervenit ad bestiam, atque intravit sub eam, et subjecto gladio interemit eam. Itaque cadens bestia oppressit Eleazarum, atque ita mortuus est. Quanta igitur virtus animi! Primo, ut mortem non timeret: deinde, ut circumfusus legionibus inimicorum, in confertos raperetur hostes, medium penetraret agmen, et contempta morte ferocior, abjecto clypeo, utraque manu vulneratae molem bestiae subiret ac sustineret: post infra ipsam succederet, quo pleniori feriret ictu; cujus ruina inclusus magis quam oppressus, suo est sepultus triumpho.

198. Nec fefellit opinio virum, quamvis regius fefellerit habitus; tanto enim virtutis spectaculo defixi hostes inermem, occupatum incursare non ausi, post casum ruentis bestiae sic trepidaverunt, ut impares se omnes unius virtuti arbitrarentur. Denique rex Antiochus Lysiae filius, qui cum centum vinginti millibus hominum armatis venerat et cum triginta duobus elephantis; ita ut ab ortu solis per singulas bestias velut montes quidam splendor armorum corusco, tamquam lampadibus ardentibus refulgeret, unius territus fortitudine, pacem rogaret. Itaque Eleazarus haeredem virtutis suae pacem reliquit. Sed haec triumphorum sint.

CAPUT XLI.

LAUDATA JUDAE AC Jonathae magnitudine animi, martyrum in tolerando constantia, quae pars non minima fortitudinis, ob oculos ponitur.

199. Verum quia fortitudo non solum secundis rebus, sed etiam adversis probatur: spectemus nunc Judae Machabaei exitum (I Marc. IX, 8 et seq.). 54 Is enim post victum Nicanorem regis Demetrii ducem, securior adversus viginti millia exercitus regis, cum nongentis viris bellum adorsus, volentibus his cedere, ne multitudine opprimerentur, gloriosam magis mortem, quam turpem fugam suasit: Ne crimen, inquit, nostrae relinquamus gloriae. Itaque commisso praelio, cum a primo ortu diei in vesperam dimicaretur, dextrum cornu, in quo validissimam manum advertit hostium, aggressus facile avertit. Sed dum fugientes sequitur, a tergo vulneri locum praebuit: ita gloriosiorem triumphis locum mortis invenit.

200. Quid Jonatham fratrem ejus attexam; qui cum parva manu adversus exercitus regios pugnans, desertus a suis, et cum duobus tantum relictus reparavit bellum, avertit hostem, fugitantes suos ad societatem revocavit triumphi? 201. Habes fortitudinem bellicam, in qua non mediocris honesti ac decori forma est; quod mortem servituti praeferat ac turpitudini. Quid autem de martyrum dicam passionibus? Et ne longius evagemur, non minores de superbo rege Antiocho Machabaei pueri revexerunt triumphos, quam parentes proprii. Siquidem illi armati, isti sine armis vicerunt (II Machab. VII, 1 et seq.). Stetit invicta septem puerorum cohors, regiis cincta legionibus: defecerunt supplicia, cesserunt tortores, non defecerunt martyres. Alius corium capitis exutus, speciem mutaverat, virtutem auxerat. Alius linguam jussus amputandam promere, respondit: Non solum Dominus audit loquentes, qui audiebat Moysen tacentem. (Exod. XIV, 15). Plus audit tacitas cogitationes suorum, quam voces omnium. Linguae flagellum times, flagellum sanguinis non times? Habet et sanguis vocem suam, qua clamat ad Deum, sicut clamavit in Abel (Gen. IV, 10). 202. Quid de matre loquar, quae spectabat laeta filiorum quot funera tot trophaea, et morientium vocibus tamquam psallentium cantibus delectabatur, pulcherrimam ventris sui citharam in filiis cernens, et pietatis harmoniam omni lyrae numero dulciorem (II Machab. VII, 20 et seq.) ?

203. Quid de bimulis loquar, qui ante palmam victoriae acceperunt, quam sensum naturae? Quid de sancta Agne, quae in duarum maximarum rerum posita periculo, castitatis et salutis, castitatem protexit, salutem cum immortalitate commutavit? 204. Non praetereamus etiam sanctum Laurentium, qui cum videret Xystum episcopum suum ad martyrium duci, flere coepit, non passionem illius, sed suam remansionem. Itaque his verbis appellare coepit: Quo progrederis sine filio, pater: quo, sacerdos sancte, sine diacono properas 55 tuo? Numquam sacrificium sine ministro offerre consueveras. quid in me ergo displicuit, pater? Num degenerem probasti? Experire certe utrum idoneum ministrum elegeris. Cui commisisti Dominici sanguinis consecrationem, cui consummandorum consortium sacramentorum, huic sanguinis tui consortium negas? Vide ne periclitetur judicium tuum, dum fortitudo laudatur. Abjectio discipuli detrimentum est magisterii. Quid! quod illustres et praestantes viri discipulorum certaminibus quam suis vincunt. Denique Abraham filium obtulit (Gen. XXII, 9), Petrus Stephanum praemisit (Act. VII, 57). Et tu, pater, ostende in filio virtutem tuam, offer quem erudisti, ut securus judicii tui comitatu nobili pervenias ad coronam. 205. Tunc Xystus ait: Non ego te, fili, relinquo ac desero: sed majora tibi debentur certamina. Nos quasi senes levioris pugnae cursum recipimus: te quasi juvenem manet gloriosior de tyranno triumphus. Mox venies, flere desiste, post triduum me sequeris.

Sacerdotem et levitam hic medius numerus decet. Non erat tuum sub magistro vincere, quasi adjutorem quaereres. Quid consortium passionis meae expetis? Totam tibi haereditatem ejus dimitto. Quid praesentiam meam requiris? Infirmi discipuli magistrum praecedant, fortes sequantur, ut vincant sine magistro, qui jam non indigent magisterio. Sic et Elias Elisaeum reliquit. Tibi ergo mando nostrae virtutis successionem.

206. Talis erat contentio, digna sane de qua certarent sacerdos et minister, quis prior pateretur pro Christi nomine. In fabulis ferunt tragicis excitatos theatri magnos esse plausus, cum se Pylades Orestem diceret; Orestes, ut erat, Orestem se esse asseveraret: ille ut pro Oreste necaretur, Orestes ne Pyladem pro se pateretur necari. Sed illis non licebat vivere, quod uterque 56 esset parricidii reus: alter qui fecisset, alter qui adjuvisset. Hic Laurentium sanctum ad hoc nullus urgebat, nisi amor devotionis; tamen et ipse post triduum, cum illuso tyranno, impositus super craticulam exureretur: Assum est, inquit, versa et manduca. Ita animi virtute vincebat ignis naturam.

CAPUT XLII.

POTESTATES NON IRRITANDAS, neque adulationi praebendas aures.

207. Cavendum etiam reor, ne dum aliqui nimia gloriae ducuntur cupiditate, insolentius abutantur potestatibus, et plerumque aversos a nobis animos gentilium in studia persecutionis excitent, atque inflamment ad iracundiam. Itaque ut illi perseverare possint, et supplicia vincere, quantos perire faciunt? 208. Prospiciendum etiam ne adulantibus aperiamus aurem; emolliri enim adulatione, non solum fortitudinis non esse, sed etiam ignaviae videtur.

CAPUT XLIII.

De temperantia et praecipuis ejus partibus, nimirum animi tranquillitate ac moderatione, honestatis cura, et decoris consideratione.

209. Quoniam de tribus virtutibus diximus, restat ut de quarta virtute dicamus, quae temperantia ac modestia vocatur: in qua maxime tranquillitas animi, studium mansuetudinis, moderationis gratia, honesti cura, decoris consideratio spectatur et quaeritur. 210. Ordo igitur quidam vitae nobis tenendus est, ut a verecundia prima quaedam fundamenta ducantur: quae socia ac familiaris est mentis 57 placiditati, proterviae fugitans, ab omni aliena luxu, sobrietatem diligit, honestatem fovet, decorum illud requirit. 211. Sequatur conversationis electio, ut adjungamur probatissimis quibusque senioribus. Namque ut aequalium usus dulcior, ita senum tutior est, qui magisterio quodam et ductu vitae colorat mores adolescentium, et velut murice probitatis inficit. Namque si hi qui sunt ignari locorum, cum solertibus viarum iter adoriri gestiunt; quanto magis adolescentes cum senibus debent novum sibi iter vitae aggredi, quo minus errare possint, et a vero tramite virtutis deflectere! Nihil enim pulchrius quam eosdem et magistros vitae et testes habere. 212. Quaerendum etiam in omni actu quid personis, quid temporibus conveniat atque aetatibus, quid etiam singulorum ingeniis sit accommodum. Saepe enim quod alterum decet, alterum non decet. Aliud juveni aptum, aliud seni: aliud in periculis, aliud in rebus secundis.

213. Saltavit ante arcam Domini David (II Reg. VI, 14): non saltavit Samuel; nec ideo ille reprehensus, sed magis iste laudatus. Mutavit vultum contra regem, cui nomen Achis (I Reg. XXI, 13): at hoc si fecisset remota formidine quo minus cognosceretur, nequaquam levitatis reprehensione carere potuisset. Saul quoque vallatus choro prophetarum, etiam ipse prophetavit; et de solo quasi indigno memoratum est: Et Saul inter prophetas (I Reg. XIX, 24).

CAPUT XLIV.

OFFICIO SIBI CONGRUO quemque studere oportere: sed multos impediri paternorum imitatione studiorum; contra quam Ecclesiastici viri faciunt.

214. Unusquisque igitur suum ingenium noverit, et ad id se applicet, quod sibi aptum elegerit. Itaque quid sequatur, prius consideret. Noverit bona sua, sed etiam vitia cognoscat: aequalemque se judicem sui praebeat, ut bonis intendat, vitia declinet. 215. Alius distinguendae lectioni aptior, alius psalmo gratior, alius exorcizandis qui malo laborant spiritu, sollicitior, alius sacrario oportunior habetur. Haec omnia spectet sacerdos, et quid cuique congruat, id officii deputet. Quo etenim unumquemque suum ducit ingenium, aut quod officium decet, id majore impletur gratia. 216. Sed id cum in omni vita difficile, tum in 58 nostro actu difficillimum est. Amat enim unusquisque sequi vitam parentum. Denique plerique ad militiam feruntur, quorum militaverunt parentes, alii ad actiones diversas. 217. In ecclesiastico vero officio nihil rarius invenias quam eum qui sequatur institutum patris: vel quia gravis deterret actus, vel quia in lubrica aetate difficilior abstinentia, vel quia alacri adolescentiae videtur vita obscurior; et ideo ad ea convertuntur studia, quae plausibiliora arbitrantur. Praesentia quippe plures quam futura praeferunt. Illi autem praesentibus, nos futuris militamus. Unde quo praestantior causa, eo debet esse cura attentior.

CAPUT XLV.

De pulchro et honesto: quid sit inter illa discriminis tam apud profanos auctores, quam sacros.

218. Teneamus igitur verecundiam, et eam quae totius vitae ornatum attollit modestiam. Non enim mediocre est rebus singulis modum servare, atque impartiri ordinem, in quo vere praelucet illud quod decorum dicitur: quod ita cum honesto jungitur, ut separari non queat. Siquidem et quod decet, honestum est, et quod honestum est, decet; ut magis in sermone distinctio sit, quam in virtute discretio. Differre enim ea inter se intelligi potest, explicari non potest. 219. Et ut conemur aliquid eruere distinctionis, honestas velut bona valetudo est, et quaedam salubritas corporis: decus autem tamquam venustas et pulchritudo. Sicut ergo pulchritudo super salubritatem ac valetudinem videtur excellere, et tamen sine his esse non potest, neque ullo separari modo; quoniam nisi bona valetudo sit, pulchritudo esse ac venustas non potest: sic honestas decorum illud in se continet, ut ab ea profectum videatur, et sine ea esse non possit. Velut salubritas igitur totius operis actusque nostri honestas est, et sicut species est decorum, quod cum honestate confusum, opinione distinguitur. Nam etsi in aliquo videatur excellere, tamen in radice est honestatis, sed flore praecipuo, ut sine ea decidat, in ea floreat. Quid enim est honestas, nisi quae turpitudinem quasi mortem fugiat? Quid vero inhonestum, nisi quod ariditatem ac mortem afferat? Virente igitur substantia virtutis, decorum illud tamquam flos emicat, quia radix salva est: at vero propositi nostri radice vitiosa, nihil germinat. 59

220. Habes hoc in nostris aliquanto expressius. Dicit enim David: Dominus regnavit, decorem induit (Psal. XCII, 1). Et Apostolus ait: Sicut in die, honeste ambulate (Rom. XIII, 13). Quod Graeci dicunt εὐσχημόνως, hoc autem proprie significat, bono habitu, bona specie. Deus ergo primum hominem cum conderet, bona habitudine, bona membrorum compositione formavit, et optimam ei speciem dedit. Remissionem non dederat peccatorum: sed posteaquam renovavit eum spiritu, et infudit ei gratiam, qui venerat in servi forma, et in hominis specie assumpsit decorem redemptionis humanae. Et ideo dixit Propheta: Dominus regnavit, decorem induit. Deinde alibi dicit: Te decet hymnus, Deus, in Sion (Psal. LXIV, 2); hoc est dicere: Honestum est ut te timeamus, te diligamus, te precemur, te honorificemus; scriptum est enim: Omnia vestra honeste fiant (I Cor. XIV, 40). Sed possumus et hominem timere, diligere, rogare, honorare: hymnus specialiter Deo dicitur. Hoc tamquam excellentius caeteris credere est decorum, quod deferimus Deo. Mulierem quoque in habitu ornato orare convenit: sed specialiter eam decet orare velatam, et orare promittentem castitatem cum bona conversatione (I Tim. II, 9, 10).

CAPUT XLVI.

PROPONITUR BIFIDA DECORI divisio: tum postquam ostensum est quod secundum naturam sit, honestum: quod secus, turpe censendum; exemplis illustratur haec ipsa divisio.

221. Est igitur decorum quod praeeminet, cujus divisio gemina est. Nam est decorum quasi generale, quod per universitatem funditur honestatis, et quasi in toto spectatur corpore: est etiam speciale, quod in parte aliqua enitet. Illud generale ita est, ac si aequabilem formam atque universitatem honestatis in omni actu suo habeat concinentem; cum omnis sibi ejus vita consentit, nec in ulla aliqua re discrepat: hoc speciale, cum aliquem actum in suis habet virtutibus praeeminentem. 222. Simul illud adverte quod et decorum est secundum naturam vivere, secundum naturam degere, et turpe est quod sit contra naturam. Ait enim Apostolus quasi interrogans: Decet mulierem non velatam orare Deum? Nec ipsa natura docet vos quod vir quidem si comam habeat, ignominia est illi; quoniam contra naturam est (I Cor. XI, 13)? Et iterum dicit: Mulier vero si capillos habeat, gloria est illi (Ibid. 15). Est enim secundum naturam, quoniam quidem capilli pro velamine sunt; hoc est enim naturale velamen. Personam igitur nobis et speciem natura ipsa dispensat, quam servare debemus: 60 utinamque et innocentiam ejus custodire possimus, nec acceptam nostra malitia mutaret!

223. Habes hoc decorum generale, quia fecit Deus mundi istius pulchritudinem. Habes et per partes, quia cum faceret Deus lucem, et diem noctemque distingueret (Genes. I, 3 et seq.), cum conderet coelum, cum terras et maria separaret, cum solem et lunam et stellas constitueret lucere super terram, probavit singula. Ergo decorum hoc, quod in singulis mundi partibus elucebat, in universitate resplenduit, sicut probat Sapientia, dicens: Ego eram cui applaudebat . . . . . cum laetaretur orbe perfecto (Prov. VIII, 30, 31). Similiter ergo et in fabrica humani corporis grata est uniuscujusque membri portio: sed plus in commune compositio membrorum apta delectat, quod ita sibi quadrare et convenire videantur.

CAPUT XLVII.

UT IN VITA nostra eluceat decorum illud, quid praestare nos oporteat, quosve appetitus refraenare?

224. Si quis igitur aequabilitatem universae vitae, et singularum actionum modos servet, ordinem quoque, et constantiam dictorum atque operum, moderationemque custodiat, in ejus vita decorum illud excellit, et quasi in quodam speculo elucet.

235. Accedat tamen suavis sermo, ut conciliet sibi affectum audientium, gratumque se vel familiaribus, vel civibus, vel, si fieri potest, omnibus praebeat. Neque adulantem se, neque adulandum cuiquam exibeat; alterum enim calliditatis est, vanitatis alterum. 226. Non despiciat quid de se unusquisque et maxime vir optimus sentiat; hoc enim modo discit bonis deferre reverentiam. Nam negligere bonorum judicia vel arrogantiae, vel dissolutionis est: quorum alterum superbiae ascribitur, alterum negligentiae.

227. Caveat etiam motus animi sui; ipse enim sibi et observandus et circumspiciendus est: et ut adversum se cavendus, ita etiam de se tuendus. Sunt enim motus, in quibus est appetitus ille, qui quasi quodam prorumpit impetu; unde Graece ὁρμὴ dicitur quod vi quadam se repente proripiat. Non mediocris in his vis quaedam animi atque naturae est. Quae tamen vis gemina est, una in appetitu, altera in ratione posita, quae appetitum refrenet, et sibi obedientem praestet, et ducat quo velit: et tamquam sedulo magisterio edoceat quid fieri, quid evitari oporteat, ut bonae domitrici obtemperet. 228. Solliciti enim debemus esse, ne quid timere aut incuriose geramus, aut quidquam 61 omnino cujus probabilem non possimus rationem reddere. Actus enim nostri causa, etsi non omnibus redditur, tamen ab omnibus examinatur. Nec vero habemus, in quo nos possimus excusare Nam etsi vis quaedam naturae in omni appetitu sit; tamen idem appetitus rationis subjectus est lege naturae ipsius, et obedit ei. Unde boni speculatoris est ita praetendere animo, ut appetitus neque praecurrat rationem, neque deserat; ne praecurrendo perturbet atque excludat, eamque deserendo destituat. Perturbatio tollit constantiam, destitutio prodit ignaviam, accusat pigritiam. Perturbata enim mente latius se ac longius fundit appetitus, et tamquam efferato impetu frenos rationis non suscipit, nec ulla sentit aurigae moderamina, quibus possit reflecti. Unde plerumque non solum animus exagitatur, amittitur ratio; sed etiam inflammatur vultus, vel iracundia, vel libidine: pallescit timore, voluptate se non capit, et nimia gestit laetitia.

229. Haec cum fiunt, abjicitur illa naturalis quaedam censura, gravitasque morum: nec teneri potest illa quae in rebus gerendis atque consiliis sola potest auctoritatem suam, atque illud quod deceat tenere, constantia. 230. Gravior autem appetitus ex indignatione nimia nascitur, quam acceptae plerumque accendit injuriae dolor. De quo satis nos psalmi quem in praefatione posuimus (Cap. II. 6, 7), praecepta instruunt. Pulchre autem et hoc accidit, ut scripturi de Officiis, ea praefationis nostrae assertione uteremur quae et ipsa ad officii magisterium pertineret. 231. Sed quia supra, ut oportebat, perstrinximus quemadmodum unusquisque cavere possit, ne excitetur accepta injuria, verentes ne praefatio prolixior fieret, nunc de eo uberius disputandum arbitror. Locus enim opportunus est, ut in partibus temperantiae dicamus quemadmodum reprimatur iracundia.

CAPUT XLVIII.

REPETITO COMPESCENDAE IRACUNDIAE argumento, tres eorum qui lacessuntur injuriis, ordines explicantur: ad quorum perfectissimum Apostolus ac David dicuntur pervenisse: ubi ex occasione quaedam hujus ac futurae vitae traduntur discrimina.

232. Tria itaque genera esse hominum injuriam accipientium in Scripturis divinis demonstrare volumus, si possumus. Unum est eorum quibus peccator insultat, conviciatur, inequitat. Iis quia deest justitia, pudor crescit, augetur dolor. Horum similes plurimi de meo ordine, de meo numero. Nam mihi infirmo si quis injuriam faciat, forsitan, licet infirmus, donem injuriam meam. Si crimen objiciat, 62 non sum tantus, ut sim contentus conscientia mea, etiamsi me ejus objecti alienum noverim: sed cupio abluere ingenui pudoris notam, tamquam infirmus. Ergo oculum pro oculo, et dentem pro dente exigo, et convicium convicio rependo.

233. Si vero is sum qui proficiam, etsi nondum perfectus, non retorqueo contumeliam: etsi influat ille convicium, et inundet aures meas contumeliis, ego taceo, et nihil respondeo. 234. Si vero perfectus sim (verbi gratia loquor, nam veritate infirmus sum) si ergo perfectus sim, benedico maledicentem, sicut benedicebat et Paulus; qui ait: Maledicimur, et benedicimus (I Cor. IV, 12). Audierat enim dicentem: Diligite inimicos vestros, orate pro calumniantibus et persequentibus vos (Matth. V, 44). Ideo ergo Paulus persecutionem patiebatur, et sustinebat, quia vincebat et mitigabat humanum affectum propositae mercedis gratia; ut filius Dei fieret, si dilexisset inimicum. 235. Tamen et sanctum David in hoc quoque genere virtutis imparem Paulo non fuisse edocere possumus. Qui primo quidem cum malediceret ei filius Semei (II Reg. XVI, 7 et seq.) et crimina objiceret, tacebat et humiliabatur, et silebat a bonis suis (Psal. XXXVIII, 3), hoc est bonorum operum conscientia: deinde expetebat maledici sibi, quia maledicto illo divinam acquirebat misericordiam.

236. Vide autem quomodo et humilitatem et justitiam et prudentiam emerendae a Domino gratiae reservaverit. Primo dixit: Ideo maledicit mihi, quia Dominus dixit illi ut maledicat (II Reg. XVI, 10). Habes humilitatem; quia ea quae divinitus imperantur, aequanimiter quasi servulus ferenda arbitrabatur. Iterum dixit: Ecce filius meus qui exivit de ventre meo, quaerit animam meam (Ibid., 11). Habes justitiam; si enim a nostris graviora patimur, cur indigne ferimus quae inferuntur ab alienis? Tertio ait: Dimitte illum ut maledicat; quoniam dixit illi Dominus, ut videat humiliationem meam, et retribuat mihi Dominus pro maledicto hoc (Ibid., 12). Nec solum conviciantem pertulit, sed etiam lapidantem et sequentem illaesum reliquit (II Reg. XIX, 22), quin etiam post victoriam petenti veniam libenter ignovit.

237. Quod ideo inserui, ut Evangelico spiritu sanctum David non solum inoffensum, sed etiam gratum fuisse convicianti docerem, et delectatum potius quam exasperatum injuriis, pro quibus mercedem sibi reddendam arbitrabatur. Sed tamen quamvis perfectus, adhuc perfectiora quaerebat. Incalescebat injuriae dolore, quasi homo: sed vincebat quasi bonus miles; tolerabat quasi athleta fortis. Patientiae autem finis, promissorum exspectatio, et ideo dicebat: Notum fac mihi, Domine, finem meum, et numerum dierum meorum, quis est, ut sciam quid desit mihi (Psal. XXXVIII, 5). 63 Finem illum quaerit promissorum coelestium, vel illum, quando unusquique surget in suo ordine: Primitiae Christus, deinde hi qui sunt Christi, qui in adventum ejus crediderunt, deinde finis (I Cor. XV, 23). Tradito enim regno Deo et Patri, et evacuatis omnibus potestatibus, ut Apostolus dixit, perfectio incipit. Hic ergo impedimentum, hic infirmitas etiam perfectorum, illic plena perfectio. Ideo et dies illos requirit vitae aeternae, qui sunt, non qui praetereunt; ut cognoscat quid sibi desit, quae terra sit repromissionis perpetuos fructus ferens, quae prima apud patrem mansio, quae secunda, quae tertia, in quibus pro ratione meritorum unusquisque requiescet.

238. Illa igitur nobis expetenda, in quibus perfectio, in quibus veritas est. Hic umbra, hic imago, illic veritas. Umbra in Lege, imago in Evangelio, veritas in coelestibus (Hebr. X. 1, et seq.). Ante agnus offerebatur, offerebatur et vitulus, nunc Christus offertur: sed offertur quasi homo, quasi recipiens passionem; et offert se ipse quasi sacerdos, ut peccata nostra dimittat: hic in imagine, ibi in veritate, ubi apud patrem pro nobis quasi advocatus intervenit. Hic ergo in imagine ambulamus, in imagine videmus: illic facie ad faciem, ubi plena perfectio; quia perfectio omnis in veritate est.

CAPUT XLIX.

HIC SERVANDAM IN nobis virtutum imaginem, diaboli vero et vitiorum eradendam, ac in primis avaritiae: quae libertatem nobis adimit, variisque turbatos vanitatibus imagine Dei spoliat.

239. Ergo dum hic sumus, servemus imaginem, ut ibi perveniamus ad veritatem. Sit in nobis imago justitiae, sit imago sapientiae; quia venietur ad illum diem. et secundum imaginem aestimabimur. 240. Non inveniat in te adversarius imaginem suam, non rabiem, non furorem; in his enim imago nequitiae est. Adversarius enim diabolus sicut leo rugiens quaerit quem occidat, quem devoret. Non inveniat auri cupiditatem, non argenti acervos, non vitiorum simulacra; ne auferat tibi vocem libertatis. Vox enim libertatis illa est, ut dicas: Veniet hujus mundi princeps, et in me inveniet nihil (Joan. XIV, 30). Itaque si securus es quod nihil in te inveniat, cum venerit 64 perscrutari, dices illud quod dixit ad Laban Jacob patriarcha: Cognosce si quid tuorum apud me est (Gen. XXXI, 32). Merito beatus Jacob, apud quem nihil Laban suum potuit reperire! Absconderat enim Rachel simulacra deorum ejus aurea et argentea. 241. Itaque si sapientia, si fides, si contemptus saeculi, si gratia tua abscondat omnem perfidiam, beatus eris; quia non respicis in vanitates et insanias falsas (Psal. XXXIX, 5). An mediocre est tollere vocem adversario, ut arguendi te non possit habere auctoritatem? Itaque qui non respicit in vanitates, non conturbatur; qui enim respicit conturbatur, et vanissime quidem. Quid est enim congregare opes, nisi vanum; quia caduca quaerere vanum est satis? Cum autem congregaveris, qui scias an possidere liceat tibi?

242. Nonne vanum est ut mercator noctibus ac diebus conficiat iter, quo aggregare possit thesauri acervos, merces congreget, conturbetur ad pretium, ne forte minoris vendat quam emerit, aucupetur locorum pretia, et subito aut latrones in se invidia famosae negotiationis excitet, aut non exspectatis serenioribus flatibus, dum lucrum quaerit, naufragium impatiens morae incidat? 243. Annon conturbatur etiam ille vane, qui summo labore coacervat, quod nesciat cui haeredi relinquat? Saepe quod avarus summa congesserit sollicitudine, praecipiti effusione dilacerat haeres luxuriosus: et diu quaesita turpis helluo, praesentium caecus, futuri improvidus, quadam absorbet voragine. Saepe etiam speratus successor invidiam partae acquirit haereditatis, et celeri obitu extraneis aditae successionis transcribit compendia.

244. Quid ergo vane araneam texis, quae inanis et sine fructu est, et tamquam casses suspendis inutiles divitiarum copias: quae etsi fluant, nihil prosunt; immo exuunt te imaginem Dei, et induunt terreni imaginem? Si tyranni aliquis imaginem habeat, nonne obnoxius est damnationi? Tu deponis imaginem aeterni imperatoris, et erigis in te imagiginem mortis. Ejice magis de civitate animae tuae imaginem diaboli, et attolle imaginem Christi. Haec in te fulgeat, in tua civitate, hoc est, anima resplendeat, quae oblitterat vitiorum imagines. De quibus ait David: Domine, in civitatetua, 65 ad nihilum deduces imagines eorum (Psal. LXXII, 20). Cum enim depinxerit Hierusalem Dominus ad imaginem suam, tunc adversariorum omnis imago deletur.

CAPUT L.

LEVITAS A TERRENIS cupiditatibus maxime alienos esse debere. Quae sint illorum virtutes ex Apostolo, quantave in ipsis castimonia requiratur: item quae dignitas eorum atque officium, ad quod primariae virtutes sunt necessariae. Hasce ignotas non fuisse philosophis, sed in ordine illos peccavisse: nonnulla esse natura secundum officium, quae ob adjuncta fiant contra officium; unde colligitur quantas dotes postulet dignitas levitarum: quae sequitur verborum Moysis tribui leviticae benedicentis expositio.

245. Quod si Evangelio Domini etiam populus ipse ad despicientiam opum informatus atque institutus est; quanto magis vos levitas oportet terrenis non teneri cupiditatibus, quorum Deus portio est? Nam cum divideretur a Moyse possessio terrena populo parum, excepit levitas Dominus a terrenae possessionis consortio, quod ipse illis esset funiculus haereditatis (Num. XVIII, 23). Unde ait David: Dominus pars haereditatis meae, et calicis mei (Psal. XV, 5). Denique sic appellatur levita ipse meus, vel ipse pro me. Magnum ergo munus ejus, ut de eo Dominus dicat: Ipse meus; vel quemadmodum Petro dixit de statere in ore piscis reperto: Dabis eis pro me et pro te (Matth. XVII, 26). Unde et Apostolus cum episcopum dixisset debere esse sobrium, pudicum, ornatum, hospitalem, docibilem, non avarum, non litigiosum, domui suae bene praepositum, addidit: Diaconos similiter oportet esse graves, non bilingues, non multo vino deditos, non turpe lucrum sectantes, habentes mysterium fidei in conscientia pura (I Tim. III, 8). Et hi autem probentur primum, et sic ministrent, nullum crimen habentes. 66

246. Advertimus quanta in nobis requirantur: ut abstinens sit a vino minister Domini, ut testimonio bono fulciatur non solum fidelium, sed etiam ab his qui foris sunt. Decet enim actuum operumque nostrorum testem esse publicam existimationem, ne derogetur muneri; ut qui videt ministrum altaris congruis ornatum virtutibus, auctorem praedicet, et Dominum veneretur, qui tales servulos habeat. Laus enim Domini, ubi munda possessio, et innocens familiae disciplina. 247. De castimonia autem quid loquar, quando una tantum (Dist. 26, Una tantum), nec repetita permittitur copula? Et in ipso ergo conjugio lex est non iterare conjugium, nec secundae conjugis sortiri conjunctionem. Quod plerisque mirum videtur, cur etiam ante baptismum iterati conjugii ad electionem muneris et ordinationis praerogativam impedimenta generentur; cum etiam delicta obesse non soleant, si lavacri remissa fuerint sacramento. Sed intelligere debemus quia baptismo culpa dimitti potest, lex aboleri non potest. In conjugio non culpa, sed lex est. Quod culpae est igitur in baptismate relaxatur: quod legis est in conjugio non solvitur. Quomodo autem potest hortator esse viduitatis qui ipse conjugia frequentaverit?

248. Inoffensum autem exhibendum et immaculatum ministerium, nec ullo conjugali coitu violandum cognoscitis, qui integri corpore, incorrupto pudore, alieni etiam ab ipso consortio conjugali, sacri ministerii gratiam recepistis? Quod eo non praeterii, quia in plerisque abditioribus locis cum ministerium gererent, vel etiam sacerdotium, filios susceperunt: et id tamquam usu veteri defendunt, quando per intervalla dierum sacrificium deferebatur; et tamen castificabatur etiam populus per biduum aut triduum, ut ad sacrificium purus accederet, ut in veteri Testamento legimus (Exod. XIX, 10); et lavabant vestimenta sua. Si in figura tanta observantia, quanta 67 in veritate? Disce, sacerdos atque levita, quid sit lavare vestimenta tua, ut mundum corpus celebrandis exhibeas sacramentis. Si populus sine ablutione vestimentorum suorum prohibebatur accedere ad hostiam suam, tu illotus mente pariter et corpore audes pro aliis supplicare, audes aliis ministrare? 249. Non mediocre officium levitarum, de quibus dicit Dominus: Ecce eligo levitas de medio filiorum Israel pro omni primogenito aperiente vulvam filiis Israel: redemptiones eorum erunt isti, et erunt mihi levitae. Mihi enim sanctificavi primogenitum in terra Aegypti (Num. III, 12 et 13). Cognovimus quia non inter caeteros levitae computantur, sed omnibus praeferuntur, qui eliguntur ex omnibus, et sanctificantur; ut primogenita fructuum atque primitiae quae Domino deputantur, in quibus est votorum solutio, et redemptio peccatorum. Non accipies, inquit, eos inter filios Israel: sed constitues levitas super tabernaculum testimonii, et super omnia vasa ejus astare, et super quaecumque sunt in ipso. Ipsi tollant tabernaculam et omnia vasa ejus, et ipsi ministrent in eo, et in circuitu tabernaculi castra ipsi constituant, et promovendo, tabernaculum ipsi deponant levitae: et constituendo castra, rursum ipsum tabernaculum ipsi statuant. Alienigena quicumque accesserit, morte moriatur (Num. I, 49 et seq.).

250. Tu ergo electus es ex omni numero filiorum Israel, inter sacros fructus quasi primogenitus aestimatus, praepositus tabernaculo, ut praetendas in castris sanctitatis et fidei, ad quae si alienigena accesserit, morte morietur, positus ut operias arcam Testamenti. Non enim omnes vident alta mysteriorum, quia operiuntur a levitis; ne videant qui videre non debent, et sumant qui servare non possunt. Moyses denique circumcisionem vidit spiritualem: sed operuit eam, ut in signo circumcisionem praescriberet. Vidit azyma veritatis et sinceritatis, vidit passionem Domini: operuit azymis corporalibus azyma veritatis, operuit passionem Domini, agni vel vituli immolatione. Et boni levitae servaverunt mysterium, fidei suae tegmine; et tu mediocre putas quod commissum est tibi? Primum ut alta Dei videas, quod est sapientiae: deinde ut excubias pro populo deferas, quod est justitiae: castra defendas, tabernaculumque 68 tuearis, quod est fortitudinis:

te ipsum continentem ac sobrium praestes, quod est temperantiae. 251. Haec virtutum genera principalia constituerunt etiam hi qui foris sunt: sed communitatis superiorem ordinem quam sapientiae judicaverunt; cum sapientia fundamentum sit, justitia opus sit, quod manere non potest, nisi fundamentum habeat. Fundamentum autem Christus est (I Cor. III, 11).

252. Prima ergo fides, quae est sapientiae, ut Salomon dicit, secutus patrem: Initium sapientiae timor Domini (Prov. IX, 10). Et lex dicit: Diliges Dominum Deum tuum, diliges proximum tuum (Deut. VI, 5). Pulchrum est enim ut gratiam tuam atque officia in societatem humani generis conferas. Sed primum illud decorum est, ut quod habes pretiosissimum, hoc est, mentem tuam, qua nihil habes praestantius, Deo deputes. Cum solveris auctori debitum, licet ut opera tua in beneficentiam et adjumenta hominum conferas, atque opem feras necessitatibus, aut pecunia, aut officio, aut etiam quocumque munere; quod late patet in vestro ministerio: pecunia, ut subvenias: debito, ut obligatum liberes: officio, ut servanda suscipias, quae metuat amittere, qui deponenda credidit. 253. Officium est igitur depositum servare ac reddere. Sed interdum commutatio fit, aut tempore, aut necessitate, ut non sit officium reddere quod acceperis; ut si quis contra patriam, opem Barbaris ferens, pecuniam apertus hostis reposcat: aut si cui reddas, cum adsit qui extorqueat: si furenti restituas, cum servare non queat: si insanienti gladium depositum non neges, quo se ille interimat, nonne solvisse contra officium est? Si furto quaesita sciens suscipias, ut fraudetur qui amiserat, nonne contra officium est? 254. Est etiam contra officium (22, quaest. 4, c. Est etiam) nonnumquam solvere promissum, sacramentum custodire: ut Herodes qui juravit quoniam quidquid petitus esset, daret filiae Herodiadis, et necem Joannis praestitit, ne promissum negaret (Matth. XIV, 7 et seq.). Nam de Jephthe quid dicam, qui immolavit filiam, quae sibi victori prima occurrerat, quo votum impleret, quod spoponderat, ut quidquid sibi primum occurrisset, offerret Deo (Judic. XI, 39)? Melius fuerat 69 nihil tale promittere, quam promissum solvere parricidio.

255. Haec quanti consilii sit prospicere, non ignoratis. Et ideo eligitur levita, qui sacrarium custodiat, ne fallatur consilio, ne fidem deserat, ne mortem timeat, ne quid intemperantius gerat, ut specie ipsa gravitatem praeferat: nec solum animum, sed etiam oculos continentes habere quem deceat; ne vel ipse frontem sobrietatis fortuitus violet occursus; quoniam: Qui viderit mulierem ad concupiscendam eam, adulteravit eam in corde suo (Matth. V, 28). Ita adulterium non solum facti colluvione, sed etiam aspectus intentione committititur. 256. Magna haec videntur, ac nimis severa, sed in magno munere non superflua; quando tanta est levitarum gratia, ut de his Moyses in benedictionibus diceret: Date Levi viros ejus, date Levi manifestos ejus, date Levi sortem suffragii sui, et veritatem ejus viro sancto, quem tentaverunt in tentationibus, maledixerunt super 70 aquam contradictionis. Qui dicit patri suo et matri: Non novi te; et fratres suos non cognovit, et filios suos abdicavit: hic custodit verba tua, et testamentum tuum observavit (Deut. XXXIII, 8 et seq.). 257. Illi ergo viri ejus, et manifesti ejus, qui nihil in corde doli habeant, nihil fraudis occultent, sed verba ejus custodiant, et in corde suo conferant, sicut conferebat et Maria (Luc. II, 19): qui suos parentes officio suo non noverint praeferendos, qui violatores oderint castitatis, pudicitiae ulciscantur injuriam, noverint officiorum tempora; quod majus, quod minus sit, quod cui aptum tempori est, et ut id solum sequantur quod honestum est; sane ubi duo honesta, id quod honestius est, praeponendum putent; hi jure benedicti. 28. Si quis ergo manifestet justitias Dei, incensum imponat: Benedic, Domine, virtutem ipsius, opera manuum ejus suscipe (Deut. XXXIII, 10); ut gratiam prophaeticae benedictionis inveniat apud eum qui vivit et regnat in saecula saeculorum, Amen.

LIBER SECUNDUS

CAPUT I.

VITAE BEATITUDINEM ACQUIRI honestate, quippe qua Christianus gloriam et favores hominum spernens, opera sua Deo soli placere in votis habet. 1. Superiore libro de officiis tractavimus, quae convenire honestati arbitraremur, in qua vitam beatam positam esse nulli dubitaverunt, quam Scriptura appellat vitam aeternam. Tantus enim splendor honestatus est, ut vitam beatam efficiant tranquillitas conscientiae, et securitas innocentiae. Et ideo sicut exortus sol lunae globum et caetera stellarum abscondit lumina, ita fulgor honestatis, ubi vero et incorrupto vibrat decore, caetera quae putantur bona secundum voluptatem corporis, 70 aut secundum saeculum clara et illustria, obumbrat.

2. Beata plane, quae non alienis aestimatur judiciis, sed domesticis percipitur sensibus, tamquam sui judex. Neque enim populares opiniones pro mercede aliqua requirit, neque pro supplicio pavet. Itaque quo minus sequitur gloriam, eo magis super eam eminet. Nam qui gloriam requirunt, his ea merces praesentium, umbra futurorum est, quae impediat vitam aeternam; quod in Evangelio scriptum est: Amen dico vobis, perceperunt mercedem suam (Matth. VI, 2); de his scilicet qui velut tuba canente, vulgare liberalitatem suam quam faciunt circa pauperes, gestiunt. Similiter et de jejunio quod ostentationis causa faciunt: Habent, inquit, mercedem suam.

3. Honestatis igitur est vel misericordiam facere, 71 vel jejunium deferre in abscondito; ut mercedem videaris a solo Deo tuo quaerere, non etiam ab hominibus. Nam qui ab hominibus quaerit, habet mercedem suam: qui autem a Deo, habet vitam aeternam: quam praestare non potest nisi auctor aeternitatis, sicut illud est: Amen, dico tibi, hodie mecum eris in paradiso (Luc. XXIII, 43). Unde expressius Scriptura vitam aeternam appellavit eam quae sit beata; ut non hominum opinionibus aestimandum relinqueretur, sed divino judicio committeretur.

CAPUT II.

VARIAE PHILOSOPHORUM DE beatitudine opiniones: eam in Dei cognitione ac bonorum operum studio consistere primum probatur ex Evangelio: tum ne a philosophis videatur hoc sumptum, prophetarum testimoniis confirmatur.

4. Itaque philosophi vitam beatam, alii in non dolendo posuerunt, ut Hieronymus: alii in rerum scientia, ut Herillus, qui audiens ab Aristotele et Theophrasto mirabiliter laudatam esse rerum scientiam, solam eam quasi summum bonum posuit; cum illi eam quasi bonum, non quasi solum bonum laudaverint. Alii voluptatem dixerunt, ut Epicurus: alii, ut Callipho, et post eum Diodorus, ita interpretati sunt, ut alter ad voluptatem, alter ad vacuitatem doloris, consortium honestatis adjungerent, quod sine ea non possit esse beata vita. Zenon Stoicus solum et summum bonum quod honestum est: Aristoteles autem vel Theophrastus et caeteri peripatetici in virtute quidem, hoc est honestate vitam beatam esse, sed compleri ejus beatitudinem etiam corporis atque externis bonis asseruerunt. 5. Scriptura autem divina vitam aeternam in cognitione posuit divinitatis, et fructu bonae operationis. Denique utriusque assertionis Evangelicum suppetit testimonium. Nam et de scientia ita dixit Dominus Jesus: Haec est autem vita aeterna, ut cognoscant te solum verum Deum, et quem misisti Jesum Christum (Joan. XVII, 3). Et de operibus ita respondit: Omnis qui reliquerit domum, vel fratres, aut sorores, aut patrem, aut matrem, aut uxorem, aut filios, aut agros propter nomen meum, centuplum accipiet, et vitam aeternam possidebit (Matth. XIX, 29). 6. Sed ne aestimetur hoc recens esse, et prius tractatum a philosophis, quam in Evangelio praedicatum (anteriores enim Evangelio philosophi, id est, Aristoteles et Theophrastus, vel Zenon atque Hieronymus, sed posteriores prophetis), 72 accipiant quam longe antequam philosophorum nomen audiretur, per os sancti David utrumque aperte videatur expressum. Scriptum est enim: Beatus quem tu erudieris, Domine; et de lege tua docueris eum (Psal. XCIII, 12). Habemus et alibi: Beatus vir qui timet Dominum, in mandatis ejus cupiet nimis (Ps. CXI, 1). Docuimus de cognitione, cujus praemium aeternitatis fructum esse memoravit, adjiciens Propheta, quia in domo hujus timentis Dominum, vel eruditi in Lege, et cupientis in mandatis divinis: Gloria et divitiae, et justitia ejus manet in saeculum saeculi (Ibid. 3). De operibus quoque in eodem psalmo subjunxit vitae aeternae suppetere praemium viro justo. Denique ait: Beatus vir qui miseretur et commodat, disponet sermones suos in judicio; quia in saeculum non commovebitur. In memoria aeterna erit justus (Ibid., 5, 6). Et infra: Dispersit, dedit pauperibus, justitia ejus manet in aeternum (Ibid., 9). 7. Habet ergo vitam aeternam fides, quia fundamentum est bonum: habent et bona facta, quia vir justus et dictis et rebus probatur. Nam si exercitatus sit in sermonibus, et desidiosus in operibus, prudentiam suam factis refellit: et gravius est scire quid facias, nec fecisse quod faciendum cognoveris. Contra quoque strenuum esse in operibus, affectu infidum, ita est ac si vitioso fundamento pulchra culminum velis elevare fastigia: quo plus exstruxeris, plus corruit; quia sine munimento fidei bona opera non possunt manere. Infida statio in portu navem perforat, et arenosum solum cito cedit, nec potest impositae aedificationis sustinere onera. Ibi ergo plenitudo praemii, ubi virtutum perfectio, et quaedam in factis atque dictis aequalitas sobrietatis.

CAPUT III.

PETITA E SCRIPTURIS beatitudinis definitio expenditur, demonstraturque nihil ipsi vel propter externa bona accedere, vel decedere propter incommoda.

8. Et quoniam sola rerum scientia explosa est, vel quasi inanis secundum Philosophiae disputationes superfluas, vel quasi semiperfecta sententia; consideremus quam enodem de eo divina scriptura absolvat sententiam, de quo tam multiplices et implicatas atque confusas videmus esse quaestiones Philosophiae. Nihil enim bonum Scriptura nisi quod honestum asserit, virtutemque in omni rerum statu beatam judicat, quae neque augeatur bonis corporis, vel externis, neque minuatur adversis: nihilque tam beatum, nisi quod a peccato alienum sit, 73 plenum innocentiae, repletum gratiae Dei. Scriptum est enim: Beatus vir qui non abiit in consilio impiorum, et in via peccatorum non stetit, et in cathedra pestilentiae non sedit: sed in lege Domini fuit voluntas ejus (Ps. I, 1, 2). Et alibi: Beati immaculati in via, qui ambulant in lege Domini (Ps. CXVIII, 1). 9. Innocentia igitur et scientia beatum faciunt. Bonae quoque operationis mercedem esse beatitudinem vitae aeternae superius advertimus (Sup., ca). Restat igitur ut spreto patrocinio voluptatis, aut doloris metu (quorum alterum quasi infractum et molliculum, alterum quasi eviratum et infirmum despuit), in ipsis doloribus vitam beatam eminere demonstret. Quod facile doceri potest, cum legerimus: Beati estis, cum vobis maledicent, et persequentur, et dicent omne malum adversus vos propter justitiam. Gaudete et exsultate, quoniam merces vestra copiosa est in coelo. Sic enim persecuti sunt et prophetas, qui erant ante vos (Matth. V, 11, 12). Et alibi Qui vult venire post me, tollat crucem suam, et sequatur me (Matth. XVI, 24).

CAPUT IV.

IDEM ARGUMENTUM, SCILICET rebus externis non minui neque augeri beatitudinem, veterum exemplis illustratur.

10. Est ergo beatitudo et in doloribus, quos plena suavitatis virtus comprimit et coercet, ipsa sibi domesticis opibus abundans, vel ad conscientiam, vel ad gratiam. Neque enim parum beatus Moyses, cum Aegyptiorum vallatus populis, et mari clausus, per fluctus sibi et populo patrum pedestrem viam piis meritis invenisset (Exod. XIV, 13). Quando autem fortior, quam tunc cum extremis circumventus periculis non desperabat salutem, sed exigebat triumphum? 11. Quid Aaron, quando se beatiorem credidit, quam tunc quando medius stetit inter vivos ac mortuos, et objectu sui statuit mortem, ne ad vivorum transiret agmina a cadaveribus mortuorum (Num. XVI, 48)? Quid de puero Daniele loquar, qui tam sapiens erat, ut inter leones fame exasperatos, nulla bestialis saevitiae formidine frangeretur: ita alienus a metu, ut posset epulari, nec vereretur, ne ad pastum exemplo sui feras provocaret (Dan. XIV)? 12. Est ergo et in dolore virtus, quae sibi bonae suavitatem exhibeat conscientiae; et ideo indicio est, quod non minuat dolor virtutis voluptatem. Sicut ergo nulla virtuti decessio beatitudinis per dolorem, ita etiam nulla accessio per voluptatem corporis aut commodorum gratiam. De quibus pulchre Apostolus ait: Quae mihi lucra fuerunt, haec duxi propter Christum detrimenta esse (Phil. III, 7, 8). Et addidit: Propter quem omnia damna duxi, et aestimo ut stercora, ut Christum lucrifaciam (Hebr. XI, 26). 13. Denique Moyses damnum suum credidit thesauros esse Aegyptiorum, et opprobrium Dominicae crucis praetulit: nec tunc dives cum abundaret pecunia, nec postea pauper cum egeret alimento; nisi forte tunc alicui minus beatus 74 videretur fuisse, cum in deserto quotidiana alimonia sibi et populo suo deforet. Sed quod summi boni ac beatitudinis nemo negare audeat, manna ei, hoc est, panis Angelorum ministrabatur e coelo: carnis quoque quotidiana pluvia totius plebis epulis redundabat (Exod. XVI, 13 et seq.). 14. Eliae quoque sancto panis ad victum deerat, si quaereretur (III Reg. XVII, 6): sed non videbatur deesse, quia non quaerebatur. Itaque diurno corvorum obsequio mane panis, caro ad vesperam deferebatur. Numquid ideo minus beatus, quia pauper erat sibi? Minime. Immo eo magis beatus, quia erat Deo dives. Aliis enim quam sibi divitem esse praestat, ut iste erat, qui tempore famis cibum a vidua petebat, largiturus ut hydria farinae per triennium et sex menses non deficeret, et quotidianos usus olei vas viduae inopi sufficeret ac ministraret (Ibid., 14). Merito ibi volebat Petrus esse, ubi istos videbat (Matth. XVII, 4). Merito in monte cum Christo in gloria apparuerunt; quia et ipse pauper factus est, cum dives esset. 15. Nullum ergo adminiculum praestant divitiae ad vitam beatam. Quod evidenter Dominus in Evangelio demonstravit dicens: Beati pauperes, quoniam vestrum est regnum Dei. Beati qui nunc esuriunt et sitiunt, quia saturabuntur. Beati qui nunc fletis, quia ridebitis (Luc. VI, 20 et seq.). Itaque paupertatem, famem, dolorem, quae putantur mala, non solum impedimento non esse ad vitam beatam, sed etiam adjumento evidentissime pronuntiatum est.

CAPUT V.

QUAE PUTANTUR BONA, plerumque impedimento esse ad beatam vitam: et quae mala, materiam esse virtutum: quod beatitudinis ac aliis exemplis confirmatur.

16. Sed et illa quae videntur bona, divitias, satietatem, laetitiam expertem doloris, detrimento esse ad fructum beatitudinis, Dominico declaratum judicio liquet, cum dicitur: Vae vobis divitibus, quia habetis consolationem vestram! Vae vobis qui saturati estis, quia esurietis (Ibid., 24 et seq.)! Et illis qui rident, quia lugebunt. Sic ergo non solum adminiculo non sunt ad vitam beatam corporis, aut externa bona, sed etiam dispendio sunt. 17. Inde enim beatus Nabuthe etiam cum lapidaretur a divite (III Reg. XXI, 13), quia pauper et infirmus adversus opes regias, solo erat affectu et religione dives, ut pecunia regali non commutaret paternae vineae haereditatem: eoque perfectus, quia sanguine proprio defenderet jura majorum suorum. Inde quoque miser Achab etiam suo judicio, quia pauperem necari fecerat; ut ejus possideret vineam. 18. Certum est solum et summum bonum esse virtutem, eamque abundare solam ad vitae fructum beatae: nec externis aut corporis bonis, sed virtute sola vitam praestari beatam, per quam vita aeterna acquiritur. Vita enim beata fructus praesentium: vita autem aeterna spes futurorum est. 75 19. Sunt tamen qui in hoc corpore tam infirmo, tam fragili, impossibilem vitam beatam putent, in quo necesse est angi, dolere, deplorare, aegrescere: quasi vero ego in corporis exsultatione dicam vitam beatam consistere, et non in altitudine sapientiae, suavitate conscientiae, virtutis sublimitate. Non enim in passione esse, sed victorem esse passionis beatum est, nec frangi temporalis motu doloris. 20. Pone accidere haec quae gravia ad vim doloris feruntur, caecitatem, exsilium, famem, stuprum filiae, amissionem liberorum. Quis neget beatum Isaac, qui non videbat in senectute, et beatitudines suis benedictionibus conferebat (Gen. XVII, 1 et seq.)? Annon beatus Jacob qui profugus patria domo, mercenarius pastor exsilium sustinuit, filiae pudicitiam ingemuit esse temeratam, famem pertulit (Gen. XXXI, 1, et seq.)? Non ergo beati quorum fide Deus accipit testimonium, cum dicitur: Deus Ahrabam, Deus Isaac, Deus Jacob (Gen. XXXIV, 1 et seq.)? Misera est servitus, sed non miser Joseph; immo plane beatus, cum dominae libidines in servitute positus coerceret (Gen. XXXIV, 8 et seq.) Quid de sancto David loquar, qui trium filiorum deploravit obitum (II Reg. XIII, 3), et quod his durius, incestum filiae (II Reg. XVIII, 33)? Quomodo non beatus, de cujus successionne beatitudinis auctor exortus est, qui plurimos fecit beatos? Beati enim qui non viderunt et crediderunt (Joan. XX, 29). Fuerunt et ipsi in sensu infirmitatis, sed evaluerunt de infirmitate fortes. Quid laboriosius autem sancto Job vel in domus incendio, vel filiorum decem interitu momentaneo, doloribus corporeis? Numquid minus beatus, quam si illa non pertulisset, in quibus magis probatus est (Job I, 14 seq.; II, 7 seq.)? 21. Esto tamen fuisse in illis aliquid acerbitatis, quem virtus animi non abscondit dolorem. Neque enim profundum mare negaverim, quia vadosa sunt littora; neque coelum lucidum, quia interdum obtexitur nubibus: neque terram fecundam, quia aliquibus locis jejuna glarea est: aut laetas segetes, quia intermixtam solent habere sterilem avenam. Similiter puta beatae messem conscientiae interpellari aliquo acerbo doloris. Nonne totius manipulis vitae beatae, si quid forte accidit adversi atque amaritudinis, tamquam sterilis avena absconditur, aut tamquam lolii amaritudo frumenti suavitate obducitur? Sed jam ad proposita pergamus. 76

CAPUT VI.

De utili non quaestuoso illo, sed justo et honesto, quod etiam damnis quaeritur: ac dividitur in utile corporeum et pietatis.

22. Superiore libro ita divisionem fecimus, ut primo loco esset honestum ac decorum, a quo officia ducerentur, secundo loco quid utile. Et quemadmodum in primo diximus quia inter honestum et decorum est quaedam distinctio, quae magis intelligi quam explicari possit: sic et cum utile tractamus, considerandum videtur quid utilius. 23. Utilitatem autem non pecuniarii lucri aestimatione subducimus, sed acquisitione pietatis; sicut Apostolus ait: Pietas autem ad omnia utilis est, promissionem habens vitae praesentis et futurae (I Tim. IV, 8). Itaque in scripturis divinis, si diligenter quaeramus, saepe invenimus quod honestum est, utile vocari: Omnia mihi licent, sed non omnia utilia sunt (I Cor., VI, 12). Supra de vitiis loquebatur. Hoc ergo dicit: Licet peccare, sed non decet. In potestate sunt peccata, sed non sunt honesta. Luxuriari promptum, sed non justum. Non enim Deo esca, sed ventri colligitur. 24. Ergo quia quod utile, id etiam justum: justum est ut serviamus Christo qui nos redemit; ideo justi, qui pro ejus nomine morti se obtulerunt: injusti qui declinaverunt, de quibus dicit: Quae utilitas insanguine meo (Psal. XXIX, 10); id est, qui justitiae meae profectus? Unde et illi: Alligemus justum, quia inutilis est nobis Esai. III, 10), id est, injustus qui nos arguit, condemnat, corripit. Licet hoc possit etiam ad avaritiam hominum impiorum derivari, quae perfidiae vicina est; sicut in Juda proditore legimus, qui avaritiae studio et pecuniae cupiditate, laqueum proditionis incurrit atque incidit. 25. De hac igitur tractandum est utilitate, quae sit plena honestatis, sicut ipsis verbis definivit Apostolus dicens: Hoc autem ad utilitatem vestram dico, non ut laqueum injiciam vobis, sed ad id quod honestum est (I Cor. VII, 35). Liquet igitur quod honestum est, utile esse; et quod utile, honestum: et quod utile justum; et quod justum, utile. Neque enim mihi ad mercatores lucri cupidine avaros, sed ad filios sermo est, et sermo de Officiis, quae vobis quos elegi in ministerium Domini, inculcare gestio atque infundere; ut ea quae mentibus ac moribus vestris usu atque institutione inolita atque 77 impressa sunt, etiam sermone ac disciplina aperiantur. 26. Itaque de utilitate dicturus, utar illo versiculo prophetico: Declina cor meum in testimonia tua, et non in avaritiam (Psal., 118, 36); ne utilitatis sonus excitet pecuniae cupiditatem. Denique aliqui habent: Declina cor meum in testimonia tua, et non ad utilitatem; hoc est, illam quaestuum nundinas aucupantem utilitatem, illam usu hominum ad pecuniae studia inflexam ac derivatam. Vulgo enim hoc solum dicunt utile, quod quaestuosum: nos autem de ea tractamus utilitate, quae damnis quaeritur; ut Christum lucremur, cujus quaestus est pietas cum sufficientia (I Tim. VI, 6). Magnus profecto quaestus, quo pietatem acquirimus, quae apud Deum dives est, non caducis facultatibus, sed muneribus aeternis; in quibus non tentatio lubrica, sed constans et perpetua sit gratia. 27. Est igitur utilitas alia corporalis, alia pietatis, sicut divisit Apostolus: Corporalis enim exercitatio ad modicum, inquit, utilis est: pietas autem ad omnia utilis est (I Tim. IV, 8). Quid autem tam honestum, quam integritas? Quid tam decorum, quam immaculatum servare corpus, et inviolatum atque intaminatum pudorem? Quid etiam tam decorum, quam ut vidua uxor defuncto conjugi fidem servet? Quid etiam hoc utilius, quo regnum coeleste acquiritur? Sunt enim qui se castraverunt propter regnum coelorum (Matth., XIX, 12).

CAPUT VII.

UTILITATEM IDEM ESSE ac honestatem; nihil autem utilius dilectione, quae mansuetudine, affabilitate, beneficentia, justitia aliisque virtutibus comparatur; quemadmodum ex Moysis atque Davidis historia datur intelligi: postremo et e dilectione fidem nasci, et rursus e fide dilectionem.

28. Est igitur non solum familiare contubernium honestatis et utilitatis, sed eadem quoque utilitas, quae honestas. Ideo et ille qui regnum coelorum volebat omnibus aperire, non quod sibi utile quaerebat, sed quod omnibus. Unde ordo quidam nobis et gradus faciendus est, etiam ab his usitatis et communibus ad ea quae sunt praecellentia; ut ex pluribus utilitatis colligamus profectum. 29. Ac primum noverimus nihil tam utile, quam diligi: nihil tam inutile, quam non amari; nam odio haberi exitiale ac nimis capitale arbitror. Itaque id agamus, ut omni sedulitate commendemus existimationem opinionemque nostram, ac primum placiditate mentis et animi benignitate influamus in affectum hominum. Popularis enim et grata est omnibus bonitas, nihilque quod tam facile illabatur humanis sensibus. Ea si mansuetudine morum ac facilitate, tum moderatione praecepti, et affabilitate sermonis, verborum honore, patienti quoque sermonum vice, modestiaeque adjuvetur gratia, incredibile quantum procedit ad cumulum dilectionis. 78. 30. Legimus enim non solum in privatis; sed etiam in ipsis regibus, quantum facilitas blandae affabilitatis profecerit, aut superbia verborumque obfuerit tumor; ut regna ipsa labefactaret, et potestatem solveret. Jam si quis consilio, usu, ministerio, officiis popularem comprehendat gratiam: aut si quis periculum suum pro universa plebe offerat; non est dubium quod tantum charitatis a plebe in eum refundatur, ut populus salutem ejus et gratiam sibi praeferat.

31. Quantas Moyses a populo illatas absorbebat contumelias (Exod. XXXII, 11 et seq.): et cum Dominus in insolentes vindicare vellet; se tamen pro populo offerebat frequenter, ut indignationi divinae plebem subduceret! Quam miti sermone post injurias appellabat populum, consolabatur in laboribus, delinibat oraculis, fovebat operibus: et cum Deo constanter loqueretur (Gen., XXXIII, 8 et seq.); homines tamen humili et grata appellatione affari solebat! Merito aestimatus est supra homines, ut et vultum ejus non possent intendere (Gen., XXXIV, 29 et seq.), et sepulturam ejus non repertam crederent (Deut., XXXIV, 6); quia sic sibi totius plebis mentes devinxerat, ut plus eum pro mansuetudine diligerent, quam pro factis admirarentur (I Reg. X, 12, et alibi). 32. Quid ejus imitator sanctus David, electus ex omnibus ad plebem regendam, quam mitis et blandus, humilis spiritu, sedulus corde, facilis affectu! Ante regnum se pro omnibus offerebat: rex cum omnibus aequabat suam militiam, et partiebatur laborem: fortis in praelio, mansuetus in imperio, patiens in convicio, ferre magis promptus quam referre injurias. Ideo tam charus erat omnibus, ut juvenis ad regnum etiam invitus peteretur, resistens cogeretur, senex ne praelio interesset a suis rogaretur; quod mallent omnes pro ipso periclitari, quam illum pro omnibus.

33. Ita sibi gratis officiis plebem obligaverat (II Reg., II, 2, et seq.), primum, ut in discordiis populi exsulare in Hebron mallet, quam in Hierusalem regnare: deinde, ut etiam in hoste positam virtutem diligeret: justitiam etiam his qui arma contra se tulerant aeque ac suis praestandam putaret: denique (II Reg., III, 32 et seq.) fortissimum adversae partis propugnatorem Abner ducem et inferentem praelia miratus est, et orantem pacis gratiam non aspernatus, honoravit convivio: interemptum insidiis doluit et flevit, prosecutus exsequias honestavit; mortem ultus, conscientiae fidem praestitit, quam filio inter haereditaria jura transcripsit, magis sollicitus, ne innocentis mortem inultam relinqueret, quam quo suam mortem doleret. 34. Non mediocre istud, praesertim in rege, sic obire humilitatis munia, ut communem se exhiberet etiam infimis, alieno periculo cibum non quaerere, potum recusare (II Reg. XXIII, 13 et seq.), peccatum fateri, seque ipsum pro populo offerre morti, ut in se divina indignatio converteretur, cum ferienti angelo offerens se diceret: Ecce sum, ego peccavi, 79 et ego pastor malum feci, et iste grex quid fecit? Fiat manus tua in me. 35. Nam quid alia dicam, quod dolum meditantibus os suum non aperiebat, et, tamquam non audiens, nullum sermonem referendum putabat: non respondebat conviciis: cum sibi derogaretur, orabat: cum malediceretur, benedicebat? Ambulans in simplicitate, et superborum fugitans, sectator immaculatorum, qui cinerem miscebat alimentis suis, cum peccata propria deploraret, et potum suum temperabat fletibus (Psal. XXXVII, 14, et alibi). Merito sic expetitus est ab universo populo, ut venirent ad eum omnes tribus Israel dicentes: Ecce nos ossa tua et caro tua sumus: heri et nudiustertius cum esset Saul, et regnaret super nos; tu eras qui producebas et inducebas Israel. Et dixit tibi Dominus: Tu pasces populum meum (II Reg. V, 1 et seq.). Et quid plura de eo dicam, de quo hujusmodi Dei processit sententia, ut de eo diceret: inveni David secundum cor meum (Psal. LXXXVIII, 21)? Quis enim in sanctitate cordis et justitia sicut iste ambulavit, ut impleret voluntatem Dei: propter quem et delinquentibus posteris ejus venia data, et praerogativa est reservata haeredibus (III Reg. XI, 12, 13)?

36. Quis igitur non diligeret eum, quem videbat ita charum amicis; ut quia ipse sincere amicos diligebat, aeque diligi se a suis amicis arbitraretur? Denique parentes eum filiis suis, filii praeferebant parentibus. Unde graviter indignatus Saul, percutere Jonathan filium hasta voluit; quia pluris apud eum valere David amicitiam judicabat, quam vel pietatem, vel auctoritatem paternam (I Reg. XX, 30 et seq.). 37. Etenim ad incentivum charitatis communis plurimum proficit, si quis vicem amantibus reddat, nec minus redamare se probet, quam ipse amatur, idque amicitiae fidelis pateat exemplis. Quid enim tam populare, quam gratia? Quid tam insitum naturae, quam ut diligentem diligas? Quid tam inolitum atque impressum affectibus humanis, quam ut eum amare inducas in animum, a quo te amari velis? Merito sapiens dicit: Perde pecuniam propter fratrem et amicum (Eccli. XXIX, 13). Et alibi: Amicum salutare non erubescam, et a facie illius non me abscondam (Eccli. XXII, 31). Siquidem vitae et immortalitatis medicamentum in amico esse Ecclesiasticus sermo testatur (Eccli. VI, 16): et summum in charitate praesidium nemo dubitaverit, cum Apostolus dicat: Omnia suffert, omnia credit, omnia sperat, omnia sustinet, charitas numquam cadit (I Cor. XIII, 7 et seq.). 38. Ideo David non cecidit, quia charus fuit omnibus, et diligi a subjectis quam timeri maluit. Timor enim temporalis tutaminis servat excubias, nescit diuturnitatis custodiam. Itaque ubi timor decesserit, audacia obrepit; quoniam fidem non timor cogit, sed affectus exhibet. 39. Prima ergo ad commendationem nostri est charitas. Bonum est ergo testimonium habere de plurimorum dilectione. Hinc nascitur 80 fides, ut committere se tuo affectui non vereantur etiam alieni, quem pluribus charum adverterint. Similiter etiam per fidem ad charitatem pervenitur; ut qui uni aut duobus praestiterit fidem, tamquam influat in animos universorum, et omnium acquirat gratiam.

CAPUT VIII.

NIHIL AD CONCILIANDAM gratiam magis valere quam consilia: sed eis confidere posse neminem, nisi justitia nitantur ac prudentia: quantum autem hae duae virtutes eluxerint in Salomone, ex ipsius celeberrimo judicio palam fieri.

40. Duo igitur haec ad commendationem nostri plurimum operantur, charitas et fides; et tertium hoc, si habeas quod in te admiratione dignum plerique existiment, et jure honorandum putent. 41. Et quia consiliorum usus maxime conciliat homines, ideo prudentia et justitia in unoquoque desideratur, et ea exspectantur a pluribus; ut in quo ea sint, illi deferatur fides, quod possit utile consilium ac fidele desideranti dare. Quis enim ei se committat, quem non putet plus sapere, quam ipse sapiat qui quaerit consilium? Necesse est igitur ut praestantior sit a quo consilium petitur, quam ille est qui petit. Quid enim consulas hominem, quem non arbitreris posse melius aliquid reperire, quam ipse intelligis? 42. Quod si eum inveneris qui vivacitate ingenii, mentis vigore atque auctoritate praestet, et accedat eo ut exemplo et usu paratior sit, praesentia solvat pericula, prospiciat futura, denuntiet imminentia, argumentum expediat, remedium ferat in tempore, paratus sit non solum ad consulendum, sed etiam ad subveniendum; huic ita fides habetur, ut dicat qui consilium petit: Et si mala mihi evenerint per illum, sustineo (Eccli. XXII, 31).

43. Hujusmodi igitur viro salutem nostram et existimationem committimus, qui sit, ut supra diximus, justus et prudens. Facit enim justitia, ut nullus sit fraudis metus: facit etiam prudentia, ut nulla sit erroris suspicio. Promptius tamen nos justo viro quam prudenti committimus, ut secundum usum vulgi loquar. Caeterum sapientum definitione, in quo una virtus est, concurrunt caeterae, nec potest sine justitia esse prudentia. Quod etiam in nostris invenimus; dicit enim David: Justus miseretur et fenerat (Psal. XXXVI, 21). Quid feneret justus, alibi dicit: Jucundus vir qui miseretur et fenerat, disponet sermones suos in judicio (Psal. CXI, 5). 44. Ipsum illud nobile Salomonis judicium nonne sapientiae plenum ac justitiae est? Itaque spectemus illud si ita est. Duae, inquit mulieres in conspectu regis Salomonis steterunt, et dixit una ad eum: Audi me, domine. Ego et 81 haec mulier in uno habitantes cubiculo, ante diem tertium partu edito, singulos filios suscepimus, et erramus una, arbiter nullus domi, nec ulla alia nobiscum femina, nisi nos solae: et mortuus est filius ejus hac nocte, ut obdormivit super eum: et surrexit media nocte, et accepit filium meum de sinu meo, et collocavit eum in gremio suo, et filium suum mortuum posuit in sinu meo. Et surrexi mane, ut lactarem parvulum, et inveni mortuum. Et consideravi illum diluculo, et non erat filius meus. Et respondit altera: Non, sed filius meus est, qui vivit: filius autem tuus, qui mortuus est (III Reg. III, 16 et seq.). 45. Et haec erat contentio, cum utraque filium sibi vindicarent superstitem: defunctum autem suum negarent. Tunc rex jussit afferri machaeram, et infantem dividi, ac singulas partes dari singulis: dimidiam uni, et dimidiam alteri. Exclamabat mulier quae vero erat affectu percita: Nequaquam, domine, infantem dividas: detur potius illi, et vivat, et non interficias eum. At illa respondit altera: Neque meus, neque hujus sit infans, dividite eum. Et statuit rex dari infantem ei mulieri quae dixerat: Nolite interficere eum, sed date eum illi mulieri; quia mota sunt, inquit, viscera ejus in filio suo.

46. Itaque non immerito aestimatus est intellectus Dei in eo esse; quoniam quae occulta sunt Deo? Quid autem occultius internorum viscerum testimonio, in quae sapientis intellectus velut quidam pietatis descendit arbiter, et velut quamdam genitalis alvi vocem eruit; quia maternus patuit affectus, qui eligeret filium suum vel apud alienam vivere, quam in conspectu matris necari. 47. Sapientiae igitur fuit latentes distinguere conscientias, ex occultis eruere veritatem; et velut quadam machaera, ita spiritus gladio penetrare non solum uteri, sed etiam animae et mentis viscera: justitiae quoque, ut quae suum necaverat, alienum non tolleret; sed vera mater reciperet suum. Denique etiam Scriptura hoc pronuntiavit: Audivit, inquit, omnis Israel hoc judicium, quod judicavit rex: et timuerunt a facie regis, eo quod intellectus Dei in eo esset, ut faceret justitiam (III Reg. III, 28). Denique et ipse Salomon ita poposcit sapientiam, ut daretur sibi cor prudens audire et judicare cum justitia (Ibid., 9).

CAPUT IX.

QUAMVIS INDIVIDUAE SINT justitia atque prudentia, vulgi tamen cardinales virtutes distinguentis ingenio serviendum esse.

48. Liquet igitur etiam secundum scripturam divinam, quae antiquior est, sapientiam sine justitia esse non posse; quia ubi una earum virtutum, ibi utraque est. Daniel quoque 82 quam sapienter alta interrogatione fraudulentae accusationis deprehendit mendacium, ut calumniatorum sibi responsio non conveniret! Prudentiae igitur fuit vocis suae testimonio reos prodere: justitiae quoque, nocentes supplicio dare, innocentem subducere (Dan. XIII, 54 et seq.). 49. Est ergo individuum sapientiae atque justitiae conturbernium: sed vulgi usu dividitur una quaedam forma virtutum, ut temperantia sit in despiciendis voluptatibus: fortitudo spectetur in laboribus et periculis: prudentia in delectu bonorum, sciens commoda et adversa distinguere: justitia quae sit bona custos juris alieni, et vindex proprietatis, suum cuique conservans. Sit ergo nobis communis opinionis gratia quadripartita haec facta divisio, ut ab illa subtili disputatione philosophicae sapientiae, quae limandae veritatis causa quasi ex adyto quodam eruitur, retrahentes pedem, forensem usum ac popularem sensum sequamur. Hac igitur divisione servata, revertamur ad propositum.

CAPUT X.

SALUTEM JUSTI VIRI quam prudentis consilio magis committi: eum autem qui justitiam ac prudentiam in se conjunxerit, ab omnibus expeti solere: hujus rei exemplum fuisse tum Salomonem, de quo verba reginae Sabae exponuntur; tum Josephum, et Danielem.

50. Prudentissimo cuique causam nostram committimus, et ab eo consilium promptius quam a caeteris poscimus. Praestat tamen fidele justi consilium viri, et sapientissimi ingenio frequenter praeponderat. Utilia enim vulnera amici, quam aliorum ascula (Prov. XXVII, 6). Deinde quia justi judicium est, sapientis autem argumentum: in illo censura disceptationis, in hoc calliditas inventionis. 51. Quod si utrumque connectas, erit magna consiliorum salubritas, quae ab universis spectatur admiratione sapientiae et amore justitiae; ut omnes quaerant audire sapientiam ejus viri, in quo utriusque virtutis copula sit: sicut quaerebant omnes reges terrae videre faciem Salomonis, et audire sapientiam ejus; ita ut et Saba regina veniret ad eum, et tentaret eum in quaestionibus: Et venit, et omnia locuta est quae habebat in corde suo, et audivit omnem sapientiam Solomonis, nec ullum verbum praeterivit eam (III Reg. X, 2 et 3). 52. Quae sit ista, quam nihil praetereat, nec sit aliquid quod ei non annuntiaverit verus Salomon, cognosce, o homo, ex his quae audis loquentem: Verus est, inquit, sermo quem audivi in terra mea de sermonibus tuis, et de prudentia tua, et non credidi his qui dicebant mihi, donec veni, et viderunt oculi mei: et nunc non est nec dimidia quidem pars secundum ea quae annuntiabant mihi. Apposuisti bona super omnia quae audivi 83 in terra mea. Beatae mulieres tuae, et beati pueri tui qui assistunt tibi, qui audiunt omnem prudentiam tuam (Ibid., 6 et seq.). Intellige convivium veri Salomonis, et quae apponuntur in eo convivio, intellige sapienter, et considera in qua terra congregatio nationum audierit famam sapientiae verae atque justitiae, et quibus eum viderit oculis, contemplantibus utique ea quae non videntur. Quoniam quae videntur, temporalia sunt: quae autem non videntur, aeterna (II Cor. IV, 14). 53. Quae sunt beatae mulieres, nisi illae de quibus dicitur, quia multae verbum Dei audiunt et pariunt (Luc. XI, 28)? Et alibi: Quicumque enim verbum Dei fecerit, ipse meus frater et soror et mater est (Matth. XII, 50). Qui etiam pueri tui beati qui assistunt, nisi Paulus qui dicebat: Usque in hunc diem sto protestans minori ac majori (Act. XXVI, 22), Simeon qui exspectabat in templo ut videret consolationem Israel (Luc. II, 25)? Quomodo enim dimitti posceret, nisi quia assistens Domino, discedendi habere facultatem non poterat, nisi voluntatem Domini adeptus esset? Exempli causa propositus est nobis Salomon, a quo certatim ut audiretur ejus sapientia, postulabatur.

54. Joseph quoque nec in carcere feriatus erat, quo minus de rebus incertis consuleretur. Cujus consilium Aegypto universae profuit; ut non sentiret septem annorum sterilitatem, aliosque populos miserae famis levaret jejunio (Gen. XLI, 10 et seq.). 55. Daniel ex captivis, regalium consultorum arbiter factus, consiliis suis emendavit praesentia, annuntiavit futura. Ex his enim quae frequenter interpretatus ostenderat veri se esse annuntium, fides ei in omnibus deferebatur (Dan. II, 10 et seq.).

CAPUT XI.

TERTIA CONDITIO QUAE ad fidem alicui conciliandam valet, in Moyse, Daniele ac Josepho fulsisse ostenditur.

56. Sed etiam tertius locus de his qui admiratione digni aestimarentur, Joseph, Salomonis et Danielis exemplo decursus videtur. Nam quid de Moyse loquar, cujus omnis Israel quotidie consilia praestolabatur, quorum vita fidem faciebat prudentiae, admirationemque ejus augebat? Quis se non committeret consilio Moysi, cui seniores, si qua supra suum intellectum et virtutem esse arbitrarentur, dijudicanda servabant? 57. Quis Danielis consilium refugeret, de quo Deus ipse dixit: Quis Daniele sapientior (Ezech. XXVIII, 3)? Aut quomodo homines de eorum dubitare mentibus possent, quibus Deus tantam conferebat gratiam? Moysi consilio bella conficiebantur: Moysi meritis de coelo affluebat alimonia, potus e petra. 58. Quam purus Danielis animus, ut mulceret barbaros mores, mitigaret leones (Dan. XIV, 39)! Quae in illo temperantia! Quanta animi et corporis 84 continentia! Nec immerito mirabilis factus omnibus, quando (quod vehementer admirantur homines) regalibus fultus amicitiis, aurum non quaerebat, nec delatum sibi honorem pluris faciebat quam fidem. Quin etiam periclitari malebat pro lege Domini, quam pro gratia hominis inflecti.

59. Nam de sancti Joseph (quem pene praeterieram) castimonia et justitia quid dicam; quarum altera illecebras beriles respuit, refutavit praemia: altera mortem contempsit, metum repulit, carcerem praeoptavit (Gen. XXXIX, 8 et seq.)? Quis hunc privatae causae ad consulendum idoneum non judicaret, cujus ferax animus et mens fertilis, temporis sterilitatem quodam consiliorum et cordis ubere fecundavit (Gen. XLI, 25 et seq.).

CAPUT XII.

NEMINEM AB HOMINE vitiis contaminato consilium poscere; nec rursus a moroso et difficili: sed ab eo cujusmodi exemplar habemus in Scripturis.

60. Advertimus igitur quod in acquirendis consiliis plurimum adjungat vitae probitas, virtutum praerogativa, benevolentiae usus, facilitatis gratia. Quis enim in coeno fontem requirat? Quis e turbida aqua potum petat? Itaque ubi luxuria est, ubi intemperantia, ubi vitiorum confusio; quis inde sibi aliquid hauriendum existimet? Quis non despiciat morum colluvionem? Quis utilem causae alienae judicet, quem videt inutilem vitae suae? Quis iterum improbum, malevolum, contumeliosum non fugiat, et ad nocendum paratum; quis non eum omni studio declinet? 61. Quis vero quamvis instructum ad consilii opem, difficili tamen accessu, ambiat; in quo sit illud, tanquam si quis aquae fontem praecludat? Quid enim prodest habere sapientiam, si consilium neges? Si consulendi intercludas copiam, clausisti fontem; ut nec aliis influat, nec tibi prosit. 62. Pulchre autem et de illo convenit, qui habens prudentiam, commaculat eam vitiorum sordibus, eo quod aquae exitum contaminet. Degeneres animos vita arguit. Quomodo enim eum potes judicare consilio superiorem, quem videas inferiorem moribus? Supra me debet esse, cui me committere paro. An vero idoneum eum putabo, qui mihi det consilium, quod non det sibi: et mihi eum vacare credam, qui sibi non vacet: cujus animum voluptates occupent, libido devincat, avaritia subjuget, cupiditas perturbet, quatiat metus? Quomodo hic consilii locus, ubi nullus quieti? 63. Admirandus mihi et suspiciendus consiliarius (Esai. III, 3), quem propitius Dominus Patribus dedit, offensus abstulit. Hujus imitator debet esse qui potest consilium dare, et alienam a vitiis custodire prudentiam, quoniam nihil inquinatum in illam incurrit. 85

CAPUT XIII.

DECLARATA DIVINIS TESTIMONIIS sapientiae pulchritudine, ad probandam ejus cum virtutibus aliis societatem transit oratio.

64. Quis igitur tanquam vultu speciem praeferat pulchritudinis, et belluinis posterioribus ac ferinis unguibus formae superioris dehonestet gratiam; cum tam admirabilis et praeclara forma virtutum sit, et specialiter pulchritudo sapientiae, sicut series Scripturae indicat? Est enim haec speciosior sole, et super omnem stellarum dispositionem luci comparata invenitur prior. Lucem etenim hanc suscipit nox, sapientiam autem non vincit malitia (Sap. VII, 29).

65. Diximus de ejus pulchritudine, et Scripturae testimonio comprobavimus: superest ut doceamus Scripturae auctoritate nullum ei contubernium cum vitiis esse, sed inviduam cum caeteris virtutibus conjunctionem: cujus spiritus est disertus, sine inquinamento, certus, sanctus, amans bonum, acutus, qui nihil vetet benefacere, benignus, stabilis, securus, omnem habens virtutem, omnia prospiciens (Sap. VII, 22 et seq.). Et infra: Sobrietatem docet, et justitiam et virtutem (Sap. VIII, 7).

CAPUT XIV.

PRUDENTIAM CUM OMNIBUS virtutibus conjunctam esse, maxime vero cum opum despicientia.

66. Omnia igitur operatur prudentia, cum omnibus bonis habet consortium. Nam quomodo potest utile consilium dare, nisi habeat justitiam, ut induat constantiam, mortem non formidet, nullo terrore, nullo revocetur metu, nulla adulatione a vero deflectendum putet: exsilium non refugiat, quae noverit sapienti patriam mundum esse: egestatem non timeat, quae nihil deesse sapienti sciat, cui totus mundus divitiarum est? Quid enim praecelsius illo viro, qui auro moveri nesciat, contemptum habeat pecuniarum, et velut ex arce quadam despiciat hominum cupiditates? Quod qui fecerit, hunc homines supra hominem esse arbitrantur: Quis est, inquit, hic, et laudabimus eum? Fecit enim mirabilia in vita sua (Eccli. XXXI, 9). Quomodo enim non admirandus, qui divitias spernit, 86 quas plerique saluti propriae praetulerunt? 67. Decet igitur omnes censura frugalitatis, continentiae auctoritas, et maxime eum qui honore praestet, ne praeeminentem virum thesauri possideant sui, et pecuniis serviat, qui praeest liberis. Illud magis decet, ut supra thesaurum sit animo, et infra amicum obsequio. Humilitas enim gratiam auget. Haec plena laudis et digna primario viro, non communem cum Tyriis negotiatoribus et Galaaditis mercatoribus habere turpis lucri cupidinem, nec omne bonum locare in pecunia, et tamquam mercenario munere quotidianos numerare quaestus, calculari compendia.

CAPUT XV.

DE LIBERALITATE. QUIBUSNAM potissimum impartienda: et qua ratione illam tenuioris census homines opera et consiliis exerceant.

68. Quod si ab his sobrium gerere animum laudabile est, quanto illud praestantius si dilectionem multitudinis liberalitate acquiras, neque superflua circa importunos, neque restricta circa indigentes! 69. Plurima autem genera liberalitatis sunt, non solum quotidiano sumptu egentibus, quo vitam sustinere suam possint, disponere ac dispensare alimoniam; verum etiam his qui publice egere verecundantur, consulere ac subvenire, quatenus communis egenorum alimonia non exhauriatur. De eo enim loquor qui praeest alicui muneri, ut si officium sacerdotis gerat, aut dispensatoris; ut de his suggerat episcopo, nec reprimat si quem positum in necessitate aliqua cognoverit, aut dejectum opibus ad inopiae necessitatem redactum: maxime si non effusione adolescentiae, sed direptione alicujus et amissione patrimonii in eam reciderit injuriam, ut sumptum exercere diurnum non queat. 70. Summa etiam liberalitas, captos redimere, eripere ex hostium manibus, subtrahere neci homines, et maxime feminas turpitudini, reddere parentibus liberos, parentes liberis, cives patriae restituere. Nota sunt haec nimis Illyrici vastitate et Thraciae: quanti ubique venales 87 erant toto captivi orbe, quos si revoces, unius provinciae numerum explere non possint! Fuerunt tamen qui et quos Ecclesiae redemerunt, in servitutem revocare vellent, ipsa graviores captivitate, qui inviderent alienam misericordiam. Ipsi si in captivitatem venissent, servirent liberi: si venditi fuissent, servitutis ministerium non recusarent; et volunt alienam libertatem rescindere, qui suam servitutem non possent rescindere, nisi forte pretium recipere emptori placeret: in quo tamen non rescinditur servitus, sed redimitur. 71. Praecipua est igitur liberalitas, redimere captivos, et maxime ab hoste barbaro, qui nihil deferat humanitatis ad misericordiam, nisi quod avaritia reservaverit ad redemptionem: aes alienum subire, si debitor solvendo non sit, atque arctetur ad solutionem, quae sit jure debita, et inopia destituta: enutrire parvulos, pupillos tueri. 72. Sunt etiam qui virgines orbatas parentibus tuendae pudicitiae gratia connubio locent, nec solum studio, sed etiam sumptu adjuvent. Est etiam genus illud liberalitatis quod Apostolus docet: Ut si quis fidelis habet viduas, subministret illis, ut earum alimoniis Ecclesia non gravetur, ut his quae vere viduae sunt, sufficiat (I Tim. V, 16). 73. Utilis igitur hujusmodi liberalitas, sed non communis omnibus. Sunt enim plerique etiam viri boni, qui tenues sunt censu, contenti quidem exiguo ad sui usum, sed non idonei ad subsidium levandae paupertatis alienae; tamen suppetit aliud beneficentiae genus, quo juvare possint inferiorem. Est enim duplex liberalitas: una quae subsidio rei adjuvat, id est, usu pecuniae; altera quae operum collatione impenditur, multo frequenter splendidior, multoque clarior. 74. Quanto illustrius Abraham captum armis victricibus recepit nepotem (Gen. XIV, 16), quam si redemisset! Quanto utilius regem Pharaonem sanctus Joseph consilio providentiae juvit, quam si contulisset pecuniam! Pecunia enim unius civitatis non redemit ubertatem: prospicientia totius Aegypti per quinquennium famem repulit (Gen. XLI, 33 et seq.). 75. Facile autem pecunia consumitur, consilia exhauriri nesciunt. Haec usu augentur: pecunia minuitur, et cito deficit, atque ipsam destituit benignitatem; tatem; ut quo pluribus largiri volueris, eo pauciores adjuves, et saepe tibi desit quod aliis conferendum putaveris. Consilii 88 autem operisque collatio, quo in plures diffunditur, eo redundantior manet, et in suum fontem recurrit. In se enim refluit ubertas prudentiae: et quo pluribus fluxerit, eo exercitius fit omne quod remanet.

CAPUT XVI.

MODUM IN LIBERALITATE servandum, ne profundatur in indignos quod dignioribus debebatur; non tamen nimis parce ac timide ministrandas eleemosynas: sed imitandum beatum Joseph, cujus prudentia prolixioribus verbis commendatur.

76. Liquet igitur debere esse liberalitatis modum, ne fiat inutilis largitas. Sobrietas tenenda est, maxime sacerdotibus, ut non pro jactantia, sed pro justitia dispensent. Nusquam enim major aviditas petitionis. Veniunt validi, veniunt nullam causam nisi vagandi habentes, et volunt subsidia evacuare pauperum, exinanire sumptum: nec exiguo contenti, majora quaerunt, ambitu vestium captantes petitionis suffragium, et natalium simulatione licitantes incrementa quaestuum. His si quis facile deferat fidem, cito exhaurit pauperum alimoniis profutura compendia. Modus largiendi adsit, ut nec illi inanes recedant, neque transcribatur vita pauperum in spolia fraudulentorum. Et ergo mensura sit, ut neque humanitas deseratur, nec destituatur necessitas. 77. Plerique simulant debita. Sit veri examen. Exutos se per latrocinia deplorant: aut injuria fidem faciat, aut cognitio personae, quo propensius juventur. Ab Ecclesia relegatis sumptus impartiendus, si desit eis alendi copia. Itaque qui modum servat, avarus nulli, sed largus omnibus est: non enim solas aures praebere debemus audiendis precantium vocibus, sed etiam oculos considerandis necessitatibus. Plus clamat operatori bono debilitas, quam vox pauperis. Neque vero fieri potest ut non extorqueat amplius importunitas vociferantium: sed non semper impudentiae locus sit. Videndus est ille, qui te non videt: requirendus ille, qui erubescit videri. Ille etiam clausus in carcere occurrat tibi; ille affectus aegritudine mentem tuam personet, qui aures non potest. 78. Quo plus te operari viderit populus, magis diliget. Scio plerosque sacerdotes, quo plus contulerunt, plus abundasse; quoniam quicumque bonum operarium videt, ipsi confert quod 89 ille suo officio dispenset, securus quod ad pauperem sua perveniat misericordia: nemo enim vult, nisi pauperi proficere suam collationem. Nam si quem aut immoderatum aut nimis tenacem dispensatorem viderit, utrumque despiciet: si aut superfluis erogationibus dissipet alieni fructus laboris, aut recondat sacculis. Sicut igitur modus liberalitatis tenendus est, ita etiam calcar plerumque adhibendum videtur. Modus ideo, ut quod benefacis, id quotidie facere possis; ne subtrahas necessitati, quod indulseris effusioni: calcar propterea, quia melius operatur pecunia in pauperis cibo, quam in divitis sacculo. Cave ne intra loculos tuos includas salutem inopum, et tanquam in tumulis sepelias vitam pauperum.

79. Potuit donare Joseph totas Aegypti opes, et effundere thesauros regios; noluit tamen de alieno effusus videri: maluit frumenta vendere, quam donare esurientibus; quia si paucis donasset, plurimis defuisset. Eam liberalitatem probavit, quo abundaret omnibus. Patefecit horrea, ut omnes emerent subsidium frumentarium (Gen. XLI, 56, 57), ne gratis accipiendo, cultus terrarum relinquerent; quoniam qui alieno utitur, suum negligit. 80. Itaque primum omnium coacervavit pecunias, deinde instrumenta caetera, ad postremum jura terrarum regi acquisivit, non ut omnes exueret suo, sed fulciret: publicum tributum constitueret, quo sua tutius habere possent. Quod ita fuit gratum omnibus quibus terras ademerat; ut non venditionem sui juris, sed redemptionem salutis putarent. Denique dixerunt: Sanasti nos, invenimus gratiam in conspectu Domini nostri (Gen. XLVII, 14 et seq., 25). Nam et de proprietate nihil amiserant, qui jus receperant: et de utilitate nihil perdiderant, qui acquisierant perpetuitatem. 81. O virum magnum, qui non largitatis superfluae temporalem captavit gloriam, sed perpetuam commoditatem constituit providentiae! Fecit enim ut tributis populi se juvarent suis, nec in tempore necessitatis aliena subsidia desiderarent. Melius enim fuit conferre aliquid de fructibus, quam totum de jure amittere. Quintam portionem collationis statuit et in providendo perspicacior, et in tributo liberalior. Denique nunquam postea Aegyptus hujusmodi famem pertulit. 82. Quam praeclare autem collegit futura! Primum quam argute regalis interpres somnii veritatem expressit! Somnium regis primum hoc fuit: Septem juvencae ascendebant de flumine, visu decorae, et pingues corpore, et ad oram pascebantur fluminis. Aliae quoque vitulae visu deformes ac jejunae corpore, post illas juvencas 90 ascendebant de flumine, et juxta eas in ipso riparum thoro pascebantur: et visae sunt hae vitulae tenues atque exiles devorare illas quae praestabant et forma et gratia. Et somnium secundum hoc fuit: Septem spicae pingues, electae et bonae de terra surgebant: et post eas septem spicae exiles et vento corruptae ac marcidae se subjicere moliebantur: et visum est quod laetas et uberes spicas steriles spicae et tenues devoraverunt.

83. Hoc somnium ita aperuit sanctus Joseph, eo quod septem juvencae septem anni forent, et septem spicae similiter septem anni forent, ex fetu et fructu interpretatus tempora. Fetus enim juvencae annum exprimit, et fructus segetis annum consummat integrum. Quae ideo ascendebant de flumine, quod dies, anni, ac tempora fluminum praetereunt modo, et cursim labuntur. Annos itaque septem priores uberis terrae fertiles ac fecundos declarat futuros: posteriores autem alios septem annos steriles atque infecundos, quorum sterilitas absumptura foret ubertatem superiorum. Qua gratia prospiciendum admonuit, ut uberioribus annis congregaretur subsidium frumentarium, quod sustentare posset inopiam futurae infecunditatis. 84. Quid primum mirer? Ingenium quo in ipsum veritatis descendit cubile: an consilium quo tam gravi atque diuturnae prospexit necessitati: an vigilantiam atque justitiam; quarum altera, imposito sibi tanto munere, congregavit tam multiplices commeatus: alteraque aequalitatem per omnes servavit? Nam de magnanimitate quid loquar; quod venditus a fratribus in servitutem, non retulit injuriam, sed famem depulit? Quid de suavitate, qua dilecti fratris praesentiam pia fraude quaesivit, quem simulato per elegantiam furto, reum statuit rapinae, ut obsidem teneret gratiae (Gen. XLIV, 2 et seq.). 85. Unde merito ei a patre dicitur: Filius ampliatus meus Joseph, filius ampliatus meus, zelotes filius meus adolescentior . . . . Adjuvit te Deus meus, et benedixit te benedictione coeli a summo, et benedictione terrae, terrae habentis omnia, propter benedictiones patris tui et matris. Praevaluit super benedictiones montium manentium, et desideria collium aeternorum (Gen. XLIX, 22 et seq.), et in Deuteronomio: Qui visus es, inquit, in rubo, ut venias super caput Joseph, et super verticem ipsius. Honorificus inter fratres: primitivus tauri decus ejus, cornua unicornui cornua ipsius. In ipsius cornu gentes ventilabit simul usque ad extremum terrae. Ipsi decem millia Ephraem, et ipsi millia Manasses (Deut. XXXIII, 16 et seq.). 91

CAPUT XVII.

QUAS VIRTUTES IN eo quem consulamus, inesse oporteat: et qua ratione iisdem Joseph ac Paulus ornati fuerint?

86. Talis itaque debet esse qui consilium alteri det, ut se ipsum formam aliis praebeat ad exemplum bonorum operum, in doctrina, in integritate, in gravitate; ut sit ejus sermo salubris atque irreprehensibilis, consilium utile, vita honesta, sententia decora. 87. Talis erat Paulus, qui consilium dabat virginibus (I Cor. VII, 25 et seq.), magisterium sacerdotibus (Tit. II, 7), ut primum se ipsum formam nobis praeberet ad imitandum. Ideo et humiliari sciebat, sicut scivit et Joseph, qui summo ortus patriarcharum genere, non dedignatus degenerem servitutem, exhibebat eam obsequiis, illustrabat virtutibus. Scivit humiliari, qui et venditorem et emptorem passus est, et dominum appellabat eum. Audi humiliantem se: Si Dominus meus propter me nihil scit in domo sua, et omnia quaecamque habet, dedit in manus meas, neque subtractum est a me quidquam praeter te, quia uxor illius es; quomodo faciam verbum malum hoc, et peccabo coram Domino (Gen. XXXIX, 8 et seq.)? Plena vox humilitatis, plena castimoniae: humilitatis, quia domino deferebat; honorificentiae, quia referebat gratiam: plena quoque castimoniae, quia turpi flagitio contaminari grave peccatum putabat. 88. Talis igitur debet esse consiliarius, qui nihil nebulosum habeat, nihil fallax, nihil simulatum, quod vitam ejus ac mores refellat; nihil improbum ac malevolum, quod avertat consulentes. Alia sunt enim quae fugiuntur, alia quae contemnuntur. Fugimus ea quae possunt nocere, quae malitiose possunt in noxam serpere; ut si is qui consulitur, dubia sit fide, et pecuniae avidus, ut possit pretio mutari: si injuriosus, hic fugitur ac declinatur. Qui vero voluptuarius, intemperans, etsi alienus a fraude; tamen avarus et cupidior lucri turpis, hic contemnitur. Quod enim specimen industriae, quem fructum laboris edere potest, quam recipere animo curam ac sollicitudinem, qui se torpori dederit atque ignaviae? 89. Ideo boni vir consilii dicit: Ego enim didici, in quibus sum, sufficiens esse (Phil. IV, 11). Sciebat enim omnium malorum radicem esse avaritiam, et ideo suo contentus erat, alienum non requirebat (I Tim. VI, 10). Satis mihi est, inquit, quod habeo; sive parum, sive plurimum habeam, mihi plurimum est. Expressius aliquid dicendum videtur. Signato verbo usus est: Sufficit mihi, inquit, in quo sum; id est, nec deest, nec superfluit. Non deest, quia nihil quaero amplius: non superfluit, quia non solum mihi habeo, sed pluribus. Hoc de pecunia. 92

90. Caeterum de omnibus dici potest quia sufficiebant illi praesentia, hoc est, non honorem majorem, non obsequia uberiora desiderabat; non gloriae immodicae cupidus, aut gratiam indebite quaerebat: sed debiti finem certaminis, patiens laboris, securus meriti praestolabatur: Scio, inquit, et humiliari (Phil. IV, 12). Non ergo indocta humilitas, sed quae habeat sui modestiam et scientiam, laudi datur. Est enim humilitas formidinis, est imperitiae atque ignorantiae; et ideo Scriptura ait: Et humiles spiritu salvabit (Psal. XXXIII, 19). Praeclare ergo dixit: Scio et humiliari, id est, quo in loco, qua moderatione, quo fine, in quo officio, in quo munere. Nescivit Pharisaeus humiliari, ideo dejectus est: scivit publicanus, ideo justificatus est (Luc. XVIII, 11 et seq.). 91. Sciebat et abundare Paulus, quia animum habebat divitem; etsi thesaurum divitis non habebat. Sciebat abundare, qui non quaerebat datum in pecunia, sed requirebat fructum in gratia. Possumus et sic intelligere, quia sciebat abundare, qui poterat dicere: Os nostrum patet ad vos, o Corinthii, cor nostrum dilatatum est (II Cor. VI, 11). 92. In omnibus erat imbutus, et saturari et esurire. Beatus qui sciebat saturari in Christo. Non ergo illa corporalis, sed spiritualis est satietas, quam operatur scientia. Et merito scientia opus est; quia non in pane solo vivit homo, sed in omni verbo Dei (Deut. VIII, 3). Ergo qui sic sciebat saturari et sic esurire, sciebat ut semper nova quaereret, esuriret Deum, sitiret in Dominum. Sciebat esurire, qui sciebat quia esurientes manducabunt (Matth. V, 6): sciebat et poterat abundare, qui nihil habebat, et possidebat omnia (II Cor. VI, 10).

CAPUT XVIII.

QUANTUM INIQUI CONSILIARII damni afferant, exemplo decem tribuum a rege Roboam desciscentium sat intelligi.

93. Egregie itaque viros alicui praesidentes muneri commendat justitia: contra iniquitas destituit atque impugnat. Exemplo nobis est Scriptura quae dicit quia cum populus Israel post mortem Salomonis rogasset filium ejus Roboam, ut relevaret cervices eorum a servitute dura, et paterni imperii temperaret austeritatem, illum spreto senili consilio de suggestione adolescentium responsum dedisse hujusmodi, quia et onus adjiceret super patrium jugum, et leviora gravioribus suppliciis mutaret (III Reg. XII, 4 et seq.). 94. Quo responso exasperati responderunt populi: Non est nobis portio cum David, neque haereditas in filiis Jesse. Revertere unusquisque in tabernacula tua, Israel (Ibid. 16); quoniam hic homo neque in principem, neque in ducem erit nobis. Itaque desertus a populo ac destitutus, vix duarum tribuum propter David meritum habere potuit societatem. 93

CAPUT XIX.

JUSTITIA ET BENEVOLENTIA et affabilitate plurimos conciliari: sed hanc sinceram esse debere.

95. Claret ergo quoniam et aequitas imperia confirmet, et injustitia dissolvat. Nam quomodo potest malitia regnum possidere, quae ne unam quidem privatam potest regere familiam? Summa igitur benignitate opus est, ut non solum publica gubernacula, sed etiam privata jura tueamur. Plurimum juvat benevolentia, quae omnes studet beneficiis amplecti, devincire officiis, oppignerare gratia. 96. Affabilitatem quoque sermonis diximus ad conciliandam gratiam valere plurimum. Sed hanc volumus esse sinceram ac sobriam sine ulla adulatione, ne simplicitatem ac puritatem alloquii dedeceat sermonis adulatio; forma enim esse debemus caeteris non solum in opere, sed etiam in sermone, in castitate ac fide. Quales haberi volumus, tales simus: et qualem affectum habemus, talem aperiamus. Neque dicamus in corde nostro verbum iniquum, quod abscondi putemus silentio; quia audit in occulto dicta, qui occulta fecit: et cognoscit secreta viscerum, qui sensum visceribus infudit. Ergo tamquam sub oculis constituti judicis, quidquid gerimus, in luce positum putemus, ut omnibus manifestetur.

CAPUT XX.

OMNIBUS MULTUM PRODESSE bonorum familiaritatem, maxime vero adolescentibus: hoc Jesu Nave ac Moysi, aliisque exemplis probari: quibus subjicitur qui aetate sint dispares, virtute interdum pares esse, ut Petrus ac Joannes patefaciunt.

97. Plurimum itaque prodest unicuique bonis jungi. Adolescentibus quoque utile, ut claros et sapientes viros sequantur; quoniam qui congreditur sapientibus, sapiens est: qui autem cohaeret imprudentibus, imprudens agnoscitur. Et ad instructionem itaque plurimum proficit, et ad probitatis testimonium. Ostendunt enim adolescentes eorum se imitatores esse, quibus adhaerent; et ea convalescit opinio, quod ab his vivendi acceperint similitudinem, cum quibus conversandi hauserint cupiditatem. 98. Inde tantus Jesus Nave, quod eum non solum erudivit ad Legis scientiam Moysi copula, verum etiam sanctificavit ad gratiam (Exod. XXIV, 13). Denique cum in ejus tabernaculo divina refulgere praesentia videretur majestas Domini, solus erat in tabernaculo Jesus Nave. Moyses cum Deo 94 loquebatur, Jesus pariter nube sacra tegebatur. Presbyteri et populus deorsum stabant; Jesus cum Moyse ad accipiendam Legem ascendebat (Exod. XXXIII, 11). Omnis populus intra castra erat, Jesus extra castra in tabernaculo testimonii. Cum columna nubis descenderet, et loqueretur cum Moyse, quasi fidus astabat minister: nec exibat de tabernaculo juvenis, cum seniores longe positi divina trepidarent miracula. 99. Ubique igitur inter admiranda opera et reverenda secreta sancto Moysi individuus adhaerebat. Unde factum est ut qui fuerat socius conversationis, fieret successor potestatis (Deut. XXXIV, 9). Merito vir hujusmodi evasit, ut sisteret fluminum cursus (Josue III, 15 et seq.), diceret: Stet sol, et staret sol (Josue X, 12, 13); quasi ejus spectator victoriae noctem differret, diem produceret: quid! (quod Moysi negatum est) solus eligeretur, ut populum introduceret in terram repromissionis. Magnus vir fidei miraculis, magnus triumphis. Illius augustiora opera, hujus prosperiora. Uterque igitur divina subnixus gratia, ultra humanam processit conditionem (Exod. XIV, 21): ille mari, hic coelo imperavit. 100. Pulchra itaque copula seniorum atque adolescentium (Gen. XII, 4). Alii testimonio, alii solatio sunt: alii magisterio, alii delectationi. Omitto quod Abrahae adhaesit Loth adolescentulus etiam proficiscenti; ne forte hoc propinquitatis magis fuisse existimetur, et necessariae potius quam voluntariae adjunctionis. Quid Eliam atque Elisaeum loquamur? Licet non expresse Elisaeum juvenem Scriptura significaverit, advertimus tamen et colligimus juniorem fuisse (III Reg. XIX, 21). In Actibus apostolorum Barnabas Marcum assumpsit, Paulus Silam, Paulus Timotheum, Paulus Titum (Act. XII et alibi). 101. Sed illis superioribus videmus divisa officia, ut seniores consilio praevalerent, juniores ministerio. Plerumque etiam virtutibus pares, dispares aetatibus, sui delectantur copula, sicut delectabantur Petrus et Joannes. Nam adolescentem legimus in Evangelio Joannem et sua voce, licet meritis et sapientia nulli fuerit seniorum secundus, erat enim in eo senectus venerabilis morum et cana prudentia. Vita enim immaculata bonae senectutis stipendium est.

CAPUT XXI.

PLURIMUM VALERE AD commendationem, si defendas infirmos, aut peregrinos suscipias, similiave officia exhibeas, et hoc maxime viris probatis. Ubi injecta avaritiae vituperatione, potissimum prodigalitas in sacerdotibus improbatur.

102. Adjuvat hoc quoque ad profectum bonae existimationis, si de potentis 95 manibus eripias inopem, de morte damnatum eruas, quantum sine perturbatione fieri potest; ne videamur jactantiae magis causa facere, quam misericordiae, et graviora inferre vulnera, dum levioribus mederi desideramus. Jam si oppressum opibus potentis, et factione magis quam sceleris sui pretio gravatum liberaveris, egregae convalescit opinionis testimonium. 103. Commendat plerosque etiam hospitalitas. Est enim publica species humanitatis, ut peregrinus hospitio non egeat, suscipiatur officiose, pateat advenienti janua. Valde id decorum totius est orbis existimatione, peregrinos cum honore suscipi, non deesse mensae hospitalitatis gratiam, occurrere officiis liberalitatis, explorare adventus hospitum. 104. Quod Abrahae laudi est datum, qui ante januam suam speculabatur, ne forte praeteriret peregrinus aliquis: et diligenter praetendebat excubias, ut occurreret, ut praeveniret, ut rogaret, ne transiret hospes, dicens: Domine, si inveni gratiam ante te, ne praeterieris puerum tuum (Gen. XVIII, 1 et seq.). Et ideo pro hospitalitatis mercede fructum posteritatis recepit. 105. Loth quoque nepos ejus non solum genere, sed etiam virtute proximus, propter hospitalitatis affectum Sodomitana a se suisque supplicia detorsit (Gen. XIX, 1 et seq.).

106. Decet igitur hospitalem esse, benignum, justum, non alieni cupidum; immo de suo jure cedentem potius aliqua, si fuerit lacessitus, quam aliena jura pulsantem, fugitantem litium, abhorrentem a jurgiis, redimentem concordiam et tranquillitatis gratiam. Siquidem de suo jure virum bonum aliquid relaxare, non solum liberalitatis, sed plerumque etiam commoditatis est. Primum dispendio litis carere, non mediocre est lucrum; deinde accedit ad fructum quod augetur amicitia, ex qua oriuntur plurimae commoditates, quae contemnenti aliqua in tempore, postea fructuosae erunt. 107. In officiis autem hospitalibus, omnibus quidem humanitas impartienda est: justis autem uberior deferenda honorificentia: Quicumque enim justum receperit in nomine justi, mercedem justi accipiet (Matth. X, 41, 42), ut Dominus pronuntiavit. Tanta autem est apud Deum hospitalitatis gratia, ut ne potus quidem aquae frigidae a praemiis remunerationis immunis sit. Vides quia Abraham Deum recepit hospitio, dum hospites quaerit? Vides quia Loth angelos recepit? Unde scis ne et tu cum suscipis hominem, suscipias Christum? Licet in hospite sit Christus; quia Christus 96 in paupere est, sicut ipse ait: In carcere eram, et venistis ad me: nudus eram, et operuistis me (Matth. XXV, 36). 108. Suave est igitur non pecuniae, sed gratiae studere. Verum hoc malum jamdudum humanis influxit mentibus, ut pecunia honori sit, et animi hominum divitiarum admiratione capiantur. Inde se immersit avaritia, veluti quaedam bonorum ariditas officiorum; ut homines damnum putent quidquid praeter morem impenditur. Sed etiam in hoc adversus avaritiam, ne quod afferre possit impedimentum, prospexit Scriptura venerabilis, dicens: Quia melior est hospitalitas cum oleribus (Prov. XV, 17). Et infra: Melior est panis in suavitate cum pace (Prov. XVII, 1). Non enim prodigos nos docet esse Scriptura, sed liberales.

109. Largitatis enim duo sunt genera: unum liberalitatis, alterum prodigae effusionis. Liberale est hospitio recipere, nudum vestire, redimere captivos, non habentes sumptu juvare: prodigum est, sumptuosis effluescere conviviis, et vino plurimo; unde legisti: Prodigum est vinum, et contumeliosa ebrietas (Prov. XX, 1). Prodigum est popularis favoris gratia exinanire proprias opes: quod faciunt qui ludis circensibus, vel etiam theatralibus, et muneribus gladiatoriis, vel etiam venationibus patrimonium dilapidant suum, ut vincant superiorum celebritates; cum totum illud sit inane, quod agunt. Quandoquidem etiam bonorum operum sumptibus immoderatum esse non deceat. 110. Pulchra liberalitas (Dist. 86, cap. Pulchra) erga ipsos quoque pauperes mensuram tenere, ut abundes pluribus: non conciliandi favoris gratia ultra modum fluere. Quidquid ex affectu puro ac sincero promitur, hoc est decorum: non superfluas aedificationes aggredi, nec praetermittere necessarias. 111. Et maxime sacerdoti hoc convenit, ornare Dei templum decore congruo, ut etiam hoc cultu aula Domini resplendeat: impensas misericordiae convenientes frequentare: quantum oporteat largiri peregrinis; non superflua, sed competentia: non redundantia, sed congrua humanitati; ne sumptu pauperum alienam sibi quaerat gratiam, nec restrictiorem erga clericos aut indulgentiorem se praebeat. Alterum enim inhumanum, alterum prodigum; si aut sumptus desit necessitati eorum quos a sordidis negotiationis aucupiis retrahere debeas: aut voluptati superfluat.

CAPUT XXII.

MODUM INTER NIMIAM remissionem ac severitatem esse statuendum; eos enim qui affectata remissione in aliorum animos irrepere moliuntur, solidum ac duraturum nihil consequi: quod Abessalonis exemplum satis ostendit.

112. Quin etiam verborum ipsorum et praeceptorum esse mensuram convenit; ne aut nimia remissio videatur, aut nimia severitas. Plerique enim remissiores malunt esse, ut videantur boni esse: sed nihil simulatum et fictum verae virtutis esse certum est; quin etiam diuturnum esse non solet. In principio vernat, in processu tamquam flosculus dissipatur et solvitur: quod autem verum ac sincerum, alta radice fundatur. 113. Et ut exemplis assertiones nostras probemus, quoniam quae simulata sunt, diuturna esse non possunt, sed tamquam ad tempus virentia cito decidunt, ex ea familia ex qua nobis plurima ad virtutis profectum exempla accersivimus, unum simulationis et fraudis proferamus testimonium (II Reg. XIV, 25). 114. Abessalon (II Reg. XV, 1 et seq.) erat David regis filius, decore insignis, egregius forma, praestans juventa; ita ut vir talis in Israel non reperiretur, a vestigio pedis usque ad verticem immaculatus. Is fecit sibi currus et equos, et viros quinquaginta, qui praecurrerent ante eum. Surgebat diluculo, et stabat ante portam in via: et si quem advertisset regis judicia quaerentem, accedebat ad eum, dicens: Ex qua civitate es tu? Respondebat ille: Ex una tribu sum de tribubus Israel, servus tuus. Referebat Abessalon: Verba tua bona sunt et directa, et qui te audiat non est tibi datus a rege. Quis constituet me judicem, et quisquis ad me veniet, cuicumque fuerit judicium necessarium, justificabo illum? Talibus delinibat singulos sermonibus. Et cum accederent adorare eum, extendens manus suas, apprehendebat atque osculabatur eos. Sic convertit in se corda omnium, dum blanditiae hujusmodi intimorum tangunt viscerum sensum. 115. Sed delicati isti et ambitiosi elegerunt honorabilia et grata ad tempus et jucunda: ubi parva processit dilatio, quam prudens omnium propheta paulisper cedendo interponendam putavit, non potuerunt tolerare ac sustinere. Denique (II Reg. XVIII, 5) non dubitans de victoria David, commendabat filium dimicaturis, ut ei parcerent. Ideoque nec praelio interesse maluit; ne vel referre arma, parricidae licet, videretur, sed tamen filio. 116. Liquet igitur ea esse perpetua ac solida, quae vera sunt, et quae sincere potius quam dolo congregantur: ea vero quae simulatione atque assentatione parata sunt, non posse diu perseverare. 98

CAPUT XXIII.

EORUM QUI VEL pecunia vel ambitu redempti fuerint, fluxam fidem esse.

117. Quis igitur vel illos qui pecunia ad obedientiam redimuntur, vel eos qui assentatione invitantur, fidos sibi arbitretur? Nam et illi frequenter se vendere volunt, et isti imperia dura ferre non possunt. Levi assentatiuncula facile capiuntur: si perstrinxeris verbo, immurmurant, deserunt, infesti abeunt, indignantes relinquunt, imperare malunt, quam obedire: quasi obnoxios beneficio, subjectos sibi debere esse existimant, quos praepositos sibi habere debeant. 118. Quis igitur sibi fideles putet, quos vel pecunia vel adulatione sibi obligandos crediderit? Nam et ille qui pecuniam acceperit, vilem se et despectum judicat, nisi saepe redimatur? Itaque frequenter exspectat pretium suum: et ille qui obsecratione ambitus videtur, vult semper se rogari.

CAPUT XXIV.

BONIS ARTIBUS AD honores nitendum, maxime ecclesiasticos: adeptum vero munus moderate ac sapienter administrandum. Nec inferiores ordines simulatis virtutibus episcopo derogare, nec item episcopum cleri invidum esse debere: sed justum in omnibus, atque comprimis in judicando.

119. Ergo bonis actibus et sincero proposito nitendum ad honorem arbitror, et maxime ecclesiasticum; ut neque resupina arrogantia, vel remissa negligentia sit: neque turpis affectatio, et indecora ambitio. Ad omnia abundat animi directa simplicitas, satisque se ipsa commendat. 120. In ipso vero munere neque severitatem esse duram convenit, nec nimiam remissionem; ne aut potestatem exercere, aut susceptum officium nequaquam implere videamur. 121. Enitendum quoque ut beneficiis atque officiis obligemus plurimos, et collatam reservemus gratiam; ne jure beneficii fiant immemores, qui se graviter laesos dolent. Saepe enim usu venit ut quos gratia foveris, vel aliquo superiore cumulaveris gradu, avertas, si indigne aliquem eis praeponendum judices. Sed et sacerdotem beneficiis suis vel judiciis favere convenit, ut aequitatem custodiat, et presbytero vel ministro deferre, ut parenti. 122. Neque hos quia semel probati sunt, arrogantes esse oportet; sed magis tamquam memores gratiae, humilitatem tenere: neque offendi sacerdotem, si aut presbyter, aut minister, aut quisquam de clero, aut misericordia, aut jejunio, aut integritate, aut doctrina et lectione existimationem accumulet suam: Gratia enim Ecclesiae laus doctoris est. Bonum, opus 99 alicujus praedicari, ita tamen si nullo studio fiat jactantiae. Laudent enim unumquemque proximorum labia, et non os suum: et commendent opera, non studia sua.

123. Caeterum si quis non obediat episcopo, extollere atque exaltare sese desideret, obumbrare merita episcopi simulata affectatione doctrinae aut humilitatis, aut misericordiae, is a vero devius superbit; quoniam veritatis ea est regula, ut nihil facias commendandi tui causa, quo minor alius fiat: neque si quid boni habeas, id ad deformationem alterius et vituperationem exerceas. 124. Ne defendas improbum, et sancta indigno committenda arbitreris: neque iterum urgeas et impugnes, cujus crimen non deprehenderis. Nam cum in omnibus injustitia cito offendat, tum maxime in Ecclesia, ubi aequitatem esse oportet, ubi aequalitatem haberi decet; ut nihil sibi potentior plus vindicet, nihil plus usurpet ditior. Sive enim pauper, sive dives, in Christo unum sunt. Nihil sanctior plus sibi arroget; ipsum enim par est esse humiliorem.

125. Sed nec personam alterius accipiamus in judicio: gratia absit, causae merita decernant. Nihil sic opinionem, immo fidem gravat, quam si in judicando potentiori dones causam inferioris: vel pauperem innocentem arguas, divitem excuses reum culpae. Pronum quidem est genus hominum favere honoratioribus, ne laesos sese putent, ne victi doleant. Sed primum si offensam vereris, non recipias judicium: si sacerdos es, aut si quisquam alius, non lacessas. Licet tibi silere in negotio duntaxat pecuniario; quamquam sit constantiae adesse aequitati. In causa autem Dei, ubi communionis periculum est, etiam dissimulare peccatum est non leve.

CAPUT XXV.

BENEFICIA IN PAUPERES potius conferenda quam in divites; hos enim aut quaesitam a se beneficii vicem putare, aut indignari quod videantur hinc facti debitores: pauperes vero et debitorem pro se Deum ipsum constituere, et libenter accepta beneficia confiteri. Quibus additur ad pecuniae contemptum adhortatio.

126. Quid autem et tibi prodest favere diviti? An quia citius amantem remuneratur? His enim favemus frequentius, a quibus referendae vicem speramus gratiae. Sed eo 100 magis infirmo et inopinos studere convenit; quia pro eo qui non habet, remunerationem speramus a Domino Jesu (Luc. XIV, 12, 13): qui sub specie convivii generalem virtutum edidit formam: ut his potius nostra conferamus beneficia, qui nobis ea non possunt repraesentare, docens ad convivium atque epulas non eos qui divites sunt, sed pauperes invitandos. Divites enim rogari videntur, ut ipsi quoque nobis reddant convivium; pauperes, quia non habent quod restituant, cum acceperint, remuneratorem nobis faciunt Dominum, qui se pro paupere obligandum obtulit. 127. Ad ipsum quoque saeculi usum collatio beneficii facta in pauperes magis quam in locupletes plus juvat; quia dives dedignatur beneficium, et pudet eum debitorem esse gratiae. Quin etiam id quod collatum est sibi, meritis suis arrogat, quod velut debitum acceperit, vel ideo datum sit eo quod is qui dedit, reddendum sibi a divite uberius existimaverit. Ita in accipiendo beneficio, eo ipso quod acceperint divites, dedisse se magis quam accepisse existimant: pauper vero etsi non habet unde reddat pecuniam, refert gratiam. In quo certum est quod plus reddat, quam acceperit; pecunia enim nummo solvitur, gratia numquam exinanitur.

Reddendo vacuatur pecunia: gratia autem et habendo solvitur, et solvendo retinetur. Deinde quod dives refugit, pauper fatetur quod sit obligatus debito, sibique subventum, non honori suo delatum putat: donatos sibi arbitratur filios, vitam redditam, servatam familiam. Quanto igitur melius apud bonos, quam apud ingratos locare beneficium? 128. Unde Dominus ad discipulos ait: Nolite possidere aurum, neque argentum, neque pecuniam; (Matth. X, 9); quia velut falce, pullulantem in pectoribus humanis succidit avaritiam. Petrus quoque claudo, qui ex utero matris suae portabatur, ait: Argentum et aurum non habeo: sed quod habeo, do tibi. In nomine Jesu Christi Nazareni surge et ambula (Act. III, 6). Itaque pecuniam non dedit, sanitatem dedit. Quanto melius est salutem habere sine pecunia, quam pecuniam sine salute! Surrexit claudus, quod non sperabat: pecuniam non accepit, quam sperabat. Sed haec vix in sanctis Domini reperiuntur, ut divitiae contemptui sint. 101

CAPUT XXVI.

QUAM VETUS MALUM sit avaritia, multis veteris testamenti exemplis clarum esse; hincque praeterea patere quam inanis sit pecuniarum possessio.

129. Caeterum ita incubuerunt mores hominum admiratione divitiarum, ut nemo nisi dives honore dignus putetur. Neque hic recens usus: sed jamdudum, quod pejus est, inolevit hoc vitium humanis mentibus. Siquidem cum Hiericho magna civitas tubarum sacerdotalium sono corruisset, et Jesus Nave potiretur victoria, cognovit infirmatam esse virtutem populi per avaritiam, atque auri cupiditatem. Nam cum de spoliis urbis incensae sustulisset Achar vestem auream, et ducenta argenti didrachmata, et linguam auream, oblatus Domino negare non potuit, sed prodidit furtum (Josue VII, 19 et seq.).

130. Vetus igitur et antiqua avaritia est, quae cum ipsius divinae legis coepit oraculis, immo propter ipsam reprimendam lex delata est. Propter avaritiam Balach putavit Balaam praemiis posse tentari, ut malediceret populum patrum: et vicisset avaritia, nisi Dominus a maledicto eum abstinere jussisset (Num. XXII, 7 et seq.). Propter avaritiam praecipitatus Achar, in exitium deduxerat totam plebem parentum. Itaque Jesus Nave, qui potuit solem statuere, ne procederet (Josue X, 12, 13), avaritiam hominum non potuit sistere, ne serperet. Ad vocem ejus sol stetit, avaritia non stetit. Sole itaque stante, confecit Jesus triumphum: avaritia autem procedente, pene amisit victoriam. 131. Quid fortissimum omnium Samson, nonne Dalilae mulieris avaritia decepit? Itaque ille qui rugientem leonem manibus discerpsit suis, qui vinctus et alienigenis traditus, sine ullo adjutore solus dissolutis vinculis, mille ex his peremit viros: qui funes intextis nervis velut mollia sparti fila disrupit; is super genua mulieris inflexa cervice truncatus, invicti crinis ornatum, praerogativam suae virtutis amisit. Influxit pecunia in gremium mulieris, et a viro discessit gratia (Judic. XVI, 5 et seq.). 132. Feralis igitur avaritia, illecebrosa pecunia, quae habentes contaminat, non habentes non juvat. Esto tamen ut aliquando adjuvet pecunia, inferiorem tamen et ipsam desiderantem. Quid ad eum qui non desiderat, qui non requirit, qui auxilio ejus non indiget, studio non flectitur? Quid ad alios, si sit ille copiosior qui habet? Numquid idcirco honestior; quia habet quo honestas plerumque amittitur, quia habet quod custodiat magis quam quod possideat? Illud enim possidemus quo utimur: 102 quod autem ultra usum est, non utique habet possessionis fructum, sed custodiae periculum.

CAPUT XXVII.

In pecuniae contemptu inesse formam justitiae: quam virtutem nec non alias nonnullas sectari debent tam clerici quam antistites; ubi potissimum de non ferenda praecipitanter excommunicatione.

133. Ad summam novimus quod pecuniae contemptus justitiae forma sit; et ideo avaritiam declinare debemus, et omni studio intendere, ne quid faciamus umquam adversus justitiam, sed in omnibus gestis et operibus custodiamus eam. 134. Si volumus commendare nos Deo, charitatem habeamus, unanimes simus, humilitatem sequamur, alterutrum existimantes superiorem sibi. Haec est enim humilitas, si nihil sibi quis arroget, et inferiorem se esse existimet. Episcopus ut membris suis utatur clericis, et maxime ministris qui sunt vere filii; quem cuique viderit aptum muneri, ei deputet. 135. Cum dolore amputatur etiam quae putruit pars corporis, et diu tractatur, si potest sanari medicamentis: si non potest, tunc a medico bono absciditur. Sic episcopi affectus boni est, ut optet sanare infirmos, serpentia auferre ulcera, adurere aliqua, non abscidere: postremo quod sanari non potest, cum dolore abscidere. Unde pulcherrimum illud praeceptum magis eminet, ut cogitemus non quae nostra sunt, sed quae aliorum (Phil. II, 4). Hoc enim modo nihil erit, quod vel irati nostro indulgeamus affectui, vel faventes nostrae plus justo tribuamus aliquid voluntati.

CAPUT XXVIII.

MISERICORDIAM ETIAM CUM invidia propria largius exercendam: ad quod refertur memorabilis vasorum sacrorum in captivorum redemptionem ab Ambrosio fractorum historia, et pulcherrima de auri et argenti quae Ecclesia possidet, legitimo usu praecipiuntur. Hinc postquam ex facto sancti Laurentii quinam veri sint Ecclesiae thesauri ostensum est, regulae in conflandis atque impendendis vasis initiatis servandae proponuntur.

136. Hoc maximum incentivum misericordiae, ut compatiamur alienis calamitatibus (Dist. 86, cap. Pulchra, § Compatiamur), necessitates aliorum, quantum possumus, juvemus; et plus interdum quam possumus. Melius est enim pro misericordia causas praestare, vel invidiam perpeti, quam praetendere inclementiam; ut nos aliquando in invidiam 103 incidimus, quod confregerimus vasa mystica, ut captivos redimeremus, quod arianis displicere potuerat; nec tam factum displiceret, quam ut esset quod in nobis reprehenderetur. Quis autem est tam durus, immitis, ferreus, cui displiceat quod homo redimitur a morte, femina ab impuritatibus barbarorum, quae graviores morte sunt: adolescentulae, vel pueruli, vel infantes ab idolorum contagiis, quibus mortis metu inquinabantur? 137. Quam causam nos etsi non sine ratione aliqua gessimus; tamen ita in populo prosecuti sumus, ut confiteremur, multoque fuisse commodius astrueremus, ut animas Domino quam aurum servaremus (Matth. X, 9). Qui enim sine auro misit apostolos, Ecclesias sine auro congregavit. Aurum Ecclesia habet (12, quaest. 2, cap. Aurum); non ut servet, sed ut eroget, et subveniat in necessitatibus. Quid opus est custodire quod nihil adjuvat? An ignoramus quantum auri atque argenti de templo Domini Assyrii sustulerint (IV Reg. XXIV, 13)? Nonne melius conflant sacerdotes propter alimoniam pauperum, si alia subsidia desint, quam ut sacrilegus contaminata asportet hostis? Nonne dicturus est Dominus: Cur passus es tot inopes fame mori? Et certe habebas aurum, ministrasses alimoniam. Cur tot captivi deducti in commercio sunt, nec redempti, ab hoste occisi sunt? Melius fuerat ut vasa viventium servares, quam metallorum. 138. His non posset responsum referri. Quid enim diceres: Timui ne templo Dei ornatus deesset? Responderet: Aurum sacramenta non quaerunt: neque auro placent, quae auro non emuntur. Ornatus sacramentorum redemptio captivorum est. Vere illa sunt vasa pretiosa, quae redimunt animas a morte. Ille verus thesaurus est Domini, qui operatur quod sanguis ejus operatus est. Tunc vas Dominici sanguinis agnoscitur, cum in utroque viderit redemptionem; ut calix ab hoste redimat, quos sanguis a peccato redimit. Quam pulchrum, ut cum agmina captivorum ab Ecclesia redimuntur, dicatur: Hos Christus redemit! Ecce aurum quod probari potest, ecce aurum utile, ecce aurum Christi quod a morte liberat, ecce aurum quo redimitur pudicitia, servatur castitas. 139. Hos ergo malui vobis liberos tradere, quam aurum reservare. Hic numerus captivorum, hic ordo praestantior est, quam species poculorum. Huic muneri proficere debuit aurum Redemptoris, ut redimeret periclitantes. Agnosco infusum auro sanguinem Christi non solum irrutilasse, verum etiam divinae operationis impressisse virtutem redemptionis munere.

140. Tale aurum sanctus martyr Laurentius 104 Domino reservavit, a quo cum quaererentur thesauri Ecclesiae, promisit se demonstraturum. Sequenti die pauperes duxit. Interrogatus ubi essent thesauri quos promiserat, ostendit pauperes dicens: Hi sunt thesauri Ecclesiae. Et vere thesauri, in quibus Christus est, in quibus fides est. Denique Apostolus ait: Habemus thesaurum in vasis fictilibus (II Cor. IV, 7). Quos meliores thesauros habet Christus, quam eos in quibus se esse dixit? Sic enim scriptum est: Esurivi, et dedistis mihi manducare: sitivi, et dedistis mihi bibere: hospes eram, et collegistis me (Matt. XXV, 35). Et infra: Quod enim uni horum fecistis, mihi fecistis (Ibid., 40). Quos meliores Jesus habet thesauros, quam eos in quibus amat videri? 141. Hos thesauros demonstravit Laurentius, et vicit, quod eos nec persecutor potuit auferre. Itaque Joachim qui aurum in obsidione servabat, nec dispensabat alimoniae comparandae; et aurum vidit eripi, et se in captivitatem deduci (IV Reg. XXIV, 13). Laurentius qui aurum Ecclesiae maluit erogare pauperibus, quam persecutori reservare, pro singulari suae interpretationis vivacitate sacram martyrii accepit coronam. Numquid dictum est sancto Laurentio: Non debuisti erogare thesauros Ecclesiae, vasa sacramentorum vendere?

142. Opus est ut quis fide sincera et perspicaci providentia munus hoc impleat. Sane si in sua aliquis derivat emolumenta, crimen est: sin vero pauperibus erogat, captivum redimit, misericordia est. Nemo enim (12, q. 2, cap. Aurum, § Nemo potest) potest dicere: Cur pauper vivit? Nemo potest queri, quia captivi redempti sunt: nemo potest accusare, quia templum Dei est aedificatum: nemo potest indignari, quia humandis fidelium reliquiis spatia laxata sunt: nemo potest dolere, quia in sepulturis Christianorum requies defunctorum est. In his tribus generibus vasa Ecclesiae etiam initiata confringere, conflare, vendere licet. 143. Opus est ut de Ecclesia mystici poculi forma non exeat, ne ad usus nefarios sacri calicis ministerium transferatur. Ideo intra Ecclesiam primum quaesita sunt vasa quae initiata non essent: deinde comminuta, postremo conflata, per minutias erogationis dispensata egentibus, captivorum quoque pretiis profecerunt. Quod si desunt nova, et quae nequaquam initiata videantur, in hujusmodi usus, quos supra diximus, arbitror omnia pie posse converti. 105

CAPUT XXIX.

DEPOSITA VIDUARUM, IMMO omnium fidelium in Ecclesia cum sui etiam periculo defendi oportere: quae res Oniae sacerdotis, Ambrosii ac Ticinensis episcopi exemplis lucem capit.

144. Illud sane diligenter intuendum est, ut deposita viduarum intemerata maneant, sine ulla serventur offensione, non solum viduarum, sed etiam omnium; fides enim exhibenda omnibus est, sed major est viduarum causa et pupillorum. 145. Denique hoc solo viduarum nomine, sicut in libris Machabaeorum legimus (II Machab. III, 10 et seq.), commendatum templo omne servatum est. Nam cum indicium factum esset pecuniarum, quas in templo Hierosolymis maximas reperiri posse Simon nefarius Antiocho regi prodidit, missus in rem Heliodorus, ad templum venit, et summo sacerdoti aperuit indicii invidiam, et adventus sui causam. 146. Tunc sacerdos deposita esse dixit viduarum victualia et pupillorum: quaedam autem Hircani Tobiae viri sancti, eaque demonstravit. Argenti talenta quadraginta erant, auri vero ducenta. Quae cum Heliodorus ereptum ire vellet, et regis vindicare commodis, sacerdotes ante altare jactaverunt se, induti sacerdotales stolas: et Deum vivum qui de depositis legem dederat, flentes invocabant, ut custodem se praeceptorum praestaret suorum. Vultus vero et color summi sacerdotis immutatus declarabat dolorem animi, et mentis intentae sollicitudinem. Flebant omnes, quod in contemptum locus venturus foret, si nec in Dei templo tuta fidei servaretur custodia: accinctaeque mulieres pectus, et clausae virgines pulsabant januam: ad muros alii currebant, per fenestras alii prospectabant, omnes ad coelum tendebant manus, orantes ut suis Dominus adesset legibus.

147. Heliodorus autem nec his territus, quod intenderat, urgebat, et satellitibus suis aerarium sepserat; cum subito apparuit illi terribilis eques armis praefulgens aureis: equus autem ejus erat insigni ornatus opertorio. Alii quoque duo juvenes apparuerunt in virtute inclyta, decore grato, cum splendore gloriae, speciosi amictu, qui circumsteterunt eum, et utraque ex parte flagellabant sacrilegum, sine 106 ulla intermissione continuato verbere. Quid multa? Circumfusus caligine in terram concidit, et evidenti divinae operationis indicio exanimatus jacebat, nec ulla spes in eo residebat salutis. Oborta est laetitia metuentibus, metus superbis: dejectique ex amicis Heliodori quidam rogabant Oniam, vitam poscentes ei, quoniam supremum gerebat spiritum. 148. Rogante itaque sacerdote summo, iidem juvenes iterum Heliodoro apparuerunt, iisdem amicti vestibus, et dixerunt ad eum: Oniae summo sacerdoti gratias age, propter quem tibi vita est reddita. Tu autem expertus Dei flagella, vade, et nuntia tuis omnibus, quantam cognoveris templi religionem, et Dei potestatem. His dictis, non comparuerunt. Heliodorus itaque recepto spiritu, hostiam Domino obtulit, Oniae sacerdoti gratias egit, et cum exercitu ad regem revertitur dicens: Si quem habes hostem, aut aliquem insidiatorem rerum tuarum, illuc illum dirige, et flagellatum recipies eum. 149. Servanda est igitur, filii, depositis fides, adhibenda diligentia. Egregie hinc vestrum enitescit ministerium, si suscepta impressio potentis, quam vel vidua vel orphani tolerare non queant, Ecclesiae subsidio cohibeatur: si ostendatis plus apud vos mandatum Domini, quam divitis valere gratiam. 150. Meministis ipsi quoties adversus regales impetus pro viduarum, immo omnium depositis certamen subierimus. Commune hoc vobiscum mihi. Recens exemplum Ecclesiae Ticinensis proferam, quae viduae depositum, quod susceperat, amittere periclitabatur. Interpellante enim eo qui sibi illud imperiali rescripto vindicare cupiebat, clerici non tenebant auctoritatem: honorati quoque et intercessores dati non posse praeceptis imperatoris obviari ferebant. Legebatur rescripti forma directior, magistri officiorum statuta, agens in rebus imminebat. Quid plura? Traditum erat. 151. Tamen communicato mecum consilio, obsedit sanctus episcopus ea conclavia, ad quae translatum illud depositum viduae cognoverat. Quod ubi non potuit auferri, receptum sub chirographo est. Postea iterum flagitabatur ex chirographo: praeceptum imperator iteraverat, ut ipse per semetipsum nos conveniret. Negatum est: et exposita divinae legis auctoritate, et serie lectionis, et Heliodori periculo, vix tandem 107 rationem imperator accepit. Post etiam tentata fuerat obreptio; sed praevenit sanctus episcopus, ut redderet viduae quod acceperat. Fides interim salva est: impressio non est formidini; quia jam res, non fides periclitatur.

CAPUT XXX.

LIBRI CONCLUSIO PER exhortationem ad fugiendos invidos, atque ad prudentiam, fidem aliasque virtutes prosequendas.

152. Filii, fugite improbos, cavete invidos. Inter improbum et invidum hoc interest: improbus suo delectatur bono, invidus torquetur alieno: ille diligit mala, hic bona odit; ut prope tolerabilior sit, qui sibi vult bene, quam qui male omnibus. 133. Filii, ante factum cogitate: et cum diutius cogitaveritis, tunc facite quod probatis. Laudabilis mortis cum occasio datur, rapienda est illico. Dilata gloria fugit, nec facile comprehenditur. 108 154. Fidem diligite, quoniam per fidem et devotionem Josias magnum sibi ab adversariis amorem acquisivit; quoniam celebravit pascha Domini, cum esset annorum decem et octo, quemadmodum nemo ante eum (IV Reg. XXIII, 21 seq.). Zelo itaque ut vicit superiores, ita et vos, filii, zelum Dei sumite. Exquirat vos Dei zelus et devoret; ut unusquisque vestrum dicat: Exquisivit me zelus domus tuae (Psal. LXVIII, 10). Apostolus Christi zelotes dictus est (Luc. VI, 15). Quid de Apostolo dico? Ipse Dominus ait: Zelus domus tuae comedit me (Joan. II, 17). Sit ergo Dei zelus, non iste humanus quem invidia generat. 155. Sit inter vos pax, quae superat omnem sensum. Amate vos invicem. Nihil charitate dulcius, nihil pace gratius. Et vos ipsi scitis quod prae caeteris vos semper dilexi et diligo: quasi unius patris filii coaluistis in affectum germanitatis. 156. Quae bona sunt tenete, et Deus pacis et dilectionis erit vobiscum in Domino Jesu: cui est honor, gloria, magnificentia, potestas, cum Spiritu sancto in saecula saeculorum. Amen.

LIBER TERTIUS.

CAPUT PRIMUM.

A DAVIDE AC Salomone nobis praeceptum, qua ratione cum corde nostro conversandum sit, proindeque Scipionem dicti, quod ei tribuitur, primum auctorem non reputandum. Quam pulchra in otio suo perpetraverint sancti prophetae: horum atque aliorum otia conferuntur, ostenditurque numquam solum aut in angusto justum esse. 1. David propheta docuit nos tamquam in ampla domo deambulare in corde nostro, et conversari cum eo tamquam cum bono contubernali; ut ipse sibi diceret, et loqueretur secum, ut est illud: Dixi, custodiam vias meas (Psal. XXXVIII, 2). Salomon quoque filius ejus ait: Bibe aquam de tuis vasis, et de puteorum tuorum fontibus (Prov. V, 15); hoc est tuo consilio utere. Aqua enim alta, consilium in corde viri (Prov. XX, 5). Nemo, inquit, alienus particeps sit tibi. Fons aquae tuae sit tibi proprius: et jucundare cum uxore, quae est tibi a juventute. Cervus amicitiae et pullus gratiarum confabulentur tecum (Prov. V, 17, 18).

2. Non ergo primus Scipio scivit solus non esse, cum solus esset; nec minus otiosus, cum otiosus esset: scivit ante ipsum Moyses, qui cum taceret, clamabat (Exod. XIV, 15): cum otiosus staret, praeliabatur; nec solum praeliabatur, sed etiam de hostibus, quos non contigerat, triumphabat (Exod. XVII, 11 et seq.). Adeo otiosus, ut manus ejus alii sustinerent: nec minus 108 quam caeteri negotiosus, qui otiosis manibus expugnabat hostem, quem non poterant vincere qui dimicabant. Ergo Moyses et in silentio loquebatur, et in otio operabatur. Cujus autem majora negotia, quam hujus otia, qui quadringinta diebus positus in monte, totam Legem complexus est, et in illa solitudine qui cum eo loqueretur, non defuit (Exod. XXIV, 15 et seq.)? Unde et David ait: Audiam quid loquatur in me Dominus

Deus (Psal. LXXXIV, 9). Et quanto plus est si cum aliquo Deus loquatur, quam ipse secum! 3. Transibant apostoli, et umbra eorum curabat infirmos. Tangebantur vestimenta eorum, et sanitas deferebatur (Act. V, 16). 4. Sermonem locutus est Elias, et pluvia stetit nec cecidit super terram tribus annis et sex mensibus. Iterum locutus est, et hydria farinae non defecit, et vas olei toto famis diurnae tempore non est exinanitum (III Reg. XVII, 1 et seq.). 5. Et quoniam plerosque delectant bellica; quid est praestantius, exercitus magni lacertis, an solis meritis confecisse praelium? Sedebat Elisaeus in uno loco, et rex Syriae magnam belli molem inferebat populo patrum, diversisque consiliorum acervabat fraudibus, et circumvenire insidiis moliebatur: sed omnes ejus apparatus propheta deprehendebat, et vigore mentis per gratiam Dei ubique praesens, cogitationes hostium suis annuntiabat, et monebat quibus 109 caverent locis. Quod ubi regi Syriae manifestatum est, misso exercitu, clausit prophetam. Oravit Elisaeus, et omnes illos caecitate percuti fecit, et captivos intrare in Samariam, qui venerant obsidere eum (IV Reg. VI, 8 et seq.). 6. Conferamus hoc otium cum aliorum otio. Alii enim requiescendi causa abducere animum a negotiis solent, et a conventu coetuque hominum subtrahere sese; et aut ruris petere secretum, captare agrorum solitudines, aut intra urbem vacare animo, indulgere quieti et tranquillitati: Elisaeus autem aut in solitudine Jordanem transitu suo dividit (IV Reg. II, 8); ut pars defluat posterior, superior autem in fontem recurrat: aut in Carmelo resoluta difficultate generandi, inopina sterilem conceptione fecundat: aut resuscitat mortuos: aut ciborum temperat amaritudines, et facit farinae admixtione dulcescere: aut decem panibus distributis, reliquias colligit, plebe saturata: aut ferrum securis excussum, et in fluvii Jordanis mersum profundum, misso in aquas ligno, facit supernatare: aut emundatione leprosum, aut siccitatem imbribus, aut famem mutat fecunditate (IV Reg. IV, 16 et seq., et alibi.) 7. Quando ergo justus solus est, qui cum Deo semper est? Quando solitarius est, qui numquam separatur a Christo? Quis nos, inquit, separabit a dilectione Christi? Confido quia neque mors, neque vita, neque angelus (Rom. VIII, 35). Quando autem feriatur a negotio, qui numquam feriatur a merito, quo consummatur negotium? Quibus autem locis circumscribitur, cui totus mundus divitiarum possessio est? Qua aestimatione definitur, qui numquam opinione comprehenditur? Etenim quasi ignoratur et cognoscitur: quasi moritur, et ecce vivit: quasi tristis, et semper laetior: ut egenus, et largus: ut qui nihil habeat, et possideat omnia (II Cor. VI, 8). Nihil enim spectat vir justus, nisi quod constans et honestum est. Et ideo etiamsi alii videatur pauper, sibi dives est: qui non eorum quae caduca, sed eorum quae aeterna sunt, aestimatione censetur.

CAPUT II.

QUOD PHILOSOPHI DE honesti atque utilis comparatione disputant, hoc apud Christianos locum non habere, quibus nihil utile nisi quod justum. Quae officia perfecta, quaeve media? Easdem voces diversis diverse convenire: postremo virum justum numquam alieno incommodo commodum suum quaerere, sed contra semper aliorum studere utilitati.

8. Et quoniam de duobus superioribus locis diximus, in quibus honestum illud et utile tractavimus, sequitur utrum honestatem et utilitatem inter se comparare debeamus, et quaerere quid sit sequendum. Sicut enim supra 110 tractavimus, utrum honestum illud an turpe esset; et secundo loco, utrum utile an inutile: similiter hoc loco, utrum honestum sit an utile nonnulli requirendum putant. 9. Nos autem movemur, ne haec inter se velut compugnantia inducere videamur, quae jam supra unum esse ostendimus: nec honestum esse posse, nisi quod utile: nec utile, nisi quod honestum; quia non sequimur sapientiam carnis, apud quam utilitas pecuniariae istius commoditatis pluris habetur, sed sapientiam quae ex Deo est, apud quam ea quae in hoc saeculo magna aestimantur, pro detrimento habentur. 10. Hoc etenim κατορθώμα, quod perfectum et absolutum officium est, a vero virtutis fonte proficiscitur. Cui secundum est commune officium, quod ipso sermone significatur non esse arduae virtutis ac singularis, quod potest plurimis esse commune. Nam pecuniae compendia captare familiare multis, elegantiori convivio et suavioribus delectari epulis usitatum est: jejunare autem et continentem esse paucorum est; et alieni cupidum non esse, rarum: contra autem detrahere velle alteri, et non esse contentum suo; nam in hoc cum plerisque consortium est. Alia igitur prima, alia media officia. Prima cum paucis, media cum pluribus. 11. Denique in iisdem verbis frequenter discretio est. Aliter enim bonum Deum dicimus, aliter hominem: aliter justum Deum appellamus, aliter hominem. Similiter et sapientem Deum aliter dicimus, aliter hominem. Quod et in Evangelio docemur: Estote ergo et vos perfecti, sicut et pater vester qui in coelis est, perfectus est (Matth. V, 48). Ipsum Paulum lego perfectum et non perfectum. Nam cum dixisset: Non quod jam acceperim, aut jam perfectus sim: sequor autem si comprehendam (Phil. III, 12), statim subjecit: Quicumque ergo perfecti sumus (Ibid., 15). Duplex enim forma perfectionis: alia medios, alia plenos numeros habens: alia hic, alia ibi: alia secundum hominis possibilitatem, alia secundum perfectionem futuri. Deus autem justus per omnia, sapiens super omnia, perfectus in omnibus. 12. Inter ipsos quoque homines distantia est. Aliter Daniel sapiens, de quo dictum est: Quis Daniele sapientior (Ezech. XXVIII, 3)? Aliter alii sapientes, aliter Salomon, qui repletus est sapientia super omnem sapientiam antiquorum, et super omnes sapientes Aegypti (III Reg. IV, 29 et seq.). Aliud est enim communiter sapere, aliud sapere perfecte. Qui communiter sapit, pro temporalibus sapit, pro se sapit; ut alteri aliquid detrahat, et sibi adjungat. Qui perfecte sapit, nescit sua spectare commoda: sed ad illud quod aeternum est, quod decorum atque honestum, toto affectu intendit, quaerens non quod sibi utile est, sed quod omnibus. 13. Itaque haec sit formula, ut inter duo illa, honestum atque utile, errare nequeamus; eo quod 111 justus nihil alteri detrahendum putet, nec alterius incommodo suum commodum augeri velit. Hanc formam tibi praescribit Apostolus dicens: Omnia licent, sed non omnia expediunt: omnia licent, sed non omnia aedificant. Nemo quod suum est quaerat, sed quod alterius (I Cor. X, 22); hoc est nemo commodum suum quaerat, sed alterius: nemo honorem suum quaerat, sed alterius. Unde et alibi dicit: Alter alterum existimantes superiorem sibi, non quae sua sunt singuli cogitantes, sed quae aliorum (Philipp. II, 3, 4). 14. Nemo etiam suam gratiam quaerat, nemo suam laudem, sed alterius. Quod evidenter etiam in Proverbiis declaratum possumus advertere, dicente sancto per Salomonem Spiritu: Fili, si sapiens fueris, tibi sapiens eris et proximis; si autem malus evaseris, solus hauries mala (Prov. IX, 12). Sapiens enim aliis consulit, sicut justus; quando quidem consors sui est, utriusque forma virtutis.

CAPUT III.

PRAEMISSUM DE NON quaerendo proprio emolumento praeceptum urgetur, primum a Christi exemplo, tum ab interpretatione nominis, denique ab ipsa membrorum forma et usibus. Unde ostendit quam flagitiosum sit alienae utilitati detrahere; cum hoc scelere naturalis lex aeque ac divina violetur, atque insuper illud amittatur quo praestamus caeteris animantibus, ad postremum leges civiles cum summa infamia conculcentur.

15. Si quis igitur vult placere omnibus, per omnia quaerat non quod sibi utile est, sed quod multis, sicut quaerebat et Paulus. Hoc est enim conformari Christo, alienum non quaerere, nihil alteri detrahere, ut acquirat sibi (Philipp. II, 6 et seq.). Christus enim Dominus cum esset in Dei forma, exinanivit se, ut formam susciperet hominis, quam operum suorum locupletaret virtutibus. Tu ergo spolias, quem Christus induit? Tu exuis, quem vestivit Christus? Hoc enim agis, quando alterius detrimento tua commoda augere expetis. 16. Considera, o homo, unde nomen sumpseris; ab humo utique, quae nihil cuiquam eripit, sed omnia largitur omnibus, et diversos in usum omnium animantium fructus ministrat. Inde appellata humanitas specialis et domestica virtus hominis, quae consortem adjuvet. 17. Ipsa te doceat forma tui corporis, membrorumque usus. Numquid membrum tuum alterius membri officia sibi vindicat, aut oculus officium oris, aut os oculi officium sibi vindicat, aut manus pedum ministerium, aut pes manuum? Quin etiam ipsae manus dextera ac sinistra dispartita habent officia pleraque, ut si usum commutes utriusque, adversum naturam sit; priusque totum hominem exuas, quam membrorum tuorum ministeria convertas: si aut de sinistra cibum suggeras, aut de dextera fungaris ministerio sinistrae, ut reliquias ciborum abluas nisi forte poscat necessitas. 18. Finge hanc et da oculo virtutem, ut possit detrahere sensum capiti, auditum auribus, 112 menti cogitationes, odoratum naribus, ori saporem, et sibi conferat; nonne omnem statum dissolvet naturae? Unde pulchre Apostolus ait: Si totum corpus oculus, ubi auditus? Si totum auditus, ubi odoratus (I Cor. XII, 17)? Omnes ergo unum corpus sumus et diversa membra, sed omnia corpori necessaria; non enim potest membrum de membro dicere: Non est mihi necessarium. Quin etiam ipsa quae videntur infirmiora membra esse, multo magis necessaria sunt, et majorem plerumque tuendi se requirunt sollicitudinem. Et si quid dolet membrum unum, compatiuntur ei membra omnia. 19. Unde quam grave est ut detrahamus aliquid ei, cui nos compati oportet: et cui debemus consortium ministerii, ei fraudi et noxae simus! Haec utique lex naturae est, quae nos ad omnem astringit humanitatem, ut alter alteri tamquam unius partes corporis invicem deferamus. Nec detrahendum quidquam putemus, cum contra naturae legem sit non juvare. Sic enim nascimur ut consentiant membra membris, et alterum alteri adhaereat, et obsequantur sibi mutuo ministerio. Quod si unum desit officio suo, impediantur caetera: ut si eruat oculum manus, nonne sibi operis sui usum negavit? Si pedem vulneret, quantorum sibi actuum profectum inviderit? Et quanto gravius est totum hominem quam unum membrum detrahi? Jam si in uno membro totum corpus violatur, utique in uno homine communio totius humanitatis solvitur; violatur natura generis humani, et sanctae Ecclesiae congregatio, quae in unum connexum corpus atque compactum unitate fidei et charitatis assurgit: Christus quoque Dominus, qui pro universis mortuus est, mercedem sanguinis sui evacuatam dolebit. 20. Quid! quod etiam ipsa lex Domini hanc formam tenendam edocet, ut nihil alteri detrahas, tui commodi servandi gratia, cum dicit: Non transferas terminos, quos statuerunt patres tui (Prov. XXII, 28); cum vitulum errantem fratris tui reducendum praecipit (Exod. XXIII, 4), cum furem mori jubet (Exod. XXII, 2), cum vetat mercenarium debita mercede fraudari, cum pecuniam sine usuris reddendam censuit (Levit. XIX, 13). Subvenire enim non habenti humanitatis est: duritiae autem plus extorquere quam dederis (Deut. XXIII, 19). Etenim si ideo auxilio tuo erit opus, quia non habuit unde de suo redderet; nonne impium est ut sub humanitatis simulatione amplius ab eo poscas, qui non habebat unde minus solveret? Absolvis igitur alteri debitotorem, ut condemnes tibi: et hanc humanitatem vocas, ubi est iniquitatis auctio? 21. Hoc praestamus caeteris animantibus, quod alia genera animantium conferre aliquid nesciunt: ferae autem eripiunt, homines tribuunt. Unde et Psalmista ait: Justus miseretur, et tribuit (Psal. XXXVI, 21). Sunt tamen quibus et ferae conferant. Si quidem collatione sobolem suam nutriunt, et aves cibo suo pullos satiant suos: homini autem soli tributum est, ut omnes tamquam suos pascat. Debet istud ipso naturae jure. Quod si non licet non dare, quomodo detrahere licet? Nec ipsae leges 113 nos docent? ea quae detracta sunt alicui, cum injuria personae, aut rei ipsius cumulo, restitui jubent; quo furem a detrahendo, aut poenis deterreant, aut mulcta revocent. 22. Pone tamen quod aliquis possit aut poenam non timere, aut mulctae illudere; numquid dignum est ut aliqui alteri detrahant? Servile hoc vitium, et familiare ultimae conditioni; adeo contra naturam, ut inopia magis hoc extorquere videatur, quam natura suadere. Servorum tamen occulta furta, divitum rapinae publicae. 23. Quid autem tam contra naturam, quam violare alterum tui commodi causa; cum pro omnibus excubandum, subeundas molestias, suscipiendum laborem naturalis affectus persuadeat: et gloriosum unicuique ducatur, si periculis propriis quaerat universorum tranquillitatem: multoque sibi unusquisque arbitretur gratius excidia patriae repulisse, quam propria pericula: praestantiusque esse existimet quod operam suam patriae impenderit, quam si in otio positus tranquillam vitam voluptatum copiis functus egisset.

CAPUT IV.

UBI STRICTIUS OSTENSUM est eum qui commodi sui causa noceat alteri, graves conscientiae suae paenas luiturum, colligitur uni utile nihil esse, quod itidem non sit omnibus: atque adeo propositae a philosophis de naufragis duobus quaestioni locum non esse apud Christianos, quibus ubique charitas atque humilitas exercendae sunt.

24. Hinc ergo colligitur quod homo, qui secundum naturae formatus est directionem, ut obediat ei, nocere non possit alteri: quod si cui noceat, naturam violet: neque tantum esse commodi quod adipisci sese putet, quantum incommodi, quod ex eo sibi accidat. Quae enim poena gravior, quam interioris vulnus conscientiae? Quod severius judicium, quam domesticum, quo unusquisque sibi est reus, seque ipse arguit quod injuriam fratri indigne fecerit? Quod non mediocriter Scriptura commendat dicens: Ex ore stultorum baculum contumeliae (Prov. XIV, 3). Stultitia igitur condemnatur, quia contumeliam facit. Nonne hoc magis fugiendum, quam mors, quam dispendium, quam inopia, quam exsilium, quam debilitatis dolor? Quis enim vitium corporis, aut patrimonii damnum non levius ducat vitio animi, et existimationis dispendio? 114 25. Liquet igitur id spectandum et tenendum omnibus, quod eadem singulorum sit utilitas, quae sit universorum: nihilque judicandum utile, nisi quod in commune prosit. Quomodo enim potest uni prodesse? Quod inutile sit omnibus, nocet. Mihi certe non videtur, qui inutilis est omnibus, sibi utilis esse posse. Etenim si una lex naturae omnibus, una utique utilitas universorum, ad consulendum utique omnibus naturae lege constringimur. Non est ergo ejus qui consultum velit alteri secundum naturam, nocere ei adversus legem naturae. 26.

Etenim si hi qui in stadio currunt, ita feruntur praeceptis informari atque instrui, ut unusquisque celeritate non fraude contendat, cursuque, quantum potest, ad victoriam properet; supplantare autem alterum aut manu dejicere non ausit: quanto magis in hoc cursu vitae istius, sine fraude alterius et circumscriptione gerenda nobis victoria est? 27. Quaerunt aliqui, si sapiens in naufragio positus insipienti naufrago tabulam extorquere possit, utrum debeat? Mihi quidem, etsi praestabilius communi videatur usui sapientem de naufragio quam insipientem evadere; tamen non videtur quod vir christianus, et justus, et sapiens, quaerere sibi vitam aliena morte debeat: utpote qui etiam si latronem armatum incidat, ferientem referire non possit; ne dum salutem defendit, pietatem contaminet. De quo in Evangelii libris aperta et evidens sententia est: Reconde gladium tuum; omnis enim qui gladio percusserit gladio ferietur (Matth. XXVI, 52). Quis latro detestabilior, quam persecutor qui venerat ut Christum occideret? Sed noluit se Christus persecutorum defendi vulnere, qui voluit suo vulnere omnes sanare. 28. Cur enim te potiorem altero judices, cum viri sit christiani praeferre sibi alterum, nihil sibi arrogare, nullum sibi honorem assumere, non vindicare meriti sui pretium? Deinde cur non tuum tolerare potius incommodum, quam alienum commodum diripere assuescas? Quid tam adversus naturam, quam non esse contentum eo quod habeas, aliena quaerere, ambire turpiter? Nam si honestas secundum naturam, omnia enim fecit Deus bona valde, turpitudo utique contraria est. Non potest ergo honestati convenire et turpitudini, cum haec inter se discreta naturae lege sint. 115

CAPUT V.

JUSTUM NIHIL AGERE quod sit contra officium, etiamsi latendi spem habuerit; ad hoc ipsum significandum fabulam de Gygis annulo excogitatam esse a philosophis, qua explosa, Davidis ac Joannis Baptistae certa et vera exempla proferuntur.

29. Sed jam ut etiam in hoc libro ponamus fastigium, in quo velut in fine disputationis nostrae dirigamus sententiam: ut nihil expetendum sit, nisi quod honestum. Nihil agit sapiens, nisi quod cum sinceritate, sine fraude sit: neque quidquam facit, in quo se crimine quoquam obliget, etiamsi latere possit. Sibi enim est reus priusquam caeteris; nec tam pudenda apud eum publicatio flagitii, quam conscientia est. Quod non fictis fabulis, ut philosophi disputabant, sed verissimis justorum virorum exemplis docere possumus. 30. Non igitur ego simulabo terrae hiatum, quae magnis quibusdam dissiluerit soluta imbribus, in quem descendisse Gyges, atque ibi fabularum illum equum aeneum offendisse a Platone inducitur, qui in lateribus suis fores haberet: quas ubi aperuit, animadvertit annulum aureum in digito mortui hominis, cujus illic exanimum corpus jaceret, aurique avarum sustulisse annulum. Sed cum se ad pastores recepisset regios de quorum ipse numero foret, casu quodam, quod palam ejus annuli ad palmam converterat, ipse omnes videbat, atque a nullo videbatur: deinde cum in locum suum revocasset annulum, videbatur ab omnibus. Cujus solers factus miraculi, per annuli opportunitatem reginae stupro potitus, necem regi intulit, caeterisque interemptis, quos necandos putaverat, ne sibi impedimento forent, Lydiae regnum adeptus est. 31. Da, inquit, hunc annulum sapienti, ut beneficio ejus possit latere, cum deliquerit: non enim minus fugiet peccatorum contagium, quam si non possit latere. Non enim latebra sapienti spes impunitatis, sed innocentia est. Denique lex non justo, sed injusto posita est (I Tim. I, 9); quia justus legem habet mentis suae, et aequitatis ac justitiae suae normam: ideoque non terrore poenae revocatur a culpa, sed honestatis regula. 32. Ergo ut ad propositum redeamus, non fabulosa pro veris, sed vera pro fabulosis exempla proferam. Quid enim mihi opus est fingere hiatum terrae, equum aeneum, annulumque aureum in digito defuncti repertum; cujus annuli tanta sit vis, ut pro arbitrio suo qui eum sit indutus annulum, 116 appareat, cum velit: cum autem nolit, e conspectu se praesentium subtrahat, ut praesens non possit videri? Nempe eo tendit istud, utrum sapiens etiam si isto utatur annulo, quo possit propria flagitia celare, et regnum assequi; nolitne peccare, et gravius ducat sceleris contagium poenarum doloribus: an vero spe impunitatis utatur ad perpetrandum scelus? Quid, inquam, mihi opus est figmento annuli, cum possim docere ex rebus gestis quod vir sapiens cum sibi in peccato non solum latendum, sed etiam regnandum videret, si peccatum admitteret; contra autem periculum salutis cerneret, si declinaret flagitium; elegerit tamen magis salutis periculum, ut vacaret flagitio, quam flagitium quo sibi regnum pararet? 33. Denique David cum fugeret a facie regis Saul, quod eum rex cum tribus millibus virorum electorum ad inferendam necem in deserto quaereret, ingressus in castra regis, cum dormientem offendisset, non solum ipse non percussit, sed etiam protexit; ne ab aliquo qui simul ingressus fuerat, perimeretur. Nam cum diceret ei Abessa: Conclusit hodie Dominus inimicum tuum in manibus tuis, et nunc occidam eum? respondit: Non consumas eum, quoniam quis injiciet manum suam in christum Domini, et purus erit? Et addidit: Vivit Dominus, quoniam nisi Dominus percusserit illum, aut nisi hora illius venerit, ut moriatur, aut in pugna discesserit, et apponatur mihi; non sit a Domino injicere manum meam in christum Domini (I Reg. XXVI, 8 et seq.). 34. Itaque non permisit necari eum, sed solam lanceam quae erat ad caput ejus, et lenticulam sustulit. Itaque dormientibus cunctis, egressus de castris transivit in cacumen montis, et coarguere coepit stipatores regios, et praecipue principem militiae Abner, quod nequaquam fidam custodiam regi et domino suo adhiberet: denique demonstraret, ubi esset lancea regis, vel lenticula quae erat ad caput ejus. Et appellatus a rege lanceam reddidit: Et Dominus, inquit, restituat unicuique justitias suas, et fidem suam: sicut tradidit te Dominus in manus meas, et nolui vindicare manu mea in christum Domini. Et cum haec diceret, timebat tamen insidias ejus, et fugit, sedem exsilio mutans. Nec tamen salutem praetulit innocentiae, cum jam secundo facultate sibi tributa regis necandi, noluisset uti occasionis beneficio: quae et securitatem salutis metuenti, et regnum offerebat exsuli. 35. Ubi opus fuit Joanni Gygeo annulo, qui si tacuisset, non esset occisus ab Herode (Marc. VI, 18)? Praestare hoc illi potuit silentium suum, ut et videretur et non occideretur: sed quia non solum 117 peccare se propter salutis defensionem passus non est, sed ne alienum quidem peccatum ferre ac perpeti potuit; ideo in se causam necis excitavit. Certe hoc negare non possunt potuisse fieri ut taceret, qui de illo Gyge negant potuisse fieri ut annuli beneficio absconderetur. 36. Sed fabula, etsi vim non habet veritatis, hanc tamen rationem habet, ut si possit celare se vir justus; tamen ita peccatum declinet, quasi celare non possit: nec personam suam indutus annulum, sed vitam suam Christum indutus abscondat, sicut Apostolus ait: Quia vita nostra abscondita est cum Christo in Deo (Coloss. III, 3). Nemo ergo hic fulgere quaerat, nemo sibi arroget, nemo se jactet (Luc. IX, 36). Nolebat se Christus hic cognosci, nolebat praedicari in Evangelio nomen suum, cum in terris versaretur: venit ut lateret saeculum hoc. Et nos ergo simili modo abscondamus vitam nostram Christi exemplo, fugiamus jactantiam, praedicari non exspectemus. Melius est hic esse in humilitate, ibi in gloria.

Cum Christus, inquit, apparuerit, tunc et vos cum illo apparebitis in gloria (Coloss. III, 4).

CAPUT VI.

PRAEVALERE APUD NOS emolumentum non oportere. Quid obtendere soleant qui a frumentis lucrum captant: quidve illis debeat responderi? Ubi eisdem Evangelica parabola et Salomonis effata sub oculis ponuntur.

37. Non vincat igitur honestatem utilitas, sed honestas utilitatem: hanc dico utilitatem, quae aestimatur secundum vulgi opinionem. Mortificetur avaritia, moriatur concupiscentia. Sanctus in negotiationem introisse se negat; quia pretiorum captare incrementa non simplicitatis, sed versutiae est. Et alius ait: Captans pretia frumenti, maledictus in plebe est (Prov. XI, 26).

38. Definita est sententia, nihil disputationi relinquens, quale controversum genus solet dicendi esse, cum alius allegat agriculturam laudabilem apud omnes haberi, fructus terrae simplices esse, plus qui seminaverit eo probatiorem fore, uberiores reditus industriae non fraudari, negligentiam magis et incuriam ruris inculti reprehendi solere. 39. Aravi, inquit, studiosius, uberius seminavi, diligentius excolui, bonos collegi proventus, sollicitius recondidi, servavi fideliter, provide custodivi. Nunc in tempore famis vendo, subvenio esurientibus: vendo frumentum non alienum, sed meum; non pluris quam caeteri, immo etiam minori pretio. Quid hic fraudi est, cum multi possent periclitari, si non haberent quod emerent? Num industria in crimen vocatur? Num diligentia reprehenditur? Num providentia vituperatur? Fortasse dicat: Et Joseph 118 frumenta in abundantia collegit, in charitate vendidit. Num charius aliquis emere compellitur? Num vis adhibetur emptori? Omnibus defertur emendi copia, nulli irrogatur injuria. 40. His igitur quantum cujusque fert ingenium disputatis, exsurgit alius, dicens: Bona quidem agricultura, quae fructus ministrat omnibus, quae simplici industria accumulat terrarum fecunditatem, nihil doli, nihil fraudi interserens. Denique si quid vitii fuerit, plus dispendii est; quia si bene aliquis seminaverit, melius metet: si sincerum tritici granum severit, puriorem ac sinceram messem colligit. Fecunda terra multiplicatum reddit, quod acceperit: fidelis ager feneratos solet restituere proventus. 41. De reditibus igitur uberis glebae exspectare debes tui mercedem laboris, de fertilitate pinguis soli justa sperare compendia. Cur ad fraudem convertis naturae industriam? Cur invides usibus hominum publicos partus? Cur populis minuis abundantiam? Cur affectas inopiam? Cur optari facis a pauperibus sterilitatem? Cum enim non sentiunt beneficia fecunditatis, te auctionante pretium, te condente frumentum, optant potius nihil nasci, quam te de fame publica negotiari. Ambis frumentorum indigentiam, alimentorum penuriam, uberes soli partus ingemiscis, fles publicam fertilitatem, horrea frugum plena deploras, exploras quando sterilior proventus sit, quando exilior partus. Votis tuis gaudes arrisisse maledictum, ut nihil cuiquam nasceretur. Tunc messem tuam venisse laetaris, tunc tibi de omnium miseria congeris opes: et hanc tu industriam vocas, hanc diligentiam nominas, quae calliditatis versutia, quae astutia fraudis est; et hoc tu remedium vocas, quod est commentum nequitiae. Latrocinium hoc, an fenus appellem? Captantur tamquam latrocinii tempora, quibus in viscera hominum durus insidiator obrepas. Augetur pretium tamquam sorte cumulatum fenoris, quo periculum capitis acervatur. Tibi conditae frugis multiplicatur usura: tu frumentum quasi fenerator occultas, quasi venditor auctionaris. Quid imprecaris male omnibus, quia major futura sit fames, quasi nihil frugum supersit, quasi infecundior annus sequatur? Lucrum tuum damnum publicum est. 42. Joseph sanctus omnibus aperuit horrea, non clausit: nec pretia captavit annonae, sed perenne subsidium collocavit: nihil sibi acquisivit, sed quemadmodum fames etiam in posterum vinceretur, provida ordinatione disposuit (Gen. XLI, 56). 43. Legisti quemadmodum hunc frumentarium pretii captatorem exponat in Evangelio Dominus Jesus, cujus possessio divites fructus attulit, et ille quasi egens dicebat: Quid faciam? Non habeo quo congregem, destruam horrea, et majora faciam (Luc. XII, 17, 18); 119 cum scire non posset, utrum sequenti nocte anima sua ab eo reposceretur. Nesciebat quid faceret: quasi ei alimenta deessent, haerebat ambiguo. Non capiebant horrea annonam, et ille se egere credebat. 44. Recte igitur Salomon: Qui continet, inquit, frumentum, relinquet illud nationibus (Prov. XI, 26), non haeredibus, quoniam avaritiae emolumentum ad successorum jura non pervenit. Quod non legitime acquiritur, quasi ventis quibusdam, ita extraneis diripientibus dissipatur. Et addidit: Captans annonam maledictus in plebe est: benedictio autem ejus qui participat (Ibid.). Vides ergo quod largitorem frumenti esse deceat, non pretii captatorem. Non est igitur ista utilitas, in qua plus honestati detrahitur, quam utilitati adjungitur.

CAPUT VII.

PEREGRINOS TEMPORE FAMIS ex urbe neutiquam expellendos. Egregium hac in re christiani senis consilium refertur: cui opponitur indignum facinus Romae admissum; nec non utroque inter se comparato, primum cum honestate atque utilitate conjunctum fuisse ostenditur, secus vero secundum.

45. Sed et illi qui peregrinos urbe prohibent, nequaquam probandi: expellere eo tempore quo debent juvare, separare a commerciis communis parentis, fusos omnibus partus negare, inita jam consortia vivendi averruncare: cum quibus fuerint communia jura, cum his nolle in tempore necessitatis subsidia partiri. Ferae non expellunt feras, et homo excludit hominem. Fere ac bestiae communem putant omnibus victum, quem terra ministrat. Illae etiam conformem sui generis adjuvant, homo impugnat, qui nihil a se alienum debet credere quidquid humani est. 46. Quanto ille rectius, qui cum jam provecta processisset aetate, et famen toleraret civitas, atque (ut in talibus solet) peterent vulgo ut peregrini urbe prohiberentur, praefecturae urbanae curam caeteris majorem sustinens, convocavit honoratos et locupletiores viros, poposcit ut in medium consulerent, dicens quam immane esse peregrinos ejici, quam hominem ab homine exui, qui cibum morienti negaret. Canes ante mensam impastos esse non patimur, et homines excludimus: quam inutile quoque tot populos mundo perire, quos dira conficiebat tabes: quantos urbi suae perire, qui solerent adjumento esse, 120 vel in conferendis subsidiis, vel in celebrandis commerciis: neminem famem alienam juvare: protrahere ut plurimum diem posse, non inopiam repellere; immo tot cultoribus exstinctis, tot agricolis occidentibus, occasura in perpetuum subsidia frumentaria. Hos igitur excludimus, qui victum nobis inferre consuerunt: hos nolumus in tempore necessitatis pascere, qui nos omni aetate paverunt? Quanta sunt quae ab ipsis nobis hoc ipso tempore ministrantur! Non in solo pane vivit homo (Deut. VIII, 3). Nostra illic familia, plerique etiam nostri parentes sunt. Reddamus quod accepimus. 47. Sed veremur ne cumulemus inopiam. Primum omnium misericordia numquam destituitur, sed adjuvatur. Deinde subsidia annonae, quae his impartienda sunt, collatione redimamus, reparemus auro. Numquid his deficientibus, non alii nobis redimendi cultores videntur? Quanto vilius est pascere, quam emere cultorem! Ubi etiam repares, ubi invenias quem reformes? Adde si invenias, quod ignarum, et alieni usus, numero possis substituere, non cultui. 48. Quid plura? Collato auro, coacta frumenta sunt. Ita nec abundantiam urbis minuit, et peregrinis alimoniam subministravit. Quantae hoc commendationis apud Deum fuit sanctissimo seni, quantae apud homines gloriae! Hic magnus vere probatus, qui vere potuit imperatori dicere, demonstrans provinciae totius populos: Hos tibi omnes reservavi, hi vivunt beneficio tui senatus, hos tua curia morti abstulit. 49. Quanto hoc utilius quam illud quod proxime Romae factum est, ejectos esse urbe amplissima, qui jam plurimam illic aetatem transegerant, flentes cum filiis abiisse, quibus velut civibus amoliendum exsilium deplorarent, interruptas complurium necessitudines, diremptas affinitates! Et certe arriserat anni fecunditas, invectitio urbs sola egebat frumento: potuisset juvari, si peteretur ab Italis frumentum, quorum filii expellebantur. Nihil hoc turpius, excludere quasi alienum, et exigere quasi suum. Quid illum ejicis, qui de suo pascitur? Quid illum ejicis, qui te pascit? Servum retines, trudis parentem? Frumentum suscipis, nec affectum impertis? Victum extorques, nec rependis gratiam? 50. Quam deforme hoc, quam inutile! Quomodo? enim potest utile esse quod non decet? 121 Quantis corporatorum subsidiis dudum Roma fraudata est? Potuit et illos non amittere, et evadere famem, exspectatis ventorum opportunis flatibus, et speratarum commeatu navium.

51. Quam vero illud superius honestum atque utile! Quid enim tam decorum atque honestum, quam collatione locupletum juvari egentes, ministrari victum es urientibus; nulli cibum defore? Quid tam utile, quam cultores agro reservari, non interire plebem rusticanorum? 52. Quod honestum igitur, et utile est: et quod utile, honestum. Et contra quod inutile, indecorum; quod autem indecorum, id etiam inutile.

CAPUT VIII.

EOS QUI HONESTUM utili anteponant a Deo probari, Josue, Caleb, et aliorum exploratorum patere exemplis.

53. Quando majores nostri servitio exire potuissent, nisi id non solum turpe, sed etiam inutile credidissent regi servire Aegyptiorum (Exod. XII, 34 et seq.)? 54. Jesus quoque et Caleb missi ad explorandam terram, uberem quidem terram, sed a ferocissimis inhabitari gentibus nuntiaverunt. Terrore belli populus infractus, recusabat terrae ejus possessionem (Num. XIII, 28 et seq.). Suadebant missi exploratores Jesus et Caleb terram esse utilem: indecorum putabant cedere nationibus: lapidari potius eligebant, quod minabatur populus, quam decedere de honestate. Dissuadebant alii; plebs reclamabat, dicens adversus diras et asperas gentes bellum fore, cadendum sibi in praelio, mulieres suas et pueros direptioni futuros. 55. Exarsit Domini indignatio, ut omnes vellet perdere: sed rogante Moyse, temperavit sententiam, ultionem distulit, satis esse perfidis supplicii judicans, etsi parceret interim, nec percuteret incredulos, ad eam tamen terram quam recusaverant, propter incredulitatis suae pretium non pervenirent: sed pueri et mulieres qui non immurmuraverant, vel sexu, vel aetate veniabiles, caperent ejus terrae promissam haereditatem. Denique quicumque erant a vigesimo anno et supra in deserto, eorum membra ceciderunt, sed aliorum dilata est poena. Qui autem ascenderunt cum Jesu, et dissuadendum putaverunt, plaga magna statim mortui sunt: Jesus vero et Caleb cum innoxia aetate vel sexu in terram promissionis intraverunt (Num. XIV, 6 et seq.). 56. Pars igitur melior gloriam saluti praetulit, deterior salutem honestati. Divina autem sententia eos probavit, qui honesta utilibus praestare arbitrabantur: eos vero condemnavit, apud quos ea quae videbantur saluti potius quam honestati accommoda, praeponderabant. 122

CAPUT IX.

FRAUDES ET TURPIA lucra maxime dedecere clericos, quorum est utilitati omnium inservire: illos in causis pecuniariis intervenire nequaquam debere, secus vero in capitalibus. Eisdem ne cui, etiam lacessiti, noceant, exemplum David; neu autem vitam honestati praeferant, caedes Nabuthe proponitur.

57. Nihil itaque deformius quam nullum habere amorem honestatis, et usu quodam degeneris mercaturae, quaestu sollicitari ignobili, avaro aestuare corde, diebus ac noctibus hiare in alieni detrimenta patrimonii, non elevare animum ad honestatis nitorem, non considerare verae laudis pulchritudinem. 58. Hinc nascuntur aucupio quaesitae haereditates, continentiae atque gravitatis simulatione captatae: quod abhorret a proposito christiani viri; omne enim quod arte elicitum, et fraude compositum est, caret merito simplicitatis. In ipsis qui nullum Ecclesiastici ordinis officium receperint, incongrua judicatur affectatae ambitio haereditatis. In supremo fine vitae positos suum habere judicium, ut libere testentur quod sentiunt, qui postea non sunt emendaturi: cum honestum non sit competentia compendia aliis vel debita, vel parata avertere; cum vel sacerdotis vel ministri sit prodesse, si fieri potest, omnibus, obesse nemini. 59. Denique (14, quaest. 5, cap. Denique) si non potest alteri subveniri, nisi alter laedatur, commodius est neutrum juvari, quam gravari alterum. Ideoque in causis pecuniariis intervenire non est sacerdotis: in quibus non potest fieri, quin frequenter laedatur alter qui vincitur, quoniam intercessoris beneficio se victum arbitratur. Sacerdotis est igitur nulli nocere, prodesse velle omnibus: posse autem solius est Dei. Nam in causa capitis nocere ei quem juvare debeas periclitantem, non sine peccato est gravi: in causa autem pecuniae odia quaerere, insipientiae est; cum pro salute hominis graves frequenter fiant molestiae: in quo etiam periclitari gloriosum sit. Proposita igitur forma in sacerdotis officio teneatur; ut nulli noceat, ne lacessitus quidem, et aliqua injuria offensus. Bonus enim est vir qui dixit: Si reddidi retribuentibus mihi mala (Psal. VII, 5). Quae enim est gloria, si eum non laedimus, qui nos non laeserit? Sed illa virtus est, si laesus remittas. 60. Quam honestum, quod cum potuisset regi inimico nocere, maluit parcere (I Reg. XXIV, 5 et seq.)! Quam etiam utile, quia successori hoc profuit, ut discerent omnes fidem regi proprio servare, nec usurpare imperium, sed vereri! Itaque et honestas utilitati praelata est, et utilitas secuta honestatem est. 123 61. Parum est quod pepercit, addidit quod etiam in bello doluit occisum, et flebiliter deploravit dicens: Montes qui estis in Gelbeal, neque ros, neque pluvia cadat super vos. Montes mortis, quoniam ibi sublata est protectio potentium, protectio Saul. Non est unctus in oleo et sanguine vulneratorum, et ex adipe belligerantium. Sagitta Jonathae non est reversa retro, et gladius Saul non est reversus vacuus. Saul et Jonathas speciosi et charissimi, inseparabiles in vita sua, et in morte non sunt separati. Super aquilas leviores, super leones potentiores. Filiae Israel, plorate super Saul, qui vestiebat vos vestimenta coccinea cum ornamento vestro, qui imponebat aurum super vestimenta vestra. Quomodo ceciderunt potentes in media pugna? Jonathas in morte vulneratus est. Doleo in te, frater meus, Jonatha, speciosus mihi valde. Ceciderat amor tuus in me, sicut amor mulierum. Quomodo ceciderunt potentes, et perierunt arma concupiscenda (II Reg. I, 21 et seq.) ? 62. Quae mater sic unicum defleret filium quemadmodum hic deflevit inimicum? Quis gratiae auctorem tantis prosequeretur laudibus, quantis iste prosecutus est insidiatorem capitis sui? Quam pie doluit, quanto ingemuit affectu! Aruerunt montes prophetico maledicto, et divina vis sententiam maledicentis implevit. Itaque pro regiae necis spectaculo poenam elementa solverunt. 63. Quid vero sancto Nabuthe, quae fuit causa mortis, nisi honestatis contemplatio? Nam cum ab eo vineam rex posceret, pecuniam daturum se pollicens; indecorum pretium pro paterna recusavit haereditate, maluitque morte declinare hujusmodi turpitudinem. Non mihi, inquit, faciat Dominus, ut dem tibi haereditatem patrum meorum (III Reg. XXI, 3); hoc est, tantum mihi opprobrium non fiat, non permittat Deus tantum extorqueri flagitium. Non utique de vitibus dicit, neque enim de vitibus cura est Deo, neque de terreno spatio, sed de jure loquitur patrum. Potuit utique alteram vineam de vineis regis accipere, et amicus esse; in quo non mediocris saeculi hujus utilitas aestimari solet: sed quod turpe erat, judicavit non videri utile: maluitque periculum cum honestate subire, quam utilitatem cum opprobrio: vulgarem utilitatem loquor, non illam in qua etiam honestatis gratia est. 64. Denique et ipse rex potuit extorquere, sed impudens arbitrabatur, sed occisum doluit. Dominus quoque mulieris immanitatem, quae honestatis immemor turpe antetulit lucrum, congruo supplicio plectendam annuntiavit. 65. Turpis est itaque omnis fraus. Denique etiam in rebus vilibus exsecrabilis est staterae fallacia, et fraudulenta mensura. Si in foro rerum venalium, in usu commerciorum fraus plectitur, potestne irreprehensibilis videri inter officia 124 virtutum? Clamabat Salomon: Pondus magnum et exiguum, et mensurae duplices immundae sunt coram Domino (Prov. XX, 10). Supra quoque ait: Statera adultera, abominatio est Domino, pondus autem aequum acceptabile est illi (Prov. XI, 1).

CAPUT X.

De fraude in omni contractu fugienda non solum in politico jure cautum esse, verum etiam in sacris litteris, ut Josue ac Gabaonitarum patet exemplo.

66. In omnibus igitur decora est fides, justitia grata, mensura aequitatis jucunda. Quid autem loquar de contractibus caeteris, ac maxime de coemptione praediorum, vel transactionibus, atque pactis? Nonne formulae sunt, dolum malum abesse: eumque cujus dolus fuerit deprehensus, duplici poenae obnoxium fore? Ubique igitur honestatis praeponderat consideratio, quae dolum excludit, fraudem ejicit? Unde recte generalem David propheta prompsit sententiam dicens: Nec fecit proximo suo malum (Psal. XIV, 3). Non solum itaque in contractibus (in quibus etiam vitia eorum quae veneant, prodi jubentur, ac nisi intimaverit venditor, quamvis in jus emptoris transcripserit, doli actione vacuantur), sed etiam generaliter in omnibus dolus abesse debet: aperienda simplicitas, intimanda veritas est.

67. Veterem autem istam de dolo non jurisperitorum formulam, sed patriarcharum sententiam Scriptura divina evidenter expressit in libro Testamenti veteris, qui Jesu Nave inscribitur. Nam cum exisset fama per populos, siccatum esse mare in Hebraeorum transitu, fluxisse aquam de petra, de coelo diurnam ministrari alimoniam tot populi millibus abundantem; corruisse muros Hierico sacro tubarum sono, ictu et ululatu plebis arietatos; Hethaeorum quoque regem victum, et suspensum in ligno usque ad vesperam: Gabaonitae metuentes validam manum, venerunt cum versutia, simulantes se de terra longinqua esse, diuque peregrinatos dirupisse calceamenta, detrivisse amictus vestium, quarum veterascentium indicia monstrarent; causam autem tanti laboris, emerendae pacis, et ineundae cum Hebraeis esse amicitiae cupiditatem; et coeperunt ab Jesu Nave poscere, ut secum firmaret societatem. Et quia adhuc erat ignarus locorum, atque incolarum inscius, non cognovit fraudes eorum, neque Deum interrogavit: sed cito credidit. 68. Adeo sancta erat illis temporibus fides eorum, ut fallere aliquos posse non crederetur. Quis hoc reprehendat in sanctis, qui caeteros de suo affectu aestimant; et quia ipsis amica est veritas, mentiri neminem putant, fallere quid sit 125 ignorant: libenter credunt quod ipsi sunt, nec possunt suspectum habere quod non sunt. Hinc Salomon ait: Innocens credit omni verbo (Prov. XIV, 15; 22, q. 4, c. Innocens). Non vituperanda facilitas, sed laudanda bonitas. Hoc est innocentem esse ignorare quod noceat: et si circumscribitur ab aliquo; de omnibus tamen bene judicat, qui fidem esse in omnibus arbitratur. 69. Hac igitur mentis suae devotione inclinatus ut crederet, testamentum disposuit, pacem dedit, confirmavit societatem. Sed ubi in terras eorum ventum est, deprehensa fraude, quod cum essent finitimi, advenas se esse simulaverant, circumscriptum sese populus patrum indignari coepit. Jesus tamen pacem quam dederat, revocandam non censuit; quia firmata erat sacramenti religione; ne dum alienam perfidiam arguit, suam fidem solveret. Mulctavit tamen eos vilioris obsequio ministerii. Clementior sententia, sed diuturnior; manet enim officiis poena veteris astutiae, haereditario in hunc diem ministerio deputata (Josue IX, 15 et seq.).

CAPUT XI.

INDUCTIS PER RETICENTIAM rhetoricam fraudum quarumdam exemplis, eas atque alias omnes apertius in Scriptura damnari ostenditur.

70. Non ego in haereditatibus adeundis digitorum percussiones, et nudi successoris saltationes notabo; nam haec etiam vulgo notabilia: non simulatae piscationis compositas copias, ut emptoris illiceretur affectus. Cur enim tam studiosus luxuriae ac deliciarum repertus est, ut hujusmodi fraudem pateretur? 71. Quid mihi tractare de Syracusano illo amoeno secretoque secessu, et de Siculi hominis ealliditate: qui cum peregrinum aliquem reperisset, cognito quod cupidus esset hortorum venalium, ad coenam in hortos rogaverit: promisisse invitatum, postridie venisse: offendisse illic magnam piscatorum multitudinem, exquisitis copiis adornatum convivium, in prospectu coenantium ante hortulos compositos piscatores, ubi numquam ante jaciebant retia: unusquisque quod ceperat, certatim offerebat epulantibus: supra mensam pisces ingerebantur, oculos recumbentium resilientes verberabant. Mirari hospes tantam copiam piscium, tantumque numerum cymbarum. Responsum quaerenti, aquationem illic esse, dulcis aquae gratia innumerabiles eo pisces convenire. Quid multa? Pellexit hospitem, ut sibi extorqueret hortos: vendere volens cogitur, pretium gravatus suscipit. 72. Sequenti die ad hortos emptor cum amicis venit, navigium nullum invenit. Percontanti num aliqua piscatoribus eo esset die feriarum solemnitas, respondetur nulla, nec umquam illic 126 praeter hesternum diem piscari solitos. Quam hic redarguendi haberet auctoritatem doli, qui tam turpe captarit aucupium deliciarum? Qui enim alterum peccati arguit, ipse a peccato debet alienus esse. Non ergo hujusmodi nugas ego in hanc Ecclesiasticae censionis auctoritatem vocabo, quae generaliter condemnat omnem lucri turpis appetentiam, brevique sermonis compendio excludit levitatem ac versutiam. 73. Nam de illo quid loquar, qui de eo testamento quod ab aliis licet factum, falsum tamen cognoverit, haereditatem sibi aut legatum vindicet, et lucrum quaerat alieno crimine: cum etiam leges publicae eum qui sciens falso utitur, tamquam reum facinoris astringant? Regula autem justitiae manifesta est, quod a vero declinare virum non deceat bonum, nec damno injusto afficere quemquam, nec doli aliquid annectere fraudisve componere. 74. Quid evidentius eo quod Ananias (Act. V, 1 et seq.), qui fraudavit de pretio agri sui, quem ipse vendiderat, et portionem pretii tamquam summae totius numerum ante pedes posuit apostolorum, sicut reus fraudis interiit? Licuit utique illi nihil offerre, et hoc sine fraude fecisset. Sed quia fraudem admiscuit, non liberalitatis gratiam reportavit, sed fallaciae poenam exsolvit. 75. Et Dominus in Evangelio cum dolo accedentes repudiabat, dicens: Vulpes foveas habent (Matth. VIII, 20); quoniam in simplicitate cordis, et innocentia nos jubet vivere. David quoque ait: Sicut novacula acuta fecisti dolum (Psal. LI, 4); nequitiae arguens proditorem, eo quod instrumentum hujusmodi ad hominis adhibetur ornatum, et plerumque ulcerat. Si quis igitur praetendat gratiam, et dolum nectat proditoris exemplo, ut eum quem protegere debeat, prodat ad mortem; instrumenti istius comparatione censetur, quod ebriae mentis et titubantis vitio manus vulnerare consuevit. Sicut iste malitiae ebrius vino, per funestae proditionis indicium Abimelech sacerdoti necem detulit, eo quod Prophetam hospitio recepisset, quem rex invidiae accensus stimulis persequebatur (I Reg. XXII).

CAPUT XII.

NIHIL PROMITTENDUM QUOD sit inhonestum, nec si quid injustum juraveris, id observandum; contra quam peccasse Herodes demonstratur. Culpatur etiam votum a Jephthe nuncupatum, itemque alia omnia quae sibi exsolvi Deus nolit. Denique filia ejusdem Jephthe cum duobus Pythagoraeis componitur ac praeponitur.

76. Purum igitur ac sincerum oportet esse affectum, ut unusquisque (22, q. 4, c. Unusquisque) simplicem sermonem proferat, vas suum in sanctitate possideat, nec fratrem circumscriptione verborum inducat, nihil promittat inhonestum: ac si promiserit, 127 tolerabilius est promissum non facere, quam facere quod turpe sit. 77. Saepe plerique constringunt seipsos jurisjurandi sacramento: et cum ipsi cognoverint promittendum non fuisse; sacramenti tamen contemplatione faciunt quod spoponderunt: sicut de Herode supra scripsimus (Sup. c. 9), qui saltatrici praemium turpiter promisit, crudeliter solvit. Turpe, quod regnum pro saltatione promittitur: crudele, quod mors prophetae pro jurisjurandi religione donatur. Quanto tolerabilius tali fuisset perjurium sacramento? Si tamen perjurium posset dici, quod ebrius inter vina juraverat, quod eviratus inter saltantium choros promiserat. Infertur disco prophetae caput: et hoc aestimatum est fidei esse, quod amentiae fuit. 78. Neque umquam adducar ut credam non incaute principem promisisse Jephthe, ut immolaret Deo quidquid sibi revertenti intra limen domus suae occurreret; cum et ipsum voti poenituerit sui, postquam filia occurrit sibi. Denique conscidit vestimenta sua, et dixit: Heu me! filia mea, impedisti mihi, stimulus doloris facta es mihi (Judic. XI, 35). Qui licet pio metu ac formidine acerbitatem durae solutionis impleverit;

tamen luctum annuum etiam posteris deplorandum statuit ac dereliquit. Dura promissio, acerbior solutio, quam necesse habuit lugere etiam ipse qui fecit. Denique factum est praeceptum et decretum in Israel ex diebus in dies: Ambulabant, inquit, filiae populi Israel, lugentes filiam Jephthe Galaaditidis quatuor diebus in anno (Ibid., 40). Non possum accusare virum qui necesse habuit implere quod voverat; sed tamen miserabilis necessitas, quae solvitur parricidio (22, q. 4, cap. Unusquisque, § Miserabilis). 79. Melius est non vovere, quam vovere id quod sibi cui promittitur, nolit exsolvi. Denique in Isaac habemus exemplum (Gen. XXII, 13), pro quo arietem Dominus statuit immolari sibi. Non semper igitur promissa solvenda omnia sunt (22, q. 4, cap. Non semper). Denique ipse Dominus frequenter suam mutat sententiam, sicut Scriptura indicat. Nam et in eo libro qui inscribitur Numeri, proposuerat percutere morte et perdere populum: sed postea rogatus a Moyse, reconciliatus est populo suo (Num. XVI, 12 et seq.). Et iterum ad Moysen et Aaron ait: Dividite vos de medio Synagogae ejus, et consummabo eos simul (Num. XVI, 21). Quibus discedentibus de coetu, Dathan et Abiron subito impios terra praerupto soluta hiatu absorbuit. 80. Praecellentius et antiquius istud exemplum de filia Jephthe, quam illud quod memorabile habetur apud philosophos de duobus Pythagoraeis quorum alter cum a tyranno Dionysio capitis damnatus esset, praescripto mortis die, poposcit ut domum pergendi ei facultas daretur, quo commendaret suos: ac ne revertendi 128 nutaret fides, vadem mortis obtulit, ea conditione ut si ipse deforet ad constitutum diem, vas ejus sibi pro eo moriendum agnosceret. Nec qualitatem sponsionis qui offerebatur recusavit, constantique animo diem necis praestolabatur. Itaque alter se non subtraxit, alter ad diem recepit. Quod eousque fuit mirabile, ut tyrannus eos sibi in amicitiam adsciscerat, quorum urgebat periculum. 81. Quod ergo in spectatis et eruditis viris plenum miraculi est, hoc in virgine multo magnificentius, multoque illustrius deprehenditur, quae ingemiscenti patri ait: Fac mihi ut exivit de ore tuo (Jud. XI, 36 et seq.). Sed spatium duorum poposcit mensium, ut cum aequalibus conventum ageret in montibus, quae virginitatem ejus praedestinatam neci pio affectu prosequerentur. Nec fletus aequalium movit puellam, nec dolor flexit, nec gemitus retardavit, nec dies praeteriit, nec fefellit hora. Rediit ad patrem, quasi ad votum rediret, et voluntate propria cunctantem impulit, fecitque arbitratu spontaneo, ut quod erat impietatis fortuitum, fieret pietatis sacrificium.

CAPUT XIII.

JUDITHAM CUM MULTA pericula pro honestate subiisset, multiplicem reportasse utilitatem.

82. Ecce tibi Judith se offert mirabilis, quae formidatum populis virum Holophernem adit, Assyriorum triumphali septum caterva. Quem primo formae gratia et vultus decore perculit, deinde sermonis circumscripsit elegantia (Judith X, 12 et seq.). Primus triumphus ejus fuit, quod integrum pudorem de tabernaculo hostis revexit: secundus, quod femina de viro reportavit victoriam, fugavit populos consilio suo (Judith XIII, 20). 83. Horruerunt Persae audaciam ejus. Utique quod in illis Pythagoraeis duobus mirantur, non expavit mortis periculum, sed nec pudoris, quod est gravius bonis feminis: non unius ictum carnificis, sed nec totius exercitus tela trepidavit. Stetit inter cuneos bellatorum femina, inter victricia arma, secura mortis. Quantum ad molem spectat periculi, moritura processit: quantum ad fidem, dimicatura. 84. Honestatem igitur secuta est Judith, et dum eam sequitur, utilitatem invenit. Honestatis enim fuit prohibere ne populus Dei se profanis dederet, ne ritus patrios et sacramenta proderet; ne sacras virgines, viduas graves, pudicas matronas barbaricae subjiceret impuritati; ne obsidionem deditione solveret: honestatis fuit se malle pro omnibus periclitari, ut omnes eximeret periculo (Judith VIII, 10 et seq.). 85. Quanta honestatis auctoritas, ut consilium 129 de summis rebus femina sibi vindicaret, nec principibus populi committeret! Quanta honestatis auctoritas, ut Deum adjutorem praesumeret: quanta gratia, ut inveniret!

CAPUT XIV.

ELISAEI FACTUM QUAM honestum atque utile fuerit. Ejusdem cum decantato Graecorum facinore comparatio. Joannem pro honestate vitam impendisse: nec non Susannam eadem causa se mortis periculo objecisse.

86. Quid vero Elisaeus nisi honestatem secutus est, cum exercitum Syriae, qui ad obsidendum eum venerat, captivum introduxit in Samariam, cujus oculos caecitate obduxerat, et dixit: Domine, aperi oculos eorum, ut videant, et viderunt (IV Reg. VI, 18 et seq.)? Itaque cum rex Israel percutere ingressos vellet, eamque sibi dari a propheta facultatem posceret; respondit non percutiendos, quorum captivitatem non esset manu operatus, armisque bellicis, sed magis subsidio alimentorum juvandos. Denique epularibus refecti copiis, numquam postea in terram Israel piratae Syriae revertendum putarunt. 87. Quanto hoc sublimius, quam illud Graecorum quod cum duo populi adversum se de gloria imperioque decertarent, et alter ex his haberet copiam quemadmodum naves alterius populi clanculo exureret, turpe credidit: maluitque minus posse honeste, quam plus turpiter. Et isti quidem sine flagitio hoc facere nequibant, ut eos qui consummandi belli Persici gratia in societatem convenerant, hac fraude deciperent; quam licet possent negare, non possent tamen non erubescere: Elisaeus autem non fraude, deceptos licet, sed potestate Domini percussos, maluit tamen servare quam perdere; quia decorum foret hosti parcere, et adversario donare vitam, quam potuisset auferre nisi pepercisset. 88. Liquet igitur id quod decorum est, semper esse utile. Nam et Judith sancta decoro contemptu propriae salutis solvit obsidionis periculum, et publicam honestate propria acquisivit utilitatem: et Elisaeus gloriosius ignovit, quam perculit: et utilius reservavit hostes quos ceperat. 89. Quid autem aliud Joannes nisi honestatem consideravit? ut inhonestas nuptias etiam in rege non posset perpeti, dicens: Non licet tibi illam uxorem habere (Marc. XIV, 4). Potuit tacere, nisi indecorum sibi judicasset mortis metu verum non dicere, inclinare regi propheticam auctoritatem, adulationem subtexere. Sciebat utique moriturum se esse, quia regi adversabatur: sed honestatem saluti praetulit. Et tamen quid utilius quam quod passionis viro sancto advexit gloriam? 90. Sancta quoque Susanna denuntiato falsi testimonii terrore, cum hinc se videret urgeri 130 periculo, inde opprobrio, maluit honesta morte vitare opprobrium, quam studio salutis turpem vitam subire ac sustinere. Itaque dum honestati intendit, etiam vitam reservavit: quae si id quod sibi videbatur ad vitam utile praeoptavisset, non tantam reportasset gloriam: immo etiam id quod non solum inutile, sed etiam periculosum foret, poenam criminis forsitan non evasisset (Dan. XIII). Advertimus igitur quia id quod turpe est, non possit esse utile: neque rursus id quod honestum est, inutile; quia complex honestatis est semper utilitas, et utilitatis honestas.

CAPUT XV.

RELATO ROMANORUM GENEROSO consilio, maximam fuisse Moysi honestatis curam, ex ejus factis declaratur.

91. Memorabile ferunt rhetores, quod dux Romanorum cum ad eum adversarii regis medicus venisset, pollicens daturum se regi venenum, vinctum eum ad hostem remiserit. Et revera praeclarum, ut qui virtutis certamen susceperat nollet fraude vincere. Non enim in victoria honestatem ponebat, sed ipsam, nisi honestate quaesitam, victoriam turpem pronuntiabat. 92. Redeamus ad nostrum Moysen, atque ad superiora revertamur; ut quanto praestantiora, tanto antiquiora promamus. Nolebat Aegypti rex populum dimittere patrum. Dixit Moyses sacerdoti Aaron, ut extenderet virgam suam super omnes aquas Aegypti. Extendit Aaron, et conversa est aqua fluminis in sanguinem, et nemo poterat bibere aquam, omnesque Aegyptii siti peribant: sincera autem fluenta patribus abundabant (Exod. VII, 20). Jactaverunt favillam in coelum, et facta sunt ulcera, et vesicae candentes in hominibus et quadrupedibus (Exod. IX, 10 et seq.). Deduxerunt grandinem in igne flammeo, contrita erant super terram omnia. Rogavit Moyses, et universa in suam gratiam reverterunt: grando sedata est, sanata ulcera, solitos potus flumina praebuerunt (Ibid. 30). 93. Iterum caligantibus tenebris operta erat terra per triduum, ex quo Moyses manum levaverat, et tenebras infuderat (Exod. X, 22). Moriebatur omne primogenitum Aegypti, cum Hebraeorum omnis esset inoffensa progenies. Rogatus Moyses, ut his quoque finem exitiis daret, oravit et impetravit (Exod. XII, 29 et seq.). In illo praedicandum, quod a fraudis consortio temperaverit: in hoc mirabile quoniam divinitus intentata supplicia virtute propria etiam ab hoste detorserit, vere nimium, sicut scriptum est, mansuetus et mitis. Sciebat quod fidem rex non servaret promissis; tamen honestum putabat ut rogatus oraret, laesus benediceret, appetitus remitteret (Num. XII, 3). 94. Projecit virgam, et serpens factus est, qui devoravit serpentes Aegyptiorum (Exod. VII, 12): significans quod Verbum caro fieret, quae serpentis diri venena 131 vacuaret per remissionem et indulgentiam peccatorum. Virga est enim Verbum directum, regale, plenum potestatis, insigne imperii. Virga serpens facta est, quoniam qui erat Filius Dei ex Deo Patre natus, Filius hominis factus est, natus ex Virgine: qui quasi serpens exaltatus in cruce, medicinam vulneribus infudit humanis. Unde et ipse Dominus ait: Sicut Moyses exaltavit serpentem in deserto, ita exaltari oportet Filium hominis (Joan. III, 14). 95. Denique et alterum signum ad Dominum Jesum pertinet, quod fecit Moyses: Manum suam misit in sinum, et protulit eam, et facta est manus ejus sicut nix. Iterum misit, et protulit eam, et erat sicut carnis humanae species (Exod. IV, 6, 7); significans Domini Jesu primum fulgorem Divinitatis, postea susceptionem carnis, in qua fide credere omnes gentes populosque oporteret. Merito manum misit, quia dextera Dei Christus est, in cujus divinitate et incarnatione si quis non crediderit, quasi reprobus flagellatur: sicut iste rex qui quoniam signis non credidit evidentibus, postea flagellatus orabat, ut veniam mereretur. Quantus igitur honestatis affectus esse debeat, ex his probatur, et eo maxime quod se objiciebat pro populo, dicens ut remitteret populo Deus, aut certe de libro viventium se deleret.

CAPUT XVI.

PAUCIS DE TOBIA injectis, Raguelem honestate philosophis antecelluisse evincitur.

96. Tobis quoque formam expressit honestatis evidentius, cum relicto convivio mortuos sepeliret, et ad cibos pauperis mensae invitaret inopes (Tobiae II, 2 et seq.). Raguel praecipue, qui contemplatione honestatis, cum rogaretur ut filiam suam in conjugium daret, vitia quoque filiae non tacebat; ne circumvenire petitorem videretur tacendo. Itaque cum Tobis filius Tobis posceret ut sibi daretur puella, respondit lege quidem ipsi eam deberi tamquam propinquo, sed dedisse se eam jam sex viris, et omnes eos esse mortuos. Justus itaque vir plus alienis timebat, et malebat innuptam sibi manere filiam, quam propter nuptias ejus extraneos periclitari (Tobiae VII, 13 et seq.). 97. Quam breviter absolvit omnes quaestiones philosophorum. Illi de vitiis tractant domorum, tegenda an prodenda a venditore videantur: noster iste nec filiae vitia celanda arbitratus est. Et certe non ipse affectabat ut eam traderet, sed rogabatur. Quanto utique iste honestior sit illis, dubitare non possumus, si conferamus quanto praestantior sit filiae causa, quam rei venalis pecunia. 132

CAPUT XVII.

QUANTO HONESTATIS STUDIO antiqui patres in captivitatem abituri, sacrum ignem occuluerint.

98. Consideremus aliud quod in captivitate gestum, summum tenuit honestatis decorem. Nullis enim adversis honestas impeditur, quae in his eminet, et magis praecellit quam in prosperis. Inter vincula itaque, inter arma, flammas, servitutem, quae liberis omni supplicio gravior est, inter poenas morientium, excidia patriae, vivorum formidinem, sanguinem peremptorum, non excidit tamen cura honestatis majoribus nostris: sed inter eversae patriae cineres et favillas in affectibus piis resplenduit et refulsit. 99. Nam cum in Persidem ducerentur patres nostri, qui tunc Dei omnipotentis cultores erant, acceptum ignem de altari sacerdotes Domini occulte in valle absconderunt. Erat illic velut patens puteus, aquae secessu infrequens, nec populari usui patens, ignoto et ab arbitris remoto loco: ibi obsignaverunt indicio sacro pariter ac silentio ignem reconditum (II Mach. I, 19 et seq.). Non illis studio fuit aurum defodere, argentum abscondere, quod servarent posteris suis: sed inter extrema sua honestatis curam habentes, sacrum ignem servandum putarunt; ne eum vel impuri contaminarent, vel defunctorum sanguis exstingueret, vel deformium ruinarum acervus aboleret. 100. Abierunt itaque in Persidem sola religione liberi; quoniam sola illis per captivitatem extorqueri nequivit. Post vero plurimum temporis, quando placuit Deo, dedit hanc mentem regi Persarum, ut restaurari in Judea templum, et legitimos reparari Hierosolymis ritus juberet. Cujus gratia muneris Neemiam sacerdotem rex Persarum direxit. At ille secum deduxit sacerdotum illorum nepotes, qui profecturi de patrio solo, sacrum ne periret ignem absconderant. Venientes autem, ut patrum sermone est proditum, non invenerunt ignem, sed aquam. Et cum deesset ignis, quo adolerent altaria, haurire eos aquam Neemias sacerdos, sibique deferre, et aspergere super ligna jussit. Tunc, visu mirabile! cum esset coelum intextum nubibus, sol repente illuxit, accensus est magnus ignis; ita ut omnes in tam evidenti Domini gratia factum stupentes, laetitia perfunderentur. Orabat Neemias, psallebant sacerdotes hymnum Deo. Utque consumptum est sacrificium, jussit iterum Neemias residua aqua majores perfundi lapides: quo facto flamma accensa est, lumen autem refulgens ab altari consummatum illico est. 101. Hoc patefacto indicio, rex Persarum eo loco in quo ignis fuerat absconditus, et postea reperta est aqua, templum fieri mandavit, cui 133 inferebantur dona plurima. Appellaverunt autem illud qui erant cum sancto Neemia, ephthar, quod interpretationem habet purificationis: a plurimis nephthe vocatur. Invenitur autem in descriptionibus Hieremiae prophetae, quod jusserit accipere de igne eos qui postea essent futuri. Hic est ignis qui cecidit super sacrificium Moysi, et consumpsit illud, sicut scriptum est: Quia exivit ignis a Domino, et consumpsit universa quae erant super altare holocausta (Levit. IX, 24). Hoc igne oportebat sanctificari sacrificium; ideoque et in filios Aaron qui alienum ignem inferre voluerunt, exivit iterum ignis a Domino et consumpsit eos, ita ut mortui extra castra projicerentur (Levit. X, 1 et seq.). 101*. Veniens autem Hieremias in locum, invenit domum in modum speluncae, et tabernaculum et arcam, et altare incensi intulit illuc, et obstruxit ostium: quod cum hi qui simul venerant, curiosius perscrutarentur, ut notarent sibi locum; nequaquam comprehendere atque invenire potuerunt. Ut autem cognovit Hieremias quod affectassent, dixit: Ignotus erit locus, donec congreget Deus congregationem populi, et propitius fiat. Tunc Deus ostendet haec, et apparebit majestas Domini (II Mach. II, 5 et seq.).

CAPUT XVIII.

SUPERIORIS EVENTUS, AC potissimum oblati a Neemia sacrificii narratione Spiritum sanctum, Christianorumque baptisma significari: et eodem etiam Moysis et Eliae sacrificium, atque historiam Noe referri.

102. Congregationem populi tenemus, propitiationem Domini Dei nostri agnoscimus, quam propitiator in sua operatus est passione. Arbitror quod nec ignem istum possimus ignorare, cum legerimus quia baptizat Dominus Jesus in Spiritu sancto et igni, sicut in Evangelio dixit Joannes (Joan. I, 33). Merito consumebatur sacrificium, quoniam pro peccato erat. Ille autem ignis typus Spiritus sancti fuit, qui descensurus erat post Domini ascensionem, et remissurus peccata omnium: qui quasi ignis inflammat animum ac mentem fidelem. Unde ait Hieremias accepto Spiritu: Et factum est in corde meo ut ignis ardens, flammigerans in ossibus meis: et dissolutus sum undique, et ferre non possum (Jer. XX, 9). Sed etiam in Actibus apostolorum cum descendisset super apostolos Spiritus, et plerosque, qui exspectabant promissa Domini, tamquam ignem dispersas esse linguas legimus. Denique sic vaporabatur singulorum animus, ut musto repleti esse aestimarentur, qui acceperant linguarum diversitatem (Act. II, 4 et seq.). 103. Quid ergo sibi vult esse quod ignis aqua factus est, et aqua ignem excitavit; nisi quia spiritalis gratia per ignem exurit, per aquam mundat peccata nostra? Eluitur enim peccatum, et exuritur. Unde et Apostolus ait: Uniuscujusque 134 opus quale sit, ignis probabit (I Cor. III, 13); et infra: Si cujus opus arserit, detrimentum patietur, ipse autem salvus erit, sic tamen quasi per ignem (Ibid., 15). 104. Quod ideo posuimus, ut probaremus per ignem exuri peccata. Notum est ergo hunc esse vere ignem sacrum, qui tunc in typo futurae remissionis peccatorum descendit super sacrificium. 105. Hic igitur ignis absconditur captivitatis tempore, quo culpa regnat: tempore autem libertatis promitur. Et licet in aquae speciem mutatus, tamen servat ignis naturam, ut consumeret sacrificium. Nec mireris cum legeris, quia Pater Deus dixit: Ego sum ignis consumens (Deut. IV, 24); et alibi: Me dereliquerant fontem aquae vivae (Jerem. II, 13). Ipse quoque Dominus Jesus quasi ignis inflammabat audientium corda (Luc. XII, 49), quasi fons refrigerabat; nam ipse in Evangelio suo dicit quod ideo venerit, ut ignem in terras mitteret, et potum sitientibus aquae vivae ministraret (Joan. VII, 37 et seq.). 106. Eliae quoque tempore descendit ignis, quando provocavit prophetas gentium, ut altare sine igne accenderent. Et cum illi nequissent facere, hostiam suam tertio ipse perfudit aqua, et manabat aqua in circuitu altaris, et exclamavit, et cecidit ignis a Domino de coelo, et consumpsit holocaustum (III Reg. XVIII, 38). 107. Hostia illa tu es. Considera tacitus singula. In te descendit vapor Spiritus sancti, te videtur exurere, cum tua peccata consumit. Denique quod consumptum est sacrificium Moysi tempore, sacrificium pro peccato erat. Unde Moyses ait, sicut in Machabaeorum scriptum est libro (II Mach. II, 11), eo quod non sit manducatum quod erat pro peccato, consumptum est. Nonne tibi consumi videtur, quando in baptismatis sacramento interit homo totus exterior? Vetus homo noster confixus est cruci, Apostolus clamat (Rom. VI, 6). Illic, sicut Patrum exempla te docent, Aegyptius demergitur, Hebraeus resurgit, sancto renovatus Spiritu, qui etiam per mare Rubrum inoffenso transivit vestigio, ubi baptizati sunt patres sub nube, et in mari (I Cor. X, 1 et seq.). 108. In diluvio quoque Noe tempore mortua est omnis caro, justus tamen cum sua progenie servatus est (Gen. VII, 21 et seq.). Annon consumitur homo, cum absolvitur mortale istud a vita? Denique exterior corrumpitur, sed interior renovatur. Nec solum in baptismate, sed etiam in poenitentia fit carnis interitus ad profectum spiritus; sicut Apostolica docemur auctoritate, dicente sancto Paulo: Judicavi ut praesens eum qui sic operatus est, tradere hujusmodi Satanae in interitum carnis, ut spiritus salvus sit in die Domini nostri Jesu Christi (I Cor. V, 3, 4). 109. Prolixior excursus admirandi gratia mysterii factus videtur, dum studemus revelatum plenius sacramentum pandere, quod eo usque plenum honestatis est, ut sit plenum religionis. 135

CAPUT XIX.

NARRATUR ADMISSUM IN levitae cujusdam uxorem a civibus Gabaa flagitium, atque ex illius ultione colligitur quam veteribus illis cordi fuerit honestatis ratio.

110. Quanta autem honestatis cura majoribus fuit, ut unius mulieris injuriam stupro illatam intemperantium bello persequerentur, et victo populo, tribus Benjamin obtestarentur in conjugium se eis proprias filias non daturos! Remanserat tribus sine ullo posteritatis subsidio, nisi fraudis necessariae accepisset licentiam. Quae tamen indulgentia congruo intemperantiae supplicio non videtur vacare, quando illis hoc solum permissum est, ut rapto inirent conjugia, non connubii sacramento. Et revera dignum fuit ut qui alienum contubernium solverant, ipsi nuptiarum amitterent solemnitatem. 111. Quam plena autem miserationis historia! Vir, inquit (Judic. XIX, et seq.), levita acceperat sibi jugalem (quam a concubitu concubinam appellatam arbitror) quae aliquanto post quibusdam, ut fieri solet, offensa rebus, ad patrem se contult, et fuit illic quatuor mensibus. Et surrexit vir ejus, et abiit ad soceri sui domum, ut cum sua jugali repararet gratiam, et revocaret eam, ac reduceret; occurrit ei mulier, atque in domum patris sui introduxit maritum. 112. Laetatus est adolescentulae pater: venit obviam, et sedit cum eo tribus diebus; et epulati sunt, et quieverunt. Et sequenti die surrexit levita diluculo, et retentus est a socero, ut tam cito non desereret convivii jucunditatem. Et alio et tertio die non permisit pater adolescentulae proficisci generum suum, donec laetitia et gratia inter eos omnis consummaretur. Sed die septimo cum jam ad vesperum declinaret dies, post mensas et laeta convivia, cum praetexeret finitimae noctis viciniam, ut apud suos potius, quam apud extraneos requiescendum putaret, nequivit tenere, et dimisit una cum filia sua. 113. Verum ubi facta est aliqua progressio, cum vesper jam propior urgeret, et appropinquatum foret ad urbem Jebusaeorum, dicente servulo, ut ad eam dominus suus deflecteret, non acquievit dominus suus; quia non erat ea civitas filiorum Israel: sed intendit pervenire usque Gabaa, quae habitabatur a populo tribus Benjamin. Nec erat quisquam qui advenientes reciperet hospitio, nisi vir peregrinus progressa aetate. Qui cum aspexisset eos, et interrogasset levitam: Quo vadis, vel unde venis? quo respondente quod esset viator, et repeteret montem Ephraem, et non esset qui colligeret eum, hospitium ei obtulit, et adornavit convivium. 114. At ubi satietas epulandi facta est, et mensae remotae, irruerunt pestilentes viri, et circumierunt domum. Tunc senior filiam suam virginem, 136 et coaequalem ejus cum qua cubitare solita esset, offerebat viris iniquitatis, tantum ne vis irrogaretur hospiti. Verum ubi parum ratio processit, et vis praevaluit, cessit levites jugali sua: et cognoverunt eam, et tota nocte illuserunt ei. Qua atrocitate, vel dolore victa injuriae, ante ostium hospitis, quo vir suus diverterat, projecit se atque exhalavit spiritum, supremo licet vitae munere affectum bonae conjugis servans, ut exsequias saltem sui funeris marito reservaret. 115. Quo cognito (ne multis morer) omnis prope populus Israel in bellum exarsit, dubioque eventu cum anceps maneret praelium, tertia tamen praeliandi vice, traditus est populus Benjamin populo Israel, et divina judicatus sententia, poenas intemperantiae luit. Condemnatus quoque ne quis ei ex numero patrum filiam suam daret in uxorem: idque confirmatum jurisjurandi sacramento est. Sed compuncti quod tam acerbam in fratres tulissent sententiam, ita severitatem ejus temperaverunt, ut orbatas parentibus virgines in conjugium sibi adsciscerent, quorum patres pro delicto perempti forent, vel rapto copulam sociarent; quia pro tam turpis commissi facinore, qui alieni matrimonii jus violaverant, indignos se impetrando exhibuere matrimonio.

Sed ne periret una populo tribus, fraudis indulta est conniventia. 116. Quanta igitur honestatis cura majoribus fuerit, hinc proditur, ut quadraginta millia virorum stringerent gladium adversus fratres suos de tribu Benjamin, dum ulcisci volunt injuriam pudicitiae; quia temeratores castitatis non sufferebantur. Itaque eo bello caesa sunt utrinque sexaginta quinque millia bellatorum, et exustae urbes. Et cum inferior primo fuisset populus Israel, tamen nec adversi metu belli percitus, vindicandae castitatis sequestravit dolorem. Ruebat in praelium, vel sanguine suo parans commissi flagitii diluere notam.

CAPUT XX.

POST SOLUTAM EX Elisaei vaticinio diram Samariae obsidionem, quanta fuerit quatuor leprosis honesti cura, enarratur.

117. Et quid mirum si populo Dei decorum illud atque honestum curae fuit, quando etiam leprosis, sicut in libris Regnorum legimus (IV Reg. VI), honestatis non defuit consideratio? 118. Fames erat magna in Samaria, quia obsederat eam Syrorum exercitus. Rex militares excubias supra murum sollicitus revisebat; interpellavit eum mulier dicens: Persuasit mihi haec mulier ut afferrem filium meum, et attuli, et coximus, et comedimus eum; et promisit ut et ipsa postea filium suum afferret, et carnes illius simul manducaremus: nunc autem filium suum abscondit, et non vult eum afferre. Motus rex quod non solum humanis, sed etiam parricidalibus 137 cadaveribus mulieres pastae viderentur, et tam atrocis calamitatis exemplo percitus, Elisaeo prophetae denuntiavit necem, cujus in potestate fore crederet, ut obsidionem solveret, propulsaret famem: vel quia non permiserat regi ut percuteret Syros, quos caecitate perfuderat. 119. Sedebat Elisaeus cum senioribus in Bethel, et priusquam introiret ad eum regis nuntius, ait ad seniores viros: Si vidistis quoniam filius homicidae illius misit auferre caput meum? Et introivit nuntius, et mandatum regis pertulit, denuntiantis praesens capitis periculum (IV Reg. VI, 32, 33). Cui respondit propheta: Hac hora die crastina mensura similaginis siclo, et duae mensurae hordei siclo in porta Samariae. Et cum missus a rege nuntius non credidisset, dicens: si pluerit Dominus de coelo abundantiam frumenti, nec sic quidem id posset effici; dixit ad eum Elisaeus: Quia non credidisti, oculis tuis videbis, et non manducabis (IV Reg. VII, 1, 2). 120. Et factus est subito in castris Syriae velut quadrigarum sonus, et vox multa equitum, et vox magnae virtutis, atque ingens belli tumultus: et arbitrati sunt Syri quod rex Israel in societatem advocasset praelii regem Aegypti, et regem Amorrhaeorum: et fugerunt diluculo relinquentes tabernacula sua; quoniam verebantur ne improviso adventu novorum opprimerentur hostium, et conjunctis regum viribus non possent resistere. Id incognitum Samariae erat, quoniam victi metu, et fame tabidi, nec praetendere audebant (Ibid. 6, 7). 121. Erant autem leprosi quatuor ad portam civitatis, quibus vita erat supplicium, et mori lucrum; et dixerunt ad se invicem: Ecce nos hic sedemus, et morimur. Si ingredimur urbem, moriemur fame; si manemus hic, nullum subsidium vivendi suppetit nobis: eamus in castra Syriae, aut compendium mortis erit, aut salutis remedium. Perrexerunt itaque, et intraverunt in castra: et ecce omnia nuda hostium. Ingressi tabernacula, primum repertis alimentis fugaverunt famem, deinde auri et argenti quantum potuerunt, diripuerunt. Et cum soli praedae incumberent, disposuerunt tamen nuntiare regi fugisse Syros; quia id honestum arbitrabantur, quam represso indicio fovere fraudis rapinam. 122. Quo indicio egressus est populus, et diripuit castra Syriae, et commeatus hostium abundantiam fecit, annonae vilitatem reddidit secundum propheticum dictum; ut mensura similaginis siclo, et duae mensurae hordei pari pretio constarent. In hac laetitia plebis nuntius ille in quo requiescebat rex, contritus inter exeuntium festinationem et remeantium exsultationem, conculcatus a plebe, mortuus est (IV Reg. VII, 3 seq., 8 seq.). 138

CAPUT XXI.

ESTHER VITAE PERICULO honestatis decus secutam esse, immo et regem barbarum, illata nece viro amicissimo; amicitiam enim honestati semper conjungendam, ut Jonathae atque Alchimelech exempla probant.

123. Quid Esther regina, nonne ut populum suum periculo exueret, quod erat decorum atque honestum, morti se obtulit, nec immitis regis trepidavit furorem (Esther IV, 16)? Ipse quoque rex Persarum ferox, atque tumido corde, tamen decorum judicavit indici insidiarum quae sibi paratae forent, gratiam repraesentare, populumque liberum a servitute eripere, eruere neci, nec parcere ei, qui tam indecora suasisset (Esther VI, 3 et seq.). Denique quem secundum a se, ac praecipuum inter omnes amicos haberet, cruci tradidit, quod dehonestatum se ejus fraudulentis consiliis animadvertisset (Esther VII, 9). 124. Ea enim amicitia probabilis, quae honestatem tuetur, praeferenda sane opibus, honoribus, potestatibus: honestati vero praeferri non solet, sed honestatem sequi. Qualis fuit Jonathae, qui pro pietate nec offensam patris, nec salutis periculum refugiebat (I Reg. XX, 29 et seq.). Qualis fuit Abimelech, qui pro hospitalis gratiae officiis necem potius sui, quam proditionem fugientis amici, subeundam arbitrabatur (I Reg. XXI, 6).

CAPUT XXII.

HONESTATEM AMICI CAUSA non deserendam; si tamen adversus amicum testimonium dicendum fuerit, cautionem adhibendam. Inter amicos quis candor in aperiendo pectore, quae generositas in patiendo, quae in arguendo libertas requiratur? Amicitiam virtutum custodem esse, nec nisi in similium morum hominibus inveniri. Eamdem in corripiendo mitem, atque a propriis commodis alienam esse oportere; et inde quam rari divitibus veri amici! Quanta amicitiae dignitas; quae quo major, eo detestabilior amici perfidia, ut Judae atque amicorum Job exemplis cognoscitur.

125. Nihil igitur praeferendum honestati, quae tamen ne amicitiae studio praetereatur, etiam hoc Scriptura admonet de amicitia. Sunt enim pleraeque philosophorum quaestiones: utrum amici causa quisquam contra patriam sentire necne debeat, ut 3amico obediat? Utrum oporteat ut fidem deserat, dum indulget atque intendit amici commoditatibus?

126. Et Scriptura quidem ait: Clava, et gladius, et sagitta ferrata, sic homo est testimonium dans falsum adversus amicum suum (Prov. XXV, 18). Sed considera quid astruat. Non testimonium reprehendit dictum in amicum, sed falsum testimonium. Quid enim si Dei causa, quid si patriae cogatur aliquis dicere testimonium? Numquid praeponderare debet amicitia religioni, praeponderare charitati civium? 139 In his tamen ipsis rebus requirenda est veritas testimonii; ne amicus appetatur amici perfidia, cujus fide absolvi debeat. Amicus itaque neque noxio gratificari debet, neque innocenti insidiari. 127. Sane si necesse sit dicere testimonium, si quid in amico vitii cognoverit, corripere occulte; si non audierit, corripere palam. Sunt enim bonae correptiones, et plerumque meliores quam tacita amicitia.

Et si laedi se putat amicus, tu tamen corripe; et si amaritudo correctionis animum ejus vulneret, tu tamen corripe, ne verearis: Tolerabilia sunt enim amici vulnera, quam adulantium oscula (Prov. XXVII, 6). Errantem igitur amicum corripe, innocentem amicum ne deseras. Constans enim debet esse amicitia, perseverare in affectu; non puerili modo amicos mutare vaga quadam debemus sententia. 128. Aperi pectus tuum amico, ut fidelis sit tibi et capias ex eo vitae tua jucunditatem. Fidelis enim amicus medicamentum est vitae, et immortalitatis gratia (Eccli. VI, 16), Defer amico ut aequali, nec te pudeat ut praevenias amicum officio; amicitia enim nescit superbiam. Ideo enim Sapiens dicit: Amicum salutare non erubescas (Eccli. XXII, 31). Nec deseras amicum in necessitate, nec derelinquas eum, neque destituas; quoniam amicitia vitae adjumentum est. Ideo onera nostra portemus, sicut Apostolus docuit (Galat. VI, 2); dicit enim his quos ejusdem corporis complexa est charitas. Etenim si amici secundae res amicos adjuvant, cur non et in adversis amici rebus amicorum adjumentum suppetat? Juvemus consilio, conferamus studia, compatiamur affectu. 129. Si necesse est, toleremus propter amicum etiam aspera. Plerumque inimicitiae subeundae sunt propter amici innocentiam, saepe obtrectationes, si restiteris vel responderis, cum amicus arguitur et accusatur. Nec te poeniteat ejusmodi offensionis; justi enim vox est: Etsi mala mihi evenerint propter amicum, sustineo (Eccli. XXII, 31). In adversis enim amicus probatur; nam in prosperis amici omnes videntur. Sed ut in adversis amici patientia et tolerantia necessaria, sic in prosperis auctoritas congrua est; ut insolentiam extollentis se amici reprimat et redarguat. 130. Quam pulchre in adversis positus Job dicit: Miseremini mei, amici, miseremini (Job. XIX, 21). Non quasi abjecta vox ista est, sed quasi censoria. Nam cum injuste argueretur ab amicis, respondit: Miseremini mei, amici; hoc est, misericordiam debetis facere: opprimitis autem vos et impugnatis hominem, cujus aerumnis compati 140 pro amicitia vos oportebat. 131. Servate igitur, filii, initam cum fratribus amicitiam, qua nihil est in rebus humanis pulchrius. Solatium quippe vitae hujus est, ut habeas cui pectus aperias tuum, cum quo arcana participes, cui committas secretum pectoris tui; ut colloces tibi fidelem virum, qui in prosperis gratuletur tibi, in tristibus compatiatur, in persecutionibus adhortetur. Quam boni amici Hebraei pueri, quos a sui amore nec fornacis ardentis flamma divisit (Dan. III, 16 et seq.)! De quo supra diximus (Supr. c. 9). Bene ait sanctus David: Saul et Jonathas speciosi et charissimi, inseparabiles in vita sua, et in morte non sunt separati (II Reg. I, 23). 132. Hic est amicitiae fructus, ut non fides propter amicitiam destruatur. Non potest enim homini amicus esse, qui Deo fuerit infidus. Pietatis custos amicitia est, et aequalitatis magistra; ut superior inferiori se exhibeat aequalem, inferior superiori. Inter dispares enim mores non potest esse amicitia; et ideo convenire sibi utriusque debet gratia. Nec auctoritas desit inferiori, si res poposcerit, nec humilitas superiori. Audiat quasi parem, quasi aequalem: et ille quasi amicus moneat, objurget, non jactantiae studio, sed affectu charitatis. 133. Neque monitio aspera sit, neque objurgatio contumeliosa; sicut enim adulationis fugitans amicitia debet esse, ita etiam aliena insolentiae. Quid est enim amicus, nisi consors amoris, ad quem animum tuum adjungas atque applices, et ita misceas, ut unum velis fieri ex duobus, cui te tamquam alteri tibi committas, a quo nihil timeas, nihil ipse commodi tui causa inhonestum petas? Non enim vectigalis amicitia est, sed plena decoris, plena gratiae. Virtus est enim amicitia, non quaestus; quia non pecunia paritur, sed gratia: nec licitatione pretiorum, sed concertatione benevolentiae. 134. Denique meliores amicitiae sunt inopum plerumque quam divitum: et frequenter divites sine amicis sunt, quibus abundant pauperes. Non est enim vera amicitia, ubi est fallax adulatio. Divitibus itaque plerique assentatorie gratificantur: erga pauperem nemo simulator est. Verum est quidquid defertur pauperi, hujus amicitia invidia vacat. 135. Quid amicitia pretiosius, quae angelis communis et hominibus est? Unde et Dominus Jesus dicit: Facite vobis amicos de iniquo mammona, qui recipiant vos in aeterna tabernacula sua (Luc. XVI, 9). Ipse nos Deus amicos ex servulis facit, sicut ipse 141 ait: Jam vos amici mei estis, si feceritis quae ego praecipio vobis (Joan. XV, 14). Dedit formam amicitiae quam sequamur, ut faciamus amici voluntatem, utaperiamus secreta nostra amico quaecumque in pectore habemus, et illius arcana non ignoremus. Ostendamus illi nos pectus nostrum, et ille nobis aperiat suum. Ideo, inquit, vos dixi amicos, quia omnia quaecumque audivi a Patre meo, nota feci vobis (Joan. XV, 14). Nihil ergo occultat amicus, si verus est: effundit animum suum, sicut effundebat mysteria Patris Dominus Jesus. 136. Ergo qui facit mandata Dei, amicus est; et hoc honoratur nomine. Qui est unanimis, ipse amicus est: quod unitas animorum in amicis sit: neque quisquam detestabilior, quam qui amicitiam laeserit. Unde in proditore Dominus hoc gravissimum invenit, quod ejus condemnaret perfidiam, quod gratiae vicem non repraesentaverit, et conviviis amicitiae venenum malitiae miscuerit. Itaque sic ait: Tu vero homo unanimis, dux meus et notus meus, qui semper mecum dulces capiebas cibos (Psal. LIV, 14)! Hoc est, non potest sustineri istud, quia unanimis appetisti eum, qui tibi donaverat gratiam: Nam si inimicus meus maledixisset mihi, sustinuissem utique (Ibid., 13); et ab eo 142 qui me oderat, absconderem me. Inimicus vitari potest, amicus non potest, si insidiari velit. Illum cavemus cui non committimus consilia nostra: hunc cavere non possumus, cui commisimus. Itaque ad acervandam peccati invidiam non dixit: Tu vero servus meus, apostolus meus; sed: Unanimis meus; hoc est, non meus, sed etiam tuus proditor es, qui unanimem prodidisti. 137. Dominus ipse cum a tribus regibus offensus esset, qui sancto Job non detulissent, ignoscere his per amicum maluit, ut amicitiae suffragium remissio fieret peccatorum. Itaque rogavit Job, et Dominus ignovit. Profuit illis amicitia, quibus obfuerat insolentia (Job, XLII, 7 et seq.).

CONCLUSIO.

138. Haec apud vos deposui, filii, quae custodiatis in animis vestris: quae utrum aliquid profectus habeant, vos probabitis; interim copiam multam exemplorum offerunt: nam prope omnia Majorum exempla, plurima quoque dicta his tribus inclusa libris tenentur; ut et si sermo nihil deferat gratiae, series tamen vetustatis quodam compendio expressa plurimum instructionis conferat.

PROLOGUS.

In Gedeonis electione Dominicae incarnationis figuram fuisse: in haedi sacrificio peccatorum per Christi corpus expiandorum: in vituli, profanorum sacrorum abolendorum: in trecentis denique militibus futurae per crucem redemptionis. Quod plura petierit signa idem Gedeon, mysterii fuisse; per velleris enim siccitatem ac madefactionem, Judaeorum infidelitatem, gentiumque vocationem significatas: per rorem autem pelvi exceptum pedum apostolorum ablutionem. Hac sibi pedum mundari sordes orat Ambrosius, simulque Christi benignitatem laudat. Quam utile sit hanc imitari! Eamdem aquam a Dei Filio missam in orbe mirabiles conversiones operari: sed ab alio mitti non posse, cum sit effusio Spiritus Sancti, qui alienae potestati non subjicitur. 1. Hierobaal cum sub arbore, ut legimus (Judic. VI, 11), quercu, tritici messem virga caederet, accepit oraculum, ut a potestate alienigenarum in libertatem Dei populum vindicaret. Nec mirum si est electus ad gratiam, cum sub umbra jam tum sacrae crucis et venerabilis sapientiae praedestinato incarnationis futurae mysterio constitutus, feracis segetis sensibilia de latibulis frumenta produceret, electionemque sanctorum a purgamentis inanis paleae sequestraret: qui tamquam virga veritatis exerciti, superflua veteris hominis cum ejus actibus deponentes, quasi in torculari, ita in Ecclesia congregantur; Ecclesia enim torcular est fontis aeterni, in qua coelestis vitis fructus exundat.

2. Quo motus oraculo Gedeon, cum audisset quod deficientibus licet populorum millibus, in uno viro Dominus plebem suam ab hostibus 600 liberaret (Ibid., 14); obtulit haedum caprarum, cujus carnem, secundum praeceptum angeli, et azyma supra petram posuit et ea jure perfudit: quae simul ut virgae cacumine, quam gerebat angelus, Dei contigit, de petra ignis erupit; atque ita sacrificium quod offerebatur, absumptum est (Ibid., 19 et seq.). Quo indicio declaratum videtur quod petra illa typum habuerit corporis Christi; quia scriptum est: Bibebant de consequenti eos petra, petra autem erat Christus (I Cor. X, 4). Quod utique non ad divinitatem ejus, sed ad carnem relatum est, quae sitientium corda populorum perenni rivo sui sanguinis inundavit. 3. Jam tunc igitur in mysterio declaratum est, quia Dominus Jesus in carne sua totius mundi peccata crucifixus aboleret: nec solum delicta factorum, sed etiam cupiditates animorum. Caro enim haedi ad culpam facti refertur; jus ad illecebras cupiditatum, sicut scriptum est: Quia concupivit populus cupiditatem pessimam, et dixerunt: Quis nos cibabit carne (Num. XI, 4)? Quod igitur extendit angelus virgam, et tetigit petram, de qua ignis exivit (Judic. VI, 21); ostendit quod caro Domini Spiritu repleta divino, peccata omnia humanae conditionis exureret. Unde et Dominus ait: Ignem veni mittere in terram (Luc. XII, 49). 4. Advertit igitur vir doctus et praesagus futuri superna mysteria; et ideo secundum oracula occidit vitulum a patre suo idolis deputatum, et ipse septennem alium vitulum immolavit Deo (Judic. VI, 25). Quo facto manifestissime revelavit post adventum Domini omnia gentilitatis abolenda sacrificia, solumque sacrificium Deo Dominicae passionis pro redemptione populi deferendum. Etenim vitulus ille erat in typo Christus, in quo septem spiritalium plenitudo virtutum, sicut Esaias dixit (Esai. I, 2), habitabat. Hunc vitulum et Abraham obtulit, quando diem Domini vidit, et gavisus est (Joan. VIII, 56). Hic est qui nunc in haedi typo, 601 nunc in ovis, nunc in vituli offerebatur. Haedi, quod sacrificium pro delictis sit; ovis, quod voluntaria hostia: vituli, quod immaculata sit victima. 5. Praevidit ergo mysterium sanctus Gedeon. Denique trecentos elegit ad praelium (Judic. VII, 6); ut ostenderet non in numero multitudinis, sed in sacramento crucis mundum ab incursu graviorum hostium liberandum. Et tamen licet fortis et fidus, pleniora adhuc de Domino futurae victoriae documenta quaerebat, dicens: Si salvas in manu mea Israel, quemadmodum locutus es, Domine; ecce ego pono lanae vellus in area: et si ros factus fuerit super vellus, et super omnem terram siccitas, cognoscam quia in manu mea secundum promissa tua populum liberabis. Et ita factum est (Judic. VI, 36 et seq.). Sed adjecit postea, ut rursum ros proflueret super totam terram, et siccitas esset in vellere. 6. Quaerit fortasse aliquis utrumnam quasi incredulus esse videatur, qui frequentibus informatus indiciis adhuc plura poscebat? Sed quemadmodum potest videri quasi ambiguus incertusque tentasse, qui mysteria loquebatur? Non ergo ille ambiguus, sed providus, ne nos ambigeremus. Nam quomodo ille ambiguus, cujus precatio habebat effectum? Unde autem securus adorsus esset praelium, nisi intellexisset oraculum: ros enim in vellere fides erat in Judaea; quia, sicut ros, Dei verba descendunt (Deut. XXXII, 2). 7. Ergo quando totus orbis infructuoso aestu gentilis superstitionis arebat, tunc erat ros ille coelestis visitationis in vellere. Postea vero quam oves quae (Matth. XV, 24) perierunt domus Israel (unde puto figuram Judaici velleris adumbratam), oves, inquam, illae fontem aquae vivae negarunt (Jerem. II, 13), ros fidei humentis exaruit in pectoribus Judaeorum, meatusque suos fons ille divinus in corda gentium derivavit (Esai. III, 2). Inde est quod nunc fidei rore totus orbis humescit: at vero Judaei prophetas suos et consiliarios perd i derunt. 8. Nec mirum si perfidiae subeant siccitatem, quos Dominus Deus prophetici imbris ubertate privavit, dicens: Mandabo nubibus meis ne pluant super vineam istam (Esai. V, 6). Est enim propheticae nubis pluvia salutaris, sicut et David dixit: Descendit sicut pluvia in vellus, et sicut stillicidia stillantia super terram (Psal. LXXI, 6). Hanc nobis Scripturae divinae totius mundi pluviam pollicebantur, quae rigaret orbem sub Domini Salvatoris adventu Spiritus rore divini. Venit ergo jam Dominus, venit et pluvia, venit Dominus stillicidia secum coelestia deferens; et ideo jam nos bibimus, qui ante sitiebamus, et divinum illum Spiritum haustu interiore potamus. 9. Hoc ergo praevidit sanctus Gedeon, quia verum et spiritalem rorem etiam gentium nationes erant fidei perceptione bibiturae, et ideo diligentius exploravit; est enim necessaria cautela sanctorum. Siquidem etiam Jesus Nave cum vidisset ducem militiae coelestis, interrogavit: Noster es, an adversariorum (Jos. V, 13)? ne forte aliquibus 602 adversarii praestigiis falleretur. 10. Non tamen otiose quod vellus non vel in campo posuit, vel in prato: sed posuit in area, ubi messis est tritici: Messis enim multa, operarii autem pauci (Luc. X, 12); eo quod per fidem Domini futura esset messis fecunda virtutum. 11. Nec illud otiose quod exsiccavit vellus Judaicum, et rorem ejus misit in pelvim, ut repleretur aqua, non tamen ipse eo rore pedes lavit (Judic. VI, 39, 40). Alii debebatur tanti praerogativa mysterii. Exspectabatur ille qui sordes omnium solus posset abluere. Non erat tantus Gedeon, qui hoc sibi mysterium vindicaret. Non enim Gedeon, sed Filius hominis venit non ministrari, sed ministrare (Matth. XX, 28). Itaque cognoscamus in quo haec mysteria videantur esse completa. Non in sancto Hierobaal; adhuc enim erant illa principia. Ideo gentes victae, quia siccitas erat adhuc in gentibus: ideo Israel vicit, quia ros tunc manebat in vellere. 12. Veniamus ad Dei Evangelium. Invenio Dominum spoliantem se vestimenta, et praecingentem se linteo, mittentem aquam in pelvim, lavantem pedes discipulorum (Joan. XIII, 4 et seq.). Haec erat aqua ros ille coelestis, hoc prophetabatur quod illo rore coelesti discipulorum suorum Dominus Jesus pedes lavaret. Et nunc extendantur pedes animorum nostrorum. Vult Dominus Jesus et nostros lavare pedes; non enim Petro soli, sed unicuique dicit fideli: Nisi lavero tibi pedes, non habebis mecum partem (Ibid., 8).

13. Veni ergo, Domine Jesu, exue te vestimenta, quae propter me induisti: esto nudus, ut nos misericordia tua vestias. Praecinge te propter nos linteo, ut nos tui muneris immortalitate praecingas. Mitte aquam in pelvim: lava non solum pedes, sed etiam caput: nec solum corporis nostri, sed etiam mentis vestigia. Volo exuere omnes nostrae sordes fragilitatis; ut et ego dicam: Nocte exui tunicam meam, quomodo induam eam? Lavi pedes meos, quomodo inquinabo illos (Cant. V, 3)? 14. Quanta ista majestas est! Quasi minister pedes famulorum tuorum lavas, quasi Deus rorem mittis e coelo. Nec solum pedes lavas, sed etiam ut tecum recumbamus invitas, et exemplo nos tuae dignationis hortaris dicens: Vocatis me dominum et magistrum, et bene facitis; sum etenim. Si ergo ego lavi pedes vestros dominus et magister, et vos invicem lavate pedes vestros (Joan. XIII, 13, 14). 15. Volo ergo et ego pedes lavare fratrum meorum, volo Domini implere mandatum, volo in me non verecundari, non dedignari quod ipse prius fecit. Bonum mysterium humilitatis; quia dum alienas sordes lavo, meas abluo. Sed non hoc omnes haurire poterant mysterium. Lavare voluit quidem et Abraham pedes, sed hospitalitatis affectu (Gen. XVIII, 4). Volebat et Gedeon lavare pedes angelo Domini qui apparuit sibi: sed volebat uni, volebat quasi is qui deferret obsequium, non qui donaret consortium. 603 Hoc mysterium magnum est, quod nemo cognovit. Denique Petro dixit: Quod ego facio tu nescis, cognosces postea (Joan. XIII, 7). Hoc, inquam, divinum mysterium est, quod etiam qui laverint, requirent. Non est ergo simplex aqua coelestis mysterii, per quam consequimur, ut partem cum Christo habere mereamur. 16. Est et quaedam aqua quam mittamus in pelvim animae nostrae, aqua de vellere et libro Judicum, aqua de libro Psalmorum (Psal. XXII, 2). Aqua est ros coelestis oraculi. Veniat igitur, Domine Jesu, haec aqua in meam animam, in meam carnem; ut hujus humore pluviae nostrarum convalles mentium atque intimi cordis arva viridescant (Psal. LXXI, 6). Veniant in me stillicidia tua, gratiam immortalitatemque rorantia. Dilue gressus mentis meae, ne iterum peccem. Ablue animi mei calcaneum, ut possim abolere maledictum (Gen. III, 15); ne morsum serpentis interiore pede sentiam, sed, sicut ipse jussisti sequentibus te, ut serpentes et scorpiones illaeso possim calcare vestigio (Luc. X, 19). Redemisti mundum, redime unius animam peccatoris. 17. Haec est specialis tuae praerogativa pietatis, qua totum mundum in singulis redemisti. Elias ad unam missus est viduam (III Reg. XVII, 9), Elisaeus mundavit unum (IV Reg. V, 14): tu nobis, Domine Jesu, hos hodie mille mundasti. Quantos in urbe Roma, quantos Alexandriae, quantos Antiochiae, quantos etiam Constantinopoli! Nam etiam Constantinopolis jam Dei verbum recepit, et evidentia meruit tui documenta judicii. Etenim quamdiu venena Arianorum suis fovebat inclusa visceribus, bellis finitimis inquieta, muros armis circumsonabat hostilibus. Postea vero quam fidei exsules abdicavit, hostem ipsum judicem regum, quem semper timere consueverat, deditum vidit, supplicem recepit, morientem obruit, sepultum possidet. Quantos ergo et Constantinopoli, quantos postremo toto hodie in orbe mundasti!

18. Non mundavit Damasus, non mundavit Petrus, non mundavit Ambrosius, non mundavit Gregorius; nostra enim servitia, sed tua 604 sunt sacramenta. Neque enim humanae opis est divina conferre; sed tuum, Domine, munus et Patris est, qui locutus est per prophetas, dicens: Effundam de Spiritu meo super omnem carnem, et prophetabant filii et filiae eorum (Joel. II, 21). Hic est in typo ros ille coelestis: haec pluvia voluntaria, sicut legimus: Pluviam voluntariam segregans Deus haereditati suae (Psal. LXVII, 18). (Alias cap. I.) Non enim Spiritus sanctus aut potestati alienae est subjectus aut juri; sed suae libertatis arbiter, omnia pro auctoritate propriae voluntatis dividens, sicut legimus (I Cor. XII, 10), singulis prout vult.

CAPUT PRIMUM.

ARGUMENTUM SUUM AGGRESSUS Ambrosius, imperatorem cum propter fidem, tum propter basilicam Ecclesiae restitutam laudat: hinc ubi dixit adversarios, si Spiritum sanctum servire negaverint, quin sit super omnia, diffiteri non posse; addit Spiritum eumdem, cum dixit: Universa serviunt tibi, satis innuisse a creaturis se separari: quod aliis quoque testimoniis astruitur.

19. Non ergo inter omnia, sed super omnia Spiritus sanctus est. Jam enim de eo (quoniam ita plene de Dei Filio, clementissime imperator, instructus es, ut ipse jam doceas) cupientem te et exigentem audire aliquid expressius, non morabor; praesertim cum ita te assertione istiusmodi testificatus sis proxime delectatum, ut basilicam Ecclesiae sine ullo monitore praeceperis reformari.

20. Fidei itaque tuae gratiam, et nostrae praemium jam tenemus; neque enim aliud possumus dicere, nisi sancti Spiritus hanc fuisse gratiam quod ignorantibus omnibus, subito basilicam reddidisti. Spiritus, inquam, sancti hoc munus, hoc opus est, qui a nobis quidem tunc praedicabatur, sed in te operabatur. 21. Nec superioris temporis damna deploro; quandoquidem sequestratio illa basilicae, cujusdam fenoris traxit usuras. Etenim basilicam sequestrasti, ut fidem probares. Implevit igitur propositum suum pietas tua, quae sic sequestraverat, ut probaret; sic probavit, ut redderet. 605 Nec fructum amisi, et judicium teneo, patuitque omnibus in quadam facti discretione discretam tibi numquam fuisse sententiam. Patuit, inquam, omnibus et tuum non fuisse, cum sequestrares: et tuum esse, cum redderes. 22. Primum igitur ab inferioribus inchoemus, ut quasi per gradus quosdam tractatus noster ascendat, quo facilius hi qui fidem non deferunt, vel ratione flectantur. Possunt enim dicere in principio: Nec nos dicimus servire Spiritum. Sed cum dicant servire Christum, quomodo possunt negare de Spiritu? Quod si secundum carnem in servi forma consentiunt Christum fuisse, constat et convenit. Ergo si secundum divinitatem suam Christus non servit, non servit etiam Spiritus. Quod si non servit Spiritus, omnia autem serviunt: super omnia igitur Spiritus est, qui non servit sicut omnia. 23. Nunc idipsum quod diximus, testimoniis astruamus. Principium disputationis est, quia serviunt omnia. Servire autem omnia liquet, quoniam scriptum est: Universa serviunt tibi (Psal. CXVIII, 91). Dixit hoc Spiritus per Prophetam. Non dixit: servimus; sed, serviunt tibi; ut crederes quod a servitio sit ipse exceptus. Ergo cum universa serviant, non serviat Spiritus, utique inter universa non est Spiritus sanctus. 24. Nam si inter omnia dicimus esse Spiritum sanctum, utique cum legerimus quia alta Dei scrutatur Spiritus (I Cor. II, 10), Deum Patrem esse super omnia denegamus. Etenim cum ex Deo Spiritus sit, et Spiritus oris ejus, quomodo possumus inter omnia dicere Spiritum sanctum; cum super omnia Deus sit, cujus est Spiritus, plenae utique perfectionis, perfectaeque virtutis? 25. Ac ne Apostolum arbritentur errasse, accipiant, quem fiduciae hujus sit secutus auctorem. Dominus enim in Evangelio dixit: Cum venerit Paraclitus, quem ego mittam vobis a Patre meo, Spiritum veritatis, qui a Patre procedit; ille testimonium perhibebit de me (Joan. XV, 26). Ergo et a Patre procedit Spiritus sanctus, et testificatur de Filio. Testificatur etaim de Patre testis et fidelis et verus: quo nihil ad expressionem divinae majestatis est plenius; nihil ad unitatem divinae potestatis evidentius; cum idem noverit Spiritus quod et Filius, qui paternorum testis et consors individuus secretorum est. 26. Exclusit itaque a cognitione Dei societatem et multitudinem creaturae: non excludendo autem Spiritum sanctum, ostendit non esse socium creaturae. Unde et illud quod lecum est in Evangelio: Quia Deum nemo vidit umquam, nisi unigenitus Filius qui est in sinu Patris, ipse enarravit (Joan. I, 18); ad exceptionem pertinet Spiritus sancti. Quomodo enim Deum non vidit, qui scrutatur etiam alta Dei? quomodo Deum non vidit, qui cognovit quae Dei sunt (I Cor. II, 10)? quomodo 606 Deum non vidit, qui ex Deo est? Ergo cum ita positum sit quia Deum nemo vidit umquam, vidit autem Spiritus; utique exceptus est Spiritus. Super omnia igitur est, qui est exceptus ex omnibus.

CAPUT II.

SPIRITUM SANCTUM ESSE inter omnia non probari ex illis verbis: Omnia per ipsum facta sunt; cum factus non sit. Namque alias perinde probaretur Filius, immo etiam Pater numerandus inter omnia. Quod est ejusdem impietatis.

27. Videtur, sancte imperator, plena ratio esse pietatis, sed impiis non videtur. Denique quid moliantur adverte. Solent enim dicere haeretici ideo inter omnia Spiritum sanctum esse numerandum, quia scriptum est de Dei Filio: Omnia per ipsum facta sunt (Joan. I, 3). 28. Quam male confunditur actio, quae non tenet veritatem, et praepostero ordine assertionis involvitur! Hoc enim tunc valeret, ut inter omnia dicerent esse Spiritum sanctum, si factum probarent. Namque omnia per Filium Scriptura dicit esse, quae facta sunt: cum autem factus non doceatur Spiritus sanctus; utique nec inter omnia probari potest, qui neque factus est sicut omnia, nec creatus. Mihi igitur ad utrumque hoc proficit testimonium, ut et super omnia probetur esse, quia factus non est; et quia super omnia est, non videatur factus esse: nec inter ea quae sunt facta, numerandus. 29. Quod si quis, quia omnia facta per Verbum Evangelista posuit, non excipit Spiritum sanctum (quamquam in Joanne locutus Spiritus Dei, Omnia per ipsum facta sunt, dixerit, non omnia facti sumus; cum utique loqui in Evangelistis Spiritum Dei ipse Dominus ostenderit, dicens (Matth. XVI, 20): Non enim vos eritis loquentes, sed Spiritus Patris vestri, qui loquitur in vobis); tamen si quis, ut dixi, hoc loco non excipit Spiritum sanctum, sed inter omnia numerat; nec ibi ergo excipit Dei Filium, ubi Apostolus dixit: Nobis tamen unus Deus Pater ex quo omnia, et nos per illum (I Cor. VIII, 6). Sed ut sciat quia inter omnia non est Filius, legat sequentia; nam cum dicit: Et unus Dominus Jesus, per quem omnia (Ibid.); ab omnibus utique excipit Dei Filium, qui excepit et Patrem. 30. Ejusdem autem impietatis est vel Patri, vel Filio, vel Spiritui sancto derogare. Non enim credit in Patrem, qui non credit in Filium: nec credit in Dei Filium, qui non credit in Spiritum: nec potest sine regula veritatis fides stare. Nam qui negare coeperit unitatem potestatis in Patre et Filio et Spiritu sancto, non potest utique ibi, ubi nulla divisio sit, fidem probare divisam. Ergo quia pietatis unitas est bene credere, etiam unitas impietatis est male credere. 31. Itaque qui putant Spiritum sanctum inter 607 omnia debere numerari, quia omnia legunt facta per Filium, etiam Filium utique inter omnia annumerandum putant, quia legunt: Ex Deo omnia (II Cor. V, 18). Consequenter autem nec Patrem secernunt ab omnibus, qui a creaturis omnibus Filium non secernunt; quoniam sicut ex Patre omnia, ita etiam per Filium omnia. Hoc ipsum in Spiritu praevidens Apostolus, dixit: ne inter omnia posuisse Filium vel impiis videretur, qui audierant dixisse Filium: Pater quod dedit mihi, majus omnibus est (Joan. X, 29).

CAPUT III.

QUOD APOSTOLUS DIXERIT ex Patre per Filium omnia esse, ab eorum consortio Spiritum non secludi; cum quae ad unam referuntur personam, aliis quoque attribuantur. Sic baptizati in nomine Christi simul in Patris ac Spiritus nomine censentur baptizati; si tamen simul in tres personas crediderint: secus autem, nullus erit baptismus. Haec etiam baptismo in Spiritus sancti nuncupatione convenire. Si autem ob eumdem locum Spiritus ab aliis personis separaretur, utique ob alios locos Pater Filio diceretur postponendus. Ab angelis Filium adorari, non a Spiritu; hunc enim testem ejus esse, non ministrum. Cum omnibus anteponitur Filius, intelligendum de creaturis. Dignitatem sancti Spiritus a peccati in eum admissi irremissibilitate probari. Unde sit illa irremissibilitas; et quomodo unus Spiritus.

32. Sed fortasse aliquis dicat, qua ratione cum dixerit hic ex Patre omnia, et per Filium omnia (I Cor. VIII, 6), de Spiritu sancto tacuerit; et hinc cupiat praejudicium comparare. Quod si pergit malitiose interpretari, quam multis inveniet locis praedicatam sancti Spiritus potestatem, in quibus vel de Patre vel de Filio nihil Scriptura expresserit, sed intelligendum reliquerit! 40. Numquid ergo cum gratia Spiritus praedicatur, Dei Patris aut unigeniti Filii denegatur? Non ita, quia sicut Pater in Filio et Filius in Patre, ita etiam diffusa est, inquit, charitas Dei in cordibus nostris per Spiritum sanctum, qui datus est nobis (Rom. V, 5). Et sicut qui benedicitur in Christo, 608 benedicitur in nomine Patris, et Filii et Spiritus sancti; quia unum nomen, potestas una, ita etiam ubi operatio aliqua divina, aut Patris, aut Filii, aut Spiritus designatur, non solum ad sanctum Spiritum, sed etiam ad Patrem refertur et Filium, nec solum ad Patrem, sed etiam ad Filium refertur et Spiritum. 41. Denique Aethiops eunuchus Candacis reginae baptizatus in Christo (Act. VIII, 27), plenum mysterium consecutus est. Et illi qui negaverunt se scire Spiritum sanctum, quamvis baptizatos se dicerent in Joannis baptismo, baptizati sunt postea (Act. XIX, 2 et seq.); quia Joannes in remissionem peccatorum, in advenientis Jesu, non in suo baptizavit nomine. Et ideo Spiritum nesciebant, quia nec baptismum in Christi nomine, sicut Joannes baptizare solebat, acceperant. Joannes enim, licet non baptizaret in Spiritu, tamen et Christum praedicabat et Spiritum. Denique cum interrogaretur, ne forte ipse esset Christus, respondit: Ego vos aqua baptizo, veniet autem fortior me, cujus non sum dignus calceamenta portare: ipse vos baptizabit Spiritu sancto et igni (Joan. I, 26, 27). Ergo isti quia nec in Christi nomine, nec cum fide Spiritus sancti baptizati fuerant, non potuerunt accipere baptismatis sacramentum. 42. Baptizati sunt itaque in nomine Jesu Christi: nec iteratum est in his baptisma, sed novatum; unum enim baptisma (Ephes. IV, 5). Ubi autem non est plenum baptismatis sacramentum, nec principium, vel species aliqua baptismatis aestimatur. Plenum autem est, si Patrem et Filium Spiritumque sanctum fatearis. Si unum neges, totum subrues. Et quemadmodum si unum in sermone comprehendas, aut Patrem, aut Filium, aut Spiritum sanctum; fide autem nec Patrem, nec Filium, nec Spiritum sanctum abneges, plenum est fidei sacramentum: ita etiam quamvis et Patrem, et Filium, et Spiritum dicas, et aut Patris, aut Filii, aut Spiritus sancti minuas potestatem, vacuum est omne mysterium. Denique et illi ipsi qui dixerant: Nec si Spiritus sanctus 609 sit audivimus, baptizati sunt postea in nomine Domini Jesu Christi (Act. XIX, 5). Et hoc abundavit ad gratiam; quia jam Spiritum sanctum, Paulo praedicante, cognoverant. 43. Nec contrarium debet videri, quia quamvis etiam postea tacitum sit de Spiritu, tamen creditum est: et quod verbo tacitum fuerat, expressum est fide. Cum enim dicitur: In nomine Domini nostri Jesu Christi, per unitatem nominis impletum mysterium est: nec a Christi baptismate Spiritus separatur; quia Joannes in poenitentia baptizavit, Christus in Spiritu (Ibid., 4). 44. Nunc consideremus utrum quemadmodum in Christi nomine plenum esse legimus baptismatis sacramentum; ita etiam sancto tantum Spiritu nuncupato, nihil desit ad mysterii plenitudinem. Rationem sequamur; quia qui unum dixerit, Trinitatem signavit. Si Christum dicas, et Deum Patrem a quo unctus est Filius, et ipsum qui unctus est, Filium, et Spiritum sanctum quo unctus est, designasti. Scriptum est enim: Hunc Jesum a Nazareth, quem unxit Deus Spiritu sancto (Act. X, 38). Et si Patrem dicas, et Filium ejus et Spiritum oris ejus pariter indicasti; si tamen id etiam corde comprehendas. Et si Spiritum dicas, et Deum Patrem, a quo procedit Spiritus: et Filium, quia Filii quoque est Spiritus, nuncupasti. 45. Unde et rationi copuletur auctoritas, in Spiritu quoque recte nos baptizari posse Scriptura indicat, dicente Domino: Vos autem baptizabimini in Spiritu sancto (Act. I, 5). Et alibi Apostolus ait: Omnes enim in ipso corpore, in unum Spiritum bapti zati sumus (I Cor. XII, 13). Unum opus, quia unum mysterium: unum baptisma, quia mors una pro mundo: unitas praedicationis quae non potest separari. 46. Quod si hoc loco separatur Spiritus ab operatione Patris et Filii, quia dictum est: Ex Deo omnia, et per Filium omnia (I Cor. VIII, 6); ergo et ubi Apostolus de Christo dicit: Qui est super omnia Deus benedictus in saecula (Rom. IX, 5), non solum eum creaturis omnibus, sed etiam Patri (quod dictu nefas est) praetulit. Sed absit; non enim inter omnia Pater, non inter plebem quamdam creaturarum suarum. Subter creatura omnis, supra divinitas Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti. Illa servit, haec regnat; illa subjacet, ista dominatur: illa opus, haec auctor est operis: illa adorat omnes, haec adoratur ab omnibus. 47. Denique de Filio scriptum est: Et adorent eum omnes angeli Dei (Hebr. I, 6). Non habes: Adoret Spiritus sanctus. Et infra: Ad quem autem angelorum dixit aliquando: Sede ad dexteram meam, donec ponam inimicos tuos scabellum pedum tuorum? Nonne omnes sunt, inquit, ministri spiritus in ministerium, qui mittuntur (Ibid., 13)? Cum dicit, omnes, numquid et Spiritum sanctum comprehendit? Non utique, quia Angeli et caeterae Potestates in ministerium et obsequium Dei Filio, ut serviant, destinantur. 48. At vero Spiritus sanctus non minister, 610 sed testis est Filii, quemadmodum de ipso Filius dixit: Ille testimonium perhibet de me (Joan. XV, 26). Testis est ergo Filii, Spiritus. Qui testis est, novit omnia, sicut Deus Pater testis est. Sic enim habes in posterioribus, quia confirmata est salus nostra, testificante Deo, signis quoque et prodigiis, et variis virtutibus, et Spiritus sancti divisionibus (Hebr. II, 4, 5). Qui dividit quod vult, utique supra omnia, non inter omnia est; dividere enim operatoris gratia, non operis est materies (I Cor. XII, 11). 49. Si supra omnia Filius, per quem initium salus nostra, ut praedicaretur, accepit: utique et Pater Deus, qui testificatur, et asseverat signis et prodigiis de salute nostra, exceptus a cunctis est. Similiter autem et Spiritus qui divisionibus suis nostrae testimonium fert saluti, non est in creaturarum plebe numerandus, sed cum Patre aestimandus et Filio, qui non per incisionem sui dividitur ipse, cum dividit; individuus enim cum sit, nihil amittit, cum omnibus largiatur: sicut et Filius, regnum Patre accipiente, nihil perdit: nec Pater Filio cum sua tradat, amittit. Nullum itaque damnum esse in divisione gratiae spiritalis, Domino attestante (I Cor. XV, 6), cognovimus; qui enim ubi vult spirat (Joan. III, 8), ubique sine damno est. De quo infra dicemus plenius. 50. Interim nunc quoniam propositum est ordine suo asserere, non esse inter omnia Spiritum compntandum, ipsum Apostolum, de cujus verbis faciunt quaestionem, assertionis hujus adhibeamus auctorem. Quae enim essent illa omnia, sive visibilia, sive invisibilia, ipse signavit dicens: Quoniam in ipso condita sunt omnia in coelis et in terra (Coloss. I, 16). Vides omnia de his dicta, quae vel in coelis sunt, vel in terra; sunt enim in coelis etiam invisibilia, quae facta sunt. 51. Tamen ne cui esset incognitum, addidit de quibus diceret: Sive Sedes, inquit, sive Dominationes, sive Principatus, sive Potestates, omnia per ipsum, et in ipso creata sunt, et ipse est ante omnes, et omnia in ipso constant (Ibid., 16, 17). Numquid ergo hic inter creaturas Spiritum sanctum comprehendit? Aut cum dicit ante omnes esse Dei Filium, numquid ante Patrem dixisse aestimandus est? Non utique; nam sicut hic per Filium dicit omnia creata esse, et in ipso omnia constare coelestia: ita etiam in Spiritu sancto vires habere universa coelestia dubitari non potest, quando lectum est: Verbo Domini coeli firmati sunt, et Spiritu oris ejus omnis virtus eorum (Psal. XXXII, 6). Super omnia est igitur, de quo est omnis coelestium et terrestrium virtus. Qui igitur super omnia est, utique non servit: qui non servit, liber est: qui liber est, habet jura dominatus. 52. Hoc si a principio dicerem, negaretur. Sed quemadmodum illi minora negant, ne majora credantur: ita et nos minora praemittamus, ut aut perfidiam suam etiam in minoribus prodant; aut si vel minoribus consentiunt, majora de minoribus colligamus. 53. Arbitror, clementissime imperator, plenissime confutatos eos, qui audent inter omnia 611 Spiritum sanctum computare. Sed tamen ut sciant se non tantum Apostolicis testimoniis, sed etiam Dominicis perurgeri; quomodo audent inter omnia numerare Spiritum sanctum, quando ipse Dominus dixit: Qui blasphemaverit in Filium hominis, remittetur ei: qui autem blasphemaverit in Spiritum sanctum, nec hic, nec in futurum remittetur ei (Luc. XII, 10)? Quomodo igitur inter creaturas audet quisquam Spiritum computare? Aut quis sic se obligat, ut si creaturae derogaverit, non putet sibi hoc aliqua venia relaxandum? Nam si Judaei, quia adoraverunt militiam coeli (IV Reg. XVII, 16), divino praesidio destituti sunt: qui autem adorat et confitetur Spiritum sanctum, acceptus est Deo; qui non confitetur, sacrilegii reus sine venia damnatur: utique hinc aestimari potest non inter omnia, sed super omnia esse Spiritum sanctum, cujus injuria aeternis suppliciis expiatur. 54. Cur autem dixerit Dominus: Qui blasphemaverit in Filium hominis, remittetur ei: qui autem blasphemaverit in Spiritum sanctum, nec hic, nec in futurum remittetur ei (Luc. XII, 10); diligenter adverte. Numquid alia est offensa Filii, alia Spiritus sancti? Sicut enim una dignitas, sic una injuria. Sed si quis corporis specie deceptus humani, remissius aliquid sentit de Christi carne, quam dignum est (neque enim vilis nobis debet videri, quae aula virtutis, fructus est Virginis), habet culpam; non est tamen exclusus a venia, quam fide possit adsciscere. Si quis vero sancti Spiritus dignitatem, majestatem et potestatem abneget sempiternam, et putet non in Spiritu Dei ejici daemonia, sed in Beelzebub: non potest ibi exoratio esse veniae, ubi sacrilegi plenitudo est; quia qui Spiritum negavit, et Deum Patrem negavit et Filium; quoniam idem est Spiritus Dei, qui Spiritus est Christi.

CAPUT IV.

SPIRITUM SANCTUM UNUM et eumdem esse qui locutus est in prophetis et in apostolis, qui Spiritus Dei et Christi est, quem praeterea Spiritum Paraclitum, Spiritum vitae ac veritatis Scriptura significat.

55. Unum autem esse Spiritum nemo dubitaverit, etsi de uno Deo plerique dubitaverunt. Alium enim dixerunt plerique haeretici Deum veteris, alium novi Testamenti. 612 Sed sicut unus Pater, qui et olim locutus est, ut legimus, patribus in prophetis: et in novissimis diebus nobis locutus est in Filio (Hebr. I, 1, 2): et sicut unus Filius, qui juxta veteris seriem Testamenti ab Adam offensus, ab Abraham visus, adoratus a Jacob est: ita etiam Spiritus sanctus unus est, qui efferbuit in prophetis, insufflatus est apostolis, copulatus est Patri et Filio in baptismatis sacramentis (II Petr. I, 21; Joan. XX, 22; Matth. XXVIII, 19). De ipso enim dicit David: Et Spiritum sanctum tuum ne auferas a me (Psal. L, 13). De ipso etiam alibi dixit: Quo ibo a Spiritu tuo (Psal. CXXXVIII, 7). 56. [Alias cap. IV.] Ut scias quia idem Spiritus Dei est, qui est Spiritus sanctus, sicut et in Apostolo legimus: Nemo in Spiritu Dei loquens, dicit anathema Jesu; et nemo potest dicere Dominus Jesus, nisi in Spiritu sancto (I Cor. XII, 3), ipsum Apostolus Spiritum Dei dixit. Ipsum etiam Spiritum Christi appellavit, sicut habes: Vos autem in carne non estis, sed in Spiritu; si tamen Spiritus Dei inhabitat in vobis. Si quis autem Spiritum Christi non habet, hic non est ejus (Rom. VIII, 9). Et infra: Quod si Spiritus ejus qui suscitavit Jesum a mortuis, habitat in vobis (Ibid. 11). Ipse est ergo Spiritus Dei, qui Spiritus est Christi. 57. Ipse etiam est Spiritus vitae, sicut ait Apostolus: Lex enim Spiritus vitae in Christo Jesu liberavit me a lege peccati et mortis (Ibid., 2). 58. Quem igitur Spiritum vitae Apostolus dixit, ipsum Dominus in Evangelio paraclitum nominavit, ipsum Spiritum veritatis, sicut habes: Et rogabo Patrem, et alium Paraclitum dabit vobis; ut vobiscum sit in aeternum, Spiritum veritatis, quem hic mundus non potest accipere; quia non videt eum, nec cognoscit eum (Joan. XIV, 16, 17). Habes ergo et Paraclitum Spiritum, eumdem et Spiritum veritatis et Spiritum invisibilem designatum. Quomodo igitur secundum divinitatem quidam Filium visibilem putant, cum etiam Spiritum mundus videre non possit? 59. Accipe nunc ejusdem vocem Domini, quod ipse sit Spiritus sanctus, qui est Spiritus veritatis; habes enim in ultimo libri hujus: Accipite Spiritum sanctum (Joan. XX, 22). Ipsum quoque esse Spiritum sanctum, qui est Spiritus Domini, Petrus docet dicens: Anania, quid tibi visum est tentare et mentiri Spiritui sancto (Act. V, 3)? Et statim ad uxorem Ananiae idem ait: Quid vobis visum est tentare Spiritum Domini (Ibid., 9)? Cum dicit, vobis, ostendit de eo dictum Spiritu, de quo Ananiae dixerat. Ipse est ergo Spiritus Domini, qui Spiritus sanctus. 60. Ipsum etiam Spiritum sanctum, qui Spiritus 613 Patris est, declaravit Dominus, dicens secundum Matthaeum in persecutione non esse cogitandum quid loquamur: Non enim vos estis qui loquimini; sed Spiritus Patris vestri, qui loquitur in vobis (Matth. X, 20). Idem autem secundum Lucam ait: Nolite solliciti esse qualiter respondeatis aut dicatis; Spiritus enim sanctus Dei docebit vos in ipsa hora, quae oporteat dicere (Luc. XII, 11, 12). Ergo quamvis multi dicantur spiritus, quia lectum est: Qui facit Angelos suos spiritus (Psal. CIII, 4); unus tamen est Dei Spiritus. 61. Ipsum igitur unum Spiritum et apostoli et prophetae sunt consecuti. Sicut etiam vas electionis, doctor gentium dicit: Quia unum Spiritum potavimus (I Cor. XII, 13); quasi eum qui non queat scindi, sed infundatur animis, et sensibus allabatur, ut saecularis sitis restinguat ardorem.

CAPUT V.

SPIRITUM SANCTUM, CUM creaturas sanctificet, nec creaturam esse, nec mutabilem: eum semper bonum esse, cum a Patre detur et a Filio; nec inter ea quae declinare dicuntur, numerandum; fontem bonitatis, Spiritum oris Dei, malorum emendatorem, bonum necessario confitendum: postremo cum in Scripturis bonus affirmetur, et Patri ac Filio conjungatur in baptismate, bonum negari neutiquam posse; nec tamen dici in bono proficientem, sed perficientem: quod eum ab omnibus distinguit creaturis.

62. Non ergo sanctus Spiritus de substantia corporalium; hic enim corporalibus incorpoream infundit gratiam: sed nec de substantia invisibilium creaturarum est; nam et illae sanctificationem hujus accipiunt, et per hunc reliquis mundi operibus antecellunt. Sive Angelos dicas, sive Dominationes, sive Potestates, omnis creatura exspectat sancti Spiritus gratiam. Sicut enim nos per Spiritum liberi, quia misit Deus Spiritum Filii sui in corda nostra clamantem: Abba Pater. Itaque jam non est servus, sed filius (Galat. IV, 6, 7): ita etiam omnis creatura revelationem filiorum Dei exspectat, quos utique sancti Spiritus gratia filios Dei fecit (Rom. VIII, 19). Ergo et creatura ipsa omnis spiritualis gratiae revelatione mutabitur, et liberabitur a servitute corruptionis in libertatem gloriae filiorum Dei (Ibid. 21). 63. Omnis ergo creatura mutabilis, non solum ea quae jam peccato aliquo aut elementorum conditione mutata est; verum etiam quae corruptelae potest esse obnoxia vitio naturae, etsi nondum est studio disciplinae; nam ut in superioribus libris docuimus (Lib. III, de fide, ca), et angelorum naturam liquet potuisse mutari. Utique aestimare convenit quia qualis unius natura, talis et caeterorum. Mutabilis ergo et reliquorum natura, sed melior disciplina. 64. [Alias cap. V.] Ergo omnis mutabilis creatura, sed bonus et non mutabilis Spiritus sanctus; neque enim aliquo vitio mutari potest, qui omnium 614 abolet vitia, peccata condonat. Quomodo ergo mutabilis qui sanctificando alios mutat ad gratiam, non ipse mutatur? 65. Quomodo mutabilis, qui bonus semper est? Neque enim umquam malus Spiritus sanctus, per quem nobis quae bona sunt, ministrantur. Unde et evangelistae duo in uno eodemque loco, diversis quidem inter se verbis, sed eadem designarunt; habes enim in Matthaeo: Si vos cum sitis mali, nostis bona data dare filiis vestris; quanto magis Pater vester, qui in coelis est, dabit bona petentibus se (Matth. VII, 11)! Secundum Lucam autem invenies ita scriptum: Quanto magis Pater vester de coelo dabit Spiritum sanctum petentibus se (Luc. XI, 13)! Advertimus ergo bonum esse Spiritum sanctum Domini judicio, evangelistarum testimonio: quando alius pro sancto Spiritu bona, alius pro bonis sanctum Spiritum nominavit. Si igitur quod bonum est, hoc est Spiritus sanctus, quomodo bonus non est? 66. Nec fallit quod nonnulli codices habent etiam secundum Lucam: Quanto magis Pater vester de coelo dabit bonum datum petentibus se! Hoc bonum datum gratia spiritalis est, quam Dominus Jesus effudit e coelo, postquam patibulo crucis fixus, triumphales revehens evacuatae mortis exuvias, victor mortis a mortuis resurrexit, sicut habes scriptum: ascendens in altum captivam duxit captivitatem: dedit data hominibus (Psal. LXVII, 19). Et bene ait, data; sicut enim Filius datus, de quo scriptum est: Puer natus est, filius datus est nobis (Esai. IX, 6), data est et gratia spiritualis. Quid autem dubito dicere quia datus est et Spiritus sanctus, cum scriptum sit: Charitas Dei effusa est in cordibus nostris per Spiritum sanctum, qui datus est nobis (Rom. V, 5). Quem utique quoniam pectora recipere captiva non poterant, prius Dominus Jesus captivam duxit captivitatem; ut liberis affectibus gratiae divinae munus effunderet. 67. Pulchre autem dixit: Captivam captivitatem. Christi enim victoria, victoria libertatis est, quae omnes gratiae vindicavit, nullum astrinxit injuriae. Ergo in omnium absolutione nemo captivus est. Et quia Dominicae tempore passionis sola feriabatur injuria, quae captivos omnes amiserat quos tenebat; in se recurrens captiva facta est ipsa captivitas, jam non Belial addicta, sed Christo, cui servire libertas est. Qui enim in Domino vocatus est servus libertus est Domini (I Cor. VII, 22). 68. Sed ut ad proposita revertamur: Omnes, inquit, declinaverunt, simul inutiles facti sunt; non est qui faciat bonum, non est usque ad unum (Psal. XIII, 3). Si excipiunt Spiritum sanctum, etiam ipsi eum non esse inter omnia confitentur: si non excipiunt, ergo et ipsum inter omnes declinasse fateantur. 69. Sed videamus utrum bonitatem habeat, cum fons sit principiumque bonitatis. Nam sicut 615 Pater bonitatem habet et Filius, ita etiam bonitatem habet et Spiritus sanctus. Quod etiam Apostolus docuit dicens: Fructus autem Spiritus pax, charitas, gaudium, patientia, bonitas (Galat. V, 22). Quis autem dubitat quod bonus sit, cujus fructus est bonitas? Arbor enim bona bonos fructus facit (Matth. VII, 17). 70. Itaque si bonus Deus, quomodo non bonus qui oris ejus est Spiritus (Psal. XXXII, 6), qui scrutatur etiam alta Dei (I Cor. II, 10)? An in alta Dei contagio mali possit intrare? Unde et illud intelligitur, quam amentes sint, qui bonum Filium Dei abnegant, cum bonum Spiritum Christi negare non possint; de quo ait Dei Filius: Propterea dixi, de meo accipiet (Joan. XVI, 15). 71. An non bonus Spiritus, qui bonos de pessimis facit, peccatum abolet, malum delet, crimen excludit, bonum munus infundit, de persecutoribus apostolos facit, de peccatoribus sacerdotes? Eratis, inquit, aliquando tenebrae, nunc autem lux in Domino (Ephes. V, 8). 72. Sed quid differimus eos? Nam si verba exigunt, cum facta non abnuant, accipiant bonum Spiritum scriptum; dixit enim David: Spiritus tuus bonus deducet me in viam rectam (Psal. CXLII, 10). Quid est enim Spiritus, nisi plenus bonitatis? Qui cum sit inaccessibilis natura, receptibilis tamen propter bonitatem suam nobis est, complens virtute omnia, sed qui solis participetur justis, simplex substantia, opulentus virtutibus, unicuique praesens, dividens de suo singulis, et ubique totus. 73. Meritoque Filius Dei dixit: Ite, baptizate gentes in nomine Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti (Matth. XXVIII, 19), non dedignatus Spiritus sancti societatem. Cur igitur nunc quem Dominus non dedignatus est in baptismatis sacramento, moleste ferunt aliqui Patri vel Filio Spiritum nostra devotione conjungi? 74. Bonus ergo Spiritus: bonus autem, non quasi acquirens, sed quasi impertiens bonitatem. Non enim accipit a creaturis, sed accipitur Spiritus sanctus: sicut non sanctificatur, sed ipse sanctificat; creatura enim sanctificatur, sanctificat autem Spiritus sanctus. In quo licet verbi communio, discretio tamen naturae est. Sanctus enim dicitur et homo qui accipit, et Deus qui tribuit sanctitatem; quia legimus: Estote sancti, quoniam et ego sanctus sum (Levit. XIX, 2). Non ergo potest sanctificatio et corruptela unius esse naturae; et ideo non potest gratia sancti Spiritus et creatura unius esse substantiae. 75. Itaque cum omnis invisibilis praeter Trinitatem reliqua natura, cujus rationabilem et incorpoream jure quidam substantiam putant, non impertiat spiritalem gratiam, sed acquirat: nec participet, sed assumat; separanda utique est a societate Spiritus sancti communitas creaturae. Credant igitur quia creatura non est Spiritus sanctus: aut si creaturam putant, cur associant Patri? Si creaturam arbitrantur, cur Filio Dei jungunt? Quod si a Patre et Filio 616 non existimant separandum, non aestiment creaturam; quia ubi una sanctificatio, una natura est.

CAPUT VI.

QUAMQUAM IN AQUA et Spiritu baptizamur, hunc tamen illi longe praestare; atque adeo non sejungendum a Patre et Filio.

76. Sunt tamen plerique qui eo quod in aqua baptizamur et Spiritu, non putent aquae et Spiritus distare munera; et ideo non putant distare naturam. Nec advertunt quia in illo aquarum sepelimur elemento, ut renovati per Spiritum resurgamus. In aqua enim imago mortis, in Spiritu pignus est vitae; ut per aquam moriatur corpus peccati, quae quasi quodam tumulo corpus includit: et per virtutem Spiritus renovemur a morte peccati, renati in Deo. 77. Et ideo hi tres testes unum sunt, sicut Joannes dixit: Aqua, sanguis, et Spiritus (I Joan. V, 8). Unum in mysterio, non in natura. Aqua igitur testis est sepulturae, sanguis testis est mortis, Spiritus testis est vitae. Si qua ergo in aqua gratia, non ex natura aquae, sed ex praesentia est Spiritus sancti. 78. Numquid in aqua vivimus, sicut in Spiritu? Numquid in aqua signamur, sicut in Spiritu? In ipso enim vivimus, et ipse est pignus haereditatis nostrae, sicut et Apostolus scribens ad Ephesios, ait: In quo credentes signati estis Spiritu promissionis sancto, qui est pignus haereditatis nostrae (Ephes. I, 13, 14). Sancto igitur Spiritu signati sumus, non natura, sed a Deo, quia scriptum est: qui unxit nos Deus, et qui signavit nos, et dedit pignus Spiritum in cordibus nostris (II Cor. I, 21, 22). 79. Signati ergo Spiritu a Deo sumus. Sicut enim in Christo morimur, ut renascamur; ita etiam Spiritu signamur, ut splendorem atque imaginem ejus et gratiam tenere possimus: quod est utique spiritale signaculum. Nam etsi specie signemur in corpore, veritate tamen in corde signamur; ut Spiritus sanctus exprimat in nobis imaginis coelestis effigiem. 80. Quis igitur audeat dicere discretum a Deo Patre et Christo esse Spiritum sanctum; cum per ipsum ad imaginem et similitudinem Dei esse mereamur; et per ipsum fiat, quemadmodum Petrus apostolus dixit (II Petr. I, 4), ut divinae simus consortes naturae? In quo utique non carnalis successionis haereditas, sed adoptionis gratiae spiritale commercium est. Atque ut sciamus cordis nostri magis hoc, quam corporis esse signaculum, docet Propheta qui dicit: Signatum est in nobis lumen vultus tui, Domine; dedisti laetitiam in corde meo (Psal. IV, 7). 617

CAPUT VII.

SPIRITUM SANCTUM CREATURAM non esse, cum sit incircumscriptus, et apostolis per omnes regiones dispersis infusus, quin etiam angelos ipsos, quibus aequales nos reddit, sanctificet. Eodem Mariam repletam esse, nec non etiam Christum Dominum, atque adeo superiora et inferiora omnia: de cujus operatione, quae per piscinae commotionem designabatur, ortum ducit omnis benedictio.

81. Cum igitur omnis creatura certis naturae suae sit circumscripta limitibus; si quidem et illa invisibilia opera, quae non queunt locis et finibus comprehendi, substantiae suae tamen proprietate clauduntur: quomodo quis audeat creaturam appellare Spiritum sanctum, qui non habet circumscriptam determinatamque virtutem; quia et in omnibus et ubique semper est, quod utique divinitatis et dominationis est proprium: Domini enim est terra, et plenitudo ejus (Psal. XXIII, 1)?

81*. Et ideo cum Dominus servulos suos apostolos destinaret, ut agnosceremus aliud creaturam esse, aliud gratiam spiritalem, alios alio destinabat; quia omnes simul ubique esse non poterant. Dedit autem omnibus Spiritum sanctum, qui licet separatis apostolis inseparabilis gratiae munus infunderet. Erant igitur diversae personae, sed unus in omnibus operationis effectus; quia unus est Spiritus sanctus, de quo ait: Accipietis virtutem venientem, Spiritum sanctum in vos; et eritis mihi testes in Hierusalem et in omni Judaea et Samaria usque in fines terrae (Act. I, 8).

82. Incircumscriptus igitur et infinitus Spiritus sanctus, qui se discipulorum sensibus per separatarum divortia discreta regionum, remotosque fines totius orbis infudit, quem nihil potest praeterire vel fallere.

Et ideo sanctus David ait: Quo ibo a Spiritu tuo, aut quo a facie tua fugiam (Psal. CXXXVIII, 7)? De quo Angelo Scriptura hoc dicit? de qua Dominatione? de qua Potestate? Cujus inveniemus Angeli virtutem per plurimos esse diffusam? Angeli enim ad paucos mittebantur, Spiritus autem sanctus populis infundebatur. Quis igitur dubitet quin divinum sit, quod infunditur simul pluribus, nec videtur: corporeum autem, quod et videtur a singulis, et tenetur? 83. Sed quemadmodum sanctificans apostolos Spiritus, non est humanae consors naturae; ita etiam sanctificans Angelos, Dominationes et Potestates, non habet consortium creaturae. Si qui autem putant non esse spiritalem in angelis sanctitatem, sed aliam quamdam gratiam suae proprietate naturae, hi inferiores profecto angelos hominibus judicabunt. Cum enim et ipsi fateantur quod Spiritui sancto angelos conferre non audeant, nec possint negare quod hominibus infundatur Spiritus sanctus: sanctificatio autem Spiritus donum munusque divinum sit; invenientur utique homines qui meliorem sanctificationem habent, angelis praeferendi. 618 Sed cum angeli hominibus in adjumentum descendant (Hebr. I, 14), intelligendum est quod creatura quidem superior angelorum sit, quae plus recipit gratiae spiritalis; ejusdem tamen et erga nos et illos munus auctoris sit. 84. Quanta autem gratia, quae praemiis angelorum etiam inferiorem creaturam humanae conditionis exaequet, sicut Dominus ipse promisit dicens: Eritis sicut angeli in coelo (Matth. XXII, 30)? Nec difficile; qui enim illos angelos fecit in Spiritu, homines quoque per eamdem gratiam similes faciet angelorum (Psal. CIII, 4). 85. De qua autem creatura dici potest quia repleverit universa, quod scriptum est de Spiritu sancto: Effundam de Spiritu meo super omnem carnem (Joel II, 28)? Non hoc de angelo dici potest. Denique Gabriel ipse missus ad Mariam: Ave, inquit, gratia plena; spiritalem utique in ea declarans gratiam, quod in eam Spiritus sanctus supervenisset, et plenum gratiae uterum Verbo esset habitura coelesti. 86. Domini enim est omnia complere, qui dicit: Ego coelum et terram compleo (Jerem. XXIII, 24). Si ergo Dominus est, qui coelum complet et terram; quis potest Spiritum sanctum judicare dominationis, et divinae potestatis exsortem, qui replevit orbem, et quod ultra totum orbem est, replevit Jesum mundi totius redemptorem? Scriptum est enim: Jesus autem plenus Spiritu sancto, regressus est ab Jordane (Luc. IV, 1). Quis igitur alius nisi qui ejusdem esset plenitudinis, complentem omnia posset implere? 87. Sed ne hoc secundum carnem dictum objiciant; quamquam plus unus ille, quam omnes: de cujus carne exibat virtus, quae sanaret omnes: tamen sicut Dominus complet omnia, ita etiam et de Spiritu lectum est: Quoniam Spiritus Domini replevit orbem terrarum (Sap. I, 7). Habes etiam de omnibus qui convenerant cum apostolis dictum quia, repleti sancto Spiritu, loquebantur verbum Dei cum fiducia (Act. IV, 31). Vides quia et plenitudinem et fiduciam dat Spiritus sanctus; cujus operationem archangelus nuntiat Mariae, dicens: Spiritus sanctus superveniet in te (Luc. I, 35). 88. Habes etiam in Evangelio quia angelus secundum tempus descendebat in natatoriam, et movebatur aqua: et qui prior descendisset in natatoriam, sanus fiebat (Joan. V, 4). Quid in hoc typo angelus, nisi descensionem sancti Spiritus nuntiabat, quae nostris futura temporibus, aquas sacerdotalibus invocata precibus consecraret? Ille ergo angelus sancti Spiritus erat nuntius, eo quod per gratiam spiritualem medicina nostris esset animi ac mentis languoribus deferenda. Eosdem ergo et Spiritus habet, quos Deus Pater et Christus ministros. Sic omnia replete, sic omnia possidet, sic omnia operatur et in omnibus, quemadmodum et Deus Pater operatur et Filius. 89. Quid igitur sancti Spiritus operatione divinius, cum etiam benedictionum suarum praesulem Spiritum Deus ipse testetur dicens: 619 Ponam Spiritum meum super semen tuum, et benedictiones meas super filios tuos (Esai. XLIV, 3)? Nulla enim potest esse plena benedictio, nisi per infusionem Spiritus sancti. Unde et apostolus nihil melius hoc nobis quod optaret invenit, sicut ipse dixit: Non deficimus pro vobis orantes et obsecrantes, ut repleamini cognitione voluntatis ejus in omni sapientia et intellectu spiritali, ambulantes digne Deo (Coloss. I, 9). Hanc igitur Dei esse docuit voluntatem, ut magis in bonis operibus et sermonibus et sensibus ambulantes repleamur voluntate Dei, qui ponit in cordibus nostris Spiritum sanctum. Ergo si is qui habet Spiritum sanctum, Dei repletus est voluntate; utique inter Patrem et Spiritum nulla distantia voluntatis est.

CAPUT VIII.

A DEO SOLO dari Spiritum; neque tamen totum singulis, cum praeter Christum nemo fuerit qui totum eum capere posset. Per Spiritum effundi charitatem, quae per mysticum unguentum figurata, nihil commune cum creaturis habere ostenditur: ipsum autem cum ex ore Dei dicatur procedere, inter creata non reponendum; nec inter divisibilia, cum sit aeternus.

90. Simul illud adverte, quia Deus dat Spiritum sanctum (Rom. V, 5). Non enim humanum hoc opus, neque ab homine datur: sed qui invocatur a sacerdote, a Deo traditur, in quo Dei munus, ministerium sacerdotis est. Nam si Paulus apostolus judicavit (Ephes. V, 18) quod ipse donare Spiritum sanctum sua auctoritate non posset, et in tantum se huic officio imparem credidit, ut a Deo nos Spiritu optaret impleri; quis tantus est, qui hujus traditionem muneris sibi audeat arrogare? Itaque Apostolus votum precatione detulit, non jus auctoritate aliqua vindicavit: impetrare optavit, non imperare praesumpsit. Petrus quoque ait quia non erat idoneus qui posset Spiritum sanctum vel cogere, vel arcere. Sic enim dixit: Ergo si eamdem gratiam concessit illis Deus sicut et nobis, ego quis eram, qui possem prohibere Deum (Act. XI, 17)? 91. Sed fortasse apostolicis non moveantur exemplis, et ideo divinis utamur oraculis; scriptum est enim: Jacob puer meus, suscipiam eum: Israel electus meus, suscepit eum anima mea, dedi Spiritum meum in ipsum (Esai. XLII, 1). Dominus quoque per Esaiam dixit: Spiritus Domini super me, propter quod unxit me (Esai. LXI, 1). 92. Quis ergo audeat dicere creatam Spiritus sancti esse substantiam, qui cum illuxerit in cordibus nostris, divinae cernimus pulchritudinem veritatis, et distantiam creaturae divinitatisque cognoscimus, ut opus segregetur ab auctore? Aut de qua creatura Deus ita locutus est, quod aut Dominationes aut Potestates effundat aut Angelos? Sed de Spiritu, inquit, meo effundam (Joel II, 28). Non Spiritum ait, sed de Spiritu; neque enim nos capere possumus plenitudinem Spiritus sancti, sed tantum accipimus, quantum de suo arbiter nostri pro sua voluntate diviserit. Sicut enim Dei Filius non rapinam arbitratus est esse se aequalem Deo, sed semetipsum exinanivit (Philipp. II, 6), ut nos eum nostris animis percipere 620 possemus: exinanivit autem non quod ipse esset vacuus suae plenitudinis; sed quo mihi qui plenitudinem ejus sustinere non possem, pro eo quod capere possem, infunderetur: ita etiam de Spiritu sancto Pater se dicit effundere super omnem carnem; non enim totum effudit, sed quod effudit, omnibus abundavit. 93. Supra nos ergo effusum est de Spiritu: at vero super Dominum Jesum, cum in forma esset hominis, manebat Spiritus, sicut scriptum est: Supra quem videris Spiritum descendentem de coelo, et manentem super eum, hic est qui baptizat in Spiritu sancto (Joan. I, 33). Circa nos ex affluenti commodo liberalitas largientis est, in illo totius manet in aeternum Spiritus plenitudo. Quod igitur nobis satis esse judicavit, effudit: et quod effusum est, non separatum est, nec incisum: sed unitatem habet plenitudinis, quo aciem nostri cordis illuminet pro nostrae possibilitate virtutis. Denique tantum capimus, quantum profectus nostrae mentis acquirit; inseparabilis est enim plenitudo gratiae spiritalis, sed nobis pro nostrae participatur facultate naturae. 94. Effundit ergo Deus de Spiritu, effunditur etiam charitas Dei per Spiritum: quo loco unitatem debemus agnoscere operationis et gratiae. Sicut enim de Spiritu sancto Deus effudit, ita etiam, Charitas Dei effusa est in cordibus nostris per Spiritum sanctum (Rom. V, 5); ut intelligamus non esse opus sanctum Spiritum, qui divinae arbiter et fons profluus charitatis est. 95. Similiter autem ut credas id quod effunditur, cum creaturis non posse esse commune, sed speciale divinitatis; etiam et Filii nomen effunditur, sicut habes: Unguentum exinanitum est nomen tuum (Cant. I, 2). Cujus virtute sermonis nihil potest esse praestantius. Nam sicut inclusum in vase aliquo unguentum cohibet odorem suum, qui odor quamdiu vasis illius angustiis coercetur, etsi ad plures non potest pervenire, tamen vim suam servat; cum vero de vase illo, quo claudebatur, unguentum fuerit effusum, longe lateque diffunditur: ita et Christi nomen ante ejus adventum in Israel populo, quasi in vase aliquo Judaeorum mentibus claudebatur: Notus enim in Judaea Deus, in Israel magnum nomen ejus (Psalm. LXXV, 1): hoc utique nomen, quod vasa Judaeorum angustiis suis coercitum continebant. 96. Magnum quidem et tunc nomen, cum infirmiorum atque paucorum haereret angustiis: sed magnitudinem sui nondum per corda gentium, et in fines totius orbis effuderat. Postea vero quam per omnem mundum suo illuxit adventu, per omnem utique creaturam divinum illud suum nomen extendit, non repletum accessione aliqua (plenitudo enim nescit augmentum) sed replens vacua, ut esset admirabile nomen ejus in universa terra. Hujus igitur effusio nominis abundantem quamdam exuberantiam gratiarum, bonorumque coelestium significat largitatem; ex abundantia enim superfluit, quidquid effunditur. 97. Itaque sicut creata non potest dici sapientia, quae ex ore Dei procedit, nec Verbum, quod eructatur ex corde, nec virtus, in qua plenitudo 621 majestatis aeternae est: ita etiam creatus non potest Spiritus aestimari, qui ex ore Dei funditur; cum ipse Deus tantam ostenderit unitatem, ut effundere se de Spiritu suo dicat. Quo intelligamus quia etiam Dei Patris eadem gratia sit, quae Spiritus sancti est, et quod sine incisione ac detrimento aliquo dividatur mentibus singulorum. Quod ergo de Spiritu Dei effunditur, nec inciditur, nec partibus aliquibus corporalibus comprehenditur, aut secatur. 98. [Alias cap. VIII]. Quomodo enim credibile est, quod Spiritus sectilibus aliquibus dividatur? Dicit Joannes de Deo: Ex hoc cognoscimus quia manet in nobis de Spiritu quem dedit nobis (I Joan. III, 24). Quod autem manet semper, utique nec mutatur: ergo si mutationem non habet, aeternitatem habet. Et ideo Spiritus sanctus sempiternus est; creatura autem obnoxia vitio, ideoque mutabilis. Quod autem mutabile est, esse non potest sempiternum (Rom. VIII, 20): et ideo non potest Spiritui sancto et creaturae esse consortium; quia sempiternus est Spiritus, creatura autem omnis in tempore est. 99. Sempiternum autem Spiritum sanctum, etiam Apostolus ostendit: Si enim sanguis taurorum et hircorum, et cinis vitulae aspersus inquinatos sanctificat ad carnem emundandam; quanto magis sanguis Christi, qui per Spiritum sempiternum se obtulit immaculatum Deo (Hebr. IX, 13, 14)! Ergo sempiternus est Spiritus.

CAPUT IX.

SPIRITUM SANCTUM RECTE dici unguentum Christi, et oleum laetitiae, et quas ob causas? Christum ipsum non esse unguentum; cum unctus sit Spiritu sancto: mirum autem id non videri, si unguentum vocetur et Spiritus, cum Pater ac Filius etiam Spiritus appellentur. Nec ullam tamen in ipsis confusionem esse; cum solus Christus in corpore oppetierit mortem, cujus salutifera crux praedicatur.

100. Plerique autem arbitrati sunt unguentum Christi esse Spiritum sanctum. Et bene unguentum, quia oleum laetitiae nuncupatum est, plurimarum redolente copula gratiarum: verum illum Deus omnipotens Pater unxit principem sacerdotum, qui non ut alii in typo unctus ex lege, sed et secundum legem unctus in corpore, et in veritate supra legem virtute sancti Spiritus ex Patre plenus est. 101. Hoc est oleum laetitiae, de quo dicit propheta: Unxit te Deus, Deus tuus oleo laetitiae prae consortibus tuis (Psal. XLIV, 8). Denique Petrus unctum Spiritu dicit Jesum, sicut habes: Vos scitis quod factum est verbum per totam Judaeam, incipiens a Galilaea post baptismum, quod praedicavit Joannes, Jesum a Nazareth, quomodo unxit eum Deus Spiritu sancta (Act. X, 37, 38). Oleum igitur laetitiae Spiritus sanctus est. 102. Et pulchre oleum laetitiae dixit, ne creaturam putares; olei enim hujusmodi natura est, ut nequaquam naturae alterius humido misceatur. Laetitia quoque non corpus ungit, sed intima 622 cordis illuminat, sicut propheta dixit: Dedisti laetitiam in corde meo (Psalm. IV, 7). Ergo cum ludat operam, qui oleum velit cum creatura humidiore confundere: quia cum olei natura levior sit caeteris, residentibus aliis, elevata secernitur: quomodo putant isti deterrimi caupones oleum laetitiae cum caeteris creaturis sua posse fraude confundi; cum utique non queant incorporeis corporea, increatis creata misceri? 102*. Et bene oleum laetitiae dicitur, quo unctus est Christus; neque enim usitatum fuit, ei oleum et commune quaerendum, quo aut vulnera curantur, aut aestus levatur: cum fomentum vulnerum suorum salus mundana non quaereret, nec refectionem corporis fatigati virtus sempiterna deposceret.

103. Nec mirum si habet oleum laetitiae, qui fecit exsultare morituros, tristitia mundum exuit, moestae fetorem mortis abolevit. Et ideo Apostolus ait: Christi enim bonus odor sumus Deo (II Cor. II, 15); utique de spiritalibus significans se locutum. Sed et cum ipse Filius Dei dicat: Spiritus Domini super me, propter quod unxit me (Luc. IV, 18), spiritale signat unguentum. Ergo unguentum Christi est Spiritus. 104. Aut quia unguentum exinanitum est nomen Jesu, si ibi Christum ipsum intelligere volunt unguenti expressum nomine, non Spiritum Christi; utique cum unctum Spiritu sancto Dominum Jesum Petrus apostolus dixerit, liquet sine dubio quod unguentum dicatur et Spiritus. 105. Sed quid mirum, cum et Pater et Filius spiritus esse dicatur? De quo quidem dicemus plenius, cum de unitate nominis dicere coeperimus (Infra, ca). Tamen quia hic quoque incidit pulcherrimus locus, ne sine corollario eum praeterire videamur, accipiant quia et Pater dicitur spiritus, sicut in Evangelio Dominus locutus est, quoniam Spiritus est Deus (Joan. IV, 24); et Christus spiritus dicitur; quia Jeremias dixit: Spiritus ante faciem nostram Christus Dominus (Thren. IV, 20). 106. Et Pater ergo spiritus, et Filius spiritus; quia quod non est creaturae corpus, hoc spiritus est: sed non confusus cum Patre et Filio Spiritus sanctus, verum et a Patre distinctus et a Filio. Non enim Spiritus sanctus est mortuus, qui mori non potuit; quia carnem non suscepit, nec mortis capax esse potuit sempiterna divinitas: sed mortuus est secundum carnem Christus. 107. In eo utique mortuus, quod suscepit ex Virgine: non in eo, quod habebat ex Patre; in eo enim mortuus, in quo crucifixus est

Christus. Spiritus autem sanctus non potuit crucifigi, qui carnem et ossa non habuit: sed crucifixus est Dei Filius, qui carnem et ossa suscepit; ut in illa cruce nostrae carnis tentamenta morerentur. Suscepit enim quod non erat, ut celaret quod erat: celavit quod erat, ut tentaretur in eo, et redimeretur quod non erat; ut ad id quod erat, per id quod non erat, nos vocaret. 108. O divinum crucis illius sacramentum, 623 in qua haeret infirmitas, virtus libera est, affiguntur vitia, eriguntur tropaea! Unde quidam sanctus ait: Confige clavis a timore tuo carnes meas (Psal. CXVIII, 120); non ferreis clavis, ait, sed timoris et fidei: vehementior est enim virtutis strictura, quam poenae. Denique Petrum, cum usque in atrium principis sacerdotum Dominum sequeretur (Matth. XXVI, 58), quem nemo ligaverat, fides vinxerat: et quem fides vinxit, poena non solvit. Rursus cum ligaretur a Judaeis, devotio solvit, poena non tenuit; quia non recessit a Christo. 109. Ergo et tu crucifige peccatum, ut moriare peccato; qui enim peccato moritur, Deo vivit: vivas ei qui Filio proprio non pepercit; ut in illius corpore nostras crucifigeret passiones. Pro nobis enim mortuus est Christus, ut nos in illius redivivo corpore viveremus. Mortua est ergo in illo non vita nostra, sed culpa: Qui peccata, inquit, nostra pertulit in corpore suo super lignum; ut a peccatis nostris separati, cum justitia vivamus, cujus vulnere plagarum sanati sumus (I Petr. II, 24). 110. Lignum igitur illud crucis velut quaedam nostrae navis salutis vectura nostra est, non poena; alia enim salus non est, nisi vectura salutis aeternae. Dum mortem expetendo, non sentio: dum poenam contemnendo, non patior: dum metum nescio, negligendo. 111. Quis est igitur cujus vulnere plagarum sanati sumus, nisi Christus Dominus: de quo idem prophetavit Esaias quia plaga ejus nostra medicina est (Esai. LIII, 5): de quo Paulus apostolus in Epistolis suis scripsit: Qui peccatum non cognovit, sed pro nobis peccatum factus est (II Cor. V, 21)? Hoc quippe divinum in eo, quia caro peccatum non fecit, nec in eo suscepti corporis creatura peccavit. Nam quid mirum, si non peccavit sola divinitas, cum peccandi incentiva non habeat? Si autem solus exsors peccati Deus, omnis utique creatura per naturam sui, ut diximus, obnoxia potest esse peccato.

CAPUT X.

QUOD SPIRITUS PECCATA condonat, hoc illi cum Patre ac Filio, non autem cum angelis esse commune.

112. [Alias cap. IX.] Dic igitur, quicumque Spiritus sancti divinitatem negas: Spiritus autem obnoxius non potuit esse peccato, qui magis peccata condonat. Numquid angelus donat? numquid archangelus? Non utique, sed donat solus Pater, solus Filius, solus Spiritus sanctus (Luc. V, 21). Nemo autem quod potest donare, non potest evitare. 113. Sed fortasse dixit aliquis quia et Seraphim dixit Esaiae: Ecce tetigit hoc labia tua, et auferet iniquitates tuas, et peccata tua circumpurgabit (Esai. VI, 7). 624 Auferet, inquit, et circumpurgabit: non ego auferam, sed ignis ille de altari Dei, hoc est, gratia spiritalis. Quid enim aliud pie intelligere possumus in altari Dei esse, nisi Spiritus gratiam? Non utique lignum silvarum, nec fuliginem atque carbonem. Aut quid tam pium, quam ut secundum mysterium intelligamus quia revelabatur in ore Esaiae omnes homines per passionem Christi esse purgandos, qui velut carbo secundum carnem exussit nostra peccata, sicut in Zacharia habes: Nonne hic titio ejectus ab igni? Et ille erat Jesus indutus estimenta sordida (Zach. III, 2, 3). 114. Denique ut sciamus communis hoc redemptionis mysterium per prophetas evidentissime revelatum, etiam hoc loco habes dictum: Ecce abstulit peccata tua (Ibid., 4): non quod Christus peccata sua deponeret, qui peccatum non fecit; sed quod in carne Christi omne a peccatis suis genus absolveretur humanum. 115. Sed etiamsi Seraphim abstulisset peccatum, quasi unum utique de ministris Dei ad hoc esset mysterium destinatum. Sic enim dixit Esaias: Quia missum est ad me unum de Seraphim (Esai. VI, 6).

CAPUT XI.

SPIRITUM AD OMNES mitti, nec transire ex loco in alium: cum nec loco, nec tempore concludatur. Sic igitur eum exire a Filio, ut ipse Filius a Patre, in quo semper manet: sed eumdem venire nobis, cum ipsum recipimus. Eodem etiam modo venire quo Pater ipse, a quo separari nequaquam potest.

116. [Alias cap. X.] Et Spiritus quidem missus dicitur: sed Seraphim ad unum, Spiritus ad omnes (Joan. XVI, 7): Seraphim mittitur in ministerium, Spiritus operatur mysterium: Seraphim quod jubetur, exsequitur, Spiritus quod vult, dividit (Cor. XII, 11): Seraphim de loco ad locum transit; non enim complet omnia, sed et ipsum repletur ab Spiritu: Seraphim descendit cum aliquo secundum naturam suam transitu; at vero de Spiritu sancto hoc non possumus aestimare, de quo dicit Filius Dei: Cum venerit Paraclitus Spiritus veritatis, quem ego mitto vobis, qui a Patre procedit (Joan. XV, 26). 117. Etenim si de loco procedit Spiritus, et ad locum transit; et ipse Pater in loco invenietur, et Filius. Si de loco exit, quem Pater mittit, aut Filius, utique de loco transiens Spiritus atque progrediens, et Patrem sicut corpus secundum impias interpretationes relinquere videtur et Filium. 118. Hoc secundum eos loquor, qui dicunt quod habeat Spiritus descensorium motum. Sed neque in loco aliquo Pater circumscribitur, 625 qui est super omnia, non solum corporeae naturae, sed etiam invisibilis creaturae: neque Filius suorum operum locis temporibusque concluditur, qui super omnem est creaturam totius opifex creaturae: neque Spiritus veritatis, utpote Dei spiritus, circumscribitur aliquiquibus finibus corporalibus (Sap. VII, 23): qui cum sit incorporeus, omnem intelligibilem substantiae creaturam inenarrabili divinitatis plenitudine supereminet, spirandi ubi velit (Joan. III, 8), et inspirandi quomodo velit, habens super omnia potestatem. 119. Non ergo quasi ex loco mittitur Spiritus, aut quasi ex loco procedit, quando procedit ex Filio, sicut ipse Filius cum dicit: De Patre processi et veni in mundum (Joan. XVI, 18), omnes interficit opiniones, quae ex loco ad locum possunt, sicut in aliquibus corporalibus, aestimari. Similiter autem cum aut intus aut foris legimus Deum esse, non utique Deum aut intra aliquod corpus includimus, aut ab aliquo corpore separamus: sed alta hoc et inenarrabili aestimatione pensantes, divinae naturae intelligimus arcanum. 120. Denique ita sapientia ex ore altissimi prodiisse se dicit (Eccl. XXIV, 5), non ut extra Patrem sit; sed apud Patrem; quia Verbum erat apud Deum (Joan. I, 1): nec solum apud Patrem, sed etiam in Patre. Dicit enim: Ego in Patre, et Pater in me est (Joan. XIV, 10). Sed neque cum de Patre exit, de loco recedit, aut quasi corpus a corpore separatur: neque cum in Patre est, quasi in corpore tamquam corpus includitur. Spiritus quoque sanctus cum procedit a Patre et Filio, non separatur a Patre, non separatur a Filio. Quemadmodum enim separari potest a Patre, qui Spiritus oris ejus est (Psal. XXXII, 6)? Quod utique et aeternitatis indicium, et divinitatis exprimit unitatem. 121. Est ergo et manet semper, qui oris est Spiritus: sed descendere videtur, cum illum recipimus, ut habitet in nobis; ne nos simus a gratia ejus alieni. Nobis descendere videtur, non quod ille descendat, sed quod ad illum animus noster ascendat. De quo plenius diceremus, nisi meminissemus in libris jam superioribus (Lib. V de Fide, ca) positum quod et Pater dixerit: Descendamus et confundamus linguas eorum (Gen. XI, 7); et Filius dixerit: Qui diligit me, sermonem meum servabit, et Pater meus diliget eum: et ad eum veniemus, et mansionem apud eum faciemus (Joan. XIV, 23). 122. Sic igitur venit Spiritus, quemadmodum venit Pater; quia ubi Pater est, ibi est et Filius: et ubi Filius est, ibi est Spiritus sanctus. Non ergo discrete venire aestimandus est Spiritus sanctus. Venit autem non de loco ad locum, sed a dispositione constitutionis ad salutem redemptionis, a gratia vivificationis ad gratiam sanctificationis; ut de terris ad coelum, de injuria ad gloriam, de servitio ad regnum transferat. 123. Sic ergo venit Spiritus, quemadmodum venit Pater. Dixit enim Filius: Ego et Pater veniemus, et mansionem apud eum faciemus. Numquid corporaliter Pater venit? Sic ergo et Spiritus 626 venit, in quo cum venit, et Patris et Filii plena praesentia est. 124. Quis autem potest a Patre et Filio Spiritum sanctum separare, cum vel appellare Patrem et Filium sine Spiritu non queamus? Nemo enim dicit Dominum Jesum, nisi in Spiritu sancto (I Cor. XII, 3). Ergo si appellare Dominum Jesum sine Spiritu non possumus, utique sine Spiritu praedicare non possumus. Si autem et angeli praedicant Dominum Jesum, quem nemo potest sine Spiritu praedicare; et in ipsis ergo Spiritus sancti munus operatur. 125. Probavimus igitur unam praesentiam esse, unam gratiam esse Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti: quae tam coelestis atque divina est, ut pro ea agat gratias Patri Filius, dicens: Confiteor tibi, Pater domine coeli et terrae, quod abscondisti haec a sapientibus et prudentibus, et revelasti ea parvulis (Matth. XI, 25)

CAPUT XII.

PATRIS ET FILII et Spiritus sancti unam esse pacem atque gratiam: similiter unam charitatem, quae maxime in hominum redemptione apparuit: unam denique trium communicationem.

126. [Alias cap. XI.] Ergo cum una vocatio sit, una etiam gratia est. Denique scriptum est: Gratia vobis et pax a Deo patre nostro et Domino Jesu Christo (Rom. I, 7). Ecce habemus quia Patris et Filii una est gratia, et Patris et Filii una est pax: sed haec gratia et pax fructus est Spiritus, sicut ipse Apostolus docuit dicens: Fructus autem Spiritus est charitas, gaudium, pax, patientia (Galat. V, 22). Et bona pax et necessaria, ut nemo disputationum turbetur incertis, neque passionum corporalium tempestate quatiatur: sed simplicitate fidei, et tranquillitate mentis quietus circa Dei cultum perseveret affectus. 127. De pace probavimus: de gratia autem propheta Zacharias dicit, quia promisit Deus effundere in Jerusalem Spiritum gratiae et misericordiae (Zach. XII, 10); et apostolus Petrus dicit: Poenitentiam agite, et baptizetur unusquisque vestrum in nomine Domini Jesu Christi, in remissionem peccatorum; et accipietis gratiam Spiritus sancti (Act. II, 38). Ergo sicut Patris et Filii, ita et Spiritus sancti gratia est. Quomodo enim sine Spiritu potest esse gratia, cum gratia divina omnis in Spiritu sancto sit? 128. [Alias cap. XII.] Nec solum pacem et gratiam legimus Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti; sed etiam charitatem, et communionem, fidelis Auguste. De charitate enim dictum est: Gratia Domini nostri Jesu Christi, et charitas Dei (II Cor. XIII, 13). Accepimus charitatem Patris. Eadem charitas quae Patris, etiam Filii est. Ipse enim dixit: Qui me diligit, diligetur a Patre meo, et ego diligam eum (Joan. XIV, 21). Quae est enim charitas Filii, nisi quia se pro nobis obtulit, et suo sanguine nos redemit (Ephes. V, 2)? Eadem autem charitas et in Patre est, quia scriptum est: Sic enim dilexit Deus mundum, ut Filium suum unigenitum daret (Joan. III, 16). 129. Tradidit ergo Pater Filium, et Filius ipse 627 se tradidit. Servatur charitas, nec laeditur pietas; nulla est enim pietatis injuria, ubi nulla est traditionis aerumna. Tradidit volentem, tradidit offerentem, non utique ad poenam Pater Filium, sed ad gratiam. Si discutis facti meritum, interroga pietatis vocabulum. Vas electionis unitatem hanc divinae charitatis evidenter ostendit; quia et Pater tradidit Filium, et Filius ipse se tradidit. Pater tradidit, qui Filio proprio non pepercit, sed pro nobis omnibus tradidit illum (Rom. VIII, 32). De Filio quoque dicit: Qui se tradidit pro me (Galat. II, 20). Tradidit, inquit. Si gratiae, quid arguo? si injuriae, plus debeo. 130. Sed sicut Pater tradidit Filium, et Filius ipse se tradidit, accipe quia et Spiritus eum tradidit. Scriptum est enim: Tunc Jesus ductus est in desertum ab Spiritu, ut tentaretur a diabolo (Matth. IV, 1). Ergo et Spiritus diligens tradidit Dei Filium. Sicut enim una est charitas Patris et Filii, ita hanc charitatem Dei supra effundi per Spiritum sanctum (Rom. V, 5), et fructum esse sancti Spiritus declaravimus; quia fructus est Spiritus charitas, gaudium, pax, patientia (Galat. V, 22). 131. [Alias cap. XIII.] Communicationem autem et Patris et Filii esse manifestum est, quia scriptum est: Et communicatio nostra cum Patre, et Filio ejus Jesu Christo (I Joan. I, 3); et alibi: Communicatio Spiritus sancti cum omnibus vobis (II Cor. XIII, 13). Si igitur una pax, una gratia, una charitas, una communicatio est Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti; una certe operatio est: et ubi una operatio est, utique non potest virtus esse divisa, et discreta substantia. Nam quomodo operationis ejusdem gratia conveniret?

CAPUT XIII.

DIVINARUM TRIUM PERSONARUM unum esse nomen e Scripturis demonstrat Ambrosius: at in primis unitatem nominis Filii ac Spiritus sancti; cum uterque paraclitus dicatur et veritas.

132. [Alias cap. XIV.] Quis igitur unitatem negare audeat nominis, cum operationis videat unitatem? Sed quid ego unitatem nominis argumentis astruo; cum divinae vocis evidens testimonium sit unum nomen esse Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti? Scriptum est enim: Ite, baptizate gentes in nomine Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti (Matth. XXVIII, 19). In nomine dixit, non in nominibus. Non ergo aliud nomen Patris, aliud nomen Filii, aliud nomen Spiritus sancti; quia unus Deus: non plura nomina; quia non duo Dii, non tres Dii (I Cor. VIII, 4). 133. Et ut aperiret quia una divinitas, una majestas est, quia unum nomen Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti; nec in alio nomine venerit Filius, in alio nomine Spiritus sanctus, ait ipse Dominus: Ego veni in nomine Patris mei, et non accepistis me: si alius venerit in nomine suo, illum accipietis (Joan. V, 43). 133*. Quod autem nomen Patris est, hoc idem Filii Scriptura declarat; quia in Exodo dixit Dominus: Ego antecedam te in nomine meo et 628 vocabo in nomine meo Dominum in conspectu tuo (Exod. XXXIII, 19). Dominus ergo dixit quia in nomine suo vocabit Dominum: Dominus ergo et Patris est nomen et Filii.

134. Cum autem unum nomen sit Patris et Filii, accipe quia et Spiritus sancti idem nomen sit, quoniam et Spiritus sanctus in nomine Filii venit, sicut scriptum est: Paraclitus autem Spiritus sanctus quem mittet Pater in nomine meo, ille vos docebit omnia (Joan. XXIV, 26). Qui autem venit in nomine Filii, utique etiam in nomine Patris venit; quia unum nomen Patris et Filii est. Sic fit ut unum et Patris et Filii nomen sit et Spiritus sancti. Nec enim est aliud nomen sub coelo datum, in quo oporteat nos salvos fieri (Act. IV, 12). 135. Simul docuit unitatem divini nominis esse credendam, non disparilitatem; quoniam in unitate nominis venit Christus: in suo autem nomine venturus Antichristus est, sicut scriptum est: Ego veni in nomine Patris mei, et non accepistis me: si alius venerit in nomine suo, illum accipietis (Joan. V, 43).

136. Edoctum est igitur ex his non esse in Patre et Filio et Spiritu sancto paraclito nominis diversitatem: et quod nomen est Patris, id esse etiam Filii nomen: similiter quod nomen est Filii, esse id etiam Spiritus sancti; quando etiam paraclitus Filius dicitur, sicut et Spiritus sanctus. Et ideo ait in Evangelio Dominus Jesus: Rogabo Patrem meum, et alium paraclitum dabit vobis qui vobiscum sit in aeternum Spiritum veritatis (Joan. XIV, 16). Et bene dixit alium, ne ipsum Filium, ipsum Spiritum intelligeres; unitas enim nominis est, non Filii Spiritusque Sabelliana confusio. 137. Edit. Ben. [Alias cap. XV.] Itaque alius paraclitus est Filius, alius paraclitus Spiritus sanctus; Filium enim paraclitum dixit etiam Joannes, sicut habes: Si quis peccaverit, paraclitum habemus apud Patrem Jesum Christum (I Joan. II, 1). Itaque quemadmodum unitas nominis, ita etiam unitas potestatis est; ubi enim paraclitus Spiritus, ibi etiam Filius. 138. Nam sicut hic in aeternum Dominus futurum cum fidelibus Spiritum dicit, ita etiam de se alibi ostendit quod in aeternum cum apostolis sit futurus, dicens: Ecce ego vobiscum sum omnibus diebus usque ad consummationem mundi (Matth. XXVIII, 20). Unum sunt ergo Filius et Spiritus: unum nomen est Trinitatis, et una inseparabilisque praesentia. 139. Sicut autem ostendimus paraclitum Filium nominatum, ita etiam ostendimus veritatem Spiritum nuncupatum. Veritas Christus; veritas Spiritus; habes enim in epistola Joannis: Quoniam Spiritus est veritas (I Joan. V, 6). Non solum ergo Spiritus veritatis, sed etiam veritas dicitur Spiritus, sicut et Filius veritas praedicatur, qui ait: Ego sum via et veritas et vita (I Joan. XIV, 6). 629

CAPUT XIV.

SINGULAS TRINITATIS PERSONAS e sacris codicibus lucem esse; Spiritum autem etiam ignem significari apud Esaiam, cujus quidem ignis in Moysis rubo, in linguis flammeis, et in lagenis Gedeonis figura exstitit. Negari non posse ejusdem Spiritus divinitatem, cum eadem sit ejus, quae Patris et Filii operatio, nec non Dominici vultus lumen ignisque praedicetur.

140. [Alias cap. XVI.] Quid autem astruam quod sicut Pater lumen, ita etiam Filius lumen, et Spiritus sanctus lumen est? Quod utique divinae potentiae est. Deus enim lux est, sicut dixit Joannes: Quia Deus lux est, et tenebrae in eo non sunt (I Joan. I, 5). 141. Lux autem et Filius, quia vita erat lux hominum. Et ut ostenderet se de Dei Filio Evangelista dixisse, ait de Joanne Baptista: Non erat ille lux, sed ut testimonium perhiberet de lumine. Erat lux vera, quae illuminat omnem hominem venientem in hunc mundum (Joan. I, 8, 9). Ergo quia Deus lux est, lux autem vera est Dei Filius: sine dubio Deus verus est Dei Filius. 142. Habes et alibi quia Filius Dei lux est: Populus qui sedebat in tenebris et in umbra mortis, lucem vidit magnam (Esai. IX, 2). Quid autem hoc evidentius, quod ait: Quoniam apud te est fons vitae, et in lumine tuo videbimus lumen (Psal. XXXV, 10)? Hoc est, quod apud te, Deus omnipotens Pater, qui fons vitae es, in lumine tuo Filio, lumen videbimus Spiritus sancti. Sicut ipse Dominus ostendit dicens: Accipite Spiritum sanctum (Joan. XX, 22); et alibi: Et virtus exibat de eo (Luc. VI, 19). 143. Ipsum autem Patrem quis dubitet lucem esse, cum lectum sit de Filio ejus quia splendor sit lucis aeternae (Hebr. I, 3)? Cujus enim nisi Patris aeterni splendor est Filius, qui et cum Patre semper est, nec dissimili, sed eadem claritate semper praefulget? 144. Et Esaias significat non solum lucem, sed etiam ignem esse Spiritum sanctum, dicens: Et erit lux Israel in ignem (Esai. X, 17). Itaque prophetae eum ignem ardentem dixerunt; quia in tribus istis generibus propensius majestatem divinitatis advertimus: quoniam et sanctificare, divinitatis; et illuminare, ignis et lucis est proprium: et in specie ignis exprimi vel videri divinae est consuetudinis: Deus enim est ignis consumens, sicut Moyses dixit (Deut. IV, 24). 145. Vidit enim ipse in rubo ignem, et audierat Deum, tunc quando vox facta est de flamma ignis ad eum dicens: Ego sum Deus Abraham, et Deus Isaac, et Deus Jacob (Exod. III, 15). Vox ergo de flamma, et in rubo flamma, et flamma non noxia. Urebatur enim rubus, et non exurebatur; eo quod illo mysterio Dominus figuraret quia illuminaturus spinas nostri corporis adveniret: nec consumpturus aerumnosos, sed mitigaturus aerumnas: qui baptizaret in Spiritu sancto et igni (Matth. III, 11); 630 ut gratiam tribueret, peccata consumeret. Ergo in specie ignis Deus servat propositum. 146. In Actibus quoque apostolorum cum supra fideles Spiritus sanctus descendisset, ignis species videbatur; sic enim habes: Et factus est subito de coelo sonus, tamquam vi magna Spiritus ferretur; et replevit totam domum, ubi erant sedentes: et visae sunt illis dispersae linguae tamquam ignis (Act. II, 2, 3). 147. Unde et illud quando Gedeon superaturus Madian, trecentos viros jussit hydrias sumere, et in hydriis faces accensas habere, et in dextris tenere tubas (Judic. VII, 16); ita nostri acceptum ab apostolis servavere majores, quod hydriae sunt corpora nostra, figurata de limo quae timere non norunt, si fervore gratiae spiritalis ignescant, et Jesu Domini passionem canora vocis confessione testentur. 148. Quis igitur de divinitate sancti Spiritus dubitet, cum ubi Spiritus gratia sit, ibi species divinitatis appareat? Quo testimonio non diversitatem, sed unitatem divinae colligimus potestatis. Nam quemadmodum potest esse discretio potestatis, ubi unus in omnibus operationis effectus est? Neque vero potest esse gratia sacramentorum, nisi ubi fuerit venia peccatorum. 149. Quis est igitur iste ignis? Non utique virgultis vilibus concretus, aut stipula silvarum fragosus incendiis: sed ignis ille, qui ut aurum bona facta meliorat, et ut stipulam peccata consumit. Hic est utique Spiritus sanctus, qui Dominici vultus et ignis appellatur et lumen: lumen, sicut supra diximus: Signatum est in nobis lumen vultus tui, Domine (Psal. IV, 7). Quod est ergo lumen signatum, nisi illius signaculi spiritalis, in quo credentes signati, inquit, estis Spiritu promissionis sancto (Ephes. I, 13)? 150. [Alias cap. XVII.] Et sicut lumen est vultus divini, ita etiam ignis emicat ex Dei vultu; quia scriptum est: Ignis in conspectu ejus ardebit (Psal. XLIX, 3). Praefulget enim gratia diei judicii, ut sequatur absolutio, quae sanctorum remuneretur obsequium. O magna abundantia Scripturarum, quam nemo possit humano ingenio comprehendere! O maximum divinae unitatis indicium! His enim duobus versiculis quam multa signantur!

CAPUT XV.

SPIRITUM SANCTUM AEQUE ac Patrem et Filium vitam esse; immo vero sive Pater intelligatur, apud quem est fons vitae, sive Filius, fontem illum aliud non esse quam Spiritum.

151. [Alias cap. XVIII.] Diximus quia lux est Pater, lux Filius, lux Spiritus sanctus: accipiamus etiam quia vita est Pater, vita Filius, vita Spiritus sanctus. Dixit enim Joannes: Quod erat ab initio, quod audivimus et quod vidimus, et oculis nostris perspeximus, et manus nostrae scrutatae sunt de Verbo vitae: et vita apparuit, et vidimus et testamur et annuntiamus vobis de vita, quae erat apud Patrem (I Joan. I, 1, 2). Et Verbum vitae dixit et vitam; ut 631 et Patrem vitam significaret et Filium. Quod enim est vitae Verbum, nisi Dei Verbum? Ac per hoc et Deus et Verbum Dei vita est. Et sicut Verbum vitae dicitur, ita et Spiritus vitae. Scriptum est enim: Et Spiritus vitae erat in rotis (Ezech. I, 20). Itaque sicut Verbum vitae vita est, ita et vitae Spiritus vita est. 152. [Alias cap. XIX.] Accipe nunc quia sicut Pater fons vitae est, ita etiam Filium plerique fontem vitae memorarunt significatum; eo quod apud te, inquit, Deus omnipotens, Filius tuus fons vitae sit, hoc est, fons Spiritus sancti; quia Spiritus vita est, sicut Dominus ait: Verba quae ego locutus sum vobis, spiritus et vita sunt (Joan. VI, 64) quia ubi Spiritus, et vita est: et ubi vita est, etiam Spiritus sanctus. 153. Plerique tamen hoc loco Patrem volunt tantummodo per fontem significatum, quamquam videant quid Scriptura memoraverit: Apud te, inquit, fons vitae (Psal. XXXV, 10), hoc est, apud Patrem Filius; quoniam Verbum apud Deum, quod erat in principio, et erat apud Deum. 154. Sed sive Patrem quis hoc loco, sive Filium intelligat fontem; fontem utique intelligimus non aquae istius, quae creatura est: sed divinae illius gratiae, hoc est, Spiritus sancti; ipse est enim aqua viva. Propterea Dominus dicit: Si scires donum Dei, et quis est qui dicit tibi: Da mihi bibere; tu petisses ab eo, et dedisset tibi aquam vivam (Joan. IV, 10). 155. Hanc aquam sitivit anima David (Psal. XLI, 3). Harum fontem aquarum desiderat cervus, non sitiens venena serpentum. Viva est enim aqua gratiae spiritalis, eo quod mentis interna purificet, et omne animi peccatum abluat, occultorumque mundet errorem.

CAPUT XVI.

SPIRITUM SANCTUM FLUMEN esse magnum, cujus munere mystica Jerusalem irrigatur. Eumdem fonti suo, id est, Patri ac Filio aequalem esse, atque in Scriptura significari. Illius aquam sitit Doctor sanctus: sed ut ea conservetur in nobis, diabolum, cupiditatem, ac haeresim admonet vitari oportere; cum nobis vasa sint fragilia: descrendos etiam contritos lacus, ut Domini aquam Samaritanae patriarcharumque exemplo inveniamus.

156. [Alias cap. XX.[Sed ne quis forte tamquam pusillitatem Spiritus redarguat, et hinc velit quamdam facere distantiam magnitudinis, quod aqua portio videatur esse fontis exigua: quamquam creaturarum exempla minime divinitati aptanda videantur; tamen ne quid ex hac quoque creaturae comparatione praejudicent, discant non solum aquam, sed etiam flumen dictum Spiritum sanctum, secundum quod lectum est: Flumina de ventre ejus fluent aquae vivae. Hoc autem 632 dicebat de Spiritu, quem incipiebant accipere, qui credituri erant in eum (Joan. VII, 38, 39). 157. Ergo flumen est Spiritus sanctus, et flumen maximum, quod secundum Hebraeos de Jesu fluxit in terris, ut ore Esaiae accepimus prophetatum (Esai. LXVI, 12). Magnum hoc flumen, quod fluit semper, et numquam deficit. Nec solum flumen, sed etiam profusi impetus, et magnitudinis redundantis, sicut etiam David dixit: Quia fluminis impetus laetificat civitatem Dei (Psal. XLV, 5). 158. Neque enim civitas illa Jerusalem coelestis meatu alicujus fluvii terrestris abluitur: sed ille ex vitae fonte procedens Spiritus sanctus, cujus nos brevi satiamur haustu, in illis coelestibus Thronis, Dominationibus et Potestatibus, Angelis et Archangelis redundantius videtur effluere, pleno septem virtutum spiritalium fervens meatu. Si enim fluvius riparum editis superfusus exundat, quanto magis Spiritus omnem supereminens creaturam, cum reliqua tamquam inferiora nostrae mentis arva perstringat, coelestem illam creaturarum naturam effusiore quadam sanctificationis ubertate laetificat! 159. Nec moveat quod vel hic dixit flumina (Joan. VII, 38), vel alibi septem spiritus (Apoc. V, 6); his enim sanctificationibus septem spiritalium, sicut Esaias dixit (Esai. XI, 2), significatur plenitudo virtutum: spiritus sapientiae et intellectus, spiritus consilii atque virtutis, spiritus cognitionis atque pietatis, spiritus timoris Dei. Unum ergo flumen, sed multi spiritalium donorum meatus. Hoc igitur flumen exit ex fonte vitae. 160. Nec hic rursus sensum tuum ad inferiora detorqueas, quia quaedam diversitas videtur esse fontis et fluminis; et tamen ad omnia prospexit Scriptura divina, ne infirmitas humani caperetur ingenii vilitate sermonum. Proponas tibi licet quodvis flumen, e fonte est; unius tamen naturae, unius splendoris et gratiae. Dic sane et tu Spiritum sanctum unius cum Filio Dei et Deo Patre esse substantiae, unius claritatis et gloriae. Capiam fidele compendium de unitate virtutis, nec verebor aliquam de diversitate magnitudinis quaestionem. Nam etiam in hoc nobis Scriptura prospexit; dicit enim Dei Filius: Qui biberit de aqua, quam ego dabo ei, fiet in eo fons aquae salientis in vitam aeternam (Joan. IV, 14). Hic fons utique gratia spiritalis est fluvius ex vivo fonte procedens. Fons igitur vitae etiam Spiritus sanctus est. 161. Advertis ergo ex verbis ipsius divinae significari magnitudinis unitatem, nec posse Christum etiam a perfidis fontem negari; cum fons dicatur et Spiritus. Et sicut flumen dicitur Spiritus, ita et Pater dixit: Ecce ego decurro in vos, sicut fluvius pacis, et sicut torrens inundans gloriam gentium (Esai. LXVI, 12). 633 Quis autem dubitet flumen esse vitae Dei Filium, de quo aeternae vitae flumina profluebant? 162. Bona ergo aqua, spiritalis gratia: quis hunc fontem dabit pectori meo? In me saliat; in me fluat vitae largitor aeternae. Superfluat in nobis fons iste, non effluat. Dicit enim sapientia: Bibe aquam de tuis vasis, et de puteorum tuorum fontibus, inque plateis tuis superfluant aquae tuae (Prov. V, 15, 16). Quomodo hanc aquam tenebo, ne effluat, ne labatur? Quomodo vas meum conservabo, ne qua penetrans rima peccati, aeternae vitae distillet humorem? Doce nos, Domine Jesu, doce sicut docuisti apostolos tuos, dicens: Nolite thesaurizare vobis thesauros in terra, ubi aerugo et tinea exterminat, et ubi fures effodiunt et furantur (Matth. VI, 19). 163. Furem videlicet immundum spiritum esse significat, qui in bonorum operum luce gradientibus non possit obrepere: in tenebris autem saecularium cupiditatum, et inter oblectamenta terrestrium si quem ceperit voluptatum, omni virtutis aeternae flore despoliet. Et ideo Dominus dicit: Thesaurizate vobis thesauros in coelo: ubi neque aerugo neque tinea exterminat; et ubi fures non effodiunt et furantur. Ubi enim fuerit thesaurus tuus, ibi erit et cor tuum. 164. Aerugo nostra lascivia est, aerugo nostra libido est, aerugo nostra luxuria est, quae flagitiorum sordibus aciem mentis obducunt. Tinea rursus nostra Arius est, tinea nostra Photinus est, qui sanctum Ecclesiae vestimentum impietate sua scindunt; et unitatem divinae potestatis 634 individuam separare cupientes, sacrilego morsu pretiosum fidei velamen obrodunt. Funditur aqua, si Arius dentem impresserit: effluit, si aculeum suum in alicujus vas Photinus infixerit. Vile figmentum sumus, cito vitia sentimus. Sed nemo dicit figulo: Quid me fecisti sic (Rom. IX, 20)? Nam etsi vile vas nostrum, aliud tamen in honore, aliud in contumelia est. Noli ergo aperire lacum tuum, noli fodere vitiis atque criminibus, ne quis dicat: Lacum aperuit, et effodit eum: et incidit in foveam, quam operatus est (Psal. VII, 16). 165. Si Jesum quaeritis, contritos lacus deserite; Christus enim non ad lacum, sed ad puteum sedere consuevit. Ibi eum Samaritana illa quae credidit, illa quae aquam haurire cupiebat, invenit (Joan. IV, 6). Quamvis mane venire debueris, tamen etiamsi serius veneris, etiam sexta hora Jesum fatigatum ab itinere invenies. Fatigatus est, sed in te; quia diu te quaesivit, tua illum tamdiu incredulitas fatigavit. Non offenditur tamen, si modo venias: petit bibere, daturus. Bibit autem non aquam praetermeantis rivuli, sed salutem tuam: bibit affectum tuum, bibit calicem, hoc est, passionem illam tuorum criminum redemptricem; ut tu sitim istius mundi, sacri potus cruore restinguas. 166. Sic Abraham Deum posteaquam puteum fodit, emeruit (Gen. XXI, 30). Sic Isaac dum ad puteum deambulat (Gen. XXIV, 62), venientem illam in typo Ecclesiae accepit uxorem (Ibid., 67). Fidelis ad puteum, infidelis ad lacum. Denique et Rebecca sicut legimus, petitorem invenit ad fontem, et meretrices in lacu Jezabel se cruore laverunt (III Reg. XXII).

LIBER SECUNDUS.

PROLOGU TRES DIVINAS personas ut priscis judicibus ita et Moysi non fuisse ignotas: declaratam etiam cum alibi tum apud illum Filii cum Patre, non secus ac trium inter se aequalitatem. Spiritum sanctum adfuisse Samsoni, cujus deinceps percurritur mira historia et variis Ecclesiae mysteriis aptatur. Eodem autem Spiritu recedente, ipsum in multiplices incidisse calamitates, quod resecatis capillis ne tribuatur, spiritales illorum significationes proponit Ambrosius. 1. Etsi in libro primo veteris historiae lectione patefactum sit; et in ipsis judicibus veterum Judaeorum septiformis gratiam Spiritus refulsisse, et per Spiritum sanctum coelestium sacramentorum revelata mysteria, quem Moyses non ignoravit aeternum. Denique statim in principio mundi, immo ante principium, cum Deo junxit, quem ante mundi principium sempiternum esse cognovit. Namque si quis diligenter 634 advertat, et Patrem in principio et Filium cognoscet et Spiritum. De Patre enim scriptum est: In principio fecit Deus coelum et terram (Gen. I, 1, 2). De Spiritu dictum est: Spiritus superferebatur super aquas (Ibid., 4). Et bene in exordio creaturae baptismi figura signatur, per quod habuit creatura mundari. Lectum etiam de Filio quod ipse est, qui discrevit inter medium lucis et tenebrarum; unus est enim Deus Pater qui dicit, et unus Dominus Jesus qui facit.

2. Sed ne rursus aut arrogans putes dicentis imperium, aut vile facientis obsequium; aequalem sibi Pater Filium confitetur operis unitate dicens: Faciamus hominem ad imaginem et similitudinem nostram (Ibid., 26). Imago enim et operatio et similitudo communis quid aliud nisi majestatis ejusdem significat unitatem? 3. Tamen ut aequalitatem plenius Patris

Filiique cognoscas, sicut dixit Pater et Filius fecit; ita et Pater operatur, et Filius dicit. Pater operatur, sicut scriptum est: Pater meus usque modo operatur (Joan. V, 17). 635 Habes dictum ad Filium: Dic verbo et sanabitur (Matth. VIII, 8). Et Filius dicit Patri: Volo ut ubi ego sum, et isti sint mecum (Joan. XVII, 24). Fecit Pater quod Filius dixit. 4. Sed nec Abraham ignoravit Spiritum sanctum: denique tres vidit, et unum adoravit (Gen. XVIII, 2, 3,); quia unus Deus, unus Dominus, et unus Spiritus. Et ideo unitas honoris; quia unitas potestatis. 5. Et quid de singulis loquar? Samson divina promissione generatus, Spiritum comitantem habebat; sic enim legimus: Quia benedixit ei Dominus, et coepit Spiritus Domini comitari cum eo in castra (Judic. XIII, 25). Et ideo futurum praevidens sacramentum, ex alienigenis poscebat uxorem (Judic. XIV, 1 et seq.): quod Pater ejus ac mater, ut scriptum est, ignorabant, quoniam a Domino est. Meritoque fortior caeteris habebatur, quia eum Spiritus Domini dirigebat, quo duce, solus nunc alienigenarum fugabat populos, nunc leonem morsu inviolabilis, fortitudine insuperabilis, discerptum manibus dividebat (Ibid. 5 et seq.). Utinam tam cautus ad servandam gratiam, quam fortis ad superandam bestiam! 6. Et fortasse hoc non solum virtutis miraculum, sed etiam sapientiae mysterium, prophetiae oraculum fuit. Neque enim otiosum videtur quod cum tenderet ad mysterium nuptiarum, leo rugiens occurrit ei, quem manibus ille discerpsit, in cujus corpore, connubio potiturus optato, congregationem apum reperit, et mel sustulit de ore ejus, quod Patri edendum matrique tribuit (Ibid., 8 et seq.). Habebat gentium populus mella, qui credidit: qui populus feritatis erat ante, nunc Christi est. 7. Nec ipsa quaestio vacat sacramentis, quam proposuit sodalibus suis, dicens: De edente exivit esca, et de potente exivit dulce (Ibid., 14). Denique eo usque mystica, ut tribus diebus ejus revelatio quaereretur, quae non potuit nisi per fidem Ecclesiae. die septima, completo Legis tempore, post passionem Domini revelari. Sic enim habes, quia et apostoli ideo non intelligebant, quia Jesus nondum fuerat honorificatus (Joan. VII, 39). 8. Quid, inquiunt, dulcius melle, et quid fortius leone? Ad quae ille respondit: Si non domuissetis vitulam meam, non invenissetis quaestionem meam (Judic. XIV, 18). O divinum mysterium! O evidens sacramentum! Evasimus interemptorem, potentem vicimus. Ibi nunc cibus vitae est, ubi erat ante miserae fames mortis. In salutem pericula, in suavitatem amaritudo convertitur. Gratia ex offensione processit, potentia ex infirmitate, vita de morte. 9. Sunt tamen qui e contrario putent fundari 636 non potuisse conjugium, nisi occiso leone de tribu Juda: et ideo in corpore ejus, hoc est, Ecclesiae, apes repertas, quae condunt mella sapientiae; quia post Domini passionem magis apostoli crediderunt. Hunc igitur leonem Samson quasi Judaeus occidit, sed in eo mel quasi in figura redimendae haereditatis invenit; ut reliquiae salvae fierent secundum electionem gratiae (Rom. XI, 27). 10. Et decidit, inquit, super eum Spiritus Domini, et descendit in Ascalonem, et percussit inde triginta viros (Judic. XIV, 19, 20). Neque enim potuerat victoriam non tenere, qui sacramenta cernebat. Accipiunt itaque in stolis praemium sapientiae, conversationis insigne, qui absolvunt et renuntiant quaestionem. 11. Rursus hic alia oboriuntur mysteria, quod uxor ejus aufertur; et ideo vulpes incendunt manipulos alienigenarum (Judic. XV, 1 et seq.). Eos enim qui adversus divina sacramenta contendunt, decipere sua consuevit astutia. Unde iterum dicit in Canticis canticorum: Prendite nobis vulpes pusillas exterminantes vineas, ut vineae nostrae floreant (Cant. II, 15). Bene pusillas dixit; quia majores vineas exterminare non poterant, licet fortibus et diabolus sit pusillus. 12. Ergo ille (ut compendium faciamus historiae; suo enim tempori totius lectionis digestio reservanda est) invictus erat, quamdiu habuit gratiam spiritalem, sicut Dei populus ille electus a Domino, ille Nazaraeus in Lege. Invictus ergo Samson, atque ita insuperabilis, ut in maxilla asini viros mille percuteret: ita plenus gratiae coelestis, ut etiam aquam in maxilla asini sitiens reperiret (Judic. XV, 15 et seq.); sive hoc ad miraculum conferas, sive ad mysterium vertas, quod in populi foret humilitate gentilis et requies et triumphus. Juxta quod scriptum est: Qui te percusserit in maxillam, praebe ei et alteram (Matth. V, 39). Per hanc enim injuriarum patientiam, quam erudiunt sacramenta baptismatis, de quibusdam stimulis iracundiae triumphamus; ut morte obita, resurrectionis requiem consequamur. 13. Illene ergo Samson, qui funes intextos nervis, qui novas restes sicut mollia fila dissolvit? Illene Samson qui crinium suorum palo constricta defixo vincla non sensit, quamdiu habuit gratiam spiritalem? Is, inquam, posteaquam Spiritus Dei discessit ab eo, longe mutatus ab illo Samsone, qui rediit Allophylorum indutus exuvias, in muliebribus genibus virtutis suae degener, palpatus et captus sacro crine tondetur (Judic. XVI, 9 et seq.)? 14. Tantumne ergo momenti crines habuere capitis, ut manentibus his, virtus invicta duraret: tonso autem capite, fortitudo omnis viri 637 subito solveretur? Non ita est, ut tantam vim corporalium capillorum putemus. Sunt quidam crines religionis et fidei: crines Nazaraei in Lege perfecti, in parcimonia et abstinentia consecrati, quibus illa in typo Ecclesia, quae Domini pedes oleo perfuderat, Verbi coelestis vestigia detergebat (Joan. XII, 3); tunc enim et secundum carnem noverat Christum. Isti videlicet crines, de quibus dicitur: Capillatura tua ut greges caprarum (Cantic. IV, 1); ex illo capite pullulantes, de quo dictum est: Caput viri, Christus (I Cor. XI, 3); et alibi: Caput ejus aurum cephas, et crines ejus abietes nigrae (Cant. V, 11). Et bonae ex abiete naves Tharsis, quae fluctibus supernatent mundi, et tutum remigium salutis exhibeant. 15. Unde et in Evangelio Dominus noster visibiles capitis et intelligibiles capillos quosdam esse significans, ait: Sed et capilli capitis vestri omnes numerati sunt (Matth. X, 31), spiritalium videlicet significans facta virtutum; neque enim de capillis nostris cura est Deo. Quamquam et illud non absurdum sit aestimare, quia pro majestate divina eum latere nihil possit. 16. Sed quid mihi prodest, si Deus ipse omnes meos novit capillos?

Illud mihi redundat et proficit, si bonorum operum pervigil testis, remunerationem gloriae donet aeternae. Denique et ipse Samson non corporales, sed intelligibiles hos capillos esse declarans ait: Et si tonsus fuero, discedet a me virtus mea (Judic. XVI, 17). Hoc de mysterio: nunc lectionis seriem consideremus.

CAPUT PRIMUM.

SPIRITUM DOMINI ETIAM Dominum ac virtutem esse, nec in hoc Patri vel Filio inferiorem.

17. Supra habes quia Benedixit ei Dominus, et coepit Spiritus Domini comitari cum eo (Judic. XIII, 24, 25). Infra ait: Et direxit super eum Spiritus Domini (Judic. XIV, 6). Item ait: Si tonsus fuero, discedet a me virtus mea (Judic. XVI, 17). Posteaquam tonsus est, vide Scriptura quid dicat: Dominus, inquit, discessit ab eo (Ibid., 20). 18. Vides ergo quia ille qui comitabatur, ipse discessit. Idem est ergo Dominus, qui Spiritus Domini, hoc est, ipsum Spiritum Dei, Dominum nuncupavit, sicut et Apostolus ait: Dominus autem Spiritus est: ubi autem Spiritus Domini, ibi libertas (II Cor. III, 17). Habes ergo Dominum dictum etiam Spiritum sanctum; non enim unus, sed unum sunt Spiritus sanctus et Filius. 19. Hoc quoque loco virtutem dixit, et Spiritum significavit. Sicut enim Pater virtus, ita et Filius virtus, et Spiritus sanctus est virtus (I Joan. V, 7). De Filio legisti, Christum Dei virtutem esse, et Dei sapientiam (I Cor. I, 24). Legimus etiam quia virtus est Pater, sicut scriptum est: Videbitis Filium hominis sedentem ad dexteram virtutis Dei (Matth. XXVI, 64). Hic utique virtutem Patrem dixit, cujus ad dexteram Filius sedet, sicut habes: Dixit Dominus 638 Domino meo: Sede ad dexteram meam (Psal. CIX, 1). Virtutem etiam Spiritum sanctum ipse Dominus nuncupavit dicens: Accipietis virtutem, adveniente in vos Spiritu sancto (Act. I, 8).

CAPUT II.

UNUM ESSE PATRIS et Filii et Spiritus sancti consilium.

20. Ipse enim Spiritus virtus est, quia legisti: Spiritum consilii atque virtutis (Esai. XI, 2). Et sicut Filius magni consilii Angelus, ita etiam Spiritus consilii est, ut unum scias Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti esse consilium. Consilium non de rebus incertis aliquibus, sed praecognitis et statutis. 21. Arbitrum autem divini consilii Spiritum, etiam inde cognosce. Nam cum supra (Lib. I, ca) docuerimus arbitrum baptismatis esse Spiritum sanctum, baptismum autem Dei esse consilium legerimus sicut habes: Pharisaei autem consilium Dei spreverunt in se, non baptizati ab eo (Luc. VII, 30); liquido claret, cum sine Spiritu baptisma esse non possit, sine Spiritu quoque non esse consilium Dei. 22. Et ut sciamus plenius virtutem esse Spiritum, scire debemus ipsum esse promissum, quando dixit Dominus: Effundam de Spiritu meo super omnem carnem (Joel. II, 28). Ille ergo qui promissus est nobis, ipse est virtus; sicut etiam in Evangelio idem Dei Filius declaravit dicens: Et ego mitto promissa Patris mei in vos, vos autem sedete in civitate, quousque induamini virtute ex alto (Luc. XXII, 49). 23. Eousque autem virtutem esse Spiritum sanctum evangelista significat, ut et cum vi magna eum sanctus Lucas descendisse memoraret, dicens: Et factus est subito de coelo sonus, tamquam vi magna Spiritus ferretur (Act. II, 2). 24. Sed ne rursus putes ad sensibilia et corporalia hoc esse vertendum, accipe quia sic descendit et Spiritus, quemadmodum descensurus est Christus. Nam et ipse cum virtute descendet, sicut habes: Videbunt Filium hominis venientem in nubibus coeli, in virtute maxima et majestate (Matth. XXIV, 30). 25. Quomodo enim non est una virtus atque eadem potestas; cum unum opus, unum judicium, unum templum, una vivificatio, una sanctificatio, unum etiam regnum sit Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti?

CAPUT III.

SICUT VITA EST cognoscere Patrem et Filium, ita vitam esse cognoscere Spiritum sanctum; proindeque a Patris divinitate non separandum.

26. Dicant enim in quo dissimilitudinem divini operis arbitrentur. Quandoquidem sicut vita est cognoscere Patrem et Filium, quemadmodum ipse Dominus declaravit dicens: 639 Haec est autem vita aeterna, ut cognoscant te solum verum Deum, et quem misisti Jesum Christum (Joan. XVII, 3); ita etiam vita est cognoscere Spiritum sanctum. Dicit enim Dominus: Si diligitis me, mandata mea servate: et ego rogabo Patrem, et alium paraclitum dabit vobis, ut maneat vobiscum in aeternum, Spiritum veritatis, quem mundus non potest accipere; quia non videt eum, nec cognoscit eum: vos autem scitis eum, quia apud vos manet, et in vobis est (Ibid. XIV, 15 et seq.). 27. Ergo mundus non habebat vitam aeternam, quia non acceperat Spiritum: ubi autem Spiritus, ibi vita aeterna: ipse est enim Spiritus vitae operator aeternae. Unde miror, cur de solo et vero Deo Ariani moveant quaestionem. Sicut enim vita aeterna est cognoscere solum et verum Deum, ita vita aeterna est cognoscere Jesum Christum, ita vita aeterna est cognoscere Spiritum sanctum: quem sic non videt mundus, quemadmodum Patrem: sic non cognoscit, quemadmodum Filium. Qui autem de hoc mundo non est, habet vitam aeternam, et cum ipso manet Spiritus in aeternum, qui est lumen vitae aeternae. 28. Ergo si hoc confert cognitio solius veri Dei, quod confert Filii Spiritusque cognitio, cur Filium et Spiritum a veri Dei honore secernis, cum a magnitudine beneficii non secernas? Aut enim credas necesse est solius verae divinitatis esse hoc maximum munus, et solam et veram divinitatem sicut et Patris, ita et Filii et Spiritus confitebere: aut si dixeris quia vitam aeternam potest et is conferre, qui verus Deus non sit; incides ut Patri magis derogare videaris, cujus opus non putes solius verae divinitatis esse praecipuum, sed creaturae operibus conferendum.

CAPUT IV.

SPIRITUM SANCTUM NON secus ac Patrem et Filium, operatione non diversa vivificare.

29. Quid autem mirum si Spiritus operator est vitae, qui vivificat sicut Pater, vivificat sicut Filius (Joan. V, 21)? Vivificare autem quis abnuat esse majestatis aeternae? Scriptum est enim: Vivifica servum tuum (Psal. CXVIII, 17). Vivificatur ergo qui servus est, hoc est, homo, qui vitam ante non habuit, sed ut haberet, accepit. 30. Videamus igitur utrum vivificetur Spiritus, an ipse vivificet. Sed scriptum est: Littera occidit, Spiritus autem vivificat (II Cor. III, 6). Ergo vivificat Spiritus. 31. Sed ut intelligas Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti vivificationem non esse divisam, accipe quia vivificationis quoque unitas sit; quando ipse per Spiritum vivificat Deus; dixit enim Paulus: Qui suscitavit Christum ex mortuis, vivificabit et mortalia corpora vestra propter inhabitantem Spiritum ejus in vobis (Rom. VIII, 11). 640

CAPUT V.

SICUT PATREM AC Filium, ita etiam Spiritum creatorem in Scriptura significari. Hoc ipsum a paganis quoque scriptoribus adumbratum: sed planissime demonstratum esse in mysterio incarnationis, de qua ubi delibavit Ambrosius nonnulla, coeptum argumentum ex eo quod adoratio, quae soli debetur creatori, etiam Spiritui debeatur, confirmat.

32. Quis vero dubitare potest quia vivificet omnia Spiritus sanctus, quando et ipse sicut Pater et Filius, creator est omnium, nec quidquam nisi cum Spiritu sancto Deus omnipotens Pater intelligatur operatus; quandoquidem et in principio creaturae Spiritus superferebatur super aquam (Gen. I, 1)? 33. Itaque cum superferebatur Spiritus, nulla erat gratia creaturae: postea vero quam operationem Spiritus etiam creatura mundi istius suscepit, omnem hanc gratiae meruit venustatem, qua mundus illuxit. Denique sine Spiritu sancto universitatis gratiam manere non posse Propheta declaravit dicens: Auferes Spiritum eorum, et deficient, et in pulverem suum revertentur. Emitte Spiritum tuum, et creabuntur, et innovabis omnem faciem terrae (Psal. CIII, 29, 30). Non solum igitur sine Spiritu docuit omnem creaturam stare non posse, sed etiam creatorem totius esse Spiritum creaturae. 34. Et quis neget opus esse Spiritus sancti quod creata est terra, cujus opus est quod novatur? Nam si negare cupiant quod per Spiritum sit creata; cum per Spiritum novandam negare non possint; meliorem ergo operationem Spiritus sancti, quam Patris et Filii, qui cupiunt separare, defendent: quod abhorret a vero; neque enim dubium est quod novata terra melior, quam creata sit. Aut si primo sine operatione Spiritus sancti terram Pater fecit et Filius: postea vero Spiritus sancti operatio copulabatur; videbitur id quod factum est, ejus quod accessit eguisse praesidio. Sed absit ut hoc quisquam existimet, ut operatio divina varietatem creatoris quam Manichaeus inducit, habere credatur. 35. An vero sine opere Spiritus sancti substantiam putamus esse terrarum, sine cujus opere nec coeli convexa subsistunt? Scriptum est enim: Verbo Domini coeli firmati sunt, et Spiritu oris ejus omnis virtus eorum (Psal. XXXII, 6). Adverte quid dicat: Omnem, inquit, virtutem coelorum ad Spiritum esse referendam. Qui enim superferebatur, antequam terra fieret, quomodo cum terra fieret, feriabatur? 36. Gentiles homines per umbram quamdam nostros secuti, quia veritatem Spiritus haurire non poterant; quod coelum ac terras, lunae 641 quoque stellarumque micantium globos Spiritus intus alat, suis versibus indiderunt. Ergo illi per Spiritum non negant virtutem subsistere creaturae: nos qui legimus, denegamus? Sed flatilem putatis ab illis spiritum designatum. Si illi auctorem omnium flatilem Spiritum declararunt, nos dubitamus Spiritum Dei esse omnium creatorem? 37. Sed quid alienis immoror? Accipiant documentum evidens, nihil posse esse quod Spiritus sanctus negetur operatus, nec de Angelis, nec de Archangelis, nec de Thronis, nec de Dominationibus posse dubitari, quod ejus operatione subsistant; quandoquidem ipse secundum carnem Dominus, cui angeli serviebant, Spiritu in Virginem superveniente, genitus sit; sicut et secundum Matthaeum ad Joseph angelus dixit: Joseph, fili David, noli timere accipere Mariam uxorem tuam; quod enim ex ea nascetur, de Spiritu sancto est (Matth. I, 20). Et secundum Lucam dixit ad Mariam: Spiritus sanctus superveniet in te (Luc. I, 35). 38. Opus ergo Spiritus Virginis partus est. Opus Spiritus fructus est ventris, secundum quod scriptum est: Benedicta tu inter mulieres, et benedictus fructus ventris tui (Ibid., 42). Opus Spiritus flos radicis est: ille, inquam, flos, de quo bene est prophetatum: Exiet virga de radice Jesse, et flos de radice ejus ascendet (Esa. XI, 1). Radix Jesse patriarchae familia Judaeorum, virga Maria, flos Mariae Christus; qui bonum odorem fidei toto sparsurus orbe, virginali ex utero germinavit, sicut ipse dixit: Ego flos campi, et lilium convallium (Cant. II, 1). 39. Flos odorem suum et succisus reservat, et contritus accumulat, nec avulsus amittit; ita et Dominus Jesus in illo patibulo crucis, nec contritus emarcuit, nec avulsus evanuit; et illa lanceae punctione succisus, sacro speciosior fusi cruoris colore vernavit, mori ipse nescius, et mortuis aeternae vitae munus exhalans. In hoc igitur Spiritus sanctus virgae regalis flore requievit. 40. Bona virga, ut quidam putant, est caro Domini, quae de radice terrena ad superna se subrigens, odoriferos sacrae fructus religionis circumtulit mundo, mysteria divinae generationis, et gratiam coelestibus altaribus superfundens. 41. Dubitare ergo non possumus Spiritum creatorem, quem Dominicae cognoscimus incarnationis auctorem. Quis enim dubitet, cum in principio Evangelii habeas, quia Christi generatio 642 sic erat: Cum desponsata esset Maria Joseph, antequam convenirent, inventa est in utero habens ex Spirituc santo (Matth. I, 18) ? 42. Nam licet plerique habeant, de Spiritu, Graecus tamen unde transtulerunt Latini, ἐκ Πνεύματος ἁγίου dixit, hoc est, ex Spiritu sancto. Quod enim ex aliquo est, aut ex substantia est, aut ex potestate ejus. Ex substantia, sicut Filius, qui ait: Ex ore Altissimi prodivi, sicut Spiritus, qui a Patre procedit (Eccl. XXIV, 5); de quo dicit Filius: Ille me clarificabit; quia de meo accipiet (Joan. XVI, 14). Ex potestate autem, sicut illud est: Unus Deus Pater, ex quo omnia (I Cor. VIII, 6). 43. Quomodo ergo in utero habuit Maria ex Spiritu sancto? Si quasi ex substantia: ergo Spiritus in carnem et ossa conversus est? Non utique. Si quasi ex operatione et potestate ejus Virgo concepit; quis neget Spiritum creatorem? 44. Quid quod etiam Job creatorem suum Spiritum evidenter ostendit dicens: Spiritus divinus, qui fecit me (Job. XXXIII, 4)? Et divinum utique et creatorem uno versiculo demonstravit. [Alias cap. VI.] Si igitur creator est Spiritus, non est utique creatura; creaturam enim Apostolus creatoremque divisit dicens: Servierunt creaturae potius quam creatori

(Rom. I, 25). 45. Simul creatori admonet serviendum, damnando eos qui serviunt creaturae, cum creatori servitium debeamus. Et quoniam creatorem Spiritum noverat, docet eidem serviendum, dicens: Videte canes, videte malos operarios, videte concisionem; nos enim sumus circumcisio, qui Spiritui Dei servimus (Philip. III, 2, 3). 46. Quod si quis de Latinorum codicum varietate contendit, quorum aliquos perfidi falsaverunt, Graecos inspiciat codices, et advertat quia ibi scriptum est: οἱ Πνεύματι Θεοῦ λατρεύοντες, quod interpretatur Latinus: qui Spiritui Dei servimus. 47. Ergo cum serviendum dicat Spiritui idem Apostolus, qui non creaturae, sed creatori asserit serviendum; evidenter utique et ipse sanctum ostendit Spiritum creatorem, et in aeternae divinitatis honore venerandum; quia scriptum est: Dominum Deum tuum adorabis, et ipsi soli servies (Matth. IV, 10). 643

CAPUT VI.

OBJICIENTIBUS EX VERBIS Amos creari Spiritum, reponitur hanc vocem illic intelligendam de vento, qui saepius creatur: quod sane dici non potest de Spiritu sancto; quippe qui et aeternus sit, nec morte, aut haeretica in Patrem refusione resolvi possit. Quod si urgeant pervicacius eumdem locum de Spiritu sancto scriptum fuisse, docet recurrendum ad expositionem spiritualem; Christum enim adventu suo tonitrua, id est, verborum divinorum vim firmavisse: per Spiritum autem humanam animam significari, sicut et carnem a Christo susceptam. Hujus porro cum quaelibet Trinitatis persona vere sit creatrix, inde astruitur Spiritum similiter incarnationis Domini auctorem esse, qui rerum omnium creator jam ante assertus est.

48. [Alias cap. VII.] Nec me praeterit haereticos objectare consuevisse ideo videri creatum Spiritum sanctum, quia plerique eorum ad argumentum astruendae suae impietatis adsciscunt illud, quod Amos de flatu ventorum locutus est, ut ipse propheticus sermo declarat. Sic enim habes: Ecce ego firmans tonitruum, et creans spiritum, et nuntians in homines Christum suum, faciens lucem et nebulam, et ascendens super excelsa, Dominus Deus omnipotens nomen est ei (Amos. IV, 13). 49. Si hinc faciunt quaestionem, quod creatum Spiritum dixit, quia creatur Spiritus Esdras nos docuit, dicens in quarto libro: Et in die secundo iterum creasti spiritum firmamenti (IV Esdr. VI, 41); tamen ut propositis inhaereamus, his videlicet quae Amos dixit, nonne evidenter dictorum testificatur series de istius creatura mundi locutum prophetam? 50. Denique ita coepit: Ego Dominus firmans tonitruum, et creans spiritum. Ipse ordo nos doceat; nam si de Spiritu sancto dicere voluisset, non de tonitruo utique praemisisset. Neque enim antiquiora tonitrua sunt, quam Spiritus sanctus: quamvis impii sint, tamen id non audent dicere. Deinde cum subjectum videamus esse de luce et nebula, nonne manifestum est quod de creatura mundi dictum intelligendum sit? Cum enim fiunt aliquae tempestates istius mundi, praecedere tonitrua, sequi ventorum flatus, coelum nebulis caligare, lucem refundi ex tenebris, ipso usu quotidiano, exemploque cognoscimus. Nam etiam flatus ventorum spiritus dicitur, sicut scriptum est: Ignis et sulphur, et Spiritus procellae (Psal. X, 7). 51. Et ut scires quia hunc spiritum dixit, ait: Firmans tonitruum, et creans spiritum; quia frequenter creantur ista, cum fiunt: Spiritus autem sanctus aeternus est; quem si quis audet dicere creatum, non potest tamen dicere quod quotidie creatur, sicut flabra ventorum. Denique ipsa Sapientia secundum suscepti locuta corporis sacramentum, ait: Dominus creavit me (Prov. VIII, 22). Quamvis ventura prophetaret, tamen quia praedestinatus erat Domini Salvatoris adventus; 644 non dixit, creat me, sed creavit, ne frequenter, sed semel crederent ex virgine Maria Jesu corpus esse generandum. 52. Et hoc igitur quod velut quotidianam operationem Dei in tonitrui firmamento, et in Spiritus creatione propheta declaravit, intelligere nefas est, ut de Spiritu sancto tale aliquid aestimemus, quem ipsi impii ante saecula esse negare non possunt; unde et semper eum esse, et semper manere pia assertione testamur. Neque enim qui ante mundum superferebatur super aquas (Gen. I, 2), potest videri coepisse post mundum: aut multos esse Spiritus sanctos aestimari fas est, qui veluti quotidiana generatione generentur. Absit ut se quisquam tali impietate contaminet; ut dicat frequenter creari, aut umquam creari Spiritum sanctum. Cur enim frequenter creari videatur, non intelligo; nisi forte et mori eum credant frequenter, et frequenter creari. Sed quemadmodum mori potest Spiritus vitae? Ergo si mori non potest, causam non habet cur saepius sit creandus. 53. At qui aliter putant, in illud sacrilegium recidunt, ut non distinguant Spiritum sanctum, qui prolativum Verbum putant in Patrem redire, prolativum Spiritum in Deum refundi; ut unius refusio sit, et quaedam vicissitudo in varias formas se saepe mutantis: cum Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti manens semper immutabilisque distinctio, unitatem suae teneat potestatis. 54. Si quis tamen propheticum dictum ideo derivandum putat ad interpretationem Spiritus sancti, quia habet: Annuntians in homines Christum suum (Amos IV, 15); is ad incarnationis Dominicae mysterium dictum facilius derivabit. Nam si te movet quia spiritum dixit, et ideo non hoc putas derivandum ad mysterium assumptionis humanae; prosequere Scripturas, et invenies optime congruere de Christo, de quo bene convenit aestimari quia firmavit tonitrua adventu suo, vim videlicet et sonum coelestium Scripturarum, quarum velut quodam tonitruo mentes nostrae redduntur attonitae, ut timere discamus, et reverentiam coelestibus deferamus oraculis. 55. Denique in Evangelio fratres Domini filii tonitrui dicebantur; et cum vox Patris facta esset dicentis ad Filium: Et honorificavi, et iterum honorificabo (Joan. XII, 28); Judaei dicebant: Tonitruum factum est illi (Ibid., 29). Nam licet gratiam veritatis haurire non possent, tamen confitebantur inviti, et ignari mysterium loquebantur; eo quod magnum Patris de Filio testimonium resultabat. In Job quoque libro Scriptura dicit: Firmamentum quoque tonitrui sui quis scit quando faciet (Job. XXVI, 14)? Utique si ad haec commotionum coelestium tonitrua pertinerent, non futura eorum firmamenta, sed facta dixisset. 56. Ergo tonitrua ad sermones Domini retulit, quorum in omnem terram exivit sonus: spiritum autem hoc loco animam, quam suscepit rationabilem atque perfectam, intelligimus; quia Scriptura frequenter et animam hominis 645 spiritus vocabulo designat, sicut habes: Qui creat spiritum hominis in ipso (Zach. XII, 1). Unde et Dominus animam suam spiritus appellatione significans ait: In manus tuas commendo spiritum meum (Luc. XXIII, 46). 57. Et ut scires quia de Jesu Domini descensione memoravit, addidit quod nuntiaret in homines

Christum suum (Amos IV, 13); annuntiavit enim in baptismate, dicens: Tu es Filius meus dilectissimus, in quo bene complacui (Matth. III, 17). Annuntiavit in monte, dicens: Hic est Filius meus dilectus, ipsum audite (Matth. XVII, 17). Annuntiavit in passione, cum sol recessit, maria terraeque tremuerunt. Annuntiavit in centurione, qui ait: Vere Dei Filius erat iste (Matth. XIV, 33). 58. Totum igitur hunc locum aut ad simplicem intellectum istius flatus qui vivendo hauritur, aut ad mysterium Dominici corporis referre debemus, nam si hic creatum dixisset Spiritum sanctum, utique et alibi idem Scriptura declarare potuisset, sicut de Filio Dei frequenter legimus quia secundum carnem et factus est et creatus (Rom. I, 3). 59. Cujus tamen majestatem in eo ipso quod carnem pro nobis suscepit, considerare nos convenit; ut divinam potentiam in ipsa corporis assumptione videamus [Alias cap. VIII]. Etenim sicut legimus quia creavit Pater Dominicae incarnationis sacramentum, creavit et Spiritus; ita etiam legimus quod et ipse Christus suum corpus creavit; creavit enim Pater, secundum quod scriptum est: Dominus creavit me (Prov. VIII, 23); et alibi: Misit Deus Filium suum factum ex muliere, factum sub Lege (Gal. IV, 4). Creavit et Spiritus illud omne mysterium, secundum quod legimus, quia inventa est Maria in utero habens ex Spiritu sancto (Matth. I, 18). 60. Habes quia creavit Pater, creavit et Spiritus: accipe quia creavit et Filius Dei, dicente Salomone: Sapientia fecit sibi domum (Prov. IX, 1). Ergo Spiritus sanctus qui creavit Dominicae incarnationis sacramentum, quod super omnes est creaturas, quomodo esse potest creatura? 61. De generalitate autem supra ostendimus (Sup. ca) quia secundum carnem creator est noster Spiritus sanctus in homine exteriore: nunc ostendamus quia creator est noster, etiam secundum gratiae sacramentum. Et sicut creat Pater, ita creat et Filius, ita creat et Spiritus sanctus, sicut legimus, dicente Paulo: Dei enim donum est, non ex operibus, ne quis glorietur; ipsius enim sumus factura, creati in Christo Jesu in operibus bonis (Ephes, II. 8 et seq.).

CAPUT VII.

CREATIONIS SPIRITALIS SEU regenerationis non minus auctorem Spiritum esse, quam Patrem ac Filium. In quo consistat illa creatio, ejusque praestantia: et quomodo quod membra et corpus Deo tribuere videntur sacri codices, debeat intelligi?

62. [Alias cap. IX.] Ergo creat Pater in operibus bonis: creat et Filius; quia scriptum est: Quotquot autem eum receperunt, dedit eis potestatem filios Dei fieri, his qui credunt in nomine ejus: qui non ex sanguinibus, neque ex voluntate carnis, neque ex voluntate viri, sed ex Deo nati sunt (Joan. I, 12, 13). 646 63. Similiter ex Spiritu secundum gratiam nos renasci Dominus ipse testatur, dicens: Quod natum est ex carne, caro est; quia de carne natum est: et quod natum est de spiritu, spiritus est; quia Deus spiritus est. Noli mirari quia dixi tibi: Oportet vos nasci denuo. Spiritus ubi vult spirat, et vocem ejus audis: sed nescis unde veniat, aut quo vadat; sic est omnis qui natus est de Spiritu (Joan. III, 6 et seq.). 64. Claret igitur spiritalis quoque generationis auctorem esse Spiritum sanctum; quia secundum Deum creamur, ut filii Dei simus. Ergo cum ille nos in regnum suum per adoptionem sacrae regenerationis assumpserit, nos ei quod suum est, denegamus? Ille nos supernae regenerationis fecit haeredes, nos haereditatem vindicamus, refutamus auctorem? Sed non potest manere beneficium, cum auctor excluditur; nec auctor sine munere, nec sine auctore munus. Si vindicas gratiam, crede potentiam: si refutas potentiam, gratiam ne requiras. Qui Spiritum negavit, statim negavit et donum. Nam si auctor vilis, quomodo dona pretiosa? Cur nostris ipsi muneribus invidemus, spem imminuimus, dignitatem repudiamus, consolatorem negamus?

65. Sed illum negare non possumus. Absit enim ut negemus quod maximum est, cum Apostolus dicat: Vos autem, fratres, secundum Isaac promissionis filii estis: sed sicut tunc qui secundum carnem natus est, persequebatur eum qui secundum Spiritum (Galat. IV, 28, 29). Iterum utique subauditur de superioribus, qui secundum Spiritum natus est. Qui ergo secundum Spiritum nascitur, secundum Deum nascitur. Renascimur autem, quando in interiore renovamur affectu, et exterioris hominis vetustatem deponimus. Et ideo ait iterum Apostolus: Renovamini autem Spiritu mentis vestrae, et induite novum hominem, qui secundum Deum creatus est in veritate, et justitia, et sanctitate (Ephes. IV, 23, 24). Audiant quemadmodum unitatem divinae operationis Scriptura signaverit. Qui renovatur Spiritu mentis, induit novum hominem, qui secundum Deum creatus est. 66. Sancti igitur Spiritus opus est regeneratio ista praestantior; et novi hujus hominis, qui creatur ad imaginem Dei, auctor est Spiritus: quem utique meliorem hoc exteriore esse nostro homine nemo dubitaverit. Siquidem coelestem alterum, terrenum alterum Apostolus significavit dicens: Qualis coelestis, tales et coelestes (I Cor. XV, 48). 67. Ergo cum coelestem faciat gratia spiritalis, quod terrenum creare possit, etiam sensu debemus advertere, licet careamus exemplis. Dicit enim alibi sanctus Job: Vivit Dominus, qui sic me judicat; et omnipotens, qui ad amaritudinem perduxit animam meam: Spiritus autem divinus, qui est in naribus meis (Job XXVII, 2, 3). Non utique spiritum hic auram vitalem hanc et spiramentum corporeum designavit, sed nares hic interioris sui hominis significat, quibus vitae odorem carpebat aeternae, et gratiam coelestis unguenti 647 geminis quibusdam sensibus hauriebat. 68. Sunt enim nares spiritales, ut legimus, quas habet Sponsa Verbi, cui dicitur: Et odor naris tuae (Cant. VII, 8); et alibi: Odoratus est Dominus odorem suavitatis (Gen. VIII, 21). Sunt ergo quaedam interioris membra hominis, cujus manus in actu, aures in auditu, pedes in processu quodam boni operis aestimantur. Itaque ex officiis, veluti quasdam colligimus membrorum figuras; neque enim in interiore homine secundum carnalia aliquid nos convenit opinari. 69. [Alias cap. X.] Et sunt quidam qui corporaliter Deum putant esse formatum, cum legunt aut manum ejus, aut digitum: nec advertunt quod haec non propter formam scripta sint corporis, quia in divinitate nec membra, nec partes sunt: sed propter unitatem divinitatis expressa, ut credamus quia impossibile est a Patre Deo vel Filium, vel Spiritum sanctum separari; cum plenitudo divinitatis velut corporaliter habitet in substantia Trinitatis. Ideo igitur et Filius Patris dextera nuncupatur, sicut lectum est: Dextera Domini fecit virtutem, dextera Domini exaltavit me (Ps. CXVII, 16).

CAPUT VIII.

ARGUTIAM HAERETICORUM QUI Deum idcirco dictitabunt in Spiritu, non autem cum Spiritu glorificandum, ut hinc eumdem Spiritum esse inferiorem colligerent, diluit: quamobrem particulam in etiam Filio, immo et Patri quoque aptari planum facit: at e contrario cum creaturis etiam attribui sine ulla divinitatis injuria; proindeque in iisdem praepositionibus simpliciter agnoscendam divinarum personarum conjunctionem.

70. Sed quid mirum si de verbis amentes homines faciunt quaestionem, cum faciant et de syllabis? Sunt enim qui hinc putent faciendam esse distantiam, quod dicant in Spiritu Deum, non cum Spiritu praedicandum: et ex una syllaba, vel usu quodam divinitatis aestimandum putent esse momentum, argumentantes quod si in Spiritu Deum praedicandum putent, ministerium sancti Spiritus signare videantur: si vero cum Spiritu dicant Dei vel virtutem esse, vel gloriam, societatem quamdam et communionem Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti designare videantur. 71. Sed quis separet, quod non potest separari? quis dividat societatem, quam, individuam Christus ostendit? Ite, inquit, baptizate omnes gentes in nomine Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti (Matth. XXVIII, 19). Numquid hic vel circa Patrem vel Filium vel Spiritum sanctum aut verbum mutavit, aut syllabam? Non utique: sed In nomine, inquit, 648 Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti. Idem de Spiritu quod de Patre et de se sonat. Unde nullum Spiritus sancti ministerium, sed consortium magis honoris aut operis, cum in Spiritu dicitur, aestimatur. 72. Considera et hic quia ad Patrem et Filium hoc opinionis vestrae praejudicium derivatur; quia hic non dixit: Cum Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti nomine; sed in nomine: et tamen non ministerium aliquod Trinitatis hac syllaba exprimitur, sed potestas. 73. Denique ut scias quia fidei non praejudicat syllaba, sed commendat fides syllabam, et Paulus loquitur in Christo. Nec ideo minor Christus est, quia Paulus locutus in Christo est, sicut habes: Coram Deo in Christo loquimur (II Cor. II, 6). Quemadmodum igitur Apostolus dicit quia in Christo loquimur; ita illud est quia loquimur in Spiritu; sicut ipse Apostolus dixit: Nemo dicit Dominum Jesum, nisi in Spiritu sancto (I Cor. XII, 3). Non subjectio itaque hoc loco Spiritus sancti, sed gratiae copula designatur. 74. Et ut scias discretionem non esse de syllaba, alibi quoque ait: Et haec quidem fuistis: sed abluti estis, sed sanctificati estis, sed justificati estis in nomine Jesu Christi, et in Spiritu Dei nostri (I Cor. VI, 11). Quam multa possum hinc exempla proferre! Scriptum est enim: Omnes vos unum estis in Christo Jesu (Galat. III, 26); et alibi: Sanctificatis in Christo Jesu (I Cor. I, 2); et iterum: Ut nos essemus justitia Dei in ipso (II Cor. V, 21); et alio loco: Ut excidant a castitate, quae est in Christo Jesu (II Cor. XI, 3). 75. Verum quid ago? Dum enim similiter dico scriptum esse de Filio, quemadmodum de Spiritu scriptum est, magis illud incurro; ut non quia de Filio scriptum est, religiose dictum videatur de Spiritu: sed quia idem de Spiritu scriptum est, etiam de Filio propter Spiritum objiciant derogatum. Dicunt enim: Numquid de Deo Patre scriptum est? 76. Sed accipiant etiam de Deo Patre dictum: In Domino laudabo verbum (Ps. LV, 5); et alibi: In Deo faciemus virtutem (Ps. LIX, 14); et: In te commemoratio mea semper (Ps. LXX, 16); et: In nomine tuo exsultabimus (Ps. LXXXVIII, 17); iterum alibi: Ut manifestentur opera ejus, quia in Deo sunt facta (Joan. III, 21); et Paulus: In Deo qui omnia creavit (Ephes. III, 9); et iterum: Paulus et Sylvanus et Timotheus Ecclesiae Thessalonicensium in Deo Patre et Domino Jesu Christo (I Thess. I, 1); et in Evangelio: Ego in Patre, et Pater in me (Joan. XIV, 10); et: Pater qui in me manet (Ibid.). Scriptum est etiam: Qui gloriatur in Domino glorietur (II Cor. X, 17); et alibi: Vita autem nostra abscondita est cum Christo in Deo

(Coloss. III, 3). Numquid hic plus Filio quam Patri detulit, ut in Deo nos diceret esse cum Christo? aut numquid plus nostra conditio quam 649 Spiritus gratia sibi vindicat; ut nos possimus esse cum Christo, Spiritus sanctus esse non possit? Et cum Christus velit esse nobiscum, sicut ipse dixit: Pater, quos dedisti mihi, volout ubi ego sum, et ipsi sint mecum (Joan. XVI, 24), dedignetur esse cum Spiritu? Scriptum est etiam: Convenientibus vobis et meo Spiritu cum virtute Domini Jesu (I Cor. V, 4). Ergo nos cum virtute Domini convenimus, et audemus dicere quod nolit Dominus Jesus cum Spiritu convenire, qui non dedignatur convenire nobiscum. 77. Nullam igitur distantiam putat Apostolus hac an illa syllaba utaris. Syllaba enim conjunctionis est, conjunctio autem sejunctionem non facit; neque enim si divideret, conjunctio diceretur. 78. Quid igitur te movet ut dicas quia gloria est Deo Patri, vel Christo ejus, vita, virtus, magnificentia, potestas in Spiritu sancto, et nolis dicere cum Spiritu sancto? An quia times ne et Spiritum cum Patre et Filio sociare videaris? Sed audi et de Spiritu scriptum: Lex enim Spiritus vitae in Christo Jesu (Rom. VIII, 2). Et alibi Deus Pater dicit: Et adorabunt te, et in te deprecabuntur (Esai. XLV, 14). In Christo orare nos debere Deus Pater dicit; et tu putas Spiritui derogari, si in eo gloria Christi esse dicatur? 79. Audi quod times de Spiritu confiteri, non timuisse de se sibi Apostolum vindicare; ait enim: Dissolvi, et cum Christo esse multo melius (Phil. I, 23). Cum quo igitur est Apostolus, cum eo negas esse Spiritum, per quem Apostolus meruit esse cum Christo? 80. Quae igitur ratio est, ut in Spiritu malis dicere, quam cum Spiritu gloriam Dei esse vel Christi? An quia si dicas in Spiritu, minor Christo Spiritus declaratur? Quamvis hoc refutabile sit, ut majorem Dominum facias et minorem; tamen cum lectum sit: Quia pro nobis peccatum factus est Christus ut nos essemus justitia Dei in ipso (II Cor. V, 21); ille invenitur potissimus, in quo sumus nos infimi. Sic et alibi habes: Quia omnia in ipso constant (Colos. I, 17), hoc est in ejus virtute. Nec comparari possunt illi, quae in eo constant; quia ex virtute ejus ut constent, substantiam consequuntur. 81. Numquid igitur sic Deum regnare vultis in Spiritu, ut virtus Spiritus regnandi Deo principium quasi fons quidam substantiae largiatur? Sed hoc impium est. Et ideo ut unam Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti majores nostri dicerent potestatem cum spiritu gloriam Christi esse memorabant, quo individuam copulam declararent. 82. Quomodo enim separatur Spiritus sanctus a Filio, cum ipse Spiritus testimonium reddat spiritui nostro quod sumus filii Dei? Si autem filii, et haeredes: haeredes quidem Dei, cohaeredes autem Christi (Rom. VIII, 16, 17). Quis igitur tam amens, qui conjunctionem Spiritus et Christi dissociet sempiternam; cum Spiritus etiam disjuncta connectat, per quem Christi efficimur cohaeredes? 650 83. Si tamen, inquit, compatimur, ut et conglorificemur (Ibid.). Si nos ergo conglorificabimur cum Christo per Spiritum, quomodo et ipsum conglorificari Christo Spiritum recusamus? Dissociamus vitam Christi et Spiritus sancti, cum Spiritus dicat quod simul victuri sumus cum Dei Filio? Dicit enim Apostolus: Si autem mortui sumus cum Christo, credimus quod etiam simul vivemus cum illo (Rom. VI, 8); deinde alibi: Si enim compatimur, inquit, et convivemus: nec solum convivemus, sed etiam conglorificabimur: nec solum conglorificabimur, sed etiam conregnabimus (II Tim. II, 11, 12). 84. Non est igitur in syllabis istis ulla discretio; utraque enim syllaba conjunctionis est. Denique saepe reperimus in Scripturis alteram interpositam, et alteram intellectam, sicut scriptum est: Introibo in domum tuam in holocaustis (Ps. LXV, 13), hoc est, cum holocaustis; et alibi: Eduxit, inquit, eos in argento et auro (Ps. CIV, 37), hoc est, cum argento et auro. Alibi quoque ait: Non egredieris in virtutibus nobiscum (Ps. XLIII, 10); pro eo quod est, cum virtutibus. Ergo cum et in usu sermonis calumnia esse non possit, et ex sermone calumnia divinitati non debeat excitari, opus est ut ad justitiam corde credatur, et ex fide cordis fiat ad salutem in ore confessio (Rom. X, 10). Sed qui corde non credunt, calumniam strunt verbis.

CAPUT IX.

APOSTOLICUM LOCUM QUO haeretici, ut discrimen inducerent inter personas divinas, abutebantur, exponit: et declarata haereticae interpretationis impietate, ostendit locum integrum de singulis personis recte dici posse; quem tamen proprie ad Filium pertinere astruit: postremo quod affirmaverat omnia ejusdem loci membra unicuique personae convenire, multis confirmat testimoniis: et eo ipso quod Patri competit, ut dicatur ex illo omnia, eidem etiam tribui posse per illum et in illo omnia scite colligit.

85. Denique simile et illud est, quod aiunt discretionem esse, quia scriptum est: Nobis autem unus Deus Pater, ex quo omnia, et nos in illum: et unus Dominus Jesus Christus per quem omnia, et nos per ipsum (I Cor. II, 6). Volunt enim cum dicitur, ex illo, materiam designari: cum dicitur, per illum, quoddam vel instrumentum operis, vel ministerium declarari: cum autem dicitur, in illo, aut locus significetur aut tempus, in quo omnia facta videantur. 86. Ita igitur distantiam quamdam substantiae probare desiderant, tamquam instrumentum ab operatore proprio vel auctore, et tamquam tempus aut locum ab instrumento dirimere gestientes. Numquid ergo alienus secundum naturam Filius a Patre; quia alienum instrumentum ab operatore proprio vel auctore? aut numquid alienus Filius a Spiritu; quia ab instrumenti genere aut locus separatur aut tempus? 87. Compara nunc assertiones nostras. Illi volunt ex Deo tamquam ex natura Dei esse 651 materiam, ut si dicas ex ligno arcam esse factam, ex lapide statuam: ita ex Deo materiam processisse, et eamdem materiam tamquam per instrumentum aliquod factam esse per Filium; ut non tam operatorem

Filium, quam instrumentum operis esse declarent: et omnia ita facta in Spiritu, tamquam in aliquo loco facta vel tempore: singula singulis tribuunt, in commune omnia negant. 88. Verum nos ostendimus ita ex Deo Patre esse omnia, ut nec amiserit Deus Pater, quod vel per ipsum et in ipso omnia sint, nec tamquam ex materia ex ipso omnia sint: ita quoque per Dominum Filium esse omnia, ut non privatus sit eo, quod ex Filio sint omnia, et in ipso sint omnia: et ita omnia esse in Spiritu, ut doceamus omnia esse per Spiritum, et omnia esse de Spiritu. 89. Nam istae syllabae, sicut illae de quibus superius diximus, se invicem signant. Non enim ita dixit Apostolus: Ex Deo omnia, et per Filium omnia; ut separabilem substantiam Patris Filiique signaret: sed ut inconfusibili distinctione quod alius Pater, alius sit Filius, edoceret. Non igitur tamquam compugnantes syllabae istae, sed tamquam sociae atque concordes sunt; ut etiam uni saepe conveniant, sicut scriptum est: Quia ex ipso, et per ipsum, et in ipso sunt omnia (Rom. XI, 36). 90. Quod si vere consideres unde translatum sit, de Filio dictum esse non ambiges. Dicit enim Apostolus secundum prophetiam Esaiae: Quis cognovit sensum Domini, aut quis consiliarius ejus fuit (Esai. XL, 13)? Et addidit: Quia ex ipso, et per ipsum, et in ipso sunt omnia. Quod Esaias de operatore omnium dixit, sicut habes: Quis mensus est manu aquam, et coelum palmo, et universam terram clausa manu? Quis statuit montes in libra, et rupes in statera? Quis cognovit sensum Domini, aut quis consiliarius ejus fuit (Esai. XL, 12) ? 91. Et addidit Apostolus: Quoniam ex ipso, et per ipsum, et in ipso sunt omnia. Quid est, ex ipso? Quod ex ipsius voluntate natura sit omnium, et ipse sit auctor omnium, quae esse coeperunt. Per ipsum, quid est? Quia per ipsum constitutio et perseverantia omnibus impertita videatur. In ipso, quid est? Quia omnia admirabili quodam desiderio, et inenarrabili amore auctorem vitae et ministratorem gratiae suae ac muneris intuentur, secundum quod scriptum est: Oculi omnium in te sperant; et: Aperis manum tuam, et imples omnem animam bona voluntate (Psal. CXLIV, 15). 92. De Patre quoque si dicas: ideo ex ipso, quia ex ipso operatrix Sapientia, quae omnibus ex sua et Patris voluntate dedit esse, quae non erant: Per ipsum, quia per Sapientiam ejus facta sunt omnia: In ipso, quia ipse est vivificatoriae fons substantiae, in quo vivimus et sumus et movemur. 93. Ex Spiritu quoque, ut per ipsum formati, per ipsum firmati, in ipso roborati, vitae capiamus munus aeternae. 94. Cum haec igitur vel Patri vel Filio vel 652 Spiritui sancto convenire videantur, nihil utique humile in his certum est declarari; cum et ex Filio dicamus esse pleraque, et multa per Patrem, sicut habes de Filio dictum: Ut augeamur in ipso per omnia, qui est caput Christus, ex quo totum, inquit, corpus compactum et connexum per omnem juncturam ministrationis in mensuram uniuscujusque partis, augmentum corporis facit in aedificationem sui in charitate (Ephes. IV, 15, 16). Et iterum ad Colossenses de his qui non haberent cognitionem unigeniti Filii Dei: Quia non tenent, inquit, caput, ex quo omne corpus per compaginationes et colligationes subministratum et copulatum crescit in incrementum Dei (Coloss. II, 19); caput enim Christum esse Ecclesiae supra diximus (Coloss. I, 18). Et alibi habes quia de plenitudine ejus nos omnes accepimus (Joan. I, 16). Et ipse Dominus dixit: De meo accipiet, et annuntiabit vobis (Joan. XVI, 14). Et supra ait: Cognovi virtutem exisse de me (Luc. VIII, 46). 95. Similiter ut agnoscas unitatem, etiam de Spiritu dicitur: Quia qui seminat in Spiritu, de Spiritu metet vitam aeternam (Galat. VI, 8). Et Joannes ait: Ex hoc cognoscimus quia in nobis est, quoniam de Spiritu suo dedit nobis (I Joan. IV, 13). Et Angelus dicit: Quod ex ea nascetur, de Spiritu sancto est (Matth. I, 20). Et Dominus ait quia quod natum est de Spiritu, Spiritus est (Joan. III, 6). 96. Ergo sicut ex Patre legimus esse omnia, ita et ex Filio posse dici omnia, per quem omnia sunt: et ex Spiritu esse omnia, in quo omnia sunt, testimoniis edocemur. 97. Nunc consideremus utrum per Patrem esse aliquid docere possimus. Sed scriptum est: Paulus servus Christi per voluntatem Dei (I Cor. I, 1); et alibi: Unde jam non est servus, sed filius: si autem filius, et haeres per Deum (Galat. IV, 7); et alibi: Sicut resurrexit Christus a mortuis per gloriam Patris (Rom., VI, 4). Et alibi Deus Pater ad Filium dicit: Ecce proselyti venient ad te per me (Esai. LIV, 15). 98. Multa reperies alia, si quaeras per Patrem facta. Numquid ideo minor Pater, quia in Filio et ex Filio pleraque esse legimus: et per Patrem facta vel data plurima in Scripturis coelestibus reperimus? 99. Sed etiam per Spiritum similiter legimus facta pleraque, sicut habes: Nobis autem revelavit Deus per Spiritum suum (I Cor. II, 10); et alibi: Bonum depositum custodi per Spiritum sanctum (I Tim. I, 14); et ad Ephesios: Confortari per Spiritum ejus (Ephes. III, 16); et ad Corinthios: Alii enim datur per Spiritum sermo sapientiae (I Cor. XII, 8); et alibi: Si autem per Spiritum facta carnis mortificaveritis, vivetis (Rom. VIII, 13); et supra: Qui suscitavit Christum ex mortuis, vivificabit et mortalia corpora vestra per inhabitantem Spiritum ejus in vobis (Ibid., 11). 100. Sed fortasse dicat: Ostende mihi specialiter lectum, quia ex Filio omnia, vel ex Spiritu omnia. At ego refero, ut et illi mihi lectum esse ostendant quia per Patrem omnia. Sed cum haec vel Patri probaverimus, vel Filio, vel Spiritui sancto convenire, nec ullam ex hujusmodi syllabis nasci posse divinae distantiam potestatis; non est dubium quin per quem omnia, ex eo omnia: et ex quo omnia, per eum omnia: et in quo omnia, per cum 653 vel ex eo omnia esse intelligere debeamus. Omnis enim creatura et ex voluntate, et per operationem et in virtute est Trinitatis, sicut scriptum est: Faciamus hominem ad imaginem et similitudinem nostram (Gen. I, 26); et alibi: Verbo Domini coeli firmati sunt, et Spiritu oris ejus omnis virtus eorum (Psal. XXXII, 6).

CAPUT X.

PROBATURUS UNAM TRINITATIS esse voluntatem, vocationem atque jussionem, docet non secus ac Pater et Filius Ecclesiam vocarunt, ita et Spiritum eam vocasse; idque ex electione Pauli et Barnabae ostendit, sed potissimum ex missione Petri ad Cornelium. Hic obiter ejusdem Spiritus potestate, ac trina Petri confessione perstrictis, in ejusdem apostoli visione adumbratam fuisse declarat vocationem gentium, quae cum prius ferarum similes exsitissent, Spiritus opera deposuere feritatem. Tum ubi superiora ex alio loco stabilivit, in Hieremia in lacum a Judaeis demisso, et inde educto ab Abdemelech, Spiritus sancti ab iisdem Judaeis contemptui habiti, et a gentibus quas mundavit, honorati symbolum praeivisse demonstrat.

101. [Alias cap. XI.] Nec solum una operatio est ubique Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti, sed etiam una atque eadem voluntas, una vocatio, una praeceptio: quod licet in illo magno ac salutari Ecclesiae spectare mysterio. Sicut enim Pater vocavit gentes ad Ecclesiam, dicens: Vocabo non plebem meam, plebem meam: et non dilectam, dilectam (Ose. II); et alibi: Domus mea domus orationis vocabitur omnibus gentibus (Esai. LVI, 7): ita etiam Dominus Jesus ad evocandam et congregandam Ecclesiam Paulum a se dicit electum, sicut habes ad Ananiam dictum a Domino Jesu: Vade, quoniam vas electionis est mihi hic ac ferendum nomen meum coram gentibus (Act. IX, 15). 102. Sicut ergo Pater Deus vocavit Ecclesiam, ita vocavit et Christus: et quemadmodum Christus vocavit, ita vocavit et Spiritus, dicens: Separate mihi Paulum et Barnabam in opus quo vocavi eos. Tunc jejunantes, inquit, et orantes, imposuerunt eis manus, et dimiserunt eos. Ipsi autem praemissi ab Spiritu sancto devenerunt in Seleuciam (Act.

XIII, 2 et seq.). Ergo non solum Christi, sed etiam Spiritus sancti imperio apostolatum Paulus accepit, et ad congregationem gentium festinavit. 103. Nec solus Paulus, sed etiam Petrus, sicut legimus in Actibus apostolorum. Nam cum in oratione vidisset coelum apertum, et quatuor initiis ligatum vas quoddam, tamquam linteum in quo erant omnia genera quadrupedum et ferarum et volucrum coeli, facta est vox ad eum: Surge, occide, et manduca. Et Petrus dixit: Absit, Domine: numquam manducavi commune et immundum. Et vox rursus ad eum: Quod Deus mundavit, tu commune ne dixeris. Hoc autem factum est per ter, et receptum est vas in coelum (Act. X, 11 et seq.). Ergo cum hoc secum Petrus tacitus cogitaret, et venissent ad eum Cornelii servuli ab Angelo 654 destinati, ait illi Spiritus: Ecce viri quaerunt te, surge itaque, et descende, et vade cum eis: ne dubites; quoniam ego misi illos (Ibid., 19, 20). 104. Quam evidenter expressit suam Spiritus sanctus potestatem? Primo omnium quia aspiravit oranti, adfuit deprecanti: deinde quoniam vocatus Petrus respondit, Domine, et ideo secundum evidentius meruit oraculum, quia confessus est Dominum. Sed quis iste sit Dominus Scriptura declarat; respondenti enim, is utique cui responderat, loquebatur: Spiritum autem ostendunt sequentia declaratum; quia ipse qui mysterium figurabat, mysterium revelabat. 105. Simul illud adverte quia tertio repetita figura mysterii operationem Trinitatis expressit. Et ideo in mysteriis interrogatio trina defertur, et confirmatio trina celebratur: nec potest quis nisi trina confessione purgari. Unde et ipse Petrus in Evangelio (Joan. XXI, 15) tertio interrogatur, utrum diligat Dominum; ut trina responsione vincula, quae Dominum negando contraxerat, et quibus se ipse ligavit, absolverentur. 106. Tum deinde quia ad Cornelium angelus mittitur, Petrum Spiritus sanctus alloquitur (Act. X, 3): Oculi enim Domini super fideles terrae (Psal. C, 6). Nec illud otiosum, quod cum in superioribus praemisisset: Quod Deus mundavit, tu ne commune dixeris (Act. X, 15); subito decidit super gentiles, ut mundaret eos Spiritus sanctus; unde ostenditur operationem Spiritus operationem esse divinam. Petrus autem missus ab Spiritu, non exspectavit imperium Dei Patris, sed ipsius quoque Spiritus illud est confessus oraculum, ipsius Spiritus gratiam esse testatus est dicens: Si ergo eamdem gratiam illis concessit Deus, sicut et nobis; ego quis eram, qui prohiberem Deum (Act. XI, 17)? 107. Spiritus ergo sanctus est, qui nos ab illa gentili colluvione mundavit. In illis enim generibus quadrupedum, et ferarum, et volucrum figura erat conditionis humanae, quae ferarum modo bestialem videtur induta saevitiam, nisi Spiritus sanctificatione mitescat. Bona ergo gratia, quae ferinam rabiem spirituali simplicitate commutat: Eramus enim et nos aliquando insipientes, increduli, errantes, servientes desideriis et voluptatibus variis: nunc autem per renovationem Spiritus haeredes Christi, angelorum coepimus esse cohaeredes (Tit. III, 3). 108. Itaque Spiritu videns sanctus propheta David ex feris nos similes futuros esse coelestium: Increpa, inquit, feras silvae (Psal. LXVII, 32), silvam videlicet significans non ferarum fragosam cursibus, nec bestiarum gemitibus inhorrentem, sed illam silvam de qua scriptum est: Invenimus eam in campis silvae (Psal. CXXXI, 6). In qua, sicut dixit Propheta: justus ut palma florebit, et velut cedrus quae in Libano est, multiplicabitur (Psal. XCXI, 13). Illa silva, quae Verbi coelestis alimoniam propheticarum verticibus arborum concussa defluxit. Illa silva, ad quam Paulus lupus quidem raptor intravit, sed pastor exivit: In omnem enim terram exivit sonus eorum (Psal. XVIII, 5). 655 109. Eramus ergo ferae, et ideo dicit Dominus: Attendite vobis a falsis prophetis, qui veniunt in vestitu ovium, intus autem sunt lupi rapaces (Matth. VII, 15). Sed per Spiritum sanctum jam leonum saevitia, pardorum varietas, astutia vulpium, luporum rapacitas de nostris exolevit affectibus. Magna igitur gratia, quae coelo terras mutavit; ut conversatio nostra, sicut Apostolus dixit (Philip. III, 20), in coelis sit, qui ante sicut ferae errabamus in silvis. 110. Sed nec hoc tantum loco Petrus apostolus, sed etiam alibi in eodem libro a Spiritu sancto aedificatam Ecclesiam demonstravit. Habes enim dixisse eum: Deus qui novit corda hominum, testimonium perhibuit, dans his Spiritum sanctum, sicut et nobis; et nihil discrevit inter nos et illos, mundans per fidem corda eorum (Act. XV, 8, 9). In quo illud est contuendum, quia sicut Christus lapis est angularis, qui unitatem plebis utriusque connexuit, ita etiam Spiritus sanctus non discrevit utriusque populi corda, sed junxit. 111. Non ergo tamquam Judaeus contemnas Filium, quem annuntiaverunt prophetae; contemnas etiam Spiritum sanctum, contemnas Esaiam, contemnas Hieremiam, quem de lacu Judaicae domus ille assumptus a Domino pannis et funibus elevavit (Jerem. XXXVIII, 10). Verbum enim propheticum despiciens, in lacum demerserat eum populus Judaeorum. Nec quisquam inventus est de Judaeis qui levaret prophetam, sed unus Aethiops Abdemelech, sicut Scriptura testatur. 112. In quo nomine figura pulcherrima est, quia sermonem propheticum, quem Judaei velut in coenum suae mentis carnisque detruserant, nos videlicet ex gentibus peccatores, nigri ante delictis, et quondam infructuosi elevavimus de profundo (Ibid., 11). Et ideo scriptum est: Aethiopia praelevabit manus suas Deo (Psal. LXVII, 32). In quo sanctae Ecclesiae species significatur, quae ait in Canticis canticorum: Nigra sum et decora, filiae Hierusalem (Cant. I, 4); nigra per culpam, decora per gratiam: nigra per conditionem, decora per redemptionem: aut certe nigra exercitii sui pulvere. Nigra ergo, dum praeliatur: decora est, dum victoriae suae insignibus coronatur. 113. Et bene funibus levatur propheta; fidelis enim dixit: Funes ceciderunt mihi in praeclaris (Psal. XV, 6). Bene pannis; quia ipse Dominus, excusantibus his qui primo ad nuptias vocati fuerant, ad exitus viarum misit, ut quotquot invenirentur et boni et mali, ad nuptias vocarentur (Matth. XXII, 9, 10). His itaque pannis propheticum verbum levavit coeno. 656

CAPUT XI.

IMITATUROS NOS ABDEMELECH, si credamus Filium et Spiritum sanctum omnia cognoscere. Spiritui cognitionem hanc tribui in Scripturis; Filio quoque eamdem attribui. Filium a Spiritu clarificari, sicut et a Filio Spiritum: item ex eo quod Patrem, Filium atque Spiritum legamus eadem loqui, ac revelare, unitatem in ipsis naturae et scientiae agnoscendam: denique quod alta Dei scrutatur Spiritus, ignorantiae non esse; cum Pater et Filius etiam dicantur scrutatores, et Paulus tametsi a Christo domino electus, edoctus tamen fuerit a Spiritu.

114. [Alias cap. XII.] Eris igitur et tu Abdemelech, hoc est, assumptus a Domino, si de profundo gentilis imprudentiae levaveris Dei Verbum: si credideris quia non fallitur; non praeteritur Dei Filius, non ignorat quae futura sunt; non fallitur etiam Spiritus sanctus, de quo dicit Dominus: Cum venerit autem ille Spiritus veritatis, deducet vos in omnem veritatem (Joan. XVI, 13). Qui dicit omnem, nihil praeterit, non diem, non horam, non praeterita, non futura. 115. Et ut scias quia et omnia novit, et futura annuntiat, et unius est scientiae cum Patre et Filio; audi quid dicat de eo Dei veritas: Non enim loquetur a semetipso, sed quae audierit, loquetur, et quae evenient, annuntiabit vobis (Ibid.). 116. Itaque ut advertas quia novit omnia, cum diceret Filius: De die autem illa et hora nemo novit, neque Angeli coelorum (Marc. XIII, 32); excepit Spiritum sanctum. Si autem exceptus est Spiritus sanctus ab ignorantia, quomodo non exceptus est Dei Filius? 117. Sed dicis quia cum angelis annumeraverit et Dei Filium. Annumeravit quidem Filium, sed non annumeravit et Spiritum. Aut fatere igitur potiorem esse Spiritum sanctum Dei Filio, ut jam non solum quasi Arianus, sed etiam quasi Photinianus loquaris: aut agnosce quo referre debeas, quod nescire Filium dixit. Etenim quasi homo annumerari creaturis potuit, qui creatus est. 118. Quod si vis discere quia novit omnia, et praescientiam habet omnium Dei Filius futurorum, quae Filio incognita putas, ea de Filio Spiritus sanctus accepit. Accepit autem per unitatem substantiae, sicut accepit a Patre Filius: Ille, inquit, me clarificabit, quia de meo accipiet, et annuntiabit vobis. Omnia quaecumque habet Pater, mea sunt; propterea dixi, de meo accipiet, et annuntiabit vobis (Joan. XVI, 14, 15). Quid igitur hac evidentius unitate? Quae habet Pater, Filii sunt: quae habet Filius, accepit et Spiritus. 119 et 120*. Accipe tamen quia novit judicii diem Filius. Lectum est in Zacharia: Et veniet Dominus Deus meus, et omnes sancti cum eo. In illa die non erit lumen, sed frigus et gelu: et erit dies una, et dies illa nota Domino (Zach. XIV, 5). Haec igitur dies nota Domino, qui veniet cum sanctis suis, secundo nos illuminaturus adventu.

121. Sed quod orsi sumus de Spiritu, persequamur. 657 Habes enim in eo quod praetulimus exemplo quia Filius dicit de Spiritu: Ille me clarificabit. Clarificat ergo Spiritus Filium, sicut clarificat et Pater: sed etiam Spiritum clarificat Dei Filius, sicut supra diximus. Non est ergo infirmus, qui reddit mutuam claritatem per unitatem lucis aeternae: nec inferior sancto Spiritu, cujus hoc ipsum est, quod clarificatur ab Spiritu. 122. Assumeris ergo et tu, si credas quia hoc locutus est Spiritus, quod locutus est Pater, quod locutus est Filius. Denique Paulus ideo assumptus est, quia sic credidit, sic docuit, quia quod oculus non vidit, nec auris audivit, nec in cor hominis ascendit, quae praeparavit Deus diligentibus se, nobis revelavit per Spiritum suum, sicut scriptum est (I Cor. II, 9, 10). Et ideo revelationis Spiritus dicitur, sicut habes: Dat enim Deus sic praeparantibus se Spiritum sapientiae et revelationis in agnitionem ejus (Esai. LXIV, 4). 123. Unitas igitur est scientiae, quando sicut Pater revelat, qui dat Spiritum revelationis, sic revelat et Filius; quia scriptum est: Nemo novit Filium, nisi Pater; neque

Patrem quis novit, nisi Filius, et cui voluerit Filius revelare (Matth. XI, 27). Plus dixit de Filio, non quod plus habeat quam Pater, sed ne minus habere credatur. Nec immerito sic revelatur Pater a Filio; quia sic novit Patrem Filius, quemadmodum Filium Pater novit. 124. Accipe nunc quia Deum Patrem novit et Spiritus; scriptum est enim quia sicut ea quae hominis sunt, nemo novit nisi spiritus qui in ipso est: sic et quae Dei sunt, nemo cognovit nisi Spiritus Dei (I Cor. II, 11). Nemo, inquit, cognovit, nisi Spiritus Dei. Numquid exclusus est Dei Filius? Non utique; quia nec Spiritus sanctus exclusus est, cum dicitur: Neque Patrem quis novit, nisi Filius. 125. Ergo unius et Pater et Filius et Spiritus sanctus et naturae sunt et scientiae. Neque cum omnibus quae per Filium facta sunt, annumerandus est Spiritus, cum Deum Patrem noverit, quem, sicut scriptum est (Matth. XI, 27), quis potest nosse nisi Filius? Sed et Spiritus sanctus novit. Quid ergo? Cum dicitur universitas creaturarum, non Spiritus sanctus comprehenditur. 126. Nunc velim respondeant, quid est in homine, quod cognoscat quae sunt hominis? Utique rationabile, quod caeteris animae virtutibus supereminet, et quo praecipua natura hominis aestimatur. Quid est igitur Spiritus, qui alta Dei novit, per quem Deus omnipotens revelatur. Numquid plenitudine divinitatis inferior est, qui ejusdem cum Patre substantiae etiam hoc exemplo probatur? Aut aliquid ignorat, qui novit consilia Dei, et mysteria ejus ab initio abscondita? Quid est quod nesciat, qui novit omnia quae Dei sunt? Spiritus enim etiam alta Dei scrutatur (I Cor. II, 10). 127. Ac ne putes quod scrutetur incognita, et ideo scrutetur, ut discat id quod ignoret; 658 ante praemisit quia revelavit nobis Deus per Spiritum suum: simul ut disceres quia novit Spiritus quae nobis per ipsum Spiritum revelantur, in posterioribus ait: Quis enim scit hominum quae hominis sunt, nisi spiritus hominis qui in ipso est: sic et quae Dei sunt, nemo cognovit, nisi Spiritus Dei. Ergo si hominis spiritus novit quae hominis sunt, et antequam scrutetur novit, potestne aliquid Dei esse, quod Spiritus Dei nesciat? De quo non otiose Apostolus dixit: Quae Dei sunt, nemo cognovit, nisi Spiritus Dei: non quod scrutando cognoverit, sed noverit per naturam: non quod accidens in eo scientia divinorum, sed cognitio naturalis sit. 128. Verum si te movet quia dixit, scrutatur, accipe quia id quoque de Deo scriptum est, eo quod sit scrutator cordis et renum. Ipse enim dixit: Ego sum scrutans corda et renes (Jerem. XVII, 10). Etiam de Filio Dei habes ad Hebraeos: Qui scrutator est animi et cogitationis (Hebr. IV, 12). Unde liquet quia nemo inferior superioris scrutatur interna; divinae enim solius est potestatis occulta novisse. Similiter ergo scrutator est Spiritus sanctus ut Pater, similiter scrutator et Filius: cujus proprietate sermonis id exprimitur; ut videatur nihil esse quod nesciat, quem nihil praeterit. 129. Denique ille electus a Christo, instructus ab Spiritu est. Nam sicut ipse testatur, per Spiritum divini cognitionem consecutus arcani, ostendit quia et novit Spiritus Deum, et ea nobis quae Dei sunt, Spiritus revelavit, sicut revelavit et Filius. Et addidit: Nos autem non spiritum hujus mundi accepimus, sed Spiritum qui ex Deo est; ut sciamus quae a Deo donata sunt nobis, quae et loquimur, non in suasoriis humanae sapientiae verbis, sed in ostensione Spiritus, et virtute Dei (I Cor. II, 12, 13)?

CAPUT XII.

PROBATO SPIRITUM AEQUE revelare ac Patrem et Filium, quomodo non loquatur a se idem Spiritus, explicatur; ostenditurque non cogitanda in ipso corporeo organa, nec ullam inferioritatem ex eo fingendam, quod audire legatur; quando idem Filio esset attribuendum; immo vero etiam Patri, cum et ipse audiat Filium. Spiritum igitur eo sensu audire et clarificare Filium, quod eum prophetis atque apostolis revelavit; qua ex re operationis trium personarum unitas astruitur; et cum eadem Spiritus operetur, quae Pater eadem quoque declaratur utriusque esse substantia.

130. Probatum est igitur quia sicut Deus nobis quae sua sunt, ita et Filius quae Dei sunt, ita etiam Spiritus revelavit. Ex uno enim Spiritu per unum Filium in unum Patrem cognitio nostra procedit: et ex uno Patre per unum Filium in unum Spiritum sanctum bonitas et sanctificatio et imperiale jus aeternae traditur potestatis. Ubi ergo ostensio Spiritus, ibi Dei virtus: nec potest esse discretio, ubi opus unum est. Et ideo quod loquitur Filius, loquitur 659 et Pater: et quod Pater loquitur, loquitur et Filius: et quod loquitur Pater et Filius, loquitur et Spiritus sanctus. 131. Unde et de Spiritu Filius Dei dixit: Non enim loquetur a se (Joan. XVI, 13), hoc est, non sine mea et Patris communione; neque enim divisus ac separatus est Spiritus, sed quae audit, loquitur: audit videlicet per unitatem substantiae, et per proprietatem scientiae. Neque enim foraminibus aliquibus corporalibus recipit auditum, et quibusdam divina modulis carnalibus vox resultat, vel audit id quid ignorat; quoniam in rebus humanis scientiam plerumque auditus operatur, et tamen nec in ipsis hominibus semper alloquium corporale, aut carnalis auditus est: Qui enim loquitur linguis, non hominibus, inquit, loquitur, sed Deo. Nemo enim audit, Spiritu autem loquitur mysteria (I Cor. XIV, 2). 132. Ergo si in hominibus non semper auditus est corporalis; in Deo tu infirmitatis humanae sonitus, et quaedam organa exigis carnalis auditus; cum ideo audire dicatur, ut scire credatur? Nos enim id scimus quod audierimus, et ante audimus, ut scire possimus: in Deo autem qui novit omnia antequam fiant, scientia praecedit auditum. Itaque ut quod velit Pater, Filium non ignorare dicamus, audisse memoramus: sed non in Deo sonus, neque syllaba, quae significare solent indicium voluntatis; sed voluntatis unitas divinis quidem intelligitur arcanis, nostris autem significatur indiciis. 133. Quid est ergo: Non enim a se loquetur? Hoc est, non sine me loquitur; quia loquetur veritatem, sapientiam aspirat. Non sine Patre loquitur, quia Dei Spiritus est: non a se audit, quoniam ex Deo omnia. 134. Omnia accepit a Patre Filius, quia ipse dixit: Omnia mihi tradita sunt a Patre meo (Matth. XI, 27). Omnia Patris habet Filius; quia iterum ait: Omnia quae Pater habet mea sunt (Joan. XVI, 15). Et quae accepit ipse per unitatem naturae, ex ipso per eamdem unitatem accepit et Spiritus, sicut ipse Dominus Jesus declarat, de Spiritu suo dicens: Propterea dixi, de meo accipiet, et annuntiabit vobis (Ibid.). Quod ergo loquitur Spiritus, Filii est: quod dedit Filius, Patris est. Ita nihil a se aut Filius loquitur aut Spiritus, quia nihil extra se Trinitas loquitur. 135. Quod si ad infirmitatem Spiritus sancti, et quamdam corporeae similitudinem vilitatis id derivari contendas; etiam ad Filii injuriam derivabis; quia et de se Filius dixit: Sicut audio, judico; et, Non potest aliud facere Filius, nisi quod viderit facientem Patrem (Joan. V, 30). Si enim verum est, sicut verum est, quod dixit Filius: Omnia quae Pater habet, mea sunt (Ibid., 19); et secundum divinitatem unum est cum Patre Filius, unum per substantiam naturalem, non unus secundum Sabellianam perfidiam. Quod unum utique est per substantiae proprietatem, non potest separari; et ideo non potest Filius facere, nisi quod audierit a Patre; quia in aeternum est permanens Dei

Verbum (Psal. CXVIII, 89), nec umquam Pater a Filii operatione dividitur: et quod operatur Filius scit Patrem velle: et quod vult Pater, Filius novit operari. 660 136. Denique ne vel in tempore, vel in ordine aliquam inter Patrem et Filium putares operis esse distantiam, sed ejusdem operationis crederes unitatem: Et opera, inquit, quae ego facio, ipse facit (Joan. V, 17). Et rursus ne discretionem aliquam in operis distinctione sentires, sed idem velle, idem facere, idem posse Patrem et Filium judicares, dicit tibi Sapientia de Patre: Quaecumque enim ille fecerit, eadem et Filius facit similiter (Ibid., 19). Non ergo alicui prior vel secundus est actus, sed idem unius operationis effectus. Et ideo nihil a se posse facere Filius dicitur; quia a Patre non potest ejus operatio separari. Similiter et Spiritus sancti operatio non secernitur. Unde etiam ea quae loquitur. audire a Patre dicitur. 137. Quid si doceo quia et Pater audit Filium, sicut ut et Filius audit Patrem? Habes enim scriptum in Evangelio, quia dicit Filius: Pater, gratias tibi ago, quia audisti me (Joan. XI, 41). Quomodo audivit Pater Filium, cum Filius nihil ad Patrem in superioribus de Lazaro sit locutus? Ac ne putares quia semel a Patre auditus est Filius, addidit: Et ego sciebam quia semper me audis (Ibid., 42). Ergo non subjectae obedientiae, sed unitatis auditus est sempiternae. 138. Similiter igitur et audire a Patre Spiritus, et clarificare Filium dicitur. Clarificare ideo, quia docuit nos Spiritus sanctus Filium Dei imaginem esse invisibilis Dei, et splendorem gloriae, et characterem substantiae ejus (Coloss. I, 15), Spiritus enim et in patriarchis et in prophetis locutus est: et apostoli denique tunc perfectiores esse coeperunt, posteaquam Spiritum receperunt (Hebr. I, 1, 2). Nulla ergo distantia divinae virtutis et gratiae; nam licet divisiones gratiarum sint, idem autem Spiritus: et divisiones ministeriorum sint, idem autem Dominus: et divisiones operationum sint, idem autem Deus, qui operatur omnia in omnibus (I Cor. XII, 4 et seq.). Divisiones sunt munerum, non separationes Trinitatis. 139. Denique idem est Deus qui operatur omnia in omnibus; ut scias quia non est discretio operationis inter Deum Patrem et Spiritum sanctum, quando ea quae operatur Spiritus, operatur et Pater Deus, qui operatur omnia in omnibus. Nam cum operetur omnia in omnibus Pater: Alii tamen datur per Spiritum sermo sapientiae, alii sermo scientiae secundum eumdem Spiritum, alteri fides in eodem Spiritu, alii gratia curationum in uno Spiritu, alii operatio virtutum, alii prophetia, alii discretio spirituum, alii genera linguarum, alii interpretatio sermonum. Haec autem omnia operatur unus atque idem Spiritus, dividens singulis prout vult (Ibid., 8 et seq.). 140. Non est ergo dubium, quin ea quae operatur Pater, operetur et Spiritus. Nec ex praecepto, sicut qui corporaliter audit, operatur: sed ex voluntate, qui sui est liber arbitrii, non alienae famulus potestatis. Non enim quasi jussus obtemperat, sed quasi largitor suae moderator est largitatis. 141. Vide nunc interim utrum omnia operari dieas Spiritum, quae operatur et Pater; negare tamen non potes quia operatur Pater, 661 quae operatur Spiritus sanctus: alioquin non omnia operatur Pater, si non operatur ea quae operatur et Spiritus. Quod si ea quae operatur Spiritus, operatur et Pater; cum Spiritus operationes suas pro voluntate sua dividat, necesse est id quod dividit Spiritus, aut invito Patre Deo, dicas eum ex sua voluntate dividere: aut si idem velle dixeris Patrem, quod vult Spiritus sanctus; necesse est ut unitatem voluntatis operationisque divinae vel invitus, et si non corde, saltem ore fatearis. 142. Quod si unius et voluntatis et operationis est cum Patre Deo Spiritus sanctus, unius etiam substantiae est; quoniam ex operibus suis creator agnoscitur. Idem igitur Spiritus, idem, inquit, Dominus, idem, inquit, Deus (Ibid., 5). Et si Spiritum dicas, idem, est: et si Dominum dicas, idem est: et si Deum dicas, idem est. Non idem ut ipse Pater, ipse Filius, ipse sit Spiritus: sed quia et Pater et Filius ejusdem est potestatis. Idem ergo est per substantiam atque virtutem; quia non est in divinitate vel Sabelliana confusio, vel Ariana discretio, vel terrena corporalisque mutatio.

CAPUT XIII.

PROPHETIAM FUISSE NON solum a Patre ac Filio, sed etiam a Spiritu: hujus quoque idem cum eis imperium atque operationem in apostolos significari; et inde in tribus intelligendam imperii, constitutionis largitatisque unitatem: non timendum tamen ex eo consortio praejudicium; cum illud nec in humana amicitia locum habeat. Denique hanc esse apostolicae fidei haereditatem hinc confirmatur, quod apostoli scribantur Spiritui sancto obtemperasse.

143. Accipe aliud, sancte Imperator, in causa validum exemplum et tibi notum. Multifariam, inquit, et multis modis etiam Deus locutus est patribus in prophetis (Heb. I, 1). Et Sapientia Dei dixit: Mittam prophetas et apostolos. Et, alii datur, sicut scriptum est, per Spiritum sermo sapientiae, alii sermo scientiae secundum eumdem Spiritum, alii fides in eodem Spiritu, alii gratia curationum in uno Spiritu, alii operatio virtutum, alii prophetia (Luc. XI, 49). Ergo secundum Apostolum non solum per Patrem et Filium, sed etiam per Spiritum sanctum prophetia; et ideo unum munus, una est gratia. Habes ergo quia etiam Spiritus auctor est prophetiarum. 144. Apostoli quoque dixerunt: Visum est Spiritui sancto et nobis (Act. XV, 28). Et cum dicunt, visum, non solum operatorem gratiae, sed etiam auctorem imperatae exsecutionis ostendunt. Sicut enim de Deo legimus: Placuit Deo; ita etiam cum dicitur quia visum est Spiritui sancto, arbiter suae exprimitur potestatis. 145. Et quomodo non arbiter, qui ea quae vult, loquitur, quae vult, mandat; sicut mandat Pater, mandat et Filius? Sicut enim audivit Paulus 662 vocem dicentem sibi: Ego sum, inquit, Jesus, quem tu persequeris (Act. XVI, 7); ita etiam Spiritus Paulum et Silam vetuit ire in Bithyniam. Et sicut Pater locutus est per prophetas, ita etiam de Spiritu Agabus dicit: Haec dicit Spiritus sanctus: Virum cujus est zona haec, sic alligabunt eum in Hierusalem (Act. XXI, 11). Et sicut misit Sapientia apostolos, dicens: Ite in orbem universum, et praedicate Evangelium (Marc. XVI, 15): sic et Spiritus sanctus dicit: Separate mihi Paulum et Barnabam in opus, quo vocavi eos (Act. XIII, 2). Itaque praemissi a Spiritu sancto, quod infra Scriptura indicat, nullam discretionem inter caeteros habuerunt apostolos, quasi aliter a Patre Deo, aliter a Spiritu mitterentur (Ibid., 4). 146. Denique cum Paulus missus esset a Spiritu, et vas electionis erat Christi, et Deum in se operatum esse commemorat, dicens: Qui enim operatus est Petro in apostolatum circumcisionis, operatus est et mihi ad gentes (Galat. II, 8). Cum igitur idem si operatus in Paulo, qui est operatus in Petro, hoc utique ostenditur cum Spiritus sit operatus in Paulo, quod etiam in Petro Spiritus sanctus operatus sit. Sed et Deum Patrem in se operatum Petrus ipse testatur, sicut est in Actibus apostolorum, quia surgens Petrus dixit ad eos: Viri fratres, vos scitis quia a diebus antiquis in nobis Deus elegit ex ore meo audire nationes verbum Evangelii (Act. XV, 7). Ecce igitur in Petro Deus gratiam praedicationis operatus est. In quo utique cum per Christum electus sit et assumptus, operationem Christi quis audeat diffiteri, cum ipse Dominus dicat: Pasce agniculos meos (Joan. XXI, 15) ? 147. Una igitur operatio Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti: nisi forte hoc putetis, qui negatis ejusdem erga apostolos operis unitatem, ideo operatum Patrem, ideo operatum Spiritum in Petro, in quo Filius operatus fuerat, quasi ei Filii operatio minime redundaret ad gratiam. Et ideo velut adjunctis atque collatis viribus Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti operationem fuisse multiplicem, ne ad confirmandum Petrum Christi solius operatio vacillaret. 148. Nec solum una operatio in Petro Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti invenitur, sed etiam in omnibus apostolis divinae operationis unitas revelatur, et quaedam supernae constitutionis auctoritas. Operatio enim divina habet imperium, non habet ministerium; neque enim cum operatur Deus, aut labore aliquid extundit, aut arte: sed dixit, et facta sunt (Psal. XXXII, 9). Dixit, Fiat lux, et facta est lux (Gen. I, 3); in praecepto enim Dei operationis effectus est. 149. Hanc igitur regalem quamdam etiam sancto Spiritui potestatem Scripturarum testificatione delatam, si velimus advertere, facile possumus reperire; omnesque apostolos non solum Christi fuisse discipulos revelabitur, sed etiam Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti ministros. Sicut etiam Doctor gentium docet dicens: Quosdam quidem posuit Deus in Ecclesia, primo apostolos, secundo prophetas, tertio doctores: deinde 663 virtutes, gratiam curationem, opitulationes, gubernationes, genera linguarum (I Cor. XII, 28). 150. Ecce Deus posuit apostolos, posuit prophetas atque doctores, dedit curationum gratiam, quam supra habes dari per Spiritum sanctum, dedit genera linguarum. Sed tamen non omnes apostoli, non omnes prophetae, non omnes doctores. Non omnes, inquit (Ibid., 10), habent gratiam curationum, neque omnes, inquit, linguis loquuntur. In singulis enim hominibus universa dona divina esse non possunt: pro captu unusquisque id accipit, quod aut desiderat, aut meretur. Sed non hujus infirmitatis similis potentia Trinitatis, quae omnium munifica gratiarum est. 151. Denique posuit apostolos Deus. Hos quos Deus posuit in Ecclesia, Christus elegit, et apostolos ordinavit, et in orbem dixerit dicens: Ite in orbem universum, et praedicate Evangelium universae creaturae. Qui crediderit, et baptizatus fuerit, hic salvus erit: qui vero non crediderit, damnabitur. Signa autem credentes ista sequentur: in nomine meo daemonia ejicient, linguis loquentur novis, serpentes tollent; et si mortiferum quid biberint, non eis nocebit: super aegros manus imponent, et bene habebunt (Marc. XVI, 15 et seq.). Ecce doctores posuit Pater, posuit etiam Christus in Ecclesiis; et sicut Pater dat gratiam curationum, ita dat et Filius; sicut Pater dat dona linguarum, ita largitus est et Filius. 152. Similiter de sancto Spiritu supra accepimus, quia eadem gratiarum genera largiatur. Datur enim, inquit, per Spiritum alii gratia curationum, alii genera linguarum, alii prophetia (I Cor. 12, 9, 10). Ergo eadem dat Spiritus, quae dat Pater, dat etiam Filius. Accipiamus nunc expressius, quod superius praelibavimus, quia idem quod Pater et Filius, etiam Spiritus sanctus mandet officium, eosdemque constituat; dixit enim Paulus: Attendite vobis, et omni gregi, in quo posuit vos Spiritus sanctus episcopos regere Ecclesiam Dei (Act. XX, 28). 153. Unitas igitur imperii, unitas constitutionis, unitas largitatis. Nam si constitutionem separes et potestatem, quae erat causa ut quos posuerat apostolos Christus, poneret Deus Pater, poneret et Spiritus sanctus; nisi forte ut homines tamquam in consortio possessionis aut juris praejudicium verebantur? Et ideo dividebatur 664 operatio, distribuebatur imperium. 154. Haec inter ipsos homines angusta sunt et minuta, qui plerumque tamen etiamsi operatione non congruunt, congruunt voluntate. Unde quidam interrogatus quid amicus esset: Alter, inquit, ego. Si ergo homo amicum ita definivit, ut alterum se esse diceret, per unitatem videlicet amoris et gratiae; quanto magis in Patre et Filio et Spiritu sancto unitatem majestatis aestimare debemus, cum per eamdem operationem ac divinitatem vel unitas, vel certe id quod amplius est, ταυτότης sicut Graece dicitur, exprimatur? ταυτὸ enim idem significat; eo quod idem habeat et Pater et Filius et Spiritus sanctus; ut idem velle, et idem posse non ex affectione sit voluntatis, sed in substantia Trinitatis. 155. Haec est apostolicae fidei et devotionis haereditas, quam licet et ex ipsorum apostolorum considerare Actibus. Paruerunt ergo Paulus et Barnabas sancti Spiritus imperatis. Paruerunt et omnes apostoli, statimque eos quos separari jusserat Spiritus, ordinaverunt: Separate, inquit, mihi Paulum et Barnabam (Act. XIII, 4). Videtis jubentis imperium? Spectate merita servientium? 156. Credidit Paulus; et quia credidit, studia persecutoris abjecit, coronam justitiae reportavit. Credidit ille qui Ecclesias devastabat: sed conversus ad fidem, praedicabat in Spiritu, quod Spiritus imperabat. Ungebat athletam suum Spiritus, et pulvere impietatis excusso, debellatorem infidelium ineluctabilem variis impiorum congressionibus offerebat, atque ad bravium supernae vocationis in Christo Jesu diversis passionibus erudiebat (Act. IX, 20 et seq.). 157. Barnabas quoque credidit, et quia credidit, paruit. Itaque sancti Spiritus electus imperio, quod ei ad omne redundat insigne meritorum, non fuit tanto indignus collegio. Una enim gratia fulgebat in his, quos Spiritus unus elegerat. 158. Nec Paulus inferior Petro, quamvis ille Ecclesiae fundamentum, et hic sapiens architectus sciens vestigia credentium fundare populorum: nec Paulus, inquam, indignus apostolorum collegio, cum primo quoque facile conferendus, et nulli secundus. Nam qui se imparem nescit, facit aequalem.

LIBER TERTIUS.

CAPUT PRIMUM.

NON TANTUM PROPHETAS et apostolos a Spiritu missos, verum etiam Filium Dei. Probatur id ex Esaia, et evangelistis, quamque ob causam eumdem Spiritum sicut columbam descendisse ac super Christum manere Lucas scripserit, exponitur. Dehinc eadem Christi missione confirmata, Filium a Patre et Spiritu non secus ac Spiritum a Patre et Filio mitti colligitur. 1. Superiori libro (Ca) evidentibus testimoniis Scripturarum docuimus apostolos et prophetas, illos ad prophetandum, hos ad evangelizandum a sancto Spiritu, sicut a Patre et a Filio destinatos: nunc adjicimus quod omnes jure mirentur, et dubitare non possint, quod Spiritus super Christum; et quod sicut ille Spiritum misit, et Filium Dei Spiritus misit. Dicit enim Filius Dei: Spiritus Domini super me, propter quod unxit me, evangelizare pauperibus, misit me, praedicare captivis remissionem, et caecis visum (Esai. LXI, 1). Quod cum de libro Esaiae legeret, ait in Evangelio: Hodie completa est haec Scriptura in auribus vestris (Luc. IV, 21); ut de se dictum esse signaret.

2. Ergo mirari possumus si et prophetas et apostolos Spiritus misit cum Christus dixerit: Spiritus Domini super me (Ibid., 18)? Et bene, super me, dixit, quia quasi filius hominis loquebatur. Quasi filius enim hominis et unctus et missus est ad Evangelium praedicandum. 3. Sed si non creditur Filio, audiant etiam Patrem loquentem quia Spiritus Domini super Christum. Dicit enim Joanni: Super quem videris Spiritum descendentem de coelo, et manentem super eum, hic est qui baptizat in Spiritu sancto (Joan. I, 33). Dixit hoc Deus Pater Joanni: Joannes et audivit, et vidit, et credidit. Audivit a Deo, vidit in Domino, credidit quia Spiritus erat, qui descendebat de coelo. Non enim columba, sed sicut columba descendit; sic enim scriptum est: Et vidi Spiritum descendentem de coelo, sicut columbam (Marc. I, 10). 4. Sicut Joannes vidisse se dixit, ita scripsit et Marcus: Lucas autem addidit quod corporali specie descendit Spiritus sanctus, sicut columba (Luc. III, 22); ne incarnationem illam putares fuisse, sed speciem. Ideo autem speciem praetendit, ut per speciem crederet, qui Spiritum non videbat, et per speciem declararet unius honoris in imperio, unius operationis in mysterio, unius muneris in lavacro cum Patre et Filio sibi esse consortium, nisi forte invalidum credimus, ut in eo baptizetur servulus, in quo baptizatus est Dominus. 5. Pulchre autem dixit: Manentem super eum (Joan. I, 33); quia ad prophetas quoties volebat Spiritus, 666 vel inspirabat verbum, vel faciebat: semper autem manebat in Christo. 6. Nec rursum moveat, quod super eum dixit; de Filio enim hominis loquebatur, quia sicut Filius hominis baptizabatur. Nam secundum divinitatem non super Christum est Spiritus, sed in Christo; quia sicut Pater in Filio, et Filius in Patre, ita Dei Spiritus et Spiritus Christi et in Patre est et in Filio, quia oris est Spiritus. Manet enim in Deo qui ex Deo est, sicut scriptum est: Nos autem non spiritum hujus mundi accepimus, sed spiritum qui ex Deo est (I Cor. II, 12). Et manet in Christo, qui a Christo accepit: et in Christo est, quia iterum scriptum est: Ille de meo accipiet (Joan. XVI, 14): et alibi: Lex enim Spiritus vitae in Christo Jesu liberavit me a lege peccati et mortis (Rom. VIII, 2). Non ergo secundum divinitatem Christi super Christum est, quia non super se est Trinitas, sed supra omnia, supra se autem non est, sed in se est. 7. Quis ergo dubitet quia prophetas et apostolos Spiritus misit, cum dicat Dei Filius: Spiritus Domini super me (Luc. IV, 18)? Et alibi: Ego sum primus, et ego in aeternum: et manus mea fundavit terram, et dextera mea solidavit coelum: vocabo eos, et astabunt simul, et congregabuntur omnes, et audient. Quis illis haec denuntiavit? Diligens te, feci voluntatem tuam adversus Babylonem, ut tollatur semen Chaldaeorum. Ego locutus sum, et ego vocavi: adduxi eum, et prosperum iter ejus feci. Accedite ad me, et audite haec. Non ab initio in occulto locutus sum: cum fierent, illic eram. Et nunc Dominus Deus misit, et Spiritus ejus (Esai. XLVIII, 12 et seq.). Quis est, qui dicit: Misit me Dominus Deus, et Spiritus ejus; nisi qui venit a Patre, ut salvos faceret peccatores? Quem ut audis, et Spiritus misit; ne cum legis quia Filius Spiritum mittit, inferioris esse Spiritum crederes potestatis. 8. Ergo et Pater Filium misit, et Spiritus: Spiritum quoque et Pater misit, et Filius: Pater misit, quia scriptum est: Paraclitus autem ille Spiritus sanctus, quem mittet Pater in nomine meo (Joan. XIV, 26). Filius misit, quia dixit: Cum venerit autem ille paraclitus, quem ego mittam vobis a Patre, Spiritum veritatis (Joan. XV, 26). Si ergo se invicem Filius et Spiritus mittunt, sicut Pater mittit, non subjectionis injuria, sed communitas potestatis est.

CAPUT II.

FILIUM PERINDE AC Spiritum dari; unde non subjectio, sed una divinitas operatione demonstratur.

9. Nec solum misit Pater Filium, sed etiam dedit, sicut ipse se Filius dedit. Lectum est enim nobis: Gratia vobis a Deo Patre nostro et Domino Jesu Christo, qui se dedit pro peccatis nostris (Galat. I, 3, 4). 667 Si subjectum in eo putant fuisse, quia missus est; gratiae esse negare non possunt, quia datus est. Datus est autem a Patre, ut Esaias dixit: Puer natus est nobis, Filius datus est nobis (Esai. IX, 6); datus est autem, audeo dicere, et ab Spiritu qui missus ab Spiritu est. Cum enim non definierit propheta a quo datus sit, ostendit datum gratia Trinitatis: cum autem ipse se Filius dederit, utique non potuit ipse sibi secundum divinitatem esse subjectus. Ergo non potuit divinae subjectionis esse quod datus est. 10. Datus est autem et Spiritus sanctus, quia lectum est: Rogabo Patrem, et alium paraclitum dabit vobis (Joan. XIV, 16). Et Apostolus ait: Quapropter qui haec spernit, non hominem spernit, sed Deum, qui dedit Spiritum suum in nobis (I Thess. IV, 8). Esaias quoque et Spiritum datum ostendit et Filium: Sic, inquit, dicit Dominus Deus, qui fecit coelum, et finxit illud: qui solidavit terram, et quae in ea sunt: et dat populo qui est super eam Spiritum, et Spiritum calcantibus eam (Esa. XLII, 5). Et ad Filium: Ego Dominus Deus, qui vocavi te in aequitate, et tenebo manum tuam, et confortabo te: et dedi te in testamentum generis mei, in lucem gentium, aperire oculos caecorum, educere de vinculis alligatos (Ibid. 6, 7). Cum ergo Filius et missus et datus sit, Spiritus quoque missus et datus sit; habent utique unitatem divinitatis, qui habent operis unitatem.

CAPUT III.

EAMDEM QUOQUE UNITATEM inde cognosci, quod Spiritus digitus dicatur, et Filius dextera; humani enim sermonis consuetudine juvari divinorum intelligentiam. Hoc digito scriptas fuisse legis tabulas, quae postea fractae sunt, et qua de causa? denique Christum scripsisse eodem digito: nec ullam tamen e corporea comparatione in Spiritu admittendam, esse inferioritatem.

11. Unde etiam et digitus Dei appellatus est Spiritus, eo quod sit Patri et Filio et Spiritui sancto individua, inseparabilisque communio. Nam sicut Filium Dei Scriptura dexteram Dei dixit, sicut lectum est: Dextera tua, Domine, glorificata est in virtute, dextera manus tua, Domine, confregit inimicos (Exod. XV, 6); ita Spiritus sanctus appellatus est digitus Dei, sicut ipse Dominus dicit: Quod si in digito Dei ego ejicio daemonia (Luc. XI, 20). Hunc enim digitum in alio libro Evangelii eodem loco Dei Spiritum nominavit, sicut habes: Quod si in Spiritu Dei ego ejicio daemonia (Marc. XII, 28). 12. Quid igitur expressius ad significandam divinitatis vel operationis dici potuit unitatem, quae secundum divinitatem est Patris, vel Filii, vel Spiritus sancti, quam ut intelligamus multo magis quam corpus hoc nostrum aeternae plenitudinem divinitatis scindi videri, si quis unitatem substantiae separet, multiplicet potestates; cum una sit ejusdem divinitatis aeternitas? 668 13. Plerumque enim ex nostris sermonibus ea quae supra nos sunt, convenit aestimari: et quia illa videre non possumus, ex his quae videre possumus, colligamus: Invisibilia enim ejus, ait Apostolus, a creatura mundi per ea quae facta sunt, intellecta conspiciuntur (Rom. I, 20). Et subdidit: Sempiterna quoque virtus ejus et divinitas (Ibid.). Quorum aliud de Filio, aliud de Spiritu sancto dictum videtur; ut quemadmodum sempiterna virtus Patris dicitur Filius, ita etiam Spiritus quia divinus est, sempiterna divinitas esse credatur. Nam et Filius quia semper vivit, vita sempiterna est. Hic ergo digitus Dei et sempiternus est, et divinus. Quid enim Dei proprium, quod non sempiternum sit et divinum? 13. Hoc digito, sicut legimus, tabulas illas lapideas Deus inscripsit, quas Moyses accepit (Exod. XXXI, 18). Non enim carnali digito Deus harum litterarum, quas legimus, apices et elementa formavit: sed Spiritu suo dedit Legem. Et ideo Apostolus dixit: Lex enim spiritalis est, quae utique non atramento inscripta est, sed Spiritu Dei vivi: non in tabulis lapideis, sed in tabulis cordis carnalibus (II Cor. III, 3). Nam si Apostoli epistola scribitur in Spiritu, quid obstat quonimus etiam legem Dei non atramento, sed Spiritu Dei scriptam credere debeamus: quae utique cordis nostri mentisque secreta non maculat, sed illuminat? 14. Scripta est autem in tabulis lapideis (Exod. XXXII, 19), quia in typo scripta est: sed tabulae fractae primo sunt, et abjectae de Moysis manibus; quia Judaei a propheticis operibus exciderunt. Et bene tabulae fractae sunt, non scriptura deleta. Et tu vide ne frangatur tabula tua, ne mens tua et animus dividatur. Numquid divisus est Christus? Non divisus est, sed unum est cum Patre: et te nemo ab eo separet. Si fides deficiat, tabula cordis tui frangitur. Comminuitur animi firmitudo, si unitatem divinitatis in Trinitate non credas. Scripta est et fides tua, scripta est et culpa tua, sicut Hieremias dixit: Scripta est, Juda, culpa tua graphio ferreo et ungue adamantino. Et scripta est, inquit, in pectore et in corde tuo (Jerem. XVII, 1). Ibi igitur culpa est, ubi gratia: sed culpa graphio scribitur, gratia Spiritu designatur. 15. Hoc digito mystice etiam Dominus Jesus, inclinato capite, scribebat in terra, cum a Judaeis adultera esset oblata (Joan. VIII, 6): significans per figuram, quando de peccatis alterius judicamus, nostri nos debere meminisse peccati. 16. Ac ne rursus quia Legem Deus Spiritu suo scripsit, inferius aliquid tamquam de ministerio Spiritus crederemus, vel ex corporis nostri aestimatione portionem quamdam exiguam Dei Spiritum putaremus, ait alibi Apostolus (II Cor. II, 13) non se humanae scientiae verbis loqui, sed doctis Spiritus, et spiritualibus spiritalia comparare: animalem autem hominem non percipere quae sunt Spiritus Dei; sciebat enim quod is, qui divina carnalibus compararet, inter animalia esset, non inter spiritales homines computandus: 669 Stultitia enim, inquit, illi est (Ibid. 14). Et ideo quia sciret has futuras esse animalium hominum quaestiones, praesagus futuri ait: Quis enim cognovit sensum Domini, qui instruat eum (Ibid. 16)? Nos autem sensum Christi habemus.

CAPUT IV.

SPIRITUM PROPTEREA QUOD digitus vocatur, minorem esse contendentibus, regerit hoc quoque in Filii, qui dextra dicitur, injuriam converti. Haec ergo nomina non nisi ad unitatem divinitatis referenda; unde Moyses totam Trinitatem in maris rubri transitu cecinit operatam. Nec sane mirum ibi Spiritus exstitisse operationem, ubi baptismi figura fuit; siquidem in hoc tres personas ex aequo operari, sanctificareque Scriptura docet.

17. [Alias cap. III.] Sed si quis adhuc carnalibus inhaeret ambiguis, et corporalibus vacillat exemplis, consideret quia non potest bene sentire de Filio, qui potest male sentire de Spiritu. Nam si ideo portionem quamdam exiguam putant esse Spiritum Dei, quia digitus Dei dicitur; iidem utique et portionem exiguam dicunt esse in Filio Dei, quia dextera Dei dicitur. 18. Sed Filius et dextera et virtus dicitur: itaque si verba nostra pendamus, nulla potest sine virtute esse perfectio; et ideo caveant ne putent, quod nefas dictu est, semiperfectum in sua substantia Patrem perfectionem accepisse per Filium, et desinant coaeternum Filium Patri negare. Quando enim non fuit Dei virtus? Quod si aliquando putant non fuisse Dei virtutem, aliquando plenitudinem in Deo Patre negabunt fuisse, cui putant aliquando defuisse virtutem. 19. Sed haec, ut dixi, scripta sunt, ut ad unitatem divinitatis ista referamus, et credamus quod Apostolus dixit (Coloss. II, 9), quia plenitudo divinitatis corporaliter habitat in Christo, et habitat in Patre, et habitat in Spiritu sancto: et quod sicut unitas divinitatis, ita et unitas operationis sit. 20. Quod etiam ex Cantico Moysis colligi potest; ipse enim cum per maria traduxisset populum Judaeorum, et Dei Patris operationem et Filii est confessus et Spiritus dicens: Dextera manus tua, Domine, glorificata est in virtute: dextera manus tua, Domine, confregit inimicos (Exod. XV, 6). Habes quia et Filium sit confessus et Patrem, cujus est dextera. Et infra, ne Spiritum sanctum praeteriret, adjecit: Misisti Spiritum tuum, et cooperuit eos mare: et Spiritu iracundiae tuae divisa est aqua (Ibid. 10). Quo significatur unitas divinitatis, non inaequalitas Trinitatis. 21. [Alias cap. IV.] Vides igitur quia et Spiritus sanctus cooperatus Patri et Filio sit, ut tamquam congelascentibus fluctibus in medio mari, aquarum quidam murus insurgeret ad transitum Judaeorum, et rursus Aegyptiorum populum per Spiritum refusus obrueret (Exod. XIV, 22). Inde et columnam nubis plerique praecessisse in die populo Judaeorum, et columnam ignis in nocte arbitrantur, quo protegeret plebem suam gratia spiritalis (Exod. XIII, 21). 670 22. Hanc autem operationem Dei, quam totus orbis jure miratur, sine sancti Spiritus opere non fuisse etiam Apostolus declaravit, dicens in figura illa praecessisse spiritalis mysterii veritatem; sic enim habes: Quoniam patres nostri omnes sub nube fuerunt, et omnes mare transierunt, et omnes in Moyse baptizati sunt in nube et in mari: et omnes eamdem escam spiritalem manducaverunt, et omnes eumdem potum spiritalem biberunt (I Cor. X, 1 et seq.). 23. Nam quemadmodum typus sacramenti potuit esse sine operatione Spiritus sancti, cujus veritas omnis in Spiritu est? Quod et Apostolus docuit dicens: Sed abluti estis, sed sanctificati estis, sed justificati estis in nomine Domini nostri Jesu Christi, et in Spiritu Dei nostri (I Cor. VI, 11). 24. Vides igitur quia et Pater operatur in Filio, et Filius operatur in Spiritu. Et ideo secundum seriem Scripturarum noli dubitare in figura fuisse, quod in veritate esse ipsa etiam veritas declaravit. Quis enim operationem ejus abnuat in lavacro, in quo operationem ejus, septimus et gratiam? 25. [Alias cap. V.] Nam sicut sanctificat Pater, ita sanctificat et Filius, sanctificat et Spiritus sanctus. Sanctificat Pater, secundum quod scriptum est: Deus pacis sanctificet vos, ut integer spiritus vester, et anima et corpus sine querela in die Domini nostri Jesu Christi servetur (I Thess. V, 23). Et alibi Filius dicit: Pater, sanctifica eos in veritate (Joan. XVII, 17). 26. De Filio autem idem Apostolus dixit: Qui factus est nobis sapientia a Deo, et justitia, et sanctificatio, et redemptio (I Cor. I, 30). Vides quia factus est sanctificatio? Sed factus est nobis; non ut ille mutaret quod erat, sed ut nos sanctificaret in carne. 27. Spiritum quoque sanctum sanctificare Apostolus docet. Sic enim dicit: Gratias agere debemus Deo semper pro vobis, fratres dilectissimi a Domino; quia elegit vos Deus primitias in salutem, in sanctificatione Spiritus, et fide veritatis (II Thess. II, 12). 28. Ergo sanctificat Pater, sanctificat et Filius, sanctificat et Spiritus sanctus: sed una est sanctificatio, quia unum est baptisma, et una gratia sacramenti (Ephes. IV, 5).

CAPUT V.

COLLIGIT COEPTUM ARGUMENTUM, et unitatem per digitum atque dexteram significari inde confirmat, quod eadem opera Dei sint, quae sunt manuum; et quae manuum, eadem etiam sint digitorum: ac demum quod manus Filio et Spiritui perinde conveniat, ac Spiritui et Filio digitus.

29. [Alias cap. VI.] Sed quid mirum si sanctificat singulos ipse sanctificatione non indigens, sed redundans; quando tantam, ut dixi, majestatem ejus accepimus, ut tamquam digitus a corpore, ita a Deo Patre inseparabilis videatur Spiritus sanctus? 30. Quod si quis ad diminutionem, non ad unitatem potestatis putat esse referendum, is profecto in eam amentiam cadet, ut tamquam in unam velut corporis formam Patrem et 671 Filium et Spiritum sanctum videatur effingere, et distinctiones quasdam figurare membrorum. 31. Sed accipiant, ut saepius dixi, non inaequalitatem, sed unitatem potestatis hac testificatione signari; quandoquidem quae opera Dei sunt, eadem sint opera manuum, eadem etiam legerimus opera esse digitorum. Scriptum est enim: Coeli enarrant gloriam Dei, et opera manuum ejus annuntiat firmamentum (Psal. XVIII, 1); et alibi: Initio terram tu fundasti, Domine, et opera manuum tuarum sunt coeli (Psalm. CI, 26). Eadem igitur sunt opera manuum, quae sunt opera Dei. Non ergo aliqua pro membrorum corporalium qualitate discretio operationis, sed unitas potestatis est. 32. Quae autem opera sunt manuum, eadem opera digitorum; quia aeque scriptum est: Quoniam videbo coelos tuos, opera digitorum tuorum, lunam et stellas quas tu fundasti (Psal. VIII, 4). Quid hic igitur digiti minus quam manus fecisse produntur; cum idem fecerint digiti, quod manus; sicut scriptum est: Quoniam delectasti me, Domine, in factura tua, et in operibus manuum tuarum delectabor (Psal. XCI, 5). 33. Et tamen quia manum legimus Filium (scriptum est enim: Nonne manus mea fecit haec omnia (Esai. LXVI, 2)? et alibi: Ponam te in foramine petrae, et protegam manum meam super te. Posui manum meam sub tegumento petrae (Exod. XXXIII, 22); quod ad incarnationis mysterium spectat, quia integumentum corporis virtus Dei sempiterna suscepit) utique liquet manus et de Filio Dei et de Spiritu sancto Scripturam locutam. 34. Et rursus quia digitum Dei Spiritum legimus (Luc. XI, 20), ideo appellatos digitos aestimamus, ut Filium Spiritumque signaret. Denique ut et Filii et Spiritus sanctificationem se habere memoraret, ait quidam sanctus: Manus tuae fecerunt me, et plasmaverunt me (Job. X, 8).

CAPUT VI.

SPIRITUM PERINDE AC Patrem et Filium arguere; immo vero judicare non posse judices absque ipso, ut Salomonis Danielisque judiciis, quae obiter paucis explicantur, ostenditur; neque alium Danieli aspirasse, quam Spiritum sanctum.

35. [Alias cap. VII.] Cur enim verborum similitudinem recusamus, ubi unitatem potestatis asserimus; cum eousque unitas potestatis sit, ut et arguat Spiritus, sicut arguit Pater, et arguit Filius? Sic enim scriptum est: Domine, ne ira tua arguas me, neque in furore tuo corripias me (Psalm. VI, 1). Deinde in quadragesimo nono psalmo sic dicit Dominus: Arguam te, et statuam ante faciem tuam peccata tua (Psal. XLIX, 21); ita etiam de Spiritu sancto Filius dixit: Cum autem abiero, mittam paraclitum ad vos: et ille veniens arguet mundum de peccato, et de justitia, et de judicio (Joan. XVI, 7, 8). 36. Sed quo nos perfidorum hominum deducit amentia, ut quasi de ambiguo quod Spiritus sanctus arguat, 672 videamur astruere; cum judices ipsi non queant nisi per Spiritum judicare? Denique nobile illud Salomonis judicium, quod inter dubia certantium; cum una, oppresso parvulo, quem ipsa susceperat, vindicare sibi vellet alienum, altera proprium filium defensaret; et fraudem in ipsis cogitationibus occultis, et pietatem in maternis visceribus deprehendit, utique per Spiritus sancti munus emicuit (III Reg. III, 16). Neque enim latentem conscientiam feminarum alia aliqua penetrasset nisi Spiritus sancti machaera, de qua ait Dominus: Non veni pacem mittere, sed machaeram (Matth. X, 34); quia non ferro, sed Spiritu mens interna penetrabilis: Est enim Spiritus intelligentiae sanctus, unicus, multiplex, subtilis, mobilis (Sap. VII, 22); et infra: Omnia prospiciens (Ibid., 23). 37. Vide propheta quid dicat, quia omnia prospicit. Et ideo etiam Salomon prospexit, ut machaeram illam juberet afferri (III Reg. III, 24); quia simulato quod dividere vellet infantem, consideravit quod vera mater plus consuleret filio quam solatio; et gratiam juri, non gratiae jura praeferret. At vero illa quae matris simularet affectum, vincendi studio caeca, parvi duceret ejus exitium, in quo nesciret pietatis dispendium. Itaque vir ille spiritalis, qui dijudicaret omnia (Spiritalis enim (I Cor. II, 15) dijudicat omnia) naturam in affectibus quaesivit, quae latebat in vocibus: et pietatem interrogavit, ut proderet veritatem. Vicit itaque mater charitatis affectu, quae fructus est Spiritus. 38. Dijudicat in propheta, quia per Spiritum datur sermo sapientiae: quomodo ergo negatur quod arguere possit Spiritus sanctus mundum de judicio, qui judicii tollit ambiguum, largitur eventum? 39 et 40. Daniel quoque nisi accepisset Dei Spiritum, numquam potuisset deprehendere adulterium libidinis, mendacium fraudis. Nam cum Susanna presbyterorum conjurationibus appetita, inflexam populi mentem videret contemplatione seniorum; et omnibus destituta subsidiis, sola inter homines pudicitiae suae conscia Deum arbitrum precaretur: Exaudivit, inquit, Dominus vocem ejus, cum duceretur, ut periret: et excitavit Dominus Spiritum sanctum pueri adolescentis, cui nomen Daniel (Dan. XIII, 44, 45). Itaque secundum accepti Spiritus sancti gratiam vacillantia perfidorum testimonia deprehendit; neque enim alia nisi divinae fuit operatio potestatis, ut eos vox sua proderet, quorum latebat affectus.

41. Percipite igitur Spiritus sancti sacrum et coeleste miraculum. Illa quae maluit sibi casta esse, quam populo: illa quae maluit innocentiae subire periculum, quam pudoris: quae cum accusaretur, tacebat: cum damnaretur, silebat, conscientiae suae contenta judicio: quae reverentiam pudoris etiam in periculis reservabat; ne extorsisse petulantiam viderentur, qui extorquere non potuerant castitatem: ubi 673 Dominum invocavit, Spiritum meruit qui latentem presbyterorum conscientiam revelavit. 42.

Discant pudicae calumniam non timere. Nam quae castimoniam vitae praetulit, nec vitae dispendium pertulit, et gloriam retulit castitatis. Sic et Abraham quondam jussus adire peregrina, nec uxoriae periculo pudicitiae, nec mortis propositae terrore revocatus, et vitam suam, et castimoniam servavit uxoris. Nullum itaque Deo credidisse poenituit: et castitas devotionem cumulavit in Sara, et devotio castitatem. 43. Ac ne quis forte existimet, quia dicente Scriptura: Excitavit Deus Spiritum sanctum pueri adolescentis (Dan. IV, 21), spiritum in eo putet fuisse hominis, non Spiritum sanctum; legat in posterioribus, et inveniet quia Spiritum sanctum accepit Daniel, et ideo prophetavit. Denique et rex eum praetulit, quia habebat gratiam spiritalem. Sic enim dicit: Tu autem, Daniel, potes; quia Spiritus sanctus Dei in te est. Et infra Scriptura dicit: Et fuit Daniel praepositus illis; quoniam Spiritus erat superans in eo (Dan. VI, 3). Sed etiam Moysis Spiritus judicaturis divisus est (Num. XI, 25).

CAPUT VII.

FILIUM IPSUM NON judicare aut vindicare sine Spiritu; unde idem Spiritus Verbi gladius appellatur. Sed cum vicissim Verbum dicatur Spiritus gladius, summam in utroque potentiae unitatem inde cognosci.

44. Sed quid de caeteris loquamur? ipsum Dominum Jesum in Spiritu non solum judicare accepimus, sed etiam vindicare. Neque enim vindicaret in Antichristum, nisi ante de ejus meritis judicaret, quem (sicut legimus) Dominus Jesus interficiet Spiritu oris sui (II Thess. II, 8). [Alias cap. VIII]. Sed hic non acquisita gratia est, sed individua manet unitas; quia neque Christus sine Spiritu, neque Spiritus potest esse sine Christo. Non enim potest divinae naturae unitas separari.

45. Et quia in medium id venit exemplum quod Dominus Jesus interficiet Spiritu oris sui, gladius quidam Verbi Spiritus intelligitur (Ephes. VI, 17). Denique et in Evangelio dicit ipse Dominus Jesus: Non veni pacem mittere, sed gladium (Matth. X, 34). Venit enim ut Spiritum daret, ideoque et in ore ejus gladius bis acutus, utique gratia spiritalis (Apoc. XIX, 15). Spiritus ergo Verbi gladius est. 46. Et ut scias inaequalitatem non esse, sed unitatem naturae, Verbum quoque gladius est Spiritus sancti; scriptum est enim: Accipientes scutum fidei, in quo possitis omnia tela maligni ignita exstinguere, et galeam salutis assumite, et gladium Spiritus, quod est Verbum Dei (Ephes. VI, 16, 17). 47. Cum igitur Verbi gladius Spiritus sanctus sit, et Spiritus sancti gladius Verbum Dei sit; utique unitas est potentiae. 674

CAPUT VIII.

PRAEDICTAM UNITATEM EO probari, quod sicut Pater, ita etiam Filius contristari ac tentari legitur. Tentatum etiam Filium in deserto, ubi erecta fuit in aeneo serpente figura crucis: sed Spiritum quoque ibidem tentatum dici ab Apostolo. Hinc Israelitas ab eodem Spiritu directos in terram promissam, ipsique unam esse cum Patre et Filio voluntatem ac potentiam colligit Ambrosius.

48. [Alias cap. IX.] Quam unitatem licet etiam aliis Scripturarum locis considerare. Nam cum dicat Ezechiel ad populum Judaeorum: Et contristastis me in omnibus his, dicit Dominus (Ezech. XVI, 43); Paulus novo populo in epistola sua dicit: Nolite contristare Spiritum sanctum Dei, in quo signati estis (Ephes. IV, 30). Rursus cum Esaias dicat de ipsis Judaeis: Ipsi autem non crediderunt, sed exacerbaverunt Spiritum sanctum (Esai. LXIII, 10); David de Deo dicit: Et exacerbaverunt altissimum in siccitate, et tentaverunt Deum in cordibus suis (Psal. LXXVII, 17, 18). 49. Accipe etiam quia cum alibi dixerit Scriptura tentatum Spiritum, tentatum etiam Deum, eadem dicat et Christum esse tentatum; habes enim ad Corinthios Apostolum: Neque tentemus Christum, sicut quidam eorum tentaverunt, et a serpentibus perierunt (I Cor. X, 9). Justa vindicta, ut adversarii venena sentirent, qui non venerabantur auctorem. 50. Et bene Dominus, aereo serpente suspenso, jussit curari vulnera sauciorum (Num. XXI, 9); imago enim crucis aereus serpens est; nam etsi in carne sua suspensus est Christus, tamen in eo et ipse crucifixus est mundo, et ipsi crucifixus est mundus: Mihi enim, inquit, mundus crucifixus est, et ego mundo (Galat. VI, 14). Crucifixus est ergo in suis mundus illecebris; et ideo non verus, sed aereus suspensus est serpens; quia in veritate quidem corporis, sed sine veritate peccati suscepit Dominus speciem peccatoris; ut per lubricum infirmitatis humanae simulando serpentem, depositis carnis exuviis, veri destrueret serpentis astutiam. Per crucem itaque Domini, quae in tentationis ultione subvenit, offensam in perfidis Trinitatis agnosco, qui medicinam Trinitatis accipio. 51. Ergo cum habeas in libro Moysi, quia Dominus tentatus serpentes immiserit populo Judaeorum (Num. XXI, 6), necesse est aut unitatem in majestate divina fatearis Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti: aut certe cum Spiritum dicat apostolica Scriptura tentatum, Domini nomine. Spiritum utique designavit. Tentatum autem Spiritum sanctum ad Hebraeos scribens apostolus dicit; sic enim habes: Quia haec dicit Spiritus sanctus: Hodie si vocem ejus audieritis, nolite obdurare corda vestra, sicut in irritatione secundum diem tentationis in deserto, ubi tentaverunt me patres vestri, probaverunt et viderunt opera mea. Quadraginta annis proximus fui generationi huic, et dixi: Semper isti errant corde; ipsi vero non cognoverunt vias meas, sicut juravi in ira mea, si introibunt in requiem meam (Hebr. III, 7 et seq.). 675 52. Ergo secundum Apostolum tentatus est Spiritus. Si et ipse tentatus est, et ipse utique in terram repromissionis Judaeorum populum dirigebat, sicut scriptum est: Quia adduxit eos per abyssum, sicut equum per desertum, et non laboraverunt, et sicut pecora per campum. Descendit Spiritus a Domino, et direxit eos (Esai. LXIII, 13, 14). Et ipse utique serenam coelestis alimoniae pluviam ministrabat, ipse quotidianam messem, quam terra non parturierat, agricola non severat, imbre fertili fecundabat. 53. Nunc spectemus singula. Requiem Judaeis promiserat Deus, eam requiem Spiritus suam dicit (Exod. XVI, 12). Tentatum se a perfidis Deus Pater memorat, tentatum ab iisdem se dicit et Spiritus; quia una tentatio est, qua tentata est a sacrilegis una divinitas Trinitatis. Condemnat Deus populum Judaeorum (Num. XIV, 8); ut in terram fluentem lac et mel, hoc est, ad resurrectionis requiem pervenire non possit: eadem sententia condemnat et Spiritus dicens: Si introibunt in requiem meam (Psal. XCIV, 11). Unius ergo sententia voluntatis, unius excellentia potestatis est.

CAPUT IX.

SPIRITUM SANCTUM EXACERBARI confirmatur ex Petri verbis; ubi unum et idem esse Spiritum Dei, ac Spiritum Domini, cum ex aliis locis, tum e memorata ejusdem apostoli sententia in Ananiam ac Saphiram ostenditur: unde Spiritus sancti vel cum Patre ac Filio conjunctionem, vel propriam divinitatem evinci contenditur.

54. Fortasse tamen aliquis diceret hoc exemplum non posse ad proprietatem sancti Spiritus derivari, nisi alio loco etiam Petrus apostolus nos docuisset peccatis nostris etiam Spiritum posse tentari, sic enim habes ad Ananiae conjugem dictum: Quid utique convenit vobis tentare Spiritum Domini (Act. V, 9)? Etenim Domini Spiritus ipse est Dei Spiritus; quia unus sanctus est Spiritus, ut etiam Paulus apostolus docuit dicens: Vos autem in carne non estis, sed in Spiritu; si tamen Spiritus Dei habitat in vobis. Si quis autem Spiritum Christi non habet, hic non est ejus (Rom. VIII, 9). Praemisit Spiritum Dei, et statim subdidit eumdem esse Spiritum Christi. Et cum dixisset de Spiritu, ut intelligeremus quia ubi Spiritus sanctus, ibi Christus est, addidit: Si autem Christus in vobis (Ibid., 10). 55. Deinde quomodo hic intelligimus quia ubi Spiritus, ibi et Christus; ita etiam alibi ostendit quia ubi Christus, ibi etiam Spiritus sanctus sit. Nam cum dixisset: Numquid experimentum ejus quaeritis, qui in me loquitur Christus (II Cor. XIII, 3); alibi ait: Puto enim et ego Spiritum Dei habeo (I Cor. VII, 40). Inseparabilis ergo 676 est unitas, quia ubi aut Pater, aut Christus, aut Spiritus, Scriptura testificante, signatur; ibi omnis plenitudo est Trinitatis. 56. [Alias cap. X] Sed et ipse Petrus in eo, quod proposuimus, exemplo praemisit Spiritum sanctum, et postea dixit Spiritum Domini; sic enim habes: Anania, cur implevit Satanas cor tuum ad mentiendum Spiritui sancto, ut fraudem faceres de pretio agri? Ita nonne manens tibi manebat, et venditus in tua erat potestate? Quare posuisti in corde tuo hoc scelus? Non es hominibus mentitus, sed Deo (Act. V, 3 et seq.). Et subter ad ejus uxorem ait: Quid utique convenit vobis tentare Spiritum Domini (Ibid., 9)? 57. Primum intelligimus quia Spiritum sanctum Spiritum Domini dixit. Deinde cum praemiserit Spiritum sanctum, et addiderit: Non es hominibus mentitus, sed Deo; necesse est in Spiritu sancto aut unitatem divinitatis intelligas; quoniam cum Spiritus tentatur, Deus fallitur: aut si unitatem divinitatis conaris excludere, secundum Scripturae verba ipse utique Spiritum Deum credis. 58. Si enim et de Spiritu expressum intelligimus et de Patre, in Deo utique Patre et Spiritu sancto veritatis et scientiae advertimus unitatem; quia similiter a sancto Spiritu sicut a Deo Patre mendacium deprehenditur. Quod si utrumque de Spiritu accipimus, cur quod legis, perfide, negare conaris? Aut igitur unitatem divinitatis Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti, aut divinitatem sancti Spiritus confitere. Utrum dixeris, in Deo utrumque dixisti; quia et unitas divinitatem astruit, et divinitas unitatem.

CAPUT X.

SPIRITUS SANCTI DIVINITATEM astrui ex Joannis loco. Hunc quidem deletum fuisse ab haereticis, at inani conatu; cum inde facilius eorum perfidia convinci possit. Ut ostendatur hic idem locus esse de Spiritu, contextus series expenditur. Eum de Spiritu sancto nasci, qui renascitur de eodem Spiritu, de quo Christus ipse natus ac renatus creditur. Iterum ex duobus Joannis testimoniis colligitur Spiritus divinitas, ac demum quomodo Spiritus, aqua et sanguis testes dicantur, exponitur.

59. [Alias cap. XI.] Nec solum hoc loco evidenter sancti Spiritus θεότητα, hoc est, deitatem Scriptura testatur; sed etiam ipse Dominus dixit in Evangelio: Quoniam Deus Spiritus est (Joan. III, 6). Quem locum ita expresse, Ariani, testificamini esse de Spiritu; ut eum de vestris codicibus auferatis: atque utinam de vestris, et non etiam de Ecclesiae codicibus tolleretis! Eo enim tempore quo impiae infidelitatis Auxentius Mediolanensem 677 Ecclesiam armis exercituque occupaverat, vel a Valente atque Ursatio, nutantibus sacerdotibus suis, incursabatur Ecclesia Sirmiensis, falsum hoc, et sacrilegium vestrum in Ecclesiasticis codicibus deprehensum est. Et fortasse hoc etiam in Oriente fecistis. 60. Et litteras quidem potuistis abolere, sed fidem non potuistis auferre. Plus vos illa litura prodebat, plus vos illa litura damnabat; neque enim vos poteratis oblinire veritatem, sed illa litura de libro vitae nomina vestra radebat. Cur auferebatur: Quoniam Deus Spiritus est; si non pertinebat ad Spiritum? Si enim de Deo Patre vultis expressum, ergo et Deum Patrem negatis, qui putatis esse delendum. Utrum vultis, eligite: in utroque vos laqueus vestrae impietatis astringet, si gentiles vos esse fateamini vel Patrem Deum negando, vel Spiritum. Tenetur igitur vestra confessio, qua delestis oraculum, dum formidatis exemplum. 61. Delestis quidem in pectoribus animisque vestris: caeterum divinum non deletur oraculum, non deletur Spiritus sanctus, sed aversatur impias mentes: non deletur gratia, sed iniquitas; quia scriptum est: Ego sum, ego sum, qui deleo iniquitates tuas (Esai. XLIII, 25). Denique Moyses pro populo petens: Dele, inquit, me de libro tuo, si non parcis huic populo (Exod. XXXII, 32). Nec tamen deletus est; quia non habebat iniquitatem, sed gratiam profluebat. 62. Vestra igitur estis confessione convicti, quod sapienter factum non potestis dicere, sed astute. Astute enim cognovistis loci istius vos attestatione convinci, nec argumenta vestra adversus id posse testimonium convenire. Quo enim possit alio intellectus loci istius derivari, cum series lectionis tota de Spiritu sit? 63. Nicodemus quaerit de regeneratione, respondet Dominus: Amen, amen dico tibi, nisi quis renatus fuerit per aquam et Spiritum, non potest introire in regnum Dei (Joan. III, 5). Et ut ostenderet aliam generationem secundum carnem esse, aliam secundum Spiritum, addidit: Quod natum est ex carne caro est; quia de carne natum est; et quod natum est de Spiritu, Spiritus est; quia Deus Spiritus est (Ibid., 6). Pro sequere ergo totam seriem lectionis, et invenies quod Dominus impietatem vestram plenitudine assertionis excluserit. Noli, inquit, mirari quia dixi: Oportet vos nasci denuo. Spiritus ubi vult spirat, et vocem ejus audis: sed nescis unde veniat, aut quo vadat; sic est omnis qui natus est de Spiritu (Ibid., VII, 8). 64. Quis est qui nascitur de Spiritu, et qui efficitur Spiritus, nisi qui renovatur Spiritu mentis suae? Hic est utique qui per aquam regeneratur 678 et Spiritum sanctum; quoniam per lavacrum regenerationis et renovationis Spiritus sancti spem vitae capimus aeternae. Et alibi Petrus apostolus ait: Vos autem Spiritu sancto baptizabimini (Act. XI, 16). Quis est autem qui baptizatur Spiritu sancto, nisi qui renascitur per aquam et Spiritum sanctum? Ergo de sancto Spiritu Dominus dixit: Amen, amen dico tibi, nisi quis renatus fuerit per aquam et Spiritum, non potest introire in regnum Dei. Et ideo de ipso nasci nos in posterioribus definivit, per quem renasci nos in superioribus est locutus. Haec Dominica sententia est: scripto nitor, non argumento. 65. Quaero tamen cur si non dubitatur per Spiritum sanctum nos renasci, dubitetur de Spiritu sancto nos nasci; cum ipse Dominus Jesus de Spiritu sancto et natus sit et renatus? Quem si natum de Spiritu sancto confitemini (Matth. I, 20), quia non potestis negare: renatum autem (Matth. III, 16) negatis; magna insipientia, ut quod singulare Dei est, confiteamini: quod commune est hominum, denegetis. Et ideo bene vobis dicitur quod Judaeis dictum est: Si terrena vobis dixi, et non creditis; quomodo si dixero vobis coelestia credetis (Joan. III, 12)? 66. Sed tamen utrumque locum ita scriptum invenimus in Graeco, ut non per Spiritum dixerit, sed de Spiritu. Denique sic habet: Ἀμὴν, ἀμὴν, λέγω σοι, ἐὰν μή τις γεννήθη ἐξ ὕδατος καὶ Πνεύματος, hoc est, de aqua et Spiritu. Ergo cum dubitari non debeat de sancto scriptum esse Spiritu, quod natum est de Spiritu; non est dubium quin Deus sit et sanctus Spiritus, secundum quod scriptum est, quia Deus Spiritus est. 67. Alibi quoque ut hoc de sancto Spiritu scripsisse se idem evangelista reseraret: Per aquam, inquit, et Spiritum venit Christus Jesus, non solum in aqua sed per aquam et sanguinem. Et spiritus testimonium dicit, quoniam Spiritus est veritas; quia tres sunt testes, Spiritus, aqua, sanguis: et hi tres unum sunt (I Joan. V, 6 et seq.). 68. Audi quomodo testes: Spiritus mentem renovat, aqua proficit ad lavacrum, sanguis spectat ad pretium. Spiritus enim nos per adoptionem filios Dei fecit, sacri fontis unda nos abluit, sanguis Domini nos redemit. Alterum igitur invisibile, alterum visibile testimonium sacramento consequimur spiritali; quia Spiritus testimonium reddit spiritui nostro (Rom. VIII, 16). Etsi in utroque plenitudo sit sacramenti, distinctio tamen muneris est: ergo ubi distinctio est muneris, non est utique testificationis aequalitas. 679

CAPUT XI.

OBJICIEBATUR JOANNIS VERBA, nimirum, Spiritus est Deus, ad Deum Patrem referenda esse; quando postea Deum adorandum in Spiritu et veritate praedicit Christus. Respondetur primo voce spiritus interdum gratiam spiritalem significari: deinde si personam Spiritus sancti per voces in spiritu intelligendam velint, proptereaque ipsi deberi negent adorationem, ostenditur argumentum aeque pugnare in Filium: quem tamen cum adorandum innumera probent exempla, hinc de Spiritu quoque idem statuendum intelligitur. Quid adorari praecipitur scabellum pedum? Hoc designari Domini corpus, cujus cum auctor sit Spiritus, ipsum sequitur adorandum esse, nec tamen proinde Mariam adorandam. Non ergo abrogari Spiritus adorationem, sed ejus cum Patre conjunctionem exprimi, cum Pater in Spiritu dicitur adorandus: quod similibus locutionibus confirmatur.

69. [Alias cap. XII.] Sed fortasse referatur quia in posterioribus istius ipsius libri iterum Dominus Deum Spiritum dixit, sed de Patre Deo sensit. Sic enim habes in Evangelio: Nunc est quando veri adoratores adorabunt Patrem in Spiritu et veritate. Nam et Pater tales quaerit, qui adorent eum. Spiritus est Deus, et eos qui adorant eum, in Spiritu et veritate oportet adorare (Joan. IV, 23, 24). Non solum enim hoc exemplo divinitatem sanciti Spiritus vultis negare; sed etiam in Spiritu adorari Deum tamquam ad subjectionem Spiritus derivatis. 70. Cui loco respondebo breviter, quia spiritus plerumque ponitur pro gratia spiritali, sicut et Apostolus dixit: Quia ipse spiritus postulat pro nobis gemitibus inenarrabilibus (Rom. VIII, 26), hoc est, gratia spiritalis; nisi forte gemitus vos sancti Spiritus audire potuistis. Ergo et hic adoratur Deus, non in malitia cordis, sed in gratia spiritali. In animam enim malevolamnon intrat sapientia (Sap. I, 4); quia nemo potest dicere Dominum Jesum, nisi in Spiritu sancto (I Cor. XII, 3). Statimque subdidit: Divisiones vero gratiarum sunt (Ibid., 4). 71. Non igitur hoc ad plenitudinem, nec ad portionem Spiritus potest pertinere, quia neque humana mens ejus plenitudinem capit, neque in ullas sui dividitur sectiones: sed donum gratiae spiritalis infundit, in quo adoratur Deus, sicut adoratur etiam in veritate; non enim adorat, nisi qui veritatem divinitatis ejus pio haurit affectu. Nec utique velut personaliter Christum, aut sanctum personaliter Spiritum comprehendit. 72. Aut si putas quod velut personaliter dictum de Spiritu videatur et de Christo: ergo Deus similiter adoratur in veritate, sicut adoratur in Spiritu. Aut similis igitur subjectio, quod absit ut credas; et nec Filius adoratur: aut, quod verum est, similis unitatis est gratia, et Spiritus adoratur. 680 73. Colligamus hic ergo et concludamus Arianorum impias quaestiones. Si enim ideo negant adorandum Spiritum, quia Deus adoratur in Spiritu; negent ergo adorandam veritatem, quia Deus adoratur in veritate. Nam licet plurimae veritates sint, quia scriptum est: Diminutae sunt veritates a filiis hominum (Psal. XI, 1); donatae tamen sunt a veritate divina, quae est Christus qui ait: Ego sum via, veritas et vita (Joan. XIV, 6). Ergo si hoc loco veritatem ex usu intelligunt, intelligant etiam gratiam spiritalem, et nihil est offensionis: aut si veritatem Christum accipiunt, adorandum negent. 74. Sed refelluntur factis piorum, serie Scripturarum. Adoravit enim Christum Maria, et ideo praenuntia resurrectionis ad apostolos destinatur, solvens haereditarium nexum, et feminei generis immane delictum. Hoc enim operatus est in mysterio Dominus; ut ubi superabundaverat peccatum, superabundaret et gratia (Rom. V, 20). Meritoque ad viros femina destinatur; ut quae culpam viro prima nuntiaverat, prima Domini gratiam nuntiaret. 75. Adoraverunt et apostoli (Matth. XXVIII, 17); et ideo quia detulerunt fidei testimonium, acceperunt fidei magisterium. Adoraverunt et angeli, de quibus scriptum est: Et adorent eum omnes angeli ejus (Hebr. I, 6). 76. Adorant autem non solum divinitatem ejus, sed etiam scabellum pedum ejus, sicut scriptum est: Et adorate scabellum pedum ejus; quoniam sanctum est (Psal. XCVIII, 5). Aut si negant quia in Christo etiam incarnationis adoranda mysteria sint, in quibus velut vestigia quaedam divinitatis expressa, et vias quasdam Verbi coelestis advertimus; legant quia et apostoli adorabant eum in carnis gloria resurgentem (Matth. XXVIII, 17). 77. Ergo si nihil derogat Christo, quod Deus adoratur in Christo; quia adoratur et Christus: nihil utique derogat etiam Spiritui, quia Deus adoratur in Spiritu; quia adoratur et Spiritus, sicut Apostolus dixit: Spiritui Dei servimus (Philip. III, 3). Qui enim servit, et adorat, sicut supra dictum est: Dominum Deum tuum adorabis, et illi soli servies (Deut. VI, 13). 78. Sed ne forte propositum aliquis praeterfugere videatur exemplum, qua ratione ad incarnationis Dominicae sacramentum spectare videatur, quod ait Propheta: Adorate scabellum pedum ejus (Ps. XCVIII, 5), consideremus; non enim ex usu hominum aestimare debemus scabellum. Nam neque corporalis Deus, aut non immensus; ut tamquam fulcrum pedibus ejus scabellum subjectum putemus. Neque adorandum quidquam praeter Deum legimus; quia scriptum est: Dominum Deum tuum adorabis, et ipsi soli servies (Deut. VI, 13). Quomodo ergo adversus Legem Propheta praeciperet, sub Lege nutritus, et eruditus in Lege. Non mediocris igitur quaestio, et ideo diligentius consideremus quid sit scabellum. Legimus enim alibi: Coelum mihi thronus, terra autem scabellum pedum meorum (Esa. LXVI, 1). Sed nec terra adoranda 681 est nobis, quia creatura est Dei. 79. Videamus tamen ne terram illam dicat adorandam Propheta, quam Dominus Jesus in carnis assumptione suscepit. Itaque per scabellum terra intelligitur: per terram autem caro Christi, quam hodieque in mysteriis adoramus, et quam apostoli in Domino Jesu, ut supra diximus, adorarunt; neque enim divisus est Christus, sed unus (I Cor. I, 13): neque cum adoratur tamquam Dei Filius, natus ex Virgine denegatur. Cum igitur incarnationis adorandum sit sacramentum, incarnatio autem opus Spiritus, sicut scriptum est: Spiritus sanctus superveniet in te, et virtus Altissimi obumbrabit tibi; et quod nascetur ex te sanctum, vocabitur Filius Dei (Luc. I, 35): haud dubie etiam sanctus Spiritus adorandus est; quando adoratur ille, qui secundum carnem natus ex Spiritu sancto est. 80. Ac ne quis hoc derivet ad Mariam virginem: Maria erat templum Dei, non Deus templi. Et ideo ille solus adorandus, qui operabatur in templo. 81. Nihil ergo officit, quod Deus adoratur in Spiritu; quia et Spiritus adoratur. Quamquam si ipsa verba consideremus, quid aliud in Patre et Filio et Spiritu sancto, nisi ejusdem potestatis unitatem intelligere debemus? Quid est enim: In Spiritu et veritate adorare oportet (Joan. IV, 24)? si tamen hoc non ad gratiam spiritalem referas, nec ad veram conscientiae fidem: sed, ut diximus, personaliter (si tamen dignum hoc verbum est majestatis expressione divinae) de Christo accipias et de Spiritu. 82. Quid est ergo adoratur in Christo Pater, nisi quia est in Christo Pater, et loquitur in Christo Pater, et manet in Christo Pater? Non utique quasi corpus in corpore; non enim Deus corpus: nec quasi confusus in confuso; sed quasi verus in vero, Deus in Deo, lumen in lumine, quasi Pater sempiternus in Filio coaeterno. Non ergo insertio corporis intelligitur, sed unitas potestatis. Ergo per unitatem potestatis coadoratur in Patre Christus, cum Deus Pater 682 adoratur in Christo. Similiter itaque per unitatem potestatis ejusdem coadoratur in Deo Spiritus, dum Deus adoratur in Spiritu. 83. Adhuc verbi istius vim atque sermonis diligentius pertractemus, et proprietatem ejus ex aliis colligamus: Omnia, inquit, in Sapientia fecisti (Ps. CIII, 24). Quid hic igitur intelligimus exsortem factorum esse Sapientiam? Sed omnia per ipsum facta sunt (Joan. I, 3). Et David ait: Verbo Domini coeli firmati sunt (Psal. XXXII, 6) Ergo ipse qui Dei Filium etiam coelestium dicit auctorem, ita utique dixit in Filio facta omnia, ut in operum instauratione Filium a Patre minime separaret, sed Patri jungeret. 84. Paulus quoque ait: Quoniam in ipso condita sunt omnia in coelis et in terra, visibilia et invisibilia (Coloss. I, 16). Numquid cum dicit, in ipso, negavit per ipsum? Non negavit utique, sed asseruit. Denique et alibi dixit: Unus Dominus Jesus, per quem omnia (I Cor. VIII, 6). Ergo cum dicit, per ipsum, negavit in ipso condita esse omnia, per quem dicit esse omnia? Hanc vim habent verba haec: In ipso, et cum ipso (Coloss. I, 16); ut unum in his atque consimile, non contrarium intelligatur. Quod etiam in inferioribus manifestavit dicens: Omnia per ipsum, et in ipso creata sunt (Ibid.); haec enim tria in Christo unum esse: cum ipso, et per ipsum, et in ipso, sicut supra diximus (Lib. II, ca, 9), Scriptura testatur. Habes enim per ipsum et in ipso condita esse omnia. 85. Accipe etiam quia cum ipso Pater, et ipse cum Patre erat; cum omnia conderentur. Sapientia dicit: Cum pararet coelos, cum illo eram; cum faceret fontes aquarum (Prov. VIII, 27). Et in veteri Testamento dicendo Pater, Faciamus (Gen. I, 26), ostendit Filium secum adorandum, quasi omnium conditorem. Sicut ergo in Filio creata dicuntur, quorum Filius creator accipitur; ita etiam cum in veritate adorari Deus dicitur, verbi ipsius proprietate in eumdem modum frequenter expressa debet intelligi, quod et Filius adoretur. Similiter itaque adoratur et Spiritus; quia Deus adoratur in Spiritu. Ergo Pater et cum Filio adoratur, et cum Spiritu, quia Trinitas adoratur. 683

CAPUT XII.

EX EO QUOD in Trinitate divinitatis lucem, quam in Christo tres apostoli adoraverunt, inesse Paulus significaverit, adorandus etiam Spiritus declaratur. Ostenditur ex ipsis verbis Spiritum designatum ab Apostolo. Ejusdem Spiritus divinitas inde probatur, quod templum habeat, in quo non ut sacerdos habitet, sed ut Deus: nec non cum Patre ac Filio adoretur; unde in iisdem naturae unitas intelligitur.

86. An vero negat aliquis adorandam divinitatem Trinitatis aeternae? cum et Scripturae divinae inexplicabilem majestatem exprimant Trinitatis, sicut alibi Apostolus dicit: Quoniam Deus, qui dixit de tenebris lumen splendescere, illuxit in cordibus nostris ad illuminationem scientiae claritatis Dei in facie Jesu Christi (II Cor. IV, 6). 87. Nempe hanc claritatem viderunt apostoli, cum Dominus Jesus divinitatis suae luce in monte fulgeret: Viderunt, inquit, apostoli, et in faciem prociderunt (Matth. XVII, 6). Putasne illos vel cum prociderent, adorasse; cum fulgorem divini luminis corporalibus oculis sustinere non possent, et splendor lucis aeternae aciem visus mortalis obduceret? Aut quid aliud tunc temporis dixerunt illi videntes gloriam ejus, nisi: Venite adoremus, et procidamus ante eum (Psal. XCIV, 6)? [Alias cap. XIII.] Illuxit enim Deus in cordibus nostris ad illuminationem scientiae claritatis Dei in facie Jesu Christi (II Cor. IV, 6). 88. Quis est ergo qui illuxit, ut cognoscamus Deum in facie Christi Jesu? Dixit enim, Illuxit Deus, ut cognoscatur claritas Dei in facie Christi Jesu: quem putamus alium praeter Spiritum declaratum? Aut quis est alius praeter Spiritum sanctum, cui divinitatis potentia deferatur? Qui enim Spiritum excludunt, necesse est inducant alium, qui cum Patre et Filio gloriam divinitatis accipiat. 89. Eadem igitur verba repetamus: Deus est qui illuxit ad illuminationem claritatis Dei in facie Jesu Christi. Habes Christum evidenter expressum. Cujus ergo claritas illuminare dicitur, nisi Spiritus? Ipsum ergo Deum expressit, quia claritatem Dei dixit: si Patris, superest ut qui dixit de tenebris lumen splendescere, et illuxit in cordibus nostris, Spiritus sanctus intelligatur; alium enim non possumus cum Patre Filioque venerari. Si igitur Spiritum intelligis, et hunc Apostolus Deum dixit; necesse est igitur deitatem Spiritus etiam vos fateamini, qui negatis. 90. Sed quam impudenter negatis, cum legeritis quia templum habet Spiritus sanctus! Scriptum est enim: Templum Dei vos estis, et Spiritus sanctus habitat in vobis (I Cor. III, 16). Deus ergo templum habet, creatura templum non habet verum. Spiritus autem habet templum, qui habitat in nobis. Nam scriptum est: Quia membra vestra templum sunt Spiritus sancti (I Cor. VI, 15). 91. In templo autem non quasi sacerdos, nec quasi minister, sed quasi Deus inhabitat; quoniam ipse Dominus dixit Jesus: Inhabitabo in illis, et inter eos ambulabo; et ero illorum Deus, 684 et ipsi erunt mihi populus (Levit. XXVI, 12). Et David dicit: Dominus in templo sancto suo (Psal. X, 5). Ergo Spiritus habitat in templo sancto suo, sicut habitat Pater, habitat et Filius, qui ait: Ego et Pater veniemus, et mansionem apud eum faciemus (Joan. XIV, 23). 91*. Advertimus igitur quod Pater et Filius et Spiritus sanctus in uno eodemque per naturae ejusdem maneant unitatem. Ergo divinae est potestatis, qui habitat in templo; sicut enim Patris et Filii, ita et Spiritus sancti sumus templum: non multa templa, sed unum templum; quia unius templum est potestatis.

92. Manet autem in nobis Pater per Spiritum, quem dedit nobis. Quomodo igitur potest simul dispar manere natura? Utique non potest. Manet autem cum Patre et Filio Spiritus sanctus. Unde et Apostolus cum gratia Jesu Christi et charitate Dei communicationem sancti Spiritus copulavit dicens: Gratia Domini nostri Jesu Christi, et charitas Dei, et communicatio Spiritus sancti cum omnibus vobis (II Cor. XIII, 13).

CAPUT XIII.

OBJICIENTIBUS CATHOLICOS, DUM Spiritui attribuunt divinitatem, tres deos inducere, retorquetur ab ipsis ob eamdem causam induci duos deos, nisi divinitatem Filio negaverint. Deinde orthodoxa doctrina exponitur.

92*. [Alias cap. XIV.] Sed quid veremini, an illud quod oblatrare consuestis, ne tres faciatis deos? Absit; ubi enim una deitas intelligitur, unus Deus dicitur. Neque enim cum Filium Deum dicimus, duos deos dicimus. Nam si cum deitatem Spiritus confitemini, putatis tres deos dici: ergo et cum deitatem Filii dicitis, quia non potestis eam negare, duos inducitis deos. Necesse est igitur juxta sententiam vestram, si Deum personae unius, non unius naturae nomen putatis, aut duos deos dicatis, aut Deum Filium denegetis.

93. Sed excusemus vos ab inscientia, etsi non excusamus a culpa. Etenim secundum nostram sententiam quia unus Deus, una divinitas, et unitas intelligitur potestatis. Sicut unum Deum dicimus, et Patrem vero deitatis nomine confitentes, nec Filium denegantes; ita etiam Spiritum sanctum a deitatis non excludimus unitate, et tres deos non asserimus, sed negamus; quia pluralitatem non unitas facit, sed divisio potestatis. Quomodo enim pluralitatem recipit unitas divinitatis; cum pluralitas numeri sit, numerum autem non recipiat divina natura?

CAPUT XIV.

PRAETER SUPERIORA TESTIMONIA, alios locos ad probandum trium personarum imperium afferri posse. Afferuntur duo ex epistolis ad Thessalon. et iisdem Spiritui dominatum sicut et aliis personis arrogari, aliorum Scripturae textuum collatione ostenditur. Demum citato alio ex altera ad Corinth. adhuc expressiore loco, et Dominum Spiritum esse, et ubi sit Dominus, Spiritum esse colligitur.

94, [Alias cap. XV.] Unus ergo Deus, salva majestate Trinitatis aeternae, sicut proposito 685 declaratur exemplo. Nec eo tamen solo loco Trinitatem videmus nomine divinitatis expressam, sed cum plerisque locis, sicut et supra diximus, tum maxime in his epistolis quas ad Thessalonicenses Apostolus scripsit, divinitatem atque dominatum Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti evidentissime declaravit. Sic enim habes: Vos autem Dominus multiplicet, et abundare faciat in charitate invicem et in omnes, sicut et nos in vobis, ad confirmanda corda vestra sine querela in sanctificatione coram Deo et Patre nostro in adventu Domini Jesu (I Thess. III, 12, 13).

95. Quis est igitur Dominus, qui multiplicet nos, et abundare faciat coram Deo et Patre nostro in adventu Domini Jesu? Patrem dixit, et Filium dixit: quem ergo cum Patre et Filio praeter Spiritum junxit? Quis est Dominus qui corda nostra in sanctificatione confirmet? Sanctificatio enim gratia spiritalis est, sicut et infra dixit: In sanctificatione Spiritus, et fide veritatis (II Thess. II, 12). 96. Quem putatis ergo hic Dominum, praeter Spiritum nuncupatum? Nec Deus Pater docere vos potuit, qui ait: Super quem videris Spiritum descendentem et manentem super eum, hic est qui baptizat in Spiritu sancto (Joan. I, 33)? Descendit enim Spiritus in specie columbae (Luc. III, 22); ut et sapientiae testimonium ferret, et sacramentum lavacri spiritalis impleret, et unius se cum Patre et Filio operationis ostenderet. 97. Ac ne per imprudentiam aliquid excidisse Apostolo judicetis, sed scientem prudentemque et sancto infusum Spiritu significasse Dominum, quem Deum sentiebat, etiam in secunda ad Thessalonicenses epistola hoc idem repetivit dicens: Dominus autem dirigat corda vestra in dilectione Dei, et patientia Christi (II Thess. III, 5). Si dilectio Dei est, et Christi patientia, quis est dominus qui dirigat, debet ostendi, si directionem sancti Spiritus denegamus. 98. Sed negare non possumus, quoniam de ipso Dominus dixit: Adhuc multa habeo vobis dicere, sed non potestis illa portare modo. Cum autem venerit ille Spiritus veritatis, deducet vos in omnem veritatem (Joan. XVI, 12, 13). Et David de ipso dicit: Spiritus tuus bonus deducet me in viam rectam (Psal. CXLII, 10). 99. [Alias cap. XVI.] Vide quid de Spiritu sancto vox Dominica resultaverit. Filius Dei venit, et quia nondum infuderat Spiritum, parvulos quosdam nos degere sine Spiritu declaravit. Spiritum dixit esse venturum, qui faceret ex parvulis fortiores, incremento videlicet spiritalis aetatis. Quod ideo posuit, non quo virtutem Spiritus anteferret, sed ut in cognitione Trinitatis ostenderet plenitudinem esse virtutis. 100. Necesse est igitur aut quartum aliquem dicatis, quem sentire praeter Spiritum debeatis: aut certe non alium Dominum judicetis, nisi Spiritum designatum. 101. Quod si evidentem conceptionem verborum exigitis, quibus Dominum Spiritum Scriptura memoraverit, nec id latere vos potuit; 686 quia scriptum est: Dominus autem Spiritus est (II Cor. III, 17). Quod utique dictum de Spiritu sancto totius series lectionis ostendit. Et ideo Apostolica consideremus eloquia: Quoties legitur Moyses, inquit, velamen positum est super cor eorum: cum vero conversi fuerint ad Dominum, auferetur velamen. Dominus autem Spiritus est: ubi autem Spiritus Domini, ibi libertas (Ibid., XV, 16). 102. Non solum itaque Spiritum dominum dixit, sed etiam addidit: Ubi autem Spiritus Domini, ibi libertas. Nos itaque omnes revelata facie gloriam Domini speculantes, ad eamdem imaginem reformamur a gloria in gloriam, sicut a Domini Spiritu (Ibid., 18), hoc est, qui ad Dominum sumus ante conversi, ut spiritali intellectu quasi in quodam speculo Scripturarum Domini gloriam videremus, nunc ab hac gloria quae nos convertit ad Dominum, in illam coelestem gloriam reformamur. Ergo cum Dominus sit ad quem convertimur, Dominus autem Spiritus sit a quo reformamur, qui conversi ad Dominum sumus, Dominus utique Spiritus sanctus est designatus; ipse enim conversos suscipit, qui reformat. Nam quomodo quos non susceperat, reformaret? 103. Quamquam quid expressionem quaerimus vocis, ubi expressionem cernimus unitatis? Nam etsi Dominum Spiritumque distinguas; negare tamen non potes quia ubi Dominus, ibi et Spiritus: et qui fuerit conversus ad Dominum, erit conversus ad Spiritum. Si litteram calumniaris, unitatem non inficiaris: si unitatem vis secernere, potestatis Dominum ipsum Spiritum confiteris.

CAPUT XV.

ETSI SPIRITUS DOMINUS appelletur, tres tamen Dominos hinc non induci; cum ex eo quod Filius non secus ac Pater in variis Scripturae locis Dominus appellatur, non inducantur duo Domini: dominationem enim in divinitate esse, et in dominatione divinitatem, quae tribus personis indivisim congruant.

104. [Alias cap. XVII.] Sed fortassis iterum dicas: Si Dominum Spiritum dixero, tres Dominos declarabo. Numquid cum Dominum Filium dicis, aut Filium negas, aut duos Dominos confiteris? Absit; ipse enim Filius dixit: Nolite duobus dominis servire (Matth. VI, 24). Sed non utique aut se aut Patrem Dominum denegavit; nam et Patrem Dominum dixit, sicut habes: Confiteor tibi, Pater, Domine coeli et terrae (Matth. XI, 25). Et se memoravit Dominum, sicut in Evangelio legimus: Vocatis me Dominum et magistrum, et bene facitis; sum etenim (Joan. XIII, 13). Sed non duos Dominos dixit; immo ostendit se non duos Dominos dixisse, cum praemonet: Nolite duobus dominis servire. Non sunt enim duo domini, ubi dominatus unus est; quia Pater in Filio, et Filius in Patre; et ideo Dominus unus. 105. Sic et Lex docuit: Audi, Israel, Dominus Deus tuus Dominus unus est (Deut. VI, 4): hoc est, immutabilis, 687 semper in unitate permanens potestatis, semper idem, nulla accessione, nulla diminutione mutatur. Ergo unum dixit Moyses, et idem tamen Dominum a Domino pluisse memoravit (Gen. XIX, 14). Apostolus quoque: Det, inquit, Dominus misericordiam invenire a Domino (II Tim. I, 18). Dominus pluit a Domino, Dominus dat a Domino misericordiam: Dominus nec ibi discernitur, ubi pluit a Domino; nec hic separatur, ubi miseretur a Domino, sed utroque in loco unitas dominationis exprimitur. 106. In psalmis quoque habes: Dixit Dominus Domino meo (Psal. CIX, 1). Nec ideo Patrem suum Dominum denegavit, quia Filium Dominum suum esse memoravit: sed ideo Filium Dominum suum dixit, ne crederes Filium prophetae fuisse, sed Dominum: quod in Evangelio ipse Dominus manifestavit dicens: Si enim David in spiritu vocat eum Dominum, quomodo Filius ejus est (Matth. XXII, 43)? In spiritu dicit David Dominum, non Spiritus dicit. Aut si hinc calumniantur, quia Dominum Spiritus dixit, necesse est pari sacrilegio Filium Dei etiam Spritus sancti Filium videantur asserere. 107. Ergo quemadmodum duos non dicimus Dominos, cum et Patrem et Filium designamus; ita nec tres Dominos dicimus, cum dominum Spiritum confitemur. Sicut enim sacrilegium est tres Dominos aut Deos dicere, ita etiam hoc plenum sacrilegii est duos Dominos aut Deos dicere; quia unus Deus, unus Dominus, unus est Spiritus sanctus: et qui Deus, Dominus: et qui Dominus, Deus: quia et in dominatione divinitas, et in divinitate dominatus est. 108. Denique et Dominum et Deum legisti Patrem: Domine Deus meus, clamabo ad te, exaudi me (Psal. CXL, 1). Et Dominum et Deum habes Filium, sicut in Evangelio legisti, quia cum tetigisset Thomas latus Christi, ait: Dominus meus et Deus meus (Joan. XX, 28). Ergo sicut Pater Deus, et Filius Dominus: ita et Filius Deus, et Pater Dominus. Alternatur pia significatio, non alternatur divina natura, sed immutabilis manet gratia. Non enim largitatis collativa, sed naturalis placita charitatis sunt, quia et unitas proprietatem habet, et proprietas unitatem. 688

CAPUT XVI.

PATREM SANCTUM ESSE, ac similiter Filium et Spiritum, atque hinc trisagio eodem celebrari: nec posse a nobis Deum praedicari dignius, quam si eumdem sanctum dicamus; unde clarum fit Spiritui sancto non derogandum. Eidem inesse omnia quae Dei sunt, cum in baptismate una cum Patre et Filio nominetur, eique Pater dederit quod majus omnibus est, nec quisquam ipsi valeat eripere. Igitur e loco Joannis unde calumniam conflabant haeretici, Trinitatis aequalitatem unitatemque astrui deitatis. Tandem ubi expositum est quo pacto Filius a Patre accipiat, quemadmodum citato loco jugulentur varii haeretici, aperitur.

109. (Alias cap. XVIII.) Ergo sanctus Pater, sanctus Filius, sanctus et Spiritus: sed non tres sancti; quia unus est Deus sanctus, unus est Dominus. Una est enim vera sanctitas, sicut una est vera divinitas, una illa vera sanctitas naturalis. 110. Ideo omnia haec quae sancta nos credimus, illam solam praedicant sanctitatem. Cherubim et Seraphim indefessis vocibus laudant et dicunt: Sanctus, sanctus, sanctus Dominus Deus Sabaoth (Esai. VI, 3). Non semel dicunt, i.e singularitatem credas: non bis dicunt, ne Spiritum excludas: non sanctos dicunt, ne pluralitatem aestimes: sed ter repetunt, et idem dicunt, ut etiam in hymno distinctionem Trinitatis, et divinitatis intelligas unitatem: hoc cum dicunt, Deum praedicant. 111. Nos quoque nihil pretiosius invenimus quo Deum praedicare possimus, nisi ut sanctum appellemus. Quodlibet aliud inferius Deo, inferius est Domino. Ergo hinc quoque considerate utrum aliquid sancto Spiritui derogandum sit, cujus nomen Dei laus est. Sic enim laudatur Pater, sic laudatur et Filius, quemadmodum et Spiritus nominatur et laudatur. Seraphim laudat, omnis beatorum chorus laudat, ut sanctum Deum dicat, sanctum Filium, sanctum Spiritum. 112. Quomodo igitur non omnia habet quae Dei sunt, qui cum Patre et Filio a sacerdotibus in baptismate nominatur et in oblationibus invocatur cum Patre et Filio a Seraphim in coelestibus praedicatur cum Patre et Filio habitat in sanctis, infunditur justis, inspiratur prophetis. Unde et in Scriptura divina θεόπνευστος omnis ex hoc dicitur, quod Deus inspiret quae locutus est Spiritus (II Tim. III, 16). 113. Aut si nolunt omnia habere quae Dei sunt, et posse omnia Spiritum sanctum, dicant quid non habeat, quidve non possit. Nam sicut omnia habet Filius, nec invidet Pater quominus omnia naturaliter det Filio, qui dedit 689 quod majus est omnibus, quemadmodum Scriptura testatur dicens: Pater quod dedit mihi, majus est omnibus (Joan. X, 29); ita etiam Spiritus Christi habet, quod majus est omnibus, quia justitia nescit invidiam. 114. Itaque si diligenter advertamus, etiam hic divinae potestatis comprehendimus unitatem. Pater, inquit, quod dedit mihi majus omnibus est: et nemo potest rapere ea de manu Patris mei. Ego et Pater unum sumus (Ib. 30). Nam si recte supra ostendimus (Lib. III, ca) manum Dei esse Spiritum sanctum, eadem utique manus Patris est, quae Filii est manus; quoniam idem Spiritus Patris, qui Spiritus Filii est. Ideo sicut non rapitur Patri, ita non rapitur Filio, ita non rapitur et Spiritui, quicumque de nobis in hoc nomine Trinitatis vitam accepit aeternam. 115. Ex ipso autem quod et dedisse Filio Pater, et accepisse a Filio Spiritus dicitur; quia scriptum est (Joan. XVI, 14): Ille me clarificabit, quia de meo accipiet, et annuntiabit vobis (quod de munere magis dispensationis videtur, quam de potestatis divinae jure dixisse, quia quos Filius redemit, Spiritus quoque sanctificaturus accepit); ex istis ipsis, inquam, verbis, de quibus calumniam instruunt, unitas divinitatis advertitur, non indigentia largitatis. 116. Dedit Pater per generationem, non per adoptionem: dedit quasi id quod esset in ipso divinae jure naturae, non quasi liberalitatis gratia, quod deesset. Et ideo quia sic acquisit Filius populos ut Pater, sic vivificat Filius ut Pater, aequalitatem suam ad Patrem unitate potestatis expressit dicens: Ego et Pater unum sumus. Cum enim dicit: Ego et Pater, revelatur aequalitas: cum dicit: Unum sumus, unitas declaratur. Aequalitas confusionem excludit, unitas separationem: aequalitas Patrem Filiumque distinguit, unitas Patrem Filiumque non separat. 117. Ergo cum dicit, Ego et Pater, Sabellianum repellit; quia alium se, alium Patrem dixit: repellit Photinianum, quia se cum Deo Patre junxit. Illos superioribus repellit, quia dixit, Ego et Pater: inferioribus Arianos, quia dicit: Unum sumus; tamen et in superioribus et in inferioribus haereticam jugulat saevitatem Sabellianorum; quia unum dixit sumus, non unus sumus: Arianorum; quia ego et Pater, non Pater et ego dixit. Quod utique non contumaciae, sed pietatis et praescientiae fuit; ne nos errorem in ordine putaremus. Nescit enim unitas ordinem, gradum nescit aequalitas: nec cadit in Dei Filium, ut per contumaciam pietatem laederet magister ipse pietatis. 690

CAPUT XVII.

UBI AD INTELLIGENTIAM verborum Domini loca, in quibus verba illa dicta fuerint, juvare exemplis ostendit Ambrosius, Christum sententiam ex Joanne citatam locutum esse in porticu Salomonis, per quam sapientis anima significatur, docet; eum enim haec in corde stulti aut turbulenti negat fuisse prolaturum, et quamobrem. Addit ab iis qui fidem non habeant iisdem verbis, Christum lapidari: et quemadmodum Petro, quod illa sit confessus, claves coeli datae fuerunt; ita Iscariotem, quod haec ipsa non crediderit, male periisse. Per hanc occasionem in Judaeos, qui Dei Filium emerunt, ac vendiderunt Josephum, invehitur. Mystice utriusque pretia edisserit; ac murmure proditoris de unguento Magdalenae eadem ratione exposito, subjicit alio modo Christum emi ab haereticis, alio a catholicis, illosque nequicquam sibi nomen usurpare christianorum, si Spiritum a Patre diviserint.

118. Refert itaque advertere quo loci haec Dominus disputaverit; frequenter enim ejus oracula ex locorum in quibus diversatus est, qualitatibus aestimantur. Jejunaturus, ab Spiritu, sicut legimus (Matth. IV, 1), ducitur in desertum, ut evacuaret diaboli tentamenta. Nam etsi in abundantia copiarum contineater vixisse laudandum est; tamen in divitiis et amoenitatibus frequentior tentationis illecebra est. Denique tentator ut tentet, copias pollicetar: et Dominus ut vincat, famem nutrit. Nec ego diffiteor in divitiis esse posse continentiam: sed etsi qui mare navigat, frequenter evadit; magis tamen obnoxius est periculo, quam qui navigare noluerit.

119. Videamus caetera. Promissurus regnum coelorum Jesus montem ascendit (Matth. V, 1). Alibi per sata ducit discipulos (Matth. XII, 1), seminaturus in eorum affectibus coelestium segetem praeceptorum; ut messis animorum fecunda flavesceret. Consummaturus susceptae carnis officia, cum perfectionem in discipulis jam videret, quos verborum suorum radice fundaverat, hortum ingreditur (Joan. XVIII, 1), ut olearum novellas in domo Domini plantaret, et justum palmae florentem modo, vitemque fecundam rivo sui sanguinis irrigaret (Psal. CXXVII, 3). 120. Hoc quoque loco in porticu Salomonis deambulabat dedicationis, ut legimus (Joan. X, 23), die, hoc est, in pectore sapientis atque pacifici deambulabat Christus, ejus sibi dedicaturus affectum. Quae ista porticus sit, docet Propheta dicens: Deambulabam in innocentia cordis mei in medio domus tuae (Psal. C, 2). Habemus ergo in nobis domum Dei, habemus atria, habemus et porticus, habemus et plateas; quia scriptum est: Inque plateis tuis superfluant aquae tuae (Prov. V, 16). Dilata ergo hanc porticum tui cordis Dei Verbo, quod tibi dicit: Dilata os tuum et adimplebo illud (Psal. LX, 11). 121. Ergo deambulans in corde sapientis 691 atque pacifici Dei Verbum, audiamus quid loquatur: Ego et Pater unum sumus (Joan. X, 30). Non dicet hoc in pectore perturbatoris et stulti; quia Animalis homo non percipit quae sunt Spiritus Dei; stultitia enim illi est (I Cor. II, 14). Non capiunt fidei magnitudinem angusta impiorum pectora. Denique Judaei audientes: Ego et Pater unum sumus; tulerunt lapides, ut lapidarent eum (Joan. X, 31). 122. Qui hoc audire non potest, Judaeus est: qui hoc audire non potest, lapidat Christum asperioribus omni caure perfidiae suae saxis; et si mihi creditis, vulnerat Christum. Nam etsi ille jam nunc vulnus sentire non possit: Nunc enim secundum carnem jam non novimus Christum (II Cor. V, 16); tamen Arianorum impietate lapidatur, qui Ecclesiae pietate laetatur. 123. Bonum mihi est, Domine, lex oris tui (Psal. CXVIII, 72); servo praeceptum tuum. Unum te esse cum Patre ipse dixisti. Quia hoc credidit Petrus, claves regni coelorum accepit (Matth. XVI, 19), et sui securus peccata donavit; quia hoc non credidit Judas, impietatis suae se laqueo strangulavit (Matth. XXVII, 5). O dura infidelium saxa verborum! O informem laqueum proditoris, sed deformius pretium Judaeorum! O argentum improbum, quo aut emitur ad necem justus, aut venditur! Joseph venditus (Gen. XXXVII, 28), emptus Jesus Christus (Matth. XXVI, 15): alter ad servitutem, alter ad mortem. Detestabilis haereditas, feralis auctio, quae aut fratrem vendit injuriae, aut Dominum licitatur exitio, salutis omnium redemptorem.

124. Duo igitur quae praestantiora sunt omnibus, Judaea violavit, fidem atque pietatem; sed in utroque Christum fidei et pietatis auctorem. Nam et in patriarcha Joseph typus Christi fuit, et in veritate sui corporis Christus: Qui non rapinam arbitratus est esse se aequalem Deo, sed formam servi accepit (Phil. II, 6, 7); propter lapsus videlicet nostros suscipiens servitutem, nec refugiens passionem. 125. Alibi viginti aureis emitur, alibi triginta. Quomodo enim poterat verum ejus pretium comprehendi, cujus non potest meritum definiri? Erratur in pretio, quia erratur in studio. Viginti aureis in veteri Testamento venditur, triginta in Evangelio; pretiosior enim typo veritas, largior gratia, quam disciplina: opimior Lege praesentia; quia Lex promisit adventum, Legem adventus implevit. 126. Viginti aureis emunt Ismaelitae, triginta Judaei. Nec hic figura mediocris. Ad sacrilegium perfidi largiores, quam ad salutem fideles sunt. Utriusque tamen contractus considerare convenit qualitatem. Viginti aurei pretium servitutis, triginta aurei crucis sunt. Quamvis enim simili modo assumptionis et passionis sint admiranda mysteria; plenitudo tamen fidei in sacramento est passionis. Non minoris quidem aestimo sanctae Virginis partum: sed gratius sumo benedicti corporis sacramentum. Quid clementius quam quod mihi suas donavit injurias? 692 Plenius tamen est, quod tantum contulit nobis; ut qui moriturus non erat, quia Deus erat; nostra ille morte moreretur, ut nos ejus Spiritu viveremus. 127. Denique non otiose et Judas Iscarioth unguentum illud trecentis denariis aestimavit (Joan. XII, 5): quod utique ipsius pretii definitione crucem videretur Domini declarare. Unde et Dominus ait: Haec enim mittens hoc unguentum in corpus meum, ad sepeliendum me fecit (Matth. XXVI, 12). Cur igitur Judas hoc charius aestimavit? Quia peccatoribus pluris constat remissio peccatorum, et indulgentia videtur esse pretiosior. Denique habes scriptum: Quia cui multum dimittitur, plus diligit (Luc. VII, 47). Ergo et ipsi peccatores Dominicae passionis, quam perdiderunt, gratiam confitentur, et testimonium ferunt Christo, qui Christum sunt persecuti. 128. Aut quia in malevolam animam non intrat sapientia (Sap. I, 4); etiam hoc loquebatur proditoris affectus, charius aestimabat Dominici corporis passionem; ut omnes a fide pretii enormitate revocaret. Ideoque Dominus gratis se obtulit, ne quem revocaret a Christo paupertatis necessitas. Patriarchae eum vili vendiderunt, ut omnes emerent. Esaias dixit: Quicumque non habetis argentum, ite, emite, et bibite: manducate sine argento (Esa. LV, 1); ut eum acquireret, qui non habebat argentum. O Juda proditor, unguentum passionis ejus trecentis denariis aestimas, et passionem ejus triginta denariis vendis (Matth. XXVI, 15)! Dives in aestimatione, vilis in scelere. 129. Ergo non omnes eodem pretio emunt Christum. Alio emit Photinus, qui ad mortem emit: alio Arianus, qui emit ad injuriam: alio catholicus, qui emit ad gloriam. Sed emit sine pecunia, secundum quod scriptum est: Qui non habet pecuniam, emat sine pretio (Esai. LV, 1). 130. Non omnes, inquit, qui dicunt mihi, Domine, Domine, intrabunt in regnum coelorum (Matth. VII, 21). Etsi multi se nominent christianos, nomen usurpant, non tamen omnes mercedem habent. Et Cain obtulit sacrificium (Gen. IV, 3), et Judas accepit osculum (Luc. XXII, 48), sed audivit: Juda, osculo Filium hominis tradis? hoc est, amoris pignore scelus imples, ac pacis instrumento odia seris, et charitatis officio mortem irrogas. 131. Ergo nec Ariani sibi usurpato nomine blandiantur, quia christianos esse se dicunt. Respondebit eis Dominus: Nomen meum praetenditis, et substantiam denegatis: sed non agnosco nomen meum, ubi non est mea sempiterna divinitas. Non est nomen meum, quod a Patre dividitur, ab Spiritu separatur: non agnosco nomen meum, ubi non agnosco doctrinam meam: non agnosco nomen meum, ubi non agnosco Spiritum meum. Nescit enim se Spiritus Patris comparare servitiis, quae creavit. De quo multa jam diximus (Lib. I, ca et seq.). 693

CAPUT XVIII.

Spiritus sancti divinitatem ex iis quae hactenus disputata sunt, confirmaturus, nonnulla iterum tractanda sumit, nimirum peccata eum non habere, sed condonare: creaturam non esse, sed creatorem: ac demum non adorare, sed adorari.

132. [Alias cap. XIX.] Ad summam tamen, ut in fine quae disperse dicta sunt, expressius colligamus; cum ex caeteris, tum ex quatuor istis prae caeteris manifesta divinitatis gloria comprobatur: Deus enim ex eo cognoscitur, aut quia sine peccato est, aut quia peccata condonat: aut quia creatura non est, sed creator est: aut quia non adorat, sed adoratur. 133. Sine peccato itaque nemo est, nisi unus Deus; quia nemo sine peccato, nisi unus Deus. Peccata quoque nemo condonat, nisi unus Deus; quia aeque scriptum est: Quis potest peccata donare, nisi solus Deus (Luc. V, 21)? Creator quoque omnium non potest esse, nisi qui creatura non est: qui autem creatura non est, sine dubio Deus est: quia scriptum est: Servierunt creaturae potius quam creatori, qui est Deus benedictus in saecula (Rom. I, 23). Deus quoque non adorat, sed adoratur; quia scriptum est: Dominum Deum tuum adorabis, et illi soli servies (Deutur. VI, 13). 134. Consideremus ergo utrum horum aliquid habeat Spiritus sanctus, quae testimonium afferant divinitatis. Primum igitur de eo tractemus, quia nemo sine peccato nisi unus Deus: et exigamus ut doceant quod peccatum habeat Spiritus sanctus. 135. Sed docere non possunt, et auctoritatem requirunt, ut lectione doceamus, quia non peccavit Spiritus sanctus, sicut de Filio lectum est, quia peccatum non fecit (I Petr. II, 22). Et hoc accipiant Scripturarum auctoritate nos docere; scriptum est enim: Quia in Sapientia est Spiritus intelligentiae, sanctus, unicus, multiplex, subtilis, bene mobilis, disertus, immaculatus (Sap. VII, 22). Immaculatum dicit Scriptura: numquid mentita est de Filio, ut de Spiritu credas esse mentitam? Dixit enim propheta in eodem loco de Sapientia, quia nihil maculosum in illam incurrit. Ipsa immaculata est, et immaculatus ejus est Spiritus. Ergo si peccatum non habet Spiritus, Deus est. 136. Sed quomodo reus potest esse peccati, qui donat ipse peccata? Ergo peccatum non fecit: et quia sine peccato est, creatura non est. Omnis enim creatura peccatorum capacitati obnoxia est: sola autem est a peccato immunis et immaculata sempiterna divinitas. 137. Nunc videamus utrum peccata donet Spiritus. Sed hic dubitari non potest, cum ipse Dominus dixerit: Accipite Spiritum sanctum: quorum remiseritis peccata, remissa erunt (Joan. XX, 22). Ecce quia per Spiritum sanctum peccata donantur. Homines autem in remissionem peccatorum ministerium suum exhibent, non jus alicujus 694 potestatis exercent. Neque enim in suo, sed in Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti nomine peccata dimittunt. Isti rogant, divinitas donat; humanum enim obsequium, sed munificentia supernae est potestatis. 138. Per baptismum quoque peccata donari non est ambiguum: in baptismo autem operatio Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti est. Ergo si peccatum donat Spiritus, cum scriptum sit: Quis potest dimittere peccata, nisi unus Deus (Marc. II, 7); utique qui non potest ab unitate naturalis nominis separari, non potest etiam a Dei potestate secerni. Si autem a Dei non secernitur potestate, quomodo a Dei appellatione secernitur? 139. Videamus nunc utrum creatura sit, an creator? Sed cum supra (Lib. II, ca, 6) creatorem evidentissime probaverimus, quia scriptum est: Spiritus divinus qui fecit me (Job. XXXIII, 4): et innovari faciem terrae per Spiritum (Psal. CIII, 30), et sine Spiritu fatiscere omnia declaratum sit; apparet Spiritum esse creatorem. Sed quis hoc dubitet, quando, sicut supra ostendimus, ne Domini quidem ex Virgine assumpta generatio, quae praestantior omnibus creaturis est, operationis exsors sit spiritalis? 140. Non ergo creatura

Spiritus, sed creator est: qui autem creator, non utique creatura. Et quia creatura non est, sine dubio creator est, qui Patri et Filio cooperator est omnium. Si autem creator, utique dicendo Apostolus in condemnationem gentilitatis: Quia servierunt creaturae potius quam Creatori, qui est Deus benedictus in saecula (Rom. I, 23): suadendo quoque, ut supra (Lib. II, ca, 6) docuimus, serviendum esse Spiritui sancto; et creatorem ostendit, et quia creator est, Deum appellari debere monstravit. Quod etiam in epistola quae ad Hebraeos scripta est, comprehendit dicens: Quoniam qui omnia creavit, Deus est (Hebr. III, 4). Aut dicant igitur quid sit quod sine Patre et Filio et Spiritu sit creatum, aut Spiritum quoque unius cum Patre et Filio deitatis esse fateantur. 141. Adorandum quoque docuit, quem Dominum et Deum dixit. Qui enim Deus universitatis et dominus, utique ab omnibus adorandus est; sic enim scriptum est: Dominum Deum tuum adorabis, et ipsi soli servies (Deut. VI, 13). 142. Aut dicant ubi legerint quia adorat Spiritus. Dictum est enim de Dei Filio: Adorent eum omnes angeli ejus (Hebr. I, 6): non lectum est, adoret Spiritus. Quomodo enim potest adorare, qui non inter famulos et ministros est, sed cum Patre et Filio servitia habet subjecta justorum; quia scriptam est: Spiritui Dei servimus (Phil. III, 3). Adorandus igitur est nobis, cui serviendum a nobis Apostolus docuit: cui autem servimus, hunc et adoramus, juxta quod scriptum est, ut eadem saepe repetamus: Dominum Deum tuum adorabis, et illi soli servies. 143. Quamquam nec hoc praetermiserit Apostolus, quin et Spiritum diceret adorandum. 695 Cum enim docuerimus quia Spiritus in prophetis est, nec hoc quisquam possit ambigere, quia per Spiritum prophetia datur, utique cum adoratur qui in prophetis est, idem Spiritus adoratur. Itaque sic habes: Si conveniat universa Ecclesia in unum, et omnes linguis loquantur, intret autem idiota aut infidelis, nonne dicet quod insanitis. Sin autem prophetent omnes, intret autem quis idiota aut infidelis, convincitur ab omnibus, dijudicatur ab omnibus. Occulta etiam cordis ejus manifesta fiunt; et ita cadens in faciem, adorabit Deum, pronuntians quod vere Deus sit in vobis (I Cor. XIV, 23 et seq.). Deus est ergo qui adoratur, Deus qui manet, et qui loquitur in prophetis: manet autem et loquitur Spiritus; ergo et Spiritus adoratur.

CAPUT XIX.

EX EO QUOD supra probatum et Spiritum manere et loqui in prophetis, colligit ab eo cognosci omnia, quae Dei sunt; atque adeo unum esse cum Patre et Filio. Hoc ipsum exinde iterum confirmat quod omnia habet, quae habet Deus, nempe divinitatem, cordis cognitionem, veritatem, nomen super omne nomen, potestatem mortuos suscitandi, quod ultimum eidem adjudicat ex Exechiele, in quo et ipsum Filio aequalem probat.

144. Itaque sicut Pater et Filius unum sunt; quia Filius omnia habet, quae Pater habet (Joan. XVI, 15): ita. et Spiritus unum est cum Patre et Filio; quia et ipse omnia Dei novit (I Cor. II, 10). Non enim extorsit, ne sit amittentis injuria: non rapuit, ne damnum sit ejus, cui videtur ereptum. Neque enim aut per indigentiam rapuit, aut per excellentiam virtutis validioris extorsit, sed per unitatem possidet potestatis. Ergo si haec omnia operatur, quia omnia operatur unus atque idem Spiritus (I Cor. XII, 11); quomodo non Deus, qui omnia habet, quae Deus habet?

145. Aut consideremus quid habeat Deus, quod non habeat Spiritus sanctus. Habet Deus Pater divinitatem, habet et Filius, in quo habitat plenitudo divinitatis: habet et Spiritus; quia scriptum est: Spiritus divinus qui est in naribus meis (Job. XVII, 3). 146. Habet Deus ut scrutetur corda et renes; quia scriptum est: Deus scrutans corda et renes (Psal. VII, 10). Habet et Filius, qui dicebat: Quid cogitatis in cordibus vestris mala (Matth. IX, 4)? Sciebat enim Jesus cogitationes eorum. Habet et Spiritus, qui etiam prophetis alieni cordis occulta manifestat, sicut supra divimus (Lib. II, c. 13), quia occulta cordis ejus manifesta fiunt. Et quid miramur si hominum scrutatur occulta, qui scrutatur etiam alta Dei (I Cor. II, 10) ? 147. Habet

Deus ut verax sit; quia scriptum est: Sit autem Deus verax, omnis autem homo mendax (Rom. III, 4). Et alibi scriptum est: Fidelis Deus, qui non mentitur (Tit. I, 2). Numquid mentitur Spiritus, qui est Spiritus veritatis; immo quem docuimus veritatem dictum; quia et ipsum Joannes veritatem sicut Filium nuncupavit (Joan. XVI, 13)? Et in psalmo ait David: Emitte lucem tuam, et veritatem tuam; ipsa me deduxerunt, et adduxerunt in montem sanctum tuum, et in tabernacula tua (Psal. XLII, 3). Si lucem 696 hic Filium putas, ergo Spiritus veritas est: aut si Filium putas veritatem, ergo Spiritus lux est. 148. Habet Deus nomen super omne nomen, et dedit Filio nomen; sicut legimus (Phil. II, 9), ut omnes in nomine Jesu genua flectant. Hoc nomen utrum habeat Spiritus consideremus. Sed et scriptum est: Ite, baptizate gentes in nomine Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti (Marc. XVI, 15). Habet ergo nomen super omne nomen. Quod ergo habet Pater et Filius, habet et Spiritus per naturalis nominis unitatem. 149. [Alias cap. XX.] Habet Deus quod suscitat mortuos: Sicut enim Pater suscitat mortuos et vivificat: sic et Filius quos vult, vivificat (Joan. V, 21). Suscitat autem etiam Spiritus, per quem Deus suscitat, quia scriptum est: Vivificabit et mortalia corpora vestra per habitantem Spiritum ejus in vobis (Rom. VIII, 11). Tamen ne infirmam gratiam putes, audi quia et Spiritus suscitat; dicit enim propheta Ezechiel: Veni, Spiritus, et insuffla in mortuos istos, et vivent. Et prophetavi sicut mandavit mihi, et intravit in eos Spiritus vitae, et vixerunt, et steterunt in pedibus suis congregatio nimis multa (Ezech. XXXVII, 9, 10). Et infra Deus dicit: Scietis quod ego sum Dominus, cum aperiam sepulcra vestra; ut educam de sepulcris populum meum: et dabo Spiritum meum in vos, et vivetis (Ibid., 13, 14). 150. Utique cum Spiritum suum dixerit, numquid alium praeter Spiritum sanctum nuncupavit? Neque enim flatilem spiritum suum diceret, nec hic spiritus a quatuor mundi posset venire cardinibus; quia ventorum flatus hic, quem videmus, partis non universitatis est: et hic spiritus quo vivimus, singulorum non universorum est: Spiritus autem sancti est, ut et super omnes, et in omnibus sit. Itaque ex verbis propheticis spectare licet quemadmodum ossa, dudum resolutorum membrorum compage dispersa, in formam redivivi corporis, vivificante Spiritu, revertantur; et in suos artus favilla concrescat, sensu prius animata coeundi, quam specie reformata vivendi. 151. Nonne in facti similitudine unitatem divinae recognoscimus potestatis? Sic suscitat Spiritus, sicut et Dominus in passione propria suscitavit; cum subito in momento oculi defunctorum sepulcra patuerunt, et rediviva corpora surrexere de tumulis (Matth. XXVII, 52), mortisque fetore deterso, ac vitae odore reparato, exspirantium favillae spirantium faciem receperunt. 152. Habet ergo Spiritus, quod habet Christus: habet igitur quod habet Deus; quia omnia quae habet Pater, habet et Filius; ideoque dixit: Omnia quae habet Pater, mea sunt (Joan. XVI, 15).

CAPUT XX.

In flumine de sede Dei promanante figuram fuisse Spiritus sancti; per aquas vero quas David memorat, coelestes virtutes designari. Regnum Dei opus esse Spiritus: nec mirum, si hic idem conregnet cum Filio, quando nos etiam Filio conregnaturos promittat Paulus.

153. [Alias cap. XXI.] Nec illud mediocre, quod de throno Dei exire fluvium legimus. Sic enim habes, 697 dicente Joanne evangelista: Et ostendit mihi flumen aquae vivae, splendidum tamquam crystallum, procedens de sede Dei et agni: in medio plateae ejus, et ex utraque parte lignum vitae, faciens fructus duodecim, per singulos menses reddens fructum suum, et folia ligni ad medicinam omnium gentium (Apoc. XXII, 1, 2). 154. Hic est utique fluvius de Dei sede procedens, hoc est, Spiritus sanctus, quem bibit qui credit in Christum, sicut ipse ait: Si quis sitit, veniat ad me, et bibat: Qui credit in me, sicut dicit Scriptura, flumina de ventre ejus fluent aquae vivae. Hoc autem dicebat de Spiritu (Joan. VII, 37, 38). Ergo flumen est Spiritus. 155. Hic igitur est in Dei sede; neque enim aqua abluit Dei sedem. Denique David non supra sedem Dei dixit, sed supra coelos esse, quamlibet illam intelligas aquam; quia scriptum est: Et aquae quae super coelos sunt, laudent nomen Domini (Psal. CXLVIII, 4). Laudent, dixit, non laudet. Nam si aquae elementum voluisset intelligi, laudet utique dixisset: dicendo autem pluraliter, virtutes voluit aestimari. 156. Et quid mirum, si in sede Dei Spiritus sanctus est, cum ipsum regnum Dei operatio Spiritus sit, sicut scriptum est: Quia non est regnum Dei esca et potus, sed justitia et pax, et gaudium in Spiritu sancto (Rom. XIV, 17)? Et ipse cum dicit Salvator: Omne regnum in se ipsum divisum destruetur (Matth. XII, 25). Deinde subjiciendo: Quod si in Spiritu Dei ego ejicio daemonia, profecto pervenit in vos regnum Dei (Ibid., 28); ostendit regnum Dei individuum sibi esse cum Spiritu. 157. Quid autem dementius, quam ut neget quisquam Christo conregnare Spiritum sanctum; cum etiam nos in Christi regno conregnaturos Christo Apostolus dicat: Si enim commortui sumus, et convivemus; si sustinemus, et conregnabimus (II Tim. II, 11, 12): sed nos per adoptionem, ille per potestatem: nos gratia, ille natura. 158. Habet igitur consortium regni cum Patre et Filio etiam Spiritus sanctus, qui unius naturae, unius dominationis, unius etiam potestatis est.

CAPUT XXI.

MISSUM A SPIRITU fuisse Esaiam, proindeque eumdem Spiritum ab eo visum. Quid per currentes rotas, alasque diversas intelligendum, et qua ratione cum Spiritus a Seraphim praedicetur Deus Sabaoth, hoc ei nomen negari nisi ab impiis neutiquam possit.

159. [Alias cap. XXIII.] Itaque cum habeat consortium regni, quid obstat quominus Spiritum sanctum intelligamus, a quo Esaias missus est? Neque enim Paulo possumus auctore dubitare, cujus sententiam in Actibus apostolorum Lucas evangelista sic probavit, ut scriberet. Denique sic habes, dicente Paulo: Bene locutus est Spiritus sanctus per Esaiam ad patres nostros, dicens: Vade ad plebem istam, et dic: Aure audietis, et non intelligetis; et videntes videbitis, et non aspicietis (Act. XXVIII, 25, 26). 160. Spiritus ergo est, qui misit Esaiam. Si 698 Spiritus misit, Spiritus est utique quem, mortuo Ozia rege, vidit Esaias, quando dixit: Vidi Dominum Sabaoth sedentem super thronum excelsum et elevatum, et plena erat domus majestatis ejus: et Seraphim stabant in circuitu ejus; sex alae uni, et sex alae alteri, et duabus velabant faciem ejus, et duabus velabant pedes ejus, et duabus volabant; et clamabant alter ad alterum, et dicebant: Sanctus, sanctus, sanctus Dominus Deus Sabaoth: plena est universa terra majestate ejus (Esai. VI, 1 et seq.). 161. Si stabant Seraphim, quomodo volabant? Si volabant, quomodo stabant? Si hoc non possumus comprehendere, quomodo Deum comprehendere volumus, quem non videmus? 162. Sed sicut rotam intra rotam (Ezech. I, 16) vidit propheta currentem (quod utique non ad corporalis refertur speciem visionis, sed ad utriusque gratiam Testamenti; quia teres vita sanctorum sit, et ita sibi concinens, ut superioribus posteriora respondeant. Rota igitur intra rotam est vita sub Lege, vita sub gratia; eo quod Judaea intra Ecclesiam sit, Lex intra gratiam. Nam intra Ecclesiam est, qui Judaeus est in occulto: et circumcisio cordis intra Ecclesiam sacramentum est. Sed illa Judaea intra Ecclesiam, de qua scriptum est (Psal. LXXXV, 1): Notus in Judaea Deus: ergo sicut rota intra rotam currit, similiter alae stabant, et alae volabant. 163. Similiter et Seraphim duabus alis faciem, et duabus pedes velabant, et duabus volabant. Nam hic quoque spiritalis sapientiae sacramentum est. Stant tempora, volant tempora: stant praeterita, volant futura: et quasi alae Seraphim, ita faciem Dei, vel pedes velant; eo quod in Deo qui nec principium nec finem habet, omnis ab hac cognitione principii ejus et finis cursus temporum feriatur. Stant ergo praeterita vel futura, praesentia volant. Ne quaeras principii ejus, vel finis arcana, quae non sunt. Habes praesentia: sed laudato, non discute. 164. Seraphim indefessis vocibus laudant, et tu discutis? Quod utique cum faciunt, ostendunt nobis non aliquando discutiendum Deum, sed semper esse laudandum. Ergo Dominus Sabaoth et Spiritus sanctus est. [Alias cap. XXIII.] Nisi forte displicet impiis doctor, quem Christus elegit: aut Dominum virtutum negare possunt Spiritum sanctum, qui donat quas voluerit ipse virtutes.

CAPUT XXII.

UT REGNI UNITAS probetur in tribus personis, citatus Esaiae locus expenditur: et in iis a quibus vel de Patre vel de Filio vel de Spiritu expositus sit, nullam sensus diversitatem fuisse declaratur. Ad haec majestate Spiritui inde asserta, quod crucifixus dicatur Dominus majestatis, ejus cum Patre ac Filio tanta aequalitas ostenditur, ut ipsum hinc numquam dejecturi sint Ariani.

165. Nunc unitatem majestatis et regni licet in Patre, Filioque, et sancto Spiritu cognoscere. Nam plerique dicunt Patrem 699 Deum ab Esaia hoc tempore visum (Esai. VI, 1), Paulus Spiritum dixit, Lucas probavit (Act. XXVIII, 25), Joannes Evangelista ad Filium retulit. Sic enim scriptum est de Filio (Joan. XII, 36): Haec locutus est Jesus, et abiit, et abscondit se ab his. Cum autem tanta signa fecisset coram eis, non credebant in eum; ut sermo Esaiae impleretur, quem dixit: Domine, quis credidit auditui nostro, et brachium Domini cui revelatum est (Esai. LIII, 1)? Propterea non poterant credere, quia iterum dixit Esaias: Excaecavit oculos eorum, et induravit cor eorum, ut non videant oculis, et corde intelligant, et convertantur, et sanabo eos (Esai. VI, 10). Haec dicit Esaias, quando vidit majestatem ejus, et locutus est de eo. 166. Ipsa verba dixit Joannes dixisse Esaiam, et majestatem ei Filii apparuisse evidentissime revelavit: Paulus autem Spiritum haec dixisse memoravit. Unde igitur ista diversitas? 167. Diversitas quidem verborum, non sensuum est. Nam licet diversa dixerint, nullus erravit; quia et Pater videtur in Filio, qui dixit: Qui me videt, videt et Patrem (Joan. XIV, 9). Et Filius videtur in Spiritu; quia sicut nemo dicit Dominum Jesum nisi in Spiritu sancto (I Cor. XII, 3); ita non carnali oculo, sed spiritali gratia Christus videtur. Unde et Scriptura ait: Surge, qui dormis, et exsurge a mortuis, et illucescet tibi Christus (Ephes. V, 14). Et Paulus cum oculos perdidisset, quomodo nisi in Spiritu 700 Christum videbat (Act. IX, 8)? Unde et Dominus ait: Ad hoc enim tibi visus sum, ut constituerem te ministrum et testem quibus vidisti me, et in quibus visurus es (Act. XXVI, 16). Nam et prophetae Spiritum accipiebant, et Christum videbant. 168. Una igitur visio, una praeceptio, una majestas. An negamus etiam Dominum majestatis esse Spiritum sanctum (I Cor. II, 12), cum Dominus majestatis sit crucifixus, qui natus est de Spiritu sancto ex virgine Maria? Quia non alter Christus, sed unus est: et ante saecula ex Patre, ut Dei filius natus; et in saeculo, ut homo carnis assumptione generatus. 169. Quid autem dicam, quia sicut Pater et Filius, ita etiam Spiritus immaculatus est et omnipotens (Sap. VII, 22); quia Graece παντοδύναμον, πανεπίσκοπον Salomon dixit, eo quod omnipotens et speculator sit omnium, sicut lectum esse in libro Sapientiae supra est demonstratum (Ca, num. 135). Ergo et Spiritus in honore est et in majestate. 170. Intuere nunc, ne quid eum forte non deceat: aut si tibi displicet, Ariane, detrahe eum de Patris Filiique consortio. Sed si detrahere volueris, coelos supra te reverti videbis; quia virtus eorum omnis ab Spiritu est (Psal. XXXII, 6). Si detrahere volueris, in Deum tibi prius mittenda est manus; quia Deus Spiritus (Joan. IV, 24). Sed quomodo detrahes eum, qui alta scrutatur Dei (I Cor. II, 10)?

LIBER II.

LIBER I.

1113 1. DEDUXIMUS, fratres dilectissimi, hostiam meam, hostiam incontaminatam, hostiam Deo placentem, domnum et fratrem meum Satyrum. Memineram esse mortalem, nec fefellit opinio, sed superabundavit gratia. Itaque nihil habeo quod querar, et habeo in quo Deo gratias agam; quia semper optavi, ut si quae perturbationes vel Ecclesiam vel me manerent, in me potius ac meam deciderent domum. Deo igitur gratias, quia in hoc omnium metu, cum omnia motibus sint suspecta Barbaricis, communem moerorem privato dolore transegi, et in me conversum est quidquid timebam omnibus. Atque utinam hic consummatum sit, ut dolor meus publici doloris redemptio sit!

2. Nihil quidem habui, fratres charissimi, in rebus humanis tanto fratre pretiosius, nihil amabilius, nihil charius; sed praestant privatis publica. Ipsius quoque sententiam si quis sciscitaretur, mallet occidi pro aliis, quam sibi vivere; propterea enim pro omnibus secundum carnem Christus est mortuus, ut nos non solis nobis vivere disceremus (II Cor. V, 15). 3. Accedit illud quod ingratus divinitati esse non possum: laetandum est enim magis quod talem fratrem habuerim, quam dolendum quod fratrem amiserim; illud enim munus, hoc debitum est. Itaque perfunctus sum, quamdiu licuit, 1114 commisso mihi fenore: qui deposuit pignus, recepit. Nihil interest utrum abjures depositum, an doleas restitutum. In utroque fidei ambiguum, vitae periculum est. An si pecuniam neges, culpa est: si hostiam neges, pietas est? cum pecuniae fenerator illudi possit, naturae auctor, et necessitudinis creditor fraudari non queat. Itaque quanto uberior fenoris summa, tanto gratior sortis usura. 4. Unde ingrati de fratre esse non possumus; quia quod naturae communis fuit, reddidit: quod gratiae singularis est, meruit. Quis enim communem conditionem recuset? Quis doleat sibi proprium pignus ereptum cum ad solatium nostri Filium suum unicum pro nobis Pater tradiderit ad mortem (Rom. VIII, 32)? Quis exceptum se putet esse debere a conditione moriendi, qui non sit exceptus a conditione nascendi? Magnum pietatis mysterium, ut mors corporis nec in Christo esset excepta; ac licet naturae Dominus, carnis tamen quam susceperat, legem non recusaret. Et mihi necesse est mori, illi necesse non fuit. An qui de servo dicit: Si eum volo sic manere, donec venio, quid ad te (Joan. XXI, 22)? Non potuit ipse sic manere, si vellet? Sed perpetuitate vitae hujus sibi pretium, mihi sacrificium perdidisset. Quod igitur majus est solatium nostri, quam quod secundum carnem et Christus mortuus est? Aut cur ego vehementius fleam fratrem, cum sciam illam mori non potuisse pietatem?

1115 5. Cur solus prae caeteris fleam, quem fletis omnes? Privatum dolorem communi dolore digessi, praesertim cum meae lacrymae nihil prosint, vestrae autem lacrymae fidem astruant, consolationem afferant. Fletis divites, et flendo probatis nihil opitulari repositas divitias ad salutem; cum pecuniae pretio mors differri non queat, et pari usu divitem, inopemque dies supremus eripiat. Fletis senes, quod in hoc liberorum sortem pavetis; et ideo quia vitam corporis producere non potestis, instituite liberos non ad usum corporis, sed ad virtutis officium. Fletis et juvenes, quod naturae finis non sit maturitas senectutis. Fleverunt et pauperes, et quod multo est pretiosius, multoque uberius, lacrymis suis ejus delicta laverunt. Illae sunt lacrymae redemptrices, illi gemitus qui dolorem mortis abscondunt, ille dolor qui, perpetuae ubertate laetitiae, veteris sensum doloris obducat. Itaque licet privatum funus, fletus tamen est publicus; et ideo non potest fletus esse diuturnus, qui universorum est affectibus consecratus. 6. Nam quid te, mi frater amantissime, fleam, qui mihi sic ereptus es, ut esses omnium? Non enim perdidi usum tui, sed commutavi: ante corpore inseparabilis, nunc individuus affectu; manes enim mecum, at semper manebis. Et quidem cum viveres nobiscum, numquam te patria eripuit mihi, nec ipse mihi umquam patriam praetulisti: et nunc alteram praestitisti: coepi enim jam hic non esse peregrinus, ubi melior mei portio est. Numquam enim totus in me fui, sed in altero nostri pars major amborum: uterque autem eramus in Christo, in quo et summa universitatis, et portio singulorum est. Hic mihi tumulus genitali solo gratior, in quo non naturae, sed gratiae meae fructus est; in isto enim corpore, quod nunc exanimum jacet, praestantior vitae meae functio; quia in hoc quoque quod gero corpore, uberior tui portio. 7. Atque utinam ut memoriae, ut gratiae; ita etiam vitae tuae hoc quidquid est, quod spiramus, spirare possemus, dimidiumque meorum decideret temporum, quod ad tuorum proficeret usum! Par enim erat, ut quibus indivisum semper fuit patrimonium facultatum, non esset vitae tempus divisum: vel certe qui indistincta semper habuimus vivendi consortia, non haberemus distincta moriendi. 8. Nunc vero, frater, quo progrediar, quove convertar? Bos bovem requirit, seque non totum putat, et frequenti mugitu pium testatur amorem, si forte defecerit cum quo ducere collo aratra consuevit: et ego te, frater, non requiram? Aut possum umquam oblivisci tui, cum quo vitae hujus semper aratra sustinui? Labore inferior, sed amore conjunctior: non tam mea virtute habilis, quam tua patientia tolerabilis, 1116 qui pio semper sollicitus affectu latus meum tuo latere sepiebas: charitate, ut frater: cura, ut pater; sollicitudine, ut senior: reverentia, ut junior. Ita in unius necessitudinis gradu complurium mihi necessitudinum officia impendebas; ut in te non unum, sed plures amissos requiram, in quo uno ignorata adulatio, expressa est pietas. Neque enim habebas quod simulatione adderes, qui totum pietate comprehenderes, ut nec incrementa receperis, nec vicem exspectaris. 9. Sed quo immemor officii, memor gratiae, immodico dolore progredior? Revocat Apostolus, et tamquam frenos moerori inducit, dicens sicut nuper audistis: Nolumus vos ignorare, fratres, de dormientibus; ut non tristes sitis, sicut et caeteri qui spem non habent (I Thess. IV, 12). Date veniam, fratres charissimi. Neque enim omnes possumus dicere: Imitatores mei estole, sicut et ego Christi (I Cor. IV, 16); sed ad imitandum si auctorem quaeritis, habetis quem possitis imitari. Non omnes ad docendum idonei, utinam omnes ad discendum habiles! 10. At non gravem lacrymis contraximus culpam: non omnis infidelitatis aut infirmitatis est fletus. Alius est naturae dolor, alia est tristitia diffidentiae: et plurimum refert desiderare, quod habueris; et lugere, quod amiseris. Non solus dolor lacrymas habet, habet et laetitia lacrymas suas, et pietas fletum excitat, et oratio stratum rigat, et precatio, juxta Propheticum dictum (Psal. VI, 7), lectulum lavat. Fecerunt et fletum magnum sui cum patriarchae sepelirentur. Lacrymae ergo, pietatis indices, non illices sunt doloris. Lacrymavi ergo, fateor, etiam ego, sed lacrymavit et Dominus. Ille alienum, ego fratrem (Joan. XI, 35): ille in uno lacrymavit omnes, ego in omnibus lacrymabo te, frater. 11. Ille nostro, non suo lacrymavit affectu; neque enim divinitas lacrymas habet: sed lacrymavit eo, quo tristis fuit (Matth. XXVI, 38): lacrymavit eo, quo crucifixus est, quo mortuus, quo sepultus est: lacrymavit in eo, de quo hodie nobis insinuavit propheta, dicens: Mater Sion dicet: Homo, et homo factus est in ea, et ipse fundavit eam Altissimus (Psal. LXXXVI, 5). Eo lacrymavit, quo matrem Sion dixit, genitus in Judaea, susceptus ex Virgine. Matrem autem secundum divinitatem habere non potuit, quia auctor est matris. Ille factus est non divina generatione, sed humana; quia homo factus est, Deus natus est. 12. Sic et alibi habes: Puer natus est nobis, Filius datus est nobis (Esai. IX, 6). In puero enim nomen aetatis, in Filio plenitudo divinitatis est. Factus ex matre, natus ex Patre; idem tamen et natus est et datus: non diversum, sed unum putes. Unus enim Dei Filius, et natus ex Patre, et ortus ex Virgine, distanti ordine, sed in unum concurrente nomine, sicut et praesens lectio docet, quia et homo factus est in ea, et ipse fundavit

1117 eam Altissimus (Psal. LXXXVI, 5), homo utique corpore, altissimus potestate. Et si Deus et homo diversitate naturae; idem tamen non alter in utroque. Aliud ergo speciale naturae suae, aliud commune nobiscum: sed in utroque unus, et utroque perfectus. 13. Non igitur mirandum est, quia et Dominum eum et Christum fecit Deus. Fecit ergo Jesum, eum utique qui ex corpore nomen accepit; fecit eum de quo etiam patriarcha scribit David: Mater Sion dicet: Homo, et homo factus est in ea. (Homo autem factus) dissimilis utique est non divinitate, sed corpore: nec discretus a Patre, sed exceptus in munere: manens in consortio potestatis, segregatus in mysterio passionis. 14. Plura loci hujus tractatus exposcit, quibus possimus ostendere auctoritatem Patris, proprietatem Filii, Trinitatis totius unitatem: sed consolandi hodie, non tractandi partes recepi; quamquam abducere a moerore animum intentione tractandi consolationis sit usus. Sed temperandus mihi magis moeror, quam alienandus affectus; ut mulceantur magis desideria, quam sopiantur. Non libet enim abire a fratre longius, et occupatione subduci; cum velut comitandi ejus gratia hic sermo susceptus sit, ut diutius sensu prosequar proficiscentem: et quem oculis teneo, mente complectar. In illo enim totam oculorum aciem figere libet, cum illo totis animorum officiis immorari, illum toto blanditiarum ambire obsequio; dum stupet animus, nec amissum credo, quem adhuc cerno praesentem: nec mortuum puto, cujus adhuc officia non requiro, quibus ego vitae meae usum et spirandi omne munus addixeram. 15. Quid enim referam tantae gratiae, tanto labori? Ego te, frater, haeredem feceram, tu me haeredem reliquisti: ego te superstitem optabam, tu me superstitem dimisisti. Ego pro muneribus tuis, ut compensarem beneficia, vota referebam: nunc et vota perdidi, sed tamen tua beneficia non amisi. Quid agam, mei successor haeredis? quid agam, meae vitae superstes? quid agam exsors hujus, quod capio luminis? quas grates, quae munera referam tibi? Nihil a me praeter lacrymas habes. Aut fortasse securus meriti tui, quas solas superstites habeo lacrymas, non requiris. Nam etiam cum adhuc viveres, flere prohibebas: moeroremque magis nostrum, quam tuam mortem tibi esse testabaris dolori. Prohibent ulterius prodire lacrymae, 1118 fletusque revocant. Prohibet etiam tui gratia; ne dum nostra deflemus, de tuis meritis desperare videamur. 16. At certe nobis tu etiam moeroris istius minuis acerbitatem: non habeo quod timeam, qui timebam tibi; non habeo quod mihi jam mundus eripiat. Etsi sancta supersit soror, integritate venerabilis, aequalis moribus, non impar officiis; tibi tamen ambo plus timebamus, in te vitae hujus jucunditatem repositam putabamus. Propter te vivere delectabat, propter te mori non pigebat; te enim ambo superstitem precabamur, tibi nos supervivere non juvabat. Quando non cohorruit animus, cum metus hujusmodi titillaret? Quomodo consternata mens erat aegritudinis tuae nuntio! 17. Vae miserae opinioni! Putabamus redditum, quem videmus dilatum; tuis enim votis apud sanctum martyrem Laurentium impetratum esse nunc cognoscimus commeatum. Atque utinam non solum commeatum, sed etiam prolixum vitae tempus rogasses! Potuisti annos plurimos impetrare vivendi, qui potuisti commeatum impetrare veniendi. Et quidem tibi, omnipotens aeterne Deus, gratias ago, quod vel haec nobis suprema solatia non negasti, quod amantissimi fratris ex Siculis Africanisve regionibus exoptatum nobis reditum contulisti; ita enim mature, postquam venit, ereptus est; quasi propter hoc solum videretur esse dilatus, ut ad fratres rediret. 18. Habeo plane pignus meum, quod nulla mihi peregrinatio jam possit avellere: habeo quas complectar, reliquias: habeo tumulum, quem corpore tegam; habeo sepulcrum, super quod jaceam; et commendabiliorem Deo futurum esse me credam, quod supra sancti corporis ossa requiescam. Utinam sic potuissem adversus mortem quoque tuam meum corpus objicere! Si gladiis petitus esses, me pro te potius suffigendum dedissem: si exeuntem potuissem revocare animam, meam potius obtulissem. 19. Nihil mihi profuit ultimos hausisse anhelitus, nihil flatus in os inspirasse morienti; putabam enim quod aut tuam mortem ipse susciperem, aut meam vitam in te ipse transfunderem. O infelicia illa, sed tamen dulcia suprema osculorum pignora! O amplexus miseri, inter quos exanimum corpus obriguit, halitus supremus evanuit! Stringebam quidem brachia, sed jam perdideram, quem tenebam; et extremum spiritum ore relegebam, ut consortium mortis

1119 haurirem. Sed nescio quomodo vitalis ille mihi halitus factus est, et majorem gratiam in ipsa morte redolebat. Atque utinam si tuam nequivi meo spiritu vitam producere, vel ultimi anhelitus tui vigor transfundi potuisset in meam mentem, et illam tui animi puritatem atque innocentiam noster spirasset affectus! Hanc mihi haereditatem, frater charissime, reliquisses, quae non lacrymabili dolore percuteret affectum, sed memorabili gratia commendaret haeredem. 20. Quid igitur nunc agam, cum omnes vitae istius suavitates, cuncta solatia, cuncta denique ornamenta amiserim? Tu enim mihi unus eras domi solatio, foris decori: tu, inquam, in consiliis arbiter, curae particeps, deprecator sollicitudinis, depulsor moeroris: tu meorum assertor actuum, cogitationumque defensor: tu postremo unus, in quo domestica sollicitudo resideret, publica cura requiesceret. Testor sanctam animam tuam, me in fabricis Ecclesiae id saepe veritum esse, ne displicerem tibi. Denique ubi rediisti, objurgasti moram: ita domi forisque eruditor quidam et arbiter sacerdotis, ut domestica cogitare non sineres, publica curare censeres. At non verear, ne videar arroganter dicere; haec enim laudis tuae portio est, quia sine offensione ulla et gubernasti fratris domum, et commendasti sacerdotium. 21. Sentio equidem quod repetendis officiis tuis, recensendisque virtutibus, afficiatur animus: sed tamen in ipsa mei affectione requiesco, atque hae mihi recordationes etsi dolorem renovant, tamen afferunt voluptatem. An ego possum aut non cogitare de te, aut umquam sine lacrymis cogitare? Et potero umquam aut tanti non meminisse fratris, aut sine lacrymabili quadam meminisse gratia? Quid enim mihi umquam jucundum, quod non esset ex te profectum? Quid, inquam, mihi sine te, aut tibi umquam sine me voluptati fuit? Quis non usus nobis, et prope visus ipse, somnusque communis? Quae discreta umquam voluntas? Quod non commune vestigium? fere ut cum gradum tollerem, vel tu meum, vel ego tuum corpus videremur attollere. 22. Quod si quando sine altero prodeundum fuit, intectum latus putares, affectum vultum cerneres, moestum animum judicares: non assueta gratia, non vigor solitus praenitebat: suspecta omnibus solitudo metum alicujus aegritudinis afferebat. Ita novum videbatur omnibus nos dividi! Ego certe fraternae impatiens et non oblitus absentiae, quasi praesentem reflexa saepius cervice quaerebam, et coram alloqui atque aspicere videbar mihi: sed tamquam suspenso collo jugum, ubi speratis excideram, 1120 trahere me putabam, difficilis progredi, verecundus videri, et redire properans, quod sine te procedere non liberet. 23. At vero ubi ambobus prodeundum fuit, non plura in itinere vestigia, quam verba; nec incessus, quam sermo crebrior: nec ambulandi cura, sed colloquendi gratia; uterque enim nostrum ex alterius ore pendebat. Non intento aspectu legere iter, sed mutuo sollicitos experiri sermones, haurire oculorum gratiam, spirare fraternae imaginis voluptates. Quam virtutes tuas tacitus mecum ipse mirabar! quam plaudebam mihi, quod tali me Dominus fratre donaverat, tam pudico, tam efficaci, tam innocenti, tam simplici; ut cum tuam innocentiam cogitarem, efficaciam desperarem: cum efficaciam cernerem, innocentiam non putarem! Sed utrumque mira quadam virtute jungebas. 24. Denique ea quae ambo nequiveramus concludere, solus implesti. Plaudebat sibi, ut audio, Prosper, quod sacerdotii mei occasione redditurum se, quae abstulerat, non putabat: sed vehementiorem tuam unius efficaciam expertus est, quam duorum. Itaque solvit omnia, nec moderationi ingratus tuae, nec illudens pudori: sed et modestiae gratus, nec insolens efficaciae. Sed cui, frater, illa quaesisti? Nos enim idem volebamus laborum tuorum esse praemium, quod documentum erat. Peregisti omnia, et ubi perfunctus omnibus revertisti, tu solus nobis, qui omnibus es praeferendus, eriperis; quasi ideo mortem distuleris, ut consummares pietatis officium, palmam efficaciae reportares. 25. Quam nec ipsi nos, frater charissime, saeculi hujus delectabant honores, quod nos a nobis invicem dividebant! Quos ideo adepti sumus, non quia fuit eorum expetenda perceptio, sed ne vilis dissimulatio videretur. Aut fortasse ideo sunt tributi, ut quia immaturo tui obitu nostrae futurus eras voluptatis occasus, sine nobis jam vivere disceremus. 26. Et quidem praesagae mentis agnosco formidinem, dum repeto saepe, quae scripserim. Revocabam te, frater, ne ipse Africam peteres, ac potius aliquem destinares. Timebam te committere viae, fluctibus credere, et solito metus major incesserat animum: sed et peregrinationem explicuisti, et rem ordinasti, et veteri et sentinoso, ut audio, navigio iterum te fluctibus credidisti. Namque cum celeritatem aucuparis, cautelam praetermisisti, avidus nostrae gratiae, dissimulans periculi tui. 27. O fallax laetitia! o incerta humanarum rerum curricula! Ex Africa redditum, ex mari restitutum, ex naufragio servatum, putabamus jam nobis non posse eripi: sed graviora naufragia

1121 in terris positi sustinemus; nam quem non potuerunt naufragia maris ad mortem deducere, strenuis natatibus evitata, ejus mors coepit nobis esse naufragio. Quid enim superest suavitatis, quibus tam praedulce decus, tam clarum in his mundi tenebris lumen exstinctum est: in quo non nostrae solum familiae, sed totius patriae decus occidit? 28. Habeo sane vobis, fratres dilectissimi, plebs sancta, maximam gratiam, quod non alium dolorem meum, quam vestrum putatis; quod vobis accidisse hanc nostri creditis solitudinem, quod fletum totius civitatis, aetatum omnium, ordinum omnium vota, nova quadam pietate defertis. Non enim misericordiae privatae dolor, sed quoddam publicae officium et munus est gratiae: aut si qua vos mei tangit misericordia, quod talem fratrem amiserim, habeo fructum uberem, habeo vestri pignus affectus. Mallem fratrem viventem; sed tamen publicum officium in secundis rebus jucundius est, in adversis gratius. 29. Neque vero mihi mediocre meritum tanti videtur officii. Neque enim otiose vel in Actibus apostolorum (Act. IX, 39), Thabita mortua, flentes viduae describuntur, vel in Evangelio (Luc. VII, 12) mota lacrymis viduae prosequens turba funus adolescentis inducitur, cui resurrectio debebatur; illam tamen Thabitam viduae, hunc tota civitas flevit. Non ergo dubium est vestris lacrymis apostolorum patrocinium comparari: non, inquam, dubium est Christum misericordia motum, cum vos flentes videret. Etsi nunc non tetigit loculum, suscepit tamen commendatum spiritum: et si non appellavit corporis voce defunctum; divinae tamen potestatis auctoritate a cruciatibus mortis, et a nequitiae spiritalis incursionibus ejus animam liberavit: et si non resedit in loculo, qui erat mortuus; tamen requievit in Christo: et si non locutus est nobis; tamen ea quae supra nos sunt, cernit: et quae potiora sunt nobis, jam se videre laetatur. Per ea enim quae in Evangelio legimus, quae futura sunt intelligimus: et praesentium species indicium est futurorum. 30. Non opus fuit ei resurrectio temporalis, cui aeterna debetur. Quid enim in hanc miseram et aerumnosissimam recideret labem, atque in hanc flebilem vitam rediret, quem raptum magis

1122 esse ex tam imminentibus malis urgentibusque periculis gaudere debemus? Nam si pacato saeculo, bellisque cessantibus, raptum Enoch (Gen. V, 24) nemo deflevit, sed magis propheta laudavit, sicut de illo Scriptura dixit: Raptus est, ne malitia mutaret cor ejus (Sap. IV, 11); quanto magis nunc jure dicendum est, cum ad saeculi lubricum, vitae accedat ambiguum! Raptus est, ne in manus incideret Barbarorum: raptus est, ne totius orbis excidia, mundi finem, propinquorum funera, civium mortes, ne postremo sanctarum virginum atque viduarum, quod omni morte acerbius

est, colluvionem videret. 31. Ego vero te, frater, cum vitae tuae flore, tum mortis commoditate beatum arbitror. Non enim nobis ereptus es, sed periculis: non vitam amisisti, sed ingruentium acerbitatum formidine caruisti. Nam qua eras sanctae mentis misericordia in tuos, si nunc urgeri Italiam tam propinquo hoste cognosceres, quantum ingemisceres, quam doleres in Alpium vallo summam nostrae salutis consistere, lignorumque concaedibus construi murum pudoris! Qua afflictione moereres tam tenui discrimine tuos ab hoste distineri, ab hoste impuro atque crudeli, qui nec pudicitiae parceret, nec saluti! 32. Quonam, inquam, haec modo ferres, quae nos perpeti, et fortasse (quod gravius est) spectare cogemur, rapi virgines, et avulsos a complexu parentum parvulos liberos supra tela jactari, incestari sacrata Deo corpora, et senilem viduae maturioris uterum in usus desuetos oncrum redire, non pignorum? Quonam, inquam, modo ista tolerares, qui etiam ultimo spiritu tui jam fortassis oblitus, et adhuc nostri non immemor, de cavenda incursione Barbarorum nos saepius admonebas, commemorans non frustra te dixisse fugiendum. Fortasse ideo quod nos destitui tua morte cernebas: quod non infirmitate animi, sed pietate faciebas; et si infirmus pro nobis, tamen firmus tibi. Qui cum a viro nobili revocareris Symmacho tuo parente, quod ardere bello Italia diceretur, quod in periculum tenderes, quod in hostem incurreres; respondisti hanc ipsam tibi causam esse veniendi, ne nostro deesses periculo, ut consortem te fraterni discriminis exhiberes. 33. Felix igitur tam opportuno obitu, quia non est in hunc servatus dolorem. Certe felicior

1123 quam sancta soror, quae tuo solatio destituta, de suo pudore sollicita, duobus nuper beata germanis, nunc ex duobus fratribus aerumnosa, neque alterum sequi potest, neque alterum derelinquere: cui tumulus hospitium tuus, et corporis tui sepulcrum est domus. Atque utinam vel hoc tutum diversorium! Cibus in fletibus, potus in lacrymis; cibum etenim dedisti nobis panem lacrymarum, et potum dedisti nobis in lacrymis in mensura, aut fortasse ultra mensuram (Psal. LXXIX, 6). 34. Nam quid de me loquar, cui neque mori licet, ne sororem relinquam: neque vivere libet, ne a te avellar? Quid enim mihi sine te potest esse jucundum, in quo omnis semper fuit nostra jucunditas? aut quid diutius in hac vita degere juvat, atque in terris morari, in quibus tamdiu jucunde viximus, quamdiu simul viximus! Etsi esset quod hic delectare nos posset, sine te delectare non posset: et si quando voluissemus impense vitam producere, jam tamen sine te esse nollemus. 35. Haec intolerabilia. Quid enim tolerabile sine te tanto vitae comite, tanto laborum meorum officiorumque consorte? Cujus ego casum quo esset tolerabilior, nec praemeditari potui; ita pavebat animus de illo tale aliquid cogitare! non quo conditionem ignorarem, sed quidam votorum usus sensum communis fragilitatis obduxerat; ut de illo nisi secunda omnia cogitare nescirem. 36. Denique proxime cum gravi (quodam atque utinam supremo!) urgerer occasu; hoc solum dolebam, quod non ipse assideres lectulo, ac votivum mihi cum sancta sorore partitus officium, morientis oculos digitis tuis clauderes. Quid optaveram! Quid rependo! Quae vota deficiunt! Quae ministeria succedunt! Aliud praeparabam, aliud exhibere compellor; non jam ipse ministerium funeris, sed minister. O dura oculorum lumina, quae potuistis fratrem videre morientem! O immites et asperae manus, quae clausistis oculos, in quibus plus videbam! O durior cervix, quae tam lugubre onus, consolabili licet obsequio, gestare potuisti! 37. Haec tu, frater, mihi justius exhiberes. Haec ego a te exspectabam, haec ego officia desiderabam. Nunc vero ipsae meae vitae superstes, quod sine te solatium capiam, qui solus moerentem solari solebas, excitare laetitiam, moestitudinem propulsare? Qualem te nunc ego, frater, aspicio, jam nulla mihi verba referentem, 1124 jam nulla offerentem oscula! Quamquam ita mutuus semper utrique nostrum insederit amor, ut interiore potius foveretur affectu, quam forensi blanditia divulgaretur; neque enim aliorum quaerebamus testimonium, qui tantam nostri gratiam tenebamus. Ita virilis se utrique nostrum germanitatis succus infuderat, ut non blanditiis probare amorem, sed conscia mente pietatis interno amore contenti, fucum blanditiarum non requirere videremur, quos et ipsa in amorem mutuum imago formaret; nescio enim qua expressione mentis, qua corporis similitudine alter in altero videbamur. 38. Quis te aspexit, qui non me visum putaret? Quoties aliquos salutavi, qui quoniam te prius consalutaverant, se a me jam dicerent salutatos! Quanti tibi dixerunt aliquid, qui se mihi dixisse memorarent! Quae mihi hinc gaudia, quanta frequenter oborta laetitia, quod eos errare in nobis cernerem! Quam gratus error, quam jucunda prolapsio, quam religiosa fallacia, quam suavis calumnia! Neque enim de tuis erat aliquid aut factis aut sermonibus, quod timerem, qui mihi tua laetabar ascribi. 39. Tamen si vehementius contenderent, quod se mihi aliquid intimasse memorarent, respondebam ridens et gaudens: Videte ne fratri dixeritis. Nam cum omnia nobis essent nostra communia, individuus spiritus, individuus affectus; solum tamen commune non erat secretum amicorum: non quo conferendi periculum vereremur, sed tenendi servaremus fidem. Sane si consilio pendenda res esset, erat semper commune consilium, nec semper commune secretum. Nam etsi amici ita alteri nostrum dicerent, ut dicta sua ad alterum pervenirent; tamen scio plerumque ita fidem secreti esse servatam, ut nec fratri committeretur. Erat enim fidele indicium, et extraneo non esse proditum, quod non esset cum fratre collatum. 40. His igitur tantis ac talibus bonis in excessum quemdam, fateor, mentis elatus, superstitem me timere desieram, quod illum vita crederem digniorem: et ideo excepi plagam, quam ferre non possum; tolerabiliora enim tanti doloris praemeditata, quam inexplorata vulnera. Quis jam moestum solabitur? Quis afflictum levabit? Cum quo participabo curas? Quis me ab istius mundi vindicabit usura? Tu enim auctor negotiorum, censor servulorum, arbiter fratrum; non litis, sed pietatis arbiter. 41. Nam si quando aliquid cum sancta sorore

1125 mihi conferendum fuit, utra melior videretur sententia, te judicem sumebamus, qui nullius laederes os, atque utrique satisfacere gestiens, et amandi affectum tenebas, et censendi modum; ut et utrumque gratum dimitteres, et utriusque tibi gratiam vindicares. Aut si ipse aliquid disceptandum deferres, quam grata contentio tua! quam sine felle ipsa indignatio! quam servulis ipsis coercitio non amara; cum te fratribus magis deferre, quam ex affectu disceres vindicare! Nobis enim professio repressit studia coercendi; immo tu, frater, ab omni nos abducebas coercitionis affectu, vindicare pollicens, et lenire desiderans. 42. Non mediocris igitur prudentiae testimonium, quae ita a sapientibus definitur: Bonorum primum esse Deum scire, et verum illud atque divinum pia mente venerari, illam amabilem et concupiscendam aeternae pulchritudinem veritatis tota mentis charitate diligere. Secundum autem, in proximos a divino illo fonte atque coelesti naturae derivare pietatem: quod etiam mundi sapientes nostris hausere de legibus. Neque enim derivare ista in hominum disciplinas, nisi de coelesti illo divinae legis fonte potuissent. 43. Quid igitur observantiam ejus erga Dei cultum praedicem? Qui priusquam perfectioribus esset initiatus mysteriis, in naufragio constitutus, cum ea qua veheretur, navis scopuloso illisa vado, et urgentibus hinc atque inde fluctibus solveretur, non mortem metuens, sed ne vacuus mysterii exiret e vita; quos initiatos esse cognoverat, ab his divinum illud fidelium sacramentum poposcit: non ut curiosos oculos inferret arcanis, sed ut fidei suae consequeretur auxilium. Etenim ligari fecit in orario, et orarium involvit collo, atque ita se dejecit in mare, non requirens de navis compage resolutam tabulam, cui supernatans juvaretur, quoniam fidei solius arma quaesierat. Itaque his se tectum atque munitum satis credens, alia auxilia non desideravit. 44. Simul fortitudinem ejus spectare licet, qui fatiscente remigio, non quasi naufragus tabulam sumpserit, sed quasi fortis ex se ipso adminiculum suae virtutis assumpserit: nec deseruit

1126 spes, nec fefellit opinio. Denique primus servatus ex undis, et in portum terrenae stationis evectus, praesulem suum, cui se crediderat, recognovit: statimque ubi etiam caeteros servulos suos vel ipse liberavit, vel liberatos comperit, negligens facultatum, nec amissa desiderans, Dei ecclesiam requisivit; ut ageret gratias liberatus, et mysteria aeterna cognosceret, pronuntians nullum referenda gratia majus esse officium. Quod si homini non referre, simile homicidio judicatum est; quantum crimen est non referre Deo! 45. Est ergo prudentis agnoscere se ipsum, et quemadmodum a sapientibus definitum est, secundum naturam vivere. Quid enim est tam secundum naturam, quam referre auctori gratiam? Aspice coelum hoc; nonne auctori refert gratiam, cum videtur? Coeli enim enarrant gloriam Dei, et opera manuum ejus annuntiat firmamentum (Psal. XVIII, 2). Mare ipsum cum sedatum atque tranquillum est, divinae serenitatis testatur indicium: cum movetur, indignatio superna terrori est. Nonne omnes Dei gratiam jure miramur, cum advertimus quod insensibilis natura quadam sensibili ratione suos fluctus coerceat, et fines suos unda cognoscat? Nam de terris quid loquar, quae divino obedientes praecepto omnibus sponte animantibus pabulum subministrant (Gen. I, 11); atque id quod acceperint agri, velut crescentibus usuris multiplicatum, cumulatumque restituunt? 46. Ergo ille qui natura duce divini rationem operis igneo mentis vigore perceperat, scivit primo omnium servatori suo gratiam esse referendam: sed quia referre non poterat, habere poterat. Est enim hujuscemodi gratiae vis, ut et cum refertur, habeatur; et habendo referatur. Referebat igitur gratiam, deferebat fidem. Nam qui tantum mysterii coelestis involuti in orario praesidium fuisset expertus, quantum arbitrabatur si ore sumeret, et toto pectoris hauriret arcano! quam majus putabat fusum in viscera, quod tantum sibi tectum orario profuisset! 47. Sed non ita avidus fuit, ut esset incautus; scimus enim plerosque aviditate studii praetermittere cautionem. Advocavit ad se episcopum (24, q. 1, cap. Advocavit),

1127 nec ullam veram putavit nisi verae fidei gratiam, percontatusque ex eo est utrumnam cum episcopis catholicis, hoc est, cum Romana Ecclesia conveniret? Et forte ad id locorum in schismate regionis illius Ecclesia erat; Lucifer enim se a nostra tunc temporis communione diviserat, et quamquam pro fide exsulasset, et fidei suae reliquisset haeredes; non putavit tamen fidem esse in schismate. Nam etsi fidem erga Deum tenerent, tamen erga Dei Ecclesiam non tenebant, cujus patiebantur velut quosdam artus dividi, et membra lacerari. Etenim cum propter Ecclesiam Christus passus sit, et Christi corpus Ecclesia sit (Ephes. V, 25); non videtur ab his exhiberi Christo fides, a quibus evacuatur ejus passio, corpusque distrahitur. 48. Itaque quamvis gratiae fenus teneret, et metueret tanti nominis debitor navigare; tamen eo transire maluit, ubi tuto posset exsolvere: judicabat enim divinae solutionem gratiae in affectu ac fide esse; quam quidem statim ubi primum copia liberior Ecclesiae fuit, implere non distulit. Deique gratiam et accepit desideratam, et servavit acceptam. Nihil igitur ea prudentia sapientius, quae divina et humana secernit. 49. Nam quid spectatam in stipendiis forensibus ejus facundiam loquar? Quam incredibili admiratione in auditorio praefecturae sublimis emicuit! Sed malo illa laudare, quae perceptis mysteriis Dei duxit humanis esse potiora. 50. Fortitudinem quoque ejus si quis plenius spectare volet, consideret quoties post naufragium invicto quodam contemptu vitae hujus, maria transfretaverit: diffusasque regiones obeundo peragrarit: postremo quod hoc ipso tempore periculum non refugerit, sed ad periculum venerit, patiens injuriae, negligens frigoris, atque utinam sollicitus cautionis! Sed hoc ipso beatus, quod dum licuit vigore uti corporis, inoffenso ad exsequenda quae vellet, functus

1128 juventutis officio, vitam vixit, debilitatem ignoravit. 51. Qua vero prosecutione simplicitatem ejus edisseram? Ea est enim quaedam morum temperantia, mentisque sobrietas. Date, quaeso, veniam, et permittite dolori

meo; ut de eo mihi paulo uberius liceat loqui, cum quo jam non conceditur colloqui. Certe et vobis proficit, ut advertatis non fragilitate quadam vos hoc officium, sed judicio detulisse: nec misericordia mortis impulsos, sed virtutum honorificentia provocatos; anima enim benedicta omnis simplex (Prov., XI). Tanta autem simplicitas erat, ut conversus in puerum, simplicitate illius aetatis innoxiae, perfectae virtutis effigie, et quodam innocentium morum speculo eluceret. Intravit igitur in regnum coelorum, quoniam credidit Dei verbo; quoniam sicut puer artem repulit adulandi, injuriae dolorem clementer absorbuit, quam inclementius vindicavit: querelae quam dolo promptior, satisfactioni facilis, difficilis ambitioni, sanctus pudori; ut frequenter in eo superfluam magis verecundiam praedicares, quam necessariam quaereres. 52. Sed numquam superflua fundamenta virtutis; pudor enim non revocat, sed commendat officium. Itaque velut quadam virginali verecundia suffusus ora, cum vultu affectum proderet, si forte aliquam subito veniens offendisset parentem, velut depressus et quasi demersus in terram, licet in ipso nequaquam dissimilis coetu virorum, rarus attollere os, elevare oculos, referre sermonem: quod pudico quodam mentis pudore faciebat, cum quo castimonia quoque corporis congruebat. Etenim intemerata sacri baptismatis dona servavit, mundus corpore, purior corde: non minus adulterini sermonis opprobrium, quam corporis perhorrescens: non minorem ratus pudicitiae reverentiam deferendam integritate verborum, quam corporis castitate. 53. Denique in tantum castimoniam dilexit, ut

1129 nec uxorem expeteret; licet in eo non solum castitatis appetentia fuerit, sed etiam pietatis gratia. Miro autem modo et conjugium dissimulabat, et jactantiam declinabat: tantaque erat dissimulatio, ut nobis quoque urgentibus, differre magis consortium, quam refugere videretur. Hoc unum itaque fuit, quod nec fratribus crederet: non aliqua cunctationis haesitantia, sed virtutis verecundia. 54. Quis igitur non miretur virum inter

fratres duos alterum virginem, alterum sacerdotem, aetate medium, magnanimitate non imparem, ita inter duo maxima munera praestitisse; ut alterius muneris castitatem, alterius sanctitatem referret, non professionis vinculo, sed virtutis officio? Ergo si libido atque iracundia reliquorum vitiorum educatrices sunt, jure castitatem atque clementiam dixerim quasdam virtutum parentes; quamquam pietas quoque ut omnium principatus bonorum, ita etiam seminarium virtutum est caeterarum. 55. Nam de parcimonia quid loquar, et quadam habendi castitate? Is enim non quaerit aliena, qui sua servat: nec inflatur immodico, qui contentus est proprio. Nihil ergo aliud nisi proprium recuperare voluit; magis ne fraudaretur, quam ut ditaretur. Nam eos qui aliena quaererent, recte accipitres pecuniae nominabat. Quod si radix malorum omnium avaritia est; utique vitia exuit, qui pecuniam non requirit (I Tim. VI, 10). 56. Non umquam accuratioribus epulis aut congestis ferculis delectatus est, nisi cum amicos rogaret: quantum naturae satis esset, non quantum voluptati superesset, requirens. Et certe erat non pauper opibus, sed tamen pauper spiritu. De istius beatitudine. (Matth. V, 3) nequaquam utique dubitare debemus, qui neque ut opulens, exsultavit in divitiis: neque ut pauper, exiguum quod habuit, judicavit. 57. Superest ut ad conclusionem cardinalium virtutum, etiam justitiae partes in eo debeamus advertere. Nam etsi cognatae sint inter se, concretaeque virtutes; tamen singularum quaedam forma expressior desideratur, maximeque justitiae. Ea enim sibi parcior foris tota est, et quidquid habet quadam inclementia sui, dum rapitur amore communi, transfundit in proximos. 58. Sed hujus multiplex est species. Alia erga propinquos, alia erga universos, alia erga Dei cultum, vel adjumentum inopum. Itaque qualis in universos fuerit, provincialium, quibus praefuit, studia docent: qui parentem magis fuisse proprium, quam judicem loquebantur: gratum piae necessitudinis arbitrum, constantem aequi juris disceptatorem. 59. Inter fratres autem qualis fuerit, licet

1130 omne hominum genus benevolentia complecteretur, indivisum patrimonium docet: nec distributa aut delibata, sed reservata haereditas. Etenim pietatem sibi causam esse negavit testandi. Nam hoc quoque ultimo sermone signavit, cum quos dilexerat, commendaret; sibi nec uxoris arbitrium fuisse ducendae, ne a fratribus divelleretur: nec testamenti faciendi voluntatem, ne nostrum in aliquo arbitrium laederetur. Denique et oratus et obsecratus a nobis, nihil tamen condendum putavit: non oblitus tamen pauperum, sed tantum obsecrans esse tribuendum, quantum nobis justum videretur. 60. Quo uno satis et divini timoris expressit indicium, et humanae edidit religionis exemplum. Nam quod pauperibus contulit, Deo detulit; quoniam qui largitur pauperi, Deo fenerat (Prov. XIX, 17): et postulando quod justum est, non exiguum, sed totum reliquit. Haec enim est summa justitiae, vendere quae habeas, et conferre pauperibus. Qui enim dispersit, dedit pauperibus, justitia ejus manet in aeternum (Psal. CXI, 9). Ergo dispensatores nos, non haeredes reliquit; nam haereditas successori quaeritur, dispensatio pauperibus obligatur. 61. Unde non immerito quantus fuerit, hodie quoque per vocem lectoris parvuli, Spiritus sanctus expressit: Innocens manibus, et mundo corde, qui non accepit in vanum animam suam, nec fecit proximo suo dolum: haec est generatio requirentium Deum (Psal. XXIII, 4, 6). Hic ergo et in montem Domini ascendet, et in tabernaculo habitabit Dei; quia ingressus sine macula, operatus est justitiam, locutus est veritatem, non decepit proximum (Psal. XIV, 2, 3): nec pecuniam feneratus est suam, qui semper voluit recuperare haereditariam. Agnosco oraculum; quod enim nulla ordinavit dispositio, Spiritus revelavit. 62. Quid vero illud recenseam, quod supra ipsam justitiam pietate progressus; cum quaedam incubatori communium fructuum mei contemplatione muneris putasset esse tribuenda, largitatis me jactabat auctorem, portionis suae lucrum ad commune consortium conferebat. 63. Haec et alia, quae mihi tunc erant voluptati, maxime nunc recordationem doloris exasperant. Manent tamen, eruntque semper, nec umquam velut umbra praetereunt, neque enim virtutis gratia cum corpore occidit, nec idem naturae meritorumque finis; licet ipsius naturae usus non in aeternum occidat, sed temporali quadam vacatione requiescat. 64. Talibus igitur perfunctum virtutibus, ereptum periculis desiderio magis quam amissione flebo. Suadet enim ipsa opportunitas mortis, ut prosequendum magis gratia, quam dolendum

1131 putemus; scriptum est enim in communi dolore proprium vacare debere (IV Esdr. X, 11 et seq.). Neque enim prophetico sermone uni illi mulieri, quae figuratur, sed singulis dicitur, cum Ecclesiae dictum videtur. 65. Dicitur ergo et ad me, et dicit Scriptura coelestis: Hoccine doces, sic instituis Dei plebem? An nescis quia exemplum tuum periculum caeterorum est? Nisi forte exauditum non esse te quereris. Primum istud arrogantis est impudentiae, mereri solum velle, quod multis etiam sanctis negatum noveris; cum scias, quia non est personarum acceptor Deus (Act. X, 34). Nam etsi misericors Deus, tamen si semper exaudiret omnes, non jam ex voluntate libera, sed ex quadam velut necessitate facere videretur; Deinde cum omnes rogent, si exaudiret omnes, nemo moreretur. Pro quantis ergo quotidie rogas! Numquid constitutio Dei contemplatione solvenda est tui? Cur ergo non impetratum aliquando doles, quod non semper impetrabile esse cognoscis? 66. Stulte, inquit, super omnes mulieres, nonne vides luctum nostrum, et quae nobis contigerunt, quoniam Sion mater nostra omnium tristitia contristatur, et humilitate humiliata est. Lugete validissime et nunc, quoniam omnes lugemus; et tristes sitis, quoniam omnes contristati sumus: tu enim contristaris in fratre. Interroga terram et dicet tibi, quoniam haec est quae debeat lugere, tantorum superstes germinum: et ex ipsa, inquit, ab initio omnes nati, et alii venient, et ecce pene omnes in perditionem ambulant, et in exterminium fit multitudo eorum. Et quis ergo debet lugere magis, nisi quae tam magnam multitudinem perdidit, quam tu qui pro uno doles (IV Reg. X, 6 et seq.)? 67. Absorbeat igitur nostrum dolorem communis dolor, et acerbitatem proprii moeroris excludat. Non enim dolere debemus eos, quos cernimus liberatos; neque enim otiose tam sanctas hoc tempore animas corporeis vinculis reminiscimur absolutas. Namque velut divino judicio tam graves viduas, ita uno tempore defunctas videmus, ut profectionis quidam videatur excessus, non mortis occasus; ne veterana emeritis stipendiis pudicitia in dubium diu servati pudoris incideret. Quos gemitus mihi, quos dolores tam acerba excitat recordatio! Et si moeroribus non vacabam; tamen in ipso dolore privato, in ipso tantorum amisso flore meritorum, communis quaedam naturae me conditio solabatur: defixusque in uno dolor acerbitatem publici funeris, domesticae specie pietatis obduxerat. 68. Repeto ergo, sacra Scriptura, solatia tua; juvat enim tuis praeceptis, tuis sententiis immorari. Quam facilius est coelum et terram praeterire, quam de Lege unum apicem cadere (Luc. XVI, 17)! Sed jam audiamus quae scripta sunt: Nunc, inquit, retine apud temet ipsam dolorem tuum, et 1132 fortiter fer, qui tibi contigerunt, casus. Si enim justificaveris terminum Dei, et filium tuum recipies in tempore, et in mulieribus collaudaberis (IV Esdr. X, 15, 16). Si hoc ad mulierem, quanto magis ad sacerdotem? Si de filio, non utique absurdum etiam de fratrum amissione talia posse memorari; quamquam si mihi fuisset filius, numquam eum amplius dilexissem. Nam sicut in obitu liberorum effusi labores, suscepti frustra dolores moerorem videntur augere; ita etiam in fratribus consuetudinis usus atque collegii acerbitatem doloris accendunt. 69. Sed ecce dicentem Scripturam audio: Noli facere hunc sermonem, sed consenti persuaderi. Qui enim casus Sion? Consolare propter dolorem Hierusalem. Vides enim quia sancta nostra contaminata sunt, et nomen quod nominatum est super nos, pene profanatum est, et illi nostri contumeliam passi sunt, et sacerdotes nostri succensi sunt, et levitae nostri in captivitate fuerunt, et mulieres nostrae contaminatae sunt, et virgines nostrae vim passae, et justi nostri rapti, et parvuli nostri proditi sunt, et juvenes nostri servierunt, et fortes nostri invalilidi facti sunt. Et quod omnium majus, signaculum Sion quoniam resignata est de gloria sua, nunc et tradita est in manibus eorum, qui nos oderunt. Tu ergo excute tuam multam tristitiam, et depone abs te multitudinem dolorum; ut tibi repropitietur fortis, et requiem faciat tibi Altissimus requietione dolorum (Ibid., 20 et seq.). 70. Cessabunt igitur lacrymae, parendum est enim remediis salutaribus, quia debet aliquid inter fidos et perfidos interesse. Fleant ergo qui spem resurrectionis habere non possunt, quam non sententia Dei eripit, sed fidei inclementia. Intersit inter Christi servulos, idolorumque cultores; ut illi fleant suos, quos in perpetuum existimant interiisse: illi nullas habeant lacrymarum ferias, nullam tristitiae requiem consequantur, qui nullam putant requiem mortuorum. Nobis vero quibus mors non naturae, sed vitae istius finis est; quoniam in melius ipsa natura reparatur, fletus omnes casus mortis abstergat. 71. Certe si illi sibi aliqua solatia repererunt, qui finem sensus, defectumque naturae mortem arbitrati sunt; quanto magis nos, quibus meliora post mortem praemia bonorum factorum conscientia pollicetur! Habent gentiles solatia sua, quia requiem malorum omnium mortem existimant: et ut vitae fructu carent, ita etiam caruisse se putant omni sensu et dolore poenarum, quas in hac vita graves et assiduas sustinemus. Nos vero ut erectiores praemio, ita etiam patientiores solatio esse debemus; non enim amitti, sed praemitti videntur, quos non assumptura mors, sed aeternitas receptura est. 72. Cessabunt ergo lacrymae: aut si cessare non poterunt, in communibus lamentis flebo te, frater, et sub dolore publico domesticos gemitus

1133 tegam. Nam cessare qui poterunt, cum ad omnem sonum nominis tui lacrymae subrepant, vel cum usus ipse recordationem excitat, vel cum affectus imaginem repraesentat, vel cum recordatio dolorem renovat? Quando enim dees, qui tantis officiis repraesentaris? Ades, inquam, et semper offunderis, et toto te animo ac mente complector, aspicio, alloquor, osculor, comprehendo vel in ipsa quiete nocturna, vel in luce clara; cum revisere et consolari dignaris moerentem. Denique ipsae jam noctes, quae quasi molestiores, vivente te, videbantur; quod mutui conspectus copiam denegarent: ipse jam somnus colloquiorum nostrorum dudum interruptor inamabilis, dulcis esse jam coepit; quia te mihi reddidit. Non igitur miseri, sed beati; quorum nec praesentia deficit, nec cura minuitur, et augetur gratia. Etenim somni similis imago mortis. 73. Quod si in quiete nocturna vinculis adhuc corporeis inhaerentes, et quasi inter carceraria religatae claustra membrorum; possunt tamen animae altiora et discreta perspicere: quanto magis spectant haec, cum jam puro aethereoque sensu nulla corporeae labis impedimenta patiuntur! Meritoque mihi conquerenti, vergente quodam jam in occasum die, quod non reviseres quiescentem, totus omni tempore individuus adfuisti; ita ut illo perfusus sopore membrorum, cum ego vigilarem tibi, tu viveres mihi, dicerem: Quid est mors, frater? Nam certe nullis a me separabare momentis; ita enim ubique praesto eras, ut quam in istius vitae usu habere nostri copiam nequibamus, nunc nobis semper et ubique praesto sit. Nam tunc utique omnia praesto esse non poterant; nec enim complexiones nostrae, conspectusque et osculorum corporalium suavitates locis omnibus et omnibus temporibus suppetebant. Animorum imagines semper nobiscum erant, etiam quando non eramus una: quae ne nunc quidem occiderunt, assiduoque advolant, quo majore desiderio, eo majore copia. 74. Teneo igitur te, frater, nec mihi te aut mors aut tempus avellet. Ipsae dulces lacrymae sunt, ipsi fletus jucundi, quibus restinguitur ardor animi, et quasi relaxatus evaporat affectus. Neque enim sine te esse possum, aut tui non meminisse umquam, aut meminisse sine lacrymis. O amari dies, qui interruptam copulam proditis! O flebiles noctes, quae tam bonum consortem quietis, et individuum mihi comitem perdidistis! Quas ederetis cruces, nisi se offunderet imago praesentis, nisi visiones animi repraesentarent, quem species corporis denegaret! 75. Jam jam, frater animo meo charissime, quamquam tu immaturo decesseris obitu; beatus tamen, qui ista non sustines, nec amissum fratrem moerere compelleris, quem absentem diu ferre non poteras, sed recursu celeri revisebas.

1134 Quod si tunc solitudinis meae taedia repellere, moestitiam fraternae mentis ablevare properabas; quanto nunc crebrius afflictum animum debes revisere, et ex te conceptum, per te lenire moerorem! 76. At mihi tamen dat aliquas officii usus inducias, et obsequii sacerdotalis intentio abducit animum: sanctae vero sorori quid fiet, quae licet divino metu pietatem temperet; rursus tamen ipsum pietatis dolorem studio religionis accendit, strata humi et totum gremio sui complexa tumulum, laborioso fessa incessu, tristis affectu, dies noctesque moerorem integrat? Nam licet fletum plerumque sermone suspendat, in oratione renovat: et quamvis Scripturarum memoria consolationes serentibus praecurrat; flendi tamen desiderium precandi assiduitate compensat, lacrymarum ubertatem tunc praecipue, quando nemo interrumpere possit, instaurans. Ita quod miserearis, habes: quod reprehendas, non habes; flere enim in oratione virtutis est. Et quamquam istud familiare virginibus, quibus mollior sexus, tenerior affectus, contuitu communis fragilitatis in lacrymas etiam sine domestici sensu doloris exuberat; tamen cum major causa moerendi est, finis moeroribus excluditur. 77. Deest igitur consolandi via, quia suppetit excusandi gratia. Neque enim possis prohibere, quod doceas; praesertim cum religionis astruat lacrymas, non doloris; et communis seriem deplorationis metu pudoris obtexat. Consolare ergo qui potes adire animum, penetrare mentem. Cernat te esse praesentem, sentiat non esse defunctum; ut cujus secura de merito, ejus functa solatio, discat pro eo non graviter dolere, qui se admonuerit non esse dolendum. 78. Sed quid ego te morer, frater? quid exspectem, ut nostra tecum commoriatur, et quasi consepeliatur oratio? Licet ipsa species et exanimis corporis forma soletur, oculosque manens gratia et permanens figura demulceat; nihil, inquam, moror, procedamus ad tumulum. Sed prius ultimum coram populo vale dico, pacem praedico, osculum solvo. Praecede ad illam communem omnibus et debitam, sed jam mihi prae caeteris desiderabilem domum. Para hospiti consortium; et quemadmodum hic omnia nobis fuere communia, ita illic quoque jus dividuum nesciamus. 79. Ne, quaeso, cupientem tui diu differas, properantem exspecta, festinantem adjuva, et si diutius morari tibi videbor, accerse. Neque enim umquam prolixius abfuimus a nobis, tu tamen solebas revisere. Nunc quoniam tu redire jam non potes, nos ad te ibimus: aequum est ut officium rependamus, subeamus vicem. Numquam nobis fuit vitae conditio discretior: semper aut sanitas aut aegritudo communis; ut cum alter aegresceret, alter in morbum incurreret:

1135 et cum alter revalesceret, uterque consurgeret. Quomodo jus nostrum amisimus? Et nunc consortium aegritudinis fuit, quomodo mortis consortium non fuit? 80. Tibi nunc, omnipotens Deus, innoxiam commendo animam, tibi hostiam meam offero: cape propitius ac serenus fraternum munus, 1136 sacrificium sacerdotis. Haec mei jam libamina praemitto, in hoc ad te pignore venio, non pecuniae, sed vitae pignore; ne me diutius residere facias tanti fenoris debitorem. Non mediocris est fraterni amoris usura, nec vilis naturae sors, quam cumulant incrementa virtutis. Possum ferre, si cito cogar exsolvere.

LIBER II.

DE FIDE RESURRECTIONIS.

1135 1. SUPERIORE libro aliquid indulsimus desiderio, ne tamquam ferventi plagae austeriora adhibita medicamenta exasperarent magis, quam lenirent dolorem: simul quia fratrem saepius allocuti sumus, et oculis tenebamus, absurdum non fuit relaxare paulisper affectum naturae, qui lacrymis magis pascitur, fletibus delinitur, stupore defigitur. Mollis enim et tenera species est forma pietatis, nihil insolens amat, nihil immite, nihil durum: ferendo autem magis probatur patientia, quam resistendo.

2. Ergo quia dudum dies mortis inter lacrymabiles aspectus debuit animum declinare fraternum, quia totum tenebat; nunc quoniam die septimo ad sepulcrum redimus, qui dies symbolum futurae quietis est, a fratre paululum ad communem humani generis cohortationem juvat derivare mentem, intentionemque transfundere; ita ut neque toti sensibus defigamur in fratre, ne obrepat affectus: neque tantae exsules pietatis et gratiae eum, quem diligimus, deseramus; et vere ipsi nobis tanti doloris augeamus injuriam, si hodie nobis et in sermone moriatur. 3. Unde, proposuimus, fratres charissimi, solari nos communi usu, nec durum putare, quidquid universos maneret; et ideo mortem non esse lugendam: primum, quia communis sit, et cunctis debita: deinde, quia nos saeculi hujus absolvat aerumnis: postremo, quia somni specie ubi ab istius mundi labore requietum sit, vigor nobis vivacior refundatur. Quem dolorem non soletur resurrectionis gratia? quem non excludat moerorem, si credas nihil perire morte; immo ipsius mortis celeritate fieri, ut plus perire non possit? Erit ergo, fratres charissimi, ut in adhortatione communi, etiam fratri nostrum

pendamus affectum: nec ab eo longius deviasse videamur, si per resurrectionis spem, et futurae

1136 gloriae suavitatem, etiam in sermone nobis hodie reviviscat. 4. Ordiamur igitur ab eo, ut lugendum nobis nostrorum obitum non esse doceamus. Quid enim absurdius, quam ut id quod scias omnibus esse praescriptum, quasi speciale deplores? Hoc est animum supra conditionem extollere, legem non recipere communem, naturae consortium recusare, mentem carnis inflari, et carnis ipsius nescire mensuram. Quid absurdius, quam nescire qui sis, affectare quod non sis? Aut quid imprudentius, quam quod futurum scias, id cum acciderit, ferre non posse? Natura ipsa nos revocat, et ab hujuscemodi moeroribus quadam sui consolatione subducit. Quis est enim tam gravis luctus, aut tam acerbus dolor, in quo non interdum relaxetur animus? Habet hoc natura, ut quamvis homines in tristibus rebus sint; tamen si modo homines sunt, a moerore mentem paulisper abducant. 5. Fuisse etiam quidam feruntur populi, qui ortus hominum lugerent, obitusque celebrarent. Nec imprudenter; eos enim qui in hoc vitae salum venissent, moerendos putabant: eos vero qui ex istius mundi procellis et fluctibus emersissent, non injusto gaudio prosequendos arbitrabantur. Nos quoque ipsi natales dies defunctorum obliviscimur, et eum quo obierunt diem, celebri solemnitate renovamus. 6. Non est ergo gravis subeundus moeror secundum naturam; ne aut excellentiorem aliquam naturae exceptionem nobis arrogare videamur, aut communem recusare. Etenim mors aequalis est omnibus, indiscreta pauperibus, inexcepta divitibus. Et ideo licet per unius peccatum, in omnes tamen pertransivit (Rom. V, 18); ut quem generis non refugimus auctorem, non refugiamus et mortis: et sit nobis sicut per unum mors, ita per unum etiam resurrectio; nec recusemus aerumnam, ut perveniamus ad gratiam: Venit enim, 1137 ut legimus, Christus salvum facere, quod perierat (Luc. XIX, 10): et ut non solum vivorum, sed etiam mortuorum dominetur (Rom. XIV, 9).

Lapsus sum in Adam, de paradiso ejectus in Adam, mortuus in Adam; quomodo revocet, nisi me in Adam invenerit, ut in illo culpae obnoxium, morti debitum, ita in Christo justificatum (S. Aug. de Pecc. orig., ca)? Si ergo debitum est mortis, solutio debet esse tolerabilis. Sed hic locus posterioribus partibus reservandus. 7. Nunc propositum est asserere mortem graviori non debere esse moerori, quod eum natura ipsa respuat. Denique Lyciorum feruntur esse praecepta, quae viros jubeant mulierum vestem induere, si moerori indulgeant; eo quod mollem et effeminatum judicaverint in viro luctum. Deforme est enim eos qui pro fide, pro religione, pro patria, pro aequitate judicii, atque intentione virtutis obvium morti debent pectus offerre, moerere in alio gravius, quod in se, si causa exegerit, sit expetendum. Nam quemadmodum potes in te non refugere, quod impatientius alii doleas accidisse? Depone moerorem, si potes: include, si non potes. 8. Aut absorbendus omnis, aut premendus est dolor. Cur enim moestitiam tuam non ratio potius, quam dies leniat? Non quod oblitteratura est temporis series, melius prudentia mitigabit. Quin etiam hoc ipsum irreligiosum puto erga ipsorum memoriam, quos dolemus amissos; ut oblivisci eorum malimus, quam consolatione mulceri: aut cum horrore reminisci, quam meminisse cum gratia: recordationem timere, quorum imago debeat esse voluptati: diffidere potius quam sperare de meritis defunctorum: et poenae addictos, quam immortalitati debitos, quos dilexeris, aestimare. 9. Sed dicis: Quos diligebamus, amisimus. Nonne haec nobis cum ipso mundo elementisque communia sunt; quia ad tempus credita in perpetuum tenere non possumus? Gemit terra sub aratris, imbribus caeditur, tempestate concutitur, stringitur frigore, sole torretur: ut fructus annuos feta parturiat: et cum se vario flore vestierit, proprio exuitur et spoliatur ornatu. Quantos haec raptores habet? Nec fructum suum queritur amissum, quem ideo generavit, ut amitteret: nec imposterum negat, quem sibi meminit auferendum. 10. Coelum ipsum non semper stellarum micantium globis fulget, quibus quasi quibusdam insignitur coronis. Non semper ortu lucis albescit, radiis solis irrutilat: sed assiduis vicibus ille quidam mundi vultus gratissimus, humenti noctium caligat horrore. Quid gratius luce? quid sole jacundius? quae quotidie occidunt;

1138 decessisse tamen haec nobis non moleste ferimus, quia eum redire praesumimus. Doceris in his quam in tuis debeas exhibere patientiam. Si superiora tibi occidunt, nec dolori sunt; cur si occiderint humana, doleantur? 11. Sit tamen patiens dolor, sit in tristibus modus, qui exigitur in secundis. An si immoderate gaudere non convenit, lugere convenit? Non enim mediocre malum est immoderatio doloris, aut metus mortis. Quantos ad laqueum impulit, armavit ad gladium; ut in eo ipso amentiam suam proderent, mortem non ferentes, et mortem appetentes: et quod pro malo fugerent, pro remedio adsciscerent? Qui quoniam consentaneum naturae suae ferre ac perpeti nequiverunt, contrarium voto incidunt; ut ab his in perpetuum separentur, quos sequi desideraverint. Sed haec rara; quoniam natura ipsa revocat, etsi praecipitet amentia. 12. Illud vero frequens in mulieribus, ut clamores publicos serant, quasi metuant ne earum ignoretur aerumna: ut illuviem vestis affectent, quasi in ea sit sensus dolendi: ut impexum sordibus immadident caput: ut postremo, quod plerisque in locis vulgo fieri solet, discisso amictu, diloricata veste, secreti pudoris nuda prostituant, quasi ipsum lenocinentur pudorem, quia pudoris sui praemia perdiderunt. Sic procaces oculi provocantur, ut concupiscant, ut amare incipiant membra nudata: quae si non aspicerent, non amarent. Atque utinam sordidata illa tegumenta corporis non speciem, sed mentem obnuberent! Latet plerumque sub tristi amictu mentis lascivia: et deformis horror vestis obtexitur; ut secreta petulantium tegantur animorum. 13. Satis pie virum luget, quae servat pudorem, non deserit fidem. Haec bene defunctis officia impenduntur, ut vivant in mentibus, in affectibus perseverent. Non amisit virum, quae exhibet castitatem: non est viduata conjugio, quae non mutavit nomen mariti. Nec tu perdidisti haeredem, quae adjuvas cohaeredem: sed pro successore corruptibilium, mutasti consortem immortalium. Habes qui tibi repraesentet haeredem: solve pauperi, quod debetur haeredi; ut non solum maternae aut paternae senectutis, sed etiam vitae propriae sit superstes. Plus successori tuo relinquis, si portio ejus non ad luxum praesentium proficiat, sed ad pretium futurorum. 14. Sed desideramus amissos. Duo sunt enim quae maxime angunt, aut desiderium eorum, quos amiserimus, sicut meo exemplo metior: aut quod eos vitae suavitate privatos, creptos laboris sui fructibus arbitremur. Tenera enim 1139 amoris est titillatio, quae improvisum affectum excitat, ut sedandi magis, quam excludendi doloris facultas relinquatur: simul quia pium videtur desiderare quod amiseris, et specie virtutis adolescit infirmitas. 15. Sed cur tu putes patientiorem illam esse debere, quae dilectum ad peregrina dimiserit, et militiae gratia, vel susceptae administrationis officio, vel negotiandi usu transfretasse compererit; quam te qui non fortuito arbitrio derelinqueris, aut studio pecuniae, sed lege naturae? At recuperandi tibi interclusa spes: quasi cuiquam certa sit redeundi. Et plerumque dubia plus fatigant, ubi periculi metus integer, graviusque est timere, ne acciderit, quam tolerare quod jam noveris accidisse. Aliud enim summam formidinis coacervat, aliud finem exspectat doloris. 16. An dominis jus est, quo decreverint, transferre mancipia, Deo non est? Sed non suppetit exspectare remeantem; suppetit tamen praecedentem sequi. Et certe brevis vitae usus nec illi multum videtur eripuisse, qui ante praecessit: nec te differre diutius, qui remanseris. 17. Quod si desiderium tuum mitigare non possis; nonne tamen videtur indignum pro desiderii tui studio rerum ordinem velle converti? Amantium ardentiora utique desideria sunt, et tamen necessitatis contuitu temperantur: et si dolent deseri, lugere tamen non solent: destituti amare impatientius erubescunt. Ita patientia desiderii plus probatur. 18. Quid autem de his loquar, qui defunctos putant vitae suavitate privari?

Nulla potest esse jucunditas inter has vitae nostrae amaritudines aut dolores, quae vel ex corporis ipsius infirmitate, vel extrinsecus accidentium incommoditate generantur. Anxii enim semper, et ad ipsa laetiorum vota suspensi, quodam fluctuamus incerto, sperantes dubia pro certis, incommoda pro secundis, caduca pro solidis: nihil habentes potestatis in arbitrio, nihil firmitatis in voto. At si aliquid contra voluntatem acciderit, perditos nos putamus; plusque adversorum dolore frangimur, quam secundorum fructu potimur. Quibus igitur carent bonis, qui magis eripiuntur incommodis? 19. Valetudo, credo, bona plus adjuvat, quam affligit mala: aut opulentia plus delectat, quam egestas afficit: aut filiorum magis amabilis gratia, quam lugubris amissio: aut adolescentia jucundior, quam senectus tristior. Quam plerumque suorum taedet votorum et optati poenitet; ut doleat impetratum, quod non impetrare metuebat. Exsilia vero, et caeterarum poenarum acerbitates, quae potest compensare patria? quae voluptates? Quae etiam cum adsunt; debilitantur tamen, aut non utendi affectu, aut amittendi metu. 20. Esto tamen: maneat inoffensus, immunis a doloribus, perpes in voluptatibus vitae cursus aerummis, utique malum non est, quae libertatem restituit, excludit dolorem. 22. Hinc igitur nobis adoriendus disputandi locus mortem malum non esse; quia aerumnarum omnium malorumque perfugium est, et fida statio securitatis, ac portus quietis. Nam quid in hac vita non experimur adversi? Quas non procellas, tempestatesque perpetimur? quibus non exagitamur incommodis? cujus parcitur meritis? 23. Sanctus patriarcha Israel profugus patria, fratre, parentibus, domum mutavit exsilio (Gen. XXVIII, 5), stuprum filiae (Gen. XXXIV, 2), generi necem flevit (Gen. XLIX, 5), famen pertulit, sepulturam defunctus amisit; transferri enim ossa sua, ne vel mortuus requiesceret, obsecravit. 24. Sanctus Joseph odia fratrum, insidias invidorum, servulorum obsequia, mercatorum imperia (Genes. XXXVII, 4 et seq.), dominae petulantiam, mariti inscitiam, carceris quoque est expertus aerumnam (Gen. XXXIX, 12 et seq.). 25. Sanctus David filios amisit duos: unum incestum (II Reg. XIII, 29), alterum parricidam (II Reg. XVIII, 14). Hos habuisse pudoris est, doloris est perdidisse. Amisit et tertium, quem amabat, parvulum. Hunc viventem adhuc flevit, mortuum non desideravit. Sic enim legimus (II Reg. XII, 18) quod, aegrotante puero, deprecabatur David Dominum pro eo, et jejunavit, et in cilicio jacuit, et astantibus majoribus natu, ut excitarent eum de terra, nec surgendum sibi, nec coenandum putavit. Ubi vero defunctum puerum comperit surrexit de terra, lavit illico, unctus est, vestimenta mutavit, adoravit Dominum, cibum sumpsit (Ibid., 20). Cum haec miranda pueris suis viderentur, respondit eis recte se, infante vivente, jejunasse et plorasse; quia jure arbitrabatur Dominum posse misereri, nec dubitandum quod vitam posset servare viventis, qui posset vivificare defunctos: jam vero, obita morte, quid jejunaret, qui jam non posset reducere mortuum exanimemque revocare: Ego, inquit, ibo ad eum: ipse autem non revertetur ad me (Ib. 23).

1140 humanae; quid tamen commodi consequi potest anima in istiusmodi corporis inclusa compagibus, et quibusdam membrorum angustiis coarctata? Si caro nostra carcerem fugit, si detestatur omne quidquid evagandi facultatem negat; quae utique parvis ultra se audiendi videndique excurrere videtur sensibus: quanto magis anima nostra corporeum istud evadere gestit ergastulum, quae motu aereo libera, nescimus quo vadat, aut unde veniat (Joan. III, 8)! 21. Scimus tamen quod corpori supervivat, et ea, jam depositis proprii sensus repagulis expedita, libero cernat obtutu, quae ante sita in corpore non videbat. Quod exemplo dormientium possumus aestimare (quorum animi velut sepulto quieti corpore, ad altiora se subrigunt, et renuntiant corpori) rerum absentium, vel etiam coelestium visiones. Ergo si mors carnis ex saeculi nos absolvit

1141 26. O maximum solatium desiderantis! O verum sapientis judicium! O miram sapientiam servientis! ut nemo sibi adversi aliquid

accidisse indigne ferat, et contra meritum suum se queratur afflictum. Quis enim tu es, qui de tuo merito ante pronunties? Cur praevenire desideras cognitorem? Cur eripis sententiam judicaturo? Nec sanctis istud permissum est, nec a sanctis impune umquam est usurpatum. David se propterea flagellatum suo carmine confitetur: Ecce ipsi peccatores et abundantes in saeculo, obtinuerunt divitias. Ergo sine causa justificavi cor meum, et lavi inter innocentes manus meas: et fui flagellatus tota die, et index meus in matutinum (Ps. LXXII, 12 et seq.). 27. Petrus quoque quamvis plenus fide devotionis; tamen quia nondum conscius nostrae infirmitatis praesumptive dixerat Domino: Animam meam pro te ponam (Joan. XIII, 37); tentationem praesumptionis antequam tertio gallus cantaret incurrit (Joan. XVIII, 27). Licet illa tentatio documentum fuerit ad salutem; ut discamus non contemnere carnis infirmitatem, ne contemnendo tentemur. Si Petrus tentatus est, quis praesumat, quis astruat se non posse tentari? Atque haud dubie pro nobis tentatus est Petrus, ut in fortiore non esset tentamenti periculum: sed in illo disceremus quemadmodum in persecutionibus resistentes, etsi vitae studio tentaremur; tentationis tamen aculeum patientiae lacrymis vinceremus. 28. Idem tamen David, ne quem fortassis Scripturarum tenacem moveat factorum diversitas: idem, inquam, David parricidam mortuum flevit, qui non fleverat innocentem. Denique cum ploraret et lugeret, dixit: Filius meus Abessalon, filius meus Abessalon; quis dabit mihi mortem pro te (II Reg. XVIII, 33)? Non solus ergo fletur Abessalon, fletur parricida, fletur Ammon (II Reg. XIII, 36). Non solum fletur incestus, sed etiam vindicatur: alter contemptu regni, alter fratris exsilio. Fletur sceleratus, non fletur dilectus. Quae causa? quae ratio? Non mediocris igitur in prudentibus deliberatio, sapientibus confirmatio; magna enim prudentiae in tanta factorum diversitate constantia, una fides. Et illos mortuos flevit, et flendum infantem mortuum non putavit; illos enim sibi periisse credebat, hunc resurrecturum sperabat. 29. Sed de resurrectione posterius, nunc ad proposita revertamur. Praemisimus enim etiam sanctos viros gravia in hoc mundo et multa perpessos sine suffragatione meritorum, cum aerumna laborum. Unde regressus ad se David, in posterioribus dicit: Memento, Domine, quia pulvis sumus, homo tamquam foenum, dies ejus (Ps. CII, 15); et alibi: Homo vanitati similis factus est, dies ejus sicut umbra praetereunt (Ps. CXLIII, 4). Quid enim nobis

1142 miserius, qui tamquam spoliati et nudi projicimur in hanc vitam, corpore fragili, corde lubrico, imbecillo animo, anxii ad sollicitudines, desidiosi ad labores, proni ad voluptates? 30. Non nasci igitur longe optimum, secundum sancti Salomonis sententiam. Ipsum enim etiam ii qui sibi visi sunt in philosophia excellere secuti sunt. Nam ipse illis anterior, nostris posterior, ita in Ecclesiaste locutus est: Et laudavi ego omnes defunctos qui jam mortui sunt, magis quam viventes, quicumque vivunt usque adhuc. Et optimus super hos duos, qui nondum natus est, et qui non vidit hoc opus malum, quod factum est sub sole. Et vidi ego universum laborem, et omnem virtutem operis hujus; quia aemulatio viro ab altero ejus. Et quidem hoc vanitas, et praesumptio spiritus (Eccles. IV, 2 et seq.). 31. Et quis hoc dixit, nisi ille qui sapientiam poposcit et impetravit (Sap. VII, 7); ut sciret compositionem orbis terrarum, et virtutem elementorum, anni cursus, et stellarum dispositiones, non ignoraret naturas animalium, et iras colligeret bestiarum, vim ventorum, et cogitationes hominum deprehenderet? Quem igitur non latuerunt coelestia, quemadmodum laterent mortalia? Qui cogitationem mulieris investigavit sibi infantem vindicantis alienum (III Reg. III, 27), qui naturas animalium, quas non acceperat, divina tamen gratia aspirante cognovit (Sap. VII, 20): hic de suae conditione naturae, quam in se expertus est, errare aut mentiri potuit? 32. Sed non solus hoc sensit, etsi solus expressit. Legerat sanctum dixisse Job: Pereat dies ille, in quo natus sum (Job. III, 3); et cognoverat nasci malorum omnium esse principium: et ideo diem quo natus est, perire optavit; ut tolleretur origo incommodorum: et optavit perire diem generationis suae; ut diem resurrectionis acciperet. Audierat etiam Salomon dixisse patrem suum: Notum fac mihi, Domine, finem meum, et numerum, dierum meorum; ut sciam quid desit mihi (Ps. XXXVIII, 5). Noverat enim David non posse id quod perfectum est, hic comprehendi, et ideo ad ea quae sunt futura, properabat. Nunc enim ex parte scimus, et ex parte cognoscimus: tunc autem id quod perfectum est, poterit comprehendi; cum revelata facie nobis speculandae majestatis aeternitatisque divinae coeperit relucere non umbra, sed veritas (I Cor. XIII, 12). 33. Nemo tamen festinaret ad finem, nisi vitae istius fugeret incommoditatem. Et ideo etiam David quare ad finem festinet, exposuit dicens: Ecce veteres posuisti dies meos, et habitudo mea tamquam nihil ante te: verumtamen universa vanitas, omnis homo vivens (Ps. XXXVIII, 6). Quid igitur moramur

1143 fugere vanitatem? aut quid nos delectat in hoc saeculo vane conturbari, thesaurum pecuniarum condere, et ignorare cui congregamus haeredi? Petamus amoveri a nobis plagas, eripi nos ex insipienti saeculo, carere peregrinatione diuturna, ad illam redire patriam et naturalem domum. In hac enim terra advenae sumus atque peregrini (Ephes. II, 19): remigrandum eo, unde descendimus: ambiendum et obsecrandum non perfunctorie, sed obnixe; ut a dolis et ab iniquitate loquacium liberemur. Et ille qui remedium noverat, prolongatum tamen suum ingemit incolatum, et cum peccatoribus et iniquis se habitare deplorat (Ps. CXIX, 5). Quid ego faciam, qui et peccatum habeo, et ignoro remedium? 34. Hieremias quoque quod generatus sit, et ipse deplorat his verbis, dicens: Heu me, mater! ut quid me peperisti virum causam dicentem judicii in omni terra? Non profui, neque profuit mihi quisquam: virtus mea defecit (Jerem. XV, 10). Si igitur sancti viri vitam fugiunt, quorum vita etsi nobis utilis, sibi tamen inutilis aestimatur; quid nos facere oportet, qui nec aliis prodesse possumus, et nobis vitam hanc quasi fenebrem pecuniam usurario quodam cumulo gravescentem onerari in dies peccatorum aere sentimus? 35. Quotidie morior, Apostolus dicit (I Cor. XV, 31). Melius utique, quam illi, qui meditationem mortis philosophiam esse dixerunt: illi enim studium praedicarunt, hic usum ipsum mortis exercuit. Et illi quidem propter se: Paulus autem ipse perfectus moriebatur non propter suam, sed propter nostram infirmitatem. Quid autem est mortis meditatio, nisi quaedam corporis et animae segregatio; quia mors ipsa non aliud quam corporis atque animae secessio definitur? Sed hoc secundum communem opinionem. 36. Secundum Scripturas autem triplicem esse mortem accipimus. Una est cum morimur peccato, Deo vivimus (Rom. VI, 10). Beata igitur mors, quae culpae refuga, Domino dedita, a mortali nos separat, immortali nos consecrat. Alia mors est vitae hujus excessus, qua mortuus est patriarcha Abraham, patriarcha David, et sepulti sunt cum patribus suis; cum anima nexu corporis liberatur. Tertia mors est, de qua dictum est: Dimitte mortuos sepelire mortuos suos (Matth. VIII, 22). Ea morte non solum caro, sed etiam anima moritur: Anima enim quae peccaverit, ipsa morietur (Ezech. XVIII, 4). Moritur enim Domino, non naturae infirmitate, sed culpae. Sed haec mors non perfunctio hujus est vitae, sed lapsus erroris. 37. Una ergo est mors spiritalis, alia naturalis, tertia poenalis. Sed non quae naturalis, eadem poenalis; non enim pro poena Dominus, sed pro remedio dedit mortem. Denique Adae peccanti praescriptum est aliud pro poena, aliud 1144 pro remedio; pro poena, cum dicitur: Quoniam audisti vocem uxoris tuae, et manducasti de ligno, de quo praeceperam tibi ab eo solo ne manducares, maledicta terra in operibus tuis: in tristitia manducabis fructum ejus omnibus diebus vitae tuae. Spinas et tribulos germinabit tibi, et edes pabulum agri. Cum sudore vultus tui manducabis panem tuum, donec revertaris in terram, de qua assumptus es (Gen. III, 17 et seq.). 38. Habes poenarum ferias, quia adversus spinas saeculi hujus et sollicitudines mundi, voluptatesque divitiarum, quae Verbum excludunt, poenam includunt (Luc.

VIII, 12); mors pro remedio data est, quasi finis malorum. Non enim dixit: Quoniam audisti vocem mulieris, reverteris in terram; haec enim esset poenalis sententia, quemadmodum est illa: Maledicta terra spinas et tribulos germinabit tibi; sed dixit: Manducabis panem tuum in sudore, donec revertaris in terram. Vides mortem magis metam esse nostrarum poenarum, qua cursus hujus vitae inciditur? 39. Ergo mors non solum malum non est, sed etiam bonum est. Denique pro bono quaeritur, sicut scriptum est: Quaerent homines mortem et non invenient eam (Apoc. IX, 6). Quaerent enim illi qui dicturi sunt montibus: Cadite super nos, et collibus: Operite nos (Luc. XXIII, 30). Quaeret etiam anima illa, quae peccat. Quaerit dives ille positus in inferno, qui vult digito Lazari refrigerari linguam suam (Luc. XVI, 24). 40. Videmus itaque quod et mors haec lucrum est, et vita poena est. Unde et Paulus ait: Mihi vivere Christus est, et mori lucrum (Phil. I, 21). Quid est Christus, nisi mors corporis, spiritus vitae? Et ideo commoriamur cum eo, ut vivamus cum eo. Sit quidam quotidianus usus in nobis, affectusque moriendi; ut per illam, quam diximus, segregationem a corporeis cupiditatibus anima nostra se discat extrahere, et tamquam in sublimi locata, quo terrenae adire libidines, et eam sibi glutinare non possint, suscipiat mortis imaginem, ne poenam mortis incurrat. Repugnat enim lex carnis legi mentis, et eam legi erroris addicit, sicut Apostolus revelavit, dicens: Video enim legem carnis meae repugnantem legi mentis meae, et captivantem me in lege peccati (Rom. VII, 23). Omnes impugnamur, omnes sentimus: sed non omnes liberamur. Et ideo infelix ego homo, nisi remedium quaeram. 41. Sed quod remedium? Quis me liberabit de corpore mortis hujus? Gratia Dei per Jesum Christum Dominum nostrum (Ibid., 24, 25). Habemus medicum, sequamur remedium. Remedium nostrum Christi gratia est, et corpus mortis corpus est nostrum. Ergo peregrinemur a corpore, ne peregrinemur a Christo: etsi in corpore sumus, tamen quae sunt corporis non sequamur, nec 1145 deseramus jura naturae, sed dona gratiae praeoptemus: Dissolvi enim, et cum Christo esse multo melius: permanere autem in carne magis necessarium propter vos (Phil. I, 23, 24). 42. Sed non omnibus necessarium, Domine Jesu: non mihi, qui nulli utilis sum; nam mihi lucrum est mori, ne plura peccem. Lucrum mihi est mori, qui ipso libro quo alios consolor, quasi vehementiore monitore ad desiderium amissi fratris impellor; quoniam me ejus non sinit oblivisci. Nunc magis amo, et vehementius desidero. Desidero cum loquor, desidero cum relego; et ideo hoc potius scribendum arbitror, ne quando ab ejus recordatione divellar. Quod non contra Scripturas facio, sed cum Scripturis sentio; ut patientius doleam, impatientius desiderem. 43. Praestitisti mihi, frater, ne mortem timerem, atque utinam moriatur anima mea in anima tua; hoc enim sibi Balaam pro maximo bono optat, donatus Spiritu prophetandi: Moriatur, inquit, anima mea in animis justorum, et fiat semen meum sicut semen istorum (Num. XXIII, 10). Et vere hoc secundum prophetiam optat; qui enim viderat ortum Christi, vidit ejus triumphale, vidit mortem, vidit in eo perennem hominum resurrectionem; et ideo mori non timet resurrecturus. Non moriatur ergo anima mea in peccato, neque peccatum in se recipiat: sed moriatur in anima justi: ut ejus recipiat aequitatem. Denique qui moritur in Christo, fit ejus gratiae particeps in lavacro. 44. Non ergo formidabilis mors, nec amara egentibus, nec gravior divitibus, nec injusta senioribus, nec ignava fortibus, nec perpetua fidelibus, nec improvisa sapientibus. Quam multi enim vitam solo mortis titulo consecrarunt, quantos vivere puduit, mori profuit? Morte unius plerumque accepimus maximos populos liberatos: morte imperatoris fugatos exercitus hostium, quos vivus vincere nequivisset. 45. Morte martyrum religio defensa, cumulata fides, Ecclesia roborata est: vicerunt mortui, victi persecutores sunt. Itaque quorum vitam nescimus, horum mortem celebramus. Unde et David prophetice gloriatus in suae mentis excessu: Pretiosa, inquit, in conspectu Domini mors sanctorum ejus (Psal.

CXV, 15). Mortem maluit praeferre, quam vitam. Ipsa mors martyrum praemium vitae est. Morte etiam inimicorum odia solvuntur. 46. Quid plura? Unius morte mundus redemptus est. Potuit enim Christus non mori, si voluisset: sed neque refugiendam mortem quasi ignavam putavit, neque melius nos quam 1146 moriendo servasset. Itaque mors ejus vita est omnium. Morte ejus signamur, mortem ejus orantes annuntiamus, mortem ejus offerentes praedicamus: mors ejus victoria est, mors ejus sacramentum est, mors ejus annua solemnitas mundi est. Quid praeterea de ejus morte dicamus, cum divino probemus exemplo, quia immortalitatem mors sola quaesivit, atque ipsa se mors redemit? Non igitur moerenda mors, quae causa salutis est publicae: non fugienda mors, quam Dei Filius non dedignatus est, non refugit. Non solvendus ordo naturae; quod enim commune est omnibus, exceptum in singulis esse non potest. 47. Et mors quidem in natura non fuit, sed conversa est in naturam; non enim a principio Deus mortem instituit, sed pro remedio dedit. Et consideremus ne videatur esse contrarium. Nam si bonum est mors, cur scriptum est, quia Deus mortem non fecit: sed malitia hominum mors introivit in orbem terrarum (Sap. I, 13; II, 24). Revera enim mors divino operi necessaria non fuit, cum in paradiso positis bonorum omnium jugis successus afflueret; sed praevaricatione damnata in labore diuturno, gemituque intolerando vita hominum coepit esse miserabilis: debuitque dari finis malorum, ut mors restitueret, quod vita amiserat. Immortalitas enim oneri potius quam usui est, nisi aspiret gratia. 48. Et si bene discutias, non naturae mors ista est, sed malitiae; manet enim natura, malitia moritur. Resurgit quod fuit: atque utinam ut jam peccandi liberum, ita vacuum culpae prioris! Sed hoc ipsum indicio est mortem non esse naturae, quia iidem erimus, qui fuimus. Itaque aut peccatorum nostrorum supplicia pendemus, aut bene gestorum gratiam consequemur. Resurget enim natura eadem, jam stipendiis mortis honoratior. Denique mortui, qui in Christo sunt, resurgent primi: deinde et nos qui vivimus, inquit, simul cum illis rapiemur in nubibus obviam Christo in aera; et ita semper cum Domino erimus (I Thess. IV, 15, 16). Illi primi, viventes autem secundi. Illi cum Jesu, viventes per Jesum. Illis dulcior vita post requiem: viventibus etsi grata compendia, tamen ignota remedia. 49. Nihil est igitur quod in morte timeamus, nihil quod debeamus dolere; si aut naturae repetenti vita, quae accepta est, rependatur: aut petenti impendatur officio, in quo religionis cultus, aut virtutis usus est. Neque enim quisquam sibi, ut sic maneret, optavit. Joanni promissum aestimatum est, sed non est creditum. Verba tenemus, sententiam derivamus. Ipse in libro negat sibi, quod non moreretur, esse promissum; ne quem vana spes exemplo incesseret.

1147 Quod si id velle spes insolens; quanto insolentius, quod non praeter modum acciderit, ultra modum dolere? 50. Gentiles plerumque se consolantur viri, vel de communitate aerumnae, vel de jure naturae, vel de immortalitate animae. Quibus utinam sermo constaret, ac non miseram animam in varia portentorum ludibria formasque transfunderent! Quid igitur nos facere oportet, quorum stipendium resurrectio est? cujus gratiam quoniam negare plerique non possunt, fidem abnuunt. Et ideo eam non uno argumento aliquo, sed pluribus modis, ut possumus, astruamus. 51. Et quidem omnia aut usu, aut ratione, aut exemplo, aut eo quia decorum sit ea esse, ideo esse creduntur; et ad fidem singula suffragantur. Usus, quia movemur: ratio, quia quod movet, virtutis alterius convenit aestimari: exemplum, quia generavit ager fruges, et ideo generaturum esse praesumimus: decorum, quia et ubi fructum non putamus, decere tamen credimus, ut virtutis opera minime deseramus. 52. Singula igitur singulis astruuntur. Tribus tamen evidentius colligitur resurrectionis fides, quibus omnia comprehenduntur: ratione, universitatis exemplo, testimonio rei gestae; quia plurimi surrexerunt. Ratio evidens est; quia cum omnis vitae nostrae usus in corporis animaeque consortio sit, resurrectio autem aut boni actus praemium habeat, aut poenam improbi; necesse sit corpus resurgere, cujus actus expenditur. Quomodo enim in judicium vocabitur anima sine corpore, cum de suo et corporis contubernio ratio praestanda sit? 53. Resurrectio omnibus attributa est: sed ideo difficile creditur, quia non nostrum meritum, sed Dei munus est. Prima igitur resurrectionis fides usus est mundi, rerumque status omnium, generationum series, successionum vices, obitus ortusque signorum, diei et noctis occasus, eorumque quotidie tamquam rediviva successio. Temperamenti quoque genitalis hujus terrae aliter ratio subesse non posset, nisi humoris ipsius quo omnia terrena generantur, quantum diurni solis aestus excoqueret, tantum rore nocturno dispositio divina repararet. Nam quid de fructibus loquar? Nonne tibi videntur occidere, cum decidunt: resurgere, cum revirescunt? Quod satum est, resurgit: quod mortuum est, resurgit; et in eadem genera, in easdem species reformatur. Hos terra primum reddidit fructus, in his primum natura nostra speciem resurrectionis imitata est. 54. Quid dubitas de corpore corpus resurgere? Granum seritur, granum resurgit: pomum decidit, pomum resurgit; sed flore granum induitur, folliculoque vestitur: Et hoc mortale

1148 oportet induere immortalitatem, et hoc corruptibile induere incorruptionem (I Cor. XV, 53). Flos resurrectionis immortalitas est, flos resurrectionis incorruptio est. Quid enim uberius quiete perpetua? quid locupletius securitate diuturna? Hic est multiplex fructus, cujus proventu pullulat fecundior hominum natura post mortem. 55. Sed miraris quemadmodum putrefacta solidentur, dispersa coeant, absumpta reparentur, non miraris quemadmodum semina vapore et compressu terrae soluta viridescant. Nam utique etiam ipsa terreno coalitu putrefacta solvuntur, et cum occaecata et mortua soli genitalis succus animaverit, quodam calore vitali spiritum quemdam herbae viridantis exhalant. Deinde paulatim teneram spicae adolescentis aetatem culmo erigit, et vaginis quibusdam natura tamquam sedula mater includit; ne pubescentem glacies adurat aspera, atque a nimio solis defendat ardore: frugem quoque ipsam adhuc quasi primis erumpentem cunabulis, mox adultam ne pluvia decutiat, ne aura dispergat, ne avium minorum morsus interimat, vallo aristarum sepire consuevit. 56. Quid igitur miraris si homines, quos acceperit, terra restituat; cum seminum corpora quaecumque susceperit, vivificet, erigat, vestiat, muniat, atque defendat? Desine ergo dubitare quod depositum generis humani terrae fides reddat, quae commendata sibi semina usurario quodam fenore multiplicata restituat. Nam quid de generibus arborum loquar, quae posito surgunt de semine, fructusque resolutos rediviva fecunditate resuscitant, et formae veteri atque imagini suae reddunt, multasque aetates quaedam arborum corpora reparata transmittunt; ut ipsa durando vincant saecula? Putrescere videmus acinum, vitem resurgere: surculus inseritur, arbor renascitur. An de reparandis arboribus divina est providentia, de hominibus nulla cura? Et qui ea quae ad usus hominum dedit, perire non passus est; hominem perire patietur, quem ad imaginem sui fecit? 57. Sed incredibile tibi videtur, ut mortui reviviscant: Insipiens tu ipse quod seminas, nonne prius moritur, ut vivificetur (Ibid., 36)? Sere quemlibet fructum arentem, resuscitatur. Sed habet succum. Et nostrum corpus habet sanguinem suum, habet humorem suum. Hic nostri succus est corporis. Unde illud quoque explosum arbitror, quod arentem surculum quidam reviviscere negant, idque ad praejudicium carnis derivare nituntur. Non enim caro arida, cum caro omnis e limo sit, limus in humore, humor e terris. Denique multa gignentia quamvis jugi serenitate humo arida arenosaque nascuntur; quoniam ipsa sibi terra humorem sufficit.

1149 Num igitur in hominibus terra degenerat, quae omnia regenerare consuevit? Unde claret non esse dubitandum quod secundum naturam magis, quam contra naturam est; ex natura enim est resurgere nascentia omnia, contra naturam est interire. 58. Sequitur illud quod gentiles plerumque perturbat, quomodo fieri possit ut quos mare absorbuerit, ferae dilaceraverint, bestiae devoraverint, terra restituat. Quo ita demum veniatur necesse est, ut non de fide resurrectionis, sed de parte dubitetur. Esto enim ut laceratorum corpora non resurgant, resurgunt caeteri: nec resurrectio destruitur, si conditio excipitur. Miror tamen cur vel de his dubitandum putent, quasi non omnia quae ex terris sunt, in terram redeant, et in terram resolvantur (Eccles. III, 20). Mare quoque ipsum quaecumque corpora humana demerserit, vicinis exspuit unda plerumque littoribus. Quod ni ita esset, difficile, credo, Deo foret dispersa connectere, dissipata sociare; cui mundus obtemperat, muta obsequuntur elementa, servit natura: quasi non majoris miraculi sit limum animare quam jungere? 59. Avis in regione Arabiae, cui nomen est phoenix, redivivo suae carnis humore reparabilis, cum mortua fuerit, reviviscit; solos non credimus homines resuscitari? Atqui hoc relatione crebra, et scripturarum auctoritate cognovimus memoratam avem quingentorum annorum spatia vitalis usus habere praescripta; eamque cum sibi finem vitae adesse praesaga quadam naturae suae aestimatione cognoverit, thecam sibi de thure et myrrha, et caeteris odoribus adornare, completoque opere pariter ac tempore, intrare illo, atque emori: ex cujus humore oriri vermem, paulatimque eum in avis ejusdem figuram concrescere, usumque formari, subnixam quoque remigio pennarum, renovatae vitae officia munere pietatis ordiri. Nam thecam illam, vel tumulum corporis, vel incunabulum resurgentis, in qua deficiens occidit, et occidens resurgit, ex Aethiopia in Lycaoniam vehit: atque ita resurrectione avis hujus, locorum incolae completum quingentorum annorum tempus intelligunt. Ergo isti avi quingentesimus resurrectionis annus est, nobis millesimus: illi in hoc saeculo, nobis in consummatione mundi. Plerique etiam opinantur quod avis haec rogum sibi ipsa succendat, et rursus

1150 de favillis suis et cineribus reviviscat. 60. Sed fortasse natura discretior, fidei quoque discretionem videatur afferre: in originem

principiumque hominis procreandi mens nostra redeat. Viri estis, feminae estis quae humana sunt, non ignoratis: et si qui ignoratis, ex nihilo putatis esse, quod nascimur. Quam ex parvo quanti exsurgimus! Et si non exprimimus, intelligitis tamen quid velimus, vel potius quid nolimus dicere. Unde hoc caput, et vultus iste mirabilis, cujus artificem non videmus, opus videmus, in varia officia ususque formatur? Unde forma erectior, status excelsior, faciendi vis, sentiendi vivacitas, gradiendi facultas? Ignota certe nobis sunt naturae organa, sed nota ministeria. Et tu semen fuisti, et tuum corpus semen est resurrecturi. Audi Paulum, et disce quia semen es: Seminatur in corruptione, surget in incorruptione: seminatur in ignobilitate, surget in gloria: seminatur in infirmitate, surget in virtute, seminatur corpus animale, surget corpus spiritale (I Cor. XV, 42 et seq.). Et tu ergo seminaris ut caetera, quid miraris si resurges ut caetera? Sed illa credis, quia vides: ista non credis, quia non vides: Beati qui non viderunt, et crediderunt (Joan. XX, 29). 61. Tamen antequam tempus veniat, nec illa creduntur; non enim omne tempus accommodum ad resuscitanda semina. Alio triticum seminatur, alio nascitur: alio vitis inseritur, alio gemmantia sarmenta pubescunt, luxuriat pampinus, uva formatur: alio plantatur olea, alio velut alvo gravis et onusta prole baccarum, fructus sui ubertate curvescit. Ante vero quam suum cuique tempus adveniat, fetura restrictior est: nec generationis aetatem habet in potestate generandi ipsa, quae generat. Nunc informem situ, nunc fetu nudam, nunc virentem floribus, nunc arentem ipsam omnium cernas parentem. Quae utique vellet omnibus se vestire temporibus, nec umquam aurea segetum aut viridantia pratorum indumenta deponere: ipsa sui egens, et proventuum suorum, quae in alios transfuderit, indotata compendiis. 62. Ergo et nostram resurrectionem et si non credis fide, non credis exemplo, usu es crediturus. Et aliis quidem fructibus, ut viti, oleae, pomisque diversis anni aetas extrema habilis maturandis: nobis quoque mundi consummatio tamquam extremus anni finis accommodam resurgendi praescripsit aetatem. Et bene in consummatione mundi

1151 resurrectio mortuorum est; ne post resurrectionem in hoc malum nobis esset saeculum recidendum. Ideo enim Christus est passus, ut nos ex hoc malo saeculo liberaret; ne iterum nos hujus saeculi tentamenta subruerent et obesset renasci, si renasceremur ad culpam. 63. Et rationem igitur resurrectionis, et tempus tenemus: rationem quia in omnibus sibi fetibus aeque natura respondet, nec in sola hominum successione degenerat: tempus, quia omnia in anni fine generantur. Mundi tempora annus unus est. Et quid mirum si annus unus est, quando dies una est? Una enim die Dominus operarios conduxit ad vineam, dicens: Quid hic statis tota die otiosi (Matth. XX, 6)? 64. Causae originum semina sunt. Semen esse corpus humanum gentium Doctor asseruit (I Cor. XV, 42). Est ergo substantia resurgendi, quando est series seminandi. Quod si substantia aut causa non esset, arduum quisquam putaret Deo unde vellet, vel quomodo vellet, homines regenerare, qui mundum ex nulla materia, nulla substantia esse jussit, et factus est? Coelum aspice, terram intuere. Unde stellarum ignes? unde orbis solis et radii? unde lunae globus? unde montium vertices, dura saxorum, nemorosa silvarum? unde vel diffusus aer, vel infusae vel superfusae aquae? Sed si haec omnia Deus fecit ex nihilo (Ipse enim (Psal. CXLVIII, 5) dixit et facta sunt: ipse mandavit, et creata sunt), cur miremur renasci posse, quod fuerit; cum videamus natum esse, quod non fuit? 65. Illud mirum, quod cum resurrectionem non credant, tamen ne genus pereat hominum, clementi quadam benignitate prospiciunt; et ideo transire ac demigrare in corpora dicunt animas, ne mundus intereat. Sed quid sit difficilius, ipsi asserant, transire animas an redire: sua repetere, an nova quaerere. 66. Sed illi dubitent, qui non didicerunt: nos vero qui legimus Legem, prophetas, apostolos, Evangelium, dubitare fas non est. Quis enim dubitet, cum legit: Et in tempore illo salvabitur omnis plebs tua, quae scripta est in libro: et multi dormientium in terrae fossis, una apertione exsurgent, hi in vitam aeternam, et hi in opprobrium et in confusionem perpetuam: et intelligentes splendebunt ut splendor firmamenti, et ex justis multi sicut stellae in saecula (Dan. XII, 1 et seq.)? Bene itaque dormientium dixit quietem, ut intelligas mortem non esse perpetuam, quae somni vice initur ad tempus, et ad tempus excluditur: melioremque profectum vitae ejus ostendit, quae futura post mortem est, quam ejus quae ante mortem

1152 moerore ac dolore transigitur. Siquidem illa stellis comparatur, haec aerumnae addicitur. 67. Nam quid illa contexam, quae alio loco scripta sunt: Suscitabis me et confitebor tibi? Quid etiam illud, quod Job sanctus vitae istius expertus injurias, et adversa omnia patientia virtutis exsuperans, compensationem sibi malorum praesentium de resurrectione promisit dicens: Suscitabis corpus meum hoc, quod multa mala passum est (Job. XIX, 26)? Esaias quoque resurrectionem populis annuntians, Dominici se nuntium dixit esse responsi; sic enim habes: Os enim Domini locutum est, et dicent die illa (Esai. XXV, 8). Quid igitur os Domini locutum sit populos esse dicturos, in posterioribus declaratur, ubi scriptum est: Propter timorem tuum, Domine, in utero accepimus et parturivimus spiritum salutis tuae, quem effudisti super terram. Cadent qui inhabitant terram, resurgent qui in monumentis sunt (Esai. XXVI, 18): ros enim qui abs te, sanitas est illis, terra vero impiorum peribit. Ambula, populus meus, et intra in recessus tuos. Abscondere aliquantulum, donec transeat ira Dei. 68. Quam bene recessus esse signavit tumulos mortuorum, quibus pauxillulum abscondimur; ut in judicium Dei, quod pro nostris sceleribus jus debitae indignationis assumet, tolerabilius transire possimus! Vivit igitur qui absconditur et quiescit, quasi e medio se subtrahens et recedens; ne eum arctioribus laqueis mundi hujus involvat aerumna, quibus repositam resurrectionis esse laetitiam, sanitatemque corporum solutorum divino rore reparabilem; coelestia oracula propheticis vocibus pollicentur. Et bene ros significatur, quo genitalia omnia terrarum semina suscitantur. Quid igitur mirum si fatiscentis quoque corporis nostri cineres ac favillae pinguedine coelestis roris exuberant, et accepto humore vitali in compaginem suam membrorum nostrorum habitus reformantur? 69. Docet etiam sanctus Ezechiel propheta, et plena expositione describit, quemadmodum arentibus vigor ossibus refundatur, sensus redeat, motus accedat, nervisque redeuntibus, corporis compago rigescat humani: quemadmodum nimis arida renatis ossa visceribus vestiantur, venarumque hiatus, et sanguinis rivulos extentae cutis velamen obducat. In ipsis, dum legimus, propheticis sermonibus humanorum videtur seges corporum rediviva consurgere, atque ipsa spatia diffusa camporum novis videas pullulare seminibus. 70. Quod si veteres sapientes satis hydri dentibus

1153 in regione Thebana inhorruisse armatorum segetem crediderunt: cum utique alterius naturae semina certum sit in naturam verti alteram nequivisse, nec partum suis discordem fudisse seminibus; ut ex serpente homines nascerentur, ut caro ex dentibus gigneretur: quanto magis utique credendum est, quaecumque sunt seminata, in suam naturam resurgere, nec a satione sua segetes discrepare, nec duris mollia, nec mollibus dura viviscere, nec in sanguinem venena converti; sed carnem de carne, os de ossibus, sanguinem de sanguine, humorem de humore reparari. Potestis ergo, gentiles, reformationem negare naturae, qui mutationem potestis asserere? Potestis non credere oraculis, non Evangelio, non prophetiis, qui fabulis inanibus creditis? 71. Sed jam ipsum audiamus prophetam; sic enim ait: Et facta est super me manus Domini, et eduxit me in spiritu Dominus, et posuit me in medio campo, et hic erat plenus ossibus humanis: et circumduxit me per gyrum eorum, et ecce ossa multa valde in facie campi, arida nimis. Et ait ad me: Fili hominis, si vivent ossa ista? Et dixi: Domine tu scis. Et ait ad me: Prophetiza super ossa ista, et dices illis: Ossa arida haec, audite verbum Domini. Haec dicit Dominus ossibus istis: Ecce ego induco in vos spiritum vitae, et dabo in vos nervos, et adducam super vos viscera, et extendam super vos cutem, et dabo Spiritum meum in vos; et vivetis, et scietis quod ego sum Dominus. Et prophetavi sicut mandavit mihi. Et factum est cum prophetarem haec omnia, ecce factus est terrae motus magnus (Ezech. XXXVII, 1 et seq.). 72. Vide nunc quemadmodum et auditum in ossibus, et motum prius ostendat esse, quam vitae spiritus refundatur. Nam et supra ossa arida jubentur audire, quasi sensum habeant audiendi: et hic accessisse eorum unumquodque ad suam compaginem prophetico sermone signatur; sic enim habes: Et accedebant ossa, unumquodque ad suam compaginem. Et vidi, et ecce super illa nervi et viscera nascebantur, et ascendebat super ea cutis desuper, et spiritus in his non erat (Ibid., 7 et seq.). 73. Magna Domini gratia, quod futurae resurrectionis propheta testis adhibetur, ut nos quoque eam illius oculis videremus. Neque enim omnes testes adhiberi poterant, sed in uno omnes testes sumus: quia nec in virum sanctum cadit mendacium, nec in tantum error prophetam. 74. Nec nimus verisimile debet videri, quia jubente Deo, ossa in suam compaginem reformantur; cum utique innumera habeamus exempla, quibus natura rerum coelestibus est obsecuta praeceptis; ut terra pabulum gignere juberetur, et gigneret (Gen. I, 11); ut ad virgae tactum sitientibus populis petra vomeret aquam (Num. XX, 11), atque aestu

1154 torridis miseratione divina undarent fluenta dura saxorum (Exod. IV, 3). Virga in serpentem versa quid aliud indicavit, nisi volente Deo ex insensibilibus sensibilia posse generari? An vero incredibilius putas quod ossa, cum jubentur, accedunt (Ezech. XXXVII, 7); quam quod retrorsum fluenta vertuntur, maria fugiunt? Sic enim propheta testatur; Mare vidit et fugit, Jordanis conversus est retrorsum (Psal. CXIII, 3). Nec super hoc ambigi potest, quod duorum populorum alterius salute, alterius obitu comprobatum est, aquarum cursus stetisse frenatos eosdemque aliis circumfusos, aliis ad mortem refusos, ut alios mergerent, alios reservarent

(Exod. XIV, 22 et seq.). Quid in ipso Evangelio? Nonne ibi probavit Dominus, quod verbo unda mitescat (Matth. VIII, 26), fugentur coeli nubila, cedantflabra ventorum, placidisque littoribus muta Deo famulentur elementa? 75. Sed persequamur caetera, ut quemadmodum spiritu vitae animentur defuncti, surgant jacentes, sepulcra reserentur, possimus advertere. Et ait ad me: Prophetiza, fili hominis, et dic spiritui: Haec dicit Dominus: A quatuor ventis coeli veni, spiritus, et insuffla in mortuos istos, et vivant. Et prophetavi sicut mandavit mihi, et intravit in eos spiritus vitae, et vixerunt, et steterunt in pedibus suis congregatio nimis multa. Et locutus est Dominus ad me, dicens: Fili hominis, ossa haec omnis domus Israel. Ipsi enim dicunt: Arida facta sunt ossa nostra, periit spes nostra, interibimus. Propterea prophetiza et dic: Haec dicit Dominus: Ecce ego aperio vobis monumenta vestra, et educam vos de monumentis vestris in terram Israel, et scietis quod ego sum Dominus, cum aperiam sepulcra vestra, et educam de sepulcris populum meum, et dabo Spiritum meum in vobis, et vivetis, et ponam vos super terram vestram, et scietis quia ego sum Dominus: locutus sum, et faciam, dicit Dominus (Ezech. XXXVII, 9 et seq.). 76. Advertimus quemadmodum vitalis spiritus commercia resumantur, cognovimus quemadmodum dehiscentibus tumulis, mortui suscitentur. An vero mirandum est jussu Domini mortuorum sepulcra reserari, cum tota suis terminis uno tonitruo terra quatiatur, mare suis exundet finibus, idemque suarum cursus refrenet undarum? Denique ille qui credidit quia in momento, in ictu oculi, in novissima tuba (canet enim tuba) mortui resurgent (I Cor. XV, 52); cum primis rapietur in nubibus obviam Christo in aera (I Thess. IV, 16); qui non credidit, relinquetur, et perfidia sua subdet se ipse sententiae. 77. Ostendit tibi Dominus etiam in Evangelio, ut jam ad exempla veniamus, quemadmodum resurgas. Non enim unum Lazarum, sed fidem omnium suscitavit: quod tu si credas, cum legis, mens quoque tua, quae mortua fuerat, in illo Lazaro reviviscit. quid enim sibi vult quod

Dominus ad monumentum accessit, magna voce clamavit: Lazare, exi foras (Joan. XI, 44)? nisi ut

1155 futurae resurrectionis specimen praestaret, exemplum ederet? Cur voce clamavit, quasi spiritu non soleat operari, quasi tacitus non soleat imperare? Sed ut illud ostenderet, quod scriptum est: Quoniam in momento, in ictu oculi, in novissima tuba, et mortui resurgent incorrupti (I Cor. XV, 52); tubarum enim crepitus vocis metitur elatio. Et clamavit: Lazare, exi foras. Cur etiam nomen additur; nisi forte ne alius resuscitatus pro alio videretur, aut fortuita magis resurrectio, quam imperata? 78. Audivit ergo defunctus, et exivit foras de monumento, ligatus pedes et manus institis, et facies ejus orario colligata erat (Joan. XI, 44). Comprehende, si potes, quemadmodum clausis oculis iter carpat, vinctis pedibus gradum dirigat, inseparabili gressu, separabilique progressu. Manebant vincula, nec tenebant: tegebantur oculi, sed videbant. Videbat denique qui resurgebat, qui ambulabat, qui deserebat sepulcrum. Virtute enim divinae praeceptionis operante, natura suum non requirebat officium; et tamquam in excessu posita, non jam suo ordini, sed divino nutui serviebat. Rumpebantur prius mortis quam sepulturae vincula: agebatur priusquam parabatur incessus. 79. Si miraris haec, disce quis imperaverit, ut mirari desinas. Jesus Christus Dei virtus; vita, lux, resurrectio mortuorum: virtus erexit jacentem, vita gressum extulit, lux fugavit tenebras, reparavit obtutum, resurrectio vivendi gratiam reformavit. 80. Fortasse moveat quod Judaei lapidem tollunt, Judaei institas solvunt; ne forte et tu sollicitus sis, quis lapidem de monumento tuo tollat (Ibid., 41). Quasi vero qui spiritum refundere poterat, lapidem removere non poterat: aut vincula rumpere, qui vinctum fecerat ambulare: aut deoperire faciem, qui opertis oculis lumen infuderat: aut findere petram, qui poterat reformare naturam? Sed ut vel oculis suis crederent, qui credere mente nolebant, removent lapidem, vident cadaver, fetorem sentiunt, institas rumpunt. Non possunt negare defunctum, quem aspiciunt resurgentem, vident signa mortis, et vitae munera. Quid si dum conantur, labore ipso emendantur? quid si dum audiunt, vel auribus suis credunt? quid si dum intuentur, vel oculis suis corriguntur? quid si dum rumpunt vincula, mentes suas solvunt? quid si dum Lazarus exuitur, populus liberatur? dum Lazarum abire permittunt, ipsi ad Dominum revertuntur? Denique multi qui venerant ad Mariam, videntes quae facta sunt, crediderunt (Ibid., 45). 81. Nec hoc solum exemplum edidit Dominus

1156 noster Jesus Christus; sed alios quoque resuscitavit, ut nos vel exemplis uberioribus crederemus. Resuscitavit adolescentem fletu viduae matris inflexus, quando accessit et tetigit loculum, dicens: Adolescens, tibi dico surge: et resedit qui erat mortuus, et coepit loqui (Luc. VII, 14). Statim ut audivit, statim resedit, statim locutus est. Alia ergo virtutis gratia, alius ordo naturae. 82. Nam quid de archisynagogi filia loquar, in cujus obitu flebant turbae, tibicines personabant? Etenim ad fidem mortis pompa funeris exhibetur. Quam cito ad vocem Domini convertitur spiritus, redivivum corpus erigitur, cibus sumitur; ut vitae testimonium crederetur. 83. Et quid miremur ad vocem Dei refundi animam, redire ossibus viscera; cum meminerimus prophetici tactu corporis mortuum suscitatum (IV Reg. 13, 21)? Elias oravit, et defunctum suscitavit infantem (III Reg. XVII, 22): Petrus in nomine Christi Tabitham surgere atque ambulare praecepit, et redditam sibi pauperes gratulati crediderunt pro alimentis (Act. IX, 40); et nos adhuc pro salute non credimus? Illi resurrectionem alienam suis lacrymis redemerunt, nos nostram nec Christi credimus passione? Qui cum emitteret spiritum, ut ostenderet pro nostra resurrectione se mortuum, seriem ipsam resurrectionis exercuit; simul enim ut clamans iterum voce magna emisit spiritum; et terra mota est, et petrae scissae sunt, et monumenta aperta sunt, et multa corpora sanctorum dormientium resurrexerunt, et exeuntes de monumento post resurrectionem ejus venerunt in sanctam civitatem, et multis apparuerunt (Matth. XXVII, 51, 52). 84. Si haec facta sunt, cum emitteret spiritum, cur incredibilia putamus, cum redire coeperit ad judicium? praesertim cum haec resurrectio documentum illius resurrectionis, et futurae sit veritatis exemplum: minus autem exemplum est, quam veritas. Quis igitur in Domini passione monumenta aperuit, manum resurgentibus dedit, viam qua civitatem sanctam peterent, demonstravit? si nemo fuit, fuit utique vis divina, quae operaretur in corporibus mortuorum. Hominis tu quaeris auxilium, ubi opus Dei cernis? 85. Non egent humanis divina ministeriis. Coelum Deus fieri jussit, et factum est: terram creari statuit, et creata est (Gen. I, 6 et seq.). Quis humeris saxa convexit? quis congessit impensas? quis laboranti Deo suam operam ministravit? In momento haec facta sunt. Vis scire quam brevi? Dixit, et facta sunt (Psal. CXLIII, 5). Si dicto elementa consurgunt, cur dicto mortui non resurgant? Qui licet mortui sint, tamen aliquando vixerunt, habuerunt spiritum sentiendi, habuerunt vires agendi; plurimumque refert capax animi non fuisse, 1157 et exanimum remansisse. Diabolus dixit: Dic lapidi huic, ut fiat panis (Luc. IV, 3). Confitetur, jubente Deo, converti posse naturam; tu non credis, jubente Deo, reformari posse naturam? 86. De solis cursu coelique ratione philosophi disputant, et sunt qui putant his esse credendum; cum quid loquantur, ignorent. Neque enim coelum ascenderunt, axem dimensi, mundum oculis perscrutati sunt; quia nullus eorum cum Deo in principio fuit, nullus eorum de Deo dixit: Cum pararet coelum, cum ipso eram, et eram cum eo componens, ego eram cui adgaudebat (Prov. VIII, 27, 30). Si ergo illis creditur, non creditur Deo, qui ait: Quemadmodum coelum novum, et terra nova, quae ego facio manere coram me, dicit Dominus, sic stabit nomen vestrum, et semen vestrum: et erit mensis ex mense, et sabbatum ex sabbato: et veniet omnis caro in conspectu meo, ut adorent in Hierusalem, dicit Dominus Deus: et exibunt, et videbunt membra hominum, qui praevaricati sunt in me. Nam vermis eorum non morietur, et ignis eorum non exstinguetur, et erunt in aspectum universae carni (Esai. LXVI, 22 et seq.) 87. Si terra renovatur et coelum, cur dubitemus hominem posse renovari, propter quem terra facta et coelum est? Si praevaricator servatur ad poenam, cur justus non perpetuatur ad gloriam? Si vermis non moritur peccatorum, quemadmodum interibit caro justorum? Haec est enim resurrectio, sicut verbi ipsius sonus exprimit; ut quod cecidit, hoc resurgat: quod mortuum fuerit, reviviscat. 88. Et haec est series et causa justitiae, ut quoniam corporis animique communis est actus (quia quae animus cogitavit, corpus effecit) utrumque in judicium veniat, utrumque aut poenae dedatur, aut gloriae reservetur. Nam propemodum absurdum videtur, ut cum animi legem lex carnis impugnet, et mens plerumque quod odit, hoc faciat, quando inhabitans in homine peccatum carnis operatur; animus subdatur injuriae alienae reus culpae, caro quiete potiatur auctor aerumnae: et solus atteratur, qui non solus erravit: aut solus gloriam referat, qui non solus gratiae militavit. 89. Plena, ni fallor, et justa ratio: sed ego rationem a Christo non exigo. Si ratione convincor, fidem abnuo. Credidit Abraham Deo (Gen. XV, 6), et nos credamus; ut qui sumus generis, etiam fidei simus haeredes. Credidit et David, propter quod et locutus est (Psal. CXV, 10): et nos credamus, ut possimus loqui, scientes quoniam, qui suscitavit Dominum Jesum Christum, et nos cum Jesu suscitabit (II Cor. IV, 14). Hoc enim promisit, qui numquam mentitur, Deus (Tit. I, 2): hoc promisit veritas in Evangelio suo, dicens: Haec est autem voluntas ejus qui misit me, ut omne quod dedit mihi, non perdam ex eo: sed resuscitem illud in novissimo die (Joan. VI, 39). Nec satis putavit semel dixisse, sed etiam repetita expressione signavit; sic enim sequitur: Haec est enim

1158 voluntas Patris mei, qui misit me, ut omnis qui videt Filium, et credit in eum, habeat vitam aeternam, et ego resuscitabo eum in novissimo die (Ibid., 40). 90. Quis hoc dicit? Utique is qui mortuus plurima defunctorum corpora suscitavit. Si Deo non credimus, nec exemplo credimus? Non credimus quod promisit; quando etiam quod non promisit, effecit? Ipse autem quam causam moriendi habuisset, nisi habuisset et causam resurgendi? Etenim quoniam Deus mori non poterat, mori non poterat sapientia: resurgere autem non poterat, quod mortuum non erat; assumitur caro, quae mori posset; ut dum moritur, quod solet, quod mortuum fuerat, hoc resurgeret. Neque enim poterat esse nisi per hominem resurrectio; quoniam sicut per hominem mors, ita et per hominem resurrectio mortuorum (I Cor. XV, 21). 91. Ergo resurrexit homo, quoniam homo mortuus est: resuscitatus homo, sed resuscitans Deus. Tunc secundum carnem homo, nunc per omnia Deus: nunc enim secundum carnem jam non novimus Christum, sed carnis gratiam tenemus; ut ipsum primitias quiescentium, ipsum primogenitum ex mortuis noverimus. Primitiae utique ejusdem sunt generis atque naturae, cujus et reliqui fructus quorum pro laetiore proventu primitiva Deo munera deferuntur, sacrum munus pro omnibus, et quasi reparatae quaedam libamina naturae. Primitiae ergo quiescentium Christus. Sed utrum suorum quiescentium, qui quasi mortis exsortes dulci quodam sopore teneantur, an omnium mortuorum? Sed sicut in Adam omnes moriuntur, ita et in Christo omnes vivificabuntur (I Cor. XV, 22). Itaque sicut primitiae mortis in Adam, ita etiam primitiae resurrectionis in Christo. 92. Omnes resurgunt, sed nemo desperet, neque justus doleat commune consortium resurgendi; cum praecipuum fructum virtutis exspectet. Omnes quidem resurgent, sed unusquisque, ut ait Apostolus, in suo ordine (Ibid., 23). Communis est divinae fructus clementiae, sed distinctus ordo meritorum. Dies omnibus lucet, sol omnes populos fovet, pluvia possessiones omnium uberiore imbre fecundat. 93. Omnes nascimur, omnes resurgemus: sed in utroque vel vivendi, vel reviviscendi gratia dispar, diversa conditio. In momento enim, in ictu oculi, in novissima tuba mortui resurgent incorrupti, et nos immutabimur (Ibid., 52). Quinetiam in ipsa morte quiescunt alii, vivunt alii. Bona quies, sed vita melior. Denique Paulus ad vitam excitat quiescentem, dicens: Surge, qui dormis, et exsurge a mortuis, et illuminabit tibi Christus (Ephes. V, 14). Ergo hic excitatur, ut vivat, ut similis Pauli sit, ut possit dicere: Quia nos qui vivimus, non praeveniemus eos qui dormierunt (I Thess. IV, 14). Non enim communem hunc vivendi loquitur usum, spirandique commercium, sed meritum resurgendi. Nam cum dixisset. Et mortui qui in 1159 Christo sunt, resurgent primi (Ibid., 15); subjecit deinde: Et nos qui vivimus, simul cum illis rapiemur in nubibus obviam Christo in aera. 94. Utique mortuus est Paulus, et passione venerabili vitam corporis cum immortali gloria commutavit: num fefellit ergo qui se viventem scripsit in nubibus obviam Christo esse rapiendum? Hoc enim de Enoch legimus (Gen. V, 24), aut Elia (IV Reg. II, 11): sed et tu rapieris in spiritu. Ecce currus Eliae, ecce ignes, etsi non videntur, parantur; ut justus ascendat, innocens transferatur, et tua vita mori nesciat. Denique apostoli mori nescierunt; unde et dictum est: Amen, amen dico vobis, multi ex his astantibus non gustabunt mortem, donec videant Filium hominis venientem in regno suo (Matth. XVI, 28). Vivit enim qui non habet, quod moriatur in eo, qui non habet ex Aegypto calceamentum aliquod aut vinculum: sed exuit illud priusquam corporis hujus deponat officium. Non solus itaque Enoch vivit, quia non solus est raptus: rapitur et Paulus obviam Christo. 95. Vivunt etiam patriarchae; neque enim aliter Deus Abraham, Deus Isaac, et Deus Jacob, nisi mortui viverent, diceretur; Deus enim mortuorum non est, sed viventium (Luc. XX, 38). Vivemus et nos, si gesta moresque majorum voluerimus imitari. Miramur patriarcharum praemia, imitemur obsequia: praedicamus gratiam, sequamur obedientiam, non escis inducti, saeculi laqueos incidamus. Arripiamus opportunitatem temporis, praescriptum Legis, clementiam vocationis, desiderium passionis. Exierunt de terra sua patriarchae, et nos exeamus proposito de corporis potestate; nos exeamus proposito, illi exsilio: sed exsilium non putarunt, quod devotio obiret, non necessitas imperaret. Illi terram solo mutarunt, nos terram coelo mutemus: illi habitatione, nos spiritu. Illis illuminatum stellis coelum ostenderit sapientia, nostri cordis oculos illuminet. Sic typus veritati, et veritas concurrit typo. 96. Abraham paratus excipiendis hospitibus (Gen. XVIII, 2), fidelis Deo, impiger ministerio promptus officio, Trinitatem in typo vidit, hospitalitatem religione cumulavit, tres suspiciens, unum adorans; et personarum distinctione servata, unum tamen Dominum nominabat, tribus honorificentiam muneris deferens, et unam significans potestatem. Loquebatur enim in eo non doctrina, sed gratia: et melius credebat ille, quod non didicerat, quam nos qui didicimus. Nemo enim typum falsaverat veritatis, et ideo tres videt, sed unitatem veneratur. Tres mensuras similaginis promit, unum immolat vitulum; satis credens unum esse sacrificium, trium munus: unam hostiam, trium gratiam. Nam in quatuor regibus (Gen. XIV, 1 et seq.) quis non intelligat quod materialis elementa naturae, praefiguratae Dominicae passionis indicio, et omnia sibi mundana subjecerit? Fidelis in bello, abstemius in triumpho, qui donis non hominum ditescere, sed Dei mallet.

1160 97. Generare se posse filium senex credidit, immolare posse se filium pater judicavit (Gen. XXII, 11): nec patrius trepidavit affectus, cum senis dexteram pietas adjuvaret; sciebat enim acceptiorem Deo filium immolatum esse, quam sanum. Ergo adducit ad sacrificium filium dilectissimum; et quem sero susceperat, cito obtulit: nec paterni nominis appellatione revocatur, cum ille patrem vocaret, hic filium. Chara quidem nominum pignora, sed amabiliora Dei praecepta. Itaque licet compaterentur corda, vota durabant. Distrinxit super filium gladium paterna manu, et patrio percussit affectu, ne periret poena: trepidavit, ne ictus erraret, dextera deficeret. Sensit pietatis affectum, sed non omisit devotionis negotium: et properabat obsequium, etiam cum audiret oraculum. Unde nos quoque Deum omnibus, quos diligimus, praeferamus, patri, fratribus, matri; ut possit nobis servare dilectos, sicut in Abraham uberiorem remuneratorem, quam ministrum videmus. 98. Obtulit quidem filium pater, sed Deus non sanguine, sed pietate placatur. Ovem pro homine demonstravit in ligno; ut et filium patri redderet, nec periret hostia sacerdoti. Itaque nec Abraham parricidio cruentatus est, nec Deus sacrificio defraudatus. Vidit propheta, nec affectavit jactantiam, nec tenuit pertinaciam: ovem pro homine mutavit. Quo magis ostenditur, quam religiose obtulerit, quem tam libenter recepit. Et tu si Deo munus tuum offeras, non amittis. Sed avari sumus. Deus unicum Filium morti pro nobis obtulit (Rom. VIII, 32), nos nostros negamus. Vidit hoc Abraham, et agnovit mysterium, salutem nobis in ligno futuram: nec latuit in uno eodemque sacrificio aliud esse quod videretur offerri, aliud quod posset occidi. 99. Imitemur ergo Abrahae devotionem, imitemur Isaac bonitatem, imitemur castimoniam. Bonus plane et pudicus vir, devotus Deo, castus uxori: qui injuriam non reddidit, excludentibus cessit, poenitentes eosdem recepit, nec protervus contumaciae, nec durus gratiae. Litium fugitans, cum recederet: facilis veniae, cum reciperet: profusior bonitate, cum ignosceret. Petebatur societatis consortium, adjunxit convivium voluptatis. 100. Imitemur etiam in Jacob typum Christi, sit ejus in nobis aliqua similitudo factorum. Erimus consortes, si fuerimus imitatores. Matri obedivit, fratri cessit, socero servivit, mercedem de lucris, non de gregis divisione quaesivit. Non avara divisio, ubi lucrativa portio. Nec illa otiosa significatio, scala de coelo (Gen. XXVIII, 12), quod per crucem Christi angelorum atque hominum futura consortia viderentur. Cui obstupefactum est femur (Gen. XXXII, 29), ut in femore suo agnosceret generationis haeredem, et obstupefactio femoris passionem prophetaret haeredis.

1161 101. Videmus igitur coelum patere virtuti, nec hoc esse paucorum: Multi enim venient ab Oriente, et ab Occidente, et Aquilone et Austro, et recumbent in regno Dei (Matth. VIII, 11), delectationem perpetuae quietis sepultis animorum motibus exprimentes. Sequamur Abraham moribus, ut nos recipiat in gremium suum, et tamquam Lazarum suae humilitatis haeredem (Luc. XVI, 23) propriis circumfusum virtutibus pio foveat amplexu. Non enim nos in gremio corporali, sed in quodam bonorum factorum amictu sancti patriarchae probata Deo successio fovet. Nolite, inquit, seduci, Deus non deridetur (Galat. VI, 7). 102. Advertimus quam grave sit sacrilegium resurrectionem non credere; si enim non resurgimus, ergo Christus gratis mortuus est, ergo Christus non surrexit (I Cor. XV, 13). Si enim nobis non resurrexit, utique non resurrexit, qui sibi cur resurgeret, non habebat. Resurrexit in eo mundus, resurrexit in eo coelum, resurrexit in eo terra; erit enim coelum novum et terra nova (Apoc. XXI, 1). Sibi autem ubi erat necessaria resurrectio, quem mortis vincula non tenebant? Nam etsi secundum hominem mortuus, in ipsis tamen erat liber infernis. 103. Vis scire quam liber? Factus sum sicut homo sine adjutorio, inter mortuos liber (Psal. LXXXVII, 5). Et bene liber, qui se poterat suscitare, juxta quod scriptum est: Solvite hoc templum, et in triduo resuscitabo illud (Joan. II, 19). Et bene liber, qui alios descenderat redempturus. Factus est autem sicut homo, non specie utique, sed veritate formatus; quia et homo est, et quis cognoscet eum? Etenim in similitudinem hominum factus, et specie inventus ut homo, humiliavit semetipsum, factus obediens usque ad mortem (Phil. II, 7, 8); ut per illam scilicet obedientiam ejus gloriam videremus, gloriam quasi unigeniti a Patre secundum Joannem sanctum (Joan. I, 14). Ita enim Scripturae figura servatur, ut et unigeniti gloria, et perfecti hominis natura servetur in Christo. 104.

Itaque adjutore non eguit: neque enim eguit, cum faceret mundum; ut egeret, cum redimeret. Non legatus, non nuntius, sed ipse Dominus salvum fecit eum: Ipse dixit, et facta sunt (Psal. XXXII, 9). Ipse Dominus salvum fecit eum: ubique ipse, quia per ipsum omnia (Coloss. I, 17). Quis autem adjuvaret eum, in quo creata sunt omnia, et omnia in ipso constant? Quis adjuvaret eum, qui omnia in momento facit, et in novissima tuba mortuos suscitat (I Cor. XV, 52)? Non quia aut prima, aut secunda non possit, aut tertia: sed ordo servatur, non quo difficultas sero vincenda, sed legitimus numerus explicandus sit.

105. Tempus autem, arbitror, de tubarum

1162 specie dicere, quoniam sermo propinquat ad finem; ut nostri quoque consummandi eloquii tuba sit signum. Septem tubas legimus in Apocalypsi Joannis, quas septem sumpsere angeli (Apoc. VIII, 2). Ubi habes quoniam septimus angelus tuba cecinit, et facta est vox magna de coelo dicens: Factum est regnum hujus mundi Dei nostri, et Christi ejus, et regnabit in saecula saeculorum (Apoc. XI, 15). Tuba quidem et pro voce accipitur, quia habes: Quoniam ecce ostium apertum in coelo, et vox prima, quam audivi, sicut tubam loquentem mecum et dicentem: Ascende huc, et ostendam tibi quae oportet fieri (Apoc. IV, 1). Legimus etiam: Canite initio mensis tuba (Psal. LXXX, 4); sed etiam alibi: Laudate eum in sono tubae (Psal. CL, 3). 106. Ergo quid sibi velit tubarum significatio, omni virtute debemus advertere; ne quasi fabulam aniliter accipientes periclitemur, si indigna dogmate spiritali, nec convenientia Scripturarum eminentiae sentiamus. Nam cum legerimus bellum nobis esse non adversus carnem et sanguinem, sed adversus spiritalia nequitiae, quae sunt in coelestibus (Ephes. VI, 12); non carnalia utique arma, sed fortia Deo aestimare debemus (II Cor. X, 4). Non enim satis est tubam te videre, nec sonum ejus audire, nisi proprietatem sonitus intelligas. Etenim si incertam vocem det tuba, quomodo quis parabit se ad bellum? Unde oportet vocis tubae nos scire virtutem, ne videamur barbari, cum tubas hujusmodi aut audimus, aut loquimur. Et ideo cum loquimur, oremus ut eas nobis Spiritus sanctus interpretetur. 107. Requiramus igitur in Scripturis veteribus quid de tubarum genere legerimus, consentientes eas solemnitates, quae Judaeis Lege praescriptae sunt, superiorum esse umbram celebritatum, coelestiumque festorum. Hic enim umbra, illic veritas. Per umbram ad veritatem pervenire nitamur. Cujus figura etiam alibi expressa est hoc modo; habes enim quia locutus est Dominus ad Moysen: Loquere filiis Israel, dicens: Mense septimo, una mensis, erit vobis requies in memoriale tubarum, vocata sancta erit vobis. Omne opus servile non facietis, et accendetis holocaustum Domino (Levit. XXIII, 24). In Numeris autem: Locutus est Dominus ad Moysen, dicens: Fac tibi duas tubas ductiles, argenteas facies eas, et erunt tibi ad evocandam synagogam, et promovenda castra: et tuba canes in illis, et colligetur omnis turba ad ostium tabernaculi testimonii. Si autem in una tuba cecineris, ad te venient omnes principes et duces Israel, et tuba canetis significationem primam, et promovebunt castra, et constituentur ad Orientem. Et tuba canetis significationem secundam, et promovebunt castra, et constituentur ad Libanum.

1163 Et tuba canetis significationem tertiam, et promovebunt castra, quae constituentur ad Boream. Et tuba canetis significationem quartam, et promovebunt castra, quae constituentur ad Aquilonem. Significationem tuba canent in promotu eorum. Et cum congregabitis synagogam, tuba canite, et non significationem. Et filii Aaron sacerdotes tubis canent, et erit vobis legitimum aeternum in progenies vestras. Si autem exieritis in bellum in terram vestram ad adversarios, qui resistunt vobis, significabitis tubis, et reminiscemini coram Domino, et liberationem habebitis a mortuis vestris. Et in diebus laetitiae vestrae, et in diebus festis vestris, et in neomeniis vestris concinite tubis, et in holocaustis et sacrificiis salutaribus vestris, et erit vobis in commemoratione vestra coram Domino, ait Dominus (Num. X, 1 et seq.). 108. Quid igitur, dies festos in potu et in epulis aestimabimus? Sed nemo nos in manducando dijudicet; novimus enim quia Lex spiritalis est (Rom. VII, 14): Nemo ergo nos judicet in escis aliquibus aut in potu, aut in parte diei festi, aut neomeniis, aut sabbato; quae sunt umbra futurorum, corpus autem Christi (Coloss. II, 16). Corpus itaque Christi requiramus, quod vobis quasi novissima tuba vox de coelo paterna monstravit, tunc cum dicebant Judaei, quia tonitruum factum est illi (Joan. XII, 28): corpus Christi quod iterum tuba nobis novissima revelabit; quoniam ipse Dominus in jussu archangeli, et in tuba Dei descendet de coelo: et mortui qui in Christo sunt, resurgent (I Thess. IV, 15); ubi enim corpus, illic et aquilae (Luc. XVII, 37): ubi Christi corpus, ibi veritas. 108. Septima igitur tuba hebdomadis requiem videtur significare, quae non solum in diebus et annis et periodis aestimatur (unde et jubilaeus sacratus est numerus), sed etiam annum septuagesimum comprehendit, quando in Hierusalem regressus est populus, qui septuaginta annis in captivitate duravit. In centesimis quoque et in millesimis sacri observatio numeri minime praeteritur; neque enim otiose Deus dixit: Reliqui mihi septem millia virorum, qui non curvaverunt genua ante Baal (III Reg. XIX, 18). Ergo umbra futurae quietis in diebus, mensibus, annis, mundi ipsius tempore figuratur; et ideo per Moysen mandatur filiis Israel, ut septimo mense, una mensis, singulis fiat requies in memoriale tubarum: nec servile aliquod opus, sed Deo sacrificium offeratur; eo quod in ipso fine hebdomadis, quasi mundi sabbato, spiritalia a nobis non carnalia opera flagitantur. Quod enim carnale, servile; quia animo caro servit: liberum vero innocentia facit, culpa vernaculum. 109. Oportuit igitur per speculum et in aenigmate fieri spiritalia: Nunc enim per speculum videmus, tunc autem facie ad faciem (I Cor. XIII, 12). Nunc secundum carnem militamus, tunc spiritu videbimus divina mysteria. Et ideo verae legis character

1164 in nostris moribus exprimatur, qui in Dei ambulamos imagine; quoniam jam legis umbra transivit: umbra Judaeis carnalibus, imago nobis, veritas resurrecturis. Tria enim haec secundum Legem esse cognovimus, umbram, imaginem, veritatem: umbram in Lege, imaginem in Evangilio, veritatem in judicio. Sed Christi omnia, et in Christo omnia, quem nunc secundum veritatem videre non possumus: sed videmus quasi in quadam imagine futurorum, quorum umbram in Lege perspeximus. Ergo Christus non umbra, sed imago Dei: non vacua imago, sed veritas. Et ideo per Moysen Lex; quia umbra per hominem, figura per Legem, per Jesum veritas (Joan. I, 17). Neque enim veritas aliunde, nisi ex veritate procederet. 110. Si quis ergo hanc imaginem Dei videre desiderat, debet diligere Deum ut diligatur a Deo: et sit jam non servus, sed amicus, qui mandata Dei fecerit; ut possit introire in nubem, ubi est Deus (Exod. XXIV, 15). Ipse faciat sibi rationabiles tubas duas ductiles argento probato (Num. X, 1), hoc est, pretioso verbo compositas et ornatas; quibus non raucum increpans, terribili sonitu murmur interstrepat, sed sublimes gratiae Deo continua jubilatione fundantur. Talium enim tubarum sonitu mortui suscitantur, non crepitu utique aeris, sed verbo veritatis animati. Et fortasse duae istae tubae sunt, per quas divino spiritu Paulus increpuit dicens: Orabo spiritu, orabo et mente: psallam spiritu, psallam et mente (I Cor. XIV, 15); alterum enim sine altero nequaquam videtur evocationem habere perfectam. 111. Nec tamen omnium est utraque canere tuba, nec est omnium universam colligere synagogam: sed solis sacerdotibus, et ministris Dei canentibus ista praerogativa defertur (Num. X, 2 et seq.); ut quicumque audierit, secutus eo fuerit, ubi est Dei gloria, et ad tabernaculum testimonii praematura intentione convenerit: et opera possit spectare divina, et legitimum illud aeternumque domicilium in suae posteritatis seriem promereri. Tunc enim bellum conficitur, hostis fugatur; quando Spiritus gratia concinit, et mentis industria. 112. Sunt et illae salutares tubae, si corde credas, et ore confitearis: Corde enim creditur ad justitiam ore autem confessio fit ad salutem (Rom. X, 10). Hac igitur gemina tuba ad illam sanctam terram, resurrectionis scilicet gratiam, pervenitur; et ideo semper tibi concinant, ut semper audias Dei vocem: semper te angelorum prophetarumque oracula excitent atque commoveant, ut ad superiora festines. 113. Hanc intentionem David versabat in pectore, cum dicebat: Quoniam transibo in locum tabernaculi admirabilis, usque ad domum Dei; in voce exsultationis et confessionis, sonus epulantis (Psal. XLI, 5). Non enim soli hostes harum tubarum

1165 sonitu vincuntur: sed et delectationes, et dies festi, et neomeniae sine his esse non possunt. Nemo enim potest nisi divini hauriat promissa sermonis, et resultantibus credat oraculis, exsultare laetitia, dies festos aut neomenias agere, quibus se corporali gratia, et saeculari occupatione vacuatum, Christi repleri luce desideret. Sacrificia quoque ipsa Deo probata esse non possunt, nisi confessio vocis aspiret, quae sacerdotali oblatione ad obsecrandam Dei gratiam populos excitare consuevit. 114. Itaque simus praedicatores Domini, et laudemus eum in voce tubae (Psal. CL, 3), non exigua de virtute ejus et vilia sentientes, sed ea quae possint aurem mentis implere, et intimae conscientiae penetrare secretum; ut ea quae corpori conveniunt, divinitati non putemus aptanda: nec divinae magnitudinem potestatis humanis viribus metiamur; ut quaeramus quomodo quis resurgat, aut quali corpore veniat, aut quemadmodum soluta coeant, lapsa reparentur; haec enim arbitrio Dei simul ut statuuntur, implentur. Nec sensibilis tubarum exspectatur auditus, sed invisibilis potentia magnificentiae coelestis operatur; Deo enim velle pro facto est: nec resurrectionis requirendus nisus, sed fructus nobis est expetendus. Quae proclivius celebrabitur, si exinaniti vitiis plenitudinem spiritalis mysterii consequamur, gratiamque renovata caro sumat a spiritu, et fulgorem lucis aeternae anima mutuetur a Christo. 115. Sed non solum singulorum, verum etiam universitatis sunt ista mysteria. Adverte enim juxta typum Legis, ordinem gratiae. Cum tuba prima cecinerit, orientales congregat, quasi praecipuos et electos: cum secunda, suppares meritis, qui secundum libanum siti, dereliquerint ludibria nationum: cum tertia, eos qui tamquam in mari exagitati istius freto mundi, saeculi hujus fluctibus vacillaverint: cum quarta, illos qui duritiam mentium nequaquam satis potuerint eloquii spiritalis mollire praecepto; et ideo secundum boream vocati sunt, boreas enim secundum Salomonem durus est ventus (Prov. XXVII, 16). 116. Itaque licet momento resuscitentur omnes, omnes tamen meritorum ordine suscitantur. Et ideo primi resurgunt, qui maturo devotionis occursu, et quodam antelucano fidei exortu prodeuntes, solis aeterni radios receperunt. Quod vel de patriarchis juxta veteris seriem Testamenti, vel de apostolis juxta Evangelium jure memoraverim. Secundi autem, qui ritum gentium relinquentes, ab errore sacrilego transierunt in Ecclesiae disciplinam. Et ideo illi primi ex patribus, isti secundi ex gentibus; ab illis enim lux fidei coepit, in istis usque ad mundi occasum suscepta duravit. Tertii suscitantur, et quarti, qui ab austro, et qui ab aquilone sunt. His quatuor terra distinguitur, his quatuor annus includitur, his quatuor mundus 1166 impletur, his quatuor Ecclesia congregatur. Omnes enim qui sacrosanctae Ecclesiae copulati, divini nominis appellatione censentur, praerogativam resurrectionis et delectationis aeternae gratiam consequentur; quoniam venient ab Oriente et Occidente, ab Aquilone et Austro, et recumbent in regno Dei (Luc. XIII, 29). 117. Non enim exigua mundum suum Christus luce complectitur; quandoquidem a summo coelo egressio ejus, et occursus ejus usque ad summum ejus: nec est qui se abscondat a calore ejus (Psal. XVIII, 7). Omnes enim benignus illustrat, nec refutare levem, sed emendare vult: nec excludere durum Ecclesia, sed mollire desiderat. Et ideo in Canticis canticorum eos Ecclesia, in Evangelio Christus invitat dicens: Venite ad me omnes qui laboratis, et onerati estis: et ego reficiam vos. Tollite jugum meum super vos, et discite a me quia mitis sum et humilis corde (Mat. XI, 28, 29). 118. Ecclesiae quoque vocem invitantis agnosce; dicit enim: Exsurge, aquilo, et veni, auster; perfla hortum meum, et defluant unguenta mea. Descendat frater meus in hortum suum, et edat fructum pomiferarum suarum (Cant. IV, 16; V, 1). Sciens enim jam tunc etiam horum tibi fore opera fructuosa, Christo tuo fructum de talibus pollicebare: et quae primo te in cubiculum dixisti Regis inductam, diligens ubera super vinum, cum diligentem amares, lactantem quaereres, pericula pro religione contemneres. 119. Deinde a Libano, sponsa, rogaris ut venias, judicio Domini adhuc tota formosa, adhuc tota irreprehensibilis. Sic enim scriptum est: Tota es formosa, proxima mea, et reprehensio non est in te. Ades huc a Libano, sponsa, ades huc a Libano (Cant. IV, 7, 8). 120. Postea ipsa jam nullos aquae lapsus, jam nullos impetus descendentes a Libano pertimescens, aquilonem et austrum advocas, perflari cupiens hortum tuum; ut in aliis unguenta tua defluant, in aliis multiplices fecunditatis tuae fructus offeras Christo. 121. Et ideo beatus qui custodit verba prophetiae hujus (Apoc. XXIII, 7), quae nobis resurrectionem evidentioribus testimoniis revelavit dicens: Et vidi mortuos magnos et pusillos stantes ante sedem, et libros aperuerunt: et alius liber apertus est, qui est vitae: et judicati sunt mortui de scriptis in libris, secundum facta sua. Et dedit mare mortuos, qui in ipso erant: et inferi dederunt mortuos, qui penes se erant (Apoc. XX 12). Ne ergo dubites quemadmodum resurgant, quor inferi revomunt, mare reddidit. 122. Accipe etiam quando promittatur gratia futura justorum: Et audivi, inquit, vocem magnam de throno dicentem: Ecce tabernaculum Dei cum hominibus, et habitabit cum illis; et ipsi populus ejus erunt, et ipse Deus cum illis erit illorum Deus. Et delebit omnem lacrymam de oculis eorum, et mors non erit amplius, neque luctus, neque clamor, neque dolor ultra erit. (Apoc. XXI, 3, 4).

1167 123. Compara nunc, si placet, atque contende vitam hanc cum illa vita, et elige, si potes, perpetuam corporis vitam in labore aerumnaque miserabili tantarum commutationum, votorumque taedio, fastidio voluptatum. Nonne si Deus ista perpetuare velit, illa deligeres? Nam si per se ipsa vita fugienda est, ut sit molestiarum fuga, requies aerumnarum; quanto magis ea requies est expetenda, cui futurae resurrectionis voluptas perpetua succedet; ubi nulla criminum series, nulla illecebra delictorum?

124. Quis in dolore tam patiens, qui non mortem oret? quis in infirmitate tam constans, ut non optet mori se potius, quam debilem vivere? quis in moerore tam fortis, ut non desideret eo se vel moriendo defungi? Quod si ipsi nobis dum vivimus, displicemus, cum vivendo finem praestitum esse noverimus; quanto amplius vitae nos taederet istius, si sine fine futuros nobis labores hujus corporis cerneremus? Quis est igitur qui se velit mortis exsortem? Aut quid gravius immortalitate miserabili? Si in hac vita, inquit, in Christo tantum sperantes sumus, miserabiliores sumus omnibus hominibus (I Cor. XV, 19); non quod in Christo sperare sit miserum, sed quia Christus sperantibus in se vitam alteram praeparaverit. Haec enim peccato obnoxia est, illa praemio reservata. 124. Ipsos cursus breves nostrarum aetatum quantum videmus nobis afferre fastidium? Puer adolescentiam desiderat, adolescens annos sibi majoris metitur aetatis, juvenis beneficio aevi florentis ingratus, senilem honorificentiam concupiscit. Ita omnibus ex natura venit velle mutari; quia ejus nos quod sumus, poenitet. Denique etiam ipsa post usum vota fastidio sunt: et quae mereri optavimus, cum meruerimus, abdicamus. 125. Unde non immerito etiam sancti viri prolongatum incolatum suum saepe doluerunt (Psal. CXIX, 5): doluit David, doluit Jeremias (Jerem. XX, 17), doluit Elias (III Reg. XIX, 4). Si sapientibus creditur, et hi in quibus divinus Spiritus loquebatur, ad meliora properabant: si reliquorum judicia sciscitamur, ut cognoscamus omnes in unam convenire sententiam; quanti mortem moerori, quanti mortem formidini praetulerunt? judicantes videlicet graviorem metum mortis esse, quam mortem. Adeo suis malis mors non timetur, sed vitae miseriis antefertur! cum expetitur morientis exitus, et evitatur formido viventis. 126. Sed esto, huic vitae resurrectio praeferatur.

1168 Quid, philosophi ipsi genus post mortem aliquod repererunt, quo nos uti magis, quam resurgere delectabit? Et illi quidem qui dicunt animas immortales esse, non satis mulcere me possunt, cum pro parte me redimunt.

Nam quae potest esse gratia, ubi non totus evasi? quae vita, si in me opus Dei occidat? quae justitia, si naturae finis mors sit, erranti justove communis? quae veritas, ut quia ipsa se moveat, et semper moveatur anima, immortalis esse credatur? Quod nobis in corpore commune cum bestiis, ante corpus quid geratur incertum; nec ex contrariis colligatur veritas, sed destruatur. 127. An vero illorum sententia placet, qui nostras animas, ubi ex hoc corpore emigraverint, in corpora ferarum, variorumque animantium transire commemorant? At certe haec circeis medicamentorum illecebris composita esse ludibria poetarum ipsi philosophi disserere solent: nec tam illos qui perpessi ista simulentur, quam sensus eorum qui ista confinxerint, velut circeo poculo ferunt in varia bestiarum monstra conversos. Quid enim tam simile prodigii, quam homines credere in habitum ferarum potuisse mutari? Quanto majoris est prodigii gubernatricem hominis animam, adversam humano generi bestiarum suscipere naturam, capacemque rationis ad irrationabile animal posse transire, quam corporis effigies esse mutatas? Vos ipsi haec destruitis, qui docetis. Nam magicis incantata carminibus portentosae hujus conversionis genera tradidistis. 128. Ludunt haec poetae, reprehendunt philosophi: et quae putant ficta de viventibus, haec arbitrantur vera de mortuis. Illi autem qui ista finxerunt, non suam probare fabulam, sed philosophorum errores irridere voluerunt: qui putant quod illa anima quae miti humilique proposito iracundiam vincere, patientiam assumere, cruore abstinere consueverat, eadem frementi motu leonis incensa, irae impatiens, effrena rabie, sitire sanguinem, caedemque possit expetere: et illa quae populorum fremitus varios regali quodam consilio temperabat, et rationabili voce mulcebat; eadem se inter devia atque deserta ritu luporum patiatur ululare: aut quae injusto sub onere gemeus, dures aratri labores questu miserabili mugiebat; eadem postea in figuram hominis commutata, levi cornua quaerat in fronte: vel illa quam praepetes prius pennae usque ad alta coeli per sublime aeris alarum remigiis evehebant; eadem

1169 postea volatus jam non suos requirat, et se humani doleat corporis gravitate pigrescere. 129. Hinc fortasse et illum Icarum perdidistis, quod persuasionibus vestris inductus adolescens, prius avem se fuisse fortasse crediderat. Hinc etiam senes plerique decepti sunt, ut gravi immorerentur dolori, cygneis male creduli fabulis, dum putant modulis se mulcendo flebilibus albentem molli pluma mutare canitiem. 130. Haec quam incredibilia! quam deformia! Quanto illud est convenientius, ut credas secundum naturam, credas secundum usum fructuum caeterorum, credas secundum gestorum exempla, oracula prophetarum, Christi coeleste promissum. Quid vero praestantius, quam ut opus Dei judices non perire, et secundum imaginem et similitudinem Dei factos transferri non posse in effigies bestiarum; cum utique ad similitudinem Dei non corporis sit imago, sed spiritus? Nam quemadmodum homo, cui subjecta sunt animantium genera caeterorum, in subjectum sibi animal meliore sui parte demigret? Non patitur hoc natura, et si pateretur natura, non pateretur gratia. 131. Sed videro quid vos de vobis, gentes, opinionis habeatis; neque enim mirum debet videri, quod creditis vos in bestias posse mutari, qui bestias adoratis. Ego tamen malim de vestro merito melius judicetis; ut non inter coetus ferarum, sed inter angelorum consortia vos credatis futuros. 132. Habet animus ex hoc jam vitae anfractu, et terreni corporis colluvione discedere, et ad illa concilia superna contendere, etsi sanctorum sit pervenire, laudem dicere Deo (quam

1170 citharizantes illos (Apoc. XIV, 2) dicere prophetica lectione (Apoc. XV, 3, 4) comperimus: Quia magna mirabilia opera tua, Domine Deus omnipotens: justae et verae viae tuae, Rex gentium! Quis non timebit et magnificabit nomen tuum; quia solus sanctus es, quia omnes gentes venient et adorabunt ante te; videre quoque tuas, Jesu, nuptias, in quibus de terrenis ad coelestia, concinentibus omnium gaudiis sponsa deducitur; ad te enim omnis caro veniet (Psal. LXIV, 3), jam non saeculo obnoxia, sed spiritui copulata: videre thalamos ornatos byssino, rosis, liliis, et coronis. Cujus enim alterius sic ornantur nuptiae? Ornantur enim confessorum livore, martyrum sanguine, lillis virginum, coronis etiam sacerdotum? 133. Hoc sibi prae caeteris David sanctus optavit, ut haec spectaret et cerneret. Denique ait: Unam petivi a Domino, hanc requiram; ut inhabitem in domo Domini omnes dies vitae meae, et videam voluptatem Domini (Ps. XXVI, 4, 5). 134. Juvat hoc credere, sperare delectat: certe non credidisse poena est, sperasse gratia. Quod si in hoc erro, quia angelis me post mortem sociari malo, quam bestiis; libenter in hoc erro, neque umquam hac me opinione, dum vivo, fraudari patiar. 135. Quid enim mihi superest solatii, quam quod me citius ad te, frater, spero venturum, nec digressus tui inter nos longa divortia fore; tuisque intercessionibus mihi hoc posse conferri, ut citius desiderantem tui advoces. Quis enim est, qui non sibi debeat istud optare prae caeteris; ut corruptibile hoc induat incorruptelam, et mortale hoc induat immortalitatem (I Cor. XV, 53)? ut qui nunc morti corporis fragilitate succumbimus, supra naturam siti, mortem jam timere nequeamus.

GRATIANUM OB ARDOREM discendae fidei laudat Ambrosius, semet vero deprimit. Quamquam autem illum humana doctrina indigere neget, quippe qui a Deo ipso fuerit institutus, addit tamen eumdem hac sua pietate viam sibi ad victoriam munire. Tum difficultate operis insinuata, non tam rationem quam auctoritatem, maxime vero Nicaeni concilii, secuturum se profitetur. 1. Regina Austri venit audire sapientiam Salomonis, ut in libro Regnorum legimus (III Reg. X, 1 et seq.). Hiram quoque rex ad Salomonem misit, ut cognosceret eum (III Reg. V, 1). Tu quoque, sancte imperator Gratiane, veteris imitator historiae, fidem meam audire voluisti. Sed non ego Salomon, cujus mireris sapientiam: neque tu unius gentis, sed totius orbis Augustus fidem libello exprimi censuisti: non ut disceres, sed ut probares. 2. Quid enim discas, imperator Auguste, quam ab ipsis incunabulis pio fovisti semper affectu? Priusquam te, inquit, formarem in utero matris tuae, novi te: et priusquam exires de vulva, sanctificavi te (Jerem. I, 5). Santificatio ergo non traditur, sed infunditur; et ideo divina dona custodi. Quod enim nemo te docuit, utique Deus auctor infudit. 3. Petis a me fidei libellum, sancte imperator, 444 profecturus ad praelium; nosti enim fide magis imperatoris quam virtute militum quaeri solere victoriam. Nam et Abraham trecentos decem et octo duxit ad bellum, et ex innumeris tropaea hostibus reportavit; signoque Dominicae crucis et nominis, quinque regum victriciumque turmarum subacto robore, et ultus est proximum, et fratris filium meruit et triumphum (Gen. XIV, 14 et seq.). Jesus quoque filius Nave hostes quos totius exercitus manu valida superare non poterat, septem tubarum sacerdotalium sono vicit, ubi ducem militiae coelestis agnovit (Jos. VI, 6 et seq.). Ergo et tu vincere paras, qui Christum adoras: vincere paras, qui fidem vindicas, cujus a me libellum petisti. 4. Mallem quidem cohortandi ad fidem subire officium, quam de fide disceptandi; in altero enim religiosa confessio est, in altero incauta praesumptio: sed quoniam neque tu cohortatione indiges, neque ego excusandi liber, ubi pietatis officium est, audax negotium verecunda occasione suscipiam; ut de fide pauca disceptem, de testimoniis plura contexam. 5. De conciliis id potissimum sequar, quod trecenti decem et octo sacerdotes, tamquam Abrahae electi judicio, consona fidei virtute victores, velut tropaeum, toto orbe subactis perfidis, extulerunt; ut mihi videatur hoc esse divinum, quod eodem numero in conciliis fidei habemus oraculum, quo in historia pietatis exemplum. 445

CAPUT PRIMUM.

CATHOLICAM FIDEM A gentilium, Judaeorum, ac haereticorum erroribus distinguit: expositoque vocum Dei et Domini significatu, personarum discrimen, et naturae unitatem demonstrat: quam dum separant Ariani, non tres Deos tantum inducunt, sed etiam Trinitatis regnum destruunt. 6. Assertio autem nostrae fidei haec est, ut unum Deum esse dicamus: neque, ut gentes, Filium separemus: neque ut Judaei, natum ex Patre ante tempora, et ex Virgine postea editum denegemus: neque ut Sabellius, Patrem confundamus et Verbum; ut eumdem Patrem asseramus et Filium: neque ut Photinus, initium Filii ex Virgine disputemus: neque ut Arius, plures credendo et dissimiles potestates, plures deos gentili errore faciamus, quia scriptum est: Audi, Israel, Dominus Deus tuus, Deus unus est (Deut. VI, 4). 7. Deus enim et Dominus nomen magnificentiae, nomen est potestatis, sicut ipse dicit: Dominus nomen est mihi. Et sicut alibi Propheta asserit: Dominus omnipotens nomen est ei (Esai. XLII, 8). Dominus ergo et Deus vel quod dominetur omnibus, vel quod spectet omnia, et timeatur a cunctis. 8. Si ergo unus Deus, unum nomen, potestas una est Trinitatis. Denique ipse dicit: Ite, baptizate gentes in nomine Patris, et Filii, et Spiritus sancti (Matth. XXVIII, 19). In nomine utique, non in nominibus. 9. Ipse etiam dicit: Ego et Pater unum sumus (Joan. X, 30). Unum dixit, ne fiat discretio potestatis et naturae: sumus addidit, ut Patrem Filiumque cognoscas; quod perfectus Pater perfectum Filium genuisse credatur: et Pater et Filius unum sint, non confusione personae, sed unitate naturae. 10. [Alias cap. II.] Unum ergo Deum, non duos aut tres deos dicimus; ut impia Arianorum haeresis dum criminatur, incurrit. Tres enim deos dicit, qui divinitatem separat Trinitatis; cum Dominus dicendo: Ite, baptizate gentes in nomine Patris, et Filii, et Spiritus sancti, unius esse Trinitatem potestatis ostenderit. Nos Patrem 446 et Filium et Spiritum sanctum confitemur; ita ut in Trinitate perfecta et plenitudo sit divinitatis, et unitas potestatis. 11. Omne regnum in se divisum facile destruetur, Dominus hoc dicit (Matth. XII, 25). Non ergo divisum est regnum Trinitatis. Si ergo divisum non est, unum est; quod enim unum non est, divisum est. Tale ergo regnum esse cupiunt Trinitatis, quod divisione sui facile destruatur. Immo quia non potest destrui, constat non esse divisum. Non enim dividitur unitas, nec scinditur; et ideo nec corruptelae subditur, nec aetati.

CAPUT II.

Imperatorem ad fidei zelum exhortatus, ab ea quae Christo cum Patre inest, voluntatis atque operationis unitate ipsum Deum esse ostendit. Quapropter expositis divinis attributis, eadem Christo etiam convenire affirmat: cujus praeterea varias appellationes prosecutus, iis substantialem unitatem personalemque distinctionem probari docet: tum exemplis aliquot ad explicandam unitatem illam adductis, negat aliter Dei unitatem defendi posse. 12. Non quicumque, inquit, mihi dicit: Domine, Domine, intrabit in regnum coelorum (Matth. VII, 21). Non ergo perfunctoria fides debet esse, imperator Auguste; scriptum est enim: Zelus domus tuae comedit me (Psal. LXVIII, 10). Itaque fideli spiritu et mente devota Jesum Dominum invocemus, Deum esse credamus; ut in nomine ejus quidquid a Patre petimus, impetremus; Pater enim se per Filium vult rogari, Filius vult rogari Patrem. 13. Concordat pietatis gratia, nec virtutis facta discordant. Quaecumque enim Pater facit, eadem et Filius facit similiter. Et similiter facit, et eadem facit Filius: sed vult rogari Patrem in eo, quod ipse facturus est; uti non impossibilitatis indicium, sed unitatem potestatis agnoscas. Jure igitur adorandus atque venerandus est Dei Filius, qui mundum divinitate sua condidit, et nostrum pietate sua informavit affectum. 14. Et ideo bonum Deum, sempiternum, perfectum, omnipotentem, verum debemus 447 credere, ut in Lege accepimus et prophetis, Scripturisque divinis caeteris, quia sine his Deus non est. Non potest enim bonus non esse, qui Deus est, cum in natura Dei plenitudo bonitatis sit: neque ex tempore Deus potest esse, qui fecit tempora: neque potest imperfectus Deus esse; qui enim minor est, imperfectus utique est, cui desit aliquid, quo majori possit aequari. Haec igitur fidei praedicatio: Deus malus non est, Deo impossibile nihil est: Deus temporalis non est, Deus minor non est. Si fallor, redarguant. 15. Quia igitur Deus Christus: et bonus utique, et omnipotens, et sempiternus, et perfectus, et verus est; haec enim in natura divinitatis sunt. Aut igitur negent naturam divinitatis in Christo, aut quae divinae naturae sunt, Deo negare non possunt. 16. Certe ne quis possit errare, sequatur ea quibus Scriptura sancta, ut intelligere possimus Filium, significavit. Verbum dicitur, Filius dicitur, Dei virtus dicitur, dicitur Dei sapientia. Verbum, quia immaculatus: virtus, quia perfectus; Filius, quia genitus ex Patre: sapientia, quia unum cum Patre, unum aeternitate, unum divinitate. Non enim Pater ipse, qui Filius: sed inter Patrem et Filium generationis expressa distinctio est; ut ex Deo Deus, ex manente manens, plenus e pleno sit. 17. Non sunt igitur haec nuda nomina, sed operatricis virtutis indicia; est enim plenitudo divinitatis in Patre, est plenitudo divinitatis in Filio, non discrepans, sed una divinitas. Nec confusum, quod unum est: nec multiplex, quod indifferens. 18. Etenim si omnium credentium, sicut scriptum est (Act. IV, 32), erat anima una et cor unum: si omnis qui adhaeret Domino, unus spiritus est, ut Apostolus dixit (I Cor. VI, 27): si vir et uxor in carne una sunt: si omnes homines, quantum ad naturam pertinet, unius substantiae sumus: si hoc de humanis Scriptura dicit, quia multi unum sunt, quorum nulla potest esse cum divinis comparatio; quanto magis Pater et Filius divinitate unum sunt, ubi nec substantiae nec voluntatis ulla est differentia? 19. Namque aliter quomodo unum Deum dicemus? Diversitas plures facit, unitas potestatis excludit numeri quantitatem; quia unitas numerus non est, sed haec omnium ipsa principium est.

CAPUT III.

PATRIS AC FILII unitatem Scripturae testimoniis probat, et primo Esaiae locum aliorum comparatione ita illustrat, ut nullam a Patris natura in Filio inesse differentiam astruat, nisi quantum ad carnem, ac proinde unam utriusque deitatem esse. Quod ubi auctoritate Baruch confirmatum est, fidem prophetis hac in re habendam tradit. 20. Quantam vero Scriptura divina Patris et Filii secundum divinitatem expresserit unitatem, prophetica testantur oracula. Sic enim dicit Dominus sabaoth: Laboravit 448 Aegyptus, et mercatus Aethiopum et Sebaim: viri excelsi ad te transibunt, et tui erunt servi, et post te sequentur alligati vinculis, et adorabunt te, et in te deprecabuntur; quoniam in te est Deus, et non est Deus praeter te. Tu enim es Deus, et nesciebamus, Deus Israel (Esa. XLV, 14). 21. Audi propheticam vocem: In te, inquit, est Deus, et non est Deus praeter te. Quomodo hoc secundum Arianos convenit? Necesse est negent aut Patris aut Filii divinitatem, nisi ejusdem divinitatis crediderint unitatem. 22. In te, inquit, est Deus; quoniam in Filio Pater. Scriptum est enim: Pater qui in me manet, ipse loquitur; et: Opera quae ego facio, et ipse facit (Joan. V, 5). Sed et alibi in Patre Filius est, qui dicit: Ego in Patre, et Pater in me est (Joan. XIV, 10). Dissolvant, si possunt, hanc naturae proprietatem, et operis unitatem. 23. Deus igitur in Deo est, sed non duo dii; scriptum est enim, quia unus Deus (Deut. VI, 4): et Dominus in Domino, sed non duo Domini; quia aeque scriptum est: Nolite duobus dominis servire (Matth. VI, 24). Et lex dicit: Audi, Israel, Dominus Deus tuus Deus unus est (Deut. VI, 4). Et utique in eodem est Testamento: Pluit Dominus a Domino (Gen. XIX, 24). Dominus, inquit, a Domino pluit. Sic et in Genesi habes: Et dixit Deus, et fecit Deus; et infra: Et fecit Deus hominem ad imaginem Dei (Gen. I, 3, 26); sed tamen non duo Dii, sed unus Deus lecit. Utromque igitur unitas operationis servatur et nominis. Nam utique cum legimus, Deus ex Deo, non duos deos dicimus. 24. Denique habes in Psalmo quadragesimo quarto, quod et Deum Patrem dixit Propheta, et Deum Filium declaravit, dicens: Sedes tua, Deus, in saeculum saeculi; et infra: Unxit te Deus Deus tuus oleo laetitiae prae consortibus tuis (Psal XLIV, 7, 8). Deus est qui ungit, et Deus qui secundum carnem ungitur Dei Filius. Denique quos habet unctionis suae Christus nisi in carne consortes? Vides igitur quia Deus a Deo unctus: sed in assumptione naturae unctus humanae Dei Filius designatur, nec Legis forma violatur. 25. Et hic ergo cum dicitur: Pluit Dominus a Domino, unitatem divinitatis agnosce. Operationis enim unitas non facit pluralem divinitatem, sicut ipse Dominus ostendit, dicens: Credite mihi, quia ego in Patre, et Pater in me: alioquin vel propter opera ipsa credite (Joan. X, 38). Et hic advertimus quod unitatem divinitatis per unitatem operum designaverit. 26. Ut autem una deitas et Patris et Filii, et una dominatio probaretur; ne gentilis aut Judaicae impietatis incurreremus errorem, providens Apostolus, quid sequi deberemus ostendit dicens: Unus Deus Pater, ex quo omnia, et nos in ipso: et unus Dominus Jesus Christus, per quem omnia, et nos per ipsum (I Cor. VIII, 6). Sicut enim unum dicendo Dominum Jesum Christum, Patrem Dominum non negavit; ita unum dicendo Deum Patrem, aeque a deitatis veritate nec Filium separavit. Unde nec pluralitatem divinitatis, sed unitatem potestatis ostendit; quia et in dominatione divinitas, et in divinitate dominatus est; sicut scriptum est: Scitote quoniam 449 Dominus ipse est Deus; ipse fecit nos, et non ipsi nos (Psal. XCIX, 3). 27. In te igitur est Deus, per unitatem naturae: et non est Deus praeter te, per proprietatem substantiae, repulsa differentia. 28. In Hieremiae quoque libro unum Deum Scriptura dicit, et tamen et Patrem et Filium confitetur. Itaque sic habes: Hic Deus noster, et non reputabitur alius ad eum. Hic adinvenit omnem viam disciplinae, et dedit eam Jacob puero suo, et Israel dilecto suo. Post haec in terris visus est, et cum hominibus conversatus est (Baruc. III, 36, 37). 29. De Filio dicit: Ipse enim est cum hominibus conversatus; et dicit: Hic Deus noster, et non aestimabitur alius ad eum. Quid discutimus eum, de quo tantus dicit propheta, quod ad eum non possit alius aestimari? Quae enim potest esse alia aestimatio, ubi deitatis unitas est? Confitebatur hoc populus in periculis constitutus: nesciebat serere quaestiones qui religionem timebat. 30. Adesto, sancte Spiritus, prophetis tuis, quibus inesse consuesti, quibus credimus. Si prophetis non credimus, sapientibus credam hujus mundi? Sed ubi sapiens, ubi scriba? Rusticus noster cum ficus insereret, invenit quod philosophus ignoravit. Quae stulta sunt enim hujus mundi, elegit Deus, ut confundat quae sunt fortia (I Cor. I, 27). Credimus Judaeis, quia notus aliquando in Judaea Deus (Psal. LXXV, 2)? Sed hoc ipsum negant propter quod credimus, quia non norunt Patrem, qui Filium negaverunt.

CAPUT IV.

Argumentis aliquot ad probandam Dei unitatem collectim propositis, in tribus magorum muneribus Christi divinitatem humanitatemque adumbratas ostendit; non secus ac in angelo cum tribus pueris inter flammas deambulante, divinitatis ac trinitatis veritatem. 31. Unum Deum communis natura testatur, quia unus est mundus. Unum Deum fides significat, quia una fides novi et veteris Testamenti. Unum Spiritum sanctum testificatur gratia, quia unum baptisma in nomine Trinitatis est. Unum Deum Prophetae dicunt, Apostoli audiunt. Unum Deum Magi crediderunt, et aurum, thus et myrrham supplices ad Christi cunabula detulerunt, auro regem fatentes, ut Deum thure venerantes. Thesaurus enim regni, sacrificium Dei, myrrha est sepulturae. 32. Quid igitur voluerunt sibi mystica munera inter abjecta praesepia, nisi ut intelligeremus in Christo differentiam divinitatis et carnis? 450 Ut homo cernitur, ut Dominus adoratur: jacet in pannis, sed fulget in stellis: cunae nascentem indicant, et stellae dominantem: caro est quae involvitur: divinitas, cui ab angelis ministratur. Ita nec dignitas naturalis majestatis amittitur, et assumptae carnis veritas comprobatur. 33. Haec est fides nostra. Sic se Deus cognosci voluit ab omnibus, sic tres pueri crediderunt, nec incendia circumjecta senserunt; cum infidos noxius ignis exureret, et fidelibus innoxia flamma roraret, quibus aliorum incendia refrigerabant; quia merito fidei perdiderat suam poena naturam. Aderat enim in specie angeli qui monebat ut in numero Trinitatis, unius esset laudatio potestatis. Benedicebatur Deus, videbatur in angelo Dei Filius, sancta et spiritalis in pueris gratia loquebatur.

CAPUT V.

Arianorum variae in Christum blasphemiae referuntur, quibus antequam respondeatur, monentur Catholici caveant a sophismatis philosophorum; eo quod scilicet in illis haeretici spem praecipuam collocarent. 34. [Alias cap. III.] Nunc consideremus quas Ariani de Dei Filio inferant quaestiones. 35. Dissimilem Patri dicunt esse Dei Filium. Hoc si homini objiciatur, injuria est. 36. Ex tempore coepisse dicunt Dei Filium; cum conditor ipse sit temporum. Homines sumus, et esse nolumus temporales. Ex tempore coepimus, et sine tempore futuros esse nos credimus. Fieri nos optamus aeternos, et quomodo negare possumus Dei Filium sempiternum, quem sempiternum docet atque demonstrat natura, non gratia? 37. Creatum dicunt. Quis auctorem inter opera sua deputet, ut videatur id esse quod fecit? 38. Bonum negant. Sacrilega vox ipsa se damnat, ut indulgentiam sperare non possit. 39. Negant verum Dei Filium, negant omnipotentem; cum fateantur omnia facta per Filium, omnia creata per Dei esse virtutem. Quid est enim virtus, nisi perfecta natura? 40. Negant etiam divinitate unum esse cum Patre. Deleant ergo Evangelium, deleant Christi vocem. Ipse enim dixit: Ego et Pater unum sumus (Joan. X, 30). Non ego hoc dico, Christus dixit. Numquid fallax, ut mentiretur? Numquid impius, ut quod non erat usurparet? Sed singula suis locis plenius digerentur. 41. Nunc quoniam haereticus dicit esse dissimilem, idque versutis disputationibus astruere nititur, dicendum est nobis quod scriptum est: 451 Cavete ne quis vos depraedetur per philosophiam, et inanem seductionem secundum traditionem hominum, et secundum elementa hujus mundi, et non secundum Christum: quia in ipso habitat omnis plenitudo divinitatis corporaliter (Coloss. II, 8, 9). 42. Omnem enim vim venenorum suorum in dialectica disputatione constituunt, quae philosophorum sententia definitur non astruendi vim habere, sed studium destruendi. Sed non in dialectica complacuit Deo salvum facere populum suum: Regnum enim Dei in simplicitate fidei est, non in contentione sermonis (I Cor. IV, 20).

CAPUT VI.

Christum Patri dissimilem non esse probaturus, memoratis celebrioribus Arianorum ducibus, quam male inter eos conveniat, aperit, atque adversus eos, tamquam in monstra quaedam, praesidium Scripturarum ostendit. 43. [Alias cap. IV.] Dissimilem igitur dicunt esse: nos negamus; immo potius horremus hanc vocem. Sed nolo argumento credas, sancte Imperator, et nostrae disputationi: Scripturas interrogemus, interrogemus apostolos, interrogemus prophetas, interrogemus Christum. Quid multa? Patrem interrogemus, cujus honori studere se dicunt, si Filius degener judicetur. Sed non est honorificentia boni Patris, Filii injuria. Non potest bono Patri placere, si Filius degenerasse potius a Patre, quam Patrem aequasse credatur. 44. Da veniam, sancte Imperator, si ad ipsos paulisper verba converto. Sed quem potissimum legam Eunomiumne, an Arium, vel Aetium ejus magistros? Plura enim nomina, sed una perfidia, impietate non dissonans, communione discordans: non dissimilis fraude, sed coitione discreta. Cur enim secum nolint convenire, non intelligo. 452 45. Eunomii personam defugiunt Ariani, sed ejus perfidiam asserunt, impietatem exsequuntur. Aiunt eum prodidisse effusius, quae Arius scripserit. Magna caecitatis effusio! Auctorem probant, exsecutorem refutant. Itaque nunc in plures sese divisere formas. Alii Eunomium, vel Aetium, alii Palladium, vel Demophilum atque Auxentium, vel perfidiae hujus haeredes sequuntur, alii diversos. Numquid divisus est Christus? Sed qui eum a Patre dividunt, ipsi se scindunt. 46. Et ideo quoniam communiter adversus Ecclesiam Dei, quibus inter seipsos non convenit, conspirarunt, communi nomine haereticos, quibus respondendum est, nominabo. Haeresis enim, velut quaedam Hydra fabularum, vulneribus suis crevit: et dum saepe reciditur, pullulavit, igni debita, incendioque peritura: aut velut quaedam monstruosi Scylla portenti in varias formas distincta perfidiae, velut supervacuum Christianae sectae nomen obtendit: sed quos in illo impietatis suae freto miseros inter naufragia fidei reperit fluctuantes, belluinis succincta prodigiis, tetri dogmatis saevo dente dilacerat. 47. Cujus speluncam, sancte Imperator, ut ferunt nautae, caecis latebris inhorrentem, omnemque ejus viciniam caeruleis canibus inter perfidiae saxa resonantem, clausa quodammodo praeterire aure debemus. Scriptum est enim: Sepi aures tuas spinis (Eccl. XXVIII, 28). Et alibi: Videte canes, videte malos operarios (Philip. III, 2). Et iterum: Haereticum hominem post primam correptionem devita, sciens quia subversus est qui ejusmodi est, et delinquit, cum sit proprio judicio damnatus (Tit. III, 10, 11). Itaque tamquam boni gubernatores quo tutius praetermeare possimus, fidei vela tendamus, Scripturarumque relegamus ordinem. 453

CAPUT VII.

EX PAULO, PROPHETIS atque Evangelio Christus asseritur Patri similis; maxime vero ex hominis ad similitudinem divinam creatione. 48. Apostolus dicit imaginem Patris Christum esse; ait enim quod ipse sit imago Dei invisibilis, primogenitus universae creaturae (Coloss. I, 15). Primogenitus, inquit, non primocreatus; ut et genitus pro natura, et primus pro perpetuitate credatur. Alibi quoque Apostolus asseruit quod ipsum posuit haeredem omnium, per quem fecit et saecula, qui est splendor gloriae, et character substantiae ejus (Hebr. I, 2). Imaginem Apostolus dicit, et Arius dicit esse dissimilem: cur imago, si similitudinem non habet? in picturis homines nolunt esse dissimiles, et Arius dissimilem Patrem contendit Filio, et vult ut Pater dissimilem genuerit sui, quasi impotens qui generare similem non potuerit. 49. Prophetae dicunt: In lumine tuo videbimus lumen (Psal. XXXV, 10). Prophetae dicunt: Splendor est enim lucis aeternae, et speculum sine macula Dei majestatis, et imago bonitatis illius (Sap. VII, 26). Vide quanta dicantur. Splendor; quod claritas paternae lucis in Filio sit: speculum sine macula; quod Pater videatur in Filio: imago bonitatis; quod non corpus in corpore, sed virtus in Filio tota cernatur. Imago docet non esse dissimilem, character expressum esse significat, splendor signat aeternum. Imago utique non vultus est corporalis, non fucis composita, non ceris: sed simplex de Deo, egressa de Patre, expressa de fonte. 50. Per hanc imaginem Philippo Patrem Dominus demonstravit, dicens: Philippe, qui me videt, videt et Patrem. Et quomodo tu dicis: Ostende nobis Patrem? Non credis quia ego in Patre, et Pater in me est (Joan. XIV, 9 et 10)? Videt enim in imagine Patrem, qui videt in Filio. Vides quam imaginem dicat? Imago ista veritas est, imago ista justitia est, imago ista Dei virtus est: non muta, quia Verbum est: non insensibilis, quia sapientia est: non inanis, quia virtus est: non vacua, quia vita est: non mortua, quia resurrectio est. Vides ergo quia dum imago dicitur, Patrem significat esse cujus imago sit Filius; quia nemo potest ipse sibi imago sua esse. 51. Plura possem de Filii testimoniis dicere, sed ne forte ipse sibi nimium favisse dicatur, Patrem interrogemus. Nempe ipse dixit: Faciamus hominem ad imaginem et similitudinem nostram (Gen. I, 26). Pater Filio dicit: Ad imaginem et similitudinem nostram; et tu dissimilem Filium Dei dicis? 52. Joannes dicit: Dilecti, filii Dei sumus, et nondum apparet quid erimus: scimus quia si revelatum fuerit, similes ei erimus (I Joan. III, 2). O improvida amentia! o impudens pervicacia! Homines sumus, et in quo possumus, ad similitudinem Dei erimus; et similem audemus Dei Filium denegare? 454 53. Ergo Pater dixit: Faciamus hominem ad imaginem et similitudinem nostram. In principio ipsius mundi Patrem et Filium esse audio, et unum opus cerno. Audio loquentem, agnosco facientem; sed et Patris et Filii unam imaginem, unam similitudinem lego. Similitudo haec non diversitatis, sed unitatis est. Quod igitur tibi usurpas, Filio Dei derogas; cum utique nisi per imaginem Dei, ad imaginem Dei esse non possis.

CAPUT VIII.

EX PROBATA FILII cum Patre similitudine, eumdem aeternum etiam esse haud aegre demonstrari, quod nihilominus astruitur e prophetia Esaiae, ac Joannis Evangelio; cujus ultimi auctoritate obrui haeresiarchae declarantur. 54. [Alias cap. V.] Claret igitur non esse dissimilem, et ideo proclivior via est, ut etiam sempiternum esse fateamur, cum similis sempiterni utique sempiternus sit. Si autem Patrem sempiternum dicimus, et hoc idem Filium denegamus, dicimus esse dissimilem; sempiterno enim temporale dissimile est. Clamat Propheta sempiternum, clamat et Apostolus sempiternum: plenum est vetus Testamentum testimoniis Filii sempiterni, plenum est novum. 55. Ordinem ergo teneamus. Scriptum est in veteri Testamento, ut vel unum de pluribus dicam: Ante me non fuit alius Deus, et post me non erit (Esai. XLIII, 10). Nihil ergo argumentabor, teipsum interrogo. Quis hoc dicit, Pater, an Filius? Utrum dixeris, eo te convinci intelliges: vel si credas, doceri? Quis ergo hoc dicit, Pater, an Filius? Si Filius: Ante me, inquit, non fuit alius Deus: Si Pater: Post me, inquit, non erit. Hic priorem, ille posteriorem non habet: invicem in se et Pater in Filio, et Filius in Patre cognoscitur. Cum enim Patrem dixeris, ejus etiam Filium designasti; quia nemo ipse sibi pater est: cum Filium nominas, etiam Patrem ejus fateris; quia nemo ipse sibi filius est. Itaque nec Filius sine Patre, nec Pater potest esse sine Filio. Semper igitur Pater, semper et Filius. 56. In principio enim erat Verbum, et Verbum erat apud Deum, et Deus erat Verbum, hoc erat in principio apud Deum (Joan. I, 1). Erat, inquit, apud Deum. Erat, erat, erat, erat: ecce quater erat. Ubi impius invenit quod non erat? Alibi quoque Joannes in epistola sua dicit: Quod erat in principio (I Joan. I, 1); indefinite tenditur, erat: quidquid excogitaveris, erat Filius. 57. Omnes autem haereses hoc capitulo brevi piscator noster exclusit. Quod enim erat in principio, non includitur tempore, non principio praevenitur. Ergo Arius conticescat. Quod autem erat apud Deum, non permixtione confunditur: sed manentis Verbi apud Patrem solida perfectione distinguitur, ut Sabellius obmutescat. Et Deus erat Verbum. Non ergo in prolatione sermonis hoc Verbum est, sed in illa coelestis designatione virtutis, ut confutetur 455 Photinus. Quod vero erat in principio apud Deum, sempiternae divinitatis in Patre et Filio inseparabilis unitas edocetur ut erubescat Eunomius. Postremo cum omnia per ipsum facta dicantur, ipse conditor novi utique Testamenti et veteris designatur; ut Manichaeus locum tentationis habere non possit. Ita piscator bonus intra unum omnes rete conclusit; ut faceret inhabiles fraudi, quamvis essent inutiles captioni.

CAPUT IX.

Haereticos interrogat Vir sanctus, ostensaque illorum responsione, qua Filium omni quidem tempore priorem, Patre autem posteriorem esse affirmabant, in Deum induci mutationem, aeternitatem utrique personae tribuendam colligit. 58. Dic mihi, haeretice, dat enim veniam elementissimus imperator, ut te non colloquendi studio, nec audiendi cupiditate, sed exponendi gratia, paulisper alloquar: dic mihi, inquam, fuitne aliquando tempus quo omnipotens Deus Pater non erat, et Deus erat? Tempus, inquis, non astruo. Bene et argute. Si enim tempus dixeris, te ipse convinces: quia necesse est asseras fuisse tempus ante Filium, cum Filius temporis auctor sit et creator; non potest enim post opus suum ipse coepisse: necesse est igitur auctorem operis sui esse fatearis. 59. Ante tempora, inquis, non nego Filium: sed cum Filium dico, ostendo priorem Patrem, quia Pater, inquis, Filio prior. Quid est hoc? Negas esse tempus ante Filium, et tamen nescio quid ante Filium vis praecessise, quod temporis sit; et ostendis media nescio quae molimina fuisse generandi, in quo generationem Patris significas temporalem. Nam si Pater esse coepit, Deus ergo primo erat, postea Pater factus est. Quomodo ergo immutabilis Deus? Si enim ante Deus, postea Pater: utique generationis accessione mutatus est. 60. Sed avertat Deus hanc amentiam; nos enim ad impietatem eorum redarguendam, hanc retulimus quaestionem. Pia namque mens generationem sine tempore asserit; ut et sempiternum Patrem cum Filio dicat, nec aliquando asserat esse mutatum. 61. Jungat igitur honorificentia Patri Filium, quem divinitas junxit: non separet impietas, quem generationis proprietas copulavit. Honorificemus Filium, ut honorificemus et Patrem, sicut et in Evangelio scriptum est (Joan. V, 23). Sempiternitas Filii Paternae majestatis insigne est. Si iste non semper fuit, ergo ille mutatus est: sed semper fuit Filius, ergo nec Pater aliquando mutatus est; quia immutabilis semper est. Itaque videmus quod illi qui volunt negare Filium sempiternum, volunt Patrem docere esse mutatum. 456

CAPUT X.

Ubi Christi aeternitatem confirmavit ex Apostolo, Divinam generationem non ad humanae modulum exigendam, aut curiosius excutiendam, at declinatis quae hinc nascuntur, difficultatibus, quidquid more corporeo de hac generatione dicitur, spiritali sensu intelligendum esse declarat. 62. Accipe aliud quo clareat Filium sempiternum. Apostolus dicit quod Dei sempiterna virtus sit atque divinitas (Rom. I, 20): virtus autem Dei Christus; scriptum est enim Christum esse Dei virtutem, et Dei sapientiam (I Cor. I, 24). Ergo si Christus est Dei virtus, quia virtus Dei sempiterna: sempiternus igitur et Christus. 63. Non ergo ex usu generationis humanae calumniam, haeretice, struas; neque ex nostro sermone componas. Neque enim angustis sermonibus nostris immensae magnitudinem possumus divinitatis includere, cujus magnitudinis non est finis (Ps. CXLIV, 3). Namque hominis generationem si definire contendas, tempus ostendis: generatio autem divina supra omnia est: late patet, supra omnes cogitationes ascendit et sensus. Scriptum est enim: Nemo venit ad Patrem, nisi per me (Joan. XIV, 6). Quidquid igitur de Patre cogitaveris, quamlibet ejus aeternitatem, non potes de eo aliquid nisi per Filium cogitare: nec potest ullus ad Patrem nisi per Filium transire sensus. Hic est, inquit, Filius meus dilectissimus (Matth. XVII, 5). Est, inquit, qui quod est, semper est. Unde et David: In aeternum, inquit, Domine, permanet Verbum tuum in coelo (Ps. CXVIII, 89). Quod enim manet, nec substantia, nec aeternitate deficit. 64. Quaeris a me quomodo Filius sit, si non priorem habeat Patrem? Quaero item abs te, quando aut quomodo Filium putes esse generatum? Mihi enim impossibile est generationis scire secretum: mens deficit, vox silet, non mea tantum, sed et angelorum. Supra Potestates, supra Angelos, supra Cherubim, supra Seraphim, supra omnem sensum est; quia scriptum est; Pax autem Christi quae est supra omnem sensum (Phil. IV, 7). Si pax Christi supra omnem sensum est, quemadmodum non est supra omnem sensum tanta generatio? 65. Tu quoque manum ori admove, scrutari non licet superna mysteria. Licet scire quod natus sit: non licet discutere quemadmodum natus sit. Illud negare mihi non licet, hoc quaerere metus est. Nam si Paulus ea quae audivit raptus in tertium coelum, ineffabilia dicit, quomodo nos exprimere possumus paternae generationis arcanum, quod nec sentire potuimus, nec audire? 66. Verum si me ad consuetudinem trahis generationis humanae, ut Patrem dicas priorem; vide utrum ad generationem Dei terrenae generationis exempla conveniant. Si secundum hominem loquamur, negare non poteris priores esse in homine patris quam filii passiones. 457 Prior crevit, prior senuit, prior doluit, prior flevit. Si igitur hic tempore minor, ille antiquior passione. Si hic generationis incurrit aetatem, nec ille generandi evasit pudorem. 67. Quid te ista quaestionum tormenta delectant? Audis Dei Filium: aut dele nomen, aut agnosce naturam. Audis uterum, agnosce generationis perspicuae veritatem. Audis cor, Verbum intellige. Audis dexteram, agnosce virtutem. Audis os, agnosce sapientiam. Non haec sunt in Deo corporaliter aestimanda. Incomprehensibiliter generatur Filius: impassibiliter generat Pater; et tamen ex se generavit, et ante omnem intellectum generavit Deus verus Deum verum. Pater diligit, et tu discutis: Pater complacet, et tu cum Judaeis invides: Pater honorificat, et tu cum gentibus conviciaris.

CAPUT XI.

Non posse probari e Scriptura Patrem Filio priorem esse; neque etiam argumentis ex hominum generatione desumptis; cum inde innumera secutura essent absurda: quod autem Christum ex tempore natum audent pronuntiare, id cumulum esse impietatis. 68. Quaeris a me utrum prior non possit esse, qui Pater est. Quaero a te, ut doceas quando Pater prior fuerit, testimoniis, aut argumentis collige veritatem. Si testimoniis, accepisti utique sempiternam Dei esse virtutem. Legisti etiam dicentem: Israel, si me audieris, non erit in te Deus recens, neque adorabis Deum alienum (Ps. LXXX, 10). Aliud horum aeternitatem, aliud proprietatem substantiae indifferentis significat; ut neque posteriorem Patre, neque alterius divinitatis Filium esse credamus. Nam si Patre posterior est, recens est: et si unius non est divinitatis, alienus est. Sed nec posterior; quia recens non est: nec alienus, quia ex Patre natus; quia supra omnia est Deus benedictus in saecula (Rom. IX, 5), sicut scriptum est. 69. Sed si alienum putant, cur adorant eum, cum scriptum sit: Neque adorabis Deum alienum (Ps. LXXX, 10)? Aut si non adorant, fateantur, et finis est; ne quem sub religiosi nominis professione decipiant. Haec nempe sunt testimonia Scripturarum. Aut si habes aliud, proferre debebis. 70. Superest ut et argumentis veritas colligatur. Quamquam etiam humanis testimoniis argumenta cedere soleant; argumentare tamen, haeretice, ut voles. Usu, inquis, accipimus eo qui nascitur, priorem esse qui generat. Persequere igitur omnia vestigia consuetudinis, et sicaetera conveniunt, non obsisto quin et istud requiras: si autem nulla concordant, quemadmodum cum desint caetera, hoc solum exigis? Ergo quia usum requiris, quando generatus est ex Patre, parvulus fuit. Vidisti in cunis infantulum vagientem, processus aliquos accepit aetatis; si enim infirmitatem generationis habuit, necesse est 458 ut non solum nascendi, sed etiam vivendi inciderit infirmitatem. 71. Sed fortasse eo prolabaris amentiae, ut de Dei Filio ista non abnuas, qui eum ex infirmitate metiris humana; quid si Deum negare non potes nomine, infirmitate tamen hominem vis probare? Quid si dum Filium discutis, Patrem arguis: et dum Christo praejudicas, Patrem adjudicas? 72. Nam si divina generatio subjecta tempori fuit, et id ex usu generationis usurpatur humanae; ergo et Pater corporali utero portavit Filium, decem mensium curriculis onus vexit. Sed quomodo sine sexu altero generationis usus? Vides solemnem generationis seriem non coepisse, et tu partus cujusdam corporeae necessitatis putas fuisse solemnes. Tu usum quaeris, ego sexum: tu tempus exigis, ego ordinem: tu finem discutis, ego quaero principium, Nempe finis ex principio, non principium pendet ex fine. 73. Omne, inquis, quod natum est, principium habet; et ideo quia Filius est, principium habet, et ex tempore esse coepit. Quod ipsorum ore sit dictum. Ego autem Filium natum esse profiteor: quod reliquum est impietatis, horresco. Deum confiteris, homo, et tali circumscribis calumnia? Deus hanc averruncet amentiam.

CAPUT XII.

ITERATAE IN FILIUM objectioni iterum respondetur eam retorqueri etiam in Patrem posse; cum ergo Pater nec loco, nec tempore, aliave ulla creatura indigeat, sic nec eorum indigentiam attribuendam Filio: cujus singularis generatio est non solum e Patre, sed etiam e Virgine; proptereaque cum in hac non sexus aut similia locum habuerint, in illa quoque non habuisse. 74. Rursus objiciunt: Ergo non est Filius, si non habet quae habent filii. Ignoscat mihi Pater, ignoscat Filius, ignoscat et Spiritus sanctus, quaestionem pro pietate referre cupienti. Est certe Pater, et manet semper: sunt etiam creaturae pro dispositione divina. Est ergo aliquid earum quod non subjectum sit aut locis, aut temporibus, aut creationi, aut causae alicui vel auctori? Profecto nihil. Quid ergo dicitis? Est horum aliquid quo egeat Pater? Impium est dicere. Ergo aut desinite, quae creaturarum sunt, aptare divinitati: aut si comparare contenditis, considerate quo vestra procedat impietas; quod absit ut vel in sensus nostros aliquando veniat. 75. Nos enim piam responsionem tenemus. Namque omnipotens Deus est, et ideo nullo eorum Pater indiget, qui non habet mutationem sui aliquam, vel profectum quo nos egemus, quorum infirmitas ex hujusmodi rebus profectum accipit. Qui autem omnipotens est, 459 utique non creatus, et sine loco, et supra tempora est. Nihil enim ante Deum, immo hoc ipsum Verbum, ante Deum dicere esse aliquid, grave. Ergo si ita est, quia nihil horum est in Deo Patre, quae profectum significent; quia Deus est: nihil horum aptari etiam potest Dei Filio, ut vel initium accipiat, vel profectum; quia Deus verus ex Deo vero est. 76. Ergo quia usitatum non reperimus ordinem, acquiesce, Ariane, praecipuam Filii generationem fuisse. Acquiesce, inquam; et si mihi non credis, erubesce vel Dei vocem dicentis: Cui me similem aestimastis (Esai. XLVI, 5)? Et iterum: Quia non sicut homo, ita et Deus (Num. XXIII, 19). Etenim si operatio Dei praecipua est, quia non manibus operatur aliquid, non labore conficit, non diebus absolvit; Ipse enim dixit, et facta sunt, ipse mandavit, et creata sunt (Psal. CXLVIII, 5): cur non credamus praecipuam generationem esse ejus in Filio, cujus praecipuam creationem in operibus agnoscimus? Dignum certe est ut specialiter et praecipue videatur generasse Filium. Habeat generationis inusitatae gloriam, qui habet potestatis inusitatae gratiam. 77. Non sola admirabilis ex Patre generatio Christi, admirabilis etiam ipsa generatio ejus ex Virgine. Tu illam dicis nostrae similem conceptionis, et ego probo et istam nostrae esse dissimilem, immo te ipsum cogam fateri. Dic quemadmodum sit natus ex Maria, quo usu uterus eum habuerit virginalis, quomodo sine semine viri partus, unde virgo praegnans, quemadmodum puella mater ante fetus, quam copulam ut uxor experta? Causa deerat, et generabatur filius. Unde ergo legis novatae partus? 78. Si igitur in Virgine usus defuit generationis humanae, quemadmodum in Deo Patre propriae generationis usum requiris? Certe usus in sexu est, quia sexus in carne est: ubi ergo caro non est, quemadmodum carnis infirmitatem exigis? Nemo meliorem discutit: credere tibi jussum est, non discutere permissum est. Scriptum est enim: Credidit Abraham Deo, et reputatum est illi ad justitiam (Gen. XV, 6). Nec solum in generatione Filii sermo deficit, sed etiam in operibus Dei. Scriptum est enim: Omnia opera ejus in fide (Psal. XXXII, 4). Opera ergo in fide, generatio sine fide? Et discutimus quae non videmus, qui jubemur credere magis quam discutere, quae videmus.

CAPUT XIII.

QUAESTIONEM QUOMODO GENITUS sit Filius solvit sanctus Doctor; et revelationi credendum Nabuchodonosoris ac Petri exemplo docet. Hujus ultimi visione aeternitatem divinitatemque Filii signatam esse; atque adeo illi credendum neglectis philosophis, quibus jam ubique fides abrogabatur. Contra vero gentilibus ostenduntur similes Ariani. 79. Dicet aliquis: Quomodo generatus est Filius? Quasi sempiternus, quasi Verbum, 460 quasi splendor lucis aeternae, quia simul splendor operatur, ut nascitur. Apostoli istud exemplum est, non est meum. Noli ergo credere quod fuerit vel momentum aliquod quo fuerit sine sapientia Deus, aut sine splendore lux (Hebr. I, 3). Noli, Ariane, ex nostris aestimare divina: sed divina crede, ubi humana non invenis. 80. Rex gentilis in igne cum tribus pueris Hebraeis quarti quasi angeli vidit figuram: et quia praestare putabat angelis, Dei Filium, quem non legit, sed credidit, judicavit (Dan. III, 92). Abraham quoque tres vidit, et unum adoravit (Gen. XVIII, 2). 81. Petrus in monte Moysen et Eliam cum Filio Dei vidit, nec erravit in natura, nec erravit in gloria. Denique quid facere deberet, non illos, sed Christum interrogavit; nam etsi tribus parabat obsequium, unius tamen exspectabat imperium. Sed quoniam vel tabernaculorum numerum deferendum tribus simpliciter aestimavit, emendatur Dei Patris auctoritate dicentis: Hic est Filius meus dilectissimus, ipsum audite (Matth. XVII, 5), id est: Quid conservos tuos cum Domino socias tuo? Hic est Filius meus. Non Moyses filius, non Elias filius: sed hic Filius. Sensit emendationem apostolus, procidit in faciem, consternatus Patris voce, et Filii claritate: sed sublevatur a Filio, qui jacentes erigere consuevit. Unum vidit, solum vidit Dei Filium. Recesserunt enim servuli, ut solus Dominus, qui solus designabatur Filius, videretur. 82. Quid igitur sibi voluit illa visio, non aequalitatem Christi servorumque significans, sed mysterium signans, nisi ut appareret nobis quod Lex et Prophetae cum Evangelio congruentes, sempiternum Dei Filium, quem annuntiaverant, revelarent? Ergo et nos cum audimus ex utero Filium, ex corde Verbum, credamus quia non plasmatus manibus, sed ex Patre natus: non artificis opus, sed progenies est parentis. 83. Et ideo qui dicit: Hic est Filius meus, non dixit: Hic est temporalis; non dixit: Haec est creatura mea, haec factura mea, hic servus meus; sed hic Filius meus, quem videtis in gloria. Hic est Deus Abraham, Deus Isaac, Deus Jacob, qui apparuit in rubo Moysi, de quo Moyses ait: Qui est, misit me (Exod. III, 14). Non Pater in rubo, non Pater in eremo: sed Filius Moysi locutus est. Denique de ipso Stephanus dixit: Hic est qui fuit in Ecclesia, in eremo, cum angelo (Act. VII, 38). Hic est ergo qui Legem dedit, ipse qui locutus est Moysi, dicens: Ego sum Deus Abraham, Deus Isaac, Deus Jacob (Exod. III, 16). Hic est ergo Deus patriarcharum, hic Deus est prophetarum. 84. Filium ergo legimus: mens tua percipit lectionem, edat lingua confessionem. Aufer hinc argumenta, ubi fides quaeritur: in ipsis gymnasiis suis jam dialectica taceat. Non quaero quid loquantur philosophi, requiro quid faciant. Soli in suis gymnasiis remanserunt. Vide 461 quam fides argumentis praeponderet. Illi quotidie a suis consortibus deseruntur, qui copiose disputant: isti quotidie crescunt, qui simpliciter credunt. Non creditur philosophis, creditur piscatoribus: non creditur dialecticis, creditur publicanis. Illi voluptatibus et deliciis orbem ligarunt, isti jejuniis et doloribus exuerunt. Plures itaque jam coepit illicere injuria, quam voluptas. 85. Nunc videamus quo distant a gentilibus Ariani. Illi deos appellant dispares sexu, dissimiles potestate: isti Trinitatem asserunt differentis divinitatis, et dissimilis potestatis. Illi deorum suorum principium asseverant temporale; et isti Christum coepisse ex tempore mentiuntur. Nonne ex philosophia omnem impietatis suae traxerunt colorem? Illi tamen quod venerantur, amplificant: isti Dei Filium creaturam asserunt esse, qui Deus est.

CAPUT XIV.

CREATURAM NON ESSE Dei Filium hinc astruitur, quod non jusserit sibi praedicari Evangelium, quod creatura vanitati subdita sit, quod omnia creaverit, quod legatur genitus, quod tandem tradita fuerit generationis et adoptionis differentia: ubi utraque natura in ipso declaratur. Quae tot ac tanta testimonia Apostolici expositione confirmantur. 86. [Alias cap. VI.] Patuit, ut arbitror, sancte Imperator, neque dissimilem Patri, neque ex tempore esse Dominum Jesum. Restat ut illud quoque sacrilegium redarguatur, et probemus creaturam non esse Dei Filium: in quo nobis praesentis oraculum lectionis aspirat; audivimus enim legi, dicente Domino: Ite in orbem universum, et praedicate Evangelium universae creaturae (Marc. LXVI, 15). Qui universam creaturam dicit, nullam excipit. Et ideo ubi sunt, qui creaturam Christum appellant? Nam si creatura esset, numquid ipse sibi mandaret Evangelium praedicari? Non igitur creatura est, sed creator, qui docendae creaturae discipulis suis mandat officium. 87. Non creatura Christus: Vanitati enim creatura subjecta est, sicut Apostolus dixit (Rom. VIII, 20). Numquid ergo Christus subjectus est vanitati? Rursus juxta eumdem Apostolum: Creatura congemiscit et comparturit usque nunc (Ibid., 22). Numquid ergo Christus congemiscit et comparturit, qui nostros a morte gemitus liberavit? Creatura, inquit, liberabitur a servitute corruptionis (Ibid., 21). Videmus igitur magnam inter creaturam et Dominum esse distantiam; quia servitus creatura est; Dominus autem spiritus est; ubi autem spiritus Domini est, ibi libertas (II Cor. III, 17). 88. Quis hunc induxit errorem, ut eum qui creavit omnia, qui fecit omnia, diceret creaturam? Numquid ipse Dominus se creavit? Si enim lectum est quod per ipsum omnia facta sunt, et sine ipso factum est nihil (Joan. I, 3): numquid ipse se fecit? 462 Si lectum est, quod negari non potest, quia Deus in sapientia fecit omnia: numquid verisimile videri potest quia in se ipsa est facta sapientia (Psal. CIII, 24)? 89. Legimus genitum; quia Pater dixit: Ego ex utero ante Luciferum genui te (Psal. CIX, 3). Legimus primogenitum (Matth. I, 25): Filium, legimus unigenitum (Joan. I, 14)? primogenitum, quia nemo ante ipsum: unigenitum, quia nemo post ipsum: legimus etiam: Generationem ejus quis enarrabit (Esai. LIII, 8? Generationem, inquit, non creationem. Quid his tantis ac talibus conferri potest. 90. Ostendit etiam Dei Filius distantiam generationis et gratiae, dicens: Ascendo ad Patrem meum, et Patrem vestrum: Deum meum, et Deum vestrum (Joan. XX, 17). Non dixit: Ascendo ad Patrem nostrum, sed: Ascendo ad Patremmeum, et Patrem vestrum. Separatio ista diversitatem ostendit, quod illius generator, noster creator sit. 91. Et addidit: Deum meum, et Deum vestrum; quia licet ipse et Pater unum sint, et illi Pater sit proprietate naturae, nobis Deus Pater coeperit esse per Filium, non naturae jure, sed gratiae; tamen utramque naturam hic significare videtur in Christo et divinitatis et carnis, divinitatis ex Patre, carnis ex matre, illamque ante omnia, istamque ex Virgine. Denique ante Patrem ut Filius nominavit, Deum postea ut homo nuncupavit. 92. Ubique autem Deum suum quod ex persona dicat hominis, testimonia docent: Deus, Deus meus, respice me; quare me dereliquisti (Psal. XXI, 1)? Et alibi: De ventre matris meae Deus meus es tu (Ibid., 11). Et supra quasi homo patitur: et infra homo est, qui ex matris ventre jactatur. Itaque cum dicit: De ventre matris meae Deus meus es tu; significat cum qui Pater semper erat, ex eo Deum sibi esse, ex quo de ventre matris jactatus est. 93. Cum igitur in Evangelio, in Apostolo, in prophetis generationem Christi legerimus, unde audent dicere creatum esse vel factum? Et quidem in quo creatum legerint, in quo factum, considerare deberent. Edoctum est enim Dei Filium de Deo esse genitum, de Deo natum: factum autem in quo legerint, diligenter advertant; non enim Deus factus, sed Deus Dei Filius natus est: postea autem secundum carnem homo factus ex Maria est. 94. Si mihi non credunt, credant Apostolo dicenti: Postquam vero venit plenitudo temporis, misit Deus Filium suum factum ex muliere, factum sub Lege (Galat. IV, 4). Filium, inquit, suum, non unum de multis: non communem, sed suum. Suum cum dicit, generationis aeternae proprietatem signavit. Hunc postea factum ex muliere asseruit, ut factura non divinitati, sed assumptioni corporis ascriberetur: factum ex muliere per carnis susceptionem: factum sub Lege per observantiam Legis: generatio autem illa coelestis ante Legem, ista post Legem (Conc. Chalcedon. act. I, in exposit. fid. Nic.). 463

CAPUT XV.

Duobus Scripturae locis quibus factus et creatus Christus dicitur, ut satisfaciat sanctus Praesul: illos non nisi secundum naturam hominis ipsi convenire declarat: in quibus etiam praeteritum pro futuro positum esse ex sacrorum codicum auctoritate planum facit. 95. [Alias cap. VII.] Unde et illud vane jactare consuerunt quod scriptum est: Et Dominum eum et Christum fecit Deus. Imperiti legant totum, et intelligant; sic enim scriptum est: Et Dominum eum fecit, et Christum fecit Deus hunc Jesum, quem vos crucifixistis (Act. II, 36). Non divinitas crucifixa, sed caro est. Hoc utique fieri potuit, quod potuit crucifigi. Non ergo factura Dei Filius. 96. Facessat igitur et illud, de quo calumniari solent, et discant quemadmodum dictum sit: Dominus creavit me. (Prov. VIII, 22). Non dixit: Pater creavit, sed Dominus creavit me. Caro Dominum agnoscit, gloria Patrem significat: creatura nostra Dominum confitetur, charitas Patrem novit. Itaque quis ignoret quia ob causam incorporationis hoc dicitur? In eo igitur se creatum dicit, in quo et hominem testificatur dicens: Quid me quaeritis occidere hominem, qui veritatem locutus sum vobis (Joan. VII, 20)? Hominem dicit, in quo et crucifixus et mortuus, et sepultus est. 97. Nec dubitandum quod praeteritum posuit, quod erat futurum: haec enim consuetudo est prophetiae, ut quae futura sunt, vel quasi praesentia, vel quasi facta dicantur. Denique in psalmo XXI legisti: Tauri pingues obsederunt me (Psal. XXI, 13); legisti etiam: Diviserunt sibi vestimenta mea (Ibid., 19): quod evangelista de tempore passionis prophetatum esse significat; Deo enim quae sunt futura, praesentia sunt: et ei cui praecognita sunt omnia, ventura pro factis sunt, sicut scriptum est: Qui fecit quae ventura sunt (Esai. XLV). 98. Nec mirum si ante saecula fundatum se esse dicit, cum legeris praedestinatum ante tempora saecularia. Quam vere de incarnatione id videatur expressum, declarant sequentia: Sapientia, inquit, aedificavit sibi domum, et subdidit columnas septem, et interfecit suas hostias: miscuit in cratera vinum suum, et paravit suam mensam; et misit suos servos, convocans cum altissima praedicatione, dicens: Qui est insipiens declinet ad me (Prov. IX, 1 et seq.). Nonne in Evangelio post incarnationem haec omnia videmus esse completa, quod sacri convivii celebravit mysteria, quod apostolos misit, voce magna clamavit dicens: Si quis sitit, veniat ad me, et bibat (Joan. VII, 37)? Ergo sequentia respondent prioribus, et totius cursum incarnationis videmus prophetiae expositione digestum. 99. Multa alia documenta praesto esse possent hujusmodi de incarnatione dicta videri: sed non me involvo libris, ne tractatus videatur esse diffusior. 464

CAPUT XVI.

ARIANOS, SI CREATUM et genitum illis idem sit, Christo inferre injuriam: sin autem illa distare credant, quem legerint genitum, creaturae loco non habendum. Hoc Pauli ne creaturae serviatur, prohibentis; Christi tamen se servum esse profitentis, testimonio confirmari: cui potius credendum quam Ario. Subditur etiam creaturam in Deo non esse, cum simplex sit: nec Filium in creaturae ordinem redigendum; cum in eo Patri complaceat. 100. Nunc ipsos Arianos interrogo, utrum idem putent esse genitum, quod creatum? Si enim idem dicunt, nihil utique distat inter generare et creare. Ergo quoniam et nos creati sumus, inter nos et Christum et elementa nulla distantia est. Sed quamvis amentes sint, id tamen non audebunt dicere. 101. Postremo ut insipientiae eorum quod verum non est, indulgeam; si nihil, ut putant, distat in verbo: cur non eum quem colunt, meliore appellant nomine? cur verbo non utuntur Patris? cur abjiciunt quod honorificentiae est, assumunt quod injuriae? 102. Si autem distat inter creatum et genitum, ut ego arbitror, cum legerimus genitum, non utique idem et genitum intelligimus et creatum. Dicant igitur generatum ex Patre, ex Virgine procreatum: aut dicant quomodo Dei Filius et genitus et creatus. Una natura, et maxime Deus diversitatem non recipit. 103. Certe facessat nostra sententia: Paulum interrogemus, qui Spiritu Dei plenus has praevidens quaestiones; generaliter contra gentes, specialiter contra Arianos locutus, ait divino judicio eos esse damnatos, qui servirent creaturae potius quam Creatori. Denique sic habes: Tradidit illos Deus in desideria cordis ipsorum, ut contumeliis afficiant corpora sua inter semetipsos: qui commutaverunt veritatem Dei in mendacium, et coluerunt, et servierunt creaturae potius quam Creatori, qui est Deus benedictus in saecula (Rom. I, 24, 25). 104. Prohibet itaque me Paulus creaturae servire, et Christo admonet serviendum. Non ergo creatura Christus, Paulus, inquit, servus Jesu Christi (Ibid., 1). Et bonus servus qui Dominum recognoscit, ipse creaturae servire nos prohibet: quemadmodum ergo Christo ipse serviret, si creaturam Christum putaret? Aut igitur desinant colere quem creaturam appellant, aut desinant quem colere se simulant, dicere creaturam; ne sub appellatione cultorum sacrilegia graviora committant. Detestabilior enim domesticus hostis quam extraneus: et gravius scelus ut adversus Christum abutantur Christi nomine. 105. Quem igitur meliorem interpretem quaerimus Scripturarum, quam illum doctorem gentium, vas electionis, electum de persecutoribus? Qui Jesum persecutus fuerat, fatetur. Legerat 465 utique Salomonem plus quam Arius, et erat peritus in Lege; et ideo quia legerat, non creatum Christum dicit esse, sed genitum. Legerat enim: Ipse dixit, et facta sunt: ipse mandavit, et creata sunt (Psal. CXLVIII, 5). Numquid dicto factus est Christus? numquid mandato creatus est Christus? 106. Quomodo autem creatura in Deo esse potest? Etenim Deus naturae simplicis est, non conjunctae atque compositae: cui nihil accedat, sed solum quod divinum est in natura habeat sua: complens omnia, nusquam ipse confusus: penetrans omnia, nusquam ipse penetrandus: ubique totus, eodemque tempore vel in coelo, vel in terris, vel in novissimo maris praesens: visu incomprehensibilis, fatu ininterpretabilis, sensu inaestimabilis, fide sequendus, religione venerandus; ut quidquid religiosus sentiri potest, quidquid praestantius ad decorem, quidquid sublimius ad potestatem, hoc Deo intelligas convenire. 107. Ergo quia in Filio complacet Pater (Matth. XVII, 5), crede quia dignus Patre Filius, crede quia a Deo exivit Filius, ut ipse testatur dicens: Ex Deo processi, et veni (Joan. VIII, 42); et alibi: A Deo exivi (Joan. XVI, 27). Qui ex Deo processit, et a Deo exivit, nihil aliud potest habere, nisi quod Dei est.

CAPUT XVII.

CHRISTUM DEUM VERUM esse ex eo probat, quod sit proprius Dei Filius; praemissaque difficultatis suborientis solutione, eamdem rem inde confirmat, quod sit genitus, quodque ex Deo exierit. His subdit Patris ac Filii unitatem operationis ac voluntatis. Tum apostolis et Centurione quem cum Arianis contendit, in testimonium adductis Esaiam jungit ac Joannem. 108. Unde non solum Deus, sed etiam verus Deus, verus e vero, et adeo verus, ut ipse sit veritas. Itaque si nomen quaerimus, veritas est: si majestatem quaerimus naturalem, eo usque Filius Dei verus est, ut et proprius. Scriptum est enim: Qui proprio Filio non pepercit, sed pro nobis tradidit eum (Rom. VIII, 32): tradidit utique secundum carnem. Proprietas divinitatis est, veritas proprietatis, misericordia pietatis, oblatio securitatis. 109. Sed ne calumniarentur, quia scriptum est: Tradidit eum Pater; ipse Apostolus alibi dixit: Pax a Deo Patre, et Domino nostro Jesu Christo, qui se dedit pro peccatis nostris (Galat. I, 3, 4); et alibi: Sicut Christus dilexit nos, et tradidit semetipsum pro nobis (Ephes. V, 2). Si ergo et traditus est a Patre, et ipse se tradidit, apparet unam esse operationem, unam esse Patris et Filii voluntatem. 110. Si naturalem ergo majestatem quaerimus, genitus est. Qui genitum inficiatur, proprium negat: qui proprium abnuit, communem caeteris arbitratur. Sin vero generationis ipsius proprietatem requirimus, ex Deo exivit. Nam 466 cum in usu nostro id sit exire quod jam sit, et ex interioribus secretis prodire videatur, quod exire perhibetur: angustis licet sermonibus proprietatem divinae generationis advertimus; ut non ex loco aliquo videatur exisse, sed ut Deus ex Deo, Filius ex Patre; nec videatur coepisse ex tempore, qui ex Patre nascendo prodit, ut dixit ipse qui natus est: Ex ore Altissimi prodii (Eccles. XXIV, 5). 111. Sed si naturam non agnoscunt, si non credunt Scripturis, vel operibus credant. Cui dicit Pater: Faciamus hominem (Gen. I, 26), nisi ei quem verum Filium sciret? In quo nisi in vero suam imaginem recognosceret? Non est unum adoptivus et verus; nec Filius diceret: Unum sumus (Joan. XVI, 22); si se cum vero, qui verus non esset ipse, conferret. Faciamus ergo dicit Pater. Qui dixit, verus est: potestne ergo verus non esse ille, qui fecit; et quod dicenti defertur, facienti negatur? 112. Quomodo autem nisi verum Filium sciret, committeret ei voluntatis suae unitatem, et operis veritatem? Cum enim eadem faciat Filius opera, quae Pater facit, et quos vult vivificet Filius, sicut scriptum est (Joan. V, 19, 21); nec differens potestate, et liber est voluntate: ita unitas servatur; quia et virtus Dei in divinitatis proprietate est; et libertas non in aliqua differentia, sed in unitate est voluntatis. 113. Turbati in freto apostoli, licet adhuc non credentes corde, ubi primum sub pedibus Domini ludere aquas, et inquieto maris aestu deambulantis Domini super aquas intrepida videre vestigia; subitoque navi quae fluctibus turbaretur, ubi eam tamen Christus ascendit; placidata aequora, et elementa conspexere famulantia, verum Dei Filium crediderunt, dicentes: Vere Dei Filius es (Matth. XIV, 25 et seq.). 114. Hoc idem Centurio cum aliis qui secum erant, tremefactis mundi cardinibus in passione Domini confitetur: et tu, haeretice, negas! Centurio dicit: Vere Filius Dei erat iste (Matth. XXVII, 54). Erat, inquit Centurio, et Arianus dicit, non erat. Ille ergo generationis et veritatem et aeternitatem asserit manu cruentus, sed mente devotus: tu, haeretice, veritatem generationis negas, tempus ascribis. Utinam manus potius quam animam cruentasses! Sed nec manu innocens, et mente feralis, quantum in te est, mortem infers, qui infirmum opinaris; immo, quod gravius est, etsi divinitas vulnus sentire non possit, quod in te tamen est, majestatem suam in Christo, non corpus interficere conaris. 115. Verum igitur Deum dubitare non possumus, quem verum Dei Filium et carnifices crediderunt, et daemones fatebantur: quorum nunc non testimonia requiruntur, sed tuis tamen sacrilegiis praeferuntur. Illos nominavimus, ut erubesceres divina quoque responsa adhibuimus, ut crederes. 467 116. Clamat Dominus per Esaiam: Servientibus mihi vocabitur nomen novum, quod benedicetur super terram, et benedicent Deum verum: et qui jurant super terram, jurabunt per Deum verum (Esai. LXV, 16). Haec, inquam, dixit Esaias, quando vidit majestatem ejus. Hoc in Evangelio designatur, quod majestatem viderit Christi, et locutus sit de eo. 117. Accipe tamen quid etiam scripserit Evangelista Joannes in epistola sua dicens: Scimus quia Filius Dei apparuit, et dedit nobis sensum, ut cognoscamus Patrem, et simus in vero Filio ejus Jesu Christo Domino nostro. Hic est verus Deus, et vita aeterna (I Joan. V, 20). Verum Joannes Filium Dei, et verum Deum dicit: ergo si verus Deus, utique non creatus, nihil fallax habens atque fucatum, nihil confusum atque dissimile.

CAPUT XVIII.

In Nicaena definitione Arianos errores, ne quem decipiant, commemorari. Iidem cum anathemate suo referuntur, quod non modo Nicaeae latum dicitur, sed et Arimini semel ac iterum. 118. [Alias cap. VIII.] Deus igitur ex Deo, lumen de lumine, Deus verus de Deo vero, ex Patre natus, non factus, unius substantiae cum Patre. 119. Sic nempe nostri secundum Scripturas dixerunt Patres, qui etiam sacrilega dogmata ideo suis inserenda putavere decretis, ut Arii perfidia ipsa se proderet; ne quasi fucis quibusdam et coloribus illita velaretur. Fucum enim faciunt, qui non audent explicare quod sentiunt. Censorie itaque impietas Ariana non expositione reseratur, sed damnatione detegitur; ut qui curiose gestit audire, prius damnatam cognosceret, ne laberetur, quam expositam audiret, ut crederet. 120. [Alias cap. IX.] Eos, inquit, qui dicunt: Erat quando non erat, et antequam nasceretur non erat: et qui ex nihilo factum, aut ex alia substantia vel οὐσίᾳ dicunt esse, aut mutabilem, aut convertibilem Dei Filium, anathematizat catholica et apostolica Ecclesia. 121. Accepisti, sancte Imperator, eos qui talia asserunt, jure damnatos. Non humana industria, non composito aliquo trecenti decem et octo, ut supra pressius dixi (Prolog. n. 5), episcopi ad concilium convenerunt: sed ut in numero eorum 468 per signum suae passionis et nominis Dominus Jesus suo probaret se adesse concilio; Crux in trecentis, Jesu nomen in decem et octo est sacerdotibus. 122. Hoc et in Ariminensi concilio habuit prima confessio, et post Ariminense concilium secunda correctio. Confessionem epistola ad imperatorem Constantium missa testatur, correctionem secuta concilia confitentur.

CAPUT XIX.

UBI ARIO PRIMUM e memoratis erroribus attribuit, eumdem refellit Joannis testimonio, ac e re nata tragicam haeresiarchae mortem describit. Mox singillatim reliquas ejusdem blasphemias expendit et confutat. 123. Arius ergo dicit: Erat quando non erat; sed Scriptura dicit, Erat, non dicit, non erat. Denique Joannes scripsit: In principio erat Verbum, et Verbum erat apud Deum, et Deus erat Verbum: hoc erat in principio apud Deum (Joan. I, 1). Ecce quoties erat et nusquam dixit quod non erat. Cui ergo credimus? Joanni in Christi pectore recumbenti, an Ario inter effusa se sua viscera volutanti; ut agnosceremus similem Judae proditoris Arii quoque fuisse perfidiam, quem similis poena damnavit? 124. Effusa sunt enim et Arii viscera, pudet dicere ubi, atque ita crepuit medius, prostratus in faciem; ea quibus Christum negaverat, foeda ora pollutus. Crepuit enim, sicut etiam de Juda Petrus apostolus dixit (Act. I, 18), quia possedit agrum de mercede injustitiae, et in faciem prostratus crepuit medius, et effusa sunt omnia viscera ejus. Non est fortuita mors, ubi in sacrilegio pari poenae parilis processit exemplum; ut idem subirent supplicium qui eumdem Dominum negaverunt; et qui eumdem Dominum prodiderunt. 125. Veniamus ad alia. Arius dicit: Antequam nasceretur, non erat: sed Scriptura dicit omnia esse per Filium. Quomodo ergo aliis dedit esse, qui non erat? Cum autem dicit impius, quando et ante, haec utique duo verba tempus ostendunt. Quomodo ergo negant tempus ante Filium, et volunt prius fuisse quae temporis sunt: cum idipsum, quando et ante et aliquando non fuisse, sit temporis? 469 126. Arius dicit ex nihilo Dei Filium. Quomodo ergo Dei Filius? quomodo paterno generatus ex utero? quomodo eructatum ex corde Verbum legitur, nisi ut ex intimo et inaestimabili Patris intelligatur, ut scriptum est, prodiisse secreto? Filius enim aut per adoptionem, aut per naturam est: per adoptionem nos filii dicimur, ille per veritatem naturae est. Quomodo ergo ex nihilo ille, qui ex nihilo fecit omnia (Psal. XLIV, 1)? 127. Non habet Filium, qui nescit unde sit. Denique nec Judaei habebant Filium, quia unde esset nesciebant. Et ideo dixit his Dominus: Nescitis unde veni (Joan. VIII, 14); et infra: Neque me nostis, neque Patrem meum scitis (Ibid. 19). Qui enim negat ex Patre Filium, nec Patrem ex quo est Filius, novit: neque Filium novit; quia Patrem nescit (Galat. IV, 5). 128. Arius dicit: Ex alia substantia. Quae igitur alia substantia aequatur Dei Filio, ut ex ipsa Dei Filius sit? Aut quomodo reprehendunt quia nos in Deo aut οὐσίαν Graece, aut Latine substantiam dicimus, cum ex alia dicendo substantia Dei esse Filium, etiam ipsi substantiam Dei esse confirment? 129. Sed si de nomine substantiae aut naturae divinae voluerint dicere, facile revincentur; quia et οὐσίαν Graece, et Latine substantiam frequenter Scriptura memoravit. Et Petrus vult nos, ut legimus (II Petr. I, 4), divinae consortes fieri naturae. Quod si ex alia substantia Filium dicent, ipsi se revincunt, et verbum substantiae quod metuunt confitendo, et Filium creaturis quibus praeferre se simulant, conferendo. 130. Arius dicit creaturam Dei Filium, non sicut caeteras creaturas. Quae enim creatura non sicut alia creatura non est? Homo non ut Angelus, terra non ut coelum, sol non ut aqua, lumen non ut tenebrae. Nihil ergo praeferendo donavit, sed ad simplices decipiendos misero colore fraudem suae impietatis obduxit. 131. Arius dicit mutabilem et convertibilem Dei Filium. Quomodo ergo Deus, si mutabilis; cum ipse dixerit: Ego sum, ego sum, et non sum mutatus (Malac. III, 6)?

CAPUT XX.

Optat ad se mundandum ut olim ad Esaiam Seraphim aliquem advolare; immo vero ad se, ad Imperatorem aliosque lectores suos Christum invitat: ac tandem Dominico poculo mystice designato, ut ejus virtute Gratianus caeterique fideles inebrientur, petit. 132. Verum nunc mihi propheticum illud est confitendum, quod prophetaturus de Domino praemittit Esaias dicens: O miser ego, et compuncto corde, qui cum immunda labia habeam, in medio quoque populi inhabitem immunda labia habentis; vidi Dominum Sabaoth (Esai. VI, 5). Ergo si Esaias miserum se dicit, qui vidit Dominum 470 Sabaoth: quid ego de me dicam, qui cum immunda labia habeam, cogor de Dei generatione tractare? Quo igitur de iis quae metuo, locuturus erumpo; cum David de iis quae sciat ori suo custodiam petat (Psal. XXXVIII, 2)? O si mihi quoque unus de Seraphim candentem illum carbonem, quem de altari divino sumpsit, utriusque forcipe deferens Testamenti, immunda adurat labia! 133. At quia tunc Seraphim descendit in figura ad prophetam (Esai. VI, 6): tu autem, Domine, revelato mysterio ad nos in carne venisti, non per legatum, neque per nuntium, sed ipse per te, ab occultis meis conscientiam meam mundes; ut ego quoque dudum immundus, sed jam per tuam misericordiam fide mundus, illud Davidicum canam, dicens: Psallam tibi in cithara, Deus Israel: gaudebunt labia mea, dum cantavero tibi; et anima mea, quam redemisti (Psal. VII, 22, 23). 134. Itaque, Domine, calumniatores tuos et hostes relinquens, confer te ad nos; et sanctifica aures principis Gratiani, omniumque praeterea quorum in manus hic libellus venerit, vacuas mihi praesta aures; necubi auditae perfidiae sordes resideant. Emunda ergo, emunda aurem non fontanis poculis, nec fluviali haustu, nec susurro praetermeantis rivuli: sed sermonibus ad vicem aquarum operantibus, supra nitorem aquarum perspicuis, et omni purioribus nive; illis utique sermonibus, quibus dixisti: Si fuerint peccata vestra sicut phoenicium, ut nivem dealbabo (Esai. I, 18). 135. Est etiam poculum quo secreta mentis mundare consuevisti, poculum non naturae veteris, nec ex vite solemni: sed poculum novum de coelo delatum in terram, expressum ex illo botryone peregrino, qui sicut uva de vite, ita ille in carne crucis pependit e ligno. Ex hoc ergo botryone est vinum quod laetificat cor hominis, sobrietatem inebriat, crapulam fidei et verae religionis exhalat, crapulam castitatis infundit. 136. Hoc igitur vino, Domine meus, domini aures Augusti mentis emunda, ut sicut vino naturali homines inebriati, quietem diligunt, timorem mortis expellunt, injurias non sentiunt, aliena non quaerunt, suorum obliviscuntur: ita etiam vino tuo crapulatus, pacem diligat, et fidei exsultatione securus, mortem infidelitatis ignoret, patientiam charitatis exhibeat, sacrilegia aliena non teneat, fidem etiam pignoribus suis praeferat, secundum quod scriptum est: Relinque omnia tua, et veni, sequere me (Matth. XIX, 21). 137. Hoc vino, Domine Jesu, sensus etiam nostros dilue, ut te adoremus, te colamus visibilium et invisibilium creatorem. Non potes ergo invisibilis aut bonus non esse, qui id etiam tuis operibus contulisti.

LIBER SECUNDUS.

PROLOGUS.

AMBROSIUS LIBRO SUPERIORI hunc adjecturus, duodecim nomina Filii Dei primo trifariam divisa non ejus tantum, sed Patris etiam aeternitatem probare docet. Mox eadem cum duodecim sacerdotalis vestis lapidibus cursim comparans, quam necessario conjungenda sint, inducta ipsorum nova distributione patefacit. Deinde ad propositam comparationem rediens, allegorice memorati amictus texturam ac lapillos laudat. Hinc mystica etiam geminae divisionis ratione allata, institutam comparationem pergit exponere; ex qua fidem operibus colligens attexendam esse, contractam ejusdem fidei de Filio descriptionem subdit. 1. Satis, ut arbitror, libro superiore, sancte Imperator, edoctum est sempiternum esse Dei Filium, non dissimilem Patri, genitum, non creatum: Deum quoque verum Dei Filium Scripturarum lectionibus approbavimus, et apertis majestatis suae indiciis designatum. 2. Itaque quamvis ista ad fidem copiose redundantia sint, quod a fontis meatu magnitudo plerumque decurrentis fluminis aestimatur; tamen quo purius niteat fides nostra, tripartito videtur derivanda distinctio. Sunt enim evidentia indicia quae proprietatem deitatis ostendant: sunt quae similitudinem Patris et Filii: sunt etiam quae perspicuant divinae majestatis exprimant unitatem. Proprietatis itaque sunt, generatio, Deus, Filius, Verbum: similitudinis, splendor, character, speculum, imago: unitatis aeternae, sapientia, virtus, veritas, vita. 3. Haec indicia ita Dei Filium signant, ut ex his et sempiternum Patrem esse cognoscas, nec ab eo Filium discrepantem. Ex eo enim qui est, generatio; ex sempiterno Deus, ex Patre Filius, ex Deo Verbum, splendor gloriae, character substantiae, speculum Dei, majestatis imago, de bono bonitas, de sapiente sapientia, de forti virtus, de vero veritas, de vivente vita. Concordant igitur Patris et Filii indicia, quibus non discrepare inter se, sed unius majestatis esse nemo dubitaverit. Quorum singulorum proferremus exempla nominum, nisi coarctandi sermonis studio teneremur. 4. His duodecim tamquam lapidibus pretiosis fidei columna consurgit. Hi sunt enim pretiosi illi lapides (Exod. XXVIII, 17 et seq.), sardius, jaspis, smaragdus, chrysolithus, et caeteri, quibus sancti Aaron, illius utique qui figuram gerit Christi, veri scilicet vestimentum sacerdotis intexitur: circumdati auro lapides, et insculpti de nominibus 472 filiorum Israel, duodecim lapides sibi invicem cohaerentes. Nam si eos aliquis separet atque secernat, omnis fidei structura dissolvitur. 5. Itaque principium fidei nostrae est scire quo genitus est Dei Filius: si genitus non est, nec Filius est. Nec satis est dixisse Filium, nisi et unigenitum Filium designaveris. Si creatura est, Deus non est: si Deus non est, nec vita est: si non est vita, nec veritas est. 6. Ergo tria illa, id est, generatio, Filius, unigenitus, principaliter et proprie indicant ex Deo Filium. 7. Tria sequentia, id est, Deus, vita, veritas, virtutem ejus manifestant, qua condidit et fecit subsistere creaturam: In ipso enim vivimus, movemur et sumus, sicut Paulus dixit (Act. XVII, 28). Et ideo in illis tribus proprietas Filii, in istis aliis paternae ac Filii operationis unitas declaratur. 8. Imago quoque et splendor et character dicitur Dei Filius, quia haec incomprehensibilem et investigabilem paternae majestatis divinitatem in Filio, et expressam similitudinem revelarunt. Haec quoque tria videmus ad similitudinem pertinere. 9. Reliquum est, virtus, sapientia, justitia; ut his singulis operationibus aeternitas probaretur. 10. Hoc igitur est illud vestimentum pretiosis lapidibus adornatum, hic veri amictus est sacerdotis, haec vestis nuptialis; hic textor propheticus, qui bene noverit ista contexere. Neque vilis ista textura est, de qua Dominus dicit per prophetam: Quis dedit mulieribus texturae sapientiam (Job. XXXVIII, 36). Nec communes isti lapides, lapides, ut legimus, supplementi: omnis enim in eo perfectio est, si nihil desit. Lapides compositi et circumdati auro, intelligibili scilicet natura; si eos bene mens nostra componat, naturalisque sensus probabili ratione compaginet. Denique quam non mediocres lapides sint, lectio docet (Exod. XXXV, 27), quod cum alii alia viliora deferrent; istos tamen lapides super humeros suos religiosi principes attulerunt, ex quibus fecerunt rationale, opus textile (Ibid.). Textile enim opus est, quando fidei facta concordant. 11. Nec me aliquis errare putet, quia supra tripartitam de quaternis, subter vero quadripartitam de ternis feci distinctionem. Boni operis gratia per diversas plus placet formas. Bona enim et illa quae textrinum indumenti sacerdotalis ostendit, vel lex scilicet, vel Ecclesia, quae binas vestes fecit viro suo, sicut scriptum est (Prov. XXXI, 22 et seq.): unam operis, alteram mentis, fidei intexens factorumque velamina. Itaque alibi, sicut legimus, aurum praetexit, et postea hyacinthum 473 ac purpuram cum cocco subjungit et bysso. Rursus alibi ex hyacintho et caeteris prius flosculos format, aurumque subnectit, et unus est habitus sacerdotis; ut iisdem coloribus micans, gratiae decorisque diversitas ordinis diversitate resplendeat. 12. Itaque ut etiam rationis typicae series digeratur, auro et argento probabili non est dubium eloquia Domini designari, quibus fides constat. Scriptum est enim: Eloquia Domini, eloquia casta, argentum igne examinatum, probatum terrae, purgatum septuplum (Psal. XI, 7). Hyacinthus autem aeris habet similitudinem, quem spiramus, et cujus carpimus flatum: purpura quoque speciem aquarum exprimit: per coccum ignis intelligitur: terra per byssum; haec enim ex terra gignitur. Ex his autem quatuor elementis corpus subsistit humanum. 13. Sive ergo mentis fidei praecedenti concinentia corporis facta subnectas: sive facta praecedant, et fides astipuletur comes religiosa factorum, hic religiosi ornatus antistitis, hoc velamen est sacerdotis. 14. Bona ergo fides, cum pulchro operum renitet ornatu: de qua, ut ad summam loquar, definitiones istae sunt, quae non queunt solvi. Si ex nihilo est, non est Filius: si creatura est, non est creator: si factura est, non est omnium factor: si discens, non praecognitor: si accipiens, non est perfectus: si proficiens, non est Deus: si dissimilis, non imago: si per gratiam, non per naturam: si divinitatis expers, auctor malitiae: Nemo bonus, nisi unus Deus (Marc. X, 18).

CAPUT PRIMUM.

ARIANORUM DEI FILIO bonitatem abrogantium objectionem non sine horrore propositam ut solvat, Christi sententiam ex personis loquentium, nec non ex ipsis dictionibus explicat. 15. Stupeo itaque ad reliqua, sancte imperator, et toto corpore animoque deficio, esse aliquos homines, vel potius non homines, sed humana adopertos specie, intus autem dementiae bestialis; qui post tanta Domini et tam divina beneficia, bonum negent ipsum auctorem bonorum. 16. Scriptum est, inquiunt: Nemo bonus, nisi unus Deus. Scriptum agnosco: sed littera errorem non habet; utinam Ariana interpretatio non haberet! Apices sine crimine sunt, sensus in crimine. Dictum Domini Salvatoris agnosco: 474 sed consideremus quando dicat, cui dicat, qua circumspectione dicat. 17. Dicit utique in hominis forma Dei Filius, et dicit Scribae, ei scilicet qui magistrum bonum Dei Filium nominaret, Deum negaret. Quod ille non credit, Christus adjungit; ut Dei Filium non ut bonum magistrum, sed ut bonum Deum credat. Nam sicubi unus Deus dicitur, nequaquam tamen Dei Filius ab unitatis plenitudine separatur; quomodo ubi unus Deus bonus nuncupatur, a plenitudine divinae bonitatis unigenitus excluditur? Necesse est igitur aut Deum negent Dei Filium, aut Deum bonum esse fateantur. 18. Et ideo circumspectione coelesti non dixit: Nemo bonus, nisi unus Pater; sed: Nemo bonus, nisi unus Deus. Pater enim proprium generantis est nomen, Deus autem unus nequaquam deitatem Trinitatis excludit, et ideo natura laudatur. Bonitas ergo in natura est Dei, et in natura Dei etiam Dei Filius; et ideo non quod singularitatis, sed quod unitatis est, praedicatur. 19. Non igitur a Domino bonitas negatur, sed talis discipulus refutatur. Nam cum scriba dixisset:

Magister bone, respondit Dominus: Quid me dicis bonum (Mare., X, 28)? id est, quem Deum non credis, non est satis ut bonum dicas. Non tales ego quaero discipulos, qui me magis secundum hominem magistrum bonum, quam secundum divinitatem Deum bonum credant.

CAPUT II.

Bonum esse Dei Filium ab operibus probat, nimirum ab ejus in Israelitas sub Testamento veteri, et in Christianos sub novo, beneficiis. Tum ubi subjecit utile sibi esse ut bonum dominum ac judicem suum arbitretur: paternum de Filio testimonium affert; imo etiam partis non exiguae Judaeorum, quibus proinde pejores Ariani esse declarantur. Quae omnia verborum Sponsae, eamdem Christi bonitatem designantium, claudit expositio. 20. Sed nolo praerogativa naturae suae et privilegio potestatis utatur. Non dicatur bonus, si non meretur, a nobis. Si hoc non meretur operibus, si beneficiis non meretur, abdicetur suae jure naturae, subdatur nostro judicio. Qui judicaturus de nobis est, non dedignatur judicari; ut justificetur in sermonibus suis, et vincat cum judicatur (Psal. L, 6), 475 21. Hiccine ergo non bonus, qui bona tribuit mihi (Psal. XII, 6)? Hiccine non bonus, qui cum sexcenta millia populi Judaeorum persecutoribus suis cederent, dehiscentem subito Rubri maris aestum individua aquarum mole divisit (Exod. XIV, 6 et seq.); ut fideles circumfusa unda muniret, infidos refusa demergeret? 22. Hiccine non bonus, cujus imperio maria solidata fugientibus, saxa humefacta sitientibus; ut opus veri agnosceretur auctoris, cum humor rigesceret, petra inundaret (Exod. XVII, 6)? Quod ut agnosceres opus Christi, Apostolus dixit: Petra autem erat Christus (I Cor. X, 4). 23. Hiccine non bonus, qui tam innumera populi millia, ne qua incesseret fames, in deserto pavit pane coelesti, sine usu laboris, cum fructu quietis (Exod. XVI, 13 et seq.): ita ut eorum per quadraginta annos nec vestimenta veterascerent, nec calceamenta tererentur (Deut. VIII, 4), instar fidelibus futurae resurrectionis ostendens, quod nec factorum decor splendidorum, nec circumfusae virtutis nitor, nec vitae cursus periret humanae? 24. Hiccine non bonus, qui nobis coelum fecit esse, quod terra est; ut sicut in coelo, quasi in speculo quodam, stellarum lucentium refulgerent globi; ita etiam apostolorum et martyrum et sacerdotum, vice stellarum fulgentium, toto illucescerent chori mundo? 25. Ergo non solum bonus, sed etiam pastor bonus, hoc est, non sibi tantum, sed etiam ovibus suis bonus: Bonus enim pastor animam suam ponit pro ovibus suis (Joan. X, 11). Posuit plane animam suam, ut nostram levaret: sed pro divinitatis potestate posuit et sumpsit, sicut scriptum est: Potestatem habeo ponendi animam meam, et potestatem habeo sumendi eam. Nullus eam tollit a me, sed ego a memetipso pono eam (Ibid., 17, 18). 26. Vides bonitatem, quia sponte posuit: vides potestatem, quia sumpsit; et tu bonum negas, cum ipse de se in Evangelio dixerit: Si ego bonus, quare oculus tuus nequam (Matth. XX, 15)? Ingrate, quid agis? Bonum negas, per quem bona speras, si tamen credas? Bonum negas, qui dedit nobis quae oculus non vidit, nec auris audivit (I Cor. II, 9)? 27. Mihi expedit ut bonum credam: Bonum est enim confidere Domino (Psal. CXVII, 8). Mihi expedit ut Dominum confitear; scriptum est enim: Confitemini Domino, quoniam bonus (Ibid., I). 28. Mihi expedit, ut judicem meum bonum arbitrer; Dominus enim judex bonus domui Israel. Ergo si judex Dei Filius, utique quoniam judex Deus bonus, judex autem Dei Filius est; Deus bonus judex et Dei Filius est. 29. Sed fortasse non credas aliis, non credas Filio; audi Patrem dicentem: Eructavit cor meum Verbum bonum (Psal. XLIV, 1). Bonum ergo Verbum est, Verbum hoc de quo scriptum est: Et Verbum erat apud Deum, et Deus erat Verbum (Joan. I, 1). Ergo si Verbum bonum, Filius autem Dei Verbum est: bonus utique Deus est Dei Filius; etiamsi non 476 placeat Arianis. Erubescant aliquando. 30. Judaei dicebant: Bonus est (Joan. VII, 12). Etsi alii dicebant: Non est, alii dicebant tamen: Bonus est; et vos omnes bonum negatis. 31. Bonus est, qui peccatum unius donat; et bonus non est, qui peccatum mundi abstulit? De ipso enim dictum est: Ecce Agnus Dei, ecce qui tollit peccatum mundi (Joan. I, 29). 32. Sed quid dubitamus? Credidit jam Ecclesia bonum, et confessa est dicendo: Osculetur me ab osculis oris sui; quoniam bona ubera tua super vinum (Cantic. I, 1); et alibi: Et faux tua tamquam vinum est optimum (Cantic. VII, 9). Bonus ergo ille nos Legis et gratiae nutrit uberibus, coelesti curas hominum praedicatione demulcens; et nos bonum negamus, cum sit imago bonitatis, exprimens aeternae in se bonitatis effigiem, sicut et supra ostendimus scriptum, quia ipse est speculum sine macula, et imago bonitatis illius (Sap. VII, 26).

CAPUT III.

FILIUM DEI DEUM bonum ac verum esse, cum Deus unus sit. 33. [Alias cap. II.] Sed quid vobis videtur, qui bonum et verum Deum Dei Filium denegatis; cum scriptum sit quod nullus Deus, nisi unus (I Cor. VIII, 4)? Nam etsi sunt qui dicantur dii, an inter eos Christum annumeratis, qui dicuntur, et non sunt? Cum speciale sit ejus, ut semper sit: et praeter ipsum bonus et verus alius Deus non sit; quoniam in ipso est Deus: speciale autem etiam Patris sit, ut post ipsum verus alius Deus non sit; quia unus Deus, nec juxta Sabellianos Patrem Filiumque confundens, nec juxta Arianos Patrem Filiumque secernens. Pater enim et Filius distinctionem habent, ut Pater et Filius; separationem divinitatis non habent.

CAPUT IV.

Omnipotentem esse Dei Filium prisci novique foederis auctoritate demonstratur. 34. [Alias cap. III.] Itaque cum verus et bonus Dei Filius, utique omnipotens Deus Dei Filius: num hinc quoque dubitari potest? Supra (lib. I, ca) diximus lectum quia Dominus omnipotens nomen est ei. Ergo quia Filius Dominus, Dominus autem omnipotens; omnipotens est Dei Filius. 35. Sed accipe etiam eam de qua dubitare nequeas, lectionem: Ecce venit, inquit, cum nubibus, et videbit eum omnis oculus, et qui eum compunxerunt: et plangent se super eum omnes tribus terrae. Etiam, amen. Ego sum A et Ω, dicit Dominus Deus, qui est, et qui erat, et qui venturus est omnipotens (Apoc. I, 7, 8). Quem igitur compunxerunt, et quem speramus esse venturum, nisi Filium? Ergo omnipotens Dominus et Deus Christus est. 36. Accipe aliud, sancte Imperator, et accipe Christum loquentem: Haec dicit Dominus omnipotens: Post honorem misit me super gentes, quae 477 depraedaverunt vos; quoniam qui tangit vos, quasi qui tangit pupillam oculi ejus. Quia ecce ego injicio manum meam super eos, qui depraedaveruntvos, et eruam vos; et erunt in praedam, qui depraedaverunt vos, et scient quia Dominus omnipotens misit me (Zacchar. II, 8, 9). Utique qui dicit: Dominus est omnipotens: et qui misit, Dominus est omnipotens. Ergo et Patris et Filii omnipotentia: sed tamen Deus unus omnipotens; quia unitas potestatis est. 37. Atque ut scias, Imperator auguste, Christum esse, qui locutus est et in propheta et in Evangelio, tamquam in praedestinatione Evangelii per Esaiam dicit: Ipse qui loquebar, adsum (Esai. LII, 6), hoc est: Adsum in Evangelio, qui loquebar in Lege. 38. Deinde alibi: Omnia quae Pater habet, mea sunt (Joan. XVI, 25). Quae sunt omnia? Non utique locutus est de creatis; haec enim omnia facta sunt per Filium: sed ea quae Pater habet, id est, aeternitatem, majestatem, divinitatem, quae nascendo possedit. Ergo eum qui omnia habet, quae Pater habet (scriptum est enim: Omnia quae Pater habet, mea sunt), omnipotentem esse dubitare non possumus.

CAPUT V.

Objectos adversus Christi omnipotentiam Scripturae textus exponit; ac maxime in eo immoratur, ut eumdem non raro ex humanae naturae affectu locutum probet. 39. Nec vereor ne quia scriptum est de Deo: Beatus et solus potens (I Tim. VI, 15), ab eo Dei Filius separetur; cum Scriptura Deum solum potentem dixerit, non Patrem solum: et ipse de Christo Deus Pater asserat per Prophetam: Posui adjutorium super potentem (Psal. LXXXVIII, 20). Non ergo Pater solus potens, sed potens etiam Deus Filius; in Patre enim laudatur et Filius. 40. Certe ostendat aliquis quid sit, quod non possit Dei Filius: quis ei adjutor cum coelum faceret, fuit: quis adjutor cum conderet mundum? An qui in constitutione Angelorum et Dominationum adjutore non eguit, eguit ut hominem liberaret? 41. Scriptum est, inquiunt: Pater meus, si possibile est, transfer a me calicem hunc (Matth. XXVI, 39; Luc. XXII, 42). Et ideo omnipotens est, quomodo de possibilitate 478 ambigit? Ergo quia omnipotentem probavi, probavi utique ambigere eum de possibilitate non posse. 42. Verba, inquis, Christi sunt. Verum dicis: sed quando, et in qua forma loquatur, adverte. Hominis substantiam gessit, hominis assumpsit affectum. Denique supra habes quia progressus pusillum procidit in faciem suam, orans et dicens: Pater, si possibile est. Non ergo quasi Deus, sed quasi homo loquitur; Deus enim possibile aliquid aut impossibile nesciebat? Aut aliquid impossibile Deo, cum scriptum sit: Impossibile enim tibi nihil est (Job XXII, 17)? 43. De quo autem dubitat? de se, an de Patre? De eo utique qui dicit: Transfer: et dubitat hominis affectu. Ergo propheta non putat aliquid impossibile Deo. Propheta non dubitat, et Filium dubitare tu credis? Num infra homines constituis Deum?

Et dubitat de Patre Deus, et de morte formidat? Timet ergo Christus; et cum Petrus non timeat, Christus timet? Petrus dicit: Animam meam pro te ponam (Joan. XIII, 37); Christus dicit: Anima mea turbatur (Joan. XII, 27). 44. Utrumque verum est, et plenum utrumque rationis; quod et ille qui est inferior, non timet: et ille qui superior est, gerit timentis affectum: ille enim quasi homo vim mortis ignorat, iste quasi Deus in corpore constitutus fragilitatem carnis exponit; ut eorum qui sacramentum Incarnationis abjurant, excluderetur impietas. Denique et haec dixit, et Manichaeus non credidit, Valentinus negavit, Marcion phantasma judicavit. 45. Eousque autem hominem quem veritate corporis demonstrabat, aequabat affectu, ut diceret: Sed tamen non sicut ego volo, sed sicut tu vis (Matth. XXVI, 39); cum utique similiter, sit Christi velle, quod Pater vult: cujus similiter est facere, quod Pater facit. 46. Quo loco etiam illa vestra quaestio conticescit, quam soletis objicere, quia dixit Dominus: Non sicut ego volo, sed sicut tu vis; et alibi: Ad hoc descendi de coelo, non ut facium voluntatem meam, sed voluntatem ejus qui me misit (Joan. VI, 38). 479

CAPUT VI.

Occasione superiorum Scripturae locorum tantisper digrediens, libertatem Domini primum ex eo quod eadem praeditus affirmetur Spiritus sanctus, deinde expressis quibus ipsa Filio Dei attribuitur, testimoniis demonstrat. 47. Ergo ut quasi interpositis plenioris expositionis paulisper induciis, cur dixerit: Si possibile est, voluntatis interim liberae Dominum fuisse doceamus. In tantum processistis impietatis, ut negetis quod Filius Dei liberae voluntatis sit! At certe soletis etiam sancto Spiritui derogare, et negare non potestis scriptum esse: Spiritus ubi vult, spirat (Joan. III, 8). Ubi vult, inquit, non ubi jubetur. Ergo si Spiritus ubi vult, spirat, Filius quod vult, non agit? Et certe idem Dei Filius in Evangelio suo dicit, ubi velit spirandi suppetere Spiritui facultatem. Numquid ergo superiorem fatetur; quia illi licet, quod sibi non licet? 48. Apostolus quoque dicit quia omnia operatur unus atque idem Spiritus, dividens singulis prout vult (I Cor. XII, 11). Prout vult, inquit, hoc est, pro liberae voluntatis arbitrio, non pro necessitatis obsequio. Et dividit Spiritus non mediocria; sed quae Deus consuevit operari, gratiam curationum, et operationem virtutum. Ergo dividit Spiritus prout vult, Filius Dei non liberat, quem vult? Sed audi etiam ipsum agere quod vult. Dixit enim: Ut faciam voluntatem tuam, Deus meus, volui (Psal. XXXIX, 9). Et alibi: Voluntarie sacrificabo tibi (Psal. LIII, 8). 49. Scivit sanctus apostolus Petrus Jesum in potestate habere quae vellet; et ideo cum videret ambulare eum supra mare, ait: Domine, si tu es, jube me venire ad te super aquas (Matth. XIV, 28). Petrus credidit quia si Christus jubeat, naturae possit conditio mutari; ut humanis se subjiciat unda vestigiis, et discrepantium naturarum possit convenire concordia. Petrus poscit ut jubeat, non ut roget Christus: Christus non rogavit, sed jussit, et factum est: et Arius contradicit? 50. Quid est tamen quod Patre velit, Filius nolit: aut Filius velit et Patre nolit? Pater quos vult, vivificat; et Filius quos vult, vivificat, sicut scriptum est (Joan. V, 21). Dic nunc quos vivificaverit Filius, et Pater vivificare noluerit. Cum autem Filius quos velit vivificet, et operatio una sit; vides quia non solum Filius voluntatem Patris, sed etiam Pater Filii faciat voluntatem? Quid est autem vivificare, nisi per Filii passionem? Passio autem Christi voluntas est Patris. Quos ergo Filius vivificat, per Patris vivificat voluntatem. Una igitur est voluntas. 51. Quae autem voluntas Patris, nisi ut veniret Jesus in hunc mundum, et nos mundaret a vitiis? 480 Audi leprosum dicentem: Si vis, potes me mundare (Matth. VIII, 2). Respondit Christus, Volo; et statim secutus est effectus sanitatis. Vides quia Filius suae arbiter voluntatis est, et Christi voluntas eadem quae paterna est? Quamquam cum dixerit: Omnia quae Pater habet, mea sunt (Joan. XVI, 15): sine dubio quia nihil excipitur, quam Pater habet, eamdem habet et Filius voluntatem.

CAPUT VII.

REDIT AD PROPOSITAE difficultatis solutionem, et voluntatem affectusque humanos a Christo vere susceptos esse, ac proinde quidquid in ipso non congruit divinitati, ex eisdem oriri docet, atque ad id quod simul Deus et homo erat, referri. 52. Una ergo voluntas, ubi una operatio; in Deo enim voluntatis series operationis effectus est. Sed alia voluntas hominis, alia Dei. Denique ut scias vitam in voluntate esse hominis; quia mortem timemus: passionem autem Christi in voluntate divina; ut pateretur pro nobis: cum Petrus eum vellet a passione revocare, Dominus ait: Non sapis quae Dei sunt, sed quae sunt hominum (Matth. XVI, 23). 53. Suscepit ergo voluntatem meam, suscepit tristitiam meam. Confidenter tristitiam nomino, quia crucem praedico. Mea est voluntas, quam suam dixit; quia ut homo suscepit tristitiam meam, ut homo locutus est; et ideo ait: Non sicut ego volo, sed sicut tu vis (Matth. XXVI, 39). Mea est tristitia, quam meo suscepit affectu: nemo enim moriturus exsultat. Mihi compatitur, mihi tristis est, mihi dolet. Ergo pro me et in me doluit, qui pro se nihil habuit quod doleret. 54. Doles igitur, Domine Jesu, non tua, sed mea vulnera: non tuam mortem, sed nostram infirmitatem, sicut ait propheta: Quia pro nobis dolet (Esai. LIII, 4): et nos, Domine, aestimavimus te esse in doloribus; cum tu non pro te, sed pro me doleres. 55. Et quid mirum si pro omnibus doluit, qui pro uno flevit? Quid mirum, si moriturus pro omnibus taedeat, qui Lazarum resuscitaturus illacrymat? Verum et ibi piae sororis lacrymis commovetur, quia mente humana tangebatur: et hic alto operatur affectu; ut sicut mors ejus mortem abstulit, livor ejus ulcera nostra sanavit: ita etiam moerorem nostrum moeror ejus aboleret. 56. Ut homo ergo dubitat, ut homo turbatur.

Non turbatur ejus virtus, non turbatur ejus divinitas: sed turbatur anima: turbatur secundum humanae fragilitatis assumptionem. Et ideo quia suscepit animam, suscepit et animae passiones; non enim Deus eo quod Deus erat, aut turbari aut mori potuisset. Denique, Deus, Deus, inquit, meus, quare me dereliquisti (Psal. XXI, 1)? Ut homo 481 ergo loquitur, meos circumferens metus; quod in periculis positi, a Domino deseri nos putamus. Ut homo turbatur, ut homo flet, ut homo crucifigitur. 57. Sic enim et apostolus Paulus dixit: Quia Christi carnem crucifixerunt (Galat. V, 24). Et alibi apostolus Petrus ait: Christo passo secundum carnem (I Pet. IV, 1). Caro igitur est passa, divinitas autem mortis libera: passioni corpus naturae humanae lege concessit; an vero mori divinitas potest, cum anima non possit? Nolite, inquit, timere eos qui corpus possunt occidere, animam autem non possunt (Matth. X, 28). Si ergo anima occidi non potest, quomodo divinitas potest? 58. [Alias cap. IV]. Unde illud quod lectum est, Dominum majestatis crucifixum esse, non quasi in majestate sua crucifixum putemus (I Cor. II, 8): sed quia idem Deus, idem homo, per divinitatem Deus, per susceptionem carnis homo Jesus Christus, Dominus majestatis dicitur crucifixus, quia consors utriusque naturae, id est, humanae atque divinae, in natura hominis subiit passionem; ut indiscrete et Dominus majestatis dicatur esse qui passus est, et Filius hominis, sicut scriptum est, qui descendit de coelo (Joan. III, 13).

CAPUT VIII.

EX PRINCIPIO PROXIME ante constituto illud solvitur, quod Christus dixit: Pater major me est. Quae verba et alia ejusdem rationis ubi secundum humanitatem intelligenda esse ostensum est, eumdem Dominum secundum naturam divinam dici non posse Patri inferiorem multis confirmatur. 59. Per naturam igitur hominis et dubitavit, et taeduit et resurrexit; quod enim cecidit, hoc resurgit. Per naturam hominis dicit etiam illud, de quo calumniari solent; quia dictum est: Quoniam Pater major me est (Joan. XIV, 28). 60. Verum quia alibi dicitur: Exivi a Patre, et veni in mundum: iterum relinquo mundum, et vado ad Patrem (Joan. XVI, 28): quomodo vadit, nisi per mortem: et venit, nisi per resurrectionem? Denique addidit, ut de assumptione se dixisse signaret: Propterea dixi vobis priusquam fiat; ut cum factum fuerit, credatis (Joan. XIV, 29). Loquebatur enim passionem sui corporis, et resurrectionem per quam credere coeperant, qui ante dubitabant; neque enim Deus de loco ad locum transit, qui ubique semper est. Ut homo est qui vadit, ipse est qui venit. Denique et alibi dicit: Surgit, eamus hinc (Ibid., 31). In eo ergo vadit et venit, quod est commune nobiscum. 61. Nam quomodo potest minor esse Deus, cum Deus perfectus et plenus sit? Sed minor 482 in natura hominis et miraris si ex persona hominis Patrem dixit majorem, qui in persona hominis se vermem dixit esse, non hominem; dixit enim: Ego autem sum vermis et non homo (Psal. XXI, 7); et alibi: Sicut ovis ad occisionem ductus est (Esai. LIII, 7). 62. Si in hoc minorem dicis, negare non possum: sed, ut verbo utar Scripturae, non minor natus, sed minoratus (Hebr. II, 9), hoc est, minor factus est. Quomodo autem minor factus, nisi quia: Cum in forma Dei esset, non rapinam arbitratus est esse se aequalem Deo, sed semetipsum exinanivit (Phil. II, 6, 7): non remittens utique quod erat, sed assumens quod non erat; quia formam servi accepit. 63. Denique ut sciremus per susceptionem corporis minoratum, de homine se David prophetare signavit dicens: Quid est homo, quod memor es ejus: aut Filius hominis, nisi quia visitas eum? Minorasti eum paulo minus ab angelis (Psal. VIII, 5, 6). Et hoc ipsum interpretatus Apostolus, ait: Nam paulo quam angelos minoratum videmus Jesum, propter passionem mortis gloria et honore coronatum; ut sine Deo pro omnibus gustaret mortem (Hebr. II, 9). 64. Non solum ergo Patre, sed etiam angelis minor Filius Dei factus est. Et si hoc ad praejudicium trabis; num ergo Filius in natura Dei minor est, quam sui angeli qui ei serviunt et ministrant (Matth. IV, 6)? Ita dum minorem vultis asserere, impietatem incurritis; ut angelorum naturam Dei Filio praeferatis. Sed non est servus supra Dominum suum (Matth. X, 24). Denique et in carne constituto angeli ministrabant; ut nihil eum agnoscas per naturam corporis imminutum; neque enim Deus sui pati potuit detrimentum, cum id quod assumpsit ex Virgine, nec accessio divinae nec diminutio potestatis sit. 65. Non est ergo secundum divinitatem minor, qui plenitudinem habet divinitatis et gloriae. Major enim et minor in iis quae corporalia sunt, distingui solent: aut statu major, aut plenitudine, aut certe aetate. Vacant ista, ubi de divinis tractatus inducitur. Major enim vulgo dici solet, qui aliquem instituit et informat: in Dei autem sapientiam non cadit, ut instituta sit alterius disciplinis; cum ipsa disciplinarum omnium tradiderit institutum. Quam bene autem posuit Apostolus: Ut sine Deo pro omnibus gustaret mortem (Hebr. II, 9); ne divinitatis illam passionem putaremus fuisse, non carnis! 66. Ergo si non invenerunt quemadmodum possent probare majorem, non verbis calumnientur, sed verborum rationem requirant. Ergo illos interrogo quo putent esse majorem? Si quia Pater est, eo majorem putant: sed non hic aetas et tempus, neque canities Patris, et 483 filii pueritia est; haec enim majorem solent facere patrem. Caeterum pater et filius generantis et nati nomina sunt, quae non videntur separare, sed jungere; non enim pietas naturae detrimentum est: namque homines sibi invicem conciliat necessitudo, non separat. 67. Itaque si nec de natura afferre possunt aliquam quaestionem, vel testimoniis credant. Denique Filium non esse eo minorem, quia Filius est, evangelista testatur; et aequalem esse, quia Filius est, ipse significat dicens: Propterea enim volebant eum occidere Judaei, quia non solum solvebat sabbatum, sed et Patrem proprium dicebat Deum, aequalem se faciens Deo (Joan. V, 18). 68. Non Judaei hoc dicunt, sed Evangelista testatur, quod aequalem se faciebat Deo, proprium se Filium Dei dicens. Non enim scriptum est ex persona Judaeorum dicentium: Propterea volebamus eum occidere: sed evangelista ex sua persona dicit: Propterea enim volebant illum Judaei occidere. Et interpretatus est causam, ideo Judaeos ad necem ejus esse commotos, quod cum et sabbatum quasi Deus solveret, et Deum Patrem sibi proprium vindicaret, non solum in solutione sabbati majestatem divinae potestatis, sed etiam in Patris proprii nomine jus sibi aeternae aequalitatis adscisceret. 69. Quibus aptissime respondit Dei Filius, ut et Dei se Filium, et aequalem probaret: Quaecumque, inquit, Pater fecerit, eadem et Filius facit similiter (Ibid., 19). Filius igitur Patri et dicitur et probatur aequalis. Bona aequalitas, quae et differentiam divinitatis excludit, et cum Filio Patrem signat, cui Filius sit aequalis; non est enim diversa, nec singularis aequalitas; quia nemo aequalis ipse sibi solus est. Ergo Evangelista interpretatus est quid sit proprium Filium Dei se dicere, hoc est, aequalem se facere Deo. 70. Unde id secutus Apostolus dixit: Non rapinam arbitratus est esse se aequalem Deo (Phil. II, 6). Quod enim quis non habet, rapere conatur. Ergo non quasi rapinam habebat aequalitatem cum Patre quam in substantia sui tamquam Deus et Dominus possidebat. Unde addidit: Formam servi accepit (Ibid. 7). Contrarium utique servus, et aequalis. Aequalis ergo in Dei forma; minor in susceptione carnis, et hominis passione. Nam quomodo eadem posset minor esse aequalisque natura? Quomodo autem, si minor est, eadem similiter facit, quae Pater facit? Nam quemadmodum eadem operatio diversae esset potestatis? Numquid sic potest minor, quemadmodum major operari? aut una operatio potest esse, ubi diversa substantia est? 71. Itaque accipe Christum secundum divinitatem minorem non posse dici. Ipse loquitur ad Abraham: Per me ipsum juravi (Gen. XXII, 16). Ostendit autem Apostolus eum qui per se jurat, minorem 484 esse non posse. Itaque sic ait: Abrahae cum repromisisset Deus, quoniam nullum alium majorem habebat, juravit per seipsum, dicens: Nisi benedicendo benedixero te, et multiplicando multiplicavero te (Hebr. VI, 13, 14). Ergo majorem non habuit Christus, et ideo per se juravit. Et bene addidit: Homines enim per majorem se jurant; quia homines majorem habent, Deus non habet (Ibid., 16). 72. Aut si volunt de Patre dictum videri, reliqua non cohaerent; neque enim Pater visus est Abrahae, nec Deo Patri pedes lavit, sed ei in quo futuri hominis est figura. Denique Filius Dei dicit: Abraham diem meum vidit, et gravisus est (Joan. VIII, 56). Ipse est ergo qui per se juravit, quem Abraham vidit. 73. Et revera quomodo majorem habet, qui divinitate cum Patre unum est (Joan. X, 30)? Quod enim unum est, dissimile non est: inter majorem autem minoremque discretio est. Ergo de Filio, et Patre praesentis docet lectionis exemplum, quia nec Pater minorem habet, nec majorem Dei Filius; cum in Patre et Filio nulla distantia divinitatis sit, sed una majestas.

CAPUT IX.

Objicientibus Filium cum a Patre sit missus, eo utique minorem esse; respondetur illum etiam a Spiritu missum, quo tamen minor non habeatur. Additur etiam Spiritum mitti a Patre et Filio, ut utriusque operationum unitas designetur: Hinc admonemur sedulo distinguendum quae locutiones Christo ut Deo, quaeve eidem ut homini conveniant: quarum exempla non pauca subjiciuntur exponunturque. 74. Nec illud sane metuo, quod solent obtendere minorem esse, quia missus est. Si enim et minor non docetur, et honorificentiae docetur aequalitas; cum ita omnes honorificent Filium, sicut honorificant Patrem (Joan. V, 23), constat eo minorem non esse, quod missus est. 75. Non ergo humani sermonis angustias, sed verborum claritatem intuere, operibus crede. Considera quia Dominus noster Jesus Christus in Esaia locutus est ab Spiritu sancto esse se missum (Esa. LXI, 1). Numquid ergo Spiritu minor Filius, quia missus ab Spiritu est? Habes igitur scriptum quod Filius a Patre et Spiritu ejus dicat esse se missum: Ego sum, inquit, primus, et ego in aeternum, et manus mea fundavit terram, dextera mea solidavit coelum (Esai. XLVIII, 12, 13); et infra: Ego locutus sum, et ego vocavi; adduxi eum, et prosperum iter ejus feci. Accedite ad me, et audite haec: non in occulto ab initio locutus sum. Cum fierent, illic eram: et nunc Dominus misit me, et Spiritus ejus (Ibid., 15, 16). Utique qui coelum fecit et terram, ipse dicit a Domino et a Spiritu ejus esse se missum. Videtis ergo quod simplicitas sermonis, non injuria 485 missionis sit. Ipse igitur missus a Patre, ipse est missus ab Spiritu. 76. Et ut cognoscas nullam majestatis esse distantiam, etiam Filius Spiritum mittit, sicut ipse dixit: Cum venerit autem Paraclitus, quem ego mittam vobis a Patre meo, Spiritus veritatis, qui a Patre meo procedit (Joan. XV, 26). Hunc eumdem Paraclitum et a Patre esse mittendum supra docuit dicens: Paraclitus autem ille Spiritus sanctus, quem mittet Pater in nomine meo (Joan. XIV, 26). Vide unitatem, quia quem Deus Pater mittit, mittit et Filius: et quem mittit Pater, mittit et Spiritus. Aut si nolunt Filium missum, quia dexteram Patris Filium legimus; ipsi de Patre quod de Filio abnuunt, fatebuntur: nisi forte aut alterum sibi Patrem, aut alterum sibi Filium inveniant Ariani. 77. Sileant igitur inanes de sermonibus quaestiones; quia regnum Dei, sicut scriptum est (I Cor. II, 4), non in persuasione verbi est, sed in ostensione virtutis. Servemus distinctionem divinitatis et carnis. Unus in utraque loquitur Dei Flius; quia in eodem utraque natura est: et si idem loquitur, non uno semper loquitur modo. Intende in eo nunc gloriam Dei, nunc hominis passiones. Quasi Deus loquitur quae sunt divina, quia Verbum est: quasi homo dicit quae sunt humana, quia in mea substantia loquebatur. 78. Hic est panis vivus, qui descendit de coelo (Joan. VI, 51). Panis hic caro est, sicut ipse dixit: Hic panis quem ego dabo, caro mea est (Ibid., 52). Hic est qui descendit de coelo, hic est quem Pater sanctificavit, et misit in hunc mundum. Nec ipsa littera nos docet sanctificatione divinitatem eguisse, sed carnem. Denique ipse Dominus dixit: Et ego memetipsum sanctifico pro ipsis (Joan. XVII, 19); ut agnoscas quod et sanctificatur in carne pro nobis, et divinitate sanctificat. 79. Hic idem est quem Pater misit, sed factum ex muliere, factum sub Lege, ut Apostolus dixit (Galat. IV, 4). Hic est, qui ait: Spiritus Domini super me, propter quod unxit me: evangelizare pauperibus misit me (Luc. IV, 18). Hic est qui dicit: Mea doctrina non est mea, sed ejus qui misit me. Si quis voluerit voluntatem ejus facere, cognoscet de doctrina, utrum ex Deo est, an ego a me ipso loquar (Joan. VII, 16, 17). Alia ergo ex Deo doctrina, alia ex homine. Itaque Judaei cum doctrinam ejus secundum hominem quaererent, et dicerent: Quomodo hic litteras novit, cum non didicerit (Joan. VII, 15)? respondit Jesus, et dixit: Mea doctrina, non est mea; nam cum sine 486 eruditione litterarum doceat, non quasi homo, sed potius ut Deus videtur docere, qui doctrinam non didicerit, sed invenerit. 80. Adinvenit enim omnem viam disciplinae, ut supra lectum est; nam utique de Filio Dei dictum est: Hic est Deus noster, et non aestimabitur alius ad eum qui adinvenit omnem viam disciplinae. Post haec in terris visus est, et cum hominibus conversatus est (Baruc. III, 36 et seq). Quomodo ergo secundum divinitatem doctrinam suam non habet, qui adinvenit omnem viam disciplinae, antequam videretur in terris? Aut quomodo minor, de quo dictum est: Non aestimabitur alius ad eum? Utique incomparabilis dicitur, ad quam nemo alius aestimari potest: sed ita incomparabilis, ut Patri nequeat anteferri. Quod si de Patre dictum putant, impietatem Sabellii non evadent, ut Patri susceptionem humanae carnis attribuant. 81. Persequamur sequentia: Qui a semetipso, inquit, loquitur, gloriam suam quaerit (Joan. VII, 18). Vide unitatem, quae et Patrem signat et Filium. Non potest non esse, qui loquitur: sed non potest a semetipso esse quod loquitur, in quo naturaliter ex Patre sunt omnia. 82. Quid est autem: Gloriam suam quaerit? Hoc est, non divisam a Patre gloriam; nam utique et Verbum Deus habet gloriam. Denique dicit: Ut videant gloriam meam (Joan. XVII, 24). Sed illa verbi gloria eadem Patris gloria est, sicut scriptum est: Dominus Jesus Christus in gloria est Dei Patris (Philip. II, 11). Ita igitur secundum divinitatem Dei Filius suam gloriam habet, ut Patris et Filii una sit gloria. Non est ergo minor in claritate, quia una gloria: non minor divinitate, quia plenitudo divinitatis in Christo est. 83. Et quomodo, inquis, scriptum est: Pater, venit hora, clarifica Filium tuum (Joan. XVII, 1)? Qui hoc dicit, clarificatione, inquis, indiget. Hucusque oculos habes: quod reliquum est non legisti; sequitur enim: Ut Filius tuus clarificet te (Ibid.). Numquid et Pater indiget, qui clarificandus a Filio est?

CAPUT X.

Objectionem a Filii obedientia desumptam solvit, ostensoque Trinitatis unam potentiam, divinitatem atque operationem esse, addit Christum etiam matri, qua minor dici neutiquam potest, obedientiam exhibuisse. 84. Pari modo obedientiam Filii objicere solent, quia scriptum est: Et specie inventus 487 ut homo, humiliavit semetipsum, factus obediens usque ad mortem (Phil. II, 7, 8). Et hominem praemisit, et usque ad mortem dixit; ut intelligeremus obedientiam mortis non divinitatis fuisse, sed incarnationis: in qua et officia nostra suscepit et nomina. 85. Didicimus itaque unam esse potentiam Trinitatis, quam nos in ipsa atque post ipsam docuit passionem; Filius enim patitur per corporis sacramentum, apostolis Spiritus sanctus infunditur: in manus Patris commendatur spiritus, Deus quoque Pater maxima voce signatur. Didicimus unam Patris et Filii esse imaginem, unam similitudinem, unam sanctificationem. Didicimus unam esse operationem, unam gloriam, unam quoque divinitatem. 86. Unus ergo et solus Deus; quia scriptum est: Dominum Deum tuum adorabis, et illi soli servies (Deut. VI, 13). Unus Deus, non ut ipse sit Pater et Filius, sicut impius Sabellius asserit: sed quia Patris et Filii, Spiritusque sancti una divinitas sit: ubi autem una divinitas, una voluntas, una praeceptio. 87. Denique ut scias et Patrem esse, et Filium esse, et unum opus Patris ac Filii esse, Apostolum sequere, qui dixit: Ipse autem Deus, et Pater noster, et Dominus noster Jesus dirigat viam nostram ad vos (I Thess. III, 11). Et Patrem loquitur, et Filium loquitur: sed unitas directionis est; quia unitas potestatis est. Sic et alibi habes: Ipse autem Dominus noster Jesus Christus, et Deus, et Pater noster qui dilexit nos, et dedit consolationem aeternam, et spem bonam in gratia; consoletur corda vestra, et confirmet (II Thess. II, 16, 17). Quantam unitatem ostendit, ut consolationis unitas, non pluralitas sit! Conticescat ergo perfidia, aut si ratione non vincitur, morali humanitate flectatur. 88. Consideremus quam moraliter egerit Dominus; ut nos non solum fidem, sed etiam mores doceret. Namque in forma hominis constitutus, subditus erat Joseph et Mariae (Luc. II, 51). Numquid ergo minor et hominibus, quia subditus? Aliud pietatis, aliud potestatis est: sed non praejudicat pietas potestati. In quo ergo legis subditum Patri? In corpore scilicet, in quo erat subditus matri.

CAPUT XI.

Proponit cum Arianis humaniter agere Christi exemplo vulnera vino et oleo curantis: ad quod coeleste medicamentum omnes invitans, quo consilio is carnem induerit, et qua utilitate, tradit. Hinc aperit quantum prosit fidem habere, qua Christum propter nos omnem infirmitatem suscepisse cognoscimus, cujus divinitas in passione erumpebat. Ex quibus intelligere est Dei Filium sine subjectione ulla missum fuisse: nec metuendum ne fides haec displiceat Patri; quippe qui in filio sibi complacere significet. 89. Agamus et nos moraliter, persuadeamus illis quod sibi prosit, obsecremus et ploremus ante Dominum qui fecit nos (Psal. XCIV, 6). Non enim 488 vincere volumus, sed sanare: non insidiose agimus, sed religiose monemus. Saepe flectit humanitas, quos nec virtus potuerit superare, nec ratio. Denique Dominus illum hominem qui ex Hiericho descendens, incidit in latrones, quem non asperioribus Legis medicamentis, non prophetico rigore curaverat, oleo curavit et vino (Luc. X, 30 et seq.). 90. Veniant ergo ad hunc omnes qui sanari volunt; accipiant medicamentum, quod et a Patre detulit, et praeparavit in coelo, ex illis confectum immortalibus succis. Hoc ex terra non pullulat; expers enim est omnis natura hujus confectionis. Divino enim consilio suscepit hanc carnem, ut ostenderet legem carnis legi esse subditam mentis. Suscepit carnem, ut quasi homo vinceret, qui homines erudiret. 91. Quid mihi prodesset, si quasi Deus exerta potestate divinitatem suam tantummodo inviolabilem demonstrasset? Aut cur susciperet carnem, nisi ut tentari se naturae atque infirmitatis meae conditione pateretur? Tentari debuit, compati mihi debuit; ut scirem quemadmodum tentatus vincerem, compassus evaderem. Vicit per continentiam, vicit per contemptum divitiarum, vicit per fidem: calcavit ambitionem, fugavit intemperantiam, lasciviam relegavit. 92. Hoc medicamentum Petrus vidit, et retia sua, instrumenta videlicet quaestus et subsidia dereliquit, renuntians carnis concupiscentiae tamquam corruptae navi, in quam quasi sentina quaedam multarum ingreditur passionum. Magnum ergo medicamentum, quod non solum cicatricem vetusti vulneris amputavit, sed etiam causam passionis incidit. O fides thesauris omnibus opulentior! o vulnerum nostrorum, peccatorumque medicina praestantior! 93. Consideremus quia nobis prodest bene credere. Mihi enim prodest scire quia propter me Christus suscepit meas infirmitates, mei corporis subiit passiones (Esai. LIII, 4): pro me peccatum, hoc est, pro omni homine, pro me maledictum factus est, pro me atque in me subditus atque subjectus, pro me agnus, pro me vitis, pro me lapis, pro me servus, pro me filius ancillae, pro me diem judicii ignorans, pro nobis nesciens diem aut horam. 94. Nam quomodo posset diem nescire, qui dies fecit et tempora? Quomodo posset diem ignorare judicii, qui et horam futuri judicii expressit et causam? Factus ergo maledictum non secundum divinitatem, sed secundum carnem; scriptum est enim: Maledictus omnis qui pendet in ligno (Deut. XXI, 23). Secundum carnem utique pependit; et ideo maledictum, qui nostra maledicta suscepit. Ille flevit, ne tu homo diu fleres: ille injurias passus est, ne tu injuriam tuam doleres. 95. Grande remedium, solatium habere de Christo. Ille enim pro nobis haec patientius tulit, et sumus qui patienter haec pro illius nomine ferre nequeamus! Quis appetitus non discat ignoscere, quando et pro persecutoribus 489 suis Christus etiam crucifixus orabat? Videsne illas quas tu putas Christi infirmitates, tuas esse virtutes? Cur de remediis nostris ei quaestionem movemus? Lacrymae illae nos lavant, fletus illi nos abluunt, ac dubitatio illa nos firmat; ne tu si coeperis dubitare, desperes. Quanto major est injuria, tanto uberior debetur gratia. 96. Sed in ipsis injuriis cognosce divinitatem. In cruce pendebat, et elementa ei omnia serviebant. Sol refugit, dies occidit, offusae et circumfusae tenebrae, terra tremuit: non tremuit qui pependit (Matth. XXVII, 51). Quid aliud haec, quam Auctoris reverentiam signant? Quia in cruce est, vides: quia regnum Dei donat, non vides. Quia mortem gustavit, legis: quia latronem quoque ad paradisum invitavit (Luc. XXIII, 43), non legis. Mulieres flentes intueris ad tumulum, non intueris angelos excubantes (Joan. XX, 12). Quid dixerit legis, quid gesserit non legis. Dicis Chananaeae mulieri dixisse Dominum: Non sum missus nisi ad oves quae perierunt domus Israel (Matth. XV, 24): non dicis, quoniam id quod ab ea rogatus est, fecit. 97. Unde intelligere te convenit, quia missus non id significat, quod alieno sit coactus imperio, sed quod voluntario functus sit arbitratu: alioquin contemptum ostendis Patris. Si enim, ut tu interpretaris, paternorum famulus praeceptorum Christus venerat in Judaeam, ut solis ejus incolis mederetur, et Chananaeae prius filiam, ut legimus, liberavit; non utique alieni fuit exsecutor imperii, sed voluntarii liber arbitrii. Ubi autem libertas voluntatis, ibi nulla praevaricatio missionis. 98. Nec vereare ne displiceat Patri, quod fecit Filius; cum ipse dicat. Quaecumque placita sunt ei, facio semper (Joan. VIII, 29); et alibi: Opera quae ego facio, ipse facit (Joan. XIV, 12). Quomodo ergo Patri potuit displicere, quod ipse fecit per Filium? Unus enim Deus, sicut scriptum est, qui justificavit circumcisionem ex fide, et praeputium per fidem (Rom. III, 30). 99. Omnia lege, omnia diligenter adverte; invenies sic demonstrasse se Christum, ut Deus in homine cerneretur: nec malitiose accipias de Patre Filium gloriantem, cum audias Patrem in Filio complacentem (Matth. XVII, 5).

CAPUT XII.

CHRISTUM IN PERSONA judicis consideratum Catholici an Ariani melius sibi concilient, inquiritur. Objectio propter judicis sessionem ac Patris voces exorta dissolvitur; demonstraturque nullam in Filio nec subjectionem significari, quod sedeat a Patre invitatus: nec praelationem, quod ad ejus dextram sedeat. Denique ex Angelico Trisagio personarum in Deo Trinitatem, ac simul unitatem naturae significari declaratur. 100. Sed si moralibus flecti non queunt, provocemus ad judicem. Ad quem tandem ibimus? Nempe ad eum qui judicium habet. Numquid ad Patrem? Sed Pater non judicat quemquam; omne enim judicium dedit Filio (Joan. V, 22). Dedit utique generando, non largiendo. Vide quam te noluerit Filio suo derogare, ut tibi ipsum judicem daret. 490 101. Videamus ergo ante judicium quis causam meliorem habeat; ego, an tu. Nempe prudentis actoris est prius conciliare sibi judicem. Hominem honoras, Deum non honoras? Quid ergo conciliat cognitorem, honorificentia, an injuria? Pone me peccasse, quod non est; num offenditur honore suo Christus? Peccamus omnes: quis ergo veniam promerebitur, qui defert honorificentiam, an qui irrogat contumeliam? 102. Aut si te ratio non movet, species saltem judicii ipsa commoveat. Attolle oculos ad judicem tuos, intuere qui sedeat, cum quo sedeat, ubi sedeat. Sedet Christus ad dexteram Patris. Aut si oculis hoc non potes comprehendere, audi dicentem Prophetam: Dixit Dominus Domino meo, sede ad dexteram meam (Psal. CIX, 1). Sedet ergo ad dexteram Patris Filius. Dic nunc qui de saecularibus arbitraris aestimanda divina, num tibi videatur inferior qui ad dexteram sedet? num injuria Patris, quia ad sinistram sedet? Pater honorat, et tu injuriam putas? Pater mavult id esse pietatis exemplum, et tu putas praeceptionis imperium? De morte surrexit, et ad dexteram Dei sedet. 103. Sed dixit, inquis, Pater. Accipe etiam ubi non dicit Pater, et praedicit Filius: Amodo videbitis Filium hominis sedentem ad dexteram virtutis (Matth. XXVI, 64). Et hoc de assumptione corporis dicit; huic dicit: Sede ad dexteram meam (Psal. CIX, 1). Nam si de aeterna sede divinitatis inquiris, interrogatus a Pilato si ipse esset rex Judaeorum, ait: In hoc sum natus (Joan. XVIII, 37). Unde et Apostolus monet hoc esse nobis utile, si Christum non ex praecepto, neque ex gratia, sed quasi dilectissimum Filium ad dexteram Dei sedere credamus. Sic enim habes: Quae sursum sunt, quaerite, ubi Christus est ad dexteram Dei sedens: quae sursum sunt, sapite (Coloss. III, 1, 2). Hoc est enim superiora sapere, credere quia Christus ut sedeat, non quasi jussus obsequitur, sed quasi Filius dilectissimus honoratur. Propter rationem ergo corporis dicit: Sede ad dexteram meam, donec ponam inimicos tuos scabellum pedum tuorum (Psal. CIX, 1, 2.) 104. Quod si et hoc ad calumniam trahis, quia Pater dixit: Ponam inimicos tuos; etiam Pater trahit ad Filium, quos Filius suscitet atque vivificet: Nemo enim, inquit, potest venire ad me, nisi Pater qui misit me, attraxerit eum: et ego resuscitabo eum in novissimo die (Joan. VI, 44). Et tu Filium Dei pro infirmitate dicis esse subjectum, cui Pater attrahit, quos ille in novissimo die suscitet? Haeccine tibi videtur esse subjectio, in qua regnum Patri paratur, cum Pater ad Filium trahat, et calumniae locus non sit, cum Patri regnum Filius tradat, nec aliquid praeferatur? Haec enim documenta pietatis sunt, quod et Pater Filio, et Filius Patri tradat; ita enim sibi tradunt, ut neque ille qui accipit, quasi alienum acquirat: nec qui tradit, amittat. 105. Ad dexteram quoque sedere nulla praelatio est, neque ad sinistram injuria; divinitas enim gradum nescit, nec loco aliquo circumscribitur, nec temporibus definitur. Angustis animis homines ista pensamus. Nulla differentia charitatis, nullum discrimen est unitatis. 491 106. Sed cur longius evagamur? Circumspectasti omnia, vidisti judicem, advertisti Angelos praedicantes. Illi laudant, et tu vituperas! Dominationes et Potestates venerantur, et tu calumniaris! Adorant omnes sancti ejus: non adorat Dei Filius, non adorat Spiritus sanctus. Seraphim dicunt: Sanctus, sanctus, sanctus (Esai. VI, 3). 107. Quid sibi vult sub uno nomine sanctitatis trina repetitio? Si trina repetitio, cur una laudatio? Si una laudatio, cur trina repetitio? Trina repetitio cur, nisi quia Pater et Filius et Spiritus sanctus sanctitate unum sunt? Non dixit semel, ne Filium sequestraret: non bis, ne Spiritum praeteriret: non quater, ne creaturas conjungeret. Et ut ostenderet Trinitatis unam esse deitatem, cum tertio dixisset: Sanctus, sanctus, sanctus; addidit singulariter: Dominus Deus sabaoth (Esai. VI, 3). Sanctus igitur Pater, sanctus Filius, sanctus et Dei Spiritus. Adoratur igitur Trinitas, non adorat: laudatur Trinitas, non laudat. Ego malo sicut Seraphim credere, et sicut omnes Potestates Virtutesque coelestes adorare.

CAPUT XIII.

CONTINUATA JUDICII DOMINICI allegoria, blasphemas Arianorum, Sabellianorum, et Manichaeorum de suo judice opiniones Ambrosius paucis refellit. Deinde propositis Christi de caeteris suis adversariis expostulationibus, judicium sibi mitius futurum sperat. 108. Igitur prosecutionem tuam videamus, quemadmodum concilies tibi judicem. Dic sane, dic, inquam: Ego te, Christe, puto esse dissimilem Patri. Respondebit et ille: Discerne, si potes; discerne, inquam, in quo putes esse dissimilem. 109. Dic aliud: Creaturam, inquies, te arbitror. Respondebit et Christus: Si duorum hominum testimonium verum est, tu nec mihi, nec Patri saltem credere debuisti, qui genitum nominavit? 110. Bonum, inquies, nego. Dicet et ille: Fiat tibi secundum fidem tuam, ut tibi bonus non sim. 111. Omnipotentem non arbitror. Respondebit et ipse: Non possum ergo tibi tua peccata donare. 112. Subjectum dico. Referet ad hoc: Cur igitur libertatem ac veniam ab eo petis, quem putas pro servitio esse subjectum? 113. Video haerere prosecutionem tuam: non urgeo, quia peccatorum meorum ipse sum conscius. Non invideo veniam, quia ipse opto indulgentiam: votum tuum scire desidero. En allego apud judicem desideria tua: non prodo crimina, seriem tuorum exspecto votorum. 114. Dic itaque ea quae in communi voto sunt; dic, inquam: Domine, fac me ad imaginem Dei. Respondebit ille: Ad quam imaginem? Quam negasti? 115. Dic: Fac me incorruptibilem. Referet utique: 492 Quomodo te incorruptibilem facere possum, quem tu creaturam dicendo, capacem corruptibilitatis esse voluisti? Mortui resurgent incorrupti, et tu corruptibilem dicis quem Deum cernis (I Cor. XV, 52)? 116. Dic: Bonus esto mihi. Dicet tibi: Quid postulas, quod negasti? Ego te bonum esse volui, ego dixi: Estote sancti, quoniam ipse sanctus sum (Levit. XIX); et tu mihi id negare contendis? et tu exspectas veniam peccatorum? Sed nemo potest donare peccata, nisi solus Deus. Itaque cum verus et solus tibi Deus non sim, non possum utique tua peccata donare. 117. Haec Arianus dicat, et Photinianus: Nego te, inquit, Deum. Respondebit ei Dominus: Dixit insipiens in corde suo: Non est Deus (Psal. LII, 1). De quo dictum putas, de Judaeo, de gentili, an de diabolo? De quovis dictum sit, Photiniane, tolerabilior est ille, qui tacuit: tu vero et voce ausus es dicere, ut insipiente insipientior probareris. Negas ergo, inquit, Deum; cum ego dixerim: Dii estis, et filii excelsi omnes (Psal. LXXXI, 6). Et tu Deum negas, cujus opera divina circumspicis? 118. Dicat et Sabellianus: Ego teipsum Patrem et Filium et Spiritum sanctum arbitror. Respondebit et Dominus: Non audis Patrem, non audis Filium. Numquid hic ulla confusio est? Scriptura ipsa te docet Patrem esse, qui detulit judicium: Filium esse, qui judicat. Non audisti me dicentem: Solus non sum; sed ego, et qui misit me Pater (Joan. VIII, 29). 119. Dicat et Manichaeus: Ego auctorem carnis nostrae diabolum credo. Respondebit ei: Ergo quid facies in coelestibus? Vade ad auctorem tuum. Ego eos volo mecum esse, quos dedit mihi Pater. Tu te a diabolo creatum, Manichaee, arbitraris: ad illius ergo festina sedem; ubi ignis et sulphur, ubi non restinguitur ejus incendium, ne umquam poena moriatur. 120. Mitto alia haereticorum portenta, non nomina; quid eis erit judicii, quae erit forma sententiae? Respondebit his omnibus et ille moraliter: Populus meus, quid feci tibi, aut quid constristavi te (Mich. VI, 3)? Nonne ex Aegypto eduxi te, et ex domo servitutis liberavi te? 121. Sed parum est ex Aegypto liberasse, et ex domo servitutis eripuisse: plus est te ipsum dedisse pro nobis. Dices ergo: Nonne vestras omnes suscepi injurias? Nonne corpus meum pro vobis obtuli? Nonne mortem appetivi, quod non erat divinitatis meae, sed vestrae redemptionis? Haeccine referuntur gratiae? Hoc profecit sanguis meus, sicut in Propheta ipse jam dixi: Quae utilitas in sanguine meo; quia descendi in corruptionem (Psal. XXIX, 10)? Hoc ergo profecit, ut me impie negaretis, pro quibus ista sustinui. 122. Ego vero tunc, Domine Jesu, et si gravium peccatorum mihi ipse sim conscius, dicam tamen: Non te negavi; habes quod ignoscas fragilitati carnis. Delictum fateor, peccatum non abnuo: Si vis, potes me mundare (Matth. VIII, 2); quia hoc dixit, emeruit. 493 Ne, quaeso, in judicium intres cum servo tuo (Psal. CXLII, 2). Non quaero ut judices, sed ut ignoscas.

CAPUT XIV.

JUDICIS EXPONIT SENTENTIAM; discussisque adversariorum cavillis, ab ea provocationem non dari planum facit. 123. Quid putamus Christum judicaturum? Ego scio, judicaturum dico? Immo jam judicavit. Tenemus ejus sententiam: Omnes, inquit, honorificent Filium, sicut honorificant Patrem. Qui non honorificat Filium, non honorificat Patrem, qui misit illum (Joan. V, 23). 124. Si displicet sententia, appella ad Patrem, rescinde judicium, quod Pater detulit. Dic quia dissimilem habet Filium. Respondebit tibi: Ego ergo mentitus sum, qui dixi Filio: Faciamus hominem ad imaginem et similitudinem nostram (Gen. I, 26). 125. Dic quia creavit. Respondebit tibi: Cur ergo adorasti, quem creaturam putasti? 126. Dic quia minorem generavit Filium. Respondebit: Metire, videamus. 127. Dic quia ei non debuisti credere. Referet ad hoc: Non tibi dixeram: Hic est filius meus dilectissimus, in quo complacui, ipsum audite (Matth. XVII, 5)? Quid est, ipsum audite? Dicentem utique: Omnia quae Pater habet, mea sunt (Joan. XVII, 10). Hoc audierunt apostoli, sicut scriptum est: Et ceciderunt in faciem suam, et timuerunt valde (Matt. XVII, 6). Si ceciderunt qui confessi sunt, quid facient qui negarunt? Sed illos Jesus tetigit et levavit: vos jacere patietur; ne videatis gloriam, quam negastis. 128. Videamus ergo quoniam quem Filius damnat, et Pater damnat. Et ideo honorificemus Filium, sicut honorificamus Patrem; ut per Filium ad Patrem pervenire possimus.

CAPUT XV.

Modeste sentit de Opere suo: dicit tamen ad fidem illud sufficere; cum divinae generationi tot locis Scriptura suffragetur, cui obsurdescunt Ariani. Horum pervicaciam Judaicae plane similem patefaciens, adprecatur illis veritatis amorem. Postremo deserendos eos, utpote haereticos et Antichristos, docet. 129. Haec ego, Imperator auguste, carptim ac breviter impolita magis proposui, quam enodata digessi. Quod si qua Ariani inconsummata arbitrantur, ego vix fateor inchoata: si qua adhuc superesse opinantur, ego prope omnia; infidelibus enim totum deest, abundat fidelibus. Denique una confessio Petri abundavit ad fidem Christo: Tu es Christus Filius Dei vivi (Matth. XVI, 16); sat est enim generationem scire divinam, non divisam, non diminutam, non derivatoriam, non creatam. 494 130. Hoc etiam totis Scripturarum exponitur libris, nec adhuc ab impiis creditur: Incrassatum est enim, ut scriptum est, cor populi hujus, et auribus graviter audierunt, et oculos suos gravaverunt; ne quando oculis suis videant, et auribus audiant, et corde intelligant (Esai. 6, 10). Namque, more Judaico, aures suas Ariani claudere solent, aut serere tumultus, quotiescumque verbum salutis auditur. 131. Et quid mirum si humanis vocibus credere non soleant infideles, qui non credunt divinis? Filius Dei dicebat, sicut habes in Evangelio: Pater, clarifica nomen tuum. Vox Patris de coelo audita est dicentis: Et clarificavi, et iterum clarificabo (Act. IX, 4). Infideles haec audiebant, sed non credebant. Dicebat Filius, respondebat Pater; et dicebant Judaei: Tonitruum factum est illi (Ibid., 29); alii dicebant: Angelus locutus est ei (Joan. 12. 29). 132. Paulus quoque, sicut scriptum est in Actibus Apostolorum, cum voce Christi vocaretur ad gratiam, pluresque comites pariter incederent, solus vocem Christi audisse se dixit. Adeo, sancte Imperator, qui credit, audit; et audit, ut credat: qui non credit, non audit; sed nec vult, nec potest audire, ne credat! 133. Atque utinam, quod in me est, audire vellent, ut crederent: audire cum bona charitate et mansuetudine, ut verum quaerentes, non veritatem impugnantes. Scriptum est enim, ut non intendamus fabulis et genealogiis interminabilibus, quae quaestiones magis praestant quam aedificationem Dei, quae in fide est. Finis autem praecepti est charitas de corde puro, et conscientia bona, et fide non ficta. A quibus quidam aberrantes, conversi sunt in vaniloquium, volentes esse legis doctores, non intelligentes neque quae loquuntur, neque de quibus affirmant (I Tim. I, 4 et seq.). Alibi quoque idem Apostolus dicit: Stultas autem et sine disciplina quaestiones devita (II Tim. II, 23). 134. Tales deserendos Apostolus dicit, qui quaestiones serunt, hoc est, haereticos: de quibus et alibi dicit quod discedent quidam a fide, intendentes spiritibus erroris et doctrinis daemoniorum (I Tim. IV, 1). 135. Et Joannes dicit haereticos esse Antichristos, Arianos utique designans (I Joan. II, 18). Haec enim haeresis post omnes haereses coepit, et ex omni haeresi venena collegit. Sicut enim de Antichristo scriptum est, quia aperuit os suum in blasphemiam ad Deum, blasphemare nomen ejus, et bellum facere cum sanctis ejus (Apoc. XIII, 6): ita et isti Filio Dei derogant, nec martyribus pepercerunt; et, quod fortasse ille non faciet, Scripturas falsavere divinas. Itaque qui dicit quia Jesus non est Christus, hic est Antichristus: qui negat Salvatorem mundi, negat Jesum: qui negat Filium, negat et Patrem; quia scriptum est: 495 Omnis qui negat Filium, negat et Patrem (I Joan. II, 23).

CAPUT XVI.

GRATIANO VICTORIAM SPONDENS, eam ab Ezechiele praedictam narrat. Ex pietate Imperatoris hanc spem confirmat, superiores clades haeresi Orientalium acceptas ferens. Deum tandem obsecrat, ut jam placatus, fideli exercitui, regioni, ac duci ferat auxilium. 136. Neque vero te, Imperator, pluribus tenere debeo bello intentum, et victricia de barbaris trophaea meditantem. Progredere plane scuto fidei septus, et gladium spiritus habens: progredere ad victoriam superioribus promissam temporibus, et divinis oraculis prophetatam. 137. Namque et futuram nostri depopulationem, et bella Gothorum Ezechiel illo jam tempore prophetavit; sic enim habes: Propterea prophetiza, fili hominis, et dic: O Gog, haec dicit Dominus: Nonne in die illa cum constituetur habitare populus meus Israel in pace, surges et venies de loco tuo, ab extremo Aquilone: et gentes tecum multae, sessores equorum omnes, congregatio multa et magna, et virtus copiosa; et ascende ad populum meum Israel ut nubes operire terram in novissimis diebus, etc. (Ezech. XXXVIII, 14 et seq.). 138. Gog iste Gothus est, quem jam videmus exisse, de quo promittitur nobis futura victoria, dicente Domino: Et depraedabuntur eos, qui depraedati eos fuerant, et despoliabunt eos, qui sibi spolia detraxerant, dicit Dominus. Eritque in die illa, dabo Gog, hoc est, Gothis, locum nominatum, monumentum Israel multorum virorum congestum, qui supervenerunt ad mare: et per circuitum struet os vallis, et obruet illic Gog et totam multitudinem ejus, et vocabitur Ge Polyandrium Gog; et obruet eos domus Israel, ut purgetur terra (Ezech. XXXIX, 10 et seq.). 496 139. Nec ambiguum, sancte Imperator, quod qui perfidiae alienae pugnam excepimus, fidei catholicae in te vigentis habituri simus auxilium.

Evidens enim antehac divinae indignationis causa praecessit; ut ibi primum fides Romano imperio frangeretur, ubi fracta est Deo. 140. Non libet confessorum neces, tormenta, exsilia recordari, piorum sacerdotia proditorum munera. Nonne de Thraciae partibus per Ripensem Daciam et Mysiam, omnemque Valeriam Pannoniorum, totum illum limitem sacrilegis pariter vocibus et Barbaricis motibus audivimus inhorrentem? Quid poterat nobis vicinia tam feralis invehere? aut quemadmodum res Romana tali tuta poterat esse custodia? 141. Sed jam satis superque, omnipotens Deus, nostro exsilio, nostroque sanguine, confessorum neces, exsilia sacerdotum, et nefas tantae impietatis eluimus: satis claruit eos qui violaverint fidem, tutos esse non posse. Convertere, Domine, fideique tuae attolle vexilla. 142. Non hic aquilae militares, neque volatus avium exercitum ducunt: sed tuum, Domine Jesu, nomen et cultus. Non hic infidelis aliqua regio, sed ea quae confessores mittere solet Italia; Italia aliquando tentata, mutata numquam: quam dudum ab hoste barbaro defendisti, nunc etiam vindicasti. Non hic in Imperatore mens lubrica, sed fides fixa. 143. Ostende nunc evidens tuae majestatis indicium; ut is qui te verum virtutum Dominum et coelestis militiae ducem: is qui te veram Dei virtutem credit esse atque sapientiam, non temporalem utique nec creatam, sed sempiternam, sicut scriptum est, Dei virtutem et divinitatem, tuae majestatis fultus auxilio, fidei suae tropaea mereatur (I Cor. I, 24).

LIBER TERTIUS.

CAPUT PRIMUM.

UBI PRAEMISIT AMBROSIUS quamobrem strictius tractata in prioribus libris, in his uberius tractanda suscipiat; objectum sibi fabularum usum exemplo Scripturae diluit cum alia poetica memorantis, tum maxime Sirenas, quae figurae sunt voluptatum: a quibus et Pauli verba et Christi facta oportet avocent Christianos. 1. Quoniam, clementissime Imperator, instruendi tui gratia, aliqua de fide mihi scribenda mandaveras, et verecundantem coram etiam ipse fueras adhortatus; ideo quasi in procinctu positus, duos tantum conscripsi libellos, quibus vias quasdam fidei et semitas demonstrarem. 2. Sed quoniam mens prava quorumdam serendis intenta quaestionibus, stylo lacessit uberiore confici; tuae quoque pia me cura clementiae ad caetera vocat, volens in pluribus experiri, quem in paucis probasti; ea quae perstricta paucis superius sunt, placuit mihi paulo latius exsequi; ne ea quasi diffidentia assertionis deseruisse potius, quam securitate fiduciae proposuisse videamur. 3. Et quia Hydraei nominis, et Scyllaei littoris comparationem induximus (Sup. lib. I, ca), ut ostenderemus vel rediviva plantaria cavenda perfidiae, vel famosa naufragia: si quis contra licitum putat colorem disputationis ejusmodi a poeticis fabulis derivatum, et cum in fide nihil quod vituperare possit invenerit, aliquid in sermone reprehendit; agnoscat non solum sententias, sed etiam versiculos poetarum Scripturis insertos esse divinis. 4. Unde enim illud: Hujus et genus sumus (Act. XVII, 8), quod Paulus usu prophetico doctus usurpat? Nam et gigantes (Num. XIII, 34), et vallem Titanum (II Reg. V, 18) prophetici sermonis series non refugit. Et Esaias Sirenas, et filias passerum dixit (Esai. XLIII, 20). Et Hieremias de Babylonia memoravit quod habitabunt in ea filiae Sirenum (Jerem. XXVII, 39); ut ostenderet Babylonis, hoc est, saecularis confusionis illecebras, vetustae lasciviae fabulis comparandas; quae velut scopuloso in istius vitae littore, dulcem resonare quamdam, sed mortiferam cantilenam ad capiendos animos adolescentium viderentur: quam sapiens etiam ab ipso poeta Graeco inducitur (Hom. XII Odyss.), quasi quibusdam prudentiae suae circumdatus vinculis praeteriisse. Ita difficile judicatum est ante adventum Christi etiam fortiores non posse capi speciosae deliciis voluptatis! 5. [Alias cap. II.] Quod si poeta ille perniciosam mentibus hominum, et subeundis obnoxiam naufragiis, lasciviae saecularis illecebram judicavit; quid nos aestimare oportet, quibus scriptum est: Carnis curam ne feceritis in concupiscentia (Rom. XIII, 14)? Et alibi: Castigo corpus meum et servituti redigo: ne aliis praedicans, ipse reprobus efficiar (I Cor. IX, 27). 498 6. Non enim per luxuriam nobis Christus, sed per jejunium salutem attulit. Neque ille emerendae gratiae suae causa, sed nostrae eruditionis gratia jejunavit. Neque infirmitate corporis victus est, ut esuriret: sed esuriendo suscepti corporis fidem praestitit; ut non solum corpus, sed etiam infirmitates nostri corporis doceret a se esse susceptas, sicut scriptum est: Quoniam infirmitates nostras suscepit, et aegritudines nostras portavit (Esai. LIII, 4).

CAPUT II.

Quae corporis sunt a Christo pro nobis suscepti, divinitati non tribuenda: secundum hanc illum altissimum; quod qui neget, eum Patri ascribere incarnationem. Cum Deus legitur solus esse, aut solus habere immortalitatem, id etiam intelligendum de Christo, tum ut memorata impietas declinetur, tum quia eadem Filii ac Patris asseritur operatio. 7. Corporis est igitur, hoc est, nostrum est, quod esurivit: nostrum est, quod flevit, quod tristis fuit usque ad mortem. Cur ad divinitatem quae sunt nostra referuntur? Corporis est, quod etiam factus asseritur. Denique sic habes: Mater Sion dicet: Homo, et homo factus est in ea, et ipse fundavit eam Altissimus (Psal. LXXXVI, 5). Homo, inquit, factus est, non Deus factus est. 8. Qui autem idem altissimus, idem homo, nisi Mediator Dei, et hominum, homo Christus Jesus, qui dedit semetipsum redemptionem pro nobis (I Tim. II, 5, 6)? Et hoc utique ad incarnationem pertinet; redemptio enim nostra per sanguinem, remissio per potestatem, vita per gratiam. Quasi altissimus donat, quasi homo precatur: aliud creatoris, aliud redemptoris est. Distincta licet, unius tamen auctoris beneficia sunt; decuit enim ut ille nos redimeret, qui creavit. 9. Quis autem neget Christum esse altissimum significatum? Nam qui aliter sentit, Deo Patri sacramentum incarnationis ascribit. Sed hinc dubitari non potest quod altissimus Christus sit; cum etiam alibi dixerit de mysterio passionis: Dedit vocem suam Altissimus, et mota est terra (Psal. XVII, 14). Et in Evangelio habes: Et tu, puer, propheta Altissimi vocaberis; praeibis enim ante faciem Domini parare vias ejus (Luc. I, 76). Qui altissimus? Dei Filius. Ergo qui altissimus Deus, Christus est. 10. Et solus utique cum dicitur Deus, non separatur etiam Dei Filius.

Qui enim altissimus, solus, sicut scriptum est: Et cognoscant quoniam nomen tibi Dominus, tu solus altissimus super omnem terram (Psal. LXXXII, 19). 11. Unde etiam illud explosum est, quod solent ad calumniam derivare, quia de Deo scriptum est: Qui solus habet immortalitatem, et lucem habitat inaccessibilem (I Tim. VI, 16); de Deo enim scriptum est, quod est commune nomen Patri et Filio. 499 12. Nam si ubicumque Deum legunt, negant etiam Filium designari; et impii sunt, divinitatis potentiam Filio denegando, et incarnatum Patrem Sabelliana impietate astruere videbuntur. Dicant enim quomodo illud non impie de Patre intelligere possint, quod Apostolus ait: In quo et consurrexistis per fidem operationis Dei, qui suscitavit illum a mortuis (Coloss. II, 12); et advertant de sequentibus quid incurrant; sequitur enim: Et cum mortui essetis delictis et praeputio carnis vestrae, vivificavit nos cum illo, donans nobis omnia delicta, delens quod adversum nos erat chirographum decreti, quod erat contrarium nobis: et ipsum tulit de medio, affigens illud cruci, exuens se carne (Ibid., 13, 14). 13. Ergo non Deus Pater solus intelligendus est, qui suscitavit carnem: et non etiam Filius, cujus templum resuscitatum est. Qui suscitavit, utique et vivificavit: qui vivificavit, et delicta donavit: qui delicta donavit, et chirographum tulit: qui chirographum tulit, affixit illud cruci: qui affixit illud cruci, carnem se exuit. Sed Pater non se exuit carnem; non enim Pater caro factus est, sed Verbum, sicut legimus, caro factum est (Joan. I, 14). Videtis ergo quod Ariani dum separant a Patre Filium, in id periculum incidant, ut Patrem passum esse commemorent. 14. Nos autem facile docemus de Filii dictum operatione; nam et ipse corpus suum resuscitavit, sicut ipse dixit: Solvite templum hoc, et in triduo resuscitabo illud (Joan. II, 19). Et ipse vivificat nos cum suo corpore: Sicut enim Pater suscitat mortuos et vivificat; sic et Filius quos vult, vivificat (Joan. V, 21). Et ipse delicta donavit dicens: Dimissa sunt tibi peccata tua (Luc. V, 20). Et ipse chirographum affixit cruci, qui crucifixus est per corporis passionem. Nec alius se carnem exuit, nisi Dei Filius, qui carnem se induit. Ipse ergo significatur Deus, qui opus nostrae resurrectionis operatus est.

CAPUT III.

FILIUM A PATRE non separandum ex Apostolo confirmari, cum Filio quoque conveniat beatum esse, solum potentem ac immortalem, natura videlicet, non gratia qua ipsi etiam angeli sunt immortales; et lucem habitare inaccessibilem: quo ultimo qua ratione fiat explicato, quo pacto Pater solus, ac Filius pariter solus dicantur, ostenditur. 15. Ergo cum legis Deum, non separes Patrem, non separes Filium; quia deitas et Patris et Filii una eademque est. Et ideo nec ibi separes, ubi legis quia beatus et solus potens; de Deo enim dictum est, sicut habes: Praecipio coram Deo, qui vivificat omnia (I Tim. VI, 13); sed etiam Christus vivificat: convenit ergo et Patri et Filio Dei nomen; quando convenit et operationis effectus. 500 Persequamur et caetera. Praecipio, inquit, coram Deo qui vivificat omnia, et Christo Jesu. 16. In Deo est etiam Verbum, sicut scriptum est: In Deo laudabo Verbum (Psal. LV, 11). In Deo sempiterna sua virtus est Jesus: in Deo igitur unitatem divinitatis, in Christi autem nomine incarnationis testificatus est sacramentum. 17. Denique ut de incarnatione Christi se dixisse ostenderet, subdidit: Qui testimonium reddidit sub Pontio Pilato bonam confessionem; ut serves mandatum sine macula usque in adventum Domini nostri Jesu Christi: quem suis temporibus ostendet beatus et solus potens, rex regum, et Dominus dominantium; qui solus habet immortalitatem, et lucem habitat inaccessibilem: quem vidit hominum nemo, sed nec videre potest (I Tim. VI, 13 et seq.). Ergo de Deo haec scripta sunt, cujus nominis et dignitas et veritas communis est Filio. 18. Cur igitur hoc loco Filius separatur, cum etiam Filio haec cuncta conveniant? Aut si non conveniant, nega Deum; ut neges quae Deo sunt convenientia.

Beatus negari non potest, qui beatitudines donat: Beati enim quibus remissae sunt iniquitates (Psal. XXXI, 1). Beatus negari non potest, qui sanam doctrinam tribuit, sicut scriptum est: quae est secundum Evangelium claritatis beati Dei (I Tim. I, 11). Potens abnui non potest, de quo Pater dicit: Posui adjutorium super potentem (Psal. LXXXVIII, 20). Immortalitatem autem ejus quis audeat diffiteri, cum etiam aliis immortalitatem ipse largitus sit, sicut scriptum est de sapientia Dei: Per hanc habebo immortalitatem (Sap. VIII, 13). 19. Sed alia immortalitas suae naturae, alia nostrae. Non sunt fragilia comparanda divinis: una sola substantia divinitatis est, quae mori nescit. Unde et Apostolus, cum sciret et animam et angelos immortales, quod solus Deus immortalitatem habeat praedicavit. Nam et anima moritur: Anima enim quae peccat, ipsa morietur (Ezech. XVIII, 20); nec Angelus immortalis est naturaliter, cujus immortalitas in voluntate est Creatoris. 20. Neque ad praejudicium trahas, quod non moritur Gabriel, non moritur Raphael, non moritur Uriel; et in ipsis enim naturae capacitas vitio obnoxia, sed non obnoxia disciplinae. Omnis enim rationabilis creatura accidentia recipit, et subjecta judicio est. In accidentibus autem et poena judicii, et corruptela est, et profectus. Unde et Ecclesiastes ait: Quoniam omne opus suum Deus adducet in judicium (Eccl. XII, 14). Ergo corruptelae et mortis, etiamsi non moriatur aut peccel, capax tamen omnis est creatura: nec ex immortali natura habet, sed ex disciplina vel gratia, si se in aliquibus ad vitia non mutat. Alia ergo immortalitas quae donatur, alia quae sine capacitate mutabilitatis est semper. 21. An negatur immortalis divinitas Christi, quia in carne pro omnibus mortem gustavit? 501 Jam ergo melior Gabriel quam Christus; quia ille non est defunctus, hic mortuus est. Sed non est servus supra dominum (Matth. X, 24); alia enim carnis infirmitas, alia divinitatis aeternitas: mors carnis est, immortalitas potestatis. Quod si divinitas fecit ne caro videret corruptionem, quae utique corruptelae erat obnoxia per naturam; quomodo mori posset ipsa divinitas? 22. Quomodo autem lucem inaccessibilem non habitat Filius, cum in sinu Patris Filius sit: lux autem Pater, lux etiam ipse sit Filius; quia Deus lux est (Joan. I, 9)? Aut si aliam lucem inaccessibilem nisi deitatis putamus, numquid melior Patre lux est; ut non sit in luce, qui sicut scriptum est, et apud Patrem est, et in Patre (Ibid., 2)? Non ergo separent Filium, cum legunt solum Deum: nec Patrem separent, cum legunt Filium solum. 23. In terris Filius sine Patre non est, et putas quia Pater sine Filio sit in coelo? In carne est Filius, cum dico in carne est, vel in terris, secundum Evangelii tempora loquor; nunc enim secundum carnem jam non novimus Christum (II Cor. V, 16): ergo in carne est Filius, et solus non est, secundum quod scriptum est: Et non sum solus, quia Pater mecum est (Joan. VIII, 16); et putas quod sit Pater solus in luce? 24. At ne hoc argumentum putes, accipe etiam testimonium: Deum, inquit, nemo vidit umquam, nisi unigenitus Filius, qui est in sinu Patris, ipse enarravit (Joan. I, 18). Quomodo solus Pater, si in sinu Patris Filius est? quomodo enarrat, quem non videt? Non ergo solus Pater. 25. Accipe nunc et solum Patrem, et solum Filium. Solus Pater, quia alius Pater non est: solus Filius, quia alius Filius non est: solus Deus, quia una divinitas Trinitatis est.

CAPUT IV.

Christum non nisi secundum carnem factum narrari; quippe qui ut homines redimeret, non eguerit adjutorio, sicut nec ut se resuscitaret; cum aliis ut mortuos resuscitarent, oratione opus fuerit. Etsi autem ipse oraverit, hoc referendum ad humanitatem: divinitatem vero ex eo quod imperaverit, aestimandam; in quo diabolus Arianis anteponitur. Tum exposito cur Filius hominis potens dicatur, argumenti ponitur conclusio. 26. [Alias, cap. III.] Satis ergo claret et solum Deum non esse Patrem sine Filio, et solum Deum non intelligi Filium sine Patre; quia secundum carnem factus legitur Dei Filius, non secundum divinam generationem. 27. In quo autem factus sit, per os sancti patriarchae locutus asseruit, dicens: Quia repleta est malis anima mea, et vita mea inferno appropinquavit. Aestimatus sum cum descendentibus in lacum: factus sicut homo sine adjutorio inter mortuos liber (Psal. LXXXVII, 4 et seq.). Et hic sicut homo, inquit, non sicut Deus, factus sum. Et repleta est malis anima mea: anima utique, non divinitas. Factus est 502 in eo, in quo erat infernis debitus: factus est in eo, in quo cum aliis aestimatus est; divinitas enim similitudinem collationis abjurat. Et tamen in ipsa carne morti obnoxia majestatem adverte divinitatis in Christo. Et si factus est sicut homo, et sicut caro factus est; factus est tamen inter mortuos liber, et liber sine adjutorio. 28. Sed quomodo hic sine adjutorio fuisse se Filius dicit, cum supra (ca) dictum sit: Posui adjutorium super potentem (Psal. LXXXVIII, 20)? Ergo et hic distingue naturas. Adjutorium caro habet, divinitas non habet. Liber igitur est, quia mortis vincula nescivit; non captus ab inferis, sed qui operatus sit in infernis: sine adjutorio est, quia neque per nuntium, neque per legatum, sed ipse per se Dominus salvum fecit populum suum. Quomodo enim potuit adjutorium sui corporis quaerere suscitandi, qui alios suscitavit? 29. Ac licet homines quoque suscitaverint mortuos; non in sua tamen virtute fecerunt, sed in Christi nomine. Aliud est rogare, aliud imperare: aliud mereri, aliud donare. 30. Elias ergo suscitavit, sed oravit, non imperavit (III Reg. XVII, 21, 22). Elisaeus suscitavit configuratus mortuo: suscitavit etiam ipsius mortui corporis tactus; ut esset typus venturum eum qui missus in similitudinem carnis peccati, etiam sepultus mortuos suscitaret (IV Reg. XIII et XIV). 31. Petrus quoque, cum Aeneam curaret, ait: In nomine Jesu Nazareni surge et ambula (Act. II, 6): non in suo ait, sed in Christi nomine. Surge autem verbum est imperantis: sed fiducia de merito est, non praesumptio de potestate; et de nominis operatione, non de sua virtute praeceptionis auctoritas. Quid igitur Ariani dicunt? In nomine Christi et Petrus imperat, et illi nolunt imperasse Dei Filium, sed rogasse. 32. Sed lectum est quia rogavit. Disce distantiam. Rogat quasi filius hominis, imperat quasi Dei Filius. Annon defertis hoc Dei Filio, quod etiam diabolus detulit, et vos majore sacrilegio derogatis? Ille dicit: Si Filius Dei es, dic lapidi huic ut fiat panis (Luc. IV, 3). Ille dicit, impera: vos dicitis, obsecra. Ille credit quod, jubente Dei Filio, elementorum rerumque natura in adversum vertatur: vos creditis quod nisi roget Dei Filius, nec voluntas ipsius impleatur. Et diabolus de potestate aestimandum putat Dei Filium, vos de infirmitate. Tolerabiliora sunt tentamenta diaboli, quam argumenta Arii. 33. Nec moveat quia potentem Filium dixit hominis, cum Dominum majestatis legeris crucifixum (I Cor. II, 2). Quae autem major potentia, quam supra coelestes potestates habere dominatum (Ephes. I, 21)? Habebat autem qui Thronis, Dominationibus, Angelis imperabat. Nam etsi erat inter bestias, sicut scriptum est (Marc. I, 13), tamen angeli ministrabant ei; ut agnoscas aliud incarnationis esse, aliud potestatis. Secundum carnem itaque tentatur a bestiis, secundum dignitatem ab angelis adoratur. 503 34. Didicimus igitur factum esse hominem et ad hominem hoc esse referendum. Denique et alibi habes: Qui factus est ei ex semine David (Rom. I, 3), secundum carnem utique ex semine David factus est: Deus autem ante saecula ex Deo natus est.

CAPUT V.

Factum in Scriptura non semper idem esse ac creatum exemplis ex ipsa petitis docet. Inde colligit non cavillandum ex littera more Judaeorum, quibus tamen haereticos pejores probat; atque iterum propositam confirmat sententiam. 35. Nec semper tamen factum esse ad creationem refertur; scriptum est enim: Domine, refugium factus es nobis (Ps. LXXXIX, 1); et: Factus es mihi in salutem (Ps. CXVII, 14). Non utique creationis definitio vel editio declaratur: sed refugium factus mihi, et conversus mihi dicitur ad salutem, sicut et Apostolus dixit: Qui factus est nobis sapientia a Deo, et justitia, et sanctificatio, et redemptio (I Cor. I, 30). Nobis factum non creatum ex Patre dixit. Denique quomodo dicat factum nobis esse sapientiam, in posterioribus exposuit dicens: Sed loquimur Dei sapientiam in mysterio, quae abscondita est, quam praedestinavit Deus ante tempora saecularia in gloriam nostram, quam nemo principum hujus saeculi cognovit. Si enim cognovissent, numquam Dominum majestatis crucifixissent (I Cor. II, 7, 8). Ubi mysterium passionis exprimitur, non utique generationis aeternae series declaratur. 36. Sapientia igitur mea crux Domini est, redemptio mea mors Domini est; sanguine enim pretioso redempti sumus, ut apostolus Petrus dixit (I Petr. I, 19). Sanguine igitur suo, quasi homo, Dominus nos redemit; idemque, quasi Deus, peccata donavit. 37. Non ergo in verbis quasdam constituamus insidias, et verborum tendiculas aucupemur; ut quia et aliud secundum impios significare putatur sermo qui legitur, non id quod sensus exprimat, sed quod littera ostendat, interpretemur. Sic perierunt Judaei, dum sensuum profunda despiciunt, et sequuntur nuda verborum; Littera enim occidit, spiritus autem vivificat (II

Cor. III, 6). 38. Et tamen inter duo gravia sacrilegia fortasse detestabilius sit ad divinitatem referre quae carnis sunt, quam ad litteram referre quae spiritus sunt. Illi timuerunt in Deo carnem credere; et ideo redemptionis gratiam perdiderunt, quia causam salutis abjurant: isti divinitatis majestatem usque ad carnis infirma deducunt. Detestandi Judaei, qui carnem Domini crucifixerunt: detestabiliores tamen eos arbitror, qui divinitatem Christi cruci subditam crediderunt. Denique qui cum Judaeis saepe tractabat: 504 Haereticum, inquit, post unam correptionem devita (Tit. III, 10). 39. Nec tamen sine injuria Patris factum nobis esse sapientiam, ad illam inenarrabilem, nec ullis temporibus momentisque obnoxiam Christi generationem sacrilega interpretatione derivant. Nam praeter id quod Filii injuria Patris est contumelia, etiam in Patrem sacrilegia ista procedunt, de quo scriptum est: Fiat autem Deus verax, omnis autem homo mendax (Rom. III, 4). Aut si de Filio putant dictum, generationi quidem non praejudicant: Deum autem et Deum verum hujus lectionis auctoritate quod abnuunt, confitentur. 40. Prolixum est si velim singula recensere, quoties factum legerimus, non utique per naturam, sed per gratiam. Nam et Moyses dicit: Adjutor et protector factus est mihi in salutem (Exod.XV, 2). Et David dicit: Esto mihi in Deum protectorem, et in domum refugii, ut salvum me facias (Ps. XXX, 3). Et Esaias dicit: Factus est omni civitati humili adjutor (Esai. XXV, 4). Non utique sancti Deo dicunt: Creatus es, sed protector et adjutor per gratiam tuam factus es nobis.

CAPUT VI.

Objectionem ex Joanne desumptam ut diluat, primo demonstrat Manichaeis patrocinari Arianum sensum: deinde varia distinguendorum verborum ejusdem loci exposita ratione, ipsum nullo modo ad substantiam divinam sine Patris injuria referri posse aperte probat, verumque illius exponit intellectum. 41. Unde nec illud verendum est, quod solent Ariani saeva interpretatione componere, dicentes factum esse Dei Verbum; quia scriptum est, inquiunt: Quod factum est in ipso, vita est (Joan. I, 4). 42. Primum intelligant si ad substantiam divinam referant, quod factum est; Manichaeorum se quaestionibus implicari. Objiciunt enim Manichaei: Si quod in ipso factum est, vita est: est ergo aliquid quod in ipso factum non sit, et mors sit; ut duo impie inducant principia. Sed hoc damnat Ecclesia. 43. Deinde unde possunt docere sic pronuntiasse Evangelistam? Plerique enim docti et fideles sic pronuntiant: Omnia per ipsum facta sunt, et sine ipso factum est nihil quod factum est; alii sic: Omnia per ipsum facta sunt, et sine ipso factum est nihil; denique: Quod factum est, pronuntiant et subjungunt: in ipso, hoc est: Quidquid autem factum, est in ipso. Quid est, In ipso? Apostolus docet dicens: In ipso enim sumus, et vivimus et movemur (Act. XVII, 28). 44. Tamen etiamsi quemadmodum velint, pronuntient, non possunt hic calumniari Deo 505 Verbo, si ad substantiam ejus velint referre: Quod factum est; quin calumnientur et Patri Deo, de quo scriptum est: Qui autem facit veritatem, venit ad lucem; ut manifestentur opera ejus, quia in Deo sunt facta (Joan. III, 21). Ecce hic opera hominis in Deo facta legimus, et ad substantiam tamen divinam referre non possumus: sed aut per ipsum facta cognoscimus, ut est etiam illud Apostolicum, quod omnia per ipsum, et in ipso creata sunt; et ipse est ante omnes, et omnia in ipso constant (Coloss. I, 16): aut, ut docet praesentis lectionis testimonium, virtutes quibus vitae aeternae fructus acquiritur, in Deo factas aestimare debemus, castitatem, pietatem, religionem, fidem et alia hujusmodi, quae in voluntate Dei facta sunt. 45. Ergo sicut in Dei Patris, ita etiam in Christi voluntate et virtute facta sunt, sicut legimus: Creati in Christo in operibus bonis (Ephes. II, 10); et in psalmo: Fiat pax in virtute tua (Ps. CXXI, 7); et alibi: Omnia in sapientia fecisti (Ps. CIII, 24). In sapientia, inquit, fecisti, non sapientiam fecisti. Nam cum omnia in sapientia facta sint, Christus autem Dei sapientia sit (I Cor. I, 24), non accidens utique, sed subsistens et permanens in aeternum; si facta est sapientia, jam deteriore conditione facta est quam omnia; quia sapientia fieri per se ipsam non potuit. Ergo si factum esse frequenter ad aliquid, non ad naturam refertur, etiam creatum esse ad causam refertur.

CAPUT VII.

QUOD A SALOMONE dictum est: Dominus creavit me, etc., incarnationem Christi ad redimenda Patris opera factam signare; quo ex ipsius Filii verbis declarato, principium ostendit etiam accipi posse de documentis virtutum, quarum omnium vias nobis Dominus aperuisse, ac vere principium exstitisse demonstratur. 46. [Alias cap. IV.] Unde intelligimus illud quod de incarnatione Domini scriptum est: Dominus creavit me principium viarum suarum in opera sua (Prov. VIII, 22), id significare quod ad redimenda opera Patris Dominus Jesus ex Virgine sit creatus. Neque enim dubitari potest de incarnationis dictum esse mysterio, cum propter opera sua a corruptelae servitio liberanda Dominus susceperit carnem; ut illum qui imperium habebat mortis, per sui corporis destrueret passionem. Caro enim Christi propter opera, divinitas ante opera; quia ipse ante omnia, sed et omnia in ipso constant. 47. Non ergo divinitas propter opera, sed propter divinitatem opera; sicut Apostolus declaravit, dicens quod propter Filium Dei omnia. Sic enim habes: Decebat autem eum per quem omnia, et propter quem omnia, multis filiis in gloriam adductis, ducem salutis eorum per passionem consummari (Hebr. II, 10). Nonne evidenter exposuit quia Dei Filius qui propter divinitatem suam omnia creavit, is postea propter populi salutem et carnis suceptionem, et mortis assumpserit passionem? 48. Propter quae autem opera sit creatus ex Virgine, 506 ipse Dominus cum illum caecum curaret, ostendit dicens: In illo me oportet operari opera ejus, qui misit me (Joan. IX, 4). Et addidit, ut de incarnatione ejus dictum crederemus: Cum in hoc mundo sum, lux sum hujus mundi (Ibid., 5). Etenim quasi homo in hoc mundo pro tempore est; nam quasi Deus semper

est. Denique et alibi ait: Ecce ego vobiscum sum usque ad consummationem mundi (Matth. XXVIII, 20). 49. Nec de principio residet aliquid quaestionis, cum interrogatus in carne: Tu qui es? responderit: Principium quod et loquor vobis (Joan. VIII, 25). Quod non solum ad substantiam divinitatis aeternae refertur, sed etiam ad documenta virtutum. Ex hoc enim et Deum se probavit aeternum; quia omnium ipse principium est, et uniuscujusque virtutis auctor, quia Ecclesiae caput est, sicut scriptum est: Quia ipse est caput corporis Ecclesiae, qui est principium, primogenitus ex mortuis (Coloss. I, 18). 50. Liquet igitur et de incarnatione dictum esse principium viarum suarum, quod ad sacramentum suscepti corporis videtur esse referendum. Ideo enim carnem suscepit, ut ad coelum nobis sterneret iter. Denique ait: Ascendo ad Patrem meum, et Patrem vestrum: Deum meum, et Deum vestrum (Joan. XX, 17). Denique ut scias quod vias suas omnipotens Pater secundum incarnationem praescripserit Filio, habes in Zacharia ad Jesum indutum vestimenta sordida ab Angelo dictum: Haec dicit Dominus omnipotens: Si in viis meis ambulaveris, et praecepta mea custodieris (Zach. III, 7). Quod est vestimentum illud sordidum, nisi carnis assumptio? 51. Viae igitur Domini velut quidam tramites bonae vitae sunt, quae diriguntur a Christo, qui ait: Ego sum via, et veritas, et vita (Joan. XIV, 6). Via ergo superna est Dei virtus; Christus enim nobis via est. Et bona via, quae credentibus coeli regna patefecit. Viae autem Domini viae rectae sunt, sicut scriptum est: Vias tuas, Domine, notas fac mihi (Ps. XXIV, 4). Via castitas, via fides, via est abstinentia. Est namque via virtutis, est et via iniquitatis; scriptum est enim: Et vide si est via iniquitatis in me (Ps. CXXXVIII, 24). 52. Principium itaque nostrae virtutis est Christus. Principium integritatis, qui docuit virgines non viriles exspectare concubitus, sed integritatem mentis et corporis sancto magis dicare Spiritui, quam marito (II Cor. XI, 2). Principium parcimoniae Christus, qui pauper factus est, cum esset dives (II Cor. VIII, 9). Principium patientiae Christus, qui cum malediceretur, non remaledixit; cum percuteretur, non repercussit (I Petr. II, 23). Principium humilitatis Christus, qui formam servi accepit (Philip. II, 7); cum Patrem Deum majestate virtutis aequaret. Ex illo enim accepit virtus unaquaeque principium. 53. Et ideo ut haec virtutum genera disceremus: Filius datus est nobis, cujus principium super humeros ejus (Esai. IX, 6). Principium illud crux Domini est; principium fortitudinis, quo via sanctis est reserata martyribus ad sacri certaminis passionem. 507

CAPUT VIII.

VERSICULUS IN ESAIA proxime citatus de Christi humanitate ac divinitate explicatur, eoque varias haereses jugulari evincitur. 54. Vidit hoc principium Esaias, et ideo ait: Puer natus est, Filius datus est nobis. Viderunt et Magi, et ideo cum parvalum in praesepi cernerent, adoraverunt dicentes: Puer natus est; cum stellam conspicerent, praedicantes: Filius datus est nobis (Matth. II, 11). Aliud munus e terris, aliud munus e coelo, et utrumque unus in utroque perfectus, et sine mutabilitate divinitatis, et sine humanae imminutione naturae. Unum adoraverunt, eidemque munera obtulerunt; ut ostenderent ipsum esse coeli Dominum, qui in praesepibus videretur. 55. Distingue singulorum momenta verborum: Puer natus est, Filius datus est nobis. Etsi ex Patre natus, non tamen nobis natus, sed datus est; quia non Filius propter nos, sed nos propter Filium. Neque enim nobis natus est, qui et ante nos natus est, et totius est conditor creaturae: neque nunc primum nascitur, qui erat semper, et erat in principio: sed illud quod non erat, nobis nascitur. Quod etiam angelus pastoribus cum loqueretur, dixit esse generatum, sicut habes scriptum: Quia natus est nobis hodie Salvator, qui est Christus Dominus, in civitate David (Luc. II, 11). Nobis ergo quod non erat, natum est: hoc est, puer ex Virgine, corpus ex Maria; hoc enim post nos, illud ante nos. 56. Alii codices sic habent: Puer natus est nobis, Filius datus est nobis; hoc est, qui erat Filius Dei, hic ex Maria puer natus est nobis, et datus est nobis. Quia datus sit, audi Prophetam dicentem: Et salutare tuum da nobis (Psal. LXXXIV, 8). Quod enim supra nos est, datur: quod de coelo est, datur; sicut etiam de Spiritu legimus quod, Charitas Dei effusa est in cordibus nostris per Spiritum sanctum, qui datus est nobis (Rom. V, 5). 57. Sed videte quemadmodum hic locus multas haereses exstinguat. Puer natus est nobis, non Judaeis: nobis, non Manichaeis: nobis, non Marcionitis. Propheta dicit: Nobis, hoc est credentibus, non incredulis. Et ille quidem misericordia sua omnibus natus est, sed perfidia haereticorum fecit, ut non omnibus nasceretur, qui omnibus natus est. Nam et lumen diei oriri jubetur super bonos et malos: sed oriri non videntibus non videtur (Matth. V, 15). 58. Sicut ergo puer non omnibus natus est, sed fidelibus: sic Filius non infidelibus datus est, sed fidelibus. Nobis datus est, non Photinianis; illi enim non datum nobis Dei Filium dicunt esse, sed ab initio inter nos natum: nobis datus est, non Sabellianis; illi enim nolunt Filium datum, eumdem asserentes Patrem esse quem Filium: nobis, non Arianis; et ipsi enim non habent Filium pro salute datum, sed pro infirmitate transmissum: non habent consiliarium, quem putant futura nescisse: non habent Filium, quem sempiternum non putant; cum 508 scriptum sit de Verbo Dei, quod erat in principio; et alibi: In principio, erat Verbum (Joan. I, 2). Denique ut ad propositum revertamur exemplum: In principio, inquit, antequam terram faceret, antequam abyssos faceret, et antequam produceret fontes aquarum, ante omnes colles genuit me (Prov. VIII, 23 et seq.).

CAPUT IX.

Difficultatem ex loco Salomonis supra laudato exorientem solvit Ambrosius, illic et praeteritum sumi pro futuro, et geminam in Christo naturam designari patefaciens. 59. Fortasse dices, quomodo de incarnatione Christi dictum esse memoraverim: Dominus creavit me, cum ante incarnationem Christi creatura sit mundi? Sed considera quia moris est Scripturis divinis, et futura pro praeteritis dicere, et geminam in Christo significare substantiam divinitatis, et carnis; ne quis aut divinitatem neget ejus, aut carnem. 60. Nam sicut in Esaia habes: Puer natus est nobis, et Filius datus est nobis (Esai. IX, 6); ita hic quoque ante praemisit creaturam carnis, et subtexuit assertionem divinitatis; ut scires non duos Christos, sed unum esse: qui et ante saecula generatus sit ex Patre, et ultimis temporibus creatus ex Virgine, hoc est: Ego sum ille creatus ex homine, creatus ad causam, qui sum generatus ante saecula. 61. Denique dicturus: Dominus creavit me, praemisit: Commemorabo quae a saeculo sunt. Dicturus: Genuit, praemisit: In principio antequam terram faceret, ante omnes colles genuit me. Ante, cum dicitur, in infinitum retro sine aliqua definitione porrigitur. Denique, ante Abraham, inquit, ego sum (Joan. VIII, 58), non utique post Adam: et ante Luciferum (Psal. CIX, 3), non utique post angelos. Sed ante, cum dixit, non se intra aliquem, sed omnia intra se dixit; sic enim moris est aeternitatem Dei Scripturis significare divinis. Denique alibi habes: Priusquam montes fierent, et formaretur orbis terrae, a saeculo et usque in saeculum tu es (Psal. LXXXIX, 2). 62. Ante omnia ergo generatio, inter omnia et propter omnia creatura. Natus ex Patre supra Legem, factus ex Maria sub Lege.

CAPUT X.

Baptistae verba ex quibus Christum etiam ante incarnationem factum disputabant, soluturus, ubi praemisit ea referri posse ad praedestinationem; intelligenda tamen de incarnatione ab antecedentibus probat. Hinc progrediens ad mystica, ipsum dignitate ac merito ante Joannem fuisse declarat: maxime cum Ecclesiae, cujus typus in historia Ruth expressus fuerat, sponsus, etiam excluso Moyse, solus exstiterit: quam licet Synagoga non omnino neglecta, solus vocavit. 63. [Alias. cap. V.] Sed scriptum est: Post me venit vir, qui ante me factus est; quia prior me erat. Unde dicunt: Ecce qui erat, factus est. Ipsa verba perpendamus. Post me, inquit, venit vir (Joan. I, 30). Vir ergo est qui venit, ipse qui factus est. Vir 509 autem nomen est sexus: sexus autem non utique divinitati, sed naturae deputatur humanae. 64. Possem ergo dicere: Erat in praecognitione quidem corporis, sed aeternitate virtutis; nam et Ecclesia erat, et sancti erant praedestinati ante saecula: sed non id hoc loco dico, at illud assero, factum esse non ad divinitatem, sed ad incarnationis pertinere naturam, sicut ipse Joannes dixit: Hic est de quo dixi: Post me venit vir, qui ante me factus est. 65. Itaque cum geminam, sicut supra dixi, in Christo substantiam proposuisset, ut utramque intelligas et divinitatis et carnis, hoc loco coepit a carne. Est enim Scripturis promiscua consuetudo divinis, ut interdum a divinitate Christi incipiant, et ad incarnationis sacramenta descendant; interdum ab humilitate incarnationis exordium sumant, et ad gloriam divinitatis assurgant, ut in prophetis, et in evangelistis frequenter, et in Paulo. Ergo et hic juxta memoratam consuetudinem ab incarnatione Domini coepit de ejus divinitate dicturus; non ut confunderet humana atque divina, sed ut distingueret.

Verum Ariani, velut Judaici caupones, miscent aquam cum vino; quia divinam generationem humanamque confundunt, ad deitatem referentes, quod de carne sit dictum. 66. Nec metuo quod objecturi videntur quia in superioribus non habet, Virum; sic enim habet: Qui post me venit. Sed videant et ibi quid praemiserit: Verbum, inquit, caro factum est (Joan. I, 14). Et ideo non addidit, Virum; quia carnem dixerat: per carnem autem istic virum intelligimus, et per virum carnem. Ergo quia dixerat: Verbum caro factum est, virum hoc loco nominare superfluum fuit, quem jam carnis expressione signaverat. 67. Quo exemplo in posterioribus quoque et agnum praemisit, qui tolleret peccata mundi; et ut incarnatum intelligeres, quem ante memoraverat, ait: Hic est de quo ante dixi: Post me venit vir, qui ante me factus est (Ibid., 29), hoc est, virum dixi, non Deum factum. Sed ut ipsum incarnatum declararet esse, quia ante saecula erat; ne duos filios crederemus, ait: Quia prior me erat. Nam si, Factus est, ad divinam generationem retulisset, quid opus erat ut adhuc adderet tertium, atque iteraret quod supra dixerat? Sed quia ante de incarnatione tantum dixerat: Post me venit vir, qui ante me factus est; ideo addidit: Quia prior me erat, quoniam divinitatis aeternitas fuerat exprimenda. Et haec est causa praelationis, ut merito antelatus videatur, qui proprii Patris sempiterna virtus est. 68. Dat tamen intellectus spiritalis ubertas, ut excurrere et evagari ad concludendos libeat Arianos, qui volunt factum hoc loco non ad virum, sed ad divinitatem referre. Quid est enim tenere quod possint; cum dixerit Baptista: Post me venit, qui ante me factus est; hoc est, supra meritum meum factus, supra meam gratiam, tempore carnis posterior, divinitatis honore venerabilis? Post me enim venit, temporis 510 est: prior me erat, aeternitatis: ante me factus est, honoris; quia etiam Incarnationis mysterium supra humanam est gratiam. 69. Denique in inferioribus quid supra contexuisset expressit dicens: Post me venit vir, cujus non sum dignus calciamenta portare (Joan. I, 27); praestantiam utique dignitatis, non aeternitatem divinae generationis exponens. Quod eousque ad incarnationem pertinet, ut typum in hominibus mystici calciamenti ante praemiserit. Lege enim proximo defuncti vel fratri copula deferebatur ejus uxoris; ut semen fratris vel proximi resuscitaret (Num. XXXVI, 6). Unde quod Ruth, licet ipsa alienigena; tamen quia maritum habuerat ex Judaeis, qui reliquerat superstitem proximum, eamque colligentem manipulos suae messis, quibus alebat et se et socrum, Booz vidit et amavit: non aliter eam accipit uxorem, nisi calciamentum ejus ante solvisset, cui uxor debebatur ex Lege (Ruth. IV, 5-7). 70. Historia simplex, sed alta mysteria; aliud enim gerebatur, aliud figurabatur. Nam si secundum litteram sensum torqueamus, prope quidam pudor et horror in verbo est, si ad commixtionis corporeae consuetudinem sententiam intellectumque referamus. Designabatur autem futurus ex Judaeis, ex quibus Christus secundum carnem, qui proximi sui, hoc est, populi mortui semen doctrinae coelestis semine suscitaret, cui calciamentum nuptiale Ecclesiae copulandae praescripta Legis spiritalia deferebant. 71. Non Moyses sponsus; illi enim dicitur: Solve calciamentum pedum tuorum (Exod. III, 5); ut Domino suo cedat. Non Jesus Nave filius sponsus; nam et ipsi dicitur: Solve calciamentum pedum tuorum (Josue V, 16); ne ex similitudine nominis sponsus Ecclesiae crederetur. Non alius sponsus, sed solus Christus est sponsus, de quo dixit Joannes: Qui habet sponsam sponsus est (Joan. III, 29). Illis igitur calciamentum solvitur, huic solvi non potest, sicut dixit Joannes: Non sum dignus solvere corrigiam calciamenti ejus (Joan. I, 27). 72. Solus ergo Christus est sponsus, cui illa veniens ex gentibus sponsa, ante inops atque jejuna, sed jam Christi messe dives, innubat: quae manipulos fecundae segetis, Verbique reliquias gremio legat mentis interno; ut exhaustam illam viduam morte filii, atque inopem defuncti populi matrem novis pascat alimentis, non relinquens destitutam viduam, et novos quaerens. 73. Solus ergo Christus est sponsus, qui nec Synagogae ipsi manipulos suae messis invideat. Utinam se non ipsa excluderet! Habuit quos per se colligeret: sed quia populus ejus est mortuus, quasi filio egena defuncto, per Ecclesiam manipulos, quibus viveret, colligebat; quos venientes in exsultatione portabunt, sicut scriptum est: Venientes autem venient in exsultatione, tollentes manipulos suos (Psal. CXXV, 6). 74. Quis enim sibi alius sponsam audeat Ecclesiam vindicare, quam a Libano unus et solus vocavit dicens: Ades huc a Libano, sponsa; 511 ades huc a Libano (Cant. IV, 8). Aut de quo alio potuit Ecclesia dicere: Fauces ejus dulcedines, et totus desiderium (Cant. V, 16)? Et quia de calciamento pedum tractatum sumpsimus, cui alii nisi Verbo Dei incarnato convenit dictum: Crura ejus columnae marmoreae, fundatae super bases aureas (Ibid., 13)? Solus enim Christus inambulat animis, et graditur in mente sanctorum, in quibus velut aureis basibus, fundamentisque pretiosis solidata vestigia Verbi coelestis haeserunt. 75. Claret igitur et virum et typum ad incarnationis spectare mysterium.

CAPUT XI.

Redit ad locum propositum, et ubi Christus dicitur factus, hoc vel ad incarnationem vel ad causam sive adjunctum aliquod referri docet. Ad eum sensum plurima sacrorum codicum et Pauli imprimis testimonia edisserit: maxime autem in eo immoratur, ut Christum verum sacerdotem esse atque in Melchisedech praefiguratum, eique cum Patre operationis unitatem, non vero solam similitudinem inesse persuadeat. 76. Non ergo ad substantiam divinitatis, sed ad incarnationem saepe, nonnumquam etiam ad causam pertinet, cum dicitur factus. Nam si ad divinitatem refers, ergo et in opprobrium Deus factus est; sic enim habes: Tu autem repulisti, et ad nihilum redegisti, dispulisti Christum tuum (Psal. LXXXVIII, 39); et infra: Et factus est in opprobrium vicinis suis (Ibid., 42). Vicinis, inquit, non civibus, non domesticis, non adhaerentibus; quoniam qui adhaeret Domino, unus spiritus est (I Cor. VI, 17): qui vicinus est, non adhaeret. Et, Factus est in opprobrium; quia crux Domini Judaeis scandalum, Graecis stultitia (I Cor. I, 23). Nam sapientibus per eamdem crucem excelsior factus est coelis, excelsior angelis, et melioris testamenti factus est sponsor, ipse qui erat prioris. 77. Vide quam non defugiam ista, ut etiam congeram: sed quomodo factus sit, considera. 78. Primum quod purificatione facta, considet in dextera magnitudinis in excelsis, tanto melior factus angelis (Hebr. I, 3, 4). Ubi purificatio, hostia: ubi hostia, corpus: ubi corpus, oblatio: ubi munus oblationis, ibi sacrificium passionis. 79. Deinde sponsor melioris testamenti (Hebr. VII, 22). Ubi testamentum, mors necesse est praecedat testatoris (Hebr. IX, 16), sicut subter est scriptum: mors autem non ad divinitatis aeternitatem, sed ad fragilitatem refertur humanam. 80. Excelsior quoque coelis factus quomodo sit, ostenditur: Immaculatus, inquit, segregatus a peccatoribus, et excelsior coelis factus: qui non habet quotidie necessitatem, sicut sacerdotes, prius pro suis delictis hostiam offerre, deinde pro populi. Hoc enim fecit semel se offerendo, sicut scriptum est (Hebr. VII, 26, 27). 512 Nemo excelsior factus dicitur, nisi qui in aliquo fuerit humilior: in eo igitur excelsior factus est, sedendo ad dexteram Patris, in quo se minor angelis factus, obtulit passioni (Hebr. II, 9). 81. Postremo ipse Apostolus ad Philippenses ait, quia in similitudine hominis factus, et specie inventus ut homo, humiliavit semetipsum, factus obediens usque ad mortem (Phil. II, 7, 8). Vide ubi factus sit: In similitudine, inquit, hominis, non in potestate Dei: et factus abediens usque ad mortem; ut obedientiam quidem hominis habuerit, regnum divinitatis. 82. Quantis igitur adhuc utemur exemplis ad incarnationem, vel ad aliquid referendum esse quod factus est! Quod autem et factum est, idem est et creatum: Dixit enim, et facta sunt: ipse mandavit, et creata sunt (Psal. CXLVIII, 5). Dominus creavit me (Prov. VIII, 22), secundum carnem dictum: creatum quoque supra ostendimus in libro primo (Ca et seq.) de incarnatione dictum videri. 83. Ipse etiam Apostolus asserendo serviendum non esse creaturae, significavit ex Deo Filium non creatum esse, sed genitum (Rom. I, 25). Tamen etiam alibi, ut manifestaret quomodo in Salomone sit lectum: Dominus creavit me; quid in Christo creatum esset, ostendit. 84. Itaque totius seriem capitis recenseamus; sic enim habes: Ergo quia filii participes sunt carnis et sanguinis, et ipse similiter particeps factus est eorumdem; ut per mortem destrueret hunc qui mortis habebat imperium (Hebr. II, 14). Quis ergo est qui nos participes suae voluit esse carnis et sanguinis? Utique Dei Filius. Quomodo nisi per carnem particeps factus est noster? aut per quam, nisi per corporis mortem mortis vincula dissolvit? Mortis enim mors facta est susceptio mortis in Christo. Ergo de incarnatione proposuit. 85. Videamus sequentia: Nec enim statim Angelos, inquit, assumpsit, sed semen Abrahae. Unde habuit per omnia fratribus similari; ut misericors fieret et fidelis princeps, sacerdos ad Deum, ut expiaret peccata populi. In quo enim passus est ipse; et tentatus, potest et tentatos juvare (Ibid., 16, 17). Propter quod, fratres sanctissimi, vocationis coelestis participes, intuemini apostolum et principem sacerdotum confessionis nostrae Jesum fidelem esse creatori suo, sicut et Moyses in domo ejus (Hebr. III, 1, 2). Haec nempe verba sunt Apostoli. 86. Videtis in quo creatum dicat: in quo assumpsit, inquit, semen Abrahae, corporalem utique generationem asserit. In quo autem, nisi in corpore expiavit populi peccata? In quo passus est, nisi in corpore; sicut et supra diximus: Christo passo secundum carnem? In quo sacerdos, nisi in eo quod sacerdotali assumpsit ex genere? 87. Sacerdos enim aliquid debet offerre, et secundum Legem in sancta intrare per sanguinem (Hebr. IX, 25): 513 ergo quia sanguinem taurorum, hircorumque repudiaverat Deus, hunc utique sacerdotem per suum sanguinem, sicut legisti, in sancta sanctorum coeli summa penetrantem oportebat intrare (Ibid. 12); ut aeterna nostrorum esset oblatio peccatorum. Idem ergo sacerdos, idem et hostia: et sacerdotium tamen, et sacrificium humanae conditionis officium est; nam et agnus ad immolandum ductus est, et sacerdos est secundum ordinem Melchisedech. 88. Nemo igitur ubi ordinem cernit humanae conditionis, ibi jus divinitatis asserat. Nam et illum Melchisedech per quem Abraham hostias suas obtulit (Gen. XIV, 18), non angelum utique secundum Judaica ludibria intelligit Ecclesia, sed virum sanctum, ac sacerdotem Dei, qui typum gerens Domini, et sine Patre, et sine matre, et sine generationis enarratione, et sine initio, et sine fine describitur; ut ostenderet sempiternum Filium Dei in hunc mundum esse venturum, qui et sine Patre secundum incarnationem natus est, et sine matre secundum divinam generationem, et sine enarratione generationis; quia scriptum est: Generationem autem ejus quis enarrabit (Esa. LIII, 8)? 89. Ergo illum Melchisedech in Christi typo sacerdotem Dei accepimus: sed illum in typo, hunc in veritate: typus autem umbra est veritatis: illum in nomine unius civitatis, hunc regem in reconciliatione totius mundi; quia scriptum est: Deus erat in Christo, mundum reconcilians sibi (II Cor. V, 19); hoc est, sempiterna divinitas; aut, si Pater in Filio, sicut Filius in Patre, et substantiae utique et operationis unitas non negatur. 90. Quomodo autem negare merito possunt, etiam si velint, cum scriptum sit: Pater autem qui in me manet, ipse facit opera; et: Opera quae ego facio, ipse facit (Joan. XIV, 10)? Non dixit: Et ipse facit; ne similitudinem magis, quam unitatem operis aestimares: sed dicendo: Quae ego facio, ipse facit, manifestum reliquit quod unum opus Patris et Filii credere debeamus. 91. Denique ubi similitudinem operum, non unitatem voluit intelligi: Qui credit, inquit, in me, opera quae ego facio, et ipse faciet (Ibid., 12). Bene hic et interponendo, similitudinem nobis donavit; et tamen unitatem naturalem negavit. Unum est igitur opus Patris et Filii, etiamsi non placeat Arianis.

CAPUT XII.

REGNUM PATRIS ATQUE Filii unum esse ac indivisum; et unam similiter utriusque divinitatem. 92. Quaero autem quomodo regnum velint Patris et Filii esse divisum; cum Dominus dixerit, ut supra ostendimus; Omne regnum in se divisum, facile destruetur (Matth. XII, 25) ? 93. Et ideo ad excludendum Arianae sacrilegium saevitatis, unum imperium Patris et Filii etiam 514 Petrus sanctus asseruit dicens: Quapropter satagite, fratres, certam vestram vocationem et electionem facere. Haec enim facientes non errabitis; sic enim abundantius ministrabitur vobis introitus in aeternum imperium Dei, et Domini nostri conservatoris Jesu Christi (II Petr. I, 10, 11). 94. Aut si quis de Christi tantum imperio dictum putat, et hoc ideo sic accipit, ut Patrem Filiumque potestate secernat; is tamen et regnum Filii fatebitur, et aeternum. Itaque non solum duo inducent regna divisa, ut obnoxia sint defectui; sed etiam cum regna comparabilia nulla sint Dei regno, quod Filii esse, etiamsi velint negare non possunt: aut contra suam sententiam redibunt, ut idem Patris et Filii regnum esse fateantur: aut, quod sacrilegium est dicere, jus Patri regni minoris ascribent: aut, quod contrarium est, quem minorem divinitate impie memorant, ejus regnum fatebuntur aequale. 95. Sed hoc non quadrat, non congruit, non cohaeret. Dicant igitur unum esse regnum, sicut nos dicimus, et probamus: probamus autem non nostris, sed coelestibus testimoniis. 96. Primum enim etiam aliis exemplis disce regnum coelorum, regnum etiam Filii esse: ipse enim dixit: Amen, amen, dico vobis quoniam sunt aliqui dehic astantibus, qui non gustabunt mortem, donec videant Filium hominis venientem in regnum suum (Matth. XVI, 28). Dubitari ergo non potest quod sit regnum Filii Dei.

97. Sed accipe ipsum esse regnum Filii, quod Patris est: Amen dico vobis quod sunt quidam circumstantium, qui non gustabunt mortem, donec videant regnum Dei veniens in virtute (Marc. VIII, 39). Eo enim usque unum regnum est, ut unum sit praemium, idem haeres, eadem merita, idem sponsor. 98. Quomodo non idem regnum, cum praesertim ipse de se Filius dixerit : Tunc justi fulgebunt sicut sol in regno Patris mei (Matth. XIII, 43). Quod enim Patris est per majestatis proprietatem, id etiam Filii est per ejusdem claritudinis unitatem. Ergo et Patris regnum Scriptura dixit, et Filii (Joan. XVII, 5). 99. Accipe nunc quia ubi regnum Dei dicit, nec Patris nec Filii separat potestatem; quia et paternum et Filii regnum uno Dei nomine comprehendit, sicut habes: Cum videritis Abraham, Isaac, et Jacob, et omnes prophetas in regno Dei (Luc. XIII, 28). An negamus in regno Filii prophetas esse, cum et latroni dicenti: Memento mei, cum veneris in regnum tuum; responderit Dominus: Amen dico tibi, hodie mecum eris in paradiso (Luc. XXIII, 42, 43)? Aut quid est esse in regno Dei, nisi aeternam nescire mortem? Qui autem nesciunt aeternam mortem, vident Filium hominis venientem in regnum suum. 100. Quomodo ergo potest non in potestate habere quod donat dicens: Tibi dabo claves regni coelorum (Matth. XVI, 19)? Et videto distantiam. Servus 515 aperit, Dominus largitur: iste per se, ille per Christum: famulus claves accipit, Dominus ordinat potestates: aliud jus donantis, aliud dispensantis obsequium est. 101. Accipe adhuc unum regnum, unum imperium esse Patris et Filii. Habes ad Timotheum: Paulus apostolus Jesu Christi secundum imperium Dei Salvatoris nostri, et Christi Jesu spei nostrae (I Tim. I, 1). Unum igitur Patris et Filii regnum evidenter est declaratum, sicut et apostolus Paulus asseruit dicens: Hoc enim scitote quod omnis impudicus, aut immundus, aut avarus, quod est idololatria, non habet haereditatem in regno Christi et Dei (Ephes. V, 5). Ergo unum regnum, et una divinitas. 102. Unam divinitatem lex probavit, quae dicit unum Deum (Deut. VI, 4). Probavit et Apostolus, dicendo de Christo: In quo habitat omnis plenitudo divinitatis corporaliter (Coloss. II, 9). Si enim juxta Apostolum plenitudo omnis corporaliter divinitatis in Christo est, aut unius divinitatis Patrem et Filium fatebuntur: aut si Patris et Filii divinitatem cupiunt separare, cum omnem plenitudinem divinitatis corporaliter Filius habeat; quid est quod existimant amplius reservandum, cum amplius nihil sit plenitudine perfectionis? Ergo una divinitas.

CAPUT XIII.

FILIO MAJESTATEM SUAM esse, ac paternae aequalem: cujus socii non sint angeli, sed spectatores. 103. [Alias cap. VI.] Imaginem autem unam, et similitudinem unam supra diximus (Lib. 1, ca), superest ut unius quoque majestatis Patrem Filiumque doceamus. Nec longe aberit; cum enim ipse dixerit de se Filius: Cum venerit Filius hominis in majestate sua, et omnes angeli cum eo, tunc sedebit super sedem majestatis suae (Matth. XXV, 31). Ecce Filii expressa majestas est: quid ei deest, cujus increatam majestatem negare non possunt? Est ergo Filii majestas. 104. Accipiant nunc, ut dubitare non possint, quod Patris et Filii una majestas sit; ipse enim Dominus dixit: Nam qui me erubuerit et meos sermones, hunc Filius hominis erubescet; cum venerit in majestate sua, et Patris, et sanctorum angelorum (Luc. IX, 26). Quid est: Et sanctorum angelorum, nisi quia honorantur et servi dignitate domini sui? 105. Dignitatem ergo suam ad Filium et Patrem retulit; non ut angeli habeant cum Patre et Filio aequale consortium, sed ut praeeminentem gloriam Dei cernant. Neque enim suam majestatem angeli habent, sicut lectum est de Filio: Cum sederit in sede majestatis suae (Matth. XXV, 31); sed assistunt, ut Patris et Filii gloriam videant, quibus aut possunt aut merentur aspectibus. 106. Denique ipsa se explanant verba divina, ut intelligas illam gloriam Patris et Filii cum 516 angeli non esse communem; sic enim habes: Cum autem venerit Filius hominis in majestate sua, et omnes angelis cum eo. Et ut doceret unam majestatem et unam gloriam esse Patris et suam, ipse in alio libro ait: Et Filius hominis confundet eum, cum venerit in gloria Patris sui cum angelis sanctis (Marc. VIII, 38). Illi in obsequio, hic in gloria: illi in comitatu, hic in suggestu: illi stant, hic sedet; ut verbo tamen usus utamur humani, hic judicat, hi ministrant. 107. Divinam autem non praemisit majestatem Patris, et subdidit suam et angelorum; ne de superioribus ad inferiora fecisse gradum quemdam et ordinem videretur. Sed quia Pater inferior videri non poterat, praemisit majestatem suam, et addidit Patris et angelorum; ne se medium inter Patrem et angelos nominando, aut ab angelis ad Patrem per sui quoque incrementa fecisse quemdam videretur ascensum, aut a Patre rursus ad angelos per ordinem cum sui etiam diminutione crederetur fecisse descensum. Nam nos qui unam divinitatem Patris et Filii confitemur, diversum, ut Ariani, ordinem non putamus.

CAPUT XIV.

UNIUS SUBSTANTIAE CUM Patre Filium esse; hanc autem etiam secundum divinitatem sumi debere in multis Scripturarum testimoniis, tametsi in aliis nonnullis hoc verbum aut de possessionibus aut de incarnatione intelligatur. 108. De substantia autem, Imperator auguste, quid loquar unius Filium cum Patre esse substantiae; cum imaginem Paternae substantiae Filium legerimus (Sap. VII, 26); ut in nullo secundum divinitatem a Patre intelligas discrepare? 109. Juxta hanc imaginem dixit: Omnia quae Pater habet, mea sunt (Joan. XVI, 15). Ergo nec substantiam in Deo possumus denegare; neque enim insubstantivus est, qui aliis dedit habere substantiam: licet alia sit substantia Dei, alia creaturae. Nec posset insubstantivus Filius Dei esse, per quem cuncta subsistunt. 110. Et ideo ait: Non est occultatum os meum quod fecisti in abscondito, et substantia mea in inferioribus terrae (Psal. CXXXVIII, 15). Virtuti enim et divinitati ea, quae ante constitutionem mundi, vel imperspicabili majestate sunt gesta, abscondita esse non poterant. Legimus ergo substantiam. 111. Sed dices de incarnatione dictam esse substantiam. Interim nomen substantiae lectum probavi, et lectum non pro patrimoniis, ut dicitis. Jam, si placet, accipiamus secundum mysterium in inferioribus Christi fuisse substantiam. Etenim ut defunctorum animas in sui corporis anima liberaret, vincula mortis solveret, peccata donaret, operatus est in inferno. 517 112. Et tamen quid obstat quominus illam divinam intelligas esse substantiam, cum Deus ita ubique sit, ut ei dictum sit: Si ascendero in coelum, tu illic es: si descendero ad infernum, ades (Ibid., 8). 113. Denique ad substantiam divinam derivandum esse intellectum sequentibus declaravit dicens: Inoperatum meum viderunt oculi tui (Ibid., 16); eo quod non operis factura sit Filius, sed Verbum genitum potestatis aeternae: ἀκατέργαστον enim dixit, hoc est, inoperatum atque increatum Verbum sine alicujus creaturae testimonio ex Patre natum: et tamen abundamus aliis substantiae testimoniis. Sit ista hoc loco substantia corporalis, dummodo non opus Dei Filium, sed inoperatam ejus divinitatem et ipse fatearis. 114. Scio autem aliquos dicere inoperatum esse etiam incarnationis mysterium, quod non sit virilis copulae usus operatus; quia partus est Virginis. Si ergo plerique hoc loco nec Mariae partus opus esse dixerunt, tu, Ariane, opus putas esse Dei Verbum? 115. Aut hic tantum substantiam legimus? Nonne et alibi dixit: Portae civitatum effractae sunt, montes ceciderunt, et revelata est substantia (Nahum. II, 6)? Numquid hic quoque creatura signatur? Solent enim aliqui dicere pecuniariam esse substantiam. Ergo si ad hunc sensum refers, ideo occiderunt montes, ut pecuniarium patrimonium cerneretur. 116. Sed meminerimus qui montes ceciderunt, illi utique de quibus dictum est: Si habueritis fidem sicut granum sinapis, dicetis huic monti: Tollere, et jactare in mare (Matth. XVII, 19). Montes ergo sunt altitudines se extollentes. 117. Denique in Graeco, regna ceciderunt, habetur. Quae regna, nisi satanae, de quo dixit Dominus: Quomodo stabit regnum ipsius (Matth. XII, 26)? Ipsos ergo legimus montes, quae regna sunt diaboli. Ideoque istis cadentibus regnis de corde fidelium, revelatum est paternae Dei Filium Christum esse substantiae. Qui sunt etiam illi ipsi montes aerei, de quorum medio quatuor currus procedunt (Zach. VI, 1)? 118. Advertimus altitudinem illam extollentem se adversus scientiam Dei verbo Domini corruisse; cum diceret Dei Filius: Obmulesce, et exi, immunde spiritus (Marc. I, 25). De quo et propheta dixit: Ecce ego ad te, mons corrupte (Jerem. LI, 25). 119. Isti ergo ceciderunt montes, et revelatum est quod esset in Christo divina substantia, dicentibus iis, qui viderant: Vere Filius Dei est (Luc. IV, 41); non enim humana, sed divina potestate daemoniis imperabat. Jeremias quoque dicit: Super montes accipite luctum, et super semitas desertas planctum, quia defecerunt; eo quod non sint homines, non acceperunt vocem substantiae: a volatilibus usque ad jumenta expaverunt et defecerunt (Jerem. IX, 10). 120. Nec praeteriit etiam alibi, cum fragilitates exponeret conditionis humanae, ut susceptam a se 518 infirmitatem carnis, et affectum nostrae mentis ostenderet, dixisse Dominum per Prophetam: Memento, Domine, quae est substantia mea (Psalm. LXXXVIII, 48); quia in natura fragilitatis humanae Dei Filius loquebatur. 121. De quo supra, ut incarnationis mysteria revelaret, ait: Tu vero repulisti, Domine, et pro nihilo habuisti: dispulisti Christum tuum, evertisti testamentum servi tui, profanasti in terra sanctitatem ejus (Ibid. 39, 40). In quo utique servum dixit, nisi in carne, quia non rapinam arbitratus est esse se aequalem Deo, sed semetipsum exinanivit formam servi accipiens, in similitudinem hominum factus, et specie inventus ut homo (Philip. II, 6, 7)? Mea ergo susceptione servus, sua Dominus potestate. 122. Quid illud quod habes? Quoniam quis stetit in substantia Domini (Jerem. XXIII, 18); et alibi: Et si stetissent in substantia mea, et audissent verba mea, et si docuissent plebem meam; avertissem eos a nequitiis et adinventionibus suis (Ibid., 22).

CAPUT XV.

Cum Filium Patri ἑτεροούσιον Ariani dicant, eos in Deo substantiam aperte agnoscere: nec ob aliud hanc vocem defugere, nisi quod illum verum Dei Filium fateri nolint, ut significavit Eusebius Nicomediensis. Recte igitur constitutum a Nicaenis PP. verbum ὁμοούσιον, utpote haeresi oppositum et in Scriptura firmatum; proindeque neglectis, quae isti fingunt de Sabellianis, retinendum. 123. Quomodo negant Dei esse substantiam? Quomodo verbum substantiae, quod creberrimum in Scripturis est, putant esse vitandum; cum ipsi ex alia substantia, hoc est, ἑτεροούσιον dicendo Filium, substantiam tamen in Deo esse non abnuant? 124. Non igitur verbum, sed vim verbi fugiunt; quia nolunt verum esse Dei Filium. Nam licet humano verbo non possit divinae generationis series comprehendi; tamen judicarunt Patres fidem suam tali proprie contra ἑτεροούσιον sermone signandam, auctoritatem secuti prophetae, qui ait: Quis stetit in substantia Domini, et vidit Verbum ejus? Secundum impietatem igitur suam positum substantiae verbum recipiunt Ariani, secundum pietatem autem fidelium comprobatum repudiant et refutant. 125. Nam quid est aliud, cur ὁμοούσιον Patri nolint Filium dici, nisi quia nolunt verum Dei Filium confiteri? sicut auctor ipsorum Eusebius Nicomediensis epistola sua prodidit scribens: Si verum, inquit, Dei Filium et increatum dicimus, ὁμοούσιον cum Patre incipimus confiteri. Haec cum lecta esset epistola in concilio Nicaeno, hoc verbum in tractatu Fidei posuerunt Patres, quia id viderunt adversariis esse formidini; ut tamquam evaginato ab ipsis gladio ipsorum nefandae caput haereseos amputarent. 519 126. Frustra autem verbum istud propter Sabellianos declinare sedicunt, et in eo suam imperitiam produnt; ὁμοούσιον enim aliud alii, non ipsum est sibi. Recte ergo ὁμοούσιον Patri Filium dicimus, quia verbo eo et personarum distinctio et naturae unitas significatur. 127. An negare possunt οὐσίαν lectam, cum et panem ἐπιούσιον Dominus dixerit (Matth. VI); et Moyses scripserit: ὑμεῖς ἔσεσθέ μοι λαὸς περιούσιος (Exod. XIX)? Aut quid est οὐσία, vel unde dicta, nisi οὖσα ἀεί, quod semper maneat? Qui enim est, et est semper, Deus est; et ideo manens semper ουσία dicitur divina substantia. Propterea ἐπιούσιος panis, quod ex Verbi substantia substantiam virtutis manentis cordi et animae subministret; scriptum est enim: Et panis confirmat cor hominis (Psal. CIII, 15). 128. Servemus igitur praecepta majorum, nec haereditaria signacula ausi rudis temeritate violemus. Librum signatum illum propheti cum non Seniores, non Potestates, non Angeli, non Archangeli aperire ausi sunt: soli Christo explanandi ejus praerogativa est servata. Librum sacerdotalem quis nostrum resignare audeat, signatum a confessoribus, et multorum jam martyrio consecratum? Quem qui resignare coacti sunt, postea tamen damnata fraude, signarunt: qui violare non ausi sunt, confessores et martyres exstiterunt. Quomodo fidem eorum possumus denegare, quorum victoriam praedicamus?

CAPUT XVI.

UT CATHOLICI CONTRA fraudes Arianorum praemuniantur, subdolas quasdam eorum confessiones exponit: nec sufficere quod Filium nonnumquam Deum vocitent, nisi eum admittant Patri aequalem, collectis argumentis probat. 129. Nemo metuat, nemo formidet: plus confert fidelibus, qui minatur. Venenatae sunt blanditiae perfidorum, tunc cavendae cum id quod negant, praedicare se simulant. Sic decepti sunt et ante, qui facile crediderunt; ut ibi perfidiae laqueos inciderent, ubi fidem esse credebant. 130. Qui dicit, inquiunt, Christum creaturam secundum caeteras creaturas, anathema sit. Audierunt simplices, et crediderunt: Innocens enim, sicut scriptum est, credit omni verbo (Prov. XIV, 15). Audierunt ergo, et crediderunt, primo decepti sono; ac velut aves intenti ad escam fidei, extentum sibi laqueum non caverunt. Ita dum fidem sequuntur, hamum nefandae fraudis attrectaverunt. Et ideo: Estote, inquit, astuti sicut serpentes, et simplices sicut columbae (Matth., X, 16); praemittitur astutia, ut sit tuta simplicitas. 520 131. Sunt enim serpentes Evangelici, qui exuunt veterem usum, ut induant novos mores, sicut scriptum est: Exspoliantes veterem hominem cum actibus ejus, et induentes novum secundum imaginem ejus, qui creavit eum (Coloss. III, 9, 10). Discamus ergo depositis vetusti hominis exuviis, Evangelicorum serpentium vias; ut more serpentium servare caput, fraudem cavere noscamus. 132. Satis fuerat dicere: Qui dicit creaturam Christum, anathema sit. Cur bono confessionis, Ariane, venena permisces, ut totum corpus contamines? Addendo enim: Secundum caeteras creaturas, non creaturam Christum negas, sed creaturam dicis esse dissimilem; creaturam enim dicis, etsi praestantiorem caeteris asseras creaturis. Denique Arius hujus impietatis magister Dei Filium creaturam dixit esse perfectam, sed non sicut caeteras creaturas. Videtis igitur haereditario patris vestri vos usos esse sermone? Sat est creaturam negare, quid opus fuit addere: Sed non sicut caeteras creaturas? Recide quod putruit, ne serpat contagio: venenum habet; mortem affert. 133. Deinde dicis interdum Deum Christum: sed ita dic Deum verum, ut plenitudinem ei paternae divinitatis assignes; sunt enim qui dicuntur dii sive in coelo, sive in terra. Non ergo perfunctorie nuncupandus Deus, sed ita ut eamdem divinitatem praedices in Filio, quam Pater habet, sicut scriptum est, Sicut enim Pater vitam habet in semetipso, sic dedit et Filio vitam habere in semetipso (Joan. V, 26). Dedit utique quasi Filio per generationem, non quasi inopi per gratiam. 134. Et potestatem dedit ei judicium facere, quia Filius hominis est. Vide quid addidit, ne tu calumnieris ex verbo. Filium hominis legis, et accipientem arguis? Nega ergo Deum, si non omnia Filio quae Dei sunt, deferuntur; cum enim dixerit: Omnia quae Pater habet, mea sunt (Joan. XVI, 15); cur tu non omnia quae divinae naturae sunt, etiam in Filio confiteris? Nam qui dicit: Omnia quae Pater habet, mea sunt; quid excipit quod non habet? 135. Quid est quod ἐμφατικῶς, quam fideli magis sermone commemores, quod mortuos suscitaverit, maria pedes transmiserit, infirmitates hominum curaverit? Haec enim etiam servulis suis praestitit. Plus ista miror in hominibus, quod tantam eis dederit potestatem. Aliquid de Christo audire desidero, quod speciale sit Christi, quod cum iis quae creata sunt, non possit esse commune; quia genitus, quia unicus est Dei Filius, quia Deus verus ex Deo vero, quia ad dexteram Patris sedet. 136. Ubicumque lego consessum Patris et Filii, 521 semper ad dexteram Filius sedet. Numquid melior Filius Patre? Non hoc dicimus: sed quem charitas Dei honorat, humana iniquitas derogat. Scivit Pater serendas esse de Filio quaestiones, praebuit nobis quod sequeremur, pietatis exemplum, ne Filio derogemus.

CAPUT XVII.

OBJECTIONI QUAE HIC nasci poterat, occurrens, cur Dominus Stephano stare visus sit, explicat: et ex hujus ad Filium precibus ejusdem ac Patris aequalitate confirmata, librum terminat. 137. Uno tantum loco stantem ad dexteram Dei Jesum Stephanus vidisse se dixit (Act. VII, 55). Et hoc disce, ne quam hinc moveas quaestionem. Cur enim ubique ad dexteram sedere ostenditur, uno legitur in loco stare? Sedet quasi judex vivorum et mortuorum: stat quasi advocatus suorum. Stabat ergo quasi sacerdos, quando Patri hostiam boni martyris offerebat: stabat quasi bono luctatori bravium tanti praesul certaminis redditurus. 138. Accipe et tu spiritum Dei, ut ista distinguas, sicut accepit et Stephanus; et dicas sicut dixit et martyr: Ecce video coelos apertos, et Filium hominis stantem ad dexteram Dei. Qui coelos apertos habet, Jesum ad dexteram Dei cernit: qui clausos oculos habet mentis, Jesum ad dexteram Dei non videt. Confiteamur ergo Jesum ad dexteram, ut coelum et nobis aperiatur. Claudunt sibi coelum, qui aliter confitentur. 522 139. Quod si qui objiciunt quod Filius stabat, ostendant hoc loco quod Pater sedebat. Nam licet Filium hominis stare dixerit; tamen hoc loco nec Patrem sedere commemoravit. 140. Ut autem evidentius cognosceretur nulla esse stantis injuria, sed potestas, Filium Stephanus obsecrabat, ut se amplius commendaret Patri, dicens: Domine Jesu, recipe spiritum meum (Act. VII, 58). Et ut eamdem Patris et Filii potestatem esse ostenderet, repetivit dicens: Domine, ne statuas illis hoc peccatum (Ibid., 59). Hoc Dominus in passione propria quasi Filius hominis Patri dicit: hoc et Stephanus Filium Dei in suo martyrio deprecatur. Cum eadem gratia a Patre Filioque deposcitur, eadem potentia declaratur. 141. Aut si volunt Stephanum Patri dixisse, videant quid propria testificatione significent. Licet nos ista non moveant, advertant tamen qui totum in littera constituunt et in ordine, quod Filius prius sit rogatus. Nos autem et secundum eorum interpretationem ostendimus unitatem Paternae majestatis et Filii; nam cum Pater rogatur et Filius, aequalitas precationis operationis indicat unitatem. Si autem illis non placet Filio dictum, Domine, videmus quod etiam Dominum eum negare conantur. 142. Sed jam quia martyris tanti corona processit studia certaminis relaxemus, ferias hodierni sermonis habeamus. Prosequamur sanctum martyrem laudibus, sicut post magna decebat certamina, vulneribus quidem adversarii cruentatum, sed Christi praemiis coronatum.

LIBER QUARTUS.

CAPUT PRIMUM.

HAUD MIRUM ESSE quod homines in Christi cognitione erraverint, sed quod Scripturae non obtemperaverint: illum quoque nec ab angelis nisi revelatione fuisse cognitum, sicut nec ab ipso Praecursore. Ejusdem Christi in coelum ascendentis triumphus qualis, et raptu prophetarum quorumdam quanto praestantior? Tum descripto angelorum hac de re colloquio, contra Arianos Filius omnipotens esse ostenditur. 1. Consideranti mihi, Imperator auguste, qua ratione sic erraverit genus hominum, ut de Dei Filio plerique, vae mihi, diversa sequerentur; nequaquam satis mirum videtur quia erravit humana scientia de supernis, sed quod Scripturis non detulit obedientiam. 2. Quid enim mirum, si mysterium Dei Patris et Domini Jesu Christi, in quo sunt omnes thesauri sapientiae et scientiae absconditi (Coloss., II, 3), per sapientiam mundi non potuerunt homines comprehendere, quod nec angeli cognoscere, nisi ex revelatione, potuerunt? 522 3. Quis enim potuit opinione magis quam fide sequi Dominum Jesum, nunc de coeli altissimis inferna penetrantem, nunc ab inferis ad coelestia resurgentem: subito exinanitum, ut habitaret in nobis; nec umquam imminutum, cum semper Filius in Patre, et in Filio Pater esset? 4. Dubitavit in eo ipse Praenuntius, licet per Synagogae typum, dubitavit ipse ante Domini faciem destinatus. Denique missis discipulis, interrogat: Tu es qui venturus es, an alium exspectamus (Matth. XI, 3)? 5. Obstupuerunt et angeli coeleste mysterium. Unde cum resurgeret Dominus, atque illum quem dudum secundum carnem angustus sepulcri locus texerat, resurgentem ab inferis coeli alta sustinere non possent, haeserunt etiam coelestia opinionis incerto. 6. Veniebat enim novis victor redimitus exuviis, Dominus in templo sancto suo; praeibant angeli et archangeli, mirantes spolium ex morte quaesitum: et quamvis scirent nihil Deo accedere ex carne potuisse, quia infra Deum 523 omnia sunt, tamen tropaea crucis, cujus principium super humeros ejus, et triumphatoris aeterni manubias intuentes, quasi eum quem emiserant coeli portae, capere non possent; licet numquam ejus capiant majestatem, majorem viam quaerebant aliquam revertenti: adeo nihil exinanitus amiserat! 7. Debuit tamen novo victori novum iter parari; semper enim victor tamquam major et praecelsior est: sed quia aeternae sunt justitiae portae, eaedemque novi et veteris Testamenti, quibus coelum aperitur, non mutantur utique, sed elevantur; quia non unus homo, sed totus in omnium redemptore mundus intrabat. 8. Translatus erat Enoch (Gen. V, 11), raptus Elias (IV Reg. II, 12): sed non est servus supra Dominum. Nullus enim ascendit in coelum, nisi qui descendit de coelo (Joan. III, 13). Nam et Moysen, licet corpus ejus non apparuerit in terris, nusquam tamen in gloria coelesti legimus, nisi posteaquam Dominus resurrectionis suae pignore vincula solvit inferni, et piorum animas elevavit. Translatas ergo Enoch, raptus Elias; ambo famuli, ambo cum corpore: sed non post resurrectionem, non cum manubiis mortis, et triumpho crucis viderant illos angeli. 9. Et ideo Dominum omnium primum ac solum de morte triumphantem venire cernentes, tolli portas principibus imperabant, cum admiratione dicentes: Tollite portas, principes, vestri; et elevamini, portae aeternales: et introibit rex gloriae (Psal. XXIII, 7). 10. Erant tamen adhuc et in coelestibus qui stuperent, qui admirarentur novam pompam, novam gloriam; et ideo requirebant: Quis est iste rex gloriae (Ibid., 8)? Sed quia et angeli processus habent scientiae, et capacitatem profectus, habent utique discretionem virtutis, atque prudentiae: solus enim sine processu Deus; quia in omni perfectione semper aeternus est. 11. Dicebant alii, illi utique qui adfuerant resurgenti, illi qui viderant vel jam cognoverant: Dominus fortis et potens, Dominus potens in praelio. 12. Iterum multitudo Angelorum triumphali agmine praecinebant: Tollite portas, principes, vestri; et elevamini, portae aeternales: et introibit rex gloriae. 13. Rursus alii stupentes dicebant: Quis est iste rex gloriae (Ibid., 10)? Vidimus eum non habentem speciem neque decorem (Esai. LIII, 2): si ergo ipse non est, Quis est iste rex gloriae? 14. Respondetur a scientibus: Dominus virtutum, ipse est rex gloriae. Ergo Dominus virtutum ipse est Filius. Et quomodo infirmum Ariani dicunt, quem Dominum virtutum, sicut et Patrem, credimus? Quomodo Ariani discretionem faciunt potestatis, cum Dominum sabaoth Patrem, Dominum sabaoth Filium legerimus? 524 Nam et hic sic positum plerique codices habent, quod Dominus sabaoth ipse sit rex gloriae: sabaoth autem interpretes alicubi Dominum virtutum, alicubi regem, alicubi omnipotentem interpretati sunt. Ergo quoniam qui ascendit Filius est: qui ascendit autem, Dominus est sabaoth; omnipotens utique Dei Filius est.

CAPUT II.

In coelum sine fide ascensurum neminem, vel si quis ascenderit, ejiciendum: illam itaque sedulo conservari debere. Esse etiam in nobis coelos, quorum portae aperiendae, ac per Christi divinitatis confessionem elevandae sunt. Has ab Arianis non elevari, nec ab iis qui requirunt Filium inter terrena; proindeque illos cum Magdalena remittendos ad Apostolos, in quos portae inferi non praevalebunt. Colligitur ex dictis a servo Domini dignitati non derogandum. 14. Quid igitur agemus? Quomodo ascendemus ad coelum? Sunt illic dispositae potestates, ordinati principes, qui coeli januas servant, qui ascendentem interrogant: quis me admittet, nisi omnipotentem annuntiem Christum? Clausae sunt portae, non cuicumque aperiuntur: non quicumque vult, nisi qui fideliter credit, ingredietur. Custoditur aula imperialis. 15. Sed esto, indignus obrepserit, latuerit principes portarum coelestium, discubuerit in coena Domini; ingressus Dominus convivii, videns non indutum nuptiale fidei vestimentum, projiciet eum in tenebras exteriores, ubi sit fletus et stridor dentium, si fidem pacemque non servet (Matth. XXII, 11 et seq.). 16. Servemus igitur nuptiale quod accepimus vestimentum, nec Christo propria denegemus, quem omnipotentem annuntiant angeli, prophetae significant, apostoli testificantur, sicut jam supra ostendimus (Lib. II, ca). 17. Et fortasse non de istius tantummodo coeli portis propheta dixerit quod praeteribit; et alios enim coelos Dei Verbum penetrat, de quibus dictum est: Habemus enim sacerdotem magnum, principem sacerdotum, qui pertransivit coelos, Jesum Filium Dei (Hebr. IV, 14). Qui sunt isti coeli, nisi et hi de quibus dicit Propheta: Coeli enarrant gloriam Dei (Psal. XVIII, 1)? 18. Stat enim

Christus ad januam mentis tuae, audi cum dicentem: Ecce sto ad januam, et pulso; si quis mihi aperuerit, ingrediar ad illum; et coenabo cum eo, et ipse mecum (Apoc. III, 20). Et Ecclesia de eo dicit: Vox fratris mei pulsat ad januam (Cant. V, 2). 19. Stat ergo, et non solus stat; sed praecedunt eum angeli, qui dicunt: Tollite portas, principes, vestri (Psal. XXIII, 7). Quas portas? Illas utique de quibus et alibi dicit: Aperite mihi portas justitiae (Psal. CXVII, 19). Aperi ergo Christo portas tuas, ut ingrediatur in te: aperi portas justitiae, aperi portas 525 pudicitiae, aperi portas fortitudinis atque sapientiae. 20. Crede angelis dicentibus: Et clevamini portae aeternales, et introibit rex gloriae, Dominus sabaoth (Psal. XXIII, 7). Porta tua vocis fidelis canora confessio est: porta tua ostium verbi est, quam sibi Apostolus optat aperiri, dicens: Ut aperiatur mihi ostium verbi ad eloquendum mysterium Christi (Coloss. IV, 3). 21. Aperiatur igitur Christo porta tua, nec solum aperiatur, sed etiam elevetur; si tamen aeternalis, est, non caduca; scriptum est enim: Et elevamini portae aeternales. Elevatum est super limen Esaiae, quando Seraphim labia ejus tetigit, et vidit regem Dominum sabaoth (Esai. VI, 7). 22. Tuae ergo portae elevabuntur, si sempiternum, si omnipotentem, si inaestimabilem, si incomprehensibilem, si eum qui et praeterita omnia et futura noverit, Filium Dei credas. Quod si praefinitae potestatis et scientiae, subjectumque opinaris, non elevas portas aeternales. 23. Eleventur ergo portae tuae, ut non Ariano sensu parvulus, non pusillus, non subditus ad te Christus introeat; sed intret in Dei forma, intret cum Patre, intret talis, qualis est et coelum et omnia supergressus, emittat tibi Spiritum sanctum. Expedit tibi ut credas quia ascendit, et sedet ad dexteram Patris. Nam si eum inter creaturas et terrena impia cogitatione detineas, si non tibi abeat, non tibi ascendat, nec Paraclitus ad te veniet, sicut ipse dixit: Nam si ego non abiero, Paraclitus non veniet ad vos: si autem abiero, mittam illum ad vos (Joan. XVI, 7). 24. Quod si inter terrena eum requiras, sicut Maria Magdalene requirebat, cave ne et tibi dicat: Noli me tangere; nondum enim ascendi ad Patrem meum (Joan. XX, 17). Portae enim tuae angustae sunt, capere me non queunt: elevari non queunt, intrare non possum. 25. Vade ergo ad fratres meos, hoc est, ad illas portas aeternales, quae cum Jesum viderint, elevantur (Ibid.). Aeternalis porta est Petrus, cui portae inferi non praevalebunt (Matth. XVI, 18). Aeternales portae Joannes et Jacobus, utpote filii tonitrui (Marc. III, 17). Aeternales portae sunt Ecclesiae, ubi laudes Christi annuntiare Propheta desiderans, dicit: Ut annuntiem omnes laudationes tuas in portis filiae Sion (Psal. IX, 15). 26. Grande ergo mysterium Christi, quod stupuerunt et angeli; et ideo venerari debes, et Domino famulus derogare non debes. Ignorare non licet; propterea enim descendit ut credas: si non credis, non descendit tibi, non tibi passus est. Si non venissem, inquit, et locutus non fuissem his, peccatum non haberent: nunc autem excusationem non habent de peccato suo. Qui me odit, et Patrem meum odit (Joan. XV, 22, 23). Quis igitur odit Christum, nisi qui derogat? Sicut enim amoris est deferre, ita odii est derogare. Qui odit, quaestiones movet; qui amat, reverentiam defert. 526

CAPUT III.

VERBA ILLA: OMNIS viri caput Christus. . . . caput autem Christi Deus, primo in Arianos ipsos retorquet: deinde Christi tantum secundum naturam humanam considerati Deum caput esse ex alio Scripturae loco, quem objicere solebant iidem haeretici, probat: nec prudentius quoque oppositum ab ipsis textum illum: Qui autem plantat, et qui rigat, unum sunt. Quibus explicatis, quo pacto Pater in Filio, et Filius in Patre, nec non in utroque fideles esse dicantur, aperitur. 27. [Alias cap. II.] Itaque discutiamus eorum alias quaestiones. Scriptum est, inquiunt: Omnis viri caput Christus est, caput autem mulieris vir, caput autem Christi Deus (I Cor. XI, 3). Qua in quaestione dicant mihi, velim, utrum conjungere, an dividere haec quatuor velint. Si enim conjungere, atque ita dicunt Deum caput esse Christi, sicut vir est mulieris caput, videte quid incidant. Nam si haec tamquam ex paribus sumpta est comparatio, et haec quatuor, id est, mulier, vir, Christus, et Deus, quasi ex unius atque ejusdem naturae similitudine comparantur, ergo mulier et Deus unius incipient esse naturae. 28. Quod si hoc displicet, quia sacrilegum est dicere, ut volunt dividant. Itaque si Christum apud Deum Patrem ita volunt esse, sicut est mulier apud virum; unius utique Christum et Deum dicunt esse substantiae, quoniam mulier et vir unius sunt in carne naturae (Gen. II, 24): nam quod distat, in sexu est. Cum vero inter Christum et Patrem sexus non interveniat, quod unum inter Filium et Patrem in natura est, fatebuntur: quod diversum in sexu est, denegabunt. 29. Placetne ista divisio? An mulierem, virum et Christum unius volunt esse substantiae, et Patrem separant? Raeccine igitur divisio placet? Si ita est, videte quid incidant. Aut enim non solum Arianos, sed etiam Photinianos se necesse est confiteantur; quia Christum hominem tantum fatentur, quem humanae tantummodo naturae aestimant copulandum: aut vel invitos acquiescere par est nostrae sententiae, per quam id quod impie cogitarunt, pie religioseque defendimus; ut sit Christus quidem secundum generationem divinam Dei virtus, secundum assumptionem autem carnis, unius cum omnibus hominibus in carne substantiae: salva tamen incarnationis suae gloriae; quia veritatem suscepit, non imaginem carnis. 30. Sit ergo juxta humanam conditionem caput Christi Deus; non enim dixit caput Christi Pater, sed caput Christi Deus; quia divinitas, ut pote creatrix, caput est creaturae. Et bene dixit: Caput Christi Deus; ut et divinitatem Christi significaret, et carnem, hoc est, incarnationem in Christi nomine: in Deo autem unitatem divinitatis, et magnitudinem potestatis. 31. Eousque autem caput Christi Deus secundum incarnationem dictum est, ut et caput viri 527 Christus secundum incarnationem Verbi dictum sit. Quod alibi Apostolus evidenter exposuit dicens: Quoniam vir caput est mulieris, sicut et Christus caput Ecclesiae (Ephes. V, 23). Et in consequentibus addidit: Qui se tradidit pro ea (Ibid., 25). Secundum incarnationem igitur caput viri Christus, quia secundum incarnationem facta traditio est. 32. Est ergo caput Christi Deus; ubi servi, hoc est, hominis, non Dei, forma tractatur. Sed nihil praejudicat Dei Filio, si secundum carnis veritatem similis sit hominibus, qui in divinitate cum Patre unum est (Joan. X, 30); non enim potestas hac interpretatione minuitur, sed misericordia praedicatur. 33. Quis autem unam divinitatem Patris et Filii pie abneget; cum ipse Dominus consummaturus praecepta, discipulis suis dixerit: Ut sint unum, sicut et nos unum sumus (Joan. XVII, 11)? Pro testimonio enim fidei positum est, licet ab Arianis ad argumentum perfidiae derivetur. Etenim quoniam toties lectam negare non queunt unitatem, extenuare conantur; ut talis videatur divinitatis unitas inter Patrem et Filium, qualis est inter homines unitas devotionis et fidei: licet etiam inter ipsos homines unitas naturae sit ex communitate naturae. 34.

Unde et illud apertissime solvitur, quod ad extenuationem Dominicae unitatis objicere consuerunt, quia scriptum est: Qui autem plantat, et qui rigat, unum sunt (I. Cor. III, 8). Hoc Ariani, si saperent, non objicerent. Quomodo enim negare conantur quia Pater et Filius unum sunt, cum Paulus et Apollo et natura unum sint et fide? Sed tamen per omnia unum esse non possunt, quia nequeunt comparari humana divinis. 35. Inseparabilis ergo Deus Pater Verbo, inseparabilis virtute, inseparabilis sapientia per divinae unitatem substantiae; et est in Filio, sicut frequenter est scriptum: est vero non ut egentem sanctificans, nec ut vacuum implens; quia non vacua Dei virtus. Nec enim virtus virtute augetur; quia non duae virtutes, sed una virtus: nec divinitas divinitatem accipit; quia non duae divinitates, sed una divinitas: nos autem per acceptam et inhabitantem in nobis virtutem unum erimus in Christo. 36. Communis ergo littera, sed discrepans divina, humanaque substantia. Nos unum erimus, Pater et Filius unum sunt: nos secundum gratiam, Filius secundum substantiam. Alia autem per conjunctionem, alia per naturam unitas. Denique vide quid ante praemiserit: Ut omnes unum sint, sicut tu, Pater, in me, et ego in te (Joan. XVII, 21). 37. Considera ergo quia non dixit: Tu in nobis, et nos in te: sed tu in me, et ego in te; ut se a creaturis separaret. Et addidit: Et isti in nobis (Ibid.), ut etiam hic suam potentiam et Patris a nobis 528 secerneret, ut quod nos in Patre et Filio unum sumus, non naturae videatur esse, sed gratiae: quod autem Filius et Pater unum sunt, non hoc Filius accepisse per gratiam, sed naturaliter ut Filius possidere credatur.

CAPUT IV.

Objectum ab haereticis locum illum: Non potest Filius facere a se quidquam, etc., primo e subsequentibus verbis exponit: deinde singulas integri textus voces expendens, eas Ariana interpretatione sumi sine impietate aut absurditate haudquaquam posse, potissimum creationis mundi et quorumdam Christi miraculorum exemplis docet. 38. [Alias cap. III.] Aliud rursus objiciunt, asserentes unam atque eamdem potestatem Filii et Patris esse non posse, quia ipse dixit: Amen, amen, dico vobis, non potest Filius facere a se quidquam, nisi quod viderit Patrem facientem (Joan. V, 19). Itaque nihil ex se fecisse Filium dicunt, nec facere posse, nisi quod viderit facientem Patrem. 39. O praescia sapientia infidelium argumentorum! quae subjecit quod solveret, quaestionem, addendo quod sequitur: Quia quaecumque ille fecerit, eadem et Filius facit similiter (Ibid.); hoc nempe sequitur. Cur ergo scriptum est: Eadem facit Filius, et non talia; nisi ut in Filio unitatem, non imitationem paterni operis aestimares? 40. Sed tamen ut illorum quoque argumenta discutiamus, quaero ut respondeant, utrum videat Filius opera Patris. Videt itaque, an non? Si videt, ergo et facit: si facit, desinant omnipotentem negare, quem omnia posse facere, quae Patrem facientem viderit, confitentur. 41. Quid est autem, viderit? Corporaliumne aliquis usus oculorum est? Sed si hoc de Filio velint dicere, corporalis etiam in Patre usum operationis ostendent; ut facientem videat, quod ipse facturus est. 42. Quid est autem: Non potest Filius facere a se quidquam? Hoc interrogemus, hoc consideremus. Est ergo aliquid impossibile Dei virtuti atque sapientiae? Hoc est enim Dei Filius, qui utique non alienam accepit fortitudinem, sed quemadmodum vita est, non aliena vivificatione subnixus, sed alios vivificans; quia ipse vita est: ita etiam sapientia est, non quasi insipiens accipiens sapientiam, sed qui de suo alios faciat esse sapientes: ita etiam virtus est, non quasi per infirmitatem consecutus incrementa virtutis, sed ipse virtus, qui virtutem fortibus largiatur. 43. Quomodo ergo virtus quasi cum jurisjurandi attestatione dicit: Amen, amen dico vobis (Joan. V, 19), quod est: Fideliter, fideliter dico? Fideliter 529 ergo dicis, Domine Jesu, et cum sacramenti quadam repetitione confirmas quod nihil facere potes, nisi quod facientem Patrem videris. Fecisti mundum, numquid alterum mundum Patrem tuus fecit, quem quasi ad exemplar acceperis? Ergo necesse est fateantur impii aut duos, aut certe multos esse mundos, quod philosophi asserunt; ut se etiam in hoc errore gentilitatis involvant. Aut si velint verum sequi, dicant sine exemplari te fecisse, quod feceris. 44. Dic mihi, Domine, quando in mari Patrem incarnatum videris ambulantem (Marc. VI, 48)? Ego enim nescio, ego hoc de Patre credere sacrilegum puto, qui te solum carnem assumpsisse cognovi. Quando videris in nuptiis Patrem aquam in vina vertentem (Joan. II, 9)? Sed solum te unigenitum Filium legi ex Patre natum, solum te ex Spiritu sancto accepi et Virgine secundum incarnationis sacramenta generatum (Matth. I, 25). Ergo ista, quae memoravimus a te gesta, non fecit Pater: sed sine exemplari paterni operis, ad redimendam tuo sanguine salutem mundi, solus immaculatus ex alvo Virginis processisti. 45. Ac ne forte incarnationis tantummodo putent sequestrandum esse mysterium (licet cum dicunt: Non potest Filius a se facere quidquam (Joan. V, 19), nihil excipiant, ita ut et quidam impius dixerit: Nec culicem facere potest, tam temerario ausu, petulantique sermone majestatem supernae virtutis irridens), dic, Domine Jesu, quam terram sine te Pater fecerit? Coelum enim sine te non fecit, quia scriptum est: Verbo Domini coeli firmati sunt (Psal. XXXII, 6). 46. Sed nec terram sine te fecit, quia scriptum est: Omnia per ipsum facta sunt, et sine ipso factum est nihil (Joan. I, 3). Nam si aliquid sine te Deo Verbo Pater fecit, non ergo omnia facta per Verbum, et evangelista mentitur. Quod si omnia facta per Verbum, et omnia per te coeperunt esse, quae non erant, utique quae non vidisti a Patre facta, a te ipse fecisti. Nisi forte philosophicas tibi ideas Platonica illa disputatione praestituunt, quas ab ipsis tamen philosophis scimus irrisas. Si autem ex te ipse fecisti, vana est assertio perfidorum, quae auctori omnium, cui suppetit ex se faciendi magisterium, tribuit discendi profectum. 47. Quod si per te negant coelum esse factum, vel terram, considerent impii quo se suo furore praecipitent, cum scriptum sit: Dii qui non fecerunt coelum et terram, pereant (Jerem. X, 11). Peribit ergo, Ariane, qui quod perierat, et reperit et redemit? Sed ad proposita revertamur. 530

CAPUT V.

Caeptam objecti loci expositionem urgens, rationes quatuor quibus aliquid fieri non posse affirmamus, explicat, et earum primas tres in Christum non cadere, solutis quibusdam objectiunculis, demonstrat, et Filium propter solam potestatis cum Patre unitatem nihil a se facere posse deducit. 48. Quomodo non potest Filius facere a se quidquam? Quaeramus quid sit quod facere non possit. Multae sunt impossibilitatum differentiae. Est aliquid natura impossibile, et est aliquid quod est possibile per naturam, impossibile per infirmitatem. Est etiam tertium quod sit possibile per corporis et animi firmitatem, impossibile per imperitiam aut impotentiam. Est etiam quod per definitionem immutabilis propositi, et constantis perseverantiam voluntatis atque amicitiae fidem sit impossibile mutari. 49. Sed haec ut evidentius possimus advertere, per exempla nobis disputatio dirigatur. Impossibile est ut avis sapientiae disciplinam aliquam assequatur aut artem: impossibile est et lapidem prodire quoquam; impossibile est enim lapidem moveri, nisi motu moveatur alterius: non potest ergo lapis per se ipsum moveri, et transire de loco. Non potest etiam aquila humanis imbui disciplinis. Habes unam speciem, cui impossibilitatis causa natura est. 50. Impossibile est et debili facere opera robusti; sed huic alia impossibilitatis causa est; quod enim facere potest per naturam, per infirmitatem non potest. Causa igitur huic quoque impossibilitati infirmitas. Alia ergo impossibilitatis haec species; quoniam a faciendi possibilitate, corporis infirmitate revocatur. 51. Tertia quoque impossibilitatis est causa, qua etiamsi per naturam quis, et firmitatem corporis facere aliquid possit; non potest tamen facere per imperitiam vel impotentiam, ut aut indoctus, aut servus. 52. Quis igitur harum, quas enumeravimus, impossibilitatum causas, ut quartam interim sequestremus, Filio Dei existimas convenire? Numquid in sensibilis per naturam, et immobilis, sicut lapis? Lapis quidem est impiis in ruinam, fidelibus angularis. Sed non insensibilis, supra quem sensibilium populorum fideles aedificantur affectus. Non immobilis petra: Bibebant enim ex consequenti petra; petra autem erat Christus (I Cor. X, 4). Non ergo paternum opus per naturae distantiam impossibile Christo. 53. Numquid forte per debilitatem impossibile ei aliquid existimamus? Sed non ille debilis, 531 qui aliorum debilitates imperiali sermone sanabat. An debilis videbatur, cum paralytico praecipiens: Tolle grabatum tuum, et ambula (Marc. II, 11), sanitatis jam mandabat officium, cum adhuc ille remedium debilitatis oraret? Num debilis Dominus virtutum, cum illuminaret caecos, inclinatos erigeret (Psal. CXLV, 8), mortuos suscitaret (Matth. XI, 5), votis nostris medicinae praecurreret effectus, orantes curaret, et fimbriae mundaret attactus (Marc. VI, 56) ? 54. Nisi forte debilitatem illam, impii, putabatis, quando vulnera videbatis. Erant quidem illa corporis vulnera, sed non erat vulneris illius ulla debilitas, ex quo omnium vita profluebat. Unde et propheta dixit: Livore ejus nos sanati sumus (Esai. LII, 5). An qui in vulnere debilis non erat, erat in majestate? Quomodo quaere. Cum daemoniis imperaret, et reis peccata dimitteret; an cum rogaret Patrem? 55. Quo loco fortasse dicant: Quomodo Pater et Filius unum sunt, si Filius nunc imperat, nunc precatur? Et unum sunt, et imperat, et precatur: sed neque cum imperat, solus; nec cum precatur, infirmus. Solus non est, quia quaecumque Pater facit, eadem similiter et Filius facit: infirmus non est, quia etsi in carne infirmatus est propter peccata nostra, tamen illud nostrae erat in eo pacis eruditio, sicut scriptum est, non suae majestatis infirmitas. 56. Denique ut scias quia secundum bominem rogat, divinitate imperat, habes in Evangelio quia Petro dixit: Rogavi pro te, ut non deficiat fides tua (Luc. XXII, 32). Eidem autem supra dicenti: Tu es Christus Filius Dei vivi, respondit: Tu es Petrus, et super hanc petram aedificabo Ecclesiam meam; et tibi dabo claves regni coelorum (Matth. XVI, 18). Ergo cui propria auctoritate regnum dabat, hujus fidem firmare non poterat; quem cum petram dicit, firmamentum Ecclesiae indicavit? Quando igitur roget, quando imperet, considera. Rogat quando passurus ostenditur, imperat quando Filius Dei creditur. 57. Duas igitur species impossibilitatis vacare jam cernimus, quod neque insensibilis, neque infirma potest esse Dei virtus. Numquid tertium profertis in medium, quod quasi imperitus sine magistro facere nihil possit, aut servus sine domino? Ergo mentitus es, Domine Jesu, qui te et magistrum, et dominum ipse dixisti; et fefellisti discipulos tuos, dicens: Vos vocatis me magistrum et dominum, et bene dicitis; sum etenim (Joan. XIII, 13). Sed non falleres, veritas, eos praesertim quos amicos vocasti. 58. Tamen si ut imperitum te ab artifice secernunt, viderint ut tibi, hoc est, Dei sapientiae dicant peritiam defuisse; unitatem tamen substantiae inter te et Patrem separare non possunt. Artificem namque ab imperito imprudentia, non natura secernit: sed non in Patre artificium, neque in te insipientia; non est enim insipiens sapientia. 59. Ergo si neque insensibilis in Filio natura, 532 neque debilitas, neque imperitia, neque servitus potest esse; considerent quod et per naturam et majestatem unum sit cum Patre Filius, et per operationem non discrepet a Patre virtus; cum omnia quae Pater fecerit, eadem Filius faciat similiter: neque enim similiter potest quisquam facere idem opus, quod alius fecerit; nisi qui et inaequalitatem non habeat operationis, et naturae ejusdem habeat unitatem. 60. Adhuc tamen requiro, quid sit quod non possit facere a se Filius, nisi viderit facientem Patrem (Joan. V, 19); et insipienter aliqua de vilioribus exempla propono: Factus sum insipiens, vos me coegistis (II Cor. XII, 11). Nam quid insipientius, quam de majestate Dei argumenta discutere, quae quaestiones magis praestant, quam aedificationem Dei, quae est in fide (I Tim. I, 4, 5)? Sed argumentis argumenta respondeant: illis verba, nobis charitas, quae in Deo est, de corde puro et conscientia bona, et fide non ficta. Ergo ad infirmationem tam ineptae propositionis, non piget etiam ridicula derivare. 61. Quomodo ergo videt Filius Patrem? Videt equus picturam, quam per naturam imitari non potest: non utique sic videt Filius. Videt parvulus viri opera majoris, sed imitari non potest: nec utique sic videt Dei Filius. 62. Ergo si Filius per ejusdem cum Patre arcanum commune naturae invisibiliter et videre et facere potest, et per plenitudinem divinitatis quod voluerit exsequi: quid superest, nisi ut per unitatem inseparabilem potestatis nihil credamus Filium facere, nisi quod viderit Patrem facientem; quia per incomparabilem charitatem nihil a se facit Filius; quoniam nihil vult, quod Pater nolit? Quod utique non infirmitatis, sed unitatis est.

CAPUT VI.

Accedit ad quartam e rationibus supra memoratis; et Filium nihil facere quod non probetur a Patre, cum sit utriusque perfecta voluntatis atque potestatis unitas, liquido probans, nonnullas difficultates subinde tollit. 63. Ergo nec contumax Filius, ut etiam de quarta propositione dicamus; nihil enim consiliarius Filius fecit, quod cum Patris non conveniat voluntate. Denique vidit Pater quae fecit Filius, et probavit quia bona valde. Sic enim habes in Genesi: Et dixit Deus: Fiat lux, et facta est lux; et vidit Deus lucem, quia bona est (Gen. I, 3, 4). 64. Numquid hic dixit Pater: Fiat talis lux, qualem ipse feci: aut fiat lux, quae ante non fuerat: aut Filius qualem faceret, interrogavit? Sed fecit, ut voluit, qualem Pater usque eo voluit, ut probaret. Ergo novum opus Filii est. 65. Deinde si reprehenditur in Filio secundum interpretationes Arianorum quia quod viderit, fecit, qui utique secundum Scripturas quod non vidit, et fecit, et dedit esse quae non erant: quid dicunt de Patre, qui quod viderat 533 praedicavit, quasi ea quae facienda forent, non potuerit praevidere? 66. Similiter ergo videt Filius Patris opus, sicut Pater opus Filii: nec quasi alienum laudat, sed quasi proprium recognoscit: Quaecumque enim Pater fecerit, eadem Filius facit similiter (Joan. V, 19); ut idem opus Patris Filiique sentires. Nihil ergo facit Filius, nisi quod Pater probet, Pater laudet, Pater velit; quia ex Patre totus est: non ut creatura, quae multa committit, dum studio lapsuque peccati, voluntatem frequenter offendit auctoris. Nihil ergo Filius facit, nisi quod placeat Patri; quia una voluntas, una sententia est, una est vera charitas, unius operationis effectus. 67. Denique ut scias charitatis esse quod non potest Filius a se facere quidquam, nisi quod viderit facientem Patrem, cum praemisisset: Quaecumque ille fecerit, eadem et Filius facit similiter, subjecit: Pater enim diligit Filium. Ergo quod dixit Scriptura quia non potest, ad inseparabilis et individuae charitatis retulit unitatem. 68. Quod si naturaliter est, ut vere est, inseparabilis charitas; inseparabilis utique est etiam operatio naturaliter: et impossibile ut opus Filii cum Patris non conveniat voluntate (Joan. XII, 50); quando id quod Filius operatur, operatur et Pater: et quod Pater operatur, operatur et Filius: et quod loquitur Filius, loquitur et Pater, sicut scriptum est (Joan. XIV, 10): Pater meus qui in me manet, ipse loquitur; et opera quae ego facio, ipse facit. Nihil enim Pater sine virtute atque sapientia sua condidit; quia omnia in sapientia fecit, sicut scriptum est: Omnia in sapientia fecisti (Psal. CIII, 24). Nihil etiam Deus Verbum sine Patre fecit. 69. Non operatur sine Patre, non sine patria voluntate sacrosanctae illi se obtulit salutaris mundi totius hostia passioni, non sine patria voluntate mortuos suscitavit (Hebr. X, 10). Denique Lazarum suscitaturus levavit oculos sursum, et dixit: Pater, gratias ago tibi, quia audisti me: et ego sciebam quia semper me audis: sed propter turbam quae circumstat, dixi; ut credant quia tu me misisti (Joan. XI, 41, 42): ut quamvis ex personae hominis incarnati susceptione loqueretur, unitatem tamen paternae voluntatis et operationis exprimeret; quia Pater omnia audit, omnia videt quae vult Filius. Videt ergo et Pater facientem Filium, audit volentem. Denique non rogavit, et exauditum se esse dixit. 70. Nec existimari potest quia non audit Pater, quod velit Filius: et ut scias quia semper auditur a Patre, non quasi servus, nec quasi propheta, sed quasi Filius: Et ego, inquit, sciebam quia semper me audis: sed propter turbam quae circumstat, dixi; ut credant quia tu me misisti. 534 71. Propter nos igitur gratias agit; ne eumdem Patrem, eumdemque Filium esse credamus, cum idem opus Patris audimus et Filii. Nam ut cognosceres non quasi infirmum gratias egisse, sed quasi Dei Filium semper sibi divinam potentiam vindicare, clamavit: Lazare, veni foras. Imperantis utique vox ista est, non precantis.

CAPUT VII.

PROPOSITA DOCTRINA HINC confirmatur, quod Filius sit Patris Verbum, non quale nostrum, sed vivum et operatorium; atque adeo non possit negari ejusdem cum Patre voluntatis, potestatis ac substantiae. 72. Sed ut ad superiora redeamus, et proposita concludamus, facit quasi Verbum Filius voluntatem Patris. Verbum hoc nostrum utique prolativum est, syllabae sunt, sonus est; et tamen a sensu nostro, et mente non discrepat, et quae interiori tenemus affectu, ea tamquam operantis Verbi testificatione signamus. Sed non sermo noster operatur, solum est Verbum Dei, quod nec prolativum est, nec quod ἐνδιάθετον dicunt; sed quod operatur, et vivit, et sanat. 73. Vis scire quale Verbum? Audi dicentem: Vivum est enim Verbum Dei, et validum atque operatorium et acutum, et penetrabilius omni gladio acutissimo, penetrans usque ad divisionem animae et spiritus, artuumque et medullarum (Hebr. IV, 12). 74. Verbum igitur audis Dei Filium, et a patria voluntate et potestate secernis? Audis quia vivit, audis quia sanat: noli ergo nostro comparare verbo. Si enim verbum nostrum quae non obtutu viderit, non auditu audierit, loquitur; et loquitur tamen cognita per quaedam naturae humanae interna mysteria: quomodo non impius, qui secundum divinitatem in Dei Verbo et obtutum quemdam corporeum exigit, et auditum: et putat quod non possit a se quidquam facere Filius, nisi quod Patrem facientem viderit; cum per unitatem, ut diximus, ejusdem substantiae, idem velle atque idem nolle et idem posse et in Patre sit et in Filio et in Spiritu sancto? 75. Quod si homines plerumque sensuum qualitate discreti, tamen unius propositi intentione concordant; quid de Patre nos et Dei Filio congruit aestimare: cum id quod humana imitatur charitas, substantia divina possideat? 76. Ponamus tamen, sicut ipsi volunt, quia quasi in exemplari, quod viderit Patrem facientem, Filius faciat. Et hoc utique ejusdem substantiae est; nullus enim potest alterius imitationem operationis implere nisi qui ejusdem naturae habeat unitatem. 535

CAPUT VIII.

HAERETICORUM OBJECTIONEM, QUA Filium quod alium generare non possit, Patri negabant esse aequalem, primo in adversarios ipsos retorquet: deinde hominum ostendit exemplis quod quispiam generet aut secus, ad potentiam non pertinere; maxime cum alioqui ipsemet Pater minus potens dicendus esset. Inde colligit divina ex humanis non esse judicanda, sed standum Scripturae auctoritate. Postremo omnipotentiam vel Patri abjudicandam, vel adjudicandam Filio ubi demonstravit, ipsos si filios non genuerint, propriis servis qui sobolem procreaverint, minus potentes fore inducit, proindeque totam eorum disputationem ineptam esse. [Alias cap. VI.] Illud ridiculum est, Imperator auguste, quod quidam hoc etiam ad inaequalitatem Dei Patris et Filii objiciendum usurpare consuerunt, quod dicant omnipotentem Patrem esse, quod generavit Filium: negent autem omnipotentem Filium, dicentes quia generare non potuit. 78. Sed vide quemadmodum saeva impietas; ut dialectica philosophorum se ipsa convincat. Hac enim quaestione aut coaeternum Patri Filium necesse est sua voce fateantur, aut si principium temporis Filio aliquod ascribunt, principium potentiae necesse est tribuant etiam Patri. Ita cum omnipotentem Filium negant, incipiunt, quod nefas dictu est, asserere per Filium Patrem omnipotentem esse coepisse. 79. Nam si per generationem omnipotens Pater, utique aut coaeternus Patri Filius est; quia si semper omnipotens Pater, sempiternus et Filius: aut si fuit, quando non erat Filius sempiternus; fuit ergo quando non erat omnipotens Pater. Nam cum volunt dicere Filium aliquando coepisse, in illud recidunt, ut et Patris potentiam dicant non semper fuisse, sed ex Filii generatione coepisse. Ita dum Filio Dei cupiunt derogare, plus tribuunt; ut contra fas omne auctorem paternae potentiae declarare videantur; cum Filius dicat: Omnia quae Pater habet, mea sunt (Joan. XVI, 15). hoc est, non quae Patri ipse tradiderit, sed quae a Patre jure generationis acceperit. 80. Et ideo Filium sempiternam dicimus esse virtutem: si ergo sempiterna ejus virtus atque divinitas, utique et potentia ejus est sempiterna. Filio igitur qui derogat, Patri derogat, pietatem offendit, violat charitatem. Nos honorificemus Filium, in quo Pater complacet; placet enim Patri ut laudetur Filius, in quo ipse complacuit. 81. Respondeamus tamen intentioni eorum, ne epilogo quodam invidiam quaestionis declinasse videamur. Generavit, inquiunt, Pater. 536 non generavit Filius. Quod hic argumentum est inaequalitatis? Generatio enim paternae proprietatis est, non potentiae: et pietas aequat, non separat. Denique in ipso usu nostrae infirmitatis frequenter evenire cognoscimus, ut et infirmi filios habeant, et non habeant fortiores: habeant servi, non habeant domini: habeant inopes, non habeant qui potentes sunt. 82. Sed si dicunt et hoc infirmitatis esse, quia volunt homines filios habere; nec possunt: quamvis humana non sint conferenda divinis, intelligant tamen inter ipsos quoque homines non potentiae esse, sed paternae proprietatis, habere filios, vel non habere: nec in potestate nostrae voluntatis esse generare, sed in corporis qualitate; nam si esset potentiae, utique potentior multos haberet. Ergo non est potentiae habere filios vel non habere. 83. Numquid naturae est? Si naturae infirmitatem putatis, et ad humana vos confertis exempla, eadem Patris est natura quae Filii est. Itaque aut verum Filium dicitis, et Patri in Filio derogatis per unitatem ejusdem naturae (sicut enim Pater natura Deus est, ita et Filius: deos autem ait Apostolus (I Cor. VIII, 5) non natura deos esse, sed dici); aut si negatis esse verum Filium, hoc est, ejusdem naturae, non est ergo generatus: si non est generatus Filius, non generavit Pater. 84. Colligitur itaque juxta sententiam vestram, ut non sit omnipotens Deus Pater; quia generare non potuit, si non generavit Filium, sed creavit. Sed quia omnipotens Pater, cum juxta sententiam vestram solus generator omnipotens sit, generavit utique Filium, non creavit. Verum ipsi magis quam vobis credendum est. Ille ait: Genui (Psal. CIX, 3); et frequenter ait, generationis suae testis. 85. Non est ergo naturae, non est potentiae in Christo aliqua, quia non generavit, infirmitas; quia generatio, sicut saepe jam diximus, non ad sublimitatem potentiae, sed ad proprietatem refertur naturae. Nam si ideo omnipotens Pater, quia Filium habet; omnipotentior ergo esse potuit, si plures haberet. 86. An vero potentia ejus in una generatione defecit? At ego ostendam et Christum habere filios, quos quotidie generat, sed ea generatione, vel potius regeneratione, quae potestatis est, non naturae; adoptio enim potestatis est, generatio proprietatis. Quod ipsa Scriptura nos docuit; dicit enim Joannes quia in hoc mundo erat, et mundus per ipsum factus est, et mundus eum non cognovit. In propria venit, et sui eum non receperunt. Quotquot autem receperunt eum, dedit illis potestatem filios Dei fieri, his qui credunt in nomine ejus (Joan. I, 10 et seq). 87. Didicimus itaque potestatis esse, quod 537 nos filios Dei fecit: proprietatis autem generationem esse oracula divina declarant; dicit enim Sapientia Dei: Ex ore Altissimi prodivi (Eccl. XXIV, 5), hoc est, non coacta, sed libera: non potestati obnoxia, sed nata generationis arcano, privilegio dominationis et jure potestatis. Denique de eadem Sapientia, hoc est, de Domino Jesu, alibi Pater dicit: Ex utero ante Luciferum genui te (Psal. CIX, 3). 88. Quod utique ideo dixit, non ut corporalem alvum declararet, sed ut proprietatem verae generationis ostenderet. Nam si ad corporalem referas, ergo omnipotens Pater cum dolore et conceptione generavit. Sed absit, ut Deum ex infirmitate corporis metiamur. Est quidam uterus paternae arcanum substantiae, interiusque secretum, quod non Angeli, non Archangeli, non Potestates, non Dominationes, non aliqua creaturarum potuit penetrare natura. Cum Patre enim semper, et in Patre semper est Filius: cum Patre per distinctionem indissociabilem Trinitatis aeternae, in Patre per divinae unitatem naturae. 89. Quis igitur hic arbiter divinitatis, qui discutiat Patrem ac Filium: ille, quare generaverit: iste, cur non generaverit? Servulum suum aut ancillulam cur non generaverit, nemo condemnat: isti condemnant, cur non generaverit Christus; condemnant enim sua opinione, cum derogant. Nec conjugibus inter se cur non generaverint, aut charitas minuitur, aut meritum derogatur: isti quia non generavit, Christi minuunt potestatem. 90. Cur, inquiunt, Filius Pater non est? Quia et Pater Filius non est. Cur non iste generavit? Quia nec ille generatus est. Nec ideo minus habet Filius, quia Pater non est: nec Pater minus habet, quia Filius non est. Dixit enim Filius: Omnia quae Pater habet, mea sunt (Joan. XVI, 15). Adeo generatio in paterna proprietate non in jure est potestatis. 91. Est quaedam indistincta distinctae incomprehensibilis et inenarrabilis substantia Trinitatis. Distinctionem etenim accepimus Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti, non confusionem: distinctionem, non separationem: distinctionem, non pluralitatem. Divino itaque admirandoque mysterio manentem semper accipimus Patrem, semper Filium, semper Spiritum sanctum: non duos Patres, non duos Filios, non duos Spiritus. Unus enim Deus Pater, ex quo omnia, et nos in ipso: et unus Dominus Jesus, per quem omnia, et nos per ipsum (I Cor. VIII, 6). Unus natus ex Patre Dominus Jesus, et ideo unigenitus. Unus et Spiritus sanctus (I Cor. XII, 11), ut idem Apostolus dixit: Sic accipimus, sic legimus, sic tenemus. Distinctionem scimus, secreta nescimus: causas non discutimus, sacramenta servamus. 92. Facinus indignum, ut qui generationis suae facultatem non habent, divinae generationis examen sibi arrogent, vindicent potestatem: 538 Negent ergo aequalem Patri Filium, quia non generavit Filius: negent aequalem Patri Filium, quia Patrem habet. Hoc si de hominibus dicerent, quorum aliqui volunt filios habere, nec possunt, injuriam putaremus: sic etiamsi inter duos honore pares habenti filios qui non habet, negaretur aequalis. Et ideo hoc, inquam, grave et de ipsis hominibus videtur, ut quis ideo minor putetur, quod Patrem habet. Nisi forte tamquam constitutum in familia putant Christum dolere, quod emancipatus a Patre non sit, et administrandi patrimonii non habeat facultatem. Sed non est Christus in sacris, qui sacra universa destruxit. 93. Quomodo volunt tamen, respondeant, verane generatio sit, et verus Filius ex Deo Patre natus, hoc est, ex substantia Patris, an ex alia natus substantia? Si enim dicunt ex Patre, hoc est, ex Dei substantia, convenit; quia ex substantia Patris Filium dicunt. Ergo quia unius substantiae, unius utique potentiae. Si vero ex alia substantia Filius est, quomodo omnipotens Pater est, et omnipotens Filius non est? Quid enim praestantius si ex alia substantia Filium Deus fecit, cum utique et Filius ex alia nos substantia filios Dei fecerit? Ergo aut unius substantiae Filius cum Patre, aut unius potentiae. 94. Friget igitur eorum quaestio, quia de Christo judicare non possunt; immo quia vincit ille, cum judicatur. Digni tamen sunt isti judicio suo, qui hanc objiciunt quaestionem. Si enim ideo aequalis Patri Filius non est, quia non generavit Filium, et isti utique fateantur, si non habent filios, qui serunt hujusmodi quaestiones, suos sibi etiam servulos preferendos, eo quod habentibus filios aequales esse non possunt. Si autem habent filios, non putent sibi meritum, sed filiorum juri deferri. 95. Non consistit igitur haec quaestio, quia aequalis Filius Patri ideo esse non possit, quia Pater generaverit Filium, Filius nullum ex se ipse generaverit. Nam et fons fluvium generat, et fluvius fontem ex se ipse non generat: et lux splendorem generat, non splendor lucem; et una natura est splendoris et lucis.

CAPUT IX.

Varias Arianorum captiunculas, queis Filium coepisse argutabantur, profert et explodit. Nam praeter quam quod eos aut contra se, aut nihil efficere constat; cum rerum omnium principio non possit esse principium, in humanis etiam eorum argumentatio vitiosa est. Tempus igitur non praecessisse auctorem suum: qui si aliquando non fuit, tunc Pater fuit sine sua virtute ac sapientia. Denique ubi humanis exemplis ostensum est aliquem priusquam nascatur, esse dici, haereticorum temeritatem detestatur. 96. Unde cum inaequalitatem ex generationis objectu probare non potuerint, 539 intelligant etiam illam divulgatam suae calumniam quaestionis explosam. Solent enim proponere: Quomodo aequalis potest esse Filius Patri? Nam si Filius est, antequam generaretur non erat: aut si erat, cur natus est? Et Arianos se negare consuerunt, qui proponunt Arii quaestiones? 97. Itaque exigunt a nobis responsionem, ut si dixerimus: Antequam generaretur, erat, astute referant: Ergo antequam generaretur, creatus est, et non differt a caeteris creaturis: quia prius coepit creatura esse quam Filius. Et adjiciunt: Cur qui erat, natus est? An quia imperfectus erat, ut postea perfectior fieret? Si autem responderimus quia non erat, objiciunt statim: Ei ergo generatio contulit ut esset, qui non erat antequam nasceretur; ut hinc colligant: Erat ergo, quando non erat Filius. 98. Sed qui hoc proponunt, et obscuritate volunt involvere veritatem: dicant ipsi utrum temporaliter generet Pater, an intemporaliter. Si enim temporaliter dixerint, quod Filio objiciunt, Patri ascribent; ut videatur Pater coepisse esse, quod non erat: si intemporaliter, quid superest, nisi ut ipsi solvant quam proposuerint quaestionem; ut cum generationem Patris abnuant temporalem, generationem quoque Filii temporalem non esse fateantur? 99. Si ergo non est generatio ejus ex tempore, aestimari datur quod nihil praecesserit ante Filium, qui non sit ex tempore. Si enim aliquid ante Filium, jam non sunt in ipso creata omnia, quae vel in coelo sunt vel in terris, et Apostolus redarguitur, qui hoc in epistola sua (Coloss. I, 16) scripserit: quod si nihil ante generationem, non adverto cur posterior asseratur, quem nemo praecessit. 100. Connectenda est alia eorum plena impietatis objectio, quae latentem habeat dolum, quo sensus facilium, mentesque perstringat. Interrogant enim, utrum omne quod finem habet, aliquando coeperit. Et si acceperint ejusmodi responsionem, quia quod finem habet, coepit aliquando; referunt, utrum Pater desierit generare Filium. Quod cum tenuerint, nostro aspirante consensu, contexunt: Coepit ergo generatio. Id si non abnuas, consequi videtur, ut si coepit generatio, videatur in eo coepta, qui natus est; ut natus esse dicatur, qui ante non fuerat, unde definiant: Aliquando ergo Filius non fuit. 101. Adjiciunt alias ineptias loquacitatis suae, dicentes: Si Verbum Patris Filius est, et ideo genitus dicitur, quia Verbum est: quod autem Verbum est, opus non est: multifariam locutus est Pater (Hebr. I, 1); multos ergo generavit filios, si non operatus est, sed locutus est Verbum. Amentes homines! quasi non intelligant, quid intersit inter prolativum sermonem, et in aeternum permanens Dei Verbum ex Patre natum: 540 natum utique, non prolatum: in quo non composita syllaba, sed plenitudo divinitatis aeternae est, et vita sine fine. 102. Subtexunt aliam impietatem, proponentes utrum volens, an invitus generaverit Pater; ut si dixerimus volentem, antiquiorem generatione voluntatem videamur fateri, et referant quia non sit Filius coaeternus Patri, quem aliquid antecessit: aut quia et ipse sit creatura; quia scriptum est: Omnia quae voluit, fecit (Psal. CXIII, 11); cum hoc ipsum non de Patre et Filio, sed de his quas Filius fecit, dictum sit creaturis. Sin autem invitum Patrem generasse responderimus, invalidum Patrem dixisse videamur. 103. Sed mihi in sempiterna generatione praecedit, nec velle, nec nolle: ergo nec invitum dixerim, nec volentem; quia generatio non in voluntatis possibilitate est, sed in jure quodam et proprietate paterni videtur esse secreti. Nam sicut bonus Pater non aut ex voluntate est, aut necessitate, sed super utrumque, hoc est, natura; ita non generat ex voluntate aut necessitate Pater. 104. Esto tamen, sit generatio in voluntate generantis, quando hanc voluntatem fuisse dicunt? Si in principio, in principio utique Filius: si sempiterna voluntas, sempiternus et Filius: si coepit voluntas, displicuit igitur sibi quod erat Deus Pater, ut mutaret statum. Displicuit ergo sibi sine Filio, placere coepit sibi in Filio. 105. Jam illa consequentia ut dicamus: Si studium generandi nostro more assumpsit, ergo et caetera quae generationem praecedere solent, nostro more assumpsit; nostro autem usu generationis votum est, non voluntas. 106. Produnt igitur impietatem suam, qui volunt generationem coepisse Christi; ut videatur non generatio illa Verbi manentis, sed prolatio fluentis esse sermonis: deinde multos inducendo filios, negent in Christo divinae proprietatem naturae; ut nec unigenitus, nec primogenitus aestimetur: postremo ut si principium credatur accepisse, etiam finem videatur habiturus. 107. Sed neque principium assumpsit aliquando Dei Filius, qui erat in principio (Joan. I, 1): neque finem habebit, qui est principium universitatis et finis (Joan. VIII, 20). Nam cum sit principium, quomodo quod habebat, accepit? aut quomodo sui finem habebit; cum omnium ipse sit finis, ut in illo fine sine fine maneamus? Dei enim generatio cum temporalis non sit, nec ante se, nec in se tempus invenit. 108. Frigida igitur eorum et vana quaestio in creaturis ipsis non habet locum; ipsa etenim quae temporalia sunt, discretionem in quibusdam habere temporis non videntur. Lux nempe splendorem generat, nec comprehendi potest quod splendor luce posterior sit, aut lux splendore antiquior; quia ubi lumen est, splendor 541 est: et ubi splendor, etiam lumen est. Itaque nec sine splendore lumen, nec splendor potest esse sine lumine; quia et in splendore lumen, et splendor in lumine est. Unde et Apostolus splendorem paternae gloriae Filium dixit (Hebr. I, 3); quia splendor paternae lucis est Filius: coaeternus, propter virtutis aeternitatem: inseparabilis, propter claritudinis unitatem. 109. Ergo si temporalia et aerea haec comprehendere et separare non possumus, quae videmus; Deum quem non videmus, qui super omnem est creaturam, in ipso suae generationis arcano possumus comprehendere? Possumus eum a Filio tempore separare, cum omne tempus opus Filii sit? 110. Desinant ergo dicere: Et antequam generaretur, non erat. Ante enim temporis est, generatio ante tempora; et ideo quod posterius est, prius non est: nec opus ante auctorem potest esse; cum opera ipsa principium de operatore suo sumant. Nam quomodo ante operatorem suum usus operis aestimetur; cum omne tempus opus sit, et omne opus de operatore suo ut esset, accepit? 111. Experiri igitur adhuc istos volo, qui sibi videntur astuti; ut de nostris respondeant, qui calumniantur divinis, longeque refugiunt ab inscrutabili supernae generationis arcano: quaestionem suam humanae astruant generationis exemplo. De Filio Dei dicunt quia antequam generaretur non erat, hoc est, de Dei sapientia, de virtute Dei, de Dei Verbo, cujus generatio nihil ante se novit. Quod si aliquando, ut volunt, non fuit (quod nefas dictu est) non fuit ergo in Deo perfectionis aliquando plenitudo divinae, si postea processum generationis accepit. 112. Tamen ut sciant quam vana sit et solubilis eorum quaestio; licet nihil in eo humanis divinis ve commune, tamen docebo homines, antequam nascerentur, fuisse. Aut negent Jacob sanctum fuisse, priusquam nasceretur, qui fratrem supplantavit in materni adhuc uteri positus arcano (Gen. XXV, 23): negent Hieremiam, antequam nasceretur, fuisse, cui dicitur: Priusquam te formarem in utero matris tuae, novi te: et priusquam exires de vulva, sanctificavi te, et prophetam in gentibus posui te (Jerem. I, 5). Quid hoc evidentius tanti exemplo prophetae, qui sanctificatus est, antequam natus, et antequam formaretur, est cognitus? 113. Quid etiam de

Joanne loquar, de quo mater religiosa testatur, quia intra materna situs adhuc viscera, praesentiam Domini spiritu cognovit, exsultatione consignavit, sicut scriptum meminimus, matre dicente: Ecce enim ut facta est in auribus meis vox salutationis tuae, exsultavit in gaudio infans in utero meo (Luc. I, 41)? Erat igitur qui prophetabat, an non erat? At certe erat; erat enim qui venerabatur auctorem, erat qui loquebatur in matre. Denique Elisabeth filii spiritu replebatur, Maria filii spiritu sanctificabatur; sic enim habes, quia exsultavit 542 infans in utero ejus, et repleta est Spiritu sancto Elisabeth (Ibid.). 114. Vide singulorum verborum proprietates. Vocem quidem Mariae prior Elisabeth audivit, sed Joannes prior Domini gratiam sensit. Pulchre sibi conveniunt oracula oraculis, femina mulieri, et pignus pignori. Istae gratiam loquuntur, illi intus operantur pietatisque mysterium maternis adoriuntur profectibus; duplicique miraculo, licet honore diverso, prophetant matres spiritu parvulorum. Quis igitur auctor hujus miraculi? nonne Dei Filius, qui fecit esse non natos? 115. De rebus humanis quaestio vestra non potest convenire; potestne de divinis convenire secretis? Quid est: Antequam generaretur, non erat? Numquid Pater aliqua tempora conceptionis accepit, ut Filium tempora praevenirent? Aut femineae more naturae, generationis suae molitus est partum; ut molitio ipsa Filio esset antiquior? Quid est hoc? Cur divina secreta discutimus? Proprietatem legi divinae generationis, non qualitatem. 116. Facinus indignum! ut ex se quidam coelestia metiantur, qui Christum non nasci potuisse, sed fieri, tamquam unum de spadonibus putant: aut tamquam unum de spadonibus Patrem Filium, quem generare non potuerit, adoptaverit.

CAPUT X.

Objicientibus Christum, Joanne teste, vivere propter Patrem, ac proinde ipsi aequalem non habendum, respondetur Filii vitam secundum divinitatem nec coepisse ex tempore, nec pendere ab aliquo: locum vero de humana ipsius vita intelligendum ex eo probari, quod ibidem de corpore ac sanguine suo praemiserat. Tum duarum controversi loci expositionum primam referri ad humanitatem, et secunda Filii cum Patre aequalitatem, nec non cum homine similitudinem signari docet. Deinde perstricta quam Filio inurebant, injuria, quo pacto etiam secundum divinitatem propter Patrem vivat, aperit. Ac tandem exposito quae vitae nostrae cum divina unitas sit, aliam objectionem, qua Filius per Patrem clarificari opponitur, paucis absolvit. 117. [Alias cap. V.] Plerique etiam hinc faciunt quaestionem, quia scriptum est: Sicut misit me vivus Pater, et ego vivo propter Patrem: et qui manducat me, et ipse vivit propter me; dicentes: Quomodo aequalis est Patri Filius, qui dixit quia propter Patrem vivit? 118. Qui hoc proponunt, primum respondeant, cujusmodi vita sit Filii, utrum ea quam Pater largitus sit non habenti? Sed quomodo vitam aliquando potuit non habere, cum ipse sit vita, sicut ait: Ego sum via, veritas et vita (Luc. XIV, 6)? Vita utique sempiterna, sicut virtus est sempiterna (Rom. I, 20). Aliquando ergo, ut sic loquar, se vita non habuit? 119. Considerate quid lectum sit hodie de 543 Domino Jesu, quia mortuus est pro nobis; ut sive vigilemus, sive dormiamus, simul cum illo vivamus (I Thess. V, 10). Cujus mors vita est, hujus divinitas vita non est; cum divinitas vita sit sempiterna? 120. An vero vita ejus in Patris est potestate? Sed ne corporis quidem sui vitam in alterius fuisse potestate memoravit, sicut scriptum est: Ego pono animam meam, ut iterum sumam
